the Isle of Wight, it being enclosed by a flower garden, which as we entered proved to be a burial ground, flourishing plants too there were in all basement windows. we supposing they might be in school or lecture rooms peeped in, and were recognised by the young pastor – no other than the eloquent preacher M<sup>r</sup> Smith to whom we were in the habit of listening the half of every Lords day at the Shanklin chapel, he came out to the garden, urging us to enter his dwelling, for the basement proved to be the home of his nice young wife & two fine healthy children.<sup>1132</sup> the entrance to it was thro the chapel down a carpetted stair case, it seemed to be divided into four rooms, one a library: all looked like the abode of contentment & piety, cheerfulness beaming in the face of the young pastor as he fondled his little girl. then he took us up stairs to admire the neatly finished church & I thought how gladly I could worship there. Brading is prettily situated but more of a village than Shanklin, and lacking its shade & verdure. We gained admittance into the church where that servant of the Lord – L Richmond – had so faithfully performed the duties of Pastor – for the old sexton<sup>1133</sup> lingered there after vespers – & as he shewed us the church talked of the past, but spoke also in the praise of the present rector,<sup>1134</sup> whose clerical robes made us suspect he must be a Pusyite,<sup>1135</sup> for the gown without a collar & his cap made him look like a Romish priest. Some children hovering around the door offered to shew us the grave of “little Jane” which is marked by a neat stone.<sup>1136</sup> we drove up to the cottage where this lamb of the fold of Richmond had often drawn his steps<sup>1137</sup> & found it roofless tho the lower story was occupied by a poor family. We reached Shanklin in time for early tea.

Tuesday [August] 9th <sup>1138</sup> Received & answered my dear husbands letter in which he reported his having been ill<sup>1139</sup> & how desolate would have been our deserted home but for the kindness of our friends. M<sup>rs</sup> E left her infant<sup>1140</sup> for a day to sit by his bed side & M<sup>r</sup> E passed several nights in watching him.<sup>1141</sup> May God who thus provides for his comfort, reward his comforters! my dear Whistler had yeilded to the wish of M<sup>r</sup> & M<sup>rs</sup> G<sup>1142</sup> and had gone to their datcha as soon as able to leave his bed, M<sup>r</sup> Ropes family<sup>1143</sup> always spend the summer under this Sisters hospitable roof – And M<sup>r</sup> Woods family i e governess & 7 nice children<sup>1144</sup> have gone to a cottage on the same estate, so my dear husband is surrounded by those who will interest him. Ah if wishes would bring him to Shanklin he'd soon be among us! let me not repine that I am detained from my post. Debo & Jemie are both benefitting by my stay here, in the evenings we occupy ourselves by reading aloud in turn with working, Jemie with his sketch book & Willie trying to imitate the beautiful flowers we gather in our daily rambles – in wax work, he has taken a fancy to young M<sup>rs</sup> Charles Haden<sup>1145</sup> & purposes forming a bouquet in wax to present her on her birth day, as Sister is making a set of doileys in Crochet for the same occasion, showery weather gives us time for in door occupations. And we run for the pitchers to supply our rooms with soft water!

Wednesday [August] 10th <sup>1146</sup> In the hope that Jemie might have a chance to finish his sketch of Cooks Castle,<sup>1147</sup> where we had first gone with M<sup>r</sup>. & M<sup>rs</sup> Phillips & found the walk so enchanting we set out after an early dinner & were joined by our next door lodgers the Parlans,<sup>1148</sup> a donkey of course in attendance to prevent fatigue to Debo or Jemie. how charming again we found the varied scenery, leaving pretty Shanklin by shady lanes, crossing extensive fields of waving grain, & entering the plantations of Yarborough.<sup>1149</sup>

St Petersburg. 1848. September.

It was impossible to keep up my journal in England, but now I may from memory take a few notes. What a proof of attachment in M<sup>r</sup> Winstanley<sup>1150</sup> who tho so much more feeble in health this year proposed that he & my Sister Eliza should join us at Shanklin, as we could not visit the old home in Preston. They arrived one rainy afternoon – but there were few days without rain this summer – and I find it has been cold here as it was in England – a bright fire in the cottage parlor grate increased the warmth of our welcome, for M<sup>r</sup> Winstanley had been standing in the rain while crossing the ferry at Ryde. our simple country fare exactly suited him, the excellent milk at dinner he partook of, as wine he had long abstained from, Seymour had sent us some, with silver for the use of our guests. but my sister enjoys most the variety one meets in different situations of life & she would have been amused at our one silver fork & few spoons & would have been the merriest at expedients to help off our rural board. At our family devotions my brother Winnie always was close to me that he might hear & derive benefit & comfort.

his deafness having increased with his other bodily weaknesses. We would walk out between the showers. the beach being his favorite promenade – While shetering ourselves one day at the curiosity shop under the cliff, a most lovely looking & young lady came in with her golden haired little boy - about three years of age, to purchase some toy for him. We could not resist asking the woman of the shop who they were when they went to Lady Napiers cottage<sup>1151</sup> close by - and this proved to be the lady of the brother to the gallant – Admiral Napier who had been lost so lately at sea<sup>1152</sup> & it was he who had built the beautiful cottage facing the sea for his devotedly fond mother, whose wish was to reside as near the element connected with his profession as possible – My sister Eliza has discovered – since she left Shanklin – thro her correspondent Miss MacLean<sup>1153</sup> now residing at Bath but formerly of Scotland – that Lady N was an intimate friend of theirs at Berwick<sup>1154</sup> – had she known this we might have seen the inside of the Cottage. We availed of the first bright morning for a drive (which is said to be the most charming in England – along the south coast of the Isle as far as Black Gang Chine<sup>1155</sup> we went, passing thro the most picturesque scenery, the contrast indeed made this wild sea scene look desolate, travellers have not left it for my feeble pen to describe, the cliffs were too high & perpendicular for either my Sister & brother Winstanley to attempt descending – Jemie had flown like a sea fowl as soon as we alighted at the Inn where the horses must feed & rest. his sketch book was the clue to my finding him – seated on the red sandy beach I could just discern him & it was with difficulty I followed Willie down - down - down until within speaking distance of my young artist I saw him attempting the sketch of the water fall & cavern up the side of the precipice – Warning Jemie how brief our stay must be, Willie & I wended our way slowly up again to join Uncle & Aunt W at the curiosity shop at the top of the Ciff.<sup>1156</sup>

A lady - whom myself & boys had observed in our walks around Shanklin being a most remarkable person - dressed in mourning, beautiful tho lame of such dignified yet gentle bearing - entered the shop followed by the two footmen in black livery who always are seen drawing her chair on wheels when within walking distance of her retreat – M<sup>r</sup>. W whispered me “that is one of our nobility I’m sure.” And we afterwards ascertained, she is the lady D<sup>1157</sup> – but she did not rivet our gaze, more than her own was fascinated by Jemies suddenly coming in, glowing with the exercise of mounting from the beach with his sketch book in hand & laughing at Aunt Elizas fears that “Jack last”<sup>1158</sup> would have been left behind - the lady gracefully accosted my boy saying “I have seen you before - last year - were you not at Cheltenham?”<sup>1159</sup> “No ma’am” said Jemie returning her smiling courtesies - then at Scarboro!<sup>1160</sup> surely it was there? Yes ma’am we were there in June last, for a week - I answered, upon which the lady expressed the hope we should meet again - but we did not remain at Madeira Cottage many days after, or she might have condescended to call & rest, to gratify the curiosity Jemie seemed to have excited – as she said at parting his was a countenance never to be forgotten – he probably reminded her of some dear lost one – and I am sure her sweet expression even en passant made my boys lift their hats the first time we met her being wheeled along the road as we took our afternoons stroll the first week we were on the Island. Our circuit enabled us to visit (the smallest church in England)<sup>1161</sup>

NOTES

1. This entry is confusing. It probably should read: 12 March 1845 Ash Wednesday - Old Style February 28. See entry of Tuesday, March 25 (NS) in which Anna Whistler says that the next day it will be a fortnight since she took up her journal again, i.e., on 12 March. Thus “12 March 1845 Ash Wednesday” is New Style; the Old Style equivalent of March 12 would be February 28. The fact that Anna Whistler sometimes gave both Old and New Style dates for the same day suggests that she meant to put the date of 28 February after the words “Old Style,” but did not know what it was. Typically she did not go back to fill in a blank space.

It is of importance that Anna Whistler creates further confusion by identifying this entry as Ash Wednesday, and it would seem that Rev. Dr. Law (see Image 253) is also responsible for her misconception in his choice of readings for the service on 28 February / 12 March. The Orthodox Church does not have such a day as Ash Wednesday; Lent starts on a Monday. Lent in 1845 had just begun for the Orthodox Church on Monday 26 February / 10 March, and Anna Whistler makes clear in the next several entries that it is the Easter season of the Orthodox Church that she is referring to. However, there are also entries in which she is referring to Easter celebrations in both faiths. Ash Wednesday, the start of Lent for the English Church, had taken place on 24 January / 5 February, before she resumed her journal, and Western Easter Sunday was going to take place shortly on 11/23 March. I wish to thank Richard Davies of the Leeds Russian Archive for discussing with me the Orthodox and non-Orthodox (specifically Anglican) Easter season of 1845, and the subsequent Easters of 1846, 1847, and 1848 that the Whistlers were in St. Petersburg.

Persons mentioned in this entry who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s mother (Mother); John Winstanley, solicitor and husband of Anna Whistler’s half-sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (Mr. Winstanley); Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s sister-in-law (Maria); Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler’s sister (Kate); Charles Donald Whistler, the child who died in 1843 en route from England to St. Petersburg (baby Charlie); and Kirk Boott Whistler, who died while Major Whistler was on his way to St. Petersburg in 1842 (Kirkie).

2. The Russian word for “samovar” is spelled “samovar,” and pronounced “suhmahvar” (see Image 359).

3. This is Reverend John Cutler Nichols (17 November 1801 – 8 January 1868), minister of the First Congregational Church of Lebanon, Connecticut, from 1840 to 1854. His wife at this time was Lucy Williston Ann (Grosvenor) Nichols (29 January 1809 – 26 June 1845) (Cemetery Inscription Book for the Lebanon Center Cemetery, p. 58; Rev. George McLean Milne, Hebron, CT, to E. Harden, 31 March 1988).
4. Anna Whistler meant minus 22°R, the equivalent of -17.5° Fahrenheit and -27.5° Celsius.
5. Duffle (or duffel) is a “coarse woollen cloth having a thick nap or frieze,” originally made in Flanders (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “duffel”).
6. Anna Whistler is referring to Orthodox Maslenitsa, or Shrovetide, called “Butter Week” by foreigners.
7. Matthew 6:18: “That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and that thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.”
8. Anna Whistler left a blank space instead of giving the chapter number (58) from the Book of Isaiah.
9. “The book of Acts continues the narrative of Luke’s Gospel by tracing the story of the Christian movement from the resurrection of Jesus to the time when the Apostle Paul was in Rome preaching the gospel unhindered. Most of the first half of Acts is occupied with the Jerusalem Church and its relationships, while the latter half is dominated by Paul. The progress of the book is mainly geographical; from Jerusalem the word spreads to Samaria ..., the seacoast ..., Damascus ..., Antioch and Cyprus ..., Asia Minor ..., Europe ..., and finally Rome itself” (New Oxford Annotated Bible, p. 1319).
10. The Gospel appointed for Ash Wednesday was Matthew 6:16 (Oxford Book of Common Prayer, pp. 87–88). Anna Whistler states in this entry for 28 February / 12 March that Rev. Dr. Law chose to read that morning the Gospel appointed for Ash Wednesday in the Episcopalian faith. The subsequent services in the English Church suggest that he tried to choose readings from the Episcopalian Easter service appropriate as well to the Orthodox Easter season.

The chapter of Isaiah that Anna Whistler could not recall here was Chapter 58, which concerns the wrong and the right observance of fasting. Verse 6 specifically states of the right observance: “Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry ...?” The “gospel appointed for Ash Wednesday” was Matthew 6, where right observance of fasting is also discussed. Verses 18-19 are specifically alluded to by Anna Whistler: “<sup>18</sup>: That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly; <sup>19</sup>: Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through, and steal.”

11. This is Louisa McNeill (1832 – 12 March 1840), daughter of William Gibbs and Maria (Cammann) McNeill. See Whistler...Fairfax in Appendix E and Image 31.
12. This is George Edwin Palmer, Jr. (8 May 1843 – 24 March 1909), son of Dr. George Edwin Palmer Sr. (see Image 36) and his second wife, Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer. See Whistler...Fairfax in Appendix E.
13. It has not been possible to ascertain the name of Mademoiselle, their governess. She later became governess to William Henry Harrison (called Henry) (Joseph H. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, St. Petersburg, February 13th, 1848 Sunday, Eastwick Letters).
14. In the entry for 25 March 1845, written the day after Easter Monday in her church, Anna Whistler makes no mention of their Easter. Instead, she focuses on events taking place during Orthodox Lent. For icons of the Russian Easter feast days, see Images 378–379.

Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday March 25th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s mother (my own gentle Mother); Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler’s sister (her dear mothers, Kate); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (Mr. Ropes, good little husband); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, wife of William Hooper Ropes (Mrs. Ropes); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (Aunt Alicia); Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, American envoy to Russia (Col Todd, our Ambassador, the Col, the col); Rev. Dr. Edward Law, chaplain of the English Church and now Doctor of Divinity (Dr. Law); Mary Elizabeth (Mosley) Law, his wife (Mrs. Law); Lydia (Procter) Wood, wife of Charles Wood, cotton-spinning mill merchant (to Mrs. Woods).

15. This is Lydia Mason (Morton) Lee (29 June 1812 – 31 January 1903; see Image 45), wife of Rev. Henry Washington Lee (29 July - 1815 – 26 September 1874; see Image 44), the Whistlers' pastor in Springfield, Massachusetts (memorial gravestone, Oakdale Memorial Gardens, Davenport, IA).

16. Major Whistler and William Hooper Ropes dined with Captain Kruger on Wednesday, 19 March 1845. He is Captain John Frederick Kruger (6 December 1810 – 10 June 1888), Merchant Navy, of Hull, Yorkshire. He was the son of John Frederick Kruger (b. 1772) and Elizabeth Raines (1787–1849). His parents married in Hull in 1810. His siblings were Henry Raines Kruger (1813–1874) and Mary Ann Kruger (1815–1832). Elizabeth (Raines) Kruger had a sister named Sarah Raines (1789–1861), who did not marry. John Frederick Kruger married Emily Atkinson on 29 March 1854 in Hull. Their children were Henry Raines Kruger (1857–1929), who became a vicar; John Frederick Kruger (1858–1932), who became a fruit broker's clerk; and Sarah Raines Kruger (1859–1943), who did not marry (IGI). Captain Kruger was in Russia at this time of year because his ship, Royal William, had been iced in at Cronstadt, obliging him to spend the winter of 1844–45 there. The muster rolls indicate that he left Hull on 24 October 1844 and returned there on 23 June 1845 (Muster Rolls 1835–51, vol. 43, no. 4, Hull Trinity House, Hull, Yorkshire). The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti announced that the opening of navigation in 1845 occurred on 25 April / 7 May (no. 90, Wednesday, April 25 [May 7 NS], 1845, p. 404).
  17. The misses Wilks were the daughters of Grafton (bap. Leeds, Yorkshire 17 December 1779 – St. Petersburg 24 May / 5 June 1830) and Elizabeth (von Kettler) Wilks (bap. St. Petersburg 30 August [OS] 1791 – St. Petersburg 28 September / 10 October 1864), who were married in St. Petersburg on 28 June / 10 July 1813. Their daughters were Cornelia (bap. 20 January 1815), Mary Ann (3/10 October 1819 – 30 October 1895), and Elizabeth (b.24 April / 6 May 1824). Of the three, Cornelia was born in Leeds, Yorkshire. Mary Ann Wilks married Henry Richard Cattley (27 October 1818 – 13 December 1898) on 17/29 May 1846; Cornelia Wilks married Charles Moberly, widower, Russia Company agent in St. Petersburg, on 25 September / 7 October 1846 (PREC STP, nos. 2525, 5609, and 5644).
  18. Richard Risley Carlisle (1814 – 25 May 1874), generally known as Professor Risley, was an acrobat who performed aerial ballets with his two sons (see Image 202) (Obituary, New York Times, May 27, 1874). The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti of 1845 carried announcements of the Risleys' performances, starting with the seventh: seventh performance on March 8/20 (no. 53, Thursday, March 8, 1845: p. 236), eighth performance on March 11/23, (no. 56, Sunday, March 11, 1845: p. 252), ninth performance on March 15/27 (no. 59, Thursday, March 15, 1845: p. 266), tenth performance on March 18/30 (no. 62, Sunday, March 18, 1845: p. 280), eleventh performance on March 25/April 6 (no. 68, Sunday, March 25, 1845: p. 308), and the final performance on April 1/13 (no. 74, Sunday, April 1, 1845: p. 336). The performances of 8, 11, 15, and 18 March were held at the Aleksandrinskii Theater (located on Alexandra Square, between the Public Library and the garden of His Imperial Majesty's Own Palace, and facing the Nevskii Prospekt), while those of 25 March and 1 April were held at the Mikhailovskii Theater (located on the square of the Mikhailovskii Palace, on the corner of Inzhenernaia Street) (Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, pp. 9–10, 365–367). The Risleys were billed as Mr. Richard Rizley and his two sons, John and Henry. At all performances mentioned above they presented The Enchantress' Dream (Son volshebnitsy), a scene in two parts. See Marian Hannah Winter, The Theatre of Marvels (New York: Benjamin Blom, 1962), pp. 18, 169, 170, 198. Mr. Rizzley is also called M. R in this entry. Major Whistler told Edward Maynard (1813–1891; see Image 329), dentist and arms inventor, who came to St. Petersburg in September 1845, that Risley had only been able to get one engagement a week and that he was “an exceedingly vulgar, illiterate fellow” (Edward Maynard to Mrs. Ellen Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 5, Thursday night, October 23, 1845, St. Petersburg, in Rodney S. Hatch III, Dr. Edward Maynard “Letters from the Land of the Tsar 1845–1846”: America’s Pioneering Dental Surgeon Turned Civil War Gun Inventor [North Salem, NY: Iron Horse, 2010], p. 57). See the biography of Edward Maynard in Appendix E (hereafter, Maynard).

19. On Thursday, 20 March 1845, Debo was to have gone to the German Singing Society. The German Singing Society is probably the “Singakademie,” considered the pearl of St. Petersburg amateur mixed choral societies. It was under the patronage of Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna (see Image 440) (F. Meyer von Waldeck, “Geistiges Leben der Sanct-Petersburger Deutschen” [“The Spiritual Life of St. Petersburg’s Germans”], tran. Edgar Harden, in Unsere Zeit: Deutsche Revue der Gegenwart [Our Time: German Review of the Present Time] 2 (1881): pp. 242, 243. Its founder and director for many years was A.A. Beling (1793–1854). The chorus performed religious music of western composers. It consisted of one hundred male and female performers, and new

- members were accepted only at the recommendation of present members. They had weekly practice on Thursdays at 8 p.m. and public concerts two or three times a year. Tickets were distributed by the choral members (Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn' Peterburga, pp. 37–38, 102).
20. “Loulou” is Louisa Harriet Ropes (18 November 1843 – 1 June 1903). See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E.
  21. The Wood family lived on Sergievskaiia Street in the house of Chevakinskii, which was located in the Fifth Ward of the Liteinaia District (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 121). See Wood in Appendix E and Images 271–272.
  22. On Sunday, 23 March 1845, Rev. Dr. Law (see Image 253) preached a charity sermon for the poor funds of the British Factory. The British Factory in St. Petersburg, so-called from the word “‘factors’ or trading agents,” “protect[ed] local English merchant interests (sometimes against the interests of the parent ‘body’, the Russia Company in London, and British Foreign Office directives), also performing a regulatory function in the community: adjudicating business and social disputes, running the ‘English Church’ and its subsidiary institutions, managing and dispensing the Poor’s Fund, and setting charges on British ships, good and trade-related services” (Marie-Louise Karttunen, Making a Communal World: English Merchants in Imperial St. Petersburg [PhD diss., University of Helsinki, 2004], p. 2). “Factorians were obliged to contribute to the support of the British destitute [through] the Poor’s Fund (and occasionally a percentage of their profits when extraordinary sums were required) ... These sums were based on a percentage of the duties on imports and exports each house paid the College of Commerce ..., but most of the money was actually stored in investments which could be called upon for almost any ‘unanimously agreed’ project. The sum amassed was considerable” (Karttunen, Making a Communal World, pp. 234–235). Having been given previous notice, the entire congregation of the English Church was called upon to contribute to the Poor’s Fund on Sunday, 23 March 1845.
  23. Persons recorded as living at the Laws’ Asylum (or Refuge) in 1845 were Mrs. Bradford, widow, with one daughter; Mrs. Gillon, widow, poor, aged, and infirm, with one son and two daughters; Grimshaw, labourer, infirm; Francis Smith, married, former gasfitter, infirm; and Mrs. Lazenby, widow, infirm (added later: d. June 1848) (BRBC STP 1845, fols. 6, 21, 22, 35, 52). Mrs. Gillon’s address is given as “Forstatsky (Ivanova) Dr. Law’s Refuge.”

Furshtatskaia Street is the address of the asylum. In Mr. Smith's case, "Dr. Law's Asylum" is crossed out and replaced by "V.O.," for "Vasilevskii Ostrov." This is puzzling, as Mr. Smith seems to have still been at the asylum.

24. The "incumbent ... was not to forget to whom he owed his living." "According to protocol, communications between community members ... and the Company passed through the salaried ... Company Agent in St. Petersburg [...] who at this point was Charles Moberly." Law bypassed Moberly and wrote "directly to the Company in London." He "wrote that he proposed to establish an Asylum for the British poor (a workhouse, no less) in St. Petersburg and had agreed to the purchase of suitable premises in the neighbourhood of the church for 60,000 Rs, 7,000 of which had been raised by a recent Church Bazaar (selling articles made by the women of the community), with further liberal donations and subscriptions anticipated." "Moberly apparently received an unofficial reply ... from the Secretary of the Russia Company vetoing Law's proposition," which he showed to Law. As a result, "the Dr. [gave] up his ... intention, but ... [was] still endeavouring to establish something of the same kind, upon a much smaller scale – entirely of a private character." (All quotations are from Karttunen, Making a Communal World, pp. 244, 245.)
25. The English Church in Cronstadt (see Image 85) was built in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. In late Classical style, it was described in 1983 as having been preserved to the present day without any particular changes to its façade (Pamiatniki arkhitektury priгородov Leningrada, p. 570, and p. 571, plate 1).
26. Rev. George Williams replaced Rev. Richard White Blackmore (Silton, Dorset August 1791 – 28 June 1881) at Cronstadt from September 1844 to June 1845 (entry for Monday [August] 26th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I).
27. Countess Sofia Vladimirovna Stroganovna (born Princess Golitsyna 11/23 November 1775), maternal grandmother of the Whistlers' acquaintance, young Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov, died on 5/17 March 1845. Colonel Todd (see Image 278) had attended her funeral on 10/22 March. See Stroganov, Vasil'chikov, Kushelev in Appendix E and Images 299–300.
28. The English Assembly (Angliiskoe sobranie), usually called the English Club (Angliiskii klub), is located on the Moika Embankment, between Red and Blue bridges, on the corner of Demidov Lane, in the building belonging to Demidov. It has been housed here since 1830. It is the oldest institution of its type in St. Petersburg, founded on 1 March 1770 (OS) by the English merchant Francis Gardner, for the purpose of providing the educated class of the capital with a pleasant way of passing time socially. Its members number 350 and are selected by strict ballot. They are permitted to use the rooms of the Club from ten in the morning until one in the morning and spend their time in conversing, reading all the newspapers and magazines published or received in Russia, and playing cards (commercial), chess, billiards, or bowls. The bowling pavilion, set up in the garden, is of course the most elegant and agreeable of all its kind. Commons is held on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Saturday is primarily club day, when the largest number of members and their invited guests gather. On the remaining days, dinners are served, and suppers are served daily to order. Among the members are top state civil servants, both military and civilian, persons in the diplomatic corps, nobles, and merchants. The number of Englishmen, who in the beginning comprised the majority of its members, is at present very much diminished. The club's accommodations are spacious and magnificent, the furnishings elegant, the staff excellent. Conduct in the English Club is relaxed, but respectful. Equality, coupled with respect for rank and for the dignity of a person, as well as superior and amiable conversation are the distinguishing features of this gathering. The Russian fabulist I.A. Krylov (d. November 1844; see Image 186) spent almost every evening in the Club. His bust has been placed above the spot where he usually sat. In the dining room hangs a portrait of the Club's founder (Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, pp. 18–19; Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 655–657; Stoletie S. Peterburgskogo Angliiskogo sobraniia 1770–1870 [One Hundred Years of the St. Petersburg English Club 1770–1870] [St. Petersburg: V.I. Golovin, 1870].

29. In his speech at the English Club, in 1845, probably in March, Colonel Todd (see Image 278) alluded to the visit of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) to Queen Victoria (see Image 287) in the summer of 1844. See the entry for Sat [May] 31st [1844], NYPL: AWP, Part I, and accompanying Note 437.

For an explanation of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon (1 Kings 10:1–13), see Hall, Subjects and Symbols, p. 287. The young Queen Victoria (christened Alexandrina Victoria) (1819–1901) had been Queen of Great Britain and Ireland since 1837. She married Francis Albert Augustus Charles Emmanuel, Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (Schloss Rosenau, near Coburg, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha 26 August 1819 – Windsor, England 14 December 1861) on 10 February 1840.

30. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday, April 1st who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (Mother); Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler's sister-in-law (Maria, Marias letter); Lydia Mason (Morton) Lee, wife of Anna Whistler's Springfield pastor (Mrs. Lee); George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes (George Prince); the Whistlers' outdoor–indoor man (Dvanic); Colonel Charles Todd, American envoy to Russia (to Col Todds); George William Whistler, Anna Whistler's step-son (George, brother George); and the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (Alexandrine).
31. It has not been possible to locate any of the letters mentioned in this entry.
32. Colonel Todd (see Image 278) was either now living in St. Petersburg again or had accommodations there that he used when he was not in Tsarskoe Selo.
33. George (see Images 12–13) had been traveling for his health's sake since late November 1844. He was now back in the United States, in Brooklyn, and planning to visit the Whistlers in Russia. The context of this letter to his father may be found in his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”
34. Charlotte Canda (3 February 1828 – 3 February 1845) was the daughter of Charles (1792 – New York 27 September 1866) and Adele (d. Boulogne-sur-Mer, France 16 May 1871; buried Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, NY 20 June 1871) Canda. Her father, listed in New York City directories as a professor of drawing from at least 1824–1825, ran a young ladies boarding school at 17 Lafayette Place in New York from at least 1841–1842 until at least 1851–1852 (Longworth's American Almanac, New York Register, and City Directory for the Sixty-Sixth Year of American Independence [New York: Thomas Longworth, 1841]; Evening Post (New York), September 27, 1866, and May 17, 1871; New York Times, June 21, 1871).

Charlotte Canda was buried in Green-Wood Cemetery, Brooklyn. The monument to her by sculptor Robert Launitz (1806–1870) “shows her in the party dress she wore” the night of her death. “The motif of seventeen years is repeated again and again in the monument's dimensions and decorations.” Her tomb was called “The French Lady’s Grave” and used to be the most popular stop on Sunday “carriage tours of the cemetery.” Charlotte was buried in one of the cemetery’s “few plots of consecrated ground.” Two years later her fiancé, Charles Albert Jarrett (1819–1847), killed himself in despondency, thereby depriving himself of the possibility of being buried with her. His grave is “off to the right, under a marker with a coat of arms.” (All quotations are from Judy Culbertson and Tom Randall, Permanent New Yorkers: A Biographical Guide to the Cemeteries of New York [Chelsea, VT: Chelsea Green Publishing, 1987], pp. 58–59, 73, 75.) Charlotte Canda is also referred to in this entry as “C.C.”

Although Charlotte Canda and Deborah Whistler were schoolmates at Charles Canda’s school, it is not clear whether Deborah boarded there. When the family was about to leave the United States for Russia, Anna Whistler traveled to New York to pick Deborah up at a Mrs. Wittenham’s (John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 9, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 21).

35. “In the midst of life we are in death: of whom may we seek for succour, but of thee, O Lord, who for our sins are justly displeased? Yet, O Lord God most holy, O Lord most mighty, O holy and most merciful Saviour, deliver us not into the bitter pains of eternal death” (Book of Common Prayer ... in the United States, p. 265; Oxford Book of Common Prayer, p. 97). This is one of the “seven texts ... collectively known as ‘funeral sentences’ and ‘as a burial service’”; see “The Order for the Burial of the Dead” in the Book of Common Prayer ... in the United States (pp. 262–266) and the Oxford Book of Common Prayer (p. 97).
36. “Miss L.B. ...” is Miss Le Barbier, “the daughter of a friend” (“Melancholy and Fatal Accident,” New-York Commercial Advertiser [February 4, 1845]: p. 2; “The Accident in Broadway,” New-York Commercial Advertiser [February 5, 1845]: p. 2).
37. Psalms 97:1–2: “<sup>1</sup> The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad therefore. <sup>2</sup> Clouds and darkness are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.”
38. Fanny Bourne Peabody (2 September 1825 – 28 January 1844) was born and died in Springfield, Massachusetts. She was the daughter of Rev. William Bourne Oliver Peabody (Exeter, NH 7 July 1799 – Springfield, MA 28 May 1847) and Elizabeth Amelia (White) Peabody (24 May 1799 – Springfield, MA 4 October 1843), who were married on 8 September 1824 in Salem, Massachusetts.

Fanny's father was a distinguished Unitarian minister. Rev. Peabody graduated from Harvard in 1816, returning there later for theological studies. On 12 October 1820, he was ordained as the first minister of the newly established Third Congregational Society in Springfield, Massachusetts, continuing as pastor there until his death. He was the author of several biographies, for example of Cotton Mather, and edited the Springfield Collection of Hymns for Sacred Worship in 1835. His "report on the birds of the commonwealth" (1839) "was a masterly piece of work." He "was the first to suggest the location of the Springfield Cemetery," established in 1841, and contributed greatly, along with Chester Harding, George Eaton, and George Bliss, "to laying out and beautifying the grounds" (Charles Well Chapin, Sketches of the Old Inhabitants and Other Citizens of Old Springfield of the Present Century, and Its Historic Mansions of "Ye Olden Tyme" [Springfield, MA: Springfield Printing and Binding, 1893], pp. 297–300).

At the time of her mother's death, Fanny, eighteen, was the eldest child, with four younger brothers. "[D]istinguished for her personal accomplishments and intellectual attractions ... [she] had seemed, till her mother's death, wholly absorbed in the things of this world." Because of her lack of "experience in domestic affairs, her father addressed to her a letter of advice, ... most touching and impressive which, combined with other influences, seems to have wrought a most desirable change in her character." Indeed, a family friend described Fanny as standing "transfigured before [them] for three short months." "She took her place at the head of the family," and "joined her father's church" and was very active in it. But in January 1844, she contracted scarlet fever and died "after an illness of about four days." Her father later "availed himself of the sad event to address, with great tenderness and earnestness, the youth of his congregation" (William B. Sprague, Annals of the American Pulpit, vol. 8, Annals of the American Unitarian Pulpit; or, Commemorative Notices of Distinguished Clergymen of the Unitarian Denomination in the United States, from Its Commencement to the Close of the Year Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-Five. With an Historical Introduction [New York: Robert Carter and Brothers, 1865], pp. 495–496, 499). There are discrepancies in dates in the sources consulted.

39. Anna Whistler is alluding to the death of grand duchesses Aleksandra Nikolaevna (see Image 434) and her first cousin, Elizaveta Mikhailovna (see Image 441). Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna had died on 29 July / 10 August 1844. See Images 444–460 regarding Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna's life and death.

40. Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig (Cronstadt 18/30 September 1775 – St. Petersburg 18/30 January 1845; see Image 297), died at the age of 69 years and was buried on 24 January / 5 February 1845 in the Smolensk Cemetery (PREC STP, no. 5463; Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 15, Saturday, January 20 [February 1 NS], 1845, p. 63). For more information about him, see A.L. Fullerton and Flora Yarmukhamedova, The Family Greig in Russia (Bernardston, MA: Bernardston Books, 2001); Anthony G. Cross, “Samuel Greig, Catherine the Great’s Scottish Admiral,” The Mariner’s Mirror 60, no. 3 (1974): p. 263; Edward Morton, Travels in Russia, and a Residence at St. Petersburg and Odessa, in the Years 1827–1829; Intended to Give Some Account of Russia as It Is, and Not as It Is Represented to Be (London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green, 1830), pp. 166–169; Avramii Aslanbegov, Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig. Biograficheskii ocherk [Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig: A Biographical Essay] (St. Petersburg: Tipografiia Morskogo Ministerstva, 1873); and Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Greig, Alexis Samuilovich.” He was married to Iuliia Mikhailovna Stalinskaia (27 January 1800 – 28 September 1881), with whom he had surviving children: Samuil (9 December 1827 – 9 March 1887); Iuliia (5 September 1829 – 2 March 1865), who married Shtieglits; Ivan (3 March 1831 – 15 September 1893); and Dzhenni (15 February 1835 – 16 February 1870), who married Ukhtomskii (Nikolai Mikhailovich, Grand Duke of Russia, and Vladimir Saitov, Peterburgskii nekropol’ [Petersburg Necropolis], 4 vols. (St. Petersburg: M.M. Stasiulevich, 1912–1913), vol. 1, p. 672; vol. 4, pp. 334, 590).
41. Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna (see Image 441), who had been married on 19/31 January 1844, died on 16/28 January 1845 (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 21, Saturday, January 27 [February 8 NS], 1845, p. 87) from complications of childbirth.

24 Jan. At 11 o’clock in the morning of this day news was received through Vice-Chancellor Count Nesselrode of the decease of Her Imperial Highness, the wife of the Duke of Nassau and the daughter of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich and Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna; while before dinner Count Bos presented himself to Their Majesties, bearing the same news from the Duke of Nassau. The decease of Her Highness occurred on the 16th of this January as the result of an unsuccessful delivery ... on this day at eleven o'clock in the morning the carrying out of the body of Admiral Greig, member of the State Council, who died on the 18th, took place at the English Church in the presence of the Heir Apparent and Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, for burial in the Smolensk Cemetery ... His Majesty issued a command ... that as a result of the decease of Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna ... the first five ranks of the Court do mourning for three months, starting this 24th day of January. (RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 154. Zhurnal Kamer-Furierskoi dolzhnosti po polovine Gosudaria Imperatora Nikolaia Pavlovicha, 1845 [Chamberlain's Journal for the Apartments of Emperor Nikolai Pavlovich for 1845], fols. 40v–41v)

See the diary of Smirnova-Rosset concerning rumors that Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna actually died from an epileptic fit (A.O. Smirnova-Rosset, Dnevnik, Vospominaniia [Diary, Memoirs], ed. S.V. Zhitomirskaia [Moscow: Nauka, 1989], pp. 5, 634).

42. This reference is to Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna (see Image 440), wife of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (married 1824; see Image 439) and mother of Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna (see Image 441).
43. According to Anna Whistler's diary, the concert took place on 31 March (NS), which was 19 March (OS). This concert, on this specific day, was an annual event. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti carried the following announcement:

In the Bol'shoi Theatre on Monday, 19 March, the day of the entrance of Russian troops into Paris in 1814, there will be a large vocal and instrumental concert given in aid of invalids. Madame Viardot-Garcia, Messrs. Rubini and Tamburini, the court singers, the musicians and singers of the guards regiments will participate.

Part I.

1. Finale from the opera "Catarina Cornaro", composer Lachner.
2. Overture from the opera "Oberon", composer Weber.
3. An aria from the "Stabat Mater" by Rossini will be sung by Mr. Tamburini.

4. The choir, a composition by Khalevi. The hymn “God Save the Tsar!”

Part II.

5. An aria from the “Stabat Mater” by Rossini will be sung by Mr. Rubini.

6. Overture from the opera “William Tell”, composer Rossini.

7. An aria from the “Stabat Mater” by Rossini will be sung by Madame Viardot-Garcia.

8. The military choir, composition by Mr. L’vov; Couplets, composition by Kavos. (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 60, Friday, March 16 [March 28 NS], 1845, p. 268)

The director was Ferdinand Haase (Silesia 2 August 1788 – St. Petersburg 18/30 October 1851), called Fyodor Bogdanovich Gaaze by the Russians. For his biography, see “Haase Ferdinand,” Influential Military Musicians A–Z, World Military Bands: The Heritage of Military Bands website, accessed 13 September 2013, <http://www.worldmilitarybands.com/musicians/>

The magnitude and impressiveness of the concert has been described as follows:

The concert ... is especially diverting because it consists of 800 musicians from all the Life Guard regiments, and nowhere else is it the magnificent spectacle that it is here. It is always given in the Bol’shoi Theatre. The edge of the stage is decorated with double-headed eagles and a row of various regimental shakos. At the front of the stage are the Court singers in their splendid attire; behind them the theatre orchestra; then there are the guards musicians in full parade dress arranged in the spacious amphitheatre according to instrument.

It would seem that such a multitude of instruments and voices would deafen the audience, but through the strict conducting of the experienced choirmaster Mr. Gaaze this mass of sounds produces such amazing harmony that if you did not see the multitude of musicians, you could not believe that you were hearing more than one full and harmonious orchestra.

(Pushkarev, Opisanie Sanktpeterburga 1841, p. 129)

The singers referred to are: the Spanish soprano, Michelle Fernanda Polina Viardot-García (Paris 18 July 1821 – Paris 18 May 1910; see Image 198); the tenor, Giovanni-Battista Rubini (Romano 7 April 1794 – Romano 3 March 1854; see Image 197), who retired after the 1844–1845 season; and the baritone, Antonio Tamburini (Faenza 28 March 1800 – Nice 8 November 1876; see Image 196).

The composers referred to are: Franz Paul Lachner (1803–1890), Carl Maria von Weber (1786–1826), Gioacchino Rossini (1792–1868), Fromental Halévy (1799–1862), Aleksei Fyodorovich L'vov (1798–1870; see Image 195), and Katterino Kavos (1775–1840).

44. Mary Eliza Bedford (b. c. 1827) was the daughter of Henrietta Ann Bedford, who died on Friday, 14 February 1845, in New York. Mrs. Bedford was the sister of Dr. Gunning S. Bedford (Baltimore 1806 – New York 5 September 1870), from whose home at 743 Broadway her funeral was held (Gertrude A. Barber, comp., Deaths Taken from the New York Evening Post, vol. 20, From February 20, 1844 to April 15, 1845, ts, 1939, p. 83, N-YHS; New York Herald, February 15, 1845; Roy C. Sawyer, comp., Abstracts of Wills for New York County, vol. 12: New York, 1844–1847, 1939, pp. 27–28). Her brother was a noted obstetrician and gynecologist, who helped found New York University Medical College (National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, vol. 2, p. 391). In a Bedford family genealogy, Henrietta Bedford is “said to have married and had a daughter Mary, later Mrs. Wright, who by 1873 had several children in Europe, according to a letter written by Henrietta Jane (Hackett) Barroll,” who was Henrietta Bedford’s first cousin (Lewis D. Cook, “The Gunning Bedford Family New Castle, Philadelphia, Baltimore,” The Pennsylvania Genealogical Magazine 30, no. 1 [1977]: p. 16). Efforts to find a Bedford–Wright marriage in New York newspapers have not been successful (M. Toubas, N-YHS, to E. Harden, 4 November 2004).
45. The German Academy is probably the same as the German Singing Society (“Singakademic”) in Note 19, NYPL: AWP, Part II.
46. Persons mentioned in the entry for Thursday 10th April who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Thomas Scales Ellerby, pastor of the British and American Congregational Church (Mr. Ellerby); Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, wife of Joseph Harrison Jr., of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mrs Harrison); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (my - Sister); Charles Donald Whistler, who died on the trip from London to St. Petersburg in 1843, at the age of two (Charlie); Kirk Boott Whistler, who died in Springfield, Massachusetts, in 1842, at the age of four (Kirkie).

47. Debo and her father went to Alexandrofsky on Sunday, 6 April 1845.
  48. It has not been possible to ascertain who Deborah's Russian teacher was, who came on Wednesday, 9 April 1845.
  49. Dr. Thomas Thomson (a dentist and bachelor) resided at No. 3 Gorokhovaia Street. He had an apprentice named Rowland Bunting (a bachelor). In 1845, his brother Adam Thomson (also a dentist and a bachelor), was residing with him, but returned to Scotland. William Thomson, another brother (an engineer and bachelor), was also residing with him in 1845, but moved to Baird's (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 57).
  50. This surname is probably Glinka. There is a strong possibility that Mrs. De Glinkey is Iustina-Khristina Bangeman-Geigens, wife of the senior secretary of the Russian Legation in Stockholm, Dmitrii Grigorievich Glinka (29 July/10 August 1808 – 14/26 May 1883). They had a son and a daughter. The daughter, whom she brought with her to the Whistler home, would have been Iustina, born in 1836 (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 5, pp. 273–274), the same year as Willie Whistler. The fact that Mrs. De Glinkey knew enough about America to be “so fond” of it, and that she also spoke English, support the idea that she was the wife of a diplomat. Anna Whistler and Mrs. De Glinkey had met before, possibly at Colonel Todd's.
  51. The son whom Mrs. De Glinkey, a Lutheran, could not bring with her to visit the Whistler home because he was sick from the Lenten diet required of Russian Orthodox believers, would have been Nikolai Dmitrievich Glinka (1838–1884) (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 5, p. 274). Anna Whistler's reference to him as the “eldest boy” suggests there was more than one son. She also often used “eldest” when “elder” was required.
  52. “In Mrs. Whistler's day Rusk usually meant a light bread containing eggs and sugar” (MacDonald, Whistler's Mother's Cook Book, p. 116). Anna Whistler would never have attempted to dupe anyone, especially a child, into eating such food during Lent, when it was prohibited by the Orthodox Church in the Russian diet. Possibly the rusk she offered differed from the kind usually meant by not containing any prohibited ingredients.

53. See Notes 7, 8, and 10 above. Anna Whistler felt that the acceptable fast in God's sight was self-denial and a readiness to contribute of one's own abundance.
54. Mrs. De Glinkey's mother-in-law would have been Iustina Karlovna (Kiukhel'beker) Glinka (1784–1871), sister of the Decembrist, Vil'gel'm Karlovich Kiukhel'beker (1797–1846), and wife of Grigorii Andreevich Glinka (1776–1818) (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheski slovar', vol. 5, pp. 272, 273).
55. Luke 23:34: "Then said Jesus, Father forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots."
56. Matthew 24:14–30 recounts the parable of the talents.
57. Margaret Bayne Wilson (Greenock, Scotland 5 November 1798 – Bombay, India 19 April 1835; see Image 191) was a Scottish missionary in Bombay together with her husband, Rev. John Wilson (Lauder, Scotland 11 December 1804 – near Mahableshwar, India 1 December 1875), whom she married in 1828. Mrs. Wilson was "a pioneer of female education in India and inspirer of the first Scottish association to employ female missionaries" (Nigel M. de S. Cameron, ed., Dictionary of Scottish Church History & Theology [Downers Grove, Illinois: Intervarsity Press, 1993], p. 65). The memoirs of Mrs. Wilson that Anna Whistler is referring to are Rev. John Wilson's biography of and tribute to his deceased wife, which includes extracts from her letters and journals: A Memoir of Mrs. Margaret Wilson, of the Scottish Mission, Bombay; including Extracts from Her Letters and Journals, by the Rev. John Wilson, D.D., M.R.A.S. (Edinburgh: John Johnston; London: Whittaker & Co. and J. Nisbet & Co, 1838). (The frontispiece is an engraving of Mrs. Wilson's portrait made in 1827.) Anna Whistler's attention was focused on the final chapter, which deals with Mrs. Wilson's last days. The lines she quotes are from the last letter Mrs. Wilson "wrote with her own hand" (Wilson, Memoir of Margaret Wilson, p. 589). Written on 31 March 1835, twenty days before her death, it was addressed to a Mrs. Coghlan, at the christening of whose child she had been present the day before: "I should have regretted not being present when your little treasure was dedicated to God in Baptism. I always enjoy such seasons, and I feel them an additional inducement to remember both the little ones and their parents at the mercy-seat of our heavenly Father. They are gifts from His inexhaustible fountain of love and kindness to us; and we can only use the gift aright, when we present it a willing sacrifice on His altar" (Wilson, p. 589). On 8 April 1835, Mrs. Wilson dictated a letter to her son Andrew, who had been sent to Scotland to live. This letter embodied her last wishes on her children's behalf. "I have prayed God to inspire you with zeal to become a missionary to the brethren of this land ... What I say to you I say to my beloved Johnny [a son in India] ... If your aunts accompany your beloved uncle to Canada, I wish Mary Isabella [a daughter in India] to be placed under their charge; and O let them feel their deep responsibility in having her, a little immortal, to train for heaven" (Wilson, pp. 598–599). Anna Whistler's tone in this entry resembles that of Mrs. Wilson. Anna Whistler was some four months pregnant at this time, and thoughts of her own possible death were frequently on her mind.

58. Persons mentioned in the entry for Thursday 5th/17th of April who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Adele Canda, mother of the deceased seventeen-year-old Charlotte Canda (Mrs Canda, that lady); Catherine Julia McNeill, Deborah Whistler's first cousin (Jule); Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old Mrs Leon, the old lady); and Charles Donald Whistler, who died on the journey from London to St. Petersburg in 1843, at the age of two (darling little Charlie).
59. It has not been possible to ascertain who this governess was. She later became governess to William Henry Harrison, son of Joseph Harrison Jr. and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (Joseph H. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, St. Petersburg, February 13th, 1848 Sunday, Eastwick Letters).
60. The Imperial Academy of Fine Arts (see Images 154–157) is located on Vasilievskii Island between the Third and Fourth Lines on the Grand Neva Embankment in the Tenth, Vasilevskaiia District. It stands opposite Ritter's house on the English Embankment, the Whistlers' home. Built in 1764–1788, it is one of the first structures in Russia in the style of early Classicism. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, on the plot on which it stands were the houses of three magnates, which were donated to the Academy after its founding. These were later torn down to erect a new building planned by the architects A.F. Kokorinov (1726–1772) and J.B. Vallin de la Mothe (1729–1800). In 1788, the construction of the edifice was completed, but the façades and some rooms were unfinished. This construction was not completed until 1810. The building is in the form of a square, each side of which is sixty sazhen long. Above the four entrances are the words "Painting," "Sculpture," "Architecture," and "Upbringing (Vospitanie)" in bronze letters. On the Neva River side, above the main outer doors, are the words “To the Free Fine Arts.” On this side, the façade is decorated with columns, a portico, and a cupola. Between the columns supporting the pediment are statues of the Farnese Hercules and Flora. In May 1832, two massive sphinxes from Thebes purchased by the Russian government were brought to St. Petersburg, and in 1834 were placed facing one another on tall granite blocks flanking the granite steps of the landing in front of the Academy building (see Image 155). The building contains a circular courtyard. A spacious marble staircase leads to the upper floors, of which the first is decorated with arches. Within the building there is a small church built in 1837 and named for St. Catherine, with an altarpiece by F.A. Bruni of The Agony in the Garden (1830). The building is decorated with works by the school’s academicians. On the first floor are the living quarters of Academy professors and various civil servants; on the second, the works of art; on the third, classrooms and pensioners’ (gold-medal students’) quarters. In the spacious salons of the second floor there is an extensive collection of paintings; portraits; landscapes; drawings; sculpture in plaster, marble, and bronze; statues; busts; bas reliefs; works in terra cotta; stones; medals; coins; architectural models; ancient weapons; and a rich collection of prints from Warsaw. Among the paintings noted in particular in an 1846 guide were Girardot’s St. Francis in the Cave, Rembrandt’s The Angel Appearing to Hagar, Veronese’s Resurrection of Lazarus, C.W.E. Dietrich’s Tivoli Cascade, battle scenes by Le Bourguignon, Rubens’s Silenus and Bacchantes, Briullov’s The Last Day of Pompeii (see Image 204), as well as works by Luca Giordano, Lafosse, Tintoretto, Mengs, Ugriumov, Martynov, Vorobiev, Basin, Egorov, and others (Pushkarev, Istoricheskii ukazatel’, pp. 211–212). The exhibits were open to the public on Sundays and holidays starting at noon. Every three years, the Academy building was the scene of a public exhibition of works by professors, students, and other artists living in St. Petersburg; in autumn each year there was an annual exhibit (Pushkarev, Putevoditel’, pp. 86–87, 406–408; N. Tsylov, comp., Atlas trindatsati chastei S. Peterburga s podrobnym izobrazheniem naberezhnykh, ulits, pereulkov, kazennykh i obyvatelskikh domov [Atlas of the Thirteen Districts of St. Petersburg, with Detailed Drawings of the Embankments, Streets, Lanes, and Government and Private Buildings] (St. Petersburg, 1844); Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1851, pp. 7, 328; Pamiatniki arkhitektury Leningrada 1975, pp. 276, 492; V.G. Lisovskii, Akademiia Khudozhestv Istoriko- iskusstvoedcheskii ocherk [The Academy of Fine Arts: An Art Historical Essay], 2nd ed. (Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1982), pp. 66–67].

61. James (ticket holder No. 355) began to attend his drawing class (1: “Drawing from Originals of Heads”) on 2/14 April 1845 (RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 734. Kniga o vydache biletov raznym litsam poseshchaishchim Risoval’nye klassy IAKH za 1845 g. i 1846 g. [Book concerning the issuing of tickets to various persons attending drawing classes at the IFAFA in 1845 and 1846], fol. 18v) (see Image 159). A fuller account of James’s time at the IFAFA can be found in his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.” There were three drawing courses at the Academy. They were divided into five levels: (1) “Drawing from Originals of Heads,” (2) “Drawing from Originals of Figures,” (3) “Drawing from Plaster Casts of Heads,” (4) “Drawing from Plaster Casts of Figures,” and (5) “Life Drawing.” The word “room” refers to the auditoriums in which the three drawing courses were held. The second room would then be the auditorium in which the courses in drawing from originals (1 and 2) were held. The two higher rooms would refer to the auditorium in which the courses in drawing from plaster casts (3 and 4) were held, and the one in which the course in life drawing (5) was held. This would make sense, because Anna Whistler says that the young officer who gave James drawing lessons was in the highest room, and the Academy records show that he was in drawing course 5, the final course (Kondakov, Iubileinyi spravochnik, vol. 1, pp. 150, 184; RGIA Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735. Spisok uchenikov Akademii koim vydany bilety dlia poseshcheniia klassov s pokazaniem poluchennykh imi na èkzamenakh medalei. S 1845 po 1849 g. [List of Academy pupils to whom tickets were issued to attend classes, showing the medals received by them on examinations. From 1845 through 1849], fol. 7v; Kornilova, Karl Briulllov, p. 20; Moleva and Beliutin, Russkaia khudozhestvennaia shkola, p. 359). Support for my interpretation of “room” may be found in the Russian edition of The Gentle Art of Making Enemies (E. Nekrasova, trans., Iziaschnoe iskusstvo sozdavat’ sebe vragov, by Dzheims MakNeil’ Vistler [James McNeill Whistler] [Moskva: Iskusstvo, 1970]). In her Introduction, Nekrasova loosely translated “entered at the 2nd room there are two higher” as “There are three classes there; he is in the last one” (Nekrasova, Iziaschnoe iskusstvo, p. 31). Nekrasova used the English text of the diaries quoted in the Pennell biography of Whistler (Pennell and Pennell, Life of Whistler, vol. 1, p. 17).

62. Alexander Osipovich Koritskii (1818 – 9/21 February 1866) was a lieutenant in the construction section of the Main Administration of Transport and an advanced student (fourth “age” group) at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. He began to give James drawing lessons sometime after September 1844, when Part I of the diaries was sent off to the United States. It was he who paid the fee of nine rubles on 26 March / 7 April 1845 and obtained and signed for the ticket (No. 355) admitting James as a student at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts (RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 734, fol. 18v (see previous Note for document title). Inside the book it says: “Spisok poseshchaiushchim raznym Risoval’nye klassy Imp-go AKh koim vydany dlia vkhoda v onye ot Akademii bilet’y s ustanovlennoi platou, s pokazaniem: komu imenno vydany bilet’y s kotorogo vremeni i skol’ko s kogo polucheno deneg i proch. Za 1845 god” [“List of various persons attending the Drawing classes of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts to whom the Academy has issued admission tickets to these classes, for which there is a set fee. Showing: to whom the tickets were issued, the date of issue and how much money was received and from whom, etc. For 1845.”]). On fol. 18v it says that Ticket No. 355 was issued to James Whistler (Iakov Uisler), son of an American, on March 26 [OS], that the fee of nine rubles was paid, and that the ticket was signed for and received by Koritskii. James’s was the last name registered for March 1845. There was some difficulty encountered in spelling his surname in Russian. The fee of nine rubles was paid if one registered in January–April, six rubles in May–August, or three rubles in September–December. Four hundred and fifty tickets were issued for 1845 (RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735. Spisok uchennikov Akademii, koim vydany bilet’y dlia poseshcheniia klassov s pokazaniem poluchennykh imi na èkzamenakh medalei. S 1845 po 1849 g. [List of Academy pupils to whom tickets were issued to attend classes, showing the medals received by them on examinations. From 1845 through 1849], fol. 19v). See Koritskii’s biography in Appendix E, James’s biography in “The Whistlers As They Were in the 1840s,” and Images 159–162, 167–170.
63. This is probably the surname Cazalet, a well-known British merchant family in St. Petersburg. The likely member of the family would seem to be Edward Cazalet (Brighton 9 November 1827 – Constantinople 21 April 1883), who would have been seventeen in April 1845. Edward Cazalet painted “water colours of landscapes . . . during his life” (Edward Cazalet [descendant] to E. Harden London, 6 April 1988). I did not find any Cazalet listed in the records of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in the Russian State Historical Archives in St. Petersburg as enrolled in its courses in 1845 (Frederick Arthur Crisp, ed., Visitation of England and Wales, vol. 19 [printed by the author, 1917], p. 4; obituary for Edward Cazalet, The Times (London), April 23, 1883).

64. James went across the Neva to the Academy of Fine Arts on 4/16 April. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti of the next day, the day of his mother's diary entry, announced: "Because of the appearance of holes in the ice on the Neva, riding on the river has become dangerous. It is therefore forbidden to do so from any of the launching areas" (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 77, Thursday, April 5 [April 17 NS], 1845, p. 346).
65. The cabman, called "Ishvostic" by Anna Whistler (spelled "izvozchik" and pronounced "izvaw'shcheek"), "received from James a silver ten-kopek coin (spelled "grivennik" and pronounced "gree'vennyeek") and a silver five-kopek coin (spelled "piatachok" and pronounced "peetachawk") (Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, p 53).
66. James was reading "Ewen Malcolm, or The Young Highlander in the Pyrenees. A Tale of the Peninsular War," which can be found in Margaret Fraser Tytler, Tales of Many Lands (London: Harvey and Darton, 1839), pp. 213–278.

Ewen Malcolm is the newborn son of James Malcolm, a private soldier in Wellington's army, and Effie Gordon, his wife, who has accompanied her husband on the campaign. Spain and Portugal have been freed from Napoleon. Required to return to his regiment in January 1814, James Malcolm leaves his wife and child with Basque peasants, the Valsains. Ewen's parents both die, and he is raised by the Valsains. Roman Catholics themselves, the Valsains, while making sure that Ewen is given instruction in the teachings of the Bible and goes to church on Sunday, never force him to embrace Catholicism, because his mother had a distaste for some of its forms. The hope of all three is that Ewen may one day be able to return to England. Ewen eventually becomes a guide to foreign travelers. He cannot understand or speak English, but the topics that interest him when he meets English travelers are the Duke of Wellington, returning to his own country, and "the religion of his country" (Tytler, Tales of Many Lands, p. 252). When the Valsains die, Ewen travels to the Valley of Luz, where he continues to work as a guide. There, he meets a party of English travelers, saves the life of one of them, Frederick Beauchamp (the hero of another of the tales in the above-mentioned volume), and is enabled to return to England, where he becomes a companion to Lord Beauchamp. It is a tale of nobility of character, love of the country of one's forefathers, and faithfulness to their religion. No matter what their station in life, all the characters are highly moral persons. The locale of the story explains why James read a passage on Swiss scenery to Captain Kruger.

67. Captain John Frederick Kruger was "one of an old school of Wesleyans who, while devoted members and active workers of that denomination, have always maintained a very friendly and considerate bearing towards the Established Church, and are as thoroughly Conservative in politics as they are zealous members of class." He lived in his native town of Hull after he retired. "He was marine superintendent to Messrs. Brown, Atkinson, and Co., shipowners, Hull, and was one of the captains of the Crimean war transports." "He was connected with most of the philanthropic and benevolent institutions of Hull ... [and] an elder brother of the Hull Trinity House." "Though not actually wealthy, he rendered services to many local charities." He died suddenly on the morning of Sunday, 10 June 1888, in St. Paul's Church Mission-room, where he had gone "to take part in the church parade of the Hull Artillery Volunteers" (The York Herald, June 11, 1888 and June 16, 1888).
68. John Milton (1608–1674), English poet and polemicist, is best known for Paradise Lost, an epic poem that tells the story of the creation, the fall, and Adam and Eve's expulsion from Paradise. It was published in 1667, after the English Civil Wars had ended with the Restoration of Charles II. Milton, during the Civil Wars, argued for divorce on grounds of incompatibility, publishing without censorship, and the reformation of church and state; he also defended the execution of Charles I.
69. "The Oregon Country ... included not only the present state of Oregon, but Washington, Idaho, part of Montana, and British Columbia" (Samuel Eliot Morison and Henry Steele Commager, The Growth of the American Republic, 2 vols. [New York: Oxford University Press, 1962], vol. 1, p. 584). In all "diplomatic negotiation[s] between the United States and Great Britain since 1815," the only point of agreement "was a temporary ... joint occupation, north of latitude 42°N, where Spanish California stopped, and south of latitude 54°40'N, where Russian Alaska ended.

“John Jacob Astor’s trading post of Astoria at the mouth of the Columbia River was sold to a Canadian fur trading company, which in 1821 amalgamated with the Hudson’s Bay Company that three years later constructed Fort Vancouver on the north bank of the lower Columbia” (p. 584). The heavy immigration to this area in 1843–1845, consisting of four to five thousand people, “strained the provisional territorial organization, and convinced Congress that something must be done to provide this remote colony with government, law and land titles” (p. 589). “Secretary Calhoun opened negotiations ... in 1844 with the British minister at Washington ... to divide the territory along latitude 49°. But Aberdeen ... refused to abandon the north bank of the Columbia” (p. 589). “A decline in the Columbia river fur trade was making Fort Vancouver unprofitable, and the menacing attitude of the latest American immigrants threatened its security” (p. 589). “The company abandoned Fort Vancouver to the Americans in 1845, and erected a new post at Victoria on Vancouver Island” (p. 590). By the time of this diary entry (5/17 April), President “James K. Polk, an expansionist” (see Image 50), had delivered his inaugural address (4 March 1845), in which he had “shouted defiance at Britain” (p. 590). This is the background to the possibility of war that concerned the British and American colonies in St. Petersburg.

In December 1845, Polk “asserted that the American title to the whole of Oregon, up to lat. 54°40’, was ‘clear and unquestionable’, and asked Congress for authority to terminate the joint occupation agreement of 1818” (p. 590). But Polk’s “ambition was to annex California,” which would have meant “fighting England and Mexico at the same time” (p. 590). He therefore accepted Aberdeen’s formal proposal “to extend the international boundary along latitude 49°N to Puget Sound, thence to the ocean through Juan de Fuca Strait, leaving Vancouver Island to Canada. He submitted the British offer to his cabinet on 6 June 1846 ... and on 15 June the Oregon Treaty, describing the boundary according to Aberdeen’s offer, was ratified” (p. 590). The War with Mexico was by then some four weeks old. See “Maps.”

70. Anna Whistler meant “than.”
71. The courier left on Tuesday, 15 April 1845.
72. Which Eliza Anna Whistler wrote to cannot be determined: Eliza Winstanley, Eliza McNeill, or Eliza Van Vechten.

73. Mrs. Leon's 81st birthday took place on Sunday, 20 April 1845.
74. St. Isaac's Square extended from St. Isaac's Cathedral to Blue Bridge (Sinii most) in front of the Maria Palace (Mariinskii dvorets) (see Images 99, 120, 136). During these years, it was largely occupied by temporary structures serving as studios and warehouses for materials for the cathedral that was in the process of being built (Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 264).
75. The verb "to smug" means "to smarten up (oneself or another one's appearance, etc.); to make trim or gay" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "smug, v.1"). Anna Whistler probably meant "smuggled," i.e., that she surreptitiously gave Mrs. Leon a bottle of cream. She could also have meant she smoothed Mrs. Leon's cloak so that the bottle would not show.
76. Mr. Strokoffski was the Polish friend Maxwell had brought to the Whistlers' dacha in the summer of 1844 (see the entry for Thursday [May] 29th, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Note 421). He was a state councilor (5th grade) and therefore a Russian civil servant (John S. Maxwell to his mother, St. Petersburg, August 25, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 19).
77. Captain Petr Petrovich Klokov (b. c. 1817), Class of 1837 at the Institute of Transport Engineers, was put at the disposal of the Department of Railways by order of Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243) and assigned as aide to Major Whistler on 28 June (OS) 1844 (RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, 1797–1867. Osobennaia kantseliariia GUPSIPS Formul'iarnye spiski i sluzhebnye dokumenty ofitserov i chinovnikov M-va P.S. Delo 56. Tom: Kisliakovskii-Kliauzov [Special Chancery of GUPSIPS Service records and service documents of officers and civil servants of the Ministry of Transport. File 56. Volume: Kisliakovskii-Kliauzov]. The service record for Captain Klokov for 1856, when he was handling foreign correspondence for the Department of Railways, contains the information that he was assigned to Major Whistler on 28 June (OS) 1844. See Klokov in Appendix E.
78. A "congé" is a formal farewell: "a bow ... at taking one's leave" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "congé").
79. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday afternoon 19th April who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: the unidentifiable governess (Mademoiselle); Martha Reed Ropes, sister of William Hooper Ropes and Mary (Tyler) Ropes Gellibrand (Martha Ropes, Martha); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (Mr. Ropes); and Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicia).

80. Anna Whistler made little mention of the festivities of the Easter season of 1845. In that year, Western Palm Sunday occurred on 4/16 March and Western Easter Sunday on 11/23 March. Anna Whistler had taken up her pen again to begin writing Part II of her diaries on 28 February / 12 March, before Western Palm Sunday, but had devoted no lines to either Western Palm Sunday or Western Easter in her next entry of 25 March. In this entry of 7/19 April, she mentions only the Palm market preceding Russian Orthodox Palm Sunday (8/20 April) and the concerts given during the ensuing Passion Week, when the theaters and opera were closed. The Whistler family were attending the English Church (see Images 110–111) every day in celebration of important days following Western Easter. The English Church was marking the sixth Sunday after Easter, with Ascension Thursday to follow on 19 April / 1 May. Anna Whistler's mention of the 8th and 9th days probably refers to the thirty-day cycle of readings in the Episcopal Psalter, which specifies the psalms to be read on each day of the month. The family went to church every day in the morning that week. On Day 8 in the morning, Psalms 38–40 were read; on Day 9 in the morning, Psalms 44–46. In parallel with the specified psalms, readings from the Old and New Testaments are also specified for each day in the cycle. Under Old Style, Sunday 8/20 April was Day 8 of a possible monthly cycle and Monday 9/21 April was Day 9. But Anna Whistler is suggesting that Day 8 was Monday 9/21 April and Day 9 Tuesday 10/22 April. I believe she made a mistake and should have written “Day 9” and “Day 10.” It was also the start of Orthodox Passion Week, culminating in Easter Sunday on 15/27 April, and Anna Whistler concentrates in this entry on the charity concert at the Assembly Hall of the Nobility that she, her husband, and Debo attended on Friday, 6/18 April.
81. With the opera season and carnival performances ended, the artists appeared in concerts such as the benefit performance described in Note 83, NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, in which they sang operatic arias, duets, and trios (Rozanov, Polina Viardo-Garsia, p. 52; A.A. Gozenpud, Dom Engel'gardia [Engelhardt's House] [St. Petersburg: Sovetskii kompozitor, 1992], pp. 212, 215). At the conclusion of the concert season, they left Russia until the next opera season.

82. The Assembly Hall of the Nobility (Dvorianskoe sobranie) (see Images 145–146) was opened on 6/18 December 1835 in the building belonging to Engel'gardt. Since the end of 1839, it had been located in a building built for it on the corner of Novo-Mikhailovskaia Street and Mikhailovskii Square (or Italianskaia Street). The purpose in setting it up was to create a gathering place in which the participants could find pleasure in dances, permitted games, the reading of newspapers, and other pursuits appropriate to an educated society. Members were hereditary nobles from all over the Empire. Guests at balls and masquerades and visitors on ordinary days could be non-hereditary nobility, honorary citizens, famous artists, and Russian and foreign merchants. Males under 17 years of age and females under 16 were not permitted. There were two categories of membership: permanent members, who had access to the hall at any time; and visitor members, who had access only to the six balls or masquerades held annually. Permanent members each received two tickets to the balls for the ladies in their family. The number of permanent members was reckoned to be over six hundred. Persons belonging to the social groups named above and temporarily in St. Petersburg could be visitors on ordinary days, while nobles owning their own homes in the capital, in service here and already members of other assemblies and clubs could not. The latter needed to be members. Twelve visitors were permitted each day and could retain this privilege for no longer than six months. The Assembly Hall was open daily from nine in the morning until two in the morning. On the days when there was a ball or masquerade, the public could not enter earlier than one hour before the event. The Assembly Hall was closed the last three days before Easter. The balls, which in the 1840s had been combined with masquerades, constituted the main charm that the Assembly Hall of the Nobility held for the capital. The magnificent and spacious hall illuminated by crystal chandeliers offered many conveniences for these festive occasions. The hall was encircled by columns, behind which were raised galleries accessible by a few steps. From these galleries one could watch those dancing and make one's way around the hall without crossing the dance floor. In front of the columns around the entire hall were three rows of red divans arranged like an amphitheater. Adjoining the hall were elegant rooms for the public that were opened only on these occasions. Buffets were set up here and the public took its ease in the coolness of these rooms after dancing. The Assembly Hall was also used for charity balls, private concerts, lotteries, etc. (Grech,

- Ves' Peterburg* 1851, pp. 183–185; Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 650–655; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 63).
83. Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna (see Images 420, 424) was the Most August Patroness of the St. Petersburg Children's Hospital (located on Bol'shaia Pod'iacheskaia Street near the Fontanka River), in aid of which the benefit concert was given with her permission. It took place on 6/18 April at 8 p.m. in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility (see Images 145–146). The foremost artists of the Italian company were to take part in it (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 74, Sunday, April 1 [April 13 NS], 1845, p. 331; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 69).
 “6 April 8:20 P.M. Her Majesty and the lady-in-waiting Barteneva ... accompanied by Grand Dukes Konstantin, Nikolai and Mikhail Nikolaevich and Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna, drove to the building of the Assembly Hall of the Nobility, where they attended a concert” (RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 154, fol. 162r [see Note 41 above for document title]).
84. Anna Whistler was pregnant and probably thinking of the possibility of her own death.
85. On 26 February / 10 March 1845, Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna (see Images 426–427), wife of the Heir Apparent, gave birth to a son, Grand Duke Aleksandr Aleksandrovich (see Image 428). On the occasion of this event, Emperor Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) announced that the order to wear mourning imposed upon the Court on the death of grand duchesses Aleksandra Nikolaevna (see Images 434, 444, 451) and Elizaveta Mikhailovna (see Image 441) was rescinded (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 46, Wednesday, February 28 [March 12 NS], 1845, p. 203).
86. The singers referred to are: the Spanish soprano, Michelle Fernanda Polina Viardot-García (Paris 18 July 1821 – Paris 18 May 1910; see Image 198); the tenor, Giovanni-Battista Rubini (Romano 7 April 1794 – Romano 3 March 1854; see Image 197), who retired after the 1844–1845 season; and the baritone, Antonio Tamburini (Faenza 28 March 1800 – Nice 8 November 1876; see Image 196).
87. The Whistlers were using a hired horse-drawn carriage (hackney).
88. “Men are but Children of a larger growth” is a line spoken by Dollabella in John Dryden's All for Love; or, The World Well Lost (1678), p. 46.

89. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday [April] 22nd who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha Reed Ropes, the sister of William Hooper Ropes, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, and Joseph Samuel Ropes (Martha Ropes, Martha, Martha R.); Joseph Samuel Ropes, brother of William Hooper Ropes, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, and Martha Reed Ropes (Joseph, Mr Joseph); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (my Sister). Martha Reed Ropes, Joseph Samuel Ropes, and Debo were "the young trio."
90. To take "French leave" is "to depart unnoticed or without permission" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "to take French leave").
91. This is Hugh McNeile (1795–1879), appointed Perpetual Curate of St. Jude's Church, Liverpool, in 1834. The book is entitled Lectures on the Sympathies, Sufferings, and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ (1843). It consists of eight lectures, the first six of which start with the words "The sufferings of Christ as They Stand Connected ..." Lecture 1 concludes "... with the Character and Conduct of Mary, the Sister of Lazarus"; lecture 2, "... with the Character and Conduct of Judas Iscariot"; lecture 3, "... with the Character and Conduct of the Apostle Peter"; lecture 4, "... with the Character and Conduct of Satan"; lecture 5, "... with the Character, Government and Glory of God the Father"; lecture 6, "... with Redemption, Faith, Salvation, and Condemnation among Men"; lecture 7, "The Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, a Subject of Type and Prophecy"; and lecture 8, "The Resurrection of Christ a Matter of Fact, and a Theme of Glad Tidings." McNeile said in the Preface to the Third Edition that he was "maturely convinced of the great truth which pervades the following pages, viz., the reality of Christ's human feelings; and of its incalculable importance to the devotional experience, the pure worship, and the consistent practice of the Christian Church." Lecture 2, which Anna Whistler was reading to her half-sister, Alicia, proposes that in suffering disappointment in a friend we should consider that Jesus has gone before us in the experience with Judas Iscariot and take consolation from it. The interpretation given therein of Judas's motives in the betrayal is very interesting (Hugh McNeile, Lectures on the Sympathies, Sufferings, and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, 3rd ed., 8 vols. [London: John Hatchard and Son; Liverpool: Arthur Newling and H. Perris, 1845], pp. 24–54). The Passion Week referred to

- in this entry is Orthodox Passion Week, but Anna Whistler is reading McNeile because it is “so appropriate.”
92. The set reading from Isaiah for the ninth day of April is Chapter 54, while for the tenth day it is Chapter 58. The psalms for the morning of the tenth day of April are 50–52.
  93. Persons mentioned in the entry for Friday 2nd May who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Rev. Dr. Edward Law (our Pastor); his wife, Mary Elizabeth (Mosley) Law (Mrs. Law); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (my kind Sister, my Sister); and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, wife of the English merchant William Clarke Gellibrand (Mrs. Gellibrand).
  94. Reverend and Mrs. Law were married on 20 April / 2 May 1816. It was therefore their 29th anniversary. See Law in Appendix E and Image 253.
  95. Anna Whistler seems to have meant “I found.”
  96. This may be Robert Cattley (York 20 August 1787 – St. Petersburg 1859), Russia merchant, who “left York in 1802 to work in the Cattley Counting House in St. Petersburg, founded by his uncle Stephen of Camberwell.” He “continued to live in St. Petersburg, apart from visits to England, until his death.” He married on 3 June 1815 Frances Moberly (St. Petersburg 21 August / 1 September 1789 – St. Petersburg 23 August 1872), whose father, Edward, was also a Russia merchant. They had ten surviving children, whose ages at this time ranged from about fifteen to twenty-nine (The Cattley Family Tree 1690–1990, pp. 26–27, based on the Trees of 1839 and 1891, researched 1980–1990 by Gerald N. Coveney, LRA).
  97. This is Dorothea (Halliday) Baird (bap. 2 January 1810 – Steyning, Sussex 20 February 1880), who married Francis Baird (28 February / 12 March 1802 – 13/25 March 1864; see Image 275) on 1/13 October 1828 (PREC STP, no. 3756).
  98. This is sixteen-year-old Charles John Baird (St. Petersburg 3/15 July 1829 – Brighton 5 October 1857), son of Francis and Dorothea (Halliday) Baird (PREC STP for 1829, p. 134). He married first Eliza Halliday (b. 23 March 1806; bap. St. Petersburg 18 April 1806; d. St. Petersburg 14 January 1850) on 29 April 1847. He married secondly on 27 May 1852 Frances Percy Parland (b. Tsarskoe Selo 10 January 1811; bap. St. Petersburg 18 January 1811; d. Brighton 6 December 1887) (IGI; Dundee, Perth and Cupar Advertiser, October 16, 1857; Brighton Gazette, December 10, 1887; Morning Chronicle (London), February 5, 1850; Russia, Select Births and Baptisms, 1755–1917, ancestry.com; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1858–1995, IGI). For Francis Baird and his father Charles Baird, see Images 274–275.

99. The Honorable John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield (1802–1879; see Image 291) had become envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Russian Court as of 3 April 1844 (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Bloomfield, John Arthur Douglas”).
100. The St. Petersburg grandchildren of Mrs. Law were the children of James Richard (1806–1867; see Image 255) and Mary Eliza (Law) Cattley (1821–1859; see Image 254), who married on 9/21 October 1840: Rhoda Mary Cattley (b. 1/13 February 1844) and Alfred Cattley (b. 16/28 April 1845) (PREC STP for 1840, p. 307, and for 1854, p. 323).
101. This is Olympia (Cazalet) Cazalet (London 1788 – Brighton 31 January 1848), wife of her cousin Peter Clement Cazalet (St. Petersburg 14 November 1785; died at sea 6 July 1857; buried in Volkov Cemetery, St. Petersburg, 11 July 1859), and mother of Edward Cazalet (Brighton 9 November 1827 – Constantinople 21 April 1883). Her son seems the likeliest candidate for the young man who Anna Whistler said was James Whistler’s classmate at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. I was not able to find a Cazalet in the Academy’s register for 1845 (1841 Census for Peter Clement Cazalet; Crisp, Visitation of England and Wales; obituary for Edward Cazalet, The Times (London), April 23, 1883).
102. The original sculptures by Bertel Thorvaldsen (19 November 1770 – 24 March 1844; see Image 478), of which Anna Whistler saw plaster models at the Laws’ home, were in Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady) in Copenhagen (see Image 480). Her wish to see the original sculptures came true in the summer of 1848. See Images 481–484 of the sculptures of Christ and the Apostles, the baptismal font, and the pediment.
103. It has not been possible to ascertain who in Preston had written to Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister. The first person who comes to mind is Alicia’s biological sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley.
104. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday [May] 3rd who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, wife of William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (Mrs. Gellibrand); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (Mrs. Ropes, dear Ropes chat); Alexander (Sashenka) Drury, old Mr. Drury’s grandson (Scharschinka

- Drury); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicia, Sister); Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler's sister-in-law (Maria's anxious watchings, dear Sister); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (dear mother, my mothers letter); Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (Mrs. Harrison); her husband, Joseph Harrison Jr. of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mr. H.); Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, American envoy extraordinary (Col Todd, our Ambassador); Sophia (Morgan) Baird (old Mrs. Baird); and Rev. Dr. Edward Law, the Whistlers' pastor (Dr. Law).
105. This is Mary Grant (b. c. 1782; d. 7/19 February 1863; buried 9/21 February 1863 in the Smolensk Cemetery) (PREC STP, no. 7476). It is not clear whether Anna Whistler meant Mrs. or Miss.
  106. Anna Whistler is alluding to the fact that in the summer of 1841 she was pregnant with the child whom they named Charles Donald and who died on the trip to Russia in 1843. In a letter to her sister, Catherine Jane McNeill, dated Stonington May 1st, 1838, Anna Whistler had said of her household: "good Julia and Thomas made fires" (McDiarmid, Whistler's Mother, p. 29). The letter suggests that they were servants in the Whistler home. It is possible that Sister Julia is that Julia, and that she came to Springfield to help out when Anna Whistler was pregnant. The Whistlers had moved to Springfield in 1840.
  107. The letters arrived on Saturday, 26 April 1845, on the eve of Russian Orthodox Easter. It has not been possible to locate any of them.
  108. Anna Whistler is referring to Lectures on the Sympathies, Sufferings, and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, by The Rev. Hugh McNeile, M.A. I have read the third edition (London: John Hatchard and Son; Liverpool: Arthur Newling and H. Perris, 1845).
  109. This is William Wyatt McNeill (October 1833 – 4 June 1853), son of Gen. William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31) and Maria (Cammann) McNeill. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  110. It has not been possible to locate these letters from George William Whistler and General Joseph G. Swift, his uncle, which must have been concerned, among other topics, with George's health and employment. See the biography of George William Whistler in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s."
  111. Russian Orthodox Easter Sunday occurred on 27 April in 1845 (see Image 379 for an icon of this feast day).

112. Romans 8:28: “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.”
113. Philippians 3:8: “Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ.”
114. Anna Whistler was reading to her sons from The School-Boy; or, A Guide for Youth to Truth and Duty, by John S.C. Abbott (Boston: Crocker and Brewster, 1839. John Stevens Cabot Abbott (Brunswick, ME 19 September 1805 – Fair Haven, CT 17 June 1877) came from a family described as “represent[ing] the best and gentlest tradition of New England Puritanism.” He graduated in the Class of 1825 from Bowdoin College, where his classmates included Hawthorne and Longfellow. “Upon graduation, he served for a year as principal of the Academy in Amherst, Mass., and then for three years pursued a theological course at Andover Seminary, engaging also in the establishment of Sunday-schools along the southern shore of Cape Cod.” His first pastorate upon graduation from Andover Seminary in 1829 was in Worcester, Massachusetts, where he was ordained on 28 January 1830 and remained until 1834. He also held pastorates in Roxbury (1835–1841), and Nantucket (1841–1843) and has been described as having a “restless energy [that] unfitted him for long-continued service in one place.” This same restless energy is cited as the cause of “his type of pulpit oratory – strongly evangelistic, little philosophical, but well-supplied with historical illustrations and aiming chiefly at practical piety.” In 1833, he began his career as an author “with the publication of The Mother at Home, or the Principles of Maternal Duty Familiarly Illustrated, a compilation of a series of lectures before the mothers’ association of his parish.” In 1843, several of his brothers “founded Abbott’s Institution,” a seminary for young ladies, in New York City. John S.C. Abbott joined them in December of that year, remaining involved in the school’s affairs for some “eight to ten years.” His book, The History of Napoleon Bonaparte, appeared in 1855; although immensely popular, “it was also the most severely censured of his writings.” His hero-worship of Napoleon “antagonized many American editors and critics.” In 1861, he returned to active ministry as pastor for five years of the Howe Street Church in New Haven, Conn., but continued his historical writing and publication. His best-known works following his life of Napoleon were The Empire of Austria (1859), The Empire of Russia (1860), Italy

(1860), Civil War in America (2 vols., 1863, 1866), History of Napoleon III (1868), Romance of Spanish History (1869), and History of Frederick the Great (1871). He also was a prolific writer in “American history, biography, ethics, religion, popular science, and juvenile literature.”

“To the discerning among his contemporaries it was plain that he was a florid writer, overfond of moralizing, and lacking independent authority; but to a large public who cared more for picturesque narrative than for sober interpretation the books were of absorbing interest, and undoubtedly did much to popularize the reading of history” (Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Abbott, John Stevens Cabot”).

115. “Sweet-curd cheese” is a “generic term for cheeses that have no starter bacteria added, just rennet. They are processed very quickly before acid can develop. The cheeses are not really sweetened; rather, with less acid... more of the sweetness in the milk is able to come through” (“Sweet-curd cheeses,” CooksInfo, accessed 14 December 2020, <https://www.cooksinfo.com/sweet-curd-cheeses>). Sweet-curd is sometimes eaten with cream and fruit or berries.
116. Rennet is produced “from the stomach of an unweaned calf, containing rennin and used in curdling milk for cheese” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “rennet”).
117. Anna Whistler said she never wrote in her diary on a Sunday. She was writing Sunday’s entry, 4 May, on Monday, 5 May, but had failed to indicate this change in date, or she would have shown two Monday entries, one for Sunday and one for Monday, as she sometimes did. The one for Sunday therefore appears under the entry for Saturday, May 3, causing confusion for the reader. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti announced on Wednesday that “the Isaac Bridge was drawn back on Sunday morning” (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 90, Wednesday, April 25 [May 7 NS], 1845, p. 404).
118. 2 Peter 1:10 concerns the things which pertain to life and godliness: “Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall.”
119. Exodus 20:8–11: “<sup>8</sup> Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. <sup>9</sup> Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: <sup>10</sup> But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: <sup>11</sup> For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.”

120. Galatians 6:9: “And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.”
121. Anna Whistler is referring to the story of Moses leading the murmuring and rebelling Israelites out of bondage in Egypt to the promised land of Canaan, a wandering that lasted forty years. When the goal was finally reached, the generations that had originally set out had died. The story, which she gives as an example of the benefit that could have been reaped from unquestioning obedience, is told in Exodus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.
122. Anna Whistler omitted the word “came” in this sentence. Henrietta Law is Henrietta Maria Law (1822–1892), daughter of Rev. Dr. Edward and Mary Elizabeth (Mosley) Law.
123. The gist of this sentence seems to be that Major Whistler had suffered more from the cold in this drive than on any other similar occasion in winter. Perhaps Anna Whistler should have written “he had not ever suffered so from cold in a drive during the winter as he had today.”
124. The travel letters of Elizabeth Rigby (Norwich 17 November 1809 – London 2 October 1893; see Image 190) were published anonymously in 1841 as A Residence on the Shores of the Baltic: Described in a Series of Letters. The popularity of the book resulted in a second edition, also anonymous, with the title Letters from the Shores of the Baltic (1842). She wrote the letters to her mother, Anne (Palgrave) Rigby (1777–1872), during a trip undertaken in October 1838 to Reval, Estonia, to visit two sisters. She also spent some time in St. Petersburg and recorded her stay there as well in the letters. The reference to the Russian baptismal ceremony is on p. 54 of the first volume.

Rigby traveled again to Reval in 1844, this time for three months and with her youngest sister. They left London on 7 May 1844, traveling via Hamburg, Lübeck, and Travemünde, and arrived on 17 May at St. Petersburg, where they spent a fortnight. On 21 May, they dined at Rev. Law’s. He “spoke most kindly of my book,” she recorded in her journal. They departed for Reval on 30 May (Lady Elizabeth Rigby Eastlake, Journals and Correspondence of Lady Eastlake; Edited by her Nephew, Charles Eastlake Smith; with Facsim. of Her Drawings and a Portrait, ed. Charles Eastlake Smith, 2 vols. [London: John Murray, 1895], vol. 1, pp. 129, 130, 133, 135). The Whistler family had left for their dacha on 14 May 1844, and Anna Whistler made no mention in her diaries of knowing that Rigby was in Russia.

Two of Elizabeth Rigby's sisters lived in Estonia: Maria Justina (b. St. Giles, Norwich 4 April 1808; bap. St. Giles, Norwich 8 April 1808; d. Biarritz, France 1 March 1889), who was married to Baron Robert de Rosen (Reval 20 March 1806 – Weissenstein, Russia 25 February 1887); and Gertrude (b. St. Giles, Norwich 22 February 1812; bap. St. Giles, Norwich 26 February 1812; d. Reval 14 August 1859), who was married to Baron Theophile de Rosen (b. Russia 26 March 1808 – Reval 30 June 1893), brother of Baron Robert de Rosen. Her sister, Anne (b. Framingham Earl, Norfolk 4 August 1804 – Slough, Berkshire 3 August 1869) had married at Framingham Earl, Norfolk, on 19 May 1830, Charles George de Wahl (Dorpat 28 December 1806 – Dorpat 25 May 1876). In July 1837, Anne divorced her husband, "Carl George de Wahl of Wattel, Estonia," and returned to England, where she ran a succession of girls' schools in Norwich and London. Maria Justina, when she came to England in 1848, seemed also to be separated from her husband, but did not divorce him. She supported herself and her children through running a dames' house in Eton (Register of Baptisms in St. Giles, Norwich; Illustrated London News, September 3, 1859; Bury and Norwich Post, August 30, 1869; Bishop's Transcripts for Norfolk; England marriages, IGI; Julie Sheldon, ed., The Letters of Elizabeth Rigby, Lady Eastlake [Liverpool, UK: Liverpool University Press, 2009], pp. 5, 6, 23, 42n3, 43n2, 51n1, 68n2, 119n2, 120n1, 130n11, 191n1, 193n1, 196n2, 211n3, 213n2, 278n1, 302n1, 359n1, 453n1, 478n1, 505n8, 521n2, 568n1, 594n1; geni.com; Chelmsford Chronicle, August 6, 1869; C.J. Palmer and Stephen Tucker, eds., Palgrave Family Memorials [Norwich: privately printed, 1878], pp. 96–100, 112–114).

125. For a description of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts building and the principal ferry stair, see Note 60 above and Images 154–157.
126. Drawing classes were conducted in a two-hour session from five to seven p.m. Monday through Friday, but James did not attend every day (Seriakov, "Moia trudovaia zhizn'," p. 350).
127. "24 April [OS] The freeing of the Neva River from ice [see Image 349]. At eleven o'clock in the morning, on the occasion of the freeing of the Neva River from ice, Counter Admiral Epanchin rode out from the Admiralty along the Neva in the launch of the Director of the Shipbuilding Department and was met en route by the Head of the Wharf. Stopping opposite the St. Petersburg Fortress they saluted with cannon fire from the launches which was done also from the Bastion. At this time the Commandant, General of Infantry Skobelev, rode out of the Fortress and over to the Jordan landing. On disembarking from the launches, they passed into His Majesty's Winter Palace along the main staircase, through the Small and Large Avancesal, and the Concert Hall upstairs to His Majesty. At this time the St. Petersburg Commandant was received to give his report" (RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 154, fols. 206 r & v [see Note 41 above for document title]). This entry is the equivalent of 6 May NS.

128. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday [May] 6th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (Mr. Ropes); Joseph Harrison Jr., of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mr. Harrison); Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, his wife (wifes invitation, young Countrywoman); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (my Sister, dear kind Sister); and Annie and Henry Harrison, children of Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (her sweet children).
129. "Moscow silk," was not, strictly speaking, silk. A factory named "Moscow Silk" was opened in 1820 on the bank of the Moscow River in the former Savvinskaia patriarchal district by the Moscow merchant, Rodion Dmitrievich Vostriakov, who owned it for 35 years. It came to occupy a prominent position among textile and trimmings factories in Moscow. The Moscow Silk Factory produced calico, which is a printed cotton fabric ("Moscow silk," Wikipedia, accessed 16 January 2021, [https://ru.wikipedia.org/w/index.php?title=Moscow\_shelk&ol did=111765176](https://ru.wikipedia.org/w/index.php?title=Moscow_shelk&ol did=111765176)). Anna Whistler was therefore buying high-quality, fast-printed calico cloth to send to her family in Stonington and New York.
130. The breaking up of the ice on the Neva (see Image 349) and the restoration of navigation referred to in the diary entries of 5 and 6 May NS were discussed in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti on 25 April / 7 May:

This time the Neva has dealt mercilessly with us inhabitants of Vasilievskii Island: for more than 24 hours there was no communication between the two banks of the river. The Isaac Bridge was drawn back on Sunday morning. Finally today the ice opposite the Fortress moved. At 11 A.M. the Commandant of the Peter and Paul Fortress crossed the Neva to the accompaniment of cannon fire and with the usual ceremony, and traffic back and forth began. Mr. Baird's Steamship "Star" made its first spring trip of the year up the river but was soon forced to return because it encountered much ice. After that, due to a strong wind an enormous amount of ice appeared that drew with it a large number of barques and rafts and a large galiote. During the night the ice ripped away the boats forming the bridge that were closest to Vasilievskii Island and which are never drawn aside and carried them down, from what we have heard, to the Maslianyi Depot. None of this, by the way, is astonishing because there have as yet been no warm days or warm rains and thus the ice has melted only slightly. It is difficult to say for certain just when the Neva did open up this year; but apparently one has to say it was from today because yesterday it had freed itself from ice only in places. This is an extremely late opening of navigation: in 127 years, the Neva has opened up later than 23 April [5 May NS] only 17 times." (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 90, Wednesday, April 25 [May 7 NS], 1845, p. 404)

131. Persons mentioned in the entry for Wednesday [May] 7th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Sister, Sister Alice); and Joseph Harrison Jr., of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (of Mr. Harrisons).
132. A "mantilla" is a lightweight shawl of silk, velvet, or lace worn by women from the 1840s to the 1880s. It hung long in the back and had long scarf ends in the front (Ghislaine Wood, Victoria and Albert Museum Research Department, London, telephone conversation with E. Harden, October 2003). "English silk would simply refer to the fabric, meaning a woven silk from London rather than a more elaborate silk from France" (Miles Lambert, curator of costume, Platt Hall, Rusholme, Manchester, to E. Harden, 12 November 2003, referencing Cunnington, Cunnington, and Beard, Dictionary of English Costume, p. 132).
133. The "Norwich," an up-and-down beam boat, was "generally ... the first boat sent out in the spring to break the way through the soft ice" on the Hudson River, because of its "stout hull and powerful engines.” It was built in 1836 and became known “among river men ... as the ‘Ice King’” (David Lear Buckman, Old Steamboat Days on the Hudson River: Tales and Reminiscences of the Stirring Times that Followed the Introduction of Steam Navigation [New York: Grafton, 1907; repr., Astoria, NY: J.C. and A.L. Fawcett, 1990], pp. 26–27, p. 24 [photograph]).

134. Anna Whistler was looking forward to letters from the family of her brother, William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31); they lived in Brooklyn.
135. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday [May] 10th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Annie Harrison (Annie, these affectionate children); Henry Harrison (Henry, these affectionate children); Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison and Joseph Harrison Jr., parents of Annie and Henry (M<sup>r</sup> & M<sup>rs</sup> H); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (my sister); Carl Hedenschoug, Major Whistler’s draftsman (M<sup>r</sup> Hadenskougg); and Martha Reed Ropes, sister of William Hooper Ropes, whose family lived across the hall (Martha Ropes).
136. This is a further allusion to Anna Whistler’s pregnancy, to which she never refers openly.
137. It has not been possible to identify the young German governess.
138. About four versts from the Imperial Porcelain Factory, on the eleventh verst along the Schlüsselburg Road, one sees a stone city and the enormous structures of the Aleksandrovskaiia Manufactory with their unusual proportions (see Image 242). Nothing can be more majestic than the exterior of this complex, which consists of magnificent buildings in the English style located on the bank of the Neva on a most pleasant site. The surroundings are picturesque and the manufactory in the midst of them is like a small English manufacturing town. On this site previously stood the dacha of Prince A.A. Viazemskii, procurator general in the reign of Catherine the Great. The manufactory was established in 1798 and from 1799 through the end of 1828 was under the patronage of Empress Maria Fyodorovna (see Images 415–416), mother of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423). By means of this institution, the empress gave asylum and ensured the future of several thousand orphans from the St. Petersburg Foundling Home, who worked here at cotton spinning, linen spinning, and weaving. Here, too, were made all of Russia’s playing cards, an enterprise bringing enormous annual profits to the manufactory, thus enabling it to be the gigantic establishment that it was. The main entrance of the manufactory is along the extensive porch of its church, the façade of which is simple but majestic, with an azure cupola sprinkled with stars, and consists of a single arch crowned by a pediment. In the center of the arch is a door and above a semicircular window, in the depression of which are two angels supporting a cross. On the sides of the arch are two niches containing sculptures. The church, named for Alexander Nevsky, is located on the upper floor of the building; under it is a huge hall in which the children gather before dinner and spend their free time on winter evenings and in bad weather. In the semicircular end of the building there is a drafting room, while in the vaults underneath it food supplies are kept. In the drafting room there is an excellent collection of plans for all the buildings and machines of the manufactory. There is also a drawing class here for children demonstrating a talent along these lines. Space in the infirmary, the workshops, schoolrooms, and living areas has been calculated taking into consideration a healthful proportion of cubic feet of air per person; i.e. the attempt has been made to eliminate overcrowding. In two or three buildings attached to the church structure there are: on the right side the dining room, bakery, kitchen, etc; on the left, classrooms, a hall for examinations, a library, and several beautifully decorated rooms for receiving visiting members of the Imperial family. The dining room is an enormous hall divided down its entire fifty-sazhen length into two halves for boys and girls, up to two thousand of whom dine at one sitting. In each half there are two rows of tables. On the wall in a special frame is a dining timetable for the week. Excellent students are rewarded with something extra at the meal, while poor students are deprived of something. The kitchen and bakery, which are on the lower floor, are set up in excellent fashion and maintained with exemplary cleanliness. Food is sent up in cauldrons to the dining room by means of a machine. At the table children are served by invalid soldiers. The food is considered very good despite the multitudes of children and various other workers. The children are clean and nicely dressed in their identical uniforms. They stand in a decorous and reverent manner and sing a prayer before their meal. In addition to their work the children study catechism, Russian, arithmetic, drawing, and drafting. The civil servants and inspectors were themselves inmates of this establishment when children, but have completed their period of servitude. Together with other workers and guards, they number up to three thousand persons. The total number of male and female inhabitants at the manufactory is about five thousand. In the middle of the courtyard is a five-story building (not including storage vaults) embellished with a belvedere. From it there is an extensive view of the picturesque surrounding countryside. Here there are well-situated, high, light, clean, healthy sleeping quarters for almost a thousand children. For the sake of absolute neatness, when they come across the courtyard from the workshops they must leave their footwear in one of the rooms on the lower floor and put on special shoes, which are kept in cupboards here. Water for washing is brought to all floors by means of pumps. On the south and north sides of the courtyard are buildings for cotton spinning. The first building, called the primary spinning mill, has a structure attached to it containing on the top floor machines for such processes as preparing combing cards and making loom reeds. The two middle floors contain a great number of lathes, boring mills, and other machine tools and equipment for making machines. On the storage vault level is the equipment for finishing skins used to make playing cards. In the spinning mill the cotton is cleaned, combed, taken up, and spun by machines situated in large spacious rooms. The workers, who for the most part are children (of both sexes), simply keep track of the proper working of the machines and transfer material from one place to another. Everything else works by steam. This structure has a four-story wing, part of which is occupied by various machine tools for preparing and assembling spinning and other machines. The other parts of the wing contain everything having to do with the making of playing cards. From 110,000 to 130,000 decks of cards are made here annually. Opposite this wing, inside the courtyard, there is a sixteen-hearth smithy made of inflammable materials and a small brass foundry. Lastly, there is also in the main courtyard the linen-spinning mill, located in a particularly spacious building. Here, in addition to a multitude of preparatory and spinning machines for linen and hemp, there are hand looms for sailcloth, machine looms, and machines for weaving processes like doubling and winding thread, winding spools, and preparing warps. In addition, there are one hundred more hand looms for weaving sailcloth in a special wooden structure. There is also a separate stone building, in which part of the readymade goods is stored. It too holds several looms. In a similar separate building there is a shop in which the workers deal solely with boiling and dyeing wool and which contains a spacious drying room. There is a special place for repair of machines. Near the gates of the manufactory is a building with apparatus for obtaining gas from coal, which is then distributed by pipes to the cotton- and linen-spinning mills and other parts of this colossal works. There are many fine little houses here for the civil servants, master workers, married orphans and workmen. There is a large school for boys and girls, where the children of married orphans and workmen are taught by means of the Lancaster system. All learn reading, writing and arithmetic, and the girls receive, in addition, lessons in needlework. Architecturally, the school is remarkable in that the windows are located higher than a person is tall so that the pupils will not be distracted, while the floors slope so that the back desks are higher than the front ones. Although machines do the work, those who watch them are each assigned a slate on which the previous day's production is recorded and compared from day to day. Orphans of both sexes who receive their keep and clothing from the state have this deducted from their monthly salary. A part of their earnings is given to them while the rest is kept for them and earns interest. According to Burianov, there are instances when an orphan who has worked off the required number of years leaves the manufactory with a nestegg of up to a thousand rubles (Bur'ianov, Progulka s det'mi po S. Peterburgu, pt. 3, pp. 223–234). Pushkarev said that up to two million decks of cards were made annually, which is probably closer to the truth (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, p. 609; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 3, pp. 228).

The director of the Aleksandrovskaia Manufactory (retired 1856) was Engineer-General Alexander Wilson (1776–1866; see Image 241). He had come to Russia at around the age of eight, when his father, James, an Edinburgh smith, responded to an 1784 recruitment call from the architect Charles Cameron, who was working for Catherine the Great (see Image 414). In 1803, having worked his way up, Alexander Wilson became assistant director at the manufactory and, at the death of its director, Charles Gascoigne, in 1806, took over as head. Under him the manufactory became a tourist stop for foreign travelers, a number of whom corroborated Burianov's statements about the exemplary working conditions of the children. The engineer Sir John Rennie said:

He possessed a calm even temper, firm, but just, and conciliating, a competent knowledge of what he undertook to perform, without possessing any considerable amount of invention ... [he] was thoroughly liked and respected, from the humblest workman under his orders up to the Emperor who was very fond of him.

Lastly, he was thoroughly honest, a rare thing in Russia in these days, where speculation was rife from the highest to the lowest; and if Wilson had followed the universal example, which he might have done with impunity, he would have made a large fortune, but after many years' service he died comparatively poor. (quoted in Bowles, "From the Banks of the Neva," pp. 68–69)

Therefore, during his term as director perhaps the orphans' nestegg of up to a thousand rubles was indeed possible.

139. "Clabber is a food produced by allowing unpasteurized milk to turn sour at a specific humidity and temperature. Over time the milk thickens or curdles into a yoghurt-like substance with a strong sour flavor" ("What is Clabber?" My Dairy Diet, accessed 5 January 2021, <https://dairyproducts.nutriarena.com/en/what-is-clabber-and-evaporated-milk/comparison-97-20-13>). "In rural areas of the Southern United States, it was commonly eaten for breakfast with brown sugar, nutmeg, cinnamon, or molasses added. Some people also eat it with fruit or black pepper and cream. Clabber was brought to the South by Ulster Scots who settled in the Appalachian mountains. It is still sometimes referred to as 'bonny clabber' ("Clabber," Wikipedia, accessed 5 January 2021, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Clabber\_%28food%29). The term "bonny clabber" come from the "Irish bainne clabair. bainne is milk in early Irish, and clabair is "a thick milk"; the first element is probably partly remodelled after "bonny," from French "bon," or good" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "bonny clabber").
140. As Anna Whistler had just mentioned having inherited her own mother's taste for contemplating nature, it would seem that by "grandmother" she means her mother Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22).
141. William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265) was born on 31 March. Tuesday, 13 May 1845, was the eleventh wedding anniversary of Mary Tyler (Ropes) (see Image 266) and William Clarke Gellibrand.
142. Dr. James Ronaldson Handyside, MD (c. 1796 – 11/23 December 1872), widower, and Sophia Jubb (c. 1818 – 31 October / 12 November 1886), spinster, were married in the English Church by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (see Image 253) on 10/22 May 1845 (PREC STP, no. 5500, p. 323). The doctor's surname is spelled variously Handyside, Handiside, Handysides,

- or Handisides. It is rendered in the notes to Anna Whistler's diaries as it appears in each document cited.
143. "Miss J—" is Sophia Jubb (see previous Note).
  144. Dr. Handyside's first wife and the mother of Alice and Mary, who are spoken of here and elsewhere in the diaries, was Sophia (Fock) Handyside (c. 1811 – 22 April/4 May 1842) (PREC STP, no. 5173). See the entry for Sunday [August] 11th, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Notes 732 and 733.
  145. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday 13th May who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler's sister (Sister Klie [sic: Katie]); Joseph Harrison Jr. of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick and his wife, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (the Harrisons); and William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (Mr Ropes).
  146. "Catrinoff" was the English speakers' pronunciation of Ekateringof, spelled "Ekateringof" and pronounced "Yikuhtirin'guf." See the entries for Thursday [May] 29th [1844] and Monday [August] 26th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and Images 405–406.
  147. It is quite difficult to understand Anna Whistler's thinking about Maypole dancing. It is tempting to conjecture whether or not she was aware of its phallic significance. The point of her remarks here, however, seems to be that the silent, joyless masses in public spaces in St. Petersburg left a strong negative impression on her, as they did on most visitors, and that she felt that the masses would never be able to yield to the joyousness of Maypole dancing if it were a part of the Ekateringof festivities, which had to do with matchmaking. She herself would have been willing to watch Maypole dancing there, despite the joyless atmosphere she anticipated would be exuded by the surrounding crowd. Her remarks suggest that she herself had happily experienced Maypole dancing somewhere, and had evidence, perhaps from her English friends, of a more joyous May festival in "the south of Russia." For information about May Day festivities, see Dorothy Spicer, The Book of Festivals (New York: Women's Press, 1937), pp. 17–18, 58, 88–89.
  148. On Sunday, 11 May 1845, Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256) preached a farewell sermon at Alexandrofsky, as his poor health compelled him to return to England for a time. He had started Sunday services in the schoolroom at Harrison's house (see Images 239–240) in 1844 (British and American Congregational Church St. Petersburg, Jubilee Commemorative Volume, 1840–1890 [St. Petersburg: S. Golenischtscheff and F. Krankenhagen, 1891], pp. 26–27, 28 [hereafter, Jubilee Commemorative Volume].

149. “Babki” is an ancient game (some 1500 years old) of knucklebones, usually played by young people, but sometimes by adults, with two to ten players (see Image 356). In Russia, they favored knucklebones made from the joints of cows’ feet, because they are bigger and can hit their mark from a greater distance. Each player has a “shooter,” his biggest and heaviest knucklebone, often filled with lead or tin, and three to ten additional bones. A line is made in the center of an outdoor playing area, usually 30–40 meters in size for young players. The agreed-upon number of bones from each player is placed along the line in one or two rows or in a cluster, less often in a fanciful shape (e.g., a fish with open mouth) or by throwing the bones and letting them lie as they fall. There are various ways to determine who will go first: it can be by lot or by an elimination game, but usually it is by throwing one’s “shooter.” There are also variations on how one throws the “shooter” and from where. The first player goes up to where his “shooter” is lying and throws it from that spot at the bones standing on the line. If he knocks over a bone, he takes it. Each player then takes his turn. The game is over when there are no more bones on the line, but if any still remain after everyone has had his turn, the players can decide to keep playing with those bones or to each put down an additional agreed-upon number of bones. The game is usually repeated many times. The player who gets the most bones wins (L.V. Byleeva and V.M. Grigoriev, Igry narodov SSSR [Games of the Peoples of the USSR] [Moscow: Fizkul’tura i sport, 1985], pp. 37–39).
150. May 1/13 was the eleventh wedding anniversary of William Clarke and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand.
151. Persons mentioned in the entry for “June 6th Old Style today is & 18th our calender” who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Julia McNeill Palmer and George Edwin Palmer Jr., children of Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler’s sister (Sister Kates children); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, wife of the merchant William Clarke Gellibrand (M<sup>rs</sup> Gellibrand); Martha Reed Ropes, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand’s sister (Martha Ropes); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers’ physician (D<sup>r</sup> Rogers, the doctor); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (Sister, Aunt Alicia); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes); William Bonamy

Maingay, brother of Deborah Whistler's best friend, Emma Maingay (W<sup>m</sup> Maingay); Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, Emma Maingay, Eliza Anne Maingay (his Mother & Sisters); William Miller, merchant (M<sup>r</sup> W<sup>m</sup> Millers return, M<sup>rs</sup> M, M<sup>r</sup> Miller); and Joseph Swift Whistler, Anna Whistler's deceased step-son (brother Joes).

152. Anna Whistler was reading Memoir and Remains of the Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne, Minister of St. Peter's Church, Dundee by the Rev. Andrew A. Bonar D.D. Minister of the Free Church of Scotland, Glasgow. It was probably the "New Edition with Appendices, Facsimiles of Writings, and Portrait" (Edinburgh and London: Oliphant Anderson & Ferrier, [1844]). The young Scotsman who lent the book to her may have been William Saunders, William Miller's nephew, whom she knew.

Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne (Edinburgh 21 May 1813 – Dundee 25 March 1843) was educated at High School and the University of Edinburgh, which he entered in November 1827 (Andrew A. Bonar, Memoir and Remains of the Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne, Minister of St. Peter's Church, Dundee, centenary [of his birth] ed. [Edinburgh and London: Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier, 1913], pp. 4, 5; all quotations in the following paragraph are from this edition). He studied modern languages, drew well, sang beautifully, wrote poetry, and had "considerable knowledge of music" (p. 5) In the winter of 1831, he began his divinity studies (pp. 5–6). Before entering divinity school, he had studied Hebrew and "could consult the Hebrew original of the Old Testament with as much ease as most of our ministers are able to consult the Greek of the New" (p. 29). Study of Bible criticism with a group of friends starting in their first year made him "indebted to this society for much of that discipline of mind on Jewish literature and Scripture geography which was found to be so useful in the Mission of Inquiry to the Jews in after days" (p. 30). Even before being ordained, he was sought out by several ministers as an assistant and in 1835 went to work with the Rev. John Bonar near Stirling. On 1 July 1835, he was "licensed ... to preach the Gospel" (p. 32). The people of the parish, colliers and workers in the Carron Ironworks, were not religious, and his experiences with them made him sympathetic to the Church Extension Scheme (p. 36), which "had in view as its genuine, sincere endeavour, to bring to overgrown parishes the advantage of a faithful minister, placed over such a number of souls as he could really visit" (p. 69). It is at this time that the first signs of consumption appeared in him (p. 37). In August 1836, he was chosen as pastor of St. Peter's, Dundee (p. 50) and was ordained on 24 November of that year (p. 53). St. Peter's parish was "large and very destitute," and its "Church was built in connection with the Church Extension Scheme" (p. 54). "He sought to encourage Sabbath schools in all the districts of his parish" (p. 55). "His Sabbath day's services ... brought multitudes together, and were soon felt throughout the town" (p. 63). His voice was remarkably clear" (p. 63). He wanted to be "understood by the most illiterate in his audience" (p. 63). The communion Sabbaths, but also the common Sabbaths, drew many, who "began to journey long distances to attend St. Peter's" (p. 66). "The flocking of souls to his ministry" resulted in his being "solicited to remove" to Skirling, a small parish, and to "a country sphere" near Perth, for his health's sake, but he chose not to (p. 68). At the end of 1838, he experienced violent heart palpitations (p. 84). Advised to stop "his public work," he went home to Edinburgh (p. 84). In April 1839, he went, with his doctors' approval, on a Mission of Inquiry to Israel with three other Scottish ministers (p. 89), returning to England in November 1839 (p. 113). Their journey is recorded in Andrew A. Bonar and Robert Murray McCheyne, Narrative of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland in 1839 (Edinburgh: William Whyte, 1842) (p. 142). Returning to Dundee, he was overwhelmed by the reception given him by the crowd attending his church (pp. 115, 116). "In the beginning of [1843] he published ... Daily Bread, an arrangement of Scripture, that the Bible might be read through in the course of a year" (p. 159). Returning to his parish on 1 March 1843 and "weakened by his unceasing exertions" preaching in northern Scotland, he was "more than ordinarily exposed to the typhus fever that was then prevailing in his parish, several cases of which he visited in his enfeebled state" (p. 161). He caught the disease and died on the morning of 25 March 1843 (pp. 162, 164). He was buried in the cemetery of St. Peter's Church, Dundee, on 30 March 1843 (p. 165). A memorial written by the Rev. J. Roxburgh movingly summed up his character:

Whether viewed as a son, a brother, a friend, or a pastor, often has the remark been made by those who knew him most intimately, that he was the most faultless and attractive exhibition of the true Christian which they had ever seen embodied in a living form. His great study was to be Christ-like. He was a man of remarkable singleness of heart. He lived but for one object – the glory of the Redeemer in connection with the salvation of immortal souls. Hence, he carried with him a kind of hallowing influence into every company into which he entered, and his brethren were accustomed to feel as if all were well when their measures met with the sanction and approval of Mr. McCheyne. He was, indeed, the object of an esteem and reverence altogether singular toward so young a man, and which had their foundation in the deep and universal conviction of his perfect integrity of purpose, his unbending sincerity and truthfulness, his Christian generosity of spirit, and in the persuasion that he was a man who lived near to God, as was evident from his holy walk, his spiritual and heavenly-minded frame, and his singularly amiable and affectionate temper and disposition. (quoted in Bonar, Memoir of Rev. McCheyne, p. 169)

For McCheyne's publications, see Hew Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae: The Succession of Ministers in the Church of Scotland from the Reformation, 8 vols. (Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd, 1925), vol. 5, Synods of Fife and of Angus and Mearns, p. 341. Anna Whistler would have admired the fact that he was young and turned early to God and that his life was a light to others, something she wished her children's lives to be.

153. In 1845, Rev. George Williams published The Holy City; or, Historical and Topographical Notices of Jerusalem; with some account of its antiquities and of its present condition ... with Illustrations from Sketches by the Rev. W.F. Witts (London: John W. Parker, 1845). A second edition, published in 1849 in two volumes, was entitled The Holy City; ... with Additions, including an Architectural History of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre by the Rev. Robert Willis. For this work, Williams received a medal from the King of Prussia for literary merit. According to the Dictionary of National Biography, "no English writer has surpassed Williams in accurate knowledge of the topography of Jerusalem" (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. "Williams, George (1814-1878)").
154. With the opening of navigation, Captain John Frederick Kruger, whose ship, Royal William, had been iced in at Cronstadt over the winter of 1844–1845, had set out for England. He would return again on 23 June 1845. See Notes 16 and 67 above.
155. The Russian phrase for "trade rows" or "arcade of shops" (literally, "merchants' yard") is spelled "gostinyi dvor" and pronounced "gosstee'nee dvor'." Designed in 1752 by Francesco-Bartolomeo Rastrelli (1700–1771) in the Baroque style ("to replace a similar structure destroyed in the 1736 fire"), the plan for it was revised in the early 1760s by Vallin de la Mothe (1729–1800), who “preserved the basic features of Rastrelli’s monumental plan” of “long arcades and massive porticos,” “but stripped the design of its statuary in favor of a simple detailing of the structure,” where the “classical element appeared most explicitly in the use of Doric columns to frame the entrances.” Built from 1758 to 1785, it consists of two tiers of arcades on both the exterior and interior of the building, which has the form of a trapezoid, and stands between the Nevskii Prospekt, Bol’shaia Sadovaia Street, Chernyshev Alley, and Gostinaia Street. Its external appearance had not changed by the 1850s, but had been enhanced in recent times by the presence of luxury stores rivalling some of the best stores on the Nevskii Prospekt. Here there were individual shops selling, for example, mirrors, perfume, tobacco, china, table linens, yard goods, furniture, antiques, and paintings. Inside the Gostinyi Dvor, with its arcades paralleling the exterior of the building, was a second set of shops with storerooms and warehouses and shops selling iron and brass wares. In the central courtyard was a weighing station (all material on the design of the building and all quoted material is from Brumfield, History of Russian Architecture, p. 261; the rest is from Bur’ianov, Progulka s det’mi, vol. 2, pp. 161–163; Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1851, pp. 160–164; Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 561–562).

156. Anna Whistler attended the Sunday service at the English Church on 8 and 15 June 1845.
157. This is William Miller, merchant and honorary British vice-consul in St. Petersburg. See the biography of Deborah Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”
158. Anna Whistler and Alicia McNeill’s father was Dr. Daniel McNeill (c. 1756 – 7 December 1828), physician; they had different mothers. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E and Image 23.
159. A polyglot Bible is a Bible in several languages.
160. This is probably William Miller’s brother Richard, who lived in St. Petersburg.
161. Eliza Isabella Wellwood Stevenson had married Thomas Macdougall Smith at St. Pancras Church, London, on 24 September 1844 (Marriage Register of St. Pancras Church, film X30/38, Greater London Records Office and History Library

- [now the London Metropolitan Archives]; hereafter, GLRO). See Stevenson and Smith in Appendix E.
162. “Alargna” is a distortion of the pronunciation of Elagin Island, spelled “Elagin,” pronounced “Yihlah’gin.” The last syllable is pronounced like “gin” in “begin.”
  163. While generally referring to a “long and often unpowered flatbottom cargo boat often towed and pushed by other craft or means,” here “barge” refers to “relatively large and open pleasure boats used for public or private events” (The Age of Sail, s.v. “barge,” accessed 10 January 2021, <http://www.ageofsail.net/aostemod.asp>).
  164. Anna Whistler is referring to Captain Petr Petrovich Klovok, Major Whistler’s aide. See the entry for Thursday, 5th/17th of April [1845], NYPL: AWPD, Part II and his biography in Appendix E.
  165. “2 May [OS] At 12:50 P.M. His Majesty set out for the Champ de Mars for the parade of the entire Guard Corps and the Cadets of the Military Institutions. On arrival at the Marble Palace His Majesty mounted a horse and rode past the troops, who gave him a military salute with music and the cry, ‘Hurrah!’
     “At one o’clock Her Majesty together with the wife of the Heir Apparent, Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna and Grand Duchess Maria Maximilianovna, set out for the Champ de Mars. She rode past all the troops who gave the abovementioned military salute.
     “After this Her Majesty and Their Highnesses rode to the home of His Highness Prince Oldenburg and watched the parade from the balcony, as did Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna.
     “The Heir Apparent, Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich and the Duke of Leuchtenberg were with the troops. Their Highnesses Grand Dukes Konstantin, Nikolai and Mikhail Nikolaevich were in their regiments.
     “Her Majesty and Their Highnesses returned to the Winter Palace at a quarter to five.
     “His Majesty returned at twenty-five minutes past five” (RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 154, fols. 233v – 234v [see Note 41 above for document title]).
  166. The Prince of Oldenburg (see Image 294) was Pyotr Georgievich (1812–1881), the nephew of Nicholas I, and the son of the emperor’s sister, Grand Duchess Ekaterina Pavlovna (21 May 1788 [OS] – 29 December 1818 / 10 January 1819) and Georgii

Petrovich, Prince of Oldenburg (1784 – 15/27 December 1812). He married on 11/23 April 1837 Princess Teresia-Wilhelmina-Frederica-Isabella-Charlotta, Princess of Nassau (1815–1871; see Image 295). On 24 March/5 April 1845, it had been announced in the newspaper that he had been given, along with his wife, the title of Imperial Highness by Nicholas I just as his father, Prince Georgii, had been given this title by Alexander I (see Image 418) (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 67, Saturday, March 24 [April 5 NS], 1845, p. 299; Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, pp. 299–301).

The Palace of His Imperial Highness Prince Pyotr Georgievich of Oldenburg, in which Capt. P.P. Klovok had obtained a window for the Whistlers, was located in the First Admiralty District, First Ward on the Palace Embankment, Swan Canal and Millionnaia Street, and the Field of Mars, and was among the most elegant buildings of St. Petersburg. It had been built in the reign of Catherine the Great by the President of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, I.I. Betskii (1704–1795), who had bequeathed it to his ward, a lady-in-waiting to the empress and later the wife of Admiral de Ribas. A hanging garden had been constructed on the terrace of the house. Later, the house was bought by the Prince of Oldenburg and decorated magnificently (Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 177; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, pp. 1, 33; E.A. Annenkova and Iu. P. Golikov, Printsy Ol'denburgskie v Peterburge [The Princes Oldenburg in St. Petersburg] [St. Petersburg: Rostok, 2004], pp. 266–272; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 2, pp. 100).

167. Many years later, Anna Whistler recalled the Russian reviews but was less impressed by them when she read of General Winfield Scott's reviews in Washington: "Think of general Scott's daily reviews there two hundred thousand! We used to feel surprised at the St. Petersburg reviews of eighty thousand men" (Anna Whistler to James Whistler [dictated to Aunt Kate] "The old corner house" Stonington Ct July 11/61, GUL: Whistler Collection, W506).
168. This is Maximilian-Eugene-Jozef-August-Napoleon, Duke of Leuchtenberg (Munich 20 September / 2 October 1817 – St. Petersburg 20 October / 1 November 1852; see Image 431), husband of the eldest daughter of Nicholas I and Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna, Maria Nikolaevna (Pavlovsk 6/18 August 1819 – St. Petersburg 9/21 February 1876; see Image 430). As Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna did not wish to leave Russia upon marriage (2/14 July 1839), he agreed to live in Russia. They lived in the Maria Palace (Mariinskii dvoretz) (see Image 136), near St. Isaac's Cathedral (see Images 119–120) (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, pp. 195–196).

169. Military service was the most feared and heartbreaking obligation “imposed on the poll-tax population” (Elise Kimerling Wirtschafter, From Serf to Russian Soldier (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1990), p. 3). The period of service had been reduced from life to twenty-five years. In 1834, Nicholas I reduced it “to fifteen years for men with records of good conduct, who were put on indefinite leave for the balance of the term, with the obligation to perform six weeks work of service each year with the troops,” while “supernumerary troops, and cantonists (including Jews) ... had their term shortened to twenty years, instead of fifteen” (John Shelton Curtiss, The Russian Army under Nicholas I, 1825–1855 [Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1965], p. 252). Nevertheless, conscription continued to be considered a family tragedy, because it “meant a sudden and final break from home and family with little chance of return” and “deprived peasant society of able-bodied men,” thus “bringing economic ruin to individual families” (Wirtschafter, Serf to Soldier, p. 4). “The local community as a whole [also] paid a heavy economic price” (Wirtschafter, p. 23): for example, it “bore the cost of outfitting and provisioning recruits for three months” (Wirtschafter, p. 23). These tragedies and burdens were preceded by inequalities and variations that occurred in the distribution of the burden of conscription in its initial stage “in the peasant village or urban community,” inequalities and variations that “depended on the condition of the population, [on] the honesty of local officials, and [in the case of] private estates, on the landlord” (Wirtschafter, p. 20). In 1838, a lottery system had been introduced, which “[r]eports from the 1840s and 1850s indicate ... [was] considered ... a success” by the government (Wirtschafter, pp. 22, 23). Nevertheless, the unassuaged fear of conscription continued to lead to running away and to self-mutilation on the part of recruits (Wirtschafter, pp. 5–8), engendering further family and community tragedies. “In most cases chance and arbitrariness ... determined the order of selection” (Wirtschafter, p. 25).

Anna Whistler, who would have learned about peasant conscription from her St. Petersburg friends and by reading travel journals, was indignant on moral grounds at the idea of the power of the autocrat and the consequent suffering of his subjects.

170. Crop failure occurred in 1845 (Wirtschafter, p. 14).

171. Curtiss, Russian Army, p. 254.
172. Ephesians 6:11: “Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.”
173. As Anna Whistler does not indicate the day of the week or give information to deduce it, it is not possible to say whether the date is correct; 28 June 1845 was a Saturday. Anna Whistler would not have written an entry on Sunday, 29 June, and there is no Monday, 30 June, entry to discuss events of Sunday, 29 June. The only other date possible for this entry is Friday, 27 June, as events referred to take us up through 26 June.

Persons mentioned in the entry for June 28th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (Aunt Winstanley); Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, American envoy to Russia (Col Todds aid); George William Whistler, Anna Whistler’s step-son (George, my dear Son, dear brother, brother George); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (Aunt Alicia); the unidentified governess (Mademoiselle); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes and her children, Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, Mary Emily Ropes, and Louisa Harriet Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbors across the hall (M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes darling little trio of girls); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s mother (My loved Mother); Kirk Boott Whistler, who died in 1842, at the age of four (my little Kirkie); and Charles Donald Whistler, who died in 1843, at the age of two (Charlie).

174. Anna Whistler is referring to Elizabeth (Thielcke) Busk (b. c. 1812; bap. Christ Church, Southwark 25 February 1813; d. Coombe Lodge, Whitchurch, Oxfordshire 31 July 1879), who married on 11/23 October 1834 Wadsworth Dawson Busk (Friern Barnet, Middlesex 19 June 1804 – Ascot Place, near Windsor, Berkshire 14 April 1873), according to the Rites of the Church of England, Rev. R.W. Blackmore officiating (Non-Conformist Registers of Births, Marriages and Burials, RG 4, NAUK; National Probate Calendar (UK) 1873, 1879; transcript of the Register of Baptisms for Christ Church, Southwark, London Metropolitan Archives; PREC STP, no. 4358). Their families owned the firm of Thielcke and Busk, which had as one of its functions the clearing through customs and delivery of foreign goods (RGIA: Fond 248, op. 1, d. 8. 1842, Obschcii reestr dokladam direktora kantseliarii i stroitel’noi kommissii S-P-M zh. D. [General Register of Reports of the Director of the Chancery and the Construction Commission of the St. P.–M. Railway], no.

- 48). This was the approval by Count Kleinmikhel' of a bill they presented for 58 r. 60 k. for delivery of instruments from London to St. Petersburg.
175. Debo was planning to leave in the Hull steamer, the Rob Roy, on 14/26 June.
176. Julia Main (c. 1816 – 7/19 April 1858) (PREC STP, no. 6947) married William Heath Cotton (b. St. Petersburg 24 August 1805; bap. 4 October 1805; d. Hull 21 July 1864 [Hull Packet, August 19, 1864]) on 28 October / 9 November 1839 (PREC STP for 1839, p. 254). She was the sister of the “beautiful Mrs. Anderson,” Anne Elizabeth (Main), wife of Matthew Anderson (PREC STP, p. 237). The Cotton family lived at No. 78 Galernaia Street in 1845 in the house of Rall (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 9). This was later crossed out in the BRBC STP 1845, and the address given as the “corner of the 9th? Line.” For more biography of the Rall family, see G.I. Smagina, ed., Nemtsy v Rossii Peterburgskie nemtsy Sbornik statei [Germans in Russia: Petersburg Germans: A Collection of Essays (St. Petersburg: Dmitrii Bulanin, 1999)], pp. 205–211. The Cottons are referred to in this entry as Mrs. Cotton, Mr C, Mrs C.
177. Major Whistler left for a two-week inspection trip of the railroad on Wednesday, 13/25 June 1845.
178. The only steamship arriving the day of Major Whistler's departure was the Aleksandra from Lübeck, with thirty-one passengers (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 133, Saturday, June 16 [June 28 NS], 1845, p. 606).
179. Matthew 10:30: “But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.”
180. Anna Whistler, who was seven months pregnant, was thinking of her possible death in childbirth that summer.
181. One of the nurses was Hannah Walker Stead, spinster. In 1845, she was a nurse at the Ropeses' house but later worked for the Mirrieleeses (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 54).
182. “The Adoptionist controversy ... turns on the question whether Christ, as to his human nature, was the Son of God in essence, or only by adoption.” The Adoptionists, as they were called, “taught that Christ as to his divinity is the true Son of God, the Only-Begotten of the Father; but as man he is his adopted Son, the First-Born of Mary” (Philip Schaff, Medieval Christianity: From Gregory I to Gregory VII, AD 590–1073, vol. 4 of History of the Christian - Church* [New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1885], p. 513.) Anna Whistler received from her mother some "lines upon the Adoption"; it has not been possible to determine their source. For hymns about "Adoption and Assurance," see, for example, Hymns for the Use of The Methodist Episcopal Church, rev. ed. (New York: Carlton and Porter, [1849]), pp. 276–288.

183. Anna Whistler and George William Whistler wrote to Major Whistler on 26 June 1845.
  184. The little Cotton children were Maria Helen (b. 6/18 October 1842), Emily (b. 6/18 May 1844), and Charles Main (b. 11/23 May 1845) (PREC STP, no. 5511, pp. 294, 311, 324). The month-old child, Charles Main, was being left with Mrs. Matthew Anderson.
  185. Persons mentioned in the entry for July 8th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (an absent parent) and Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicia).
  186. On 9 July 1845, George William Whistler celebrated his twenty-third birthday.
  187. Persons mentioned in the entry for [Thursday] August 28th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (my indulgent mother, Mother); George Washington Whistler, Anna Whistler's husband (beloved husband); George William Whistler, Deborah Delano Whistler, James Abbott Whistler, and William McNeill Whistler (children); Charles Johnston McNeill and William Gibbs McNeill, Anna Whistler's brothers (brothers); Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer and Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler's sister and sister-in-law (sisters); Charles Donald Whistler, whose birthday was 27 August (my last little one); Dunia, the Whistlers' housemaid (Dounia); and William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (Mr. Ropes).
  188. There are statements in the preceding diary entries for 1845 which, through the hindsight resulting from reading this entry, we understand as clues to Anna Whistler's condition. In this remarkable entry, we learn for the first time in plain terms that she is pregnant and in fact in labor. Viewing her labor in euphemistic Victorian language as "symptoms of approaching illness," but aware also of the very real danger that she may die in childbirth, having before her the examples of the two young grand duchesses, one of whom had died at approximately the same time a year before; surely frightened at the prospect of undergoing this experience in a strange land and with her family doctor absent; and having received news the evening before of a friend's death, she records her thoughts and prayer that she be spared. Interrupted by a servant, who calls her to the window, she rises to look out, sees "Debos graceful form," and weeps, perhaps as much for herself as for her step-daughter. She then returns to her diary and concludes her prayer, committing herself to God and accepting whatever will be, as she always has tried to do. In quoting Proverbs 27:1 – "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" – she replaces "day" with "night" so that the statement becomes specific to her situation: that it is night, and she is in labor and may die.

189. Anna Whistler is quoting from "The Order for the Burial of the Dead" in The Book of Common Prayer, when the mourners "come to the grave, while the corpse is made ready to be laid into the earth," and the priest sings or says: "In the midst of life we are in death: of whom may we seek for succor, but of thee, O Lord, who for our sins art justly displeased?" (Book of Common Prayer ... in the United States, p. 262; Oxford Book of Common Prayer, p. 97).
190. Lucy Williston Ann (Grosvenor) Nichols, wife of Rev. John Cutler Nichols of Lebanon, Connecticut, had died on 26 June 1845. See the entry for St. Petersburg, March 1845 Ash Wednesday – Old Style, NYPL: AWPB, Part II, and accompanying Note 3; and Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg, Monday evening Dec 13th English Christmas day [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W375.
191. There are death records for two children of Rev. John Cutler Nichols and Lucy W.A. (Grosvenor) Nichols in Lebanon, Connecticut: Anna (c. July 1838 – 29 February 1840, age 20 months) and Abby (c. 1 July 1841 – 1 October 1841, age 3 months) (Cemetery Inscription Book for the Lebanon Center Cemetery, p. 58). A check of the birth records for Lebanon does not indicate any other children of this marriage.
192. This is the parable of the talents, Matthew 25:23: "His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou has been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."
193. The book Anna Whistler had read in an earlier edition is John Angell James, The Anxious Enquirer after Salvation, Directed and Encouraged (New York: Robert Carter and Brothers, 1875). The 1834 preface was reprinted in the 1875 edition. The volume consists of ten chapters with titles such as “Deep Solicitude about Salvation Reasonable and Necessary,” “Religious Impressions, and the Immense Importance of Retaining and Deepening Them,” “On the Importance of Gaining Scriptural Knowledge, and Clear Views of Divine Truth,” and discussions of repentance, faith, mistakes, perplexities, cautions, and encouragements for the enquirer seeking improvement in order to attain salvation.

194. Bowdoin College Library, which holds the Jacob Abbott Collection, suggests that Anna Whistler may have had in mind The Path of Peace; Or, A practical guide to Duty and Happiness by John S.C. Abbott (Boston and New York, 1836) (Ian Graham, Special Collections and Archives, Bowdoin College Library, Brunswick, ME, to E. Harden, 4 September 2002). For a biography of John Stevens Cabot Abbott, see the entry for Saturday [May] 3rd [1845], NYPL: AWPB, Part II, and accompanying Note 114.
195. Emily Hall (b. c. 1827 – 31 March / 12 April 1846) of Leeds was visiting her sister, Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, and brother-in-law, William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbors across the hall.
196. “Guide not the hand of God, nor order the finger of the Almighty unto thy will and pleasure; but sit quiet in the soft showers of providence, and favourable distributions in this world, either to thyself or others” (Sir Thomas Browne [1605–1682], Christian Morals, in The Works of Sir Thomas Browne, including his Unpublished Correspondence, and a Memoir, ed. Simon Wilkin, 4 vols. [London: H.G. Bohn, 1846], vol. 4, p. 95).
197. Persons mentioned in the entry for October 23rd who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Kirk Boott Whistler, who died in 1842, at the age of four (Kirkie); Charles Donald Whistler, who died in 1843, at the age of two (Charlies); and Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old M<sup>rs</sup> Leon).
198. John Bouttatz Whistler, named for Colonel Ivan Bouttatz, was born 17/29 August 1845.

On 20 October 1845, Major Whistler wrote to Maxwell of the new baby. This letter is not among the Maxwell Papers at the N-YHS; however, on 18 November 1845, Maxwell answered Major Whistler, whose letter he had received on 16 November in Paris. His response is delightful in its naiveté and humorous feigned consternation:

Another boy—bless me but I never thought of that. I left so lately and now another boy, born and christened is announced by your letter of October 20 — . . . Such events whisper doleful things in the ears of a selfish bachelor and the poor congratulations of such an one upon your happiness is offered with his sincere and earnest wishes for the continued health of your excellent lady and infant son, John Bouttatz. If in my simplicity I was a little surprised to hear of your having another jewel to charm the tedium of your Northern residence, how shall I express my astonishment to hear that your neighbours the Ropes' have another daughter. If I remember rightly the same thing occurred a day or two before I left. (John S. Maxwell to G.W. Whistler, Paris, November 18, 1845, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers)

From Maxwell's letter we can infer that James was concerned about the citizenship of this Russian baby, for Maxwell says: "He must not give himself any uneasiness with respect to the republican rights titles and privileges of his youngest brother, who however retains by our law the entire liberty of becoming a Russian subject if he thinks proper. It becomes therefore a duty for James to instil into the mind of this brother a proper appreciation of Yankee land—the superior attractions of Stonington, Springfield etc. at the earliest possible period, lest the little fellow take an invincible preference for Petersburg" (John S. Maxwell to G.W. Whistler, Paris, November 18, 1845; see also John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, Paris, Jan. 14, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). Major Whistler may also have reported on James's progress in drawing, for Maxwell responded: "I suppose James will be able to take my portrait by the time that I see him next" (John S. Maxwell to G.W. Whistler, Paris, November 18, 1845).

Either Maxwell or the Major was confused about the births of the Ropes children. The child born in 1845 (20 August) was a boy, William Hall Ropes, and the child born before him, Louisa Harriet, had been born in 1843 (18 November), not 1844 (Harriet Ropes Cabot, list of marriages and issue, PEM).

199. The Russian word for "carriage" is spelled "kareta" and pronounced "kahryeh'tuh."
200. The Russian word for "nurse, nanny" is spelled "nianiuska" and pronounced "nyah'nyooshkuh."
201. The nurse's name is spelled "Tat'iana" and pronounced "Tahtyah'nuh" (Petrovskii, Slovar' russkikh lichnykh imen, p. 195).

202. Dr. James Ronaldson Handyside's visits imply that Dr. James Rogers, the Whistler family physician, was absent from St. Petersburg.
203. Alicia McNeill Harrison, named for Anna Whistler's half-sister, was born on 31 August / 12 September 1845, at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works. She was the daughter of Joseph Harrison Jr. and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison. She was baptized on 3/15 November 1845. Her sponsors were George William Whistler and Alicia C. McNeill. Her brother, William Henry, and her sister, Annie, who had been born and baptized in Philadelphia, were baptized again on this date by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (PREC STP, no. 5558, p. 329).
204. John Bouttatz Whistler was baptized on 2/14 September 1845 by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (PREC STP, no. 5650, p. 328). His sponsors were Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (my sister Alicia); George William Whistler, Anna Whistler's step-son (George); and Rev. Henry Washington Lee, Anna Whistler's Springfield, Massachusetts, pastor (Rev.<sup>d</sup> H Lee). There is some discrepancy in this entry in dates and pronouns. Titania is said to have gone to the Harrisons eight days (25 August / 6 September) after the birth of John Bouttatz Whistler. John Bouttatz Whistler was a fortnight old on 12 September; he was baptized on 2/14 September, when he was more than a fortnight old. She (Alicia McNeill Harrison) could not have been a fortnight old, as Anna Whistler records. She must be he. The she who was permitted to be present at John Bouttatz Whistler's christening must refer to Titania.
205. In his report of 12/24 December 1844 to the emperor, Count P.A. Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243) reported that Lt. Colonel Bouttatz had requested permission to retire from the service for personal reasons. His service record met the requirements for retirement in the rank then held by him with the right to continue wearing his uniform. The request by Kleinmikhel' that Bouttatz be retired with the rank of Colonel and "with uniform" was approved by Nicholas I on 28 December 1844 / 10 January 1845 (RGIA: Fond 446, 1844, op. 13, d. 4. Vsepoddanneishie doklady: 1229 [Most Devoted Reports]). As a result, it has not been possible to trace through a service record what Bouttatz was doing in late 1845 or when he had left for "the borders of China." With this mention of him he disappears from the diaries. As Anna Whistler says he was "engaged in some mines," he may have gone

- to work for the Corps of Mining Engineers. Further information about him until his death is given in his biography in Appendix E.
206. Christina, the laundress, went to work for the Harrisons after Anna Whistler and Willie left St. Petersburg in May 1849 (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky, June 4/16 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). Anna Whistler inquired of Harrison about her from England (Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 19 [1849], LC: P-W, box 34). She hoped Mrs. Harrison liked Christina and sent a message that Christina's pet, Willie, was well and that Mary Brennan did not forget her (Anna Whistler to Mrs. Harrison 62 Sloane St. June 20th [1849], LC: P-W, box 34). Both of Anna Whistler's letters arrived too late. Christina had died suddenly and was buried on 5/17 June 1849 (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky, June 4/16 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). Peter, the coachman, who had a brother in St. Petersburg in 1846 as well as a wife in Moscow (entry for Monday [January] 5 [1846]. Russian Christmas Eve [December 24, 1845], NYPL: AWP, Part II), became an assistant in [the Harrisons'] garden" (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky Nov 21st [OS] 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). As Peter sometimes got drunk, Anna Whistler asked Harrison to "[s]ay a good word to [him] in my name to keep him straight" and to ask him whether "he reads the bible I gave him every day" (Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, Fleetwood, Monday, July 15th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34). Peter was still in the Harrisons' employ in November 1849 and sometimes gave way to "his old weakness" (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky Nov 21st [OS] 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). Yohon (Johann), the German footman, was a Lutheran and had a wife and children in St. Petersburg (entry for Saturday, March 14 [1846], NYPL: AWP, Part II). Of the remaining servants, we know only that Anna Whistler also inquired of Harrison about the Whistlers' "faithful Dvornic" (Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 19, 1849, LC: P-W, box 34) and Marie, their former Finnish cook, who she supposed had "gone to Finland" (Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, Fleetwood, Monday, July 15th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34).
207. On Tuesday, 16 September 1845, Deborah Whistler, George Whistler, and Alicia McNeill left St. Petersburg on the Rob Roy for Hull.

208. Matthew 10:29–31: “<sup>29</sup> Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. <sup>30</sup> But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. <sup>31</sup> Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.”
209. A word is missing here, possibly “allotted” or “assigned.”
210. Anna Whistler records that the children’s Domini, Monsieur Lamartine (b. c. 1795), was a German and a member of the Lutheran Church. He had been tutor to the son of General Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin (see Note 212 below), who was now fifteen years old. Lamartine was replacing the Whistlers’ governess, known only as “Mademoiselle.” Anna Whistler came to think he was “always hypocondrical” and to consider him lazy (entry for Monday 27th of July [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II). The Whistlers saw him on and off during their stay, although he was not always employed by them. In 1848, he was teaching French to Mrs. Leland, the sister of Joseph Harrison Jr. (Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. P. Nov. 1st 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366). He lodged at 54 Galernaia in the same house as Mrs. Leon (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 34). He does not appear in the Amburger Datenbank. When Anna Whistler says she could “not converse with a German”, she means that she could not speak German; Lamartine and her sons obviously conversed in French, which she was afraid to speak but could understand.
211. This date is poorly written but must be 18 September (Thursday), as Monsieur Lamartine was installed after the excitement of the christening of John Bouttatz and the departure of Deborah Whistler, George Whistler, and Alicia McNeill for England (on 16 September) had subsided.
212. General Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin (Kamenets-Podol’sk 1803 – 3/15 November 1875; see Image 245) was educated until the age of thirteen in a Jesuit boarding school in St. Petersburg and then in the Corps of Pages. In February 1827, he was sent to the Caucasus because of the Russo–Persian War. In 1828, war with Turkey broke out. Nicholas I (see Images 420–423), who decided to participate personally in the campaign, took note of Chevkin during one of the battles and on the spot personally appointed him one of his aides-de-camp. Chevkin participated also in the campaign occasioned by the Polish uprising of 1830–1831. He was since April 1834 chief of staff of the Corps of Mining Engineers, and had studied railways in England and Western Europe. He was a member of the Construction Committee and Construction Commission for the St.

Petersburg–Moscow Railway (Haywood, Russian Enters the Railway Age, pp. 12, 16). He married in 1829 a former lady-in-waiting, Countess Ekaterina Fomishna Tomatis (November 1829 – 1879). They had one son, Nikolai Konstantinovich (30 August / 11 September 1830 – 1857), who served in the Uhlan regiment of the Life Guards. Monsieur Lamartine had been tutor to this son (A.V. Lobanov-Rostovskii, Russkaia rodoslovnaia kniga [Russian Genealogical Book], 2 vols. [St. Petersburg: A.S. Suvorin, 1895], vol. 2, p. 350; RGIA: Fond 1162, op. 6, d. 595. O sluzhbe ... Generala ot infanterii Chevkina. 26 Okt. 1855 g. – 9 Feb. 1876 g. [Concerning the service record ... of General of the Infantry Chevkin. Oct. 26, 1855 – Feb. 9, 1876], p. 166); S. Zhitkov, “Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin Biograficheskii ocherk 1803–1875” [Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin Biographical Essay, 1803–1875], Russkaia starina 19 (May 1877): pp. 1–22; N.N. Selifontov, “Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin Glavnoupravliaiushchii putiami soobshcheniia i publicnymi zdaniiami s 15-go oktiabria 1855 po 11-oe oktiabria 1862 g” [Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin: Director of Transport and Public Buildings from 15 October 1855 through 11 October 1862], Russkaia starina 22 (May 1878): pp. 1–38. The essay on the middle portion of Chevkin’s life slated to be published in a future issue of Russkaia starina was not published.

213. On 24 October 1845, Deborah Whistler celebrated her twentieth birthday.

Persons mentioned in the entry for Oct 24th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley and John Winstanley, Anna Whistler’s half-sister and her husband (Aunt and Uncle Winstanley); Katherine Prince, daughter of John Dynely Prince of Lowell, Massachusetts (Kate Prince); George William Whistler, Deborah Whistler’s brother (dear George); and Catherine Julia McNeill, Deborah Whistler’s first cousin (Julia).

214. It has not been possible to locate these letters from Deborah Whistler. See William H. Swift to General Joseph G. Swift, Washington, October 21, 1845, NYPL: Swift Papers.
215. “Flosh” was the name of the property at Cleator, in Cumberland, belonging to Thomas Ainsworth, a nephew of John Winstanley (William Macquhae Ainsworth, A Memorial of W.M. Ainsworth: Being a Selection of his Sermons, Prayers, and Letters of Travel, ed. James Harwood and J.E. Carpenter [London and Edinburgh: Williams

- and Norgate, 1891]). See the biography of the Ainsworth family in Appendix E (hereafter, Ainsworth and Stirling).
216. Thomas Ainsworth (bap. 29 March 1804 – 28 June 1881), flax spinner, and his wife, Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth (bap. 6 April 1808 – 28 February 1867) were living at Flosh, Cleator, Cumberland, with their sons, David (b. 1842) and John Stirling (b. 30 January 1844) (Ainsworth, Memorial, pp. xii, xiii, xxii; OPRS).
217. Many of the lakes of the Lake District are in Cumberland, where the Ainsworths lived: Derwentwater, Wastwater, Buttermere, Ennerdale Water, Crummockwater, and the northern reaches of Ullswater. “Cumberland is a maritime, lake, and border county ... Its length from Ravenglass to Spadeadam Waste is 64 miles, its greatest breadth 34 miles, average breadth 22 miles, and circuit about 215 miles, 75 of which are coast. The area of the county is 1,565 square miles, or 1,001,273 statute acres, of which about 300,000 are mountain and lake. ... Hills, valleys, and ridges of elevated ground occupy the centre. The mountainous district in the south-west is the most interesting to the traveller, for here are situated Saddleback, Skiddaw, and Helvellyn, and the lakes of Ulleswater [sic], Thirlmere, Derwentwater, and Bassenthwaite ... The mountains of Cumberland are exceedingly numerous, and many of them immense in elevation and singular in structure [with] sublime heights, ... romantic forms, ... the immensity of rocks composing them, [and] the imposing, wild, and awful majesty of their appearance ... Between these grander heights are many hills of various degrees of elevation; some of them cut through by clear and rapid torrents; others based in richly wooded, highly cultivated valleys, fertilised by quiet brooks and rivers; others dipping their precipitous and craggy sides down into the beautiful and celebrated lakes, the picturesque and varied beauties of which have so often been described in ‘stately prose and melodious verse’” (William Wheelan, The History and Topography of the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, Comprising Their Ancient and Modern History, a General View of Their Physical Character, Trade, Commerce, Manufactures, Agricultural Condition, Statistics [Pontefract, UK: W. Wheelan; London: Whittaker; Manchester: Galt, 1860], pp. 57–59).
218. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday November 29th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: George William Whistler, Anna Whistler’s step-son (Georges letter, George); Katherine Prince, daughter of John Dynely Prince of Lowell, Massachusetts

(Kate Prince); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicia); Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Eliza); and John Winstanley, Eliza Winstanley's husband (Uncle W).

219. The Great Britain (Capt. Hosken) left Liverpool at 4 p.m. on Saturday, 27 September 1845 (Mariam Touba, N-YHS, to E. Harden, 22 January 2011).

In the first ten days she experienced westerly winds, strong gales and heavy sea at times, during which the ship behaved admirably. For a few hours of the 2d October the wind was N.E., and in a heavy squall the foremast was carried away.

She run short of coal, but fortunately the schooner David Coffin, of New Bedford, happened to be at Holmes' Hole ... with a cargo of coal, and at dark on Monday evening [13 October] was alongside the Great Britain, supplying her. (New York Daily Herald, Thursday, October 16, 1845, p. 1)

A first-hand report appearing in the Manchester Guardian was reprinted in the The Bristol Mercury and Daily Post, Western Countries and South Wales Advertiser (Bristol, England), Saturday, November 1, 1845, p. 2:

PERILOUS SITUATION OF THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAMSHIP—We have been favoured (says the Manchester Guardian) with the following extract from a letter written by one of the passengers of the Great Britain steamer, in her outward passage, dated Holmes' Hole, Mass., October 12th. The writer says—"On that day (date left blank) we made Cape Race, Newfoundland. At that time our compasses, &c., were in perfect order; on Sunday, the 12th, when we took observation, it proved we were 40 miles farther north than the distance we had run by the log, and the course we had steered should have placed us. This made the captain more alert, and it was remarked. About six o'clock this morning I came on deck. When I awoke the engines were stopped, and I heard the boatswain calling the soundings; knowing that we could not be in the soundings unless something was wrong, I dressed hurriedly, and on reaching the deck found we were close to land, with breakers all around us. No one knew where we were, nor could any one hazard more than a guess. At eight a.m. we made out a lighthouse, and then it was proved to be Nantucket; it was now only that we knew we were on the most dangerous coast and shoals on the Atlantic (west). We fired guns and hoisted the flags for a pilot; at nine a.m. sent a boat ashore, and procured a man, who, on boarding us, said, in reply to the question "What are you?" "a farmer and a fisherman." However, he proved good at the bottom, and placed us in deep water. We then dodged about, firing guns, &c., until at eleven a.m. a pilot was placed on board; he would not take us back to the place from whence we had entered on these shoals, and declared it a wonder how we had got through this danger without harm. Several coasting ships' boats put off to us, and all asked what we wanted there. At times we only had 21 feet of water, and our vessel drew 16 to 17 feet; it was a trying time, and all agree in saying it was a most providential deliverance. At twelve a.m. Captain Hosken came below, and informed us that he could not undertake to convey the passengers to New York, unless he put into some port for a supply of coals, and he had consulted with the pilot, who had recommended Holmes' Hole as a place where many coal vessels put in, taking coals to Boston. We had only sixteen hours' coal on board (and that must be at half speed), whereas at that rate we could not make New York until two days; if we were to go at full speed, we should burn them up in a few hours. For Holmes' Hole the ship was steered, and we anchored here at four p.m. Captain Hosken went ashore, and succeeded in purchasing a cargo, which we are now taking in about three miles from the village. My opinion of the Great Britain is, that a finer model never was built, and her engines are good; but she is not rigged properly, and it is the fault of the directors, for Captain Hosken says he has protested against it from the commencement. It must also be accounted for why we were sent to sea with only sixteen days' coal on board, and those sixteen days we did not work full speed; in fact, I do not believe that when the Great Britain left Liverpool we had more than fifteen days' coal on board, provided they had been burned in quantity to keep on the steam at full. Our screw had been altered again. I would only wish that those scientific men who try these experiments were to be compelled to trust themselves to them. How we got among the Nantucket shoals Captain Hosken should answer."

The outcome of this disaster, for the steamship Great Britain, was reported in the New York Daily Herald on Friday, 17 October 1845:

STEAMSHIP GREAT BRITAIN—This vessel will not make another trip to this city this year. On her return to England she will be taken into dock, a false keel put to her, her power increased, and her propeller improved. She will recommence her trips in the spring, and will probably cross the Atlantic in twelve days.

220. Deborah Delano Whistler had visited the sea-bathing establishment of Crosby Waterloo, called simply Waterloo, a “new marine settlement” “five and a quarter miles from Liverpool.” It was “a village of considerable size, spread at a short distance from the low-water sands; and in front of it a long line of neat cottages, one story high, each having a shelving verandah over the ground-floor window, presents its face to the south-western horizon” (A.B. Granville, The Spas of England, and Principal Sea-Bathing Places, 3 vols. [London: Henry Colburn, 1841], vol. 2, Midland Spas, p. 15).
221. Mrs. Frances (Morton) Stevenson died on 16 October 1845. See the entry for St. Petersburg. November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWPB, Part I, and accompanying Note 48, and Stevenson and Smith in Appendix E.
222. Matthew 25:40: “And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.”
223. Reverend John Cutler Nichols remarried on 30 October 1847. His second wife was Mary Woodbridge (Hartford, CT 21 July 1814 – Old Lyme, CT 29 September 1861) (Cemetery Inscription Book for Lebanon Center Cemetery, p. 58). Useful information has also been obtained from the diary of Lucius W. Robinson (1817–1901), which is in the possession of Mrs. Belle Robinson of Columbia, Connecticut. I wish to thank her for her graciousness in copying out for me the references to the Rev. John C. Nichols, and to thank the Rev. George Milne of Hebron, Connecticut, for arranging for the copying. Rev. Nichols is also referred to in this entry as Mr. N.
224. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday night Dec 27th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s mother (my honoured Mother); Katherine Prince, daughter of John Dynely Prince, of Lowell,

- Massachusetts (Kate Prince, dear friend from Lowell); Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, Anna Whistler's half-sister (my dear Sister); John Winstanley, Eliza Winstanley's husband (brother Winny); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicia); the unidentified governess (Mademoiselle); Monsieur Lamartine, James and Willie's tutor (their kind tutor, tutors apartments); Charles Wood, cotton-spinning merchant, and his wife, Lydia (Procter) Wood (to Mr Woods, the little lady); the Whistler servants (Yohon, Dunia, Christine, Coacher); Carl Hedenschoug, Major Whistler's draftsman (Hadenskougg); and George William Whistler, Anna Whistler's step-son (George).
225. It has not been possible to locate any of Deborah Whistler's fortnightly letters. Kate Prince made travel notes during her trip to Europe. It would be valuable to know whether she speaks in them of Deborah Delano Whistler and how the latter came to meet Frances Seymour Haden. These small books of travel notes are held by the Archives of American Art at the Smithsonian Institute and cannot be photocopied because of their fragile state, nor are there any plans to reproduce them in the near future.
226. Chaddock Hall (see Image 467) is in Boothstown, Worsley, near Manchester. It was part of the Ellesmere estates. The family living in it were the Smiths (John Lunn, Short History of the Township of Tyldesley [Tyldesley, UK: Urban District Council of Tyldesley, 1953], p. 96). See also the entry for South Shore of Blackpool. on the Lancashire coast. July 28th 1847, NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, and accompanying Notes 847–858. Anna Whistler seems to have omitted the word “holidays” after “the Christmas.”
227. The birthdays of William Henry Harrison (11/23 December) and Annie Harrison (13/25 December) were being celebrated together (PREC STP, no. 5558, p. 329) on Wednesday, 12/24 December. For a description of these birthday festivities in a different year, see Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg December 12th/24th 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
228. Anna Whistler is referring to Mr. Thomas Drury, their landlord on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844.
229. The Russian expression for “a tip” (literally, “for tea”) is spelled “na chai” and pronounced “nahchay’.”
230. “Sarsha” is Anna Whistler's pronunciation of the diminutive and endearing form for Aleksandr, spelled “Sasha” and pronounced

- “Sah’shuh.” Alexander, about five-and-a-half years old, was the son of Transport Engineer Lt. Colonel Thomas Drury Jr. and Caroline (Bajinsky) Drury (PREC STP, no. 5910; RGIA: Fond 207, op. 14, d. 42. Formulirnyi spisok o sluzhbe i dostoinstve Korpusa Inzhenerov P.S. Podpolkovnika Drury za 1841 g. [Service Merit Record of Transport Engineer Lt. Col. Drury for 1841]. See also the entry for Monday, July 1st [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Note 585.
231. Varvara Nikolaevna and Sofiiia Nikolaevna were the daughters of Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Mertvago) Zagoskina (10/22 October 1807 – 6/18 May 1885). Mrs. Zagoskina, the daughter of a senator, was the widow of Engineer Colonel Nikolai Nikolaevich Zagoskin (c. 1798 – 11 October [OS] 1839) (A.A. Sivers, Genealogicheskie razvedki [Genealogical Explorations] [St. Petersburg: Glavnoe upravlenie udelov, 1913]; Lobanov-Rostovskii, Russkaia rodoslovnaia kniga, vol. 1, pp. 203, 205). Lobanov-Rostovskii gives the mother’s birth date as 1/13 October 1807. Mrs. Zagoskina was first cousin to Varvara Alekseevna (Olenina) Olenina, as their mothers were sisters (see the entry for Wednesday [August] 28th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Notes 867–872). Anna Whistler could have met Mrs. Zagoskina and her daughters through Miss McLean, governess to the daughter of Mrs. Olenina. Their father’s final service record (1839) shows that Varvara was then five years old and Sofiiia two-and-a-half. In 1845, they would have been about eleven and eight-and-a-half years old (RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, d. 45. Formulirnye spiski i sluzhebnye dokumenty ofitserov i chinovnikov Min-stra PS [Service records and service documents of officers and civil servants of the Ministry of Transport. Vol.: Zabolotskii–Ziablovskii]). The Zagoskin family continued to socialize with the Whistlers over the years. See, for example, Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg, entry for Saturday noon Feb. 24 in letter of Feb 19th [1849] Monday eve, GUL: Whistler Collection, W383, in which Anna Whistler informs James that she and Willie will have “a frugal dinner” so that they can pay a visit to Madame Zagoskin.
232. Catherine Elizabeth Wood (“Kitty”) (20 January 1837 – 30 October 1920) and William Nicholson Wood (20 August 1838 – 27 July 1919) were invited to a children’s party held on 26 December 1845 at the Whistlers’. Kitty is the Kate referred to in the following sentence. See Wood in Appendix E.

233. Lydia Wood was born on 13/25 December 1845 and privately baptized on 9/16 February 1846 (PREC STP, no. 5581, p. 332). She died on 17 January 1922. See Wood in Appendix E.
234. Two servants are referred to here by their profession. “Coharka,” is Marie, the Finnish cook. “Coharka,” meaning “cook,” is spelled “kuharka” and pronounced “koohar’kuh.” “Coacher” is probably a combination of the English word “coachman” and the Russian equivalent, spelled “kucher” and pronounced “koo’cher.” This is Pyotr, the coachman.
235. It has not been possible to ascertain the name of the German baker from whom the Whistlers bought bread.
236. Anna Whistler was repeating her information about the Wood children and Mrs. Zagoskina’s two girls, already discussed in Notes 231 and 232, NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
237. Andrew McCalla Eastwick (14 September 1810–8 February 1879) of Philadelphia was one of the three partners of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, who were building the locomotives and rolling stock at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He had arrived in Russia on 22 May 1844 with his eldest son, Edward Peers. The rest of his family, whom he went to meet in London, arrived in Russia in June 1845. The party consisted of Mrs. Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick (14 February 1815 – 15 December 1890); their five other children: Joseph Harrison, Charles James, Philip Garrett, Margaret, and Maria James; and a governess, Miss A.G. Melish. The Eastwicks and Harrisons lived in the same dwelling at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2; and RG84, C18.2, passports nos. 959, 1638, 1639, and 1640). Anna Whistler seems to be referring here to all or some of the four Eastwick boys. See Eastwick in Appendix E and Images 233–240.
238. The “Allegheny Mountains, also called Alleghenies,” are part of the vast “mountainous eastern part of the Allegheny Plateau in the Appalachian Mountains” in the eastern United States. “The Allegheny range extends south-southwestward for more than 500 miles (800 km) from north-central Pennsylvania to southwestern Virginia. Rising to Mount Davis (3,213 feet [979 m]; highest point in Pennsylvania) and Spruce Knob (4,863 feet [1,482 m]; highest point in West Virginia), the mountains ... are noted for their scenic beauty (Encyclopaedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Allegheny Mountains,” accessed 5 October 2021, <https://www>.

- britannica.com/place/Allegheny-Mountains). Anna Whistler probably only meant that the piles of snow James had run through, being very high, could have been detrimental to his delicate health. But perhaps she was referring to an outdoor game.
239. Christmas Day, 25 December 1845 (OS), would be 7 January 1846 (NS).
240. “The use of polka as a commercial name developed in the 1840s due to the huge popularity of the dance in that period,” and the term was prefixed to articles of all kinds, “esp[ecially] textiles, fashion accessories, or articles of clothing, [such] as polka hat, polka pelisse” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “polka, n.: Compounds C2a”). The Oxford English Dictionary cites a quotation from Henry Mayhew, London Labour and the London Poor (1851), that refers to “the polka hats with the low crowns.”
241. “Mary Mac” was Anna Whistler’s niece, Mary Isabella McNeill, daughter of William Gibbs McNeill (see Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E and Images 31–32).
242. Thomas DeKay Winans (see Image 229) at Alexandrofsky informed the Whistlers that George W. Whistler (see Images 12–13) was interested in working for Ross Winans (see Image 228) in Baltimore. George’s uncle, William H. Swift, reports that he was already employed by Ross Winans by 1 December 1845. See George’s biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”
243. It has not been possible to locate the letters from Catharine Julia McNeill to Deborah Whistler in England.
244. It was 5 January 1846 (NS) and 24 December 1845 (OS). There are several problems concerning the correct dates in this entry. They seem to be resolved by reading this entry in conjunction with the one for Friday [January] 9th. This entry is dated Monday [January] 5th [1846], the Old Style equivalent of which is 24 December 1845. When we reach the statement “They were quite rich in the morning,” the reference is obviously to Christmas Day, Tuesday, 6 January 1846 (Old Style 25 December 1845), but there is no new entry. In the middle of the entry, Anna Whistler speaks of the day before as being “yesterday the 8th,” which implies she is now writing on Friday, 9 January 1846. However, internal evidence shows that she is writing on Thursday, 8 January; that Mrs. Harrison (see Image 227), Annie Harrison, and Dr. Edward Maynard (see Image 329) came to dinner on Wednesday, 7

January; and that Anna Whistler regretted that they had missed out on meeting the people who would dine at the Whistler home the next day, Thursday, 8 January 1846. The remarks about attendance at the church service are a reference to Sunday, 4 January 1846.

The entry for Friday, 9 January 1846, makes clear that on the previous day, Thursday, 8 January 1846, Major, Anna, and Willie Whistler went to the funeral of old Mr. Drury, a date that can be corroborated by the register of the English Church. They returned home to prepare for a dinner party where the guests were Colonel Todd, Mr. Clay, Joseph Samuel Ropes, and Timothy Abraham Curtis and his daughter or daughter-in-law. This dinner party is the one Anna Whistler wished her guests of January 7 – Mrs. Harrison, Annie Harrison and Dr. Edward Maynard – could have attended, because it would have been more interesting.

Persons mentioned in the entry for Monday [January] 5th Russian Christmas Eve who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Pyotr, the coachman (Coacher); the Whistler children's tutor (Mons Lamartine, our tutor); William Miller, merchant and honorary British vice-consul (our friend M<sup>r</sup> W Miller); Lady Elizabeth Margaret Stuart, wife of the former British envoy to St. Petersburg (old Lady Stewart); another of the Whistlers' male servants (Yohon); Marie, the Finnish cook, Christina, the laundress, and Dunia, the maid (three women servants); Katherine Prince, daughter of John Dynely Prince of Lowell, Massachusetts (Kate Prince); Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, wife of Joseph Harrison Jr., of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mrs Harrison); and Annie Harrison, her daughter (Annie).

245. Willie was going to the home of Edward John and Mary Ann (Parland) Morgan, whose children were Maria Frances (1838–1907), Edward Delmar (c. 1840–1909) and Fanny Elizabeth (1841–1934). They lived at No. 31 Galernaia (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 39). See Morgan and Parland in Appendix E.
246. The Russian word for “store” is “magazin,” pronounced “muhgahzeen’.” Anna Whistler has used the English word “magazines” to represent its plural form.
247. Emily and Isabel Law were the two youngest daughters of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Law, eighteen and fifteen years old respectively. What looks like “Miss L” could also be read as “Miss S.” It is therefore impossible to say who this person is except that a given name is intended.

248. “Au fait” means “to be well instructed, . . . thoroughly conversant with, expert or skilful in” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “au fait”).
249. The Demidov Home for the Care of Workers was located on the Moika opposite the New Holland building. It was founded in 1833 by Anatolii Nikolaevich Demidov (1812–1870) and was under the “August Patronage” of the empress. It consisted of four divisions: (1) for the care of workers; (2) for the upbringing of poor young women; (3) for the care of young female children; and (4) for the feeding of the poor. In the wing of the Home along the Moika there was a store, open every day, for the sale of needlework and for the exhibition of such articles at the end of Lent. The articles were made by women who either received work from the institution to do at home or who brought their own work to sell in the store. The work consisted of custom orders for the sewing of linens, dresses, gloves, and embroidery. The young women in the second division received an education in a few subjects, but particular attention was paid to perfecting their skills in needlework.
- A special exhibit was held annually for the sale of needlework produced by these young women, who were the pensioners of members of the Imperial family, of the founder of the Home, and of the Imperial Philanthropic Society, etc. (Bur’ianov, Progulka s del’mi, vol. 2, 102–107; Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1846, pp. 187–189). Handmade work, made in the men’s division, such as the tobacco box, was also available for sale at the Demidov store.
250. It has not been possible to identify a game called “Gallery of Versailles.” All queries – to children’s museums, the Louvre, and companies that produce games – have had negative responses.
251. See Anna Whistler’s Puseyite comments later, in the entry for Monday [August 8th [1848], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
252. Anna Whistler is referring to Georgiana (Liddell) Bloomfield (London 13 April 1822 – Hertford 21 May 1905; see Image 292), daughter of Thomas Henry Liddell, first Baron Ravensworth. She had been maid of honor to Queen Victoria (see Image 287) from December 1841 to July 1845. On 4 September 1845, she married the Honorable John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Great Britain to Russia (see Image 291), who “succeeded his father as second Baron Bloomfield in the peerage of Ireland [on] 15 August 1846” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Bloomfield, John Arthur Douglas”; Bloomfield, Reminiscences, vol. 1, p. 1; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1905). Her obituary in The Times (London) (May

- 23, 1905) stresses her religious devotion and the same aspects of her character that struck Anna Whistler.
253. “Slave” means “serf.”
254. Pasha, pronounced “Pah’shuh,” is an endearing form of two given names: Yevpraksiia and Praskoviia. The peasant versions of Yevpraksiia are Apraksiia and Yevprakseia, while for Praskoviia, they are Paraskoveia and Praskoveia (Petrovskii, Slovar’ russkikh lichnykh imen, pp. 104, 182–183, 340). She was sickly and left the Whistlers’ employ in the fall of 1846 to go away with her husband.
255. It has not been possible to locate these notes from Kate Prince to Anna Whistler, James, and Willie.
256. This is Dr. Edward Maynard (26 April 1813 – 4 May 1891), dental surgeon and firearms inventor. See RG84: Records of Foreign Service Posts of the Department of State, Diplomatic Posts, Great Britain, C18.3: Passport Book commencing 9 August 1845, NAUS [hereafter, NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.3], p. 10, passport no. 76, issued 8 September 1845 to Edward Maynard for Hamburg and Russia; NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2; Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard.
- Maynard’s letters to his wife, Ellen Sophia (Doty) Maynard (15 October 1817 – October 1863), show that he saw the Whistlers on many occasions during his stay in Russia from 21 September 1845 until 20 April 1846 (Hatch, vii, 29, 33, 38, 42, 43–44, 47, 49–52, 57–58, 74, 77, 81, 85, 86, 96–97, 100, 103–104, 118, 123). See his biography in Appendix E and Images 329–338.
257. Anna Whistler probably meant to write “I wished these might meet others who will be at our table tomorrow.”
258. Persons mentioned in the entry for Friday evening [January] 9th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Timothy Abraham Curtis of the Liverpool firm of Bury, Kennedy and Curtis (Mr. Curtis); William Hooper and Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbors across the hall (our good neighbours the Ropes, M<sup>ss</sup> R); Thomas Drury Sr., the Whistlers’ landlord on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844 (our old landlord Mr. Drury); Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, the American envoy to Russia (Col Todd); Joseph Samuel Ropes, brother of William Hooper Ropes (Mr. Joseph Ropes); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, wife of William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (Mrs. Gellibrand); and Elizabeth and Sarah Benson, who ran a boardinghouse on the English Embankment (Misses Bensons lodgings).

259. A Most Devoted Report clarifies that “the Englishman Mr. Curtis is the agent for supplying cast iron parts for the bridge being built over the Neva” and that “he has just arrived in St. Petersburg” (RGIA: Fond 446, op. 14, d. 3. 1845, Vsepoddanneishie doklady Iul’-Dekabr, Obshchii obzor rabot, proizvedennykh v 1845 godu v S. Peterburge po 24-e Noiabria sego goda [Most Devoted Reports, July–December, General Survey of Works Carried Out in 1845 in St. Petersburg through the 24th of November of this Year], fol. 333).

The firm of Bury Curtis & Kennedy of the Clarence Foundry, Liverpool ... had been established c1829 by local entrepreneur Edward Bury (1794–1858) primarily as an engine works, with Scots-born millwright James Kennedy (1797–1886) as his technical manager... In 1842 Bury made him a partner. By 1844 the firm had made about 200 locomotives ... and marine engines (Kennedy’s original speciality) totalling nearly 5000 hp... Although the firm was not generally regarded as expert at bridge construction, the foundry was capable of casting about 50 tons/week with individual items weighing over 20 tons. For the Russian work a new furnace was built to increase the capacity to 150 tons/week. The bridge (with a 50 ft roadway and two 10 ft footpaths carried on 12 or 13 ribs) was estimated then to require 6929 tons of castings and 342 tons of wrought iron, excluding roadway and railings. The total ironwork was to be nearly 10,000 tons and it was to take two years to complete. Unfortunately the project ran into trouble and the British press stopped reporting it while Soviet writers draw a complete veil over the whole affair. It seems likely that Bury, Curtis & Kennedy had furnished an unduly low bid to get the contract and possibly payment was dilatory for after sending out the iron for three arches they withdrew in the first half of 1846. The firm then went downhill and ceased operations in 1850. (John G. James (1926–1988), “Russian Iron Bridges to 1850,” Transactions of the Newcomen Society for the Study of the History of Engineering and Technology 54, no. 1 [1982]: p. 95)

260. Timothy Abraham Curtis married on 25 April 1809 Margaret Harriett Green (bap. 11 August 1788 – 8 June 1847). Their daughters were Harriet Anne (c. 1812 – 3 November 1883), Emma Charlotte (Curtis) Bevan (c. 1813 – 22 July 1881), Sophia (c. 1815 – 22 March 1902), Elizabeth Ann (bap. 23 August 1821), Frances Moncton (bap. 12 May 1824 – 10 August 1850), and Annette de la Tourraine (Curtis) Raitt (c. 1829 – 5 April 1900) (National Probate Calendar (UK), 1881, 1884, 1900, and 1902). Curtis also had four sons, some of whom married. It is therefore possible that a daughter-in-law rather than a daughter was accompanying him, but it seems more likely that it would have been an unmarried daughter.

261. This is Hannah Walker Stead, nurse to the three daughters of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes and William Hooper Ropes: Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, Mary Emily Ropes, and Louisa Harriet Ropes (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 54).
262. Thomas Drury, aged seventy-eight years, died on 23 December 1845 / 4 January 1846 and was buried on 27 December 1845 / 8 January 1846 (PREC STP, no. 5573, p. 331). He had been the Whistlers' landlord on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844.
263. Anna Whistler and Colonel Todd (see Image 278) were discussing the First Annual Message, delivered by President James K. Polk (see Image 50) on 2 December 1845. The two topics of prime interest to them in the message would have been the difficulties with Mexico over the annexation of Texas by the United States and with Great Britain over the Oregon Territory and the possibility of hostilities (Edwin Williams, The Addresses and Messages of the Presidents of the United States, Inaugural, Annual and Special, from 1789 to 1846, Compiled from Official Sources, 2 vols [New York: Edward Walker, 1846], vol. 2, pp. 1447–1474). See also “Maps.”
264. Colonel Todd (see Image 278) had “received his letter of recall” in late October of 1845, but had “delayed the presentation of his recall to the Russian government . . . until the Tsar’s return to St. Petersburg.” He did not take his formal leave until 27 January 1846, some two-and-a-half weeks after this evening with the Whistlers (George Irvin Oeste, John Randolph Clay: America’s First Career Diplomat [Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1966], p. 260).
265. John Randolph Clay (Philadelphia, PA 29 September 1808 – London 15 August 1885; see Image 281) had married on 18 June 1845, in Venice as his second wife, a young Scotswoman named Jane Tucker MacKnight Crawford (Edinburgh 19 December 1821 – 1905). They arrived as newlyweds in St. Petersburg on 20

July 1845. Clay, who had served in Russia eight years before as secretary of legation, had come back in the same post, but knew he was to serve as chargé d'affaires until a minister was appointed to replace Colonel Todd (see Image 278). Although Todd had deposited “all the records and archives of the Legation with ... Clay” in November 1845, his delay of his departure until the end of January 1846 meant that Clay lost three months’ salary as chargé d'affaires (for which he was eventually compensated). He served in this capacity until the new minister to Russia, Ralph Isaacs Ingersoll, arrived on 19 May 1847. Although Ingersoll had written Clay in October 1846, asking him to stay on as secretary of legation, Clay received an appointment on 3 March 1847, as chargé d'affaires to Peru (agreed to on his behalf by his brother, because there was not enough time to consult him in St. Petersburg before Congress adjourned). This news reached him on 20 April 1847. On 23 May, he and his wife left St. Petersburg (Oeste, John Randolph Clay, pp. 249–250, 256, 257–273).

266. Anna Whistler seems uncertain here whether Mr. Curtis’s “daughter” was his daughter or daughter-in-law.
267. Arkhangel’sk (Archangel) (64°32’N 40°32’E) lies “on the Northern Dvina River, 30 miles (50 km) from the White Sea... the city extends for 10 miles along the river. Founded in 1584 ... the port reached the height of its prosperity in the 17th century but subsequently declined with the founding of St. Petersburg (1703)” (Encyclopaedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Arkhangel’sk,” accessed 5 October 2021, <https://www.britannica.com/place/Arkhangel'sk-Russia>). It was primarily a center for the timber and fishing industries.
268. I wish to thank Mary Thacher of the SHS for the following quotation from Governor Rudyard, writing from Elizabeth, New Jersey, in 1683: “At a town called Newark 7 or 8 miles hence, is made great quantities of Syder, exceeding anything we have from New England or Rhode Island or Long Island.”
269. In 1846, Lent in the Western churches began on 13/25 February, while in the Orthodox Church it began on 19 February / 2 March. Easter in the Western churches took place on 31 March / 12 April, in the Orthodox Church on 7/19 April.
270. The Scottish proverb is “As the day lengthens, the cold strengthens.” “It is often found that February and March are much more cold and piercing than December or January” (James Kelly, A Complete Collection of Scottish Proverbs Explained and Made Intelligible to the English Reader [London: Rodwell and Martin, 1818], p. 32).

271. “Sweet William” is William Hall Ropes, who was born on 8/20 August 1845, a few days before John Bouttatz Whistler.
272. In the week before Orthodox Easter Sunday, swings were added to the carousels and theater booths being rebuilt in Admiralty Square. Just as Butter Week, celebrated when it was still winter, was characterized by ice hills (see Image 344), so Easter Week, part of the spring celebration, was characterized by swings (kacheli), a wooden ferris-wheel with four cars (see Image 346) (Nekrylova, Russkie narodnye gorodskie prazdniki, p. 22; Konechnyi, Progulki, p. 269n65). The Russian word for swings is spelled “kacheli” and pronounced “kahchay’lee,” and is plural. Anna Whistler was using the Russian singular form with the English plural suffix -s, probably the usage of her friends.
273. During Butter Week in St. Petersburg (see Image 344), it was popular to take rides in small Finnish sledges (see Image 347), the owners of which would come from neighboring villages to the city in the several thousands. It was uncomfortable sitting in these sledges, and there was the ever-present danger of falling out when they hit ruts, but strong sensations were a necessary condition of true Butter Week fun and the Finns with their sledges had no dirt of passengers (Nekrylova, Russkie narodnye gorodskie prazdniki, pp. 17–18).
274. The children’s theater, probably the first in Russia, was opened in 1841. It was located on the second floor of a building on the corner of Bol’shaia Morskaia Street and Brick Lane that formerly housed the Cosmorama. The owner was a Frenchman named Lemeault (no dates found), who ordered all the equipment for the theater from Paris. Performances were in French. The newspaper Severnaia pchela [The Northern Bee] said of the puppet comedy: “the shows are intended mainly for children, although adults also are curious to have a look at the mechanical dolls.” One could see on the stage mnemonic heads, hanging freely in space on ribbons. They answered in Parisian French questions posed in French. Children also performed in this theater, taking part in tableaux vivantes of rhythmic movement and mime. Magicians appeared here as well. In 1848, the theater was slated to be pulled down (Broitman and Krasnova, Bol’shaia Morskaia, p. 52; Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, p. 642; Konechnyi, Progulki, pp. 169, 303–304n124–125). Lemeault received from Paris excellent pictures for creating dioramas, georamas, and polioramas. These Greek designations refer to the same panorama, differing only in type, lighting, and perspective.

The poliorama, or phoenix picture, is probably the panorama that so impressed James. It was a picture ten feet (three meters) in height and twenty feet (six meters) in length that at first appears clear and sharp to the viewer. Then suddenly it begins to grow pale, and the shapes of all the objects begin to become distorted or to disintegrate. Everything becomes covered by a kind of fog, out of which new forms begin to take shape and finally a new picture appears. For example, the picture shows a view of a castle in Switzerland in winter. Suddenly winter turns into summer and you see the same castle enveloped in greenery and finally you see the castle on fire (Konechnyi, Progulki, p. 304n125).

275. Mungo Park (10 September 1771 – 1806) studied both medicine and botany at Edinburgh University. Through Sir Joseph Banks he accepted an appointment from the African Association and set out in May 1795 to discover “the true course of the Niger,” his predecessor in that attempt having disappeared without a trace. Subjected during his African journey to robbery, imprisonment, and near-death from fever, he returned to England in December 1797, having been unable to follow the river to its mouth. In 1799, his narrative of his travels was published to great success. Accepting a proposal for a second expedition to Africa, he departed England in January 1805, for the purpose now of exploring the Niger to the sea. As his party failed to reach the Niger before the onset of the rainy season, almost all of its members died of fever. Park continued on, but in the course of 1806 reports (confirmed in 1811) were received that he and his remaining party had been killed. On the eve of his departure on this fatal trip, he had written “a remarkable letter” to the secretary of state for the colonies, saying “though all Europeans who are with me should die, and though I were myself half dead, I would still persevere; and if I could not succeed in the object of my journey, I would at least die on the Niger” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Park, Mungo”; Anderson, Scottish Nation, vol. 3, pp. 272–275). Anna Whistler, with some humor one hopes, was comparing the possibility of her husband falling ill with fatal consequences, while doggedly persevering in his inspection of the railroad under construction. Of prime importance here is that once again she stresses her belief that the delay in his departure, like all else in life, was providential.
276. Anna Whistler meant to write “heart.”

277. “Last Sunday week” would have been 1 March 1846. On Saturday, 28 February, Major Whistler left for a two-week inspection of the railroad. He returned home on Friday, 13 March.
278. A “sinapism” is a mustard plaster. Anna Whistler, like her husband, consulted Dr. James Rogers, physician to the British Legation.
279. Colonel Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (1798–1857; see Image 248), head of the Southern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, lived in Tver’ (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 153). The Southern Administration ran from the Kolomenets River in the Valдай District of Novgorod Province through Vishnii Volochek, Spirovo, Tver’, and Klin to Moscow.
280. It has not been possible to locate these letters from George William Whistler and Deborah Whistler.
281. The Honorable John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield (see Image 291) “succeeded his father as second Baron Bloomfield in the peerage of Ireland [on] 15 August 1846” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Bloomfield, John Arthur Douglas”). It was then that he became “Sir John.” Mary Brennan would not have known these nuances. For more information on Mrs. Bloomfield, see Note 252 above and Image 292.
282. Mrs. Law’s note was delivered on Saturday, 7 March. The two poor Englishmen at Dr. Law’s Asylum, or Refuge, in 1845 were Grimshaw, a laborer, and Francis Smith, a former gasfitter, both infirm (BRBC STP 1845, fols. 22, 52). See also the entry for Tuesday, March 25 [1845], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, and accompanying Note 23.
283. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday 10th March who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: William Maingay and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, parents of Debo’s close friend, Emma Maingay (kind Maingays, M<sup>r</sup> M); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s mother (dear Mothers); Joseph Samuel Ropes, brother of William Hooper Ropes (M<sup>r</sup> J Ropes); and Dunia, the Whistlers’ maid (Dounia).
284. Wellesley House, Shooter’s Hill, Kent, was the home of the Maingay family, whom Debo was visiting (Jane Connolly, Old Days and Ways [London: Edward Arnold, 1912], p. 174). Wellesley House was located “in the village of Shooter’s Hill, which was part of the parish of Woolwich in the hundred of Blackheath and

- lathe of Sutton-at-Hone.” It was “chiefly to be noted as the residence of many respectable families, and the summer retreat of many opulent individuals, attracted by the salubrity of the situation and the extensive views which it commands over a wide district of the country” (Pigot’s Directory of Kent 1840, s.v. “Woolwich with the villages of Charlton, Plumstead, Shooter’s Hill, and neighbourhoods”).
285. Hebe was the daughter of Zeus and Hera, and the goddess of youth. She attended Hera and filled the cups of the gods (Hall, Subjects and Symbols, p. 146).
286. Anna Whistler is referring again to Isaiah 58 and the acceptable fast in the sight of God. See the entry for St. Petersburg, March 1845 Ash Wednesday – Old Style [February 28], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
287. 2 Timothy 3:15: “And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.”
288. The person mentioned in the entry for Friday night 1/13 March who has appeared earlier in the diaries is Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old M<sup>rs</sup> Leon). See Leon in Appendix E.
289. Anna Whistler is referring to the tutor, Monsieur Lamartine. All citizens of the Empire of both sexes undertaking any private position for hire in St. Petersburg, as well as all engaging in a trade and all foreigners arriving in the capitol, except the military, civil servants, and diplomatic personnel, had to register at the Address Bureau (Adresnaia Èkspeditsiia), which issued them residence permits (adresnye bilety) of various categories based on their calling (Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1851, pp. 2–3).
290. The Russian word for “peasant” is spelled “muzhik” and pronounced “moozhik’.” He had exaggerated to James and Willie in the hope of a tip. The Russian expression for “a tip” (literally, “for tea”) is spelled “na chai” and pronounced “nahchay’.”
291. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday 14th March who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Thomas DeKay Winans of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Winans); Capt. Petr Petrovich Klokov, Major Whistler’s aide (Capt. Klokov); Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’, head of the Department of Transport and Public Buildings (Count K’s); and the Whistlers’ servants Marie (Fin cook), Christina (laundress), and Johan, the footman (Yohon).

292. Anna Whistler probably meant “I was as surprised as delighted.”
293. The “grand chemin” is the Moscow Chaussée, “which was completed in 1834.” It “was 677.5 versts in length,” and went “not ... in a straight line ... but through Novgorod and through Torzhok in Tver Province.” “The St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway [would be] about 70 versts shorter.” The grand chemin “was substantially built” and had “many fine bridges ... often built of granite and [with] iron railings ornamented with the imperial coat of arms. The verst-posts were of marble and had the Tsar’s initials. There were even benches on which foot-travelers could rest.” “The posthouses were generally large, well-furnished, well-maintained and “usually kept by Germans.” “Travel over the chaussée could be rapid,” with a possible “average speed of travel for a passenger [amounting to] 8 to 10 miles an hour”; for the emperor, it “was reputed to be about 17 miles ... in an hour” (Haywood, Beginnings, pp. 24–25). It was “a hard-surface road such as those ... between St. Petersburg and Peterhof, Pavlovsk, and Gatchina” (Haywood, p. 22). For information about Nicholas I and his travel in carriages, see L.V. Vyskochkov, “Imperator ‘na pochtovykh’: Nikolai I na ulitsakh Sankt-Peterburga i dorogakh Rossii” [“The Emperor ‘Traveling by Post Horse’: Nicholas I on the Streets of St. Petersburg and on Roads”], in Peterburgskie chteniia 97 Materialy Entsiklopedicheskoi biblioteki “Sankt-Peterburg–2003” [Petersburg Reading 97: Materials of the Encyclopedic Library “St. Petersburg–2003”] (St. Petersburg: Russko–Baltiiskii informatsionnyi tsentr BLITs, 1997), pp. 627–629 (this is a bilingual title page). “Post horse” meant one was traveling a long distance, using government-owned horses and carrying the mail; the horses were changed at every station and available horses were given to the most important traveler.
294. Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) set out from St. Petersburg on the Moscow Road during the night preceding 7 March [19 March NS] and arrived in Moscow on 8 March [20 March NS] at 7 p.m. He returned to St. Petersburg on 16 March [28 March NS] at 3:30 p.m. (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 58, Saturday, March 12 [March 24 NS], 1846, p. 255; 60, Wednesday, March 13 [25 March NS], 1846, p. 262; and 64, Tuesday, March 19 [31 March NS], p. 283).
295. A “screw cushion” (see Image 368) was a fabric pin cushion on a turn-screw clamp of wood or metal. The clamp served to hold the pin cushion conveniently steady on a table for the person doing the pinning (“Pincushion,” Victoria and Albert Museum, accessed 25 January 2021, <http://collections.vam.ac.uk/item/O324039/pincushion-unknown/>).

296. Persons mentioned in the entry for [Wednesday] April 15th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: John Bouttatz Whistler (baby); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' doctor (doct Rogers, doct R); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and William Clarke Gellibrand (the Gellibrands, Uncle Gellibrand); William Bonamy Maingay, son of the Whistlers' friends, William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay (W<sup>m</sup> Maingay); Archibald Mirrielees and Jane (Muir) Mirrielees, English dissenter friends of the Ropeses (the Meirrielees); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (M<sup>r</sup> Ropes, brother-in-law, afflicted husband); Thomas Scales Ellerby, the Ropeses' and Gellibrands' pastor (M<sup>r</sup> Ellerby); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistler's neighbor across the hall (M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes, fond Sister, their mother, M<sup>rs</sup> R, her dear Sister, Ellen dear); Christina (my good laundress); Dr. James Ronaldson Handyside, the Ropeses' doctor (D<sup>r</sup> Handysides); two daughters of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, Ellen Gellibrand Ropes (little Ellen) and Mary Emily Ropes (darling Mary Emily); and Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old M<sup>rs</sup> Leon).
297. It has not been possible to ascertain when the Gellibrands gave a dinner party for the Americans.
298. On Wednesday, 8 April 1846, Major Whistler went to a dinner party at the Ropeses.
299. Emily Hall (b. c. 1827) died in St. Petersburg on 31 March / 12 April 1846. The funeral service was held at the British and American Chapel on 3/15 April, Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby presiding. See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E.
300. Thomas Wright (Birmingham 2 March 1792 – London 30 March 1849; see Image 208) was “taken, when a child, to London and apprenticed to H. Meyer, the engraver.” He also “collaborated for four years with W.T. Fry, also an engraver.” He executed engraved, oil, pencil, and miniature portraits. He “exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1815–1848.” He went in 1822 to St. Petersburg at the behest of his brother-in-law, George Dawe (1781–1829), who had gone to St. Petersburg in 1819 at the invitation of Alexander I (see Image 418). Dawe had executed, according to this emperor's plan, more than 400 portraits for the Military Gallery of the Winter Palace. These portraits were then engraved by Wright and by Henry Dawe, who announced in 1822 that they were preparing “The Collected Portraits of the Military Gallery.” The edition was to have consisted of a large number of portraits, but the published number was much smaller than had been projected. Wright next undertook to publish “Les contemporains russes,” consisting of a quarto edition of issues of twelve portraits each, but only the first issue appeared. For his works on engraving, Wright was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts of Stockholm and of Florence. The Imperial Academy of Fine Arts of St. Petersburg made him a candidate for academician in 1824. In 1826, he returned to England, where he engraved “The Beauties of the Court of Charles II.” He returned to St. Petersburg in 1830 to arrange the affairs of George Dawe, who had died in 1829. In 1833, after an exhibition of fifty-four engraved portraits by him, the St. Petersburg Academy of Fine Arts made him an honorary free associate. In 1836, he received the title of academician after submitting fourteen watercolor portraits. He is said to have returned to England in 1845. He died at George Street, Hanover Square, London in 1849.

Wright’s output of engraved portraits was enormous. In Russia alone he engraved eighty-six portraits and drawings, which are catalogued in D.A. Rovinskii, comp., Podrobnii slovar’ russkikh grayvorov XVIII – XIX vv. [A Detailed Dictionary of Russian Engravers of the 18th – 19th Centuries] [St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1895], pp. 550–555).

A large number of his watercolor portraits have also survived. He executed as well a number of pencil portraits. For example, in 1845 he executed a watercolor portrait of Anna Whistler that serves as the cover to this edition of the diaries (see Image 1). On 27 March / 8 April 1846, he drew the portrait of William Ropes’s sister-in-law, Emily Hall (which means he cannot have left Russia permanently in 1845). In 1845 or 1846, he executed the pencil portraits of four members of the Ropes family and of William Clarke Gellibrand. These portraits are discussed in the biographies of the Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince and Hall families in Appendix E (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar’; Basil S. Long, British Miniaturists [London: Geoffrey Bles, 1929]; Daphne Foskett, A Dictionary of British Miniature Painters, 2 vols. (New York: Praeger, 1972), vol. 1, p. 588). Wright sometimes signed his portraits in Russian: “Rait.”

301. Emily Hall’s parents were Harriet (Parkinson) Hall (10 February 1796 – 18 October 1870) and John Drinkrow Hall (1 February 1796 – 30 July 1865), agent to the Aire and Calder Navigation Company. Her sister was Marion Hall (25 December 1823 – 29

March 1886), who later married George Henry Prince. See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E.

302. The Russian word referring to an indoor horseback riding range is spelled “manezh” and pronounced “mahnyehzh’,” from the French “manège.” There were numerous state indoor riding ranges and a few private ones. The private ones listed in 1851 were Lauerbach’s in the house of Kurtz in the Novyi Pereulok and Reichenbach’s on the Chernaia Rechka Embankment at Count Stroganov’s dacha (Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1851, p. 344). The British equivalent of this word is “manege.” Anna Whistler was using the pronunciation of her friends in St. Petersburg, which humorously suggests “ménage à trois.” For the Horse Guards’ manège in St. Petersburg, see Image 137.
303. William Hooper Ropes and Emily Hall were in the quadrille on Friday, 10 April 1846.
304. On Saturday, 11 April 1846, Emily Hall exhibited further signs of illness.
305. The youngest Ropes child was William Hall Ropes, born on 8/20 August 1845.
306. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti, in its home news section, dated Saturday, 30 March [April 11 NS], commented on the early opening up of the Neva (see Image 349):

The Neva has opened up. The Isaac Bridge was drawn back yesterday, Friday, March 29, close to noon. This opening was very early: in the course of 127 years, that is, starting from the time that observations have been made on a regular basis, the river has opened up before March 30 only 14 times. Last year the Neva became covered with ice very late, on December 1, and therefore winter lasted this year only 117 days, that is, less than 4 months—29 days less than the average time the river is covered with ice (146 days) and only 14 days more than the shortest winter (103 days) in 127 years, namely, the winter of 1821-22. Today, Saturday, communication across the river by boat has already recommenced.
307. Anna Whistler is probably referring to their cow, Bosiushka (pronounced “Baw’syooshkuh”), or Bossie.
308. Proverbs 27:1: “Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.”

309. Anna Whistler was reading to her husband and sons from Domestic Portraiture; or, The Successful Application of Religious Principle in the Education of a Family, Exemplified in the Memoirs of Three of the Deceased Children of the Rev. Legh Richmond (1834). “This was a description of Richmond’s principles, as exemplified in his education of his family, and principally relates to his sons Wilberforce and Nugent” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Richmond, Legh [1772–1827]”).
310. Elizabeth Hannah Ropes (14 May 1825 – 25 November 1921), one of the younger daughters of William Ropes, had been taken by her sister, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, and brother-in-law, William Clarke Gellibrand, in 1834 to live with them as their own child (Wm. and Mary Anne (Codman) Ropes to his parents, St. P., 2 May NS 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers). See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E and Images 265–267.
311. Psalms 46:10: “Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.”
312. Tuesday was 14 April 1846.
313. It is possible that Emily Hall had appendicitis, which was unrecognized then as a distinct disease. Such cases were diagnosed as “inflammation of the bowels,” and nearly all died. See Robert Hooper, Lexicon Medicum; or, Medical Dictionary, 2 vols. (New York: Harper, 1829), vol. 1, s.v. “peritonitis” and “enteritis”; “appendicitis” is not listed.
314. Emily Hall was presumably buried in the Smolensk Cemetery, which was reached by an arduous route.
315. Psalms 97:1–2: “<sup>1</sup> The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad thereof. <sup>2</sup> Clouds and darkness are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.”
316. Isaiah 47:7: “And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever; so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.” This quotation is part of the “Lamentation over Babylon” (47:1–15) and is a condemnation of Babylon for “wrongly attribut[ing] her strength to herself [whereas] it came from God” (New Oxford Annotated Bible, p. 881).
317. Mr. Ropes wrote to Rev. Richard Winter Hamilton, LLD, DD (6 July 1794 – 18 July 1848), minister of Belgrave Independent Chapel, Leeds, which the Halls attended (Richard Vickerman Taylor, Biographia Leodiensis: or, Biographical Sketches of the Worthies of Leeds and Neighbourhood, from the Norman Conquest to the Present Time [London: Simpkin, Marshall; Leeds: John Hamer, 1865], p. 431).

318. These are the opening lines of a children's hymn called "Around the Throne of God in Heaven." The author is Anne H. Shepherd; the composer Henry E. Matthews. It is based on Acts 2:39: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Its subject is the promise of salvation through Christ's death and resurrection. It is Hymn 22 in the "Supplement: Hymns for Sunday-Schools, Youth, and Children," in Hymns for the Use of The Methodist Episcopal Church (1849). All versions found of this hymn have the second line "Thousands of children stand," not "are," as Anna Whistler writes.
319. Proverbs 8:17: "I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me."
320. Matthew 19:14: "But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."
321. Matthew 12:34: "O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."
322. Matthew 10:32: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven."
323. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday, May 2nd who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (my dear Mother); James and Willie's tutor (Mons Lamartine); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (dear M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes); William Hooper Ropes, husband of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes (her husband); and Emily Hall, the deceased sister of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes (Emily).
324. The Triennial Exhibition consisted of the works of Academy professors, students, and other artists in St. Petersburg at the time of the exhibition. The academy was open to the general public for viewing the exhibit of art works from 15 through 25 April [27 April through 7 May NS] from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 79, Thursday, April 11 [April 23 NS], 1846, p. 346). On 25 April / 7 May, admittance of the general public ceased, and on 26, 27, and 28 April [8, 9, and 10 May NS], the exhibit was open to pupils of both military and non-military educational institutions, if accompanied by their officers and tutors. Beginning 29 April / 11 May, the works of art were to be returned to lenders (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 91, Thursday, April 25 [May 7 NS], 1846, p. 395). See also Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 79, Thursday, April 11 [April 23 NS], 1846, p. 346–347. The catalogue for this exhibit is entitled Ukazatel' khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii, vystavlennykh v zalakh Imperatorskoi Akademii Khudozhestv [Index to the Works of Art Exhibited in the Galleries of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts] (1846).

From 7 December 2006 to 15 February 2007, in celebration of its 150th anniversary, the State Tre't'iakov Gallery in Moscow hosted an exhibit called “Uistler i Rossiia” (“Whistler and Russia”), in which some of the paintings that James Whistler would have seen in the 1846 Triennial Exhibition were again presented, and their meanings for the Whistlers were discussed. Unfortunately, I was unable to attend the exhibit. Catalogues in both Russian and English were produced. I was touched to read in the introductory essay by Dr. Galina Andreeva, head of Research and Projects of the State Tre't'iakov Gallery, that my interest in young Whistler in Russia, which brought us together in the late 1980s, when I was in Petersburg and Moscow researching young Whistler and Koritskii, was the impetus for her interest in young Whistler and Russia that culminated in this exhibition, sponsored by the Ministry of Culture and Mass Media of the Russian Federation, the Federal Agency for Culture and Cinematography, the State Tre't'iakov Gallery, and the British Council [Ministerstvo kul'tury i massovykh kommunikatsii Rossiiskoi Federatsii, Federal'noe agentstvo po kul'ture i kinematografii, Gosudarstvennaia Tre't'iakovskaia galereia, i Britanskii Sovet] (Galina Andreeva, “O proekte ‘Uistler i Rossiia’” [“Whistler and Russia Project”], in Uistler i Rossiia [Whistler and Russia], ed. Galina Andreeva and Margaret F. MacDonald [Moscow: SkanruS, 2006], p. 11. This collection was issued in both a Russian version [Uistler i Rossiia] and an English version [Whistler and Russia]; the two will be cited separately. Andreeva, who was preparing in the late 1980s a brief biographical sketch of Alexander Osipovich Koritskii for an encyclopedia of artists of the USSR, gave me a copy of it (G.B. Andreeva, “Koritskii (Karitskii) Aleksandr Osipovich,” in Gosudarstvennaia Tre't'iakovskaia Galereia: Katalog sobraniia. Seriiia zhivopis' XVIII–XIX vekov [State Tre't'iakov Gallery: Catalog of the Collection: Series Painting of the Eighteenth–Nineteenth Centuries], 3 vols. (Moscow: Krasnaia ploshchad', 2005), vol. 3, Zhivopis' pervoi poloviny XIX veka [Painting of the First Half of the 19th Century], p. 198). As consultation of the catalogues for the 2006–2007 exhibit shows, Andreeva used the same sources as I did for Koritskii’s biography, but the portion of her essay dealing with him is geared towards the general public and substantially limits footnote references to the archival and printed sources on which it is based. Presenting details of his biography for the first time ever, her essay on Koritskii is valuable for all levels of readers of the catalogues.

325. Anna and Major Whistler attended the Triennial Exhibition on Wednesday, 29 April 1846.
326. Andreeva’s interpretation, which I agree with, is that Anna Whistler “was, perhaps, interested in genre scenes with Russian subject matter, intimate works suited to domestic interiors rather than those with pathos-laden historical content.” The exhibition catalogue includes a number of works that appear to correspond to Anna Whistler’s description, for example Woman with a Guitar [Zbenshchina s gitaroi v rukakh] by the Academician A.I. Maikov, A Village Girl Dancing with a Kerchief in her Hand [Derevenskaia devushka, tantsuinshchaia s platkom v ruke] by A.F. Chernyshev, Soldier with a Peasant Girl [Soldat s krestiankoi i otsy] and Sheep and Domestic Animals in Front of a Hut [Domashnie zhivotnye pered izboiu] by I.A. Ivanov, student of Professor M.N. Vorobiev, Village Girl with a Basket of Mushrooms [Derevenskaia devushka s korzinoi gribov] by Shchetkin [sic: M.I. Shchetinin], a pupil of Karl Briullov and paintings by students of Professor A.T. Markov – P.I. Podkovantsev (Fisherman Making Nets [sic: A Fisherman Making a Net] [Rybak, pletushchii set]), Kiprianov (A Boy with a Balalaika [not in the Russian catalogue]), Makarov (Two Village Girls by a Stream in a Forest [Dve derevenskie devushki u ruch'ia v lesu]), F.F. Strechkov (Soldier with a Glass and Flask of Wine [Soldat s riumkoi i shtofom vina])” (Galina Andreeva, “The Cradle of ‘Uncommon Genius,’” Whistler and Russia, pp. 65– 66; Galina Andreeva, “Kolybel’ ‘nezariadnogo talanta,’” Uistler i Rossiia, p. 66). There is some discrepancy between artists’ names and picture titles in the Russian-language article in Uistler i Rossiia and the English translation in Whistler in Russia. There is an error in this list in both catalogues. In the case of I.A. Ivanov, in the Russian catalogue the titles of his paintings are incorrectly given. Instead of being rendered as (1) Soldat s krest'iankoi and (2) Otsy i domashnie zhivotnye pered izboiu, they were rendered as (1) Soldat s krest'iankoi i otsy and (2) Domashnie zhivotnye pered izboiu (p. 66). In the English catalogue, the translation is faithful to the Russian errors: (1) Soldier with a Peasant Girl and Sheep and (2) Domestic Animals in Front of a Hut (pp. 65–66). The actual translations should be (1) Soldier with a Peasant Girl and (2) Sheep and Domestic Animals in Front of a Hut.

327. Among the artists whose works appeared in the 1846 Triennial Exhibition was Émile-François Dessain (2 June 1808 – October 1882), a French artist then working in St. Petersburg. Dessain, a portrait, genre, and landscape painter, engraver, and lithographer, was born in Valenciennes. He was a student of Boisselier, and exhibited at the Salon de Paris from 1831 to 1844. A list of works executed by him between 1831 and 1844 may be found in Bellier de La Chavignerie and Auvray. Most biographical dictionaries indicate that he was in St. Petersburg in 1852, where he painted the entire Imperial family as well as members of the Vorontsov and Panin families. Thieme and Becker gives the years 1847 or 1852; however, as we see here, Dessain seems to have been in St. Petersburg in 1846. A calling card among the papers of Colin Ingersoll (see Image 280), who arrived in St. Petersburg in 1847, shows that Dessain was then also in St. Petersburg. Dessain's calling card announced that he lived at the apartment of Mrs. Delapré in the house belonging to Kitner at No. 10 Stable Bridge (Koniushennyi most) on the Moika River (Ralph McAllister Ingersoll Collection, box 35, BUHG). He died in Valenciennes in October 1882 (Emmanuel Bénézit, Dictionnaire critique et documentaire des peintres, sculpteurs, dessinateurs et graveurs de tous les temps et de tous les pays [Critical and Documentary Dictionary of Painters, Sculptors, Draftsmen and Engravers of All Times and All Countries], 14 vols. (Paris: Librairie Gründ, 1976), vol. 3, p. 91; Ulrich Thieme and F. Becker, Allgemeines Lexikon der Bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart [General Dictionary of Plastic Artists from Antiquity to the Present], 36 vols. (Leipzig, Germany: Seeman, 1907–1950), vol. 9; L. Dussieux, Les artistes français à l'étranger [French Artists Abroad], 3rd ed. (Paris and Lyon: Lecoffre Fils, 1876), pp. 571–572; E. Bellier de La Chavignerie and L. Auvray, Dictionnaire générale des artistes de l'école française depuis l'origine des arts du dessin jusqu'à nos jours [General Dictionary of Artists of the French School from the Beginning of the Graphic Arts until the Present Day], 2 vols. (Paris: Jules Renouard, 1882), vol. 1, pp. 425–426; A. Heller-Andresen, Handbuch für Kupferstichsammler [Handbook for a Copperplate Engraving Collection], 2 vols. (Leipzig, Germany: T.O. Weigel, 1870–1873), vol. 1, p. 356).

Dessain exhibited at least sixteen works at the 1846 Triennial. The entry for him in the catalogue reads:

Fourth Salon. By Mr. Dessain: Mill on a River Bank in Moonlight [Mel'nitsa na beregu reki pri lunnom osveshchenii], The

Indian Chestnut Tree Planted by Peter the Great in the Ekaterinental Garden in Revel [Indeiskoe kashtanovoe derevo, posazhennoe Petrom Velikim v Ekaterinental'skom sadu v Revele]. Also by him: Odalisque [Odaliska], Night at Sea [Noch' na more], six portraits [shest' portretov], Woman from Bordeaux [Zhenshchina iz Bordo], Algerian Women [Alzhirka], Flock of Sheep [Stado ovet] – drawn with colored crayon. Also by him: Paintings: Cattle Being Driven into a Field [Vygon v pole skota], Interior of a Picture Gallery [Vnutrennost' kartinnoi galerei], The Artist's Studio [Masterskaia khudozhnika]. (Ukazatel' khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii 1846, p. 18)

The words “drawn with colored crayon” in the guide seem to refer to the medium used for the first thirteen of these pictures, and the art historian N.P. Sobko (1851–1906) confirms this, stating that pictures 427–439 were executed in colored crayon, while 440–442 (the three paintings) were executed in oils (RNB OR: Fond 708 Sobko, N2. Alfavitnyi ukazatel' k akademicheskim vystavkam 1833–1881 gg. [Alphabetical Index to Academy Exhibits 1833–1881]).

I believe that the portrait of a boy who resembled James was one of the six pastel portraits by Dessain. It has not been possible to identify or locate any of these six pastel portraits. Sometime after 29 April 1846, when Major and Anna Whistler attended the Triennial Exhibition, and an unspecified date in 1847, Dessain undertook to execute an oval double portrait of James and Willie in pastel (see Image 27). I believe that viewing Dessain's pastel portraits was the impetus for the Whistlers' commission to him. A similar portrait by an unknown artist of James and Willie in the Jourdan school uniforms, attributed to c. 1846, which is in the Hunterian Art Gallery of the University of Glasgow, may be the copy made by Koritskiĭ and exhibited at the Academy in December 1848 (see “fotografiia s originala” [“a photograph of a portrait”], in Dr. Georgia Toutziari “Sem'ia Uistlerov v Rossii,” in Andreeva and MacDonald, Uistler i Rossiia).

328. Fyodor (Fidelio) Antonovich Bruni (1799–1875; see Image 183), history painter and museum administrator, was born in Moscow into the family of an Italian artist and restorer who had taken up residence in Russia. He studied at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts from 1809–1818, where his teachers were A. Ye. Yegorov (1776–1851), A.I. Ivanov (1775–1848), and V.K. Shebuev (1777–1855). He spent 1819–1836 and 1838–1841 in Italy as a pensioner of the Academy. It is here that his most famous painting, The Brass Serpent (Mednyi zmi), was executed (see following Note 329 and Image 184). He was appointed academician in 1834, professor of history painting in 1836, and rector of the Department of Painting and Sculpture at the Academy in 1855. He participated in the decoration of the Kazan and St. Isaac's cathedrals (see Images 119–120, 126) in St. Petersburg and the Cathedral of Christ the Savior in Moscow. From 1849–1864, he was the curator of the Picture Gallery of the Hermitage. He aided in the transformation of the Hermitage from a palace museum into a public museum in all aspects, including the way it was set up: structure, staff, the plan for the formation of the collection, rights and duties of its staff; arrangement of expositions, lighting and hanging of pictures; regulations for inventory and preservation, and rules for visitor access. During his curatorship, the construction of the New Hermitage was completed (see Image 113). In 1856–1859, under his direction, the inventories of all palace paintings were compiled, serving as the basic inventories of the museum until 1924. He participated in the acquisition of several great collections, including the gallery of Barbarigo, which was the source of almost all the paintings by Titian in the Hermitage, and part of the collection of the Dutch King Wilhelm II comprising chiefly fifteenth-century Dutch artists. Bruni died in St. Petersburg and was buried in the Catholic Cemetery in the Vyborg district (Rossiiskaia muzeinaia èntsiklopediia [Encyclopedia of Russian Museums], 2 vols. [Moscow: Progress–Ripol klassik, 2001], vol. 1, p. 81). He was Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii's superior at the Hermitage. Given Bruni's attempt to have inventories of all palace paintings drawn up, it is understandable that the disorderly Koritskii was in difficulties, as he was unable to perform this duty satisfactorily (see Koritskii in Appendix E and Images 167–170).

329. The translation of the Russian title (Mednyi zmiï) is “The Brass Serpent” (see Image 184). The subject of the painting is taken from Numbers 21:4–9. When Moses was leading his people through the desert, they were discouraged and frequently murmured against God and him. God therefore sent fiery serpents whose bites caused many of them to die. Those who remained alive beseeched Moses to ask God to take the serpents away. God commanded Moses to make a fiery serpent and place it on a pedestal. If a live serpent bit someone, that person had only to look at the sacred object and was healed. Moses made a brass serpent and put it up and it was as God had said.

As early as December 1824, in Rome, N.I. Turgenev (1789–1871) had seen Bruni's sketch for this painting. A letter from Bruni to the Society for Aid to Artists in St. Petersburg in early February 1827 indicates that he hoped to conclude his studies in Rome with this large work and to return home with it. The Society tried to dissuade him from a subject that was so complex and required so many figures, but Bruni did not wish to give it up. In 1835, Nicholas I (see Images 420–423), who had recalled Bruni (see Image 183), was persuaded by the Russian ambassador in Rome to let him remain there until January 1836 to finish his picture, but by spring of 1836 it still was not finished. On arriving in St. Petersburg that summer, Bruni was appointed “professor second class in history and portrait painting” with all the perquisites of the position. In September 1838, he left Russia again for Italy. It was not until 15 April 1841 that The Brass Serpent was finished. Bruni sent it to Russia at the end of June. In September, it was put on exhibit at the Winter Palace and then taken to the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, where it was exhibited in the fall of 1842. Bruni was awarded the Order of St. Vladimir 4th Class, and Nicholas I bought the painting for thirty thousand paper rubles. It was thus part of the permanent collection, which Anna Whistler viewed as well.

It is a matter of debate whether Bruni’s painting is filled with “countenances beaming with Faith” and the “gloomy contrast . . . those make who will not look & be saved!” I personally see no one “beaming with Faith” and consider Anna Whistler’s interpretation wishful thinking. Academician Fyodor Grigorievich Solntsev (1801–1876) is the source of a similar doubtful view on the part of Russian’s great fabulist Ivan Andreevich Krylov (see Image 186), who, he says, almost never openly expressed an opinion about the fine arts. Krylov said that if he were married, he would never bring his wife to see Bruni’s painting, because it contains only suffering and not a single person who is not ailing and can be called righteous. Solntsev, himself a painter, agreed with Krylov. He said The Brass Serpent had a heavy, stifling effect. Most of the people in it were prostrated on the ground. Not a single one wins the viewer to himself. All is suffering and death. The boy in the foreground has already petrified. Moses and Aaron are in the background and resemble sorcerers. This is because Bruni borrowed the subject from Moses but failed to grasp its meaning. Solntsev felt that while the painting hung in the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, it almost served simply as a partition separating one salon from another, because it was considered to have little worth. This is where it was hanging when Anna Whistler saw it (F.G. Solntsev, “Moia zhizn’ i khudozhestvenno-arkheologicheskie trudy,

- rasskaz akademika F.G. Solntseva” [“My Life and Artistic-Archaeological Works, told by Academician F.G. Solntsev”], Russkaia starina 15 [March 1876]: p. 623).
330. The mail departed on Tuesday, 5 May 1846.
331. It has not been possible to locate the letter to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, nor the note enclosed in that letter, which was for Eliza McNeill (1830–1855), daughter of Maria (Cammann) and William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31).
332. It has not been possible to locate the letter from Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22), who had opted not to come to Russia but to help her son, Charles Johnston McNeill, in Florida.
333. The McNeills had been unable to keep house because of Maria (Cammann) McNeill’s chronic ill health. She and her daughters had frequently been guests in Stonington at the Palmer home (see Image 37). Now they had a new home in New York City at 67 Irving Place near 18th Street. William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31) is listed in the New York Directory at this address in 1847–48, 1848–49, and 1849–50. After the death of his wife in December 1850, his address changed. Irving Place started at 14th Street and continued up to 20th Street, where it stopped at Gramercy Park. Anna Whistler was therefore in error when she wrote that the McNeills lived at 13th Street. This is understandable, however, as 3 and 8 are often confused when deciphering cursive writing.
334. The reservoir for Croton water was located on the site of the present-day NYPL (F.B. Tower, A History of the Construction of the Croton Aqueduct [New York: Wiley and Putnam, 1843]).
335. “Aunt Eliza” is Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann (Bermuda 1801 – Brooklyn, NY 11 July 1861), wife of Henry J. Cammann (d. 1833), whom she married at Albany on 23 September 1831. Her husband, who died some eighteen months later, was the brother of Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler’s sister-in-law. After the death of her husband, Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann lived in England. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
336. Mary Swift (1826–1884) was the daughter of Mary (Stewart) Swift (24 November 1801 – 18 November 1837) and Captain William Henry Swift (6 November 1800 – 7 April 1879), brother of Major Whistler’s first wife. She was therefore first cousin to Deborah Delano Whistler. She married George B. Ironside (bap. 1828), of

- New York, the son of a retired English merchant, on 24 March 1846, in Washington, DC, at St. John's Church, Rev. Mr. Pyne officiating (Daily National Intelligencer, March 26, 1846, p. 3, col. 5). They went "to England on 1 April by the Steamer from Boston, to return in October" 1846 (William Henry Swift, USMA 1819 CU231, Correspondence 1820–1857, Letters written to his brother, General Joseph G. Swift. Washington, 26 March 1846, USMA Library (hereafter, USMAL: W.H. Swift Papers); Autobiography of George Bliss, N-YHS: Bliss Papers, vol. 1, fol. 24). See the biography of the Bliss family in Appendix E (hereafter, Bliss). See also Whistler ... Fairfax; and Stoeckl, Howard, Swift, Ironside in Appendix E.
337. The Whistlers' Springfield, Massachusetts, neighbors, the Bliss family, made a tour of Europe lasting eighteen months. The members of the family were George Bliss Sr. (16 November 1793 – 19 April 1873); his wife, Mary Shepherd (Dwight) Bliss (24 February 1801 – 12 April 1870); their daughter, Sarah Dwight Bliss (3 June 1826 – 8 September 1896); and their son, George Bliss Jr. (3 May 1830 – 1 September 1897) (Aaron Tyler Bliss, comp., Genealogy of the Bliss Family in America, 3 vols. [Midland, MI: printed by the author, 1982], vol.1, pp. 404–405). The Blisses and the Ironsides traveled "part of the way through Great Britain" together. Mary (Swift) Ironside "had been substantially brought up by [Mrs. Bliss] and passed much of the time at [their] home, after her mother died" (Autobiography of George Bliss, N-YHS: Bliss Papers, vol. 1, fol. 24). Sarah Dwight Bliss married on 24 October 1849 in Springfield, Massachusetts, George Walker (1 April 1824 – 15 January 1888). See Bliss in Appendix E.
338. Major G.W. Whistler to George Bliss, Esquire, St. P., May 24 / June 5 1846, George Bliss Papers, MHS. The letter was addressed to London and was written in response to a letter from George Bliss that it has not been possible to locate.
339. It has not been possible to locate this letter from Charlotte Sanford Adams Barnes.
340. The diplomatic courier would go on Tuesday, 12 May.
341. Reverend Henry Washington Lee (Hamden, CT 29 July 1815 – Davenport, IA 26 September 1874; see Image 44) was the first rector of Christ Church in Springfield, Massachusetts, as of 30 November 1838. Although Anna Whistler speaks of his declining calls to other appointments, on 18 November 1847 his Springfield pastorate was terminated and he became rector of St. Luke's Church in Rochester, New York (The Iowa Churchman,

- March 1903, p. 10; Davenport Democrat, September 26, 28, and 29, 1874; Loren N. Horton, The Beautiful Heritage: A History of the Diocese of Iowa, 1853–2003 [Des Moines, IO: Diocese of Iowa, 2003]; James W. Robbins, “The Founding of the Diocese of Iowa of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America,” master’s thesis, Drake University, Des Moines, IA, 1950; Journal of the Twenty-Second Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Iowa, held in ... May, 1875 and also of the Special Convention held in ... December, 1874 [Davenport, IA: Globe Steam Printing, 1875], p. 12; M.F. Carpenter, “Growth and Spread,” The Palimpsest 34, no. 10 (October 1953): pp. 451–457).
342. Reverend Henry Washington Lee; his wife, Lydia Mason (Morton) Lee (29 June 1812 – Chicago 31 January 1903), who married on 16 April 1837 (see Images 44–45); and their first two children, Henry Morton (Springfield, MA 15 August 1840 – Berwick, Adams, PA 8 November 1905) and Caroline (4 November 1844 – 12 March 1928), who later married Eugene Lewis, were living in the parsonage at that time (Worcester, Massachusetts City Directory 1929; memorial gravestone, Oakdale Memorial Gardens, Davenport, IA; memorial gravestone, Elmwood Cemetery, Kansas City, MO).
343. It has not been possible to locate this letter from George William Whistler, who was working for the firm of Ross Winans in Baltimore and had become engaged to Mary Ducatel of Baltimore. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and Winans in Appendix E and Images 12–13.
344. This is Admiralty Boulevard, from which Nevskii, Admiralty, and Vasilievskii prospects fan out like rays.
345. The Customs House (see Images 95–96) formed part of the architectural ensemble of the spit of Vasilievskii Island and was built according to plans by the architect Giovanni Francesco Lucchini (1755–1826) almost at the same time as the warehouses of the Stock Exchange (see Image 152–153). Its construction in 1829–1832 was made necessary by the development of the port of Petersburg in the first half of the nineteenth century, when customs facilities could no longer fit into the old houses adapted for them on the bank of the Little Neva. In its silhouette, the Customs House, designed in the forms of Russian Classicism, matches the Kunstkamera, which is located symmetrically with respect to the axis of the ensemble of the spit of Vasilievskii Island. Rectangular in plan, the main façade of the Customs House faces the Little Neva and is crowned by a sloping cupola on a tall drum. The main façade is distinguished by an Ionic portico that rests against the projection of the first floor, which is treated as the ground floor and is rusticated. On the pediment crowning the portico are bronze statues of Mercury, Neptune, and Ceres (Pamiatniki arkhitektury Leningrada 1958, p. 97).

346. “Vessels drawing over eight feet of water have to discharge at Cronstadt, and send their cargoes up in lighters” (see Image 84) (Maxwell, Czar, p. 61).
347. “The most central and advantageous location” for building the bridge (see Images 140–142) would have been “between the Winter Palace and the Admiralty on the left bank and connecting with the eastern end of Vasilievskii Ostrov near the Bourse and Rostral Columns” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 362).

Work to replace the floating bridges across the Neva (see Image 99) with permanent ones started in the 1840s and Annunciation Bridge (see Images 140–142) was the first built (G.I. Bogdanov, “Problemy sokhraneniia mostov Sankt-Peterburga” [“Problems in the Preservation of the Bridges of St. Petersburg”], Peterburgskie chteniia 96 [1996]: p. 281). It was being built “from a point where the Kriukov Canal entered the [Grand] Neva on its left bank to a point on the right bank between Lines 5 and 6 near the Academy of Arts on Vasilievskii Ostrov. The left bank end of the bridge was near the Annunciation Church [see Image 131] and square of the same name” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 362), which the Whistlers lived very close to. It was completed in 1850 and opened on 21 November / 2 December 1850 by Nicholas I (see Images 420–423), who walked across it (Haywood, pp. 364–365). It was popularly called the Nicholas Bridge. “Harrison, Winans and Eastwick played a secondary but still very important role” in the construction of the bridge, “producing and installing in ... 1848–1850 the cast iron works for [it]” (Haywood, p. 360).

348. “Isaac’s plain” is a reference to Isaac Square, where St. Isaac’s Cathedral was in the process of being built (see Image 119).
349. The next Wednesday, 1/13 May, would be marked by the annual public celebration at Ekateringof.
350. Anna Whistler’s friend Charlotte Leon (Mrs. L, old friend) told her this story. As of 7/19 April 1846, the military governor general of St. Petersburg was Adjutant General and General of Infantry Matvei Evgrafovich Khrapovitskii (1784–1847), who served in this capacity until 31 March / 12 April 1847. The other

- two St. Petersburg military governors general during the Whistlers' sojourn there were Adjutant General and General of Infantry Aleksandr Aleksandrovich Kavelin (1793–1850) from 2/14 December 1842 until 7/19 April 1846, and General of Infantry Dmitrii Ivanovich Shul'gin (1785–1854) from 21 April / 3 May 1847 until 20 December 1854 / 1 January 1855 (Frish and Vysotskii, S-Peterburgskaia stolichnaia politsiia, p. 152; their portraits face pp. 136, 138, and 142; see Images 314–316). The detailed biographies of these three men can be found in Dlugolenskii, Voenno-grazhdanskaia i politseiskaia vlast' Sankt-Peterburga, pp. 118–122, 122–125, and 125–128.
351. Anna Whistler was reading Narrative of a Mission of Enquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland in 1839 by Andrew A. Bonar and Robert Murray McCheyne. It was published in Edinburgh in 1842, with subsequent editions in 1844 and 1845.
  352. The biography of McCheyne that she had read in the summer of 1845 was Memoir and Remains of the Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne, Minister of St. Peter's Church, Dundee by the Rev. Andrew A. Bonar D.D. Minister of the Free Church of Scotland, Glasgow. It was probably the “New Edition with Appendices, Facsimiles of Writings, and Portrait” (Edinburgh and London: Oliphant Anderson & Ferrier, [1844]). I have consulted the 1844 edition and the centenary edition of 1913.
  353. Boreas “in Greek mythology” was “the north wind, and in allegories of the Four Seasons the personification of Winter” (Hall, Subjects and Symbols, p. 51).
  354. The baby girl died at midnight on Saturday, 16 May 1846. Her death was announced in church on 17 May. Anna Whistler visited the mother on Monday, 18 May, and saw the body on Thursday, 21 May. It has not been possible to determine the surname of this family. There is no record in the PREC STP of the birth of a female child at the end of June / beginning of July 1845 whose surname begins with M, nor of the death and burial of such a child in May 1846.
  355. 1 Samuel 13:14: “But now thy kingdom shall not continue: the Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the Lord hath commanded him to be captain over his people because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee.” Saul is rejected by God for his “ritual sin” and replaced by David, who is “the man after [God’s] own heart” (New Oxford Annotated Bible, p. 347).

356. “The Joy of Grief” is a poem by James Montgomery (1771–1854) about grief through loss of a loved one to death. It appeared in The Poetical Works of Rogers, Campbell, J. Montgomery, Lamb, and Kirke White (1829). See also Friends’ Intelligencer 33, (1876–1877): p. 638. The expression “the joy of grief” is an “eighteenth-century commonplace” (Jack Stillinger, ed., John Keats: Complete Poems [Cambridge, MA; London, England: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1982], p. 418).
357. There were two Wylies in Russia at this time called Sir James. The first Sir James Wylie (Kincardine-on-Forth 1768 – St. Petersburg 11/23 February 1854), knighted in 1814, had been physician to emperors Paul I (see Image 417) and Alexander I (see Image 418). The second Sir James Wylie (bap. Dundee 7 January 1795 – St. Petersburg 9/21 October 1850) was his nephew, son of his older brother, William, a minister in Dundee. This younger Sir James Wylie (see Image 298) was physician to Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Emperor Nicholas I, and was knighted in 1843. He had a brother, John (bap. Dundee 23 January 1793 – Carluke 15 December 1873), who was ordained on 1 May 1818 and was a minister in Carluke, Scotland, from 1818 until his death in 1873; and a brother, Francis (1806 – Elgin 19 March 1873), a minister in Elgin from 1843 until his death, also in 1873. As Anna Whistler spoke of the visiting minister, who preached on 17 May, as “past the prime of life,” he would more likely have been John, who would have been at least 53 years old, rather than Francis, who would have been only 40. This seems confirmed by the fact that a John Wylie was a witness at the marriage of Henry Richard Cattley and Mary Ann Wilks on 17/29 May 1846 in the English Church, and that he only appears in an entry for Wylie on this one occasion in May 1846 (PREC STP, no. 5609; OPRS; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Wylie, Sir James (1768–1854)”; Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scotticae, vol. 3, Synod of Glasgow & Ayr, p. 286, and vol. 6, Synods of Aberdeen and of Moray, p. 392; The Elgin Courant, March 21, 1873; The Scotsman, May 2, 1890). The surname Wylie was rendered as Vilie in Russian.
358. John 17:11–12. Before going with His disciples to the Garden of Gethsemane, where Judas will betray him, Jesus prays for them, asking God the Father to keep them through his own name that they may be one, as Jesus and the Father are (Verse 11). In the 12th verse, Jesus says: “While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the Scripture

- might be fulfilled.” Anna Whistler says Doctor Wiley took as the text for his sermon the second half of Verse 12.
359. George Henry Prince arrived back in St. Petersburg on Saturday 16 May 1846, on the Zephyr (Capt. Leach [1807–1886]), along with one of his younger brothers, Benjamin Ropes Prince (14 November 1822 – December 1902), who was second mate on the Zephyr.
  360. In addition to the three men mentioned in Note 359, NYPL: AWPB, Part II, the guests who came for tea on Monday, 18 May 1846, included the family of William Hooper Ropes and Capt. John Frederick Kruger.
  361. Maxwell, who was traveling in Europe, had written Major Whistler that he had had a letter “from our mutual friend, George Prince. He was to sail in March or April for St. Petersburg ... He seemed to be very happy and had called upon your friends, the Princes of Springfield [sic: Lowell] and the Dickensons [sic: Dickersons] of Patersen [sic: Paterson] New Jersey” (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, London, March 4, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). George Prince’s letter is not among the Maxwell Papers.
  362. It has not been possible to locate the letter from Mrs. Agnes (Stevenson) Maxwell (1796–1866), also called “~~Mrs~~ M” in this entry. See Maxwell in Appendix E.
  363. Maxwell had written Major Whistler that he had had news of George Prince, who “had arrived in New York but was to visit my Father and Mother on his return from the East” (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, Paris, January 14, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers).
  364. The name Stuart epitomized candy made from pure sugar and ingredients of the highest quality. Robert Leighton Stuart (21 July 1806 – 12 December 1882) and his brother Alexander (New York 22 December 1810 – New York 23 December 1879), were the sons of Agnes (d. 8 October 1857) and Kinloch (Edinburgh 1755 – 29 January 1826) Stuart, who emigrated to America from Edinburgh in 1805. There are conflicting stories about which parent started the candy business that became so famous. One version says it was their mother who, in order to support them, made a molasses candy, which her sons sold. With the profits, she opened a small candy shop on the lower west side of New York. In 1828, her sons formed the partnership of R.L. and A. Stuart and continued in the confectionery business until 1856, but their

- chief business until the 1870s was the refining and marketing of sugar. From this enterprise they amassed great wealth and throughout their lives engaged in extensive philanthropy (Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Stuart, Robert Leighton”; Matthew Hale Smith, Twenty Years among the Bulls and Bears of Wall Street [Hartford, CT: J.B. Burr, 1870], pp. 287–288; William M. MacBean, Biographical Register of Saint Andrew’s Society of the State of New York, vol. 2, 1807–1856 [New York: Printed for the Society, 1925], pp. 65–66, 124, 165).
365. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday afternoon. May 30th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: the recently returned George Henry Prince, first cousin to William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (Geo Princes, M<sup>r</sup> Prince); Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler’s sister (Aunt Kate); and John Bouttatz Whistler (baby).
366. The Zephyr sailed on Thursday, 28 May 1846.
367. This is the first appearance in the diaries of the name of James’s Russian drawing teacher, Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii (1818 – 8–9/20–21 February 1866; see Images 167–170). There is a drawing by him (whereabouts unknown) of Willie and Johnnie Whistler, but Koritskii may have made more than one, as Anna Whistler’s words suggest a drawing of “baby” alone. In 1908, William Whistler’s second wife, Helen (Ionides) Whistler (London 15 October 1849 – Hastings 16 January 1917), wrote to Elizabeth Robbins Pennell asking “to borrow a pencil drawing of my husband about 10 years old in Russian dress with a younger brother ‘Johnnie’ in a quaint kind of go-cart, this was drawn by their drawing-master in St. Petersburg” (Helen Whistler to Elizabeth Robbins Pennell, Sept. 23, 1908, LC: P-W, box 304, W-Z, fols. 4963–4). Helen Whistler’s letter contains the last known reference to Koritskii in the extant Whistler family correspondence.
368. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday afternoon. May 30th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (M<sup>rs</sup> Harrison); her husband, Joseph Harrison Jr. of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mr H); Annie Harrison, their daughter (Annie); William Henry Harrison, their son (Henry); Sophia (Morgan) Baird (old M<sup>rs</sup> Baird); William Miller, merchant and honorary British vice-consul in St. Petersburg (Mr. Miller); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler’s half-sister (Sister Alicia); Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old M<sup>rs</sup> Leon);

- Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' physician (doct Rogers); George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes (M<sup>r</sup> Prince); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (M<sup>r</sup> Ropes); and Dunia, the Whistlers' maid (Dounia).
369. Major Whistler would therefore have set out on 9 June 1846.
370. The Victory departed for London with 19 passengers on Wednesday, 5 June [17 June NS] (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti, Saturday, June 8 [June 20 NS], 1846, p. 566).
371. The dacha of William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265) and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Image 266) was located in the vicinity of the Trinity-Sergius Monastery (see Image 397) on the estate next to old Mr. Thomas Drury's estate. The family of William Hooper Ropes spent summers there.
372. It has not been possible to ascertain which sister of Sophia Morgan (Greenock, Scotland 1808 – 13 April 1872) is intended. Sophia Morgan had become a close friend of Anna Whistler's half-sister Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (see Image 39), when they met in St. Petersburg in the summer of 1844.
373. Mr. Miller is one of several merchants identified among the twenty-five passengers who arrived on 30 May [11 June NS] on the Victory from London (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 121, Saturday, June 1 [June 13 NS], 1846, p. 526). He is probably William Miller, Debo's suitor at one time. See the biography of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s."
374. John Dorlin Sandland, The Wanderer and Other Poems, Chiefly Written during a Residence in South America (London: Whittaker; Liverpool: Charles Davies, 1845). See Sandland in Appendix E. "Mrs. S" is Eliza Sandland, John's mother.
375. "Last Saturday" was 13 June 1846.
376. Charlotte Leon visited Anna Whistler on Thursday, 18 June 1846.
377. The empress and the Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Images 420, 424, 432) had spent some nine months in Palermo because of the empress's poor health (Son iunosti, pp. 170–192, covers their entire trip). They returned to Russia on 3 June [15 June NS] and went to their summer residence, Alexandria, in Peterhof (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 125, Thursday, June 6 [June 18 NS], 1846, p. 539).
378. On Friday, 7 June [19 June NS], the empress came to St. Petersburg for the first time since her return to Russia and after hearing a service at the Kazan Cathedral (see Image 126) went to the Winter Palace (see Images 114–117) (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 129, Tuesday, June 11 [June 23 NS], 1846, p. 571).

379. “The sledge of the Empress ... is a most superb equipage: it is drawn by four magnificent horses, driven by a coachman bearded to the breast, and wearing the long blue national caftan, with a gold sash; and two richly dressed Cossacs [sic] standing on the footboard” (Thompson, Life in Russia, p. 92).
380. Anna Whistler, writing to James on his birthday years later, still referred to his “manly courtesy” on this occasion (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Sulphur Springs, Sharon, July 11 [18] 56, GUL: Whistler Collection, W469).
381. The War of 1812 was concluded on 24 December 1814, with the Treaty of Ghent. The news of the peace was received in America on 11 February 1815 and celebrated by a general illumination of New York City on 27 February 1815 (Phelps Stokes, Manhattan Island, pp. 1579–1580; New York Evening Post, February 28, March 1, and March 2, 1815). See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E for a discussion of when Dr. Daniel McNeill was living in New York.
382. The newspaper description of the celebration parallels Anna Whistler’s:

The news of Her Majesty’s intention to visit the capitol quickly spread throughout the city and starting early in the morning the people gathered in a crowd before the Cathedral, burning with the desire to see the precious features of their benignant Monarch, who had so long been absent from her subjects. Huge crowds of people were waiting for the Empress before the Palace as well and demonstrated their happiness with unfeigned signs of genuine attentiveness. In the evening the entire city was lit with fire—the eloquent emblem of ardent Russian feeling. In different parts of Petersburg various forms of illumination were especially arranged for this event. Many public and private buildings were illuminated with extraordinary magnificence, but the Nevskii Prospekt and the streets adjacent to it from the Znamenskii Bridge to the Admiralty was an almost sheer wall of fire, displaying the greatest artifice and variety of form ... Before the entire length of the façade of almost every house sparkled thousands of fires in the form of arches, pyramids, palms and gigantic stars with the initials of the August Heroine of the festivities. Some houses were covered with fire

- from top to bottom – from roof to sidewalk. In some squares and on the balconies of some houses loud music sounded. The entire populace of Petersburg, given the calm, warm weather, massed in dense crowds until late at night on the Nevskii Prospekt, on Bol'shaia and Malaia Morskaia streets and on other nearby streets, engaging in this truly national celebration with reverential quiet and order. (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 129, Tuesday, June 11 [June 23 NS], 1846, p. 571; taken from Russkii Invalid [Russian Invalid])
383. Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (St. Petersburg 30 August / 11 September 1822 – Württemberg 18/30 October 1892; see Image 432) was betrothed to His Royal Highness Crown Prince Karl Friedrich Alexander of Württemberg (22 February / 6 March 1823 – 24 September / 6 October 1891; see Image 433) on the birthday of Nicholas I. They were first cousins, as Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) and the late Ekaterina Pavlovna, Queen of Württemberg (Tsarskoe Selo 10/21 May 1788 – Stuttgart 28 December 1818 / 9 January 1819), were brother and sister. See “Ceremony of the Betrothal,” Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 139, Saturday, June 22 [July 4 NS], 1846, pp. 615–18; Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 141, Tuesday, June 25 [July 7 NS], 1846, p. 627. See also Son inosti, pp. 176–184 about their engagement in Palermo; for dates, see Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, pp. 142, 287.
384. In addition to a telegraph line between “the Tsar’s office in the Winter Palace [and] Kleinmichel’s office in the Main Administration [of Transport and Public Buildings] ... on the Fontanka,” there was a second line “from Kleinmichel’s office to the Alexander Palace in Tsarskoe Selo” that had been “completed in 1843” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 240).
385. “Last Saturday” refers to 4 July 1846, which the Whistlers spent at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works with the Eastwicks: Andrew McCalla; his wife, Lydia; and their four sons: Edward Peers, Joseph Harrison, Charles James, and Philip Garrett (see Images 233–240).
386. The Whistlers visited the Gellibrands on 6 July 1846 at “their pleasant country place, some ten miles away, on the road to Peterhoff, ... prettily situated on a gentle rise of land, over looking, on the one side, the city, where the gilded dome of St. Isaacs is discernable, and on the other, the Gulf of Finland, with vessels moving on its waters. At the foot of this slope is an artificial lake, with an island in its center, with shrubbery and

- walks. It adjoins the elegant estate of Count——, on which is a noted Dairy” (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 56). The Count was Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev. See Stroganov, Vasil’chikov, Kushelev in Appendix E.
387. Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (their kind Aunt) told Anna Whistler that her sister-in-law, Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes (Mrs. R), would soon be traveling to England with her four children: Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, Mary Emily Ropes, Louisa Harriet Ropes, and William Hall Ropes.
388. The previous diary entry was dated Saturday afternoon 20 June 1846. Sometime between 24 June and 7 July 1846, the Whistlers were introduced to the American clergymen and the young lawyer.
389. The clergymen (see their biographies) were Edward Erastus Rankin, Horatio Nelson Brinsmade, and Robert Baird. They were in Europe to attend the “great meeting in London, about the middle of August, of those who are favourable to the formation of an Evangelical Alliance” (The Free Church Magazine 32 [August 1846]: pp. 241–242). Certainly Baird was a delegate from the Synod of New Jersey of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, but Rankin and Brinsmade probably were as well. They had all come to Europe early: Baird to attend first the temperance convention in Stockholm in June; Brinsmade and Rankin for perhaps a once-in-a-lifetime tour (their biographies contain contradictory statements about their travels). They had joined Baird in London, and were traveling with him (Henry M. Baird, The Life of the Rev. Robert Baird, D.D. [New York: Anson D.F. Randolph, 1866], p. 222; chapters 14, 17, 19, and 26 are relevant for Russia). Rankin, who held Passport no. 860, issued by the Department of State, was issued in Great Britain on 1 June 1846 Passport no. 394, and his destination was given as Denmark and Sweden. Brinsmade was issued in Great Britain on 29 May 1846 passport no. 382, and his destination was given as Hamburg and Sweden (NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.3).
390. Henry N. Beach is listed as a law student in the 1845–46 Newark Directory, residing at the same address as James R. Beach, a New York merchant. The 1846–47 directory has them both moving to Brooklyn, New York (James Ward, Passaic County Historical Society, Paterson, NJ, to E. Harden, 20 June 1988). A passport (no. 383) was issued to him, a resident of New York, on 29 May 1846 for Hamburg and Sweden. He was vouched for by Rev. H.N. Brinsmade (NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.3). It is not possible to say whether Henry N. Beach had come to Europe to attend the meeting in London in August 1846 that the clergymen were to attend, concerning the formation of an Evangelical Alliance. On 6 October 1847, Henry married Martha W. Crane, daughter of the late Rev. Elias W. Crane of Jamaica, Long Island (now part of Brooklyn). The ceremony took place at Dr. Potts's Church in University Place and was conducted by Rev. H.N. Brinsmade (New York Herald, October 7, 1847; Newark Daily Advertiser, October 8, 1847).

James R. Beach, who had been listed as a commission merchant, did not appear in the New York and Brooklyn directories in 1848. A death notice appeared in the Evening Post, December 15, 1848, for a James (no middle initial) Beach, formerly of New York, who had died in London on 20 November 1848. Henry N. Beach, although a lawyer, listed himself as a merchant until 1858. In this year he began to list himself as a lawyer and continued to do so in the New York and the Orange, New Jersey, directories through 1879. He is listed in "Gould's Lawyers Diary" for 1880 (Mariam Touba, N-YHS, to E. Harden, 24 August 2005).

391. Anna Whistler was delighted to meet them, because she and her husband had lived in Paterson, New Jersey, in the early years of their marriage, and thus had friends in common with these clergymen and perhaps with Beach. An article that only vaguely names its source says the Whistlers lived on Water Street in Paterson from 1831 to 1834 ("The McNeills and the Whistlers," Bulletin of the Passaic County Historical Society 5, no. 7 (1962): p. 100). "The street was located on the northwest side of the Passaic River ... It is now known as Presidential Blvd. Strictly speaking, it was thus not in Paterson, but in Saddle River Twp., Bergen Co. Passaic Co. was not created until 1837 and Paterson Twp. lay south of the River in Essex Co." (James Ward, Passaic County Historical Society, Paterson, NJ, to E. Harden, 24 September 1991). Maxwell quotes Major Whistler as saying that his family was "then living in a house belonging to Morris, the son in law of Peter [Croy?] on the banks of the Pasaic" (John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, June 2, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 36). Later research by members of the Passaic County Historical Society did not uncover any further details.
392. Edward Erastus Rankin, DD (Newark, NJ 15 May 1820 – Newark, NJ 22 July 1889) graduated from Yale in 1840 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1843. He was ordained in Elizabethtown, New Jersey, on 23 April 1844. He was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Springfield, New Jersey, from 1844 to 1850. He is said to have “made an extensive tour in Europe” in 1845 and then to have “resumed his pastoral duty at Springfield.” It is not possible to say whether he went to Europe more than once, but we know for certain that he traveled in Europe in 1846. From 1850 to 1863, he was pastor of the Forty-Second Street Church in New York City. In 1863, he received a DD from Rutgers College. “He was in the service of the Christian Commission during the ... civil war.” From 1866 to 1879, he was pastor of the Congregational Church in Fairfield, Connecticut. He resigned this post because of failing health and returned to Newark, where he died ten years later.

He married in 1847. He had one daughter and five sons, one of whom was also a minister. Rankin was “spoken of as a man of fine personal appearance, having a clear, pleasant voice, which, while it was not loud, was always easily heard” (F.W. Ricord, ed., History of Union County New Jersey [Newark, NJ: East Jersey History Company, 1897], p. 498; Charles Ripley Gillett, comp., Alumni Catalogue of the Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York 1836–1926 [New York: Association of the Alumni, 1926], p. 23; Minutes of the Sixty-Sixth Annual Session of the Synod of New Jersey Held at Asbury Park, N.J., October 1889 [Trenton, NJ, 1889], p. 45; Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, new series, vol. 13, A.D. 1890 [Philadelphia: McCalla, 1890], p. 147; State of New Jersey Certificate of Death for Edward E. Rankin). Rankin was the youngest of the three clergymen the Whistlers met. Anna Whistler did not clearly say whether she finally heard him preach.

393. Robert Baird (nr Pittsburg, PA 6 October 1798 – Yonkers, NY 15 March 1863) was the son of a soldier in George Washington’s army. He “was born on a ... farm.” At fifteen he entered the Academy of Uniontown (1813), followed by Washington College (1816–1817) and Jefferson College (BA, 1818). “Both colleges sought to encourage promising farm boys to enter the Presbyterian ministry.” Baird decided to attend Princeton Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1822. He was principal of Princeton Academy from 1822 to 1828. As his career progressed, he moved from “state missionary work” to national to French to international, developing along the way the abilities of a consummate fundraiser. The missionary zeal he brought to whatever he undertook resulted eventually in an extremely peripatetic life. His great interest in “establish[ing] ... a proper school system in the state” of New Jersey prompted him to write an influential “series of letters on education “To the People of New Jersey.””

He was considered by “President McLean of Princeton [to have done] more than any other man ‘to direct the public attention to this subject and to induce the Legislature to pass the requisite laws for the establishment and maintenance of a system of common schools.’” His next interest was Sunday schools. In 1829, he became “general agent of the American Sunday School Union,” a post he held for five years and in the service of which he “founded thousands of schools” “all over the settled parts of the United States,” even where there were no churches. “In 1834 the French Association,” funded “by wealthy Huguenot émigrés” (Baird had married on 24 August 1824 in Philadelphia Ferminé Du Boisson of Huguenot descent), was founded in New York “to aid the Protestant Church in France.” They sent Baird to be “their agent . . . in Paris.” While there, he “attempted to begin an international temperance movement [resembling] the American Temperance Society.” It was then that he wrote Histoire des Sociétés de Temperance des États Unis d’Amérique [History of the Temperance Societies of the United States of America] (1836). Although the French Association changed, developing finally into the American and Foreign Christian Union, “he “remained in its service” until his death. He eventually “became an ardent advocate of the Evangelical Alliance for the Protestant world.” In the service of the French Association and its transformations, “he crossed the ocean nine times and travelled more than 300,000 miles.” He was the author of some nine books, written between 1832 and 1851. The two written in the period of Anna Whistler’s diaries are Religion in the United States of America (Glasgow and Edinburgh: Blackie and Son, 1844), written in 1843, and Sketches of Protestantism in Italy Past and Present, Including a Notice of the Origin, History and Present State of the Waldenses (Boston: Benjamin Perkins, 1845; 2nd ed., 1847) (Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Baird, Robert”; Henry Fowler, The American Pulpit: Sketches Biographical and Descriptive of Living American Preachers, and of the Religious Movements and Distinctive Ideas Which They Represent [New York: J.M. Fairchild, 1856], pp. 71–88; Baird, Life of Robert Baird; Peter J. Wosh, “Bibles, Benevolence and Emerging Bureaucracy: The Persistence of the American Bible Society, 1816-1890” (PhD diss., New York University, 1988), pp. 136–143; Peter J. Wosh, Spreading the Word: The Bible Business in Nineteenth-Century America [Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1994], pp. 84–88).

394. Baird, who had not been well prior to coming to St. Petersburg, suffered “an attack of inflammatory rheumatism” once he arrived, confining him to bed. He not only could not travel with his compatriots but had to decline important invitations from the Prince of Oldenburg, who was very interested in the temperance movement (Baird, Life of Robert Baird, p. 220).
395. Mrs. Wilson, a widow, kept a lodging house at No. 60 Galernaia Street. She had a son and two daughters. Her daughter, Ann Eleanor, married on 3/15 May 1845 William Roberts, a tutor, who lived at Mrs. Wilson’s. He is listed in BRBC STP 1845 as “returned with family to England,” but this information may have been written in at a later time, as is the announcement of Mrs. Wilson’s death from cholera in 1848 (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 62; PREC STP, no. 5494). Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe notes “with regret the decease of Mrs. Wilson” (vol. 2, p. 529).
396. Baird had been in St. Petersburg in 1837 and 1840 in his extensive travels on behalf of the international temperance movement. In 1837, he had been received by Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna and her daughters (Baird, Life of Robert Baird, pp. 157, 158). In 1840, he had been received by Nicholas I (Baird, Life of Robert Baird, pp. 194–196). For information about his 1840 sojourn, see Joseph S. Ropes to his aunt, St. Petersburg, June 24/ July 6. 1841, MHS: Ropes Papers. In St. Petersburg, Baird had lodged with the Ropeses (William H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes. Sept. 14/26. 1840; Sept. 27/Oct. 9. 1840, MHS: Ropes Papers).
397. See Baird, Life of Robert Baird, for the many instances of Baird’s interviews with European monarchs and their families.
398. Horatio Nelson Brinsmade (New Hartford, CT 28 December 1798 – Newark, NJ 18 January 1879) graduated from Yale in September 1822. He entered Princeton Theological Seminary that same year, remaining “nearly one year,” and then went to Hartford, where he both “studied Theology about two years” under a minister there and taught from May 1823 until December 1831 at the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. He was ordained in 1828 by the Hartford North Congregational Association “as an Evangelist.” His many pastorates are too numerous to mention all of them. From February 1835 until September 1841, he was pastor of the First Congregational Church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. From September 1841 until October 1853, he served as pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church in Newark, New Jersey. It is here that he was serving when mentioned in Anna Whistler’s diaries. From February 1854 until the end of 1860, he was pastor of the First Congregational Church in Beloit, Wisconsin, and also taught at Beloit College without remuneration. From May 1865 until April 1872, he served as “stated supply” and then as pastor of the Wickcliffe Presbyterian Church in Newark, New Jersey. He remained in this city until his death. The several months he spent in Europe in 1846 were “for the restoration of his health” and constituted the only interruption to his professional life, spent almost exclusively in the ministry. He was married three times and all his children predeceased him (E.R. Craven, Historical Sermon Delivered on the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Organization of the Third Presbyterian Church [Newark, NJ: Daily Advertiser Office, 1874], pp. 31–32; Yale University Alumni Records; Alfred Nevin, ed., Encyclopaedia of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America [Philadelphia: Presbyterian Publishing, 1884], pp. 101–102; Joseph F. Folsom, Benedict Fitzpatrick, and Edwin P Conklin, eds., The Municipalities of Essex County New Jersey, 1666–1924, 4 vols. [New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1925], vol. 1, p. 311; Edward Howell Roberts, comp., Biographical Catalogue of the Princeton Theological Seminary, 1815–1932 [Princeton, NJ: Trustees of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church, 1933], p. 25; Necrological Report Presented to the Alumni Association of Princeton Theological Seminary, at its Annual Meeting, April 29, 1879, by a Committee of the Association [Philadelphia: Grant, Faires & Rodgers, 1879], pp. 19–21; State of New Jersey Certificate of Death for Horatio Nelson Brinsmade; obituary without source identification). The impression Rev. Brinsmade had on Anna Whistler seems confirmed in his necrology: “Dr. Brinsmade was one of the best of men, and one of the most faithful and useful of pastors. His preaching was always with earnestness and love. He spent and was spent in the service of Christ . . . He was faithful, affectionate, devout. The law of love was the rule of his life. He made the impress of his piety and fidelity on all who came within the reach of his influence” (Necrological Report, p. 21).

399. They heard Rev. Brinsmade preach at two services on Sunday, 28 June 1846. The first was at the British and American Congregational Church in St. Petersburg (see Image 125), the second at the Congregational Church at Alexandrofsky, established in 1844 by Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256) (Jubilee Commemorative Volume, pp. 26–27).
400. Daniel Chapter 5 concerns Belshazzar’s feast, at which Daniel, brought in to interpret the handwriting on the wall, admonishes Belshazzar, who, as ruler, has not glorified the Lord, just as his father Nebuchadnezzar had not. The second half of Verse 23 reads: “and thou has praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the god in whose hand thy breath is, and who are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified.”

401. Reverends Rankin and Brinsmade and Mr. Beach came to dine with the Whistlers on Tuesday 30 June 1846.
402. Karttunen, Making a Communal World, pp. 2, 244–245; Notes 22–24, NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
403. “Yesterday” refers to Monday, 6 July 1846. It has not been possible to locate these letters from Debo.
404. “Next Saturday” would be 11 July 1846.
405. This is Eliza Isabella Wellwood (Stevenson) Smith (Mrs. Thomas Macdougall Smith). See Stevenson and Smith in Appendix E.
406. This striking first name has appeared several times in the materials I have consulted, but it has not been possible to determine which person is the right one. The 1845 Register for the English Church in St. Petersburg contains among the names of witnesses to a marriage ceremony that of Franciska Lewis (PREC STP, no. 5518). The list of persons declaring their intention to leave St. Petersburg in May 1847 contains the name Franciska Fermeren, domiciled near Bank Bridge in the house of Tishner (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 99, Tuesday, May 6 [May 18 NS], 1847, p. 460). The lists of passengers announcing their intention in September 1847 to depart St. Petersburg contain the name Frantsiska Friderika Senner, and her daughter, Emilia, foreigners, domiciled on Voznesenskaia Street in the house of Moravits, № 34 (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 221, Sunday, September 28 [October 10 NS], 1847, p. 1008). A letter from William Whistler to James in England mentions simply “Franziska’s” (St. Petersburg, Oct. 2-3 [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W974). Franciska was probably foreign, as her name suggests, and because English seems not to have been her native language. As Anna Whistler called her “this girl,” she may not have been married. It has also not been possible to ascertain who her aunt was.
407. The exhibition of bridal paraphernalia was to take place on 28 June / 10 July 1846. The viewing usually lasted three days. Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Image 432) said that their entire trousseau was sewn at the Fatherland School on Liteinyi Prospekt (Son iunosti, p. 142).

The Women's Patriotic Society (Zhenskoe patrioticheskoe obshchestvo) sponsored eleven schools in various districts of St. Petersburg. Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna was the head of the Liteinaia School, where her trousseau had been made. The subjects taught there were religion and sacred history, reading and writing in Russian, the elements of arithmetic, concepts of home economics, and needlework of all kinds, from ordinary to the finest sewing and embroidery. Every trimester, the girls were subjected to exams. Girls who excelled in deportment, their studies, and work experience received a monetary award when they graduated, based on whether they left after three, five, or seven years. Their needlework was sold on the Nevskii Prospekt in the house of Princess Golitsyna. Girls from various free classes of society were accepted year round on the basis of requests from their parents or benefactors. With the exception of holidays, the girls were required to come to school every day in the morning. They had dinner at the school and went home in the evening. In addition to paying for their meals, the Society supplied them with clothing and shoes paid for from their earnings. Girls were accepted from the ages of five to fourteen. They were required to undergo a physical examination to enter, and, if not vaccinated for small pox, to be vaccinated immediately. Preference was given to those who were complete orphans or lived in conditions of extreme poverty (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 477–479).

408. The Russian word for “pillow” is spelled “podushka” and pronounced “pahdoosh'kuh.” Anna Whistler added the English plural suffix –s.
409. The aide was Aleksandr Vladimirovich Adlerberg (Moscow 1/13 May 1818 – Munich 22 September / 4 October 1888). The mother-to-be was Ekaterina Nikolaevna (Poltavtseva) Adlerberg (Tambov Province 21 August / 2 September 1821 – Tsarskoe Selo 3/16 June 1910). The child, who was born on 11/23 July 1846, was Vladimir Aleksandrovich Adlerberg (d. St. Petersburg 31 July / 13 August 1919).

Aleksandr Vladimirovich Adlerberg was raised with and remained the life-long friend of the future Alexander II (see Image 425). He ended his career as minister of the Court (1870–1881), resigning from the service after the assassination of Alexander II. He became a count in 1847, when Nicholas I created his father, Vladimir Fyodorovich (1792–1884), and all his descendents counts of the Russian Empire. Vladimir Fyodorovich's relationship with Nicholas I was identical to that of his son with Alexander II: they were lifelong friends, and Vladimir Fyodorovich preceded his son as minister of the Court (1852–1870). I wish to thank Marvin Lyons of Richmond, British Columbia, for this succinct account. Mr. Lyons is writing a history of the Corps of Pages. For a more detailed genealogy, see V.P. Stark, ed., Dvorianskaia sem'ia Iz istorii dvorianskikh familii Rossii [The Noble Family From the History of the Noble Families of Russia] [St. Petersburg: Iskusstvo-SPb, 2000], pp. 24–26, 27 and Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'.

410. This is General Zachary Taylor (24 November 1784 – 9 July 1850; see Image 51), commanding general of the U.S. Army in the War with Mexico (see “Maps”). He had become a national hero as a result of victories at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterrey, and Buena Vista. He was therefore nominated by the Whigs in 1848 as their candidate for president of the United States.
411. The Hills “had always been friends with the Cammanns,” and “it may have been through [the Cammanns] that [Margaret Hill] knew the McNeills” (Grace S. Fleming to Kate McDiarmid, [Scarsdale], July 2, 1930, roll 4604, F358, James McNeill Whistler Papers (Glasgow), Archives of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC, roll 4607, M43 [hereafter, AAA: JMcNW]). Margaret Getfield Hill (23 July 1802 – 31 July 1881) was a close friend of Anna Whistler’s. She lived in Scarsdale, New York, where Anna Whistler frequently stayed with her after the Russian sojourn. It has not been possible to locate this letter, in which she mentioned Rev. Henry Washington Lee (see Image 44), first rector of Christ Church in Springfield, Massachusetts, as having been at the consecration of the third Trinity Church in New York (see following Note).
412. The building of the third Trinity Church, on Broadway at Wall Street (see Image 49), was consecrated on Ascension Day, 21 May 1846. Trinity Church was established as the parish church of New York in 1697. The original Trinity Church building, completed on this same spot in 1698, was destroyed by “the great fire that swept through New York city on September 21, 1776.” Construction of the second church was begun in 1788, and the building was consecrated in 1790. As a result of its structure being weakened by the “weight of heavy snows in the winter of 1838–39,” it was torn down and replaced by the third and present building, which is in gothic Revival style, designed by Richard Upjohn (1802–1878). For most of the remaining nineteenth century it was the tallest building in New York and visible from a great distance, as panoramas of the city clearly show. Anna Whistler speaks of it as “old mother Trinity,” reflecting the title “Mother of Churches” bestowed on it in the first thirty years of the nineteenth century when, as a result of New York’s growing and spreading population, it helped to fund “seventy separate parishes over a large geographical area.” It is now registered as a National Historic Landmark (“History of Trinity Parish Three Centuries of Service,” Trinity News 43, no. 1 (1996): pp. 8–11; Paul Spencer Byard, “Appreciating Trinity’s Church: An Anniversary View of a Landmark,” Trinity News 43, no. 1 (1996): pp. 12–15; “City News,” New-York Commercial Advertiser, Monday, June 1, 1846, p. 2; New-York Commercial Advertiser, Thursday, June 4, 1846, p. 1; “City News,” New-York Commercial Advertiser, Saturday, June 8, 1846, p. 2; Paul Goldberger, “God’s Stronghold at Mammon’s Door,” The Metro section, New York Times, May 14, 1996, pp. B1–B2).

413. Reverend Edward Ballard, S.T.D., S.H.S. (Hopkinton, NH 11 November 1804 – Brunswick, ME 14 November 1870) graduated from the General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church in New York in 1829 (Calvin R. Batchelder, A History of the Eastern Diocese, 3 vols. [Claremont, NH: Claremont Manufacturing, 1876], vol. 1, p. 486). He was ordained deacon in St. Paul’s Chapel in New York on 5 July 1828 and priest in St. Andrew’s Church in Hopkinton, New Hampshire, on 16 September 1830 (Batchelder, p. 486). On “August 16, 1829, he took charge of St. Luke’s Church, Charlestown, N.H.” (Batchelder, p. 486). He also officiated in two other churches in Drewsville and Perkinsville, Vermont (Batchelder, p. 486). He was elected rector of St. Stephen’s Church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, in October 1831 and took up his position on 7 December 1832, the day the church was consecrated (J.E.A. Smith, The History of Pittsfield (Berkshire County) Massachusetts, from the Year 1800 to the Year 1876 [Springfield, [MA]: C.W. Bryan, 1876], p. 456). While considered “an excellent preacher” (Smith, p. 456), “it was not chiefly as a pastor that [he] became endeared to the people of Pittsfield ... This was due rather to his daily walk and conversation, which won the esteem of every class, and to the gentle and benign manner which charmed all who came in contact with him” (Smith, p. 457). “He was for many years a member of the town school-committee” and worked for the Bible Society and in the temperance movement (Smith, p. 457). Nevertheless, because his ability to attract new parishioners “was not so rapid as the impatient founders of the parish craved,” he was forced to resign

(Smith, p. 457). He resigned on 20 September 1847, but “remained until February, 1848” (Kate M. Schutt, The First Century of St. Stephen’s Parish 1830–1930 [Pittsfield, MA: s.n., 1930], p. 33). This forced resignation “excited great feeling in the parish, ... proved a lasting injury to it” and served as a precedent for similar treatment of several of his successors (Smith, History of Pittsfield, pp. 458–459). He then became rector of St. Michael’s Church in Marblehead, Massachusetts (Batchelder, History of the Eastern Diocese, p. 486). “He resigned this parish in 1852, and became the Principal of the Episcopal Academy of Connecticut ... until 1858” (Batchelder, p. 486).

In 1858, he was made rector of St. Paul’s Church in Brunswick, Maine, where “his abilities were at once recognized” (Smith, History of Pittsfield, p. 457). He preached here until the day before his death (Batchelder, History of the Eastern Diocese, p. 486). He was awarded the AM by Dartmouth College in 1830, by Trinity College in 1845, and by Bowdoin College in 1858. He was awarded the degree of STD by Trinity College in 1865 (Batchelder, p. 487). “From 1865 to 1868, he was State Superintendent of Public Schools” (Batchelder, p. 487). “In 1859, he became a member of the Maine Historical Society” and from 1861 until his death was its Secretary (Smith, History of Pittsfield, p. 457; Batchelder, History of the Eastern Diocese, p. 487). His ties to the faculty and students of Bowdoin College were very close.

Reverend Ballard married in 1833 Sarah L. Morris (d. 1847), daughter of General Lewis Richard Morris (2 November 1760 – 29 December 1825) of Springfield, Vermont. They had four children, two of whom survived to adulthood: Ellen (b. c. 1834) and Sarah (b. c. 1837 – 1924) (from a history of St. Paul’s published in July 1944, p. 16, mentioned in Susan Tyler, Brunswick, ME, to E. Harden, 3 August 2005; 1850 U.S. Census for Marblehead in the County of Essex State of Massachusetts enumerated on the 20th day of August 1850; 1860 U.S. Census for Brunswick in the County of Cumberland State of Maine, enumerated ... on the 22nd day of June 1860). In 1849, he married Elizabeth M. Cutter (b. Maine c. 1807) of Yarmouth, Maine (Batchelder, History of the Eastern Diocese, pp. 487–488).

It has not been possible to determine how Anna Whistler came to know Mr. Ballard, who, she says, responded with sympathy on learning of the death in 1842 (in Springfield, Massachusetts) of the Whistlers’ third son, Kirk Boott. Perhaps she had heard him preach somewhere.

414. Anna Whistler received a letter from her sister, Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer (Sister Kate), informing her that their mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (My beloved mother) was still in Florida at the home of their brother, Charles Johnston McNeill.
415. Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday July 2nd/14th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: John Randolph Clay, chargé d'affaires of the American Legation in St. Petersburg (Mr Clay); Rev. Robert Baird (Rev<sup>d</sup> Rob<sup>t</sup> Baird); Prince Peter of Oldenburg, nephew of Emperor Nicholas I (the Prince of Oldenburg); Joseph Harrison Jr. of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, his wife, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, and their children, William Henry, and Annie (the Harrisons... families); Andrew McCalla Eastwick of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, his wife, Lydia (James) Eastwick, and their children, Edward Peers, Joseph Harrison, Charles James, Philip Garrett, and possibly Margaret and Maria James (the Eastwick ... families); Christina, the Whistlers' laundress (Christina); Dunia, the Whistlers' maid (Dounia); Johann, the Whistlers' footman (Yohon); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (the Gellibrands datcha); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (dear M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes); and Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, Mary Emily Ropes, Louisa Harriet Ropes, and William Hall Ropes (the children of dear M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes).
416. Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Image 432) and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Karl Friedrich Alexander of Württemberg (see Image 433) were betrothed on 30 June / 12 July 1847, at Peterhof.
417. The manifesto issued by Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) made very clear that the Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Image 432), while marrying with her parents' consent, was also following the inclination of her own heart (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 145, Saturday, June 29 [July 11 NS], 1846, p. 645). Her diary stresses her father's insistence that the choice be hers (Son innosti, pp. 118–119, 176).
418. King Friedrich William I of Württemberg (b. 16/27 September 1781) died on 13/25 June 1864 (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, p. 142).
419. Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Image 432) was married on her mother's birthday, 1/13 July 1846; it was also her parents' wedding anniversary (Son innosti, p. 193). She had been betrothed on her father's fiftieth birthday (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 148, Thursday, July 4 [July 16 NS], 1846, p. 663; taken from Severnaia pchela). It was rather Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna's name day that was celebrated on 11/23 July. The celebration took place on Elagin (mispronounced as Alargon), Kamennyi, and other nearby islands (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 158, Tuesday, July 16 [July 28 NS], 1846, p. 709). A twenty-page eulogy to the young couple, hailing the return of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna (see Image 424) and Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna from Palermo, the announcement of the engagement, the arrival of the bridegroom-to-be, the betrothal and wedding, the nameday of Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna, and her imminent departure from Russia, was published at this time: Blagogovinoe prinoshenie vernopoddannoi, v nezabvennyi den' brakosochetaniia ee Imperatorskogo Vysochestva Gosudaryni Velikoi Kniazheny Ol'gi Nikolaevny s Ego Korolevskim Vysochestvom Naslednym Printsem Virtembergskim I-go Iiulia 1846 goda. Soch. Varvary Zubovoi. (S. portretami Ikh Vysochestv.) [A Reverential Offering by a Loyal Subject on the Unforgettable Day of the Marriage of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna to His Royal Highness, Heir to the Throne of Würtemberg on 1 July 1846. Written by Varvara Zubova. (With portraits of Their Highnesses.) St. Petersburg, 1846].

420. Baird's confinement to his bed resulted in his being "compelled to decline invitations from the Prince of Oldenburg" (see Image 294) to stay with him (Baird, Life of Robert Baird, p. 220). As his health improved, he was able to accept "a renewed invitation to spend a few days with them at Peterhoff, until he might be able to pursue his journey" (Baird, p. 221). The Princess of Oldenburg (see Image 295) informed him "that the emperor and empress had expressed their pleasure that he should be present at the marriage of the grand duchess, which was to take place at noon on the 1st of July (the 13th new style) in the chapel of the palace. This was an unexpected honor, as on account of his illness he had not been presented to the emperor on this visit, and the number of Russians, as well as of foreigners who desired to see the ceremonial, far surpassed the capacity of the chapel in which it was to be performed – a room barely forty feet square" (Baird, p. 221). Baird wrote a private letter about the marriage ceremony that was later published, but his son does not say where (Baird, p. 221). He seemed most taken by "the sight of a royal family in which unblemished morality and the most tender affection evidently reigned" (Baird, p. 221), which prompted him to say of Nicholas I: "That a man who is a good father and an affectionate husband can be at heart a Nero ... I do not believe” (Baird, p. 222).

421. Anna Whistler is referring to William Smith Cruft (17 February 1815 – 16 July 1851), co-partner in the New York merchant firm of Newbold and Cruft, and his wife, Sophia Ingram (Fitch) Cruft (10 December 1817 – no later than 1881). Passports were issued on 15 November 1844 to William Smith Cruft, twenty-nine years old (no. 2647) and Sophia I. Cruft, twenty-six years old (no. 2648), residents of New York, who were contemplating “sailing for Madeira in a few days” (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2). They went on an extensive tour of almost two years’ duration (entry for November 14, 1846, NYPL: AWPDP, Part II). Passports were issued as well in 1845 and 1846 to William Smith Cruft’s sister and brother: to Annah Pickman Cruft, twenty-three years old (no. 630) on 1 December 1845, and to James J. Cruft, nineteen years old (no. 1069) on 20 May 1846 (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2). There is no evidence that James J. Cruft (20 December 1826 – 25 August 1849) was with his brother in Russia, but Annah Pickman Cruft (3 May 1822 – 17 July 1888) was (see Note 432 below and Cruft and Fitch in Appendix E).
422. On 11/23 July 1839, despite unusually bad weather, large crowds chose to come to Peterhof by boat for a public celebration and perished in the ensuing storm (Geirot, Opisanie Petergofa, p. 50).
423. Anna Whistler meant “we were.”
424. This is yet another instance of Anna Whistler’s rejection of the idea of coincidence in human affairs.
425. For a discussion of the Great Peterhof Palace, the entrance gate, the upper and lower gardens, and the Samson fountain, see the entry for Wednesday [August] 21st, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, the day the Whistlers made their first visit to Peterhof in 1844, and accompanying Notes 798–804. See also Image 400.
426. This vehicle was an elegant adaptation of what is called in Russian a “lineika,” pronounced “linyey’kuh.” It was “a long, low four-wheeled double sofa, resembling an Irish car on a large scale, but with a partition between the seats” (Alexander William Kingslake, “A Summer in Russia,” New Monthly Magazine and Humorist (July 1846): p. 285), so that the passengers rode “back to back and quite exposed” (Lefevre, Traveling Physician, vol. 3, p. 30). The Irish jaunting car, “commonly used as the taxi of its day” (Ulster American Folk Park, Castletown, Omagh, County Tyrone, Ireland [website], accessed 21 January 2021, <http://vipauk.org/enter/muse/ni/i36.html>) is “a light, two-wheeled vehicle, popular in Ireland, now carrying four persons seated two on each side, either back to back (outside jaunting-car) or facing each other (inside jaunting-car), with a seat in front for the driver (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “jaunting car”).

427. Anna Whistler meant to write “Nobility.”
428. The Russian word for “peasant” is spelled “muzhik” and pronounced “moozhik’.” For the plural, Anna Whistler added the English plural suffix -s.
429. This is Anna Whistler’s pronunciation of the Russian word for “good,” spelled “khoroshii” (singular) / “khoroshie” (plural) and pronounced “hahraw’shee” / “hahraw’sheeyeh.”
430. The career of Swiss entrepreneur Ivan Ivanovich Isler (1811–1877), who had a concession at the Peterhof celebration, is as follows: The garden of the Stroganov dacha at Chernaia Rechka was open to the public starting in the 18th century. Count Stroganov’s servants sold food and drink at a modest price by taking it from his own larders. In the 1830s, on his land near the New Village (Novaya Derevnia), a pleasure garden was built for a mineral water establishment. Variety shows were presented; Herman’s orchestra, which had been playing at Pavlovsk, played concerts there two evenings a week. Later, the garden was completely enclosed by a high fence, rented out to an entrepreneur, and the public had to pay to enter. One of the most famous entrepreneurs from 1848 to the end of the 1850s was Isler, who had previously had a small café and restaurant in the building of the Armenian Church on the Nevskii Prospekt. In 1859, he was running another such establishment: the “Monde Brilliant.” He was considered to have a talent for attracting the public in droves. During his time at the pleasure garden, Ivan Gungl’s orchestra played there, Ivan Vasiliev’s gypsy choir began singing there, and a troupe of Arab acrobats was introduced. When the cholera appeared, Isler did all he could to divert the distressed public. Nicholas I visited the establishment, witnessed the acrobatic act, and personally thanked Isler for the pleasure he was giving the public; after his visit, he made Isler a gift of three thousand rubles. Later, Isler built an open theater there, where tableaux vivantes and fireworks were presented; in 1862, the French chanson was introduced; later, operettas. At the end of the 1860s, the establishment began to decline. In 1876, the pleasure garden stood empty, and in August of that year it burned down. Isler, who had ceased to be an entrepreneur by 1874, died in 1877 and

- was buried in the Smolensk Cemetery (Pyliaev, Zabytoe proshloe 1889, pp. 6–12; Konechnyi, Progulki, p. 276n29; Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn' Peterburga, pp. 22, 36, 37, 69, 79).
431. Thomas Kirke (1656 – spring 1706), “a Justice of the Peace and Fellow of the Royal Society,” “owned a wood in the hamlet of Cookridge, a few miles north of the centre of Leeds ... called Moseley Wood,” consisting of some 120 acres. He “had the wood laid out to form [an] intricate labyrinth,” which “inspired the local legend of ‘Jack and His Eleven Brothers’ meeting at one of the ‘centres’ and then each taking one of the eleven paths out into the world to make their fortunes” (cited in “Writers in the Rafters: The Leeds Labyrinth,” Leeds Library website, accessed 12 March 2021, <https://leedsreads.net/writers-in-the-rafters/>). In the legend, Jack and his eleven brothers part company at a hub with twelve roads radiating from it and meet there again in a year to relate their adventures (The History of Jack and His Eleven Brothers: Displaying the Various Adventures They Encountered in Their Travels, etc. etc. [London and York: J. Kendrew, 1815]).
432. The Crufts had in their party two other female family members: Mrs. Cruft’s only sister, Mary Elizabeth Fitch (born 27 July 1827), and her sister-in-law, Annah Pickman Cruft. A passport (no. 630) was issued to Annah Pickman Cruft, twenty-three years old, on 1 December 1845 (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2). No record of a passport issued to Mary Elizabeth Fitch has been found; however, a Miss Fitch is listed among the passengers of the Cruft party on board the Great Western en route to New York in September 1846 (New-York Tribune, October 1, 1846).
433. This is Hannah Walker Stead, nursemaid to the Ropes children (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 54).
434. Persons mentioned in the entry for Monday 27th of July who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Monsieur Lamartine, tutor to James and Willie (Mons. Lamartine, our lazy Domini); Johann, the Whistlers’ footman (Yohons wing, Yohon played, Yohon); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (M<sup>rs</sup> G, my kind hostess); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes); Mrs. Ropes’s children, Ellen Gellibrand, Mary Emily, Louisa Harriet, and William Hall (her children); Pyotr, the Whistlers’ coachman (our Coachman); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (one of “the gents,” M<sup>r</sup> R); William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (one of “the gents”); the unidentifiable seamstress (Franceska); Martha

- (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (dear Mother, one of "the two dearest to me in New York"); Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler's sister-in-law (Maria, one of "the two dearest to me in New York"); Dunia, the Whistlers' housemaid (Dounia); Charles Wood, cotton-spinning merchant of the firm of Egerton Hubbard (M<sup>r</sup> Woods datcha, M<sup>r</sup> Wood); and Lydia (Procter) Wood, Charles Wood's wife (M<sup>rs</sup> Wood). The Gellibrands's footman and outdoor–indoor man (Dvanic) cannot be identified.
435. It has not been possible to establish to which bath Yohon took James and Willie. For Russian baths see Chistova, Byt Pushkinskogo Peterburga, vol. A–K, pp. 54–56.
436. The Whistlers went to the dacha of William Clarke and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Images 265–266) on Wednesday, 22 July 1846.
437. The Russian word for "oarsman" is spelled "pirosvozhchii" and pronounced "peerossvaw'shchee."
438. It was, rather, Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna's name day that was celebrated on 11/23 July. The celebration took place on Elagin (garbled as Alargon), Kamennyi, and other nearby islands (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 158, Tuesday, July 16 [July 28 NS], 1846, p. 709).
439. Colonel Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (1798–1857; see Image 248) was head of the Southern Administration of the tract of the future St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, running from the crest of the Valdai Hills to Vyshnii Volochek and thence to Tver' and Moscow (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 70). See his biography in Appendix E (hereafter, Kraft).
440. When the Neva River reaches the Alexander Nevskii Monastery (the boundary of St. Petersburg), it flows around it in the form of a semicircle and then divides into three branches: the Grand Nevka, the Little Nevka and the Little Neva. The Little Neva divides from the right bank of the Neva River at a point below the Peter and Paul Fortress and enters the Gulf of Finland to the northwest. Although the Little Neva surpasses even the Grand Neva in width, because of its shallowness it is not as suitable for navigation (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, p. 27).
441. Prince Oscar of Sweden (Stockholm 21 January 1829 – Stockholm 8 December 1907; see Image 322) was seventeen years old.

442. This is the “budochnik”, pronounced “boo’dushnyeeek,” who was on duty at his sentry box.
443. His Royal Highness Crown Prince Karl of Württemberg (see Image 433) was born on 22 February / 6 March 1823 (Kuz’min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, p. 287).
444. Anna Whistler is referring to Friday, 24 July 1846.
445. Matthew 7:14: “Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.”
446. Saturday was 25 July 1846.
447. Miss McMaster (Miss McM, Miss M, excellent governess) was governess to the children of Charles and Lydia (Procter) Wood (see Images 271–272).
448. For John Dorlin Sandland’s poems see Sandland in Appendix E.
449. Miss McMaster (Miss McM, Miss M), the governess of the Wood children, invited Anna Whistler and her children on Saturday, 25 July, to come to the Wood dacha on Wednesday, 29 July. Mr. Wood’s dacha was located on the same estate as the Gellibrands’ dacha.
450. This is Sophia Gordon (Busch) Handyside (6/17 November 1798 – 31 October / 12 November 1886), wife of William Handyside (b. Edinburgh 25 July 1793; bap. 3 August 1793; d. Edinburgh 26 May 1850); they were married on 10/22 August 1829 in the English Church by Rev. Edward Law (PREC STP for 1829, p. 135). William Handyside, nephew of the late Charles Baird (see Image 274), went to work for his uncle in St. Petersburg in 1810 and quickly showed his ability as an engineer. Among the important commissions given to the Baird Works that he participated in were the first Russian Steamship, the Elizabeth, in 1815 (see Images 276–277); a sugar-refining process using bullocks’ blood; and a gasworks for lighting Baird’s Works. His most prestigious work was that associated with the French architect Auguste Monferrand: the casting and erection of reliefs for the Alexander Column and St. Isaac’s Cathedral (see Images 116, 119–120, 132). In both instances, the cast iron reliefs are famous. A member of the Institution for Civil Engineers in England since 1822, on returning there in 1846 he became more active in that organization, but retired from business.

451. On 13/25 July, the Naslednik left for Lübeck with seventeen passengers (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 158, Tuesday, July 16 [July 28 NS], 1846, p. 712).
452. Anna Whistler saw the governess of the Wood children, Miss McMaster, at the English Church on Sunday, 26 July. Accompanying Miss McMaster were two of the daughters of Charles and Lydia (Procter) Wood: Catherine Elizabeth Wood (Kate), nine years old, and Helen Wood, ten years old. Anna Whistler erroneously calls Helen “Ellen.” The only child of Anna Whistler’s acquaintance named Ellen was Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, who was five years old, and whose parents were communicants of the British and American Congregational Church.
453. On the evening of Sunday, 26 July, Anna Whistler took Mary Brennan, Willie, and John Bouttatz Whistler to the Peter and Paul Fortress, where they saw the sepulchres of the Imperial dead in St. Peter’s Cathedral (see Image 130). The founding of the cathedral is said to be 30 May (OS) 1714, on which day the Most Reverend Isaac of Dalmatia is celebrated and the birth of Peter the Great (see Image 411) is remembered. The cathedral was completed during the reign of Anna Ioannovna and dedicated on 28 June 1733. On 30 April 1756, lightning struck the belfry spire and the cathedral caught fire, with the cupola and iconostasis suffering the severest damage. They were restored to their original state. At this time, there were two altars: that of the apostles Peter and Paul, and that of the great martyr St. Catherine, built in 1773. The length of the cathedral along the foundations is thirty sazhen, the width fourteen. Inside, the length is twenty-seven sazhen five feet, the width eleven sazhen one foot. The interior of the altar is four sazhen three feet, its length eight sazhen two feet. The height from the floor to the vaulting is seven sazhen one foot. Within the cathedral, four columns support the cupola and two the altar. On the right side by a column is the seat of the emperor, under a velvet baldachine with the Russian coat-of-arms and crowns. Next to this seat is another for the Imperial family. The inner side of the vaulting has been made to look like marble and is decorated with cherubim. The floor is made of polished tile variegated in color. Among the treasures of the cathedral is a large censer carved of ivory ten feet high, six feet in diameter, and up to eighteen feet in circumference, made by Peter the Great.

Near the altar on the right and left side are sections enclosed by iron railings with the sepulchres of all the crowned rulers of the House of Romanov, except for Peter II, who died in Moscow and is buried in that city. They are made of simple stone and covered with brocaded palls.

The cathedral has above its altar a large cupola and belltower, ending in a sharp spire on which there is an apple supporting an angel with a cross. Attached to it is a lightning rod. The height of the belltower from its base to the top of the cross is sixty-five sazhen; excluding the cross fifty-seven sazhen. The height of the spire together with the apple is twenty-six sazhen. The spire is covered with gilded brass sheets, while for the gilding of its upper decorations twenty-two pounds of pure gold was used. All of this was done in October 1830. Clocks with chimes were bought by Peter the Great in Amsterdam, but in 1759, Empress Elizaveta Petrovna (see Image 413) bought new ones to replace those ruined during a storm. Holidays were celebrated there on 29 June and 24 November.

The cathedral has a small stone house in which widows and church staff live.

Marriages were not performed in this cathedral (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 125–129). For a description in English, see Murray's Handbook for Northern Europe, vol. 2, pp. 478–479.

454. The English geologist Sir Roderick Impey Murchison (1792–1871; knighted 1846; see Image 192), then about to carry out the first of his explorations in Russia, wrote his wife that he was invited by Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) to the wedding festivities on 16/28 April 1841 of His Imperial Highness, Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich (1818–1881; see Image 425), heir to the throne. While at the Court ball, Murchison had the opportunity to speak intimately with Nicholas I, who asked about his personal life and whether his wife ever traveled with him. To Murchison's reply that "the day was when you were always at my side, and sketched and worked for me," Nicholas responded: "C'est ainsi avec ma femme, mais hélas sa santé ne le permet plus, elle a eu quinze couches" ("It is the same with my wife, but alas her health will no longer permit it; she has borne fifteen children"). (Geikie, Life of Murchison, vol. 1, p. 320)
455. The accession of Nicholas I (see Image 420–423) took place on 14/26 December 1825; he was crowned in Moscow on 22 August / 3 September 1826. For an explanation of the events occurring between the death of his brother, Alexander I (see Image 418), and the events of 14/26 December, see Lincoln, Nicholas I, pp. 13, 17–47.

456. The “conquest of Poland” referred to here is the quelled Polish uprising of 1830–1831.
457. Anna Whistler is referring to Robert Hawker’s (1753–1827), The Poor Man’s Morning Portion; Being a Selection of a Verse of Scripture with Short Observations for Every Day in the Year. No first edition of this text appears to be extant; the second edition was published in London in 1809. This was followed by a second collection entitled The Poor Man’s Evening Portion; the fourth edition of this title was published in 1819. The two portions were first published together in 1842 as The Poor Man’s Morning and Evening Portion; Being a Selection of a Verse of Scripture, with Short Observations for Every Day in the Year (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Robert Hawker”); Robert Hawker, The Poor Man’s Morning Portion, Being a Selection of a Verse of Scripture with Short Observations for Every Day in the Year, 2nd ed. [London, 1809]; Robert Hawker, The Poor Man’s Daily Portion: Being a Selection of a Verse of Scripture with Short Observations for Every Morning and Evening in the Year [London: I.J. Chidley, 1844]; John Williams, ed., Memoirs of the Life and Writing of the Rev. Robert Hawker, D.D., late Vicar of Charles, Plymouth [London: printed for Ebenezer Palmer, 1831], p. 115; W.T. Loundes, The Bibliographer’s Manual of English Literature [London: Henry G. Bohn, 1865], pp. 1013–1014). A similar title, The Poor Man’s Daily Portion; Being a Selection of a Verse of Scripture with Short Observations for Every Morning and Evening in the Year, was published in 1844. Anna Whistler does not indicate which version she owned. In a letter to Major Whistler in 1847, she refers to the volume she received as a gift many years earlier: “‘The Poor Man’s Portion’ it was you who years ago led me to the study of that valuable work by bringing me a copy of it in your trunk from Philadelphia” (Anna Whistler to George Washington Whistler, Steamer “Staat Hamburg” Lubec entry for June 10th 1847 in letter of Tuesday Morning June 8th 1847 [on board] Steamer Nikolai, GUL: Whistler Collection, W353). This means that the purchase could have been made at any time after their marriage in November 1831, but not after May 1842, when Major Whistler was on his way to St. Petersburg. As The Poor Man’s Morning Portion was reissued singly at least in 1833, she could have owned either the single or combined version.
458. This is a distorted English rendering of the Russian word for “dining room,” spelled “stolovaia” and pronounced “stahlaw’vuhuh.”

459. Koritskii (see Images 167–170) usually came to the house on a Saturday afternoon for a 4 o'clock lesson, but the diaries show that on several occasions he came some time on a Monday. Weekly assignments set by the Academy in James's drawing level were of heads and figures, while the drawing Koritskii condemned on this occasion was of a dog. He may have set this assignment himself.
460. "The Diverting History of John Gilpin" (1782) is a comic poem, "part parody and part imitation" of the street ballad, by William Cowper (1731–1800). The humorous adventures encountered by John Gilpin during his horseback ride to meet his wife for a twentieth wedding anniversary celebration are recounted in quatrains with an abab rhyme and alternating lines of iambic tetrameter and trimeter. The poem would have been easy and fun for a child of ten to commit to memory and in this instance was part of the Whistler parents' effort to foster their sons' fluency in English in an atmosphere of speaking several foreign languages (Vincent Newey, Cowper's Poetry: A Critical Study and Reassessment [Liverpool, UK: Liverpool University Press, [1982]], p. 230; John D. Baird and Charles Ryskamp, eds., The Poems of William Cowper, vol. 2, 1782–1785 [Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1995], pp. 295–303).
461. It has not been possible to locate this letter from Deborah Whistler, in which she spoke of seeing her first cousin, Mary (Swift) Ironsides, on her honeymoon in England. Debo also told her family that Katherine Prince of Lowell, Massachusetts, who was in England, could not come to St. Petersburg when Deborah Whistler returned there.
462. Major Whistler set out on an inspection trip with his superior, Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243), on 6/18 August.
463. Anna Whistler, the children, and Mary Brennan stayed at the dacha of William Clarke Gellibrand and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (M<sup>rs</sup> G) (see Images 265–266) from Friday, 21 August, to Monday, 24 August 1846.
464. The newspaper carried the following account of the hot summer:
- After the cold and the rain that unpleasantly marked the end of spring and the beginning of summer, almost everywhere in the provinces of the Central and Northern regions since the middle of June, and in other places even earlier clear, warm weather arrived. In June the warm weather changed everywhere to a heat wave that has continued up to mid-August. In Arkhangelsk and Petrozavodsk the heat rose, on 10 July, to 24° Reaumur in the shade. No one will forget such a hot summer as the present one for a long time. Thank God, however, that there is no report from anywhere of drought: the intense heat has been tempered from time to time by rain, but in some places the rain has even been extremely excessive, with floods resulting. In the North the unusual heat continues everywhere almost to this moment. In the South the summer has been exactly the same as in the North and in Central Russia: in Simferopol, for example, the heat at the end of June reached 28° Reaumur. (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 210, Friday, September 6 [September 18 NS], 1846, p. 885)

465. Helene Funck (St. Petersburg August 20 (OS) 1792 – St. Petersburg December 21 (OS) 1870), who was governess at the Gellibrand home to Elizabeth Ropes, had been hired in 1839 as governess to Sarah Mirrielees. She had taken the post with grave doubts because of the possible impropriety of entering the service of the widowed Archibald Mirrielees, whose second wife, Mary (Cullen) Mirrielees, had died that year (Archibald Mirrielees to John Paterson, Reval, 31 July / 12 August 1839, LMS: Incoming Letters, vol. 3, no. 52; Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, pp. 16, 18, 28, 30). Sometime after Archibald Mirrielees's marriage in July 1844 to his third wife, Jane (Muir) Mirrielees (1810–1875), Miss Funck went back into service to the Gellibrands. She is the Mlle. Helene Funck who was a sponsor to Wilhelmine Grooten (b. 21 July 1837) (RGIA: Fond 40, op. 1. Gollandskaia reformatorskaiia tserkov', 1717–1921 gg., d. 2 Tserkovnaia kniga zapisei rozhdenii, venchanii i smertei, 1808–1883 [Dutch Reformed Church, 1717–1921. Church register of births, marriages and deaths, 1808 – 1883], fol. 66 (hereafter, RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov')). Wilhelmine Grooten's mother was Miss Funck's sister. Miss Funck's dates are taken from the Amburger Datenbank; her place of burial is Volkov Cemetery (Amburger Datenbank, ID 18879). She was the daughter of Friedrich Gustav (16/27 August 1763 – St. Petersburg 17/29 June 1812) and Bernhardine (Maschmeyer) Funck (d. 1796) (Amburger Datenbank, ID 32594). She was further described as a “retired actress” owning “empty lot No. 468 in the Vyborg District” (T'sGIA SPb: Fond 781, Alfavit gorodskoi obyvatel'skoi knigi, op. 4, d. 85. “F” 1820 [which goes up to 1872], fol. 50v, no. 415), but I am inclined to doubt the information, given the personality of Miss Funck established from other documents.

466. Nothing is known of Feodosia's position in the Whistler household. Mary Brennan was in charge of John Bouttatz, but perhaps Feodosia assisted her. In autumn 1848, she was nursemaid at the house of a Mr. and Mme. Le Coque, who had a daughter, Olga, and who were tutors to the Eastwick children until 1849 (William Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg Oct. 6th [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W975; A.M. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, St. Petersburg January 14th/26th 1849 Friday, Eastwick Letters). Her name is spelled Pheodocia and Theodosia by the Whistlers. In Russian, this personal name is spelled "Feodosiia" and pronounced "Feyahdaw'seeyuh." (Petrovskii, Slovar' russkikh lichnykh imen, p. 218).
467. "Collect" is "a name given to a 'comparatively short prayer, more or less condensed in form, and aiming at a single point, or at two points closely connected with each other', one or more of which, according to the occasion and season, have been used in the public worship of the Western Church from an early date. Applied particularly to the prayer, which varies with the day, week, or octave, said before the Epistle in the Mass or Eucharistic Service, and in the Anglican service also in Morning and Evening Prayer, called for distinction the collect of the day" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "collect, n.").
468. Anna Whistler is referring to the Law family.
469. It has not been possible to ascertain who the English governess or the Russian family are.
470. This "private worship" had a congregation from two denominations, but an Episcopalian content. George Henry Prince, who was first cousin to Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and who would also have been staying at the Gellibrand dacha, was a member of the British and American Congregational Church. Anna Whistler's references to "our neighbors from the Parsonage," to "the prayers of our church," and to "the niece of our Pastor's wife" imply that she is speaking of the Laws, the English church, and Mrs. Law's niece. The Laws were spending the summer in a dacha. We know this because they later gave a ball there when their daughter Caroline married Richard Miller. It has not been possible to determine the location of the Laws' dacha.

471. Sarah Jane Mirrielees (1830–1914) was the daughter of Archibald Mirrielees (1797–1877) and his first wife, Sarah Newbould (Spurr) Mirrielees (d. 1835) (Pitcher, Muir i Merilix, pp. 8, 22, 24; Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, pp. 14, 15, 16, 40). It has not been possible to identify the niece of their pastor's wife, Mary Elizabeth (Mosley) Law. The two little girls were Mary and Alice Handiside.
472. The daughters of Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256) and Mary (Bealey) Ellerby were Lucy (b. c. 1842), Alice (b. c. 1844), and Emily (b. c. 1845) (Charles S. Romanes, The Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk: Their Paston Connections and Descendants [London: T. and A. Constable, 1920], p. 86; records of St. James' Cemetery, Toronto, Ontario, Canada). See Ellerby in Appendix E.
473. Southport is “a town and three chapelries in North Meols township and parish, Lancashire, [and now part of Merseyside]. The town stands on the coast, at the termini of railways from Liverpool, Preston, and Manchester.” Founded in 1792, it “came into notice, about 1830, as an attractive watering-place; grew rapidly, from that time, into a handsome town, with spacious streets and promenades” (John Marius Wilson, The Imperial Gazetteer of England and Wales [Edinburgh: A. Fullarton, 1870], vol. 6, p. 835). The town lies on the Irish Sea coast to the south of the Ribble estuary, about 15 miles southwest of Preston, where Anna Whistler's half-sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (see Image 40), lived with her second husband, John Winstanley. Regretably, Anna Whistler did not give further details about the Jew converted to Christianity seen in Southport by Mary (Bealey) Ellerby.
474. This may be Eleonora Lee, identified in the BRBC STP 1845 as “nurse, spinster,” who lived at Mr. Ellerby's (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 35).
475. It has not been possible to identify the dying German, whom Anna Whistler and Helene Funck visited on Sunday, 23 August.
476. Major Whistler left home on Tuesday, 18 August 1846.
477. The omnibus (see Image 351) was a multiseated public passenger carriage pulled by horses. It appeared in St. Petersburg in the summer of 1830. Omnibuses that traveled to the environs of St. Petersburg, such as Aleksandrovscoe, and to other cities, were called “diligences,” and began to operate in the 1820s. The lineika was also called an omnibus. See Murray's Handbook for Northern Europe, vol. 2, pp. 391–395, about diligences, droshkies, and job carriages.

478. The “great holiday” is the Feast of the Transfiguration of Our Lord (Preobrazhenie), which was celebrated on 6/18 August (see Image 381 for an icon of this feast day). It refers to the miraculous transformation of Jesus’s visage and raiment while he was praying on Mount Tabor. As this took place, the voice of God announced that Jesus was the Son of God. Among the people, it is also the Feast of the Blessing of the Apples, the harvest of which begins in August. Eating even ripe apples before this day was considered a sin. On this day, the people break their fast by eating apples which have been blessed in church. The feast is called “Apple Savior” (“Iablochnyi Spas”) or “Second Savior” (“Vtoroi Spas”) and is the second of the three harvest feasts. The other two holidays are the Feast of the Seven Holy Maccabean Martyrs and Their Mother Solomonia and Their Teacher Eleazar (Sem’ sviatykh muchennikov makkaveev: Avim, Antonin, Guriy, Eleazar, Evsenon, Adim i Markell, mat’ ikh Solomoniia i uchete!’ ikh Eleazar), called by the people “Honey Savior” (“Medovyi Spas”) or “First Savior” (“Pervyi Spas”) (1/13 August); and the Feast of the Savior Not Made by Human Hands (Spas nerukotvornyi), called by the people “Nut Savior” (“Orekhovyi Spas”) or “Third Savior” (“Tret’iy Spas”) (16/28 August) (Mikhailov, Pravoslavnaiia kuzhnia, pp. 141–144; Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, pp. 21–22; Polina Rozhnova, Radonitsa Russkii narodnyi kalendar’ [Radonitsa A Russian Folk Calendar] [Moscow: Druzhba narodov, 1997], pp. 104, 106, 108; V. Sokolovskii, Vremena goda Prazdniki, zhitiiia, primety, obychai, molitvoslov [The Seasons of the Year: Feast Days, Saints’ Lives, Distinguishing Features, Customs and Prayers]. Rostov-na-Donu: Kniga, 1995], pp. 194–196, 200–201, 207–208). Radonitsa, or Radunitsa, was the religious custom of remembering the dead on their graves in the week after Easter.
479. There was “to be a great meeting held in London, about the middle of August, of those who are favourable to the formation of an Evangelical Alliance” (The Free Church Magazine 32 (August 1846): p. 241). “As soon as [Rev. Baird] had sufficiently recovered his health, he started for the south, in company with the American friends who had joined him previously to his departure from London” (Baird, Life of Robert Baird, p. 222). Baird traveled to Warsaw, Berlin, Prague, and Hamburg, arriving in London on 14 August 1846 (Baird, , pp. 222–226). His conversations in those cities included the subject of the temperance movement. Henry Baird’s life of his father, however, contains no material about - temperance discussions in the chapter about the London conference on the Evangelical Alliance Movement held in August 1846 (Baird, pp. 227–235).

480. Caroline Frances Law (7/19 August 1824 – 24 November 1897) and Richard Miller (27 July 1818 – 12 January 1890) were married on 5/17 August 1846 at the English Church, R.W. Blackmore, Officiating Minister (PREC S'TP, no. 5634, p. 339).
481. The “next day” was Tuesday, 6/18 August 1846. As wedding cake was a fruit cake, the slice would last until Deborah Whistler returned home.
482. The “next evening” must refer to the evening of Wednesday, 19 August 1846, as Anna Whistler, the children, and Mary Brennan went to Alexandrofsky on Tuesday, 18 August.
483. The Catherine Palace (see Image 385) was built by order of Peter the Great. Empress Elizaveta Petrovna (see Image 413), the daughter of Peter the Great and Catherine I (see Images 411–412), was responsible for the transformation and expansion of the palace and its gilding and ornamentation.
484. The gates nearest the New (Alexander) Palace (see Images 388, 447) were the gates by the White Tower (Petrov, Pushkin: Dvortsy i parki, map between pp. 60–61).
485. Not far from the Armory path, behind a low iron picket fence, in a grove of trees, stood a marble monument to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (see Images 454–455). It was erected in 1845 and executed by the master of marble monuments, Paolo Catozzi (Pavel Ivanovich) (c. 1800 – after 1868), from a design by Andrei Ivanovich Shtakenshneider (1802–1865), Nicholas I's favorite architect. The marble statue was the work of Giovanni Vitali (Ivan Petrovich) (1794–1855), professor of sculpture at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. The statue stood in a small open marble pavilion, in front of which were several steps leading up to a platform of Serdobol granite (gray) with benches of the same granite and a parapet for flowers, its four corners decorated with urns made of dark sionite. On the pediment of the pavilion was the inscription in Old Church Slavonic: “Lord, Thy will be done.” Within the pavilion on one side wall were set down the Beatitudes (Matthew 5:3–11); on the other, Christ's words: “Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light” (Matthew 11: 29–30). These inside walls were decorated with Byzantine ornamentation. The word “Parnetic,” which Anna Whistler uses, is the Russian word for “monument,” spelled “pamiatnik” and pronounced “pah’mitnyeeek.” The resemblance of the statue to the Grand Duchess was striking; the profile in particular was said to be identical (RGIA: Fond 485, op. 3, d. 656. Tsarskoe Selo. Aleksandrovskaia park. Plan, fasady i razrez Pamiatnika vel. kn. Aleksandre Nikolaevne. Arkh. Shtakensneider A.I. 1844 g. [Tsarskoe Selo. Alexander Park. Plan, façades and cross section of the monument to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. Architect A.I. Shtakensneider 1844]; Stolpianskii, Petergofskaiia pershppektiva, p. 47; Vil’chkovskii, Tsarskoe Selo, p. 191; “Iz vospominanii Baronessy M.P. Frederiks” [“From the Memoirs of Baroness M.P. Frederiks”], Istoricheskii vestnik [The Historical Harbinger] (1898): p. 87). For a comparison with the monument to Princess Charlotte at Windsor, see Image 456, in which an angel, not Charlotte herself, holds the deceased infant.

486. Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) had the small house built near the marble monument to his daughter in 1845 (see Image 457). Built by the architect D. Ye. Yefimov, according to a drawing by Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, it consisted of two rooms with planed log walls and two open terraces with birch log pillars, and was covered with a thatched roof. It was built on the edge of the pond at the spot where Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna used to feed the tame swans in the evening. When the little wooden house for a guard was built across the road is not clear (Vil’chkovskii, Tsarskoe Selo, pp. 191–192; Frederiks, “Iz vospominanii,” pp. 86–87).

An inventory exists for 1860, stating that one terrace had a table and armchairs made of ash, some mats, and a spittoon. The other had a folding table made of ash, simple wooden furniture painted brown (couch, chairs, armchairs with and without cushions, footstools), and a spittoon. The first room had two curtained windows, a table, chairs, and a cupboard of ash; a tray, decanter, and drinking glass; and a portable toilet. The second room had two curtained windows, white birch furniture (couch and chairs, Voltaire chair, desk, small table, footstool), and a spittoon. There were also two cupboards in the hut (RGIA: Fond 469. op. 15, d. 405. Opis’ imushchestva domika v Tsarskosel’skom parke u pamiatnika vel. kn. Aleksandry Nikolaevny. 1860 g. [Inventory of the furnishings of the little house in the Tsarskoe Selo park near the monument to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. 1860]). It is not possible to say whether this is the same furniture that was there in the 1840s. After his daughter's death, Nicholas I would often come sit here in the evening in a big leather armchair which, legend has it, was one of some pieces brought here from her room (the others were a leather couch and a desk). Everything else – i.e., the garden-type furniture made of ash – Vil'chkovskii wrote in 1911, was made by the German furniture firm of Heinrich Gambs (1765–1831) in 1845. His firm supplied furniture to the Court from 1809 or 1810 until 1848 (Dm. Ivanov, “Gambsova mebel” [“Furniture by Gambs”], Sredi kollektionerov [Among Collectors] 5–6 [May–June 1922]: p. 30).

In her memoirs, Baroness Frederiks said that Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna wanted to make a surprise for her parents when she was ill and ordered a little rustic wooden house to be built on one of the small islands in the park, where she frequently spent time with her mother, for whom she intended it as a kind of remembrance of herself when she should leave her family and country with her husband. But the surprise was not ready until after her death. In the house hung a small watercolor portrait of her with her own words inscribed: “Je sais que le plus grand plaisir de papa c'est d'en faire à maman!” (Frederiks, “Iz vospominanii,” pp. 86–87; see also Son innosti, pp. 163–164).

487. Anna Whistler and her family visited the oratory in the New (Alexander) Palace on 7/19 August 1846 (see Images 388, 447). It, too, was built by D. Ye. Yefimov. In creating the oratory, the empress's dressing room, bedroom, dining room, and large and small studies were reorganized as to function: e.g., the dining room became the bedroom, the bedroom became the dining room, the small study became the dressing room. That area of the large study in which Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna had died was made into a separate room, which became the oratory (see Image 452). The measurements of what is referred to in archival documents as “the little room” were approximately eight arshins long, four wide, and five high. In 1845, the walls and vaulted ceiling were decorated with ornamentation on a gilded background in the spirit of that in the oratory of Tsar Aleksei Mikhailovich (father of Peter the Great) in the Kremlin chambers. The ornamentation was based on a drawing executed by Academician Fyodor Grigorievich Solntsev (1801–1892). On the walls, interspersed with the ornamentation, were four icons: on the back wall saints Olga and Maria, and on the left wall Nicholas of Myra and Tsaritsa Aleksandra. In the center of the ceiling was depicted the God of Sabaoth. Other figures on the ceiling were the four Evangelists; the apostles Peter and Paul; the great martyr St. Catherine; the sainted Prince Vladimir; the sainted Emperor Constantine and his wife, St. Helena; Michael the Archangel; and St. Nikolai Kochanov of Novgorod. The doors were of mahogany and the bay of gilded brass slabs. On the walls were two glass-covered cases of gilded lindenwood with columns interwoven with ornamentation. In these cases were icons belonging to the deceased Grand Duchess, including wedding icons from 1844 and others from 1825 celebrating her birth. Among the icons were several in which the Virgin is adorned with a diamond tiara. There was also a lectern of ash, a partition (stanok) made of walnut, and steps covered with a raspberry-colored fleecy woollen cloth like velvet (trǐp), all made by Gambis when the oratory was built. On the right wall hung Karl Pavlovich Briullov's (1799–1852) St. Alexandra Ascending into Heaven (Sviataia Aleksandra, voznosiashechaiaasia na nebo), executed in 1845 (see Image 453). James Whistler considered it “the most interesting of all the works of art around us,” because he probably knew Briullov, who was the mentor of his drawing teacher, Koritskii (see Koritskii in Appendix E and Images 167–170). Commissioned by the officers of the Preobrazhenskii Regiment for their regimental church, it was presented to Nicholas I and placed in the oratory. In the painting, the Grand Duchess's face is depicted as the face of the holy martyr Tsaritsa Aleksandra (Frederiks, “Iz vospominanii,” p. 86). In her monumental monograph on Briullov, Ėsfir Atsarkina says of this painting:

Briullov used an already-existing image of the Grand Duchess as his model, viewing his own work as a distinctive portrait. He intended at first to paint the figure full-length but later changed the composition. In the picture can be seen a reflection of that same inspiration that seized Briullov when he was painting the interior of St. Isaac's Cathedral. In the finish of its execution and the fineness of the drawing this work is on a level with his well-known works. The masterful rendering of the texture of the ermine-trimmed purple mantle, the gilt brocade dress and the jewels achieves the ultimate in perfection. The picture attracts the viewer as well by the loftiness of aspect, and the keen expectancy of the face and hands, qualities that are a distinguishing feature of Briullov's best female portraits. (Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 198–199).

St. Alexandra's head is adorned with a diadem and an angel in the lower left corner supports her mantle as she ascends to Heaven.

The gold and silver candlestick standing in front of the painting (see Image 452) was presented by the officers of the Cuirassier Regiment. As late as 1928, an inventory made of the furnishings in the oratory indicated that it was still standing before the painting. According to Baroness Frederiks, after their daughter's death her parents never again gave a ball or held any celebration in the New (Alexander) Palace (Frederiks, "Iz vospominanii," p. 86). Information for this note has also been taken from RGIA: Fond 487, op. 5, d. 1897. O peredelke byvshego Kabineta Ee Velichestva v Novom Dvortse [Concerning the remodelling of her Majesty's Study in the New Palace]; Fond 487, op.5, d. 1902. Po ustroistvu mol'e'noi komnaty v Novom Dvortse 11 Avgusta 1844 g. – 20 Sentiabria 1848 g. [Concerning the setting up of the Oratory in the New Palace 11 August 1844 – 20 September 1848]; Fond 487, op. 5, d. 1911. O naznachennykh peredelkakh i peremenakh v razmeshchenii komnat Gosudarini Imperatritsy v Tsarskosel'skom Novom Dvortse. 3 Aprelia 1845 g. – 23 Aprelia 1846 g. [Concerning the scheduled remodelling and changes in location of the rooms of Her Imperial Majesty in the New Palace at Tsarskoe Selo 3 April 1845 – 23 April 1846]; Fond 485, op. 3, d. 626. Tsarskoe Selo. Plany 1 ètazha i bel'ètazha Aleksandrovsкого dvortsa. 1<sup>ia</sup> pol. XIX v. [Tsarskoe Selo. Plans of the ground floor and the first floor of the Alexander Palace. 1st half of the XIX century]; Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 198, 201, 360–361, 507; and V.I. Iakovlev, Aleksandrovskaïi dvorets-muzei v Detskom sele. Ubranstvo (vmesto kataloga) [The Alexander Palace-Museum in Detskoe Selo. Furnishings (in lieu of a catalogue)], Izdanie ob"edineniia detskosel'skikh i pavlovskogo dvortsov-muzeev [A publication of the combined palaces – museums of Detskoe Selo and Pavlovsk], 1928, pp. 166–168).

488. "I clearly saw how much she was loved when, for a couple of days, she seemed somewhat better, for there was then a great show of joy both at the castle and in St. Petersburg" (Bang, Lins Minder, p. 301).
489. Thursday, 27 August 846, was the birthday of Charles Donald Whistler, who had died on route to Russia. He would have been five years old. Saturday, 29 August 1846, was the first birthday of John Bouttatz Whistler.
490. Major Whistler, who had left on an inspection trip with Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243) on 17 August, was home again by 5 September.

491. It has not been possible to locate any of these letters from Deborah Whistler, who was traveling with Katherine Prince of Lowell, Massachusetts.
492. The foundation stone of the monument in Edinburgh to Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832) was laid in 1840 on Scott’s birthday, 15 August. Its completion was celebrated on 15 August 1846 (John Gibson Lockhart, Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Bart., 10 vols. [Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin; Cambridge, MA: Riverside, 1901, vol. 10, p. 187]. A large number of British residents in St. Petersburg contributed to the erection of the monument (Contributions at St. Petersburg in aid of the fund now raised (1832) in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe for erecting a monument at Edinburgh to the memory of the late Sir Walter Scott, Edinburgh Central Library: YPR 5339).
493. “Loch Lomond [is] the largest of the Scottish lakes, lying across the southern edge of the Highlands. It forms part of the boundary between the council area of Stirling and the council area of Argyll and Bute . . . [It] extends about 24 miles (39 km), widening south in the shape of a triangle. Although its surface is only 23 feet (7 metres) above sea level, its glacially excavated floor reaches a depth of 623 feet (190 metres). It drains by the short River Leven into the River Clyde estuary at Dumbarton. The scenery ranges from rugged glaciated mountains with elevations above 3,000 feet (900 metres) in the north to softer hills and islands in the south” (Encyclopaedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Loch Lomond,” accessed 5 October 2021, <https://www.britannica.com/place/Loch-Lomond>).
494. The letters were received on Friday, 11 September 1846. It has not been possible to locate any of them.
495. Anna Whistler was informed by one of her correspondents of the state of health of her sister-in-law Maria (Cammann) McNeill, who was chronically ill.
496. The cousin killed in a duel was Archibald McDiarmid (15 August 1799 – 18 July 1846) (roll 4607, M43, AAA: JMcNW). Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (My Mother) informed Anna Whistler of his death.
497. Although James never dueled, he engaged in other reprehensible physical acts, based on “notions of false honor or courage,” such as knocking his brother-in-law Frances Seymour Haden through a plate glass window and beating up a black passenger on a ship’s passage from Venezuela. The battle of words with Ruskin, resulting in Whistler's subsequent bankruptcy, could be viewed as an intellectual facet of such physical actions.

498. 1 Corinthians 6:20: "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Also, 1 Corinthians 7:23.
499. Jesus is speaking to his disciples at the Last Supper. John 14:15: "If ye love me, keep my commandments."
500. "Not lost but gone before" is based on 1 Thessalonians 4:14: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." This is the title of a song published in R.A. Smith's Edinburgh Harmony in 1829, said to be anonymous (The Ladies' Repository: A Monthly Periodical, Devoted to Literature and Religion 24 (1864): p. 315). The final line of each of the six quatrains in the song concludes with the words "not lost – but gone before."
501. Parthenia Pardoe Babcock (London, England 12 January 1817 – Brooklyn, NY 6 February 1911; see Image 57), daughter of Benjamin Franklin and Maria (Eells) Babcock, married on 8 September 1841 William R. Babcock (Brooklyn, NY c. 1813 – 19 October 1862) (Anna Chesebrough Wildey, Genealogy of the Descendants of William Chesebrough of Boston [New York: T.A. Wright, 1903], pp. 212, 215, 389). Their daughter, also Parthenia (Stonington, CT 1844 – Stonington, CT 13 July 1846), is the little girl Anna Whistler refers to. Her remains were transferred to the Babcock family plot in Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn, New York, in 1873.
502. Matthew 19:14: "But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."
503. The "poor German" died on Friday, 28 August 1846. There is no corresponding date of death in Böhm's Wolkowo lutherischer Friedhof in St. Petersburg: Handbuch und Friedhofsführer Deutsch und Russisch [Volkov Lutheran Cemetery in St. Petersburg: Handbook and German and Russian Cemetery Guide] (St. Petersburg: Russko-Baltiiskii informatsionnyi tsentr BLITS, 1998) that could identify him. The "little girls" Miss Funck took with her to the German's funeral were probably Mary and Alice Handisides.
504. Anna Whistler spent Saturday, 5 September 1846, at the dacha of William Clarke and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Images 265–266). Major Whistler and James had dinner with Colonel

- Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (see Image 247) and then went to the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225) .
505. The guests at the Gellibrands' dacha walked two versts to the estate of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (see Image 302), located on the thirteenth verst of the Peterhof Road, at the turnoff for Krasnoe Selo. The estate, called Ligovo, was acquired by the Count in 1840 and enlarged in 1844 through his purchase of the bordering dachas of the English merchant N.A. Blando and of Privy Councillor M.P. Pozin. In 1845, the estate amounted to 2,700 desiatinas of land (1 d. = 2.7 acres), consisting of farmland, meadows, woods, marsh, buildings, gardens, conservatories, and a lake. The Count ran a model farm on his property. The main focus in planting was oats, hay, and potatoes. The dairy was new; in 1845, it had not yet been completed. Surplus milk was sold in the city. The buildings were constructed of brick made at Ligovo's own factory, which was famous in the surrounding countryside. The roofs covering the majority of the farm buildings were made of a paper that was cheaper and lighter than iron, and very strong. The maintenance of horses was considered to be at such a level of perfection that horse connoisseurs came there to observe the procedures used. The Ligovo peasants numbered more than three hundred ("Vzgliad na myzu Ligovo" ["A Look at Ligovo Farm"], in Trudy Imperatorskogo vol'nogo ekonomicheskogo obshchestva za 1845 god. [Works of the Imperial Free Economic Society for 1845], pt. 2 [St. Petersburg: Karl Krai, 1845], pp. 58–67; see also Gorbatenko, Petergofskaiia doroga, p. 151–152, 156–160).
506. The wife of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (9/21 March 1802 – 17/29 February 1855) was Countess Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Kusheleva (6/18 December 1811 – 1874), the third of the four daughters of Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (1778–1859) and Adelaida Petrovna (born Countess Apraksina) Vasil'chikova (d. 1851) (RGIA: Fond 1162, op. 6. d. 72. O sluzhbe Chlena Gos. Soveta Ober-Egermeistera, Generala ot Kavalerii Dmitriia Vasilievicha Vasil'chikova 1 iuilia 1846 g. – 1 dek. 1859 g. [Concerning the service record of Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov, Member of the State Council, Master of the Hunt, General of Cavalry 1 July 1846 – 1 Dec. 1859 (OS)]. This information comes from his service record for 1850. See Stroganov, Vasil'chikov, Kushelev in Appendix E and Images 302–304.

507. Tat'iana Dmitrievna Vasil'chikova (19 March 1823 – 1880; see Image 301), the youngest of the four daughters of Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (RGIA: Fond 1162, op. 6, d. 72 [see Note 506 above for document title]), was the fiancée of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (see Image 299), whom Anna Whistler, James, and Willie had met on the lighter to St. Petersburg in 1843.
508. It has not been possible to determine the location of the estate of General Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov.
509. Mary (Bealey) Ellerby (M<sup>ES</sup> E) told Anna Whistler the history of the adopted girl. She was christened Maria Bogdanova, was about five years and seven months at this time, and was the only child of the childless Count & Countess Kushelev (see Images 302–303). According to a certificate issued on 17 January 1845 by the St. Petersburg Temporary Board of Decorum, Major General Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev expressed the wish to take it upon himself to bring up a baby of the female sex that had been abandoned to his care by a person or persons unknown on 6 January 1841 and christened Maria, having as his intention that when this foundling should reach maturity she could, on the basis of articles 932 and 1082 of volume 9, concerning estates, be registered according to his choice for some kind of life in the taxpaying class (RGIA: Fond 1343, op. 23, d. 11265. O vnesenii gerba grafa Kusheleva [Concerning the entering [into the list] of the coat-of-arms of Count Kushelev], fols. 39 r and v). In his last will and testament, dated 6 April (OS) 1853, Count Kushelev, stating that he was childless, asked his nephews, who were his heirs, to honor his wish that Maria receive forty thousand silver rubles, which were to be given to his wife for safekeeping. His heirs agreed to carry out his wishes. In the event that his wife should die at the same time as himself, he willed to Maria “our ward, and my godchild,” property that he was otherwise leaving to his wife: two houses with all effects and the farm Ligovo. Ligovo could be sold and the money deposited in the bank for safekeeping until Maria’s marriage. She was also to receive all capital and monies that were in the form of securities, except for a portion that was to go to Kushelev’s steward (RGIA: Fond 971, op. 1, d. 155. Dokumenty po razdelu imenii posle smerti gr. Gr. Gr. Kusheleva mezhdu ego plemiannikami gr. Kushelevymi – Bezborodko i ego zhenoi gr. Ek. Dm. Kushelevoi: ... 1816 – 26 fev. 1856. Kopii i podlinniki [Documents concerning the division of Count Gr. Gr. Kushelev’s estates after his death among his nephews, the counts Kushelev-Bezborodko, and his wife, Countess Ek. Dm. Kusheleva .. . 1816 – 26 Feb. 1856 (OS) Copies and originals], fols. 8r and v, 10 r and v, 11r, 18r, 50r. On 14 November 1856 (OS), the Minister of Justice sent a proposal to the governing Senate to the effect that Emperor Aleksandr Nikolaevich had granted the petition of Count Kushelev’s widow that her ward, Maria Grigorievna Bogdanova, be permitted to take the name of Kushelev, with the right to possess those inhabited estates which might be willed to her by the Countess Kusheleva. Maria Bogdanova was permitted to take the name Kushelev with full noble privileges but without noble title. This royal permission granted her was not, however, to serve as a precedent (RGIA: Fond 1343, op. 23, d. 11265, fol. 38r [see above for document title]).

510. Miss Swan, governess, is listed in the BRBC STP 1845 as “residing at Count Koucheleffs” (fol. 55). Her given name was probably Fanny (entry of baptism in 1857 for a grandchild of R.W. McLothlin, PREC STP, no. 6921). There was also a Mrs. Willis, widow, governess, listed as “residing at Koucheleffs Palace Quay” (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 63). The Kushelev mansion was on the corner of Palace Square (Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn’ Peterburga, p. 49).
511. Count Kushelev’s Scottish steward was Richard Watson McLothlin (c. 1794 – 14/26 May 1861). The wife referred to here is his second wife, Mary Ann Munden, spinster (1804 – 20 October / 1 November 1860), whom he married on 17/29 July 1827 in St. Petersburg. He was said in 1845 to have already been Count Kushelev’s steward for twenty-five years. The Russians called him Zakhar Zakharovich Maklotlin. Although he successfully oversaw the entire estate, his area of expertise was horsebreeding. The already well-off McLothlins were to profit even more on Count Kushelev’s death. In his last will and testament, dated 6 April (OS) 1853, Count Kushelev said his last wish was that his heirs should give one hundred thousand silver rubles to Maklotlin, “who has served me for thirty years and whom I respect and love as a friend.” His heirs agreed to carry out his wish. In the event that Count Kushelev’s wife should die at the same time as himself, he asked his heirs to take from the capital and monies that were in the form of securities and were to go to Maria Bogdanova the sum of an additional one hundred thousand silver rubles for Maklotlin (RGIA: Fond 971, op. 1, d. 155, fols. 10 r and v [see Note 509 above for document title]). It must be said, however, that although Count Kushelev’s heirs adhered to their uncle's wishes concerning Maklotlin, Maria Grigorievna Kusheleva, and a sum of ten thousand silver rubles he asked to be distributed to servants and to the poor, they did not offer the Countess Kusheleva a share that satisfied her. She started a suit against them in June 1855, even appealing to Alexander II, but ultimately the matter was settled within the family in February 1856 (RGIA: Fond 971, op. 1, d. 155, fols. 10 r and v [see Note 509 above for document title]). See Stroganov, Vasil'chikov, Kushelev in Appendix E.

512. Saturday was 19 September 1846. Anna Whistler or someone else corrected the date of this entry, changing it from what looks like 29 to 20. The information recorded in the entry, however, strongly supports the interpretation that she was writing it on Saturday, 26 September. If this is true, then her comment that the boys were placed in Monsieur Jourdan's school "Monday before last" is not an error, as that Monday would have been September 14. The information that she drove out to the Field of Mars their first week of school, hoping to get a glimpse of them, also makes sense, as does the information about their first Saturday at home, which was 19 September. Moreover, she says she is recording the events of the last fortnight, which if calculated from 19 September does not make sense, but if calculated from 26 September, does.

Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday Sept 20th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Abraham Priest Gibson, American consul in St. Petersburg (Our Consul Mr. Gibson); George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes (Mr Prince); Pyotr, the Whistlers' coachman (our coachman); Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (Aunt Alicias room); William Henry Harrison, son of Joseph Harrison Jr. of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Henry Harrison, Henry); and James and Willie's former tutor (Mons. Lamartine).

513. Annie Maria, daughter of Matthew and Ann Elizabeth (Main) Anderson, was born on 24 March / 5 April 1845, and baptized on 16/28 May 1845 by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (PREC STP, no. 5507).
514. I was not able to find a report on the school for 1846. In his report for the second half of 1847 on private educational institutions in St. Petersburg under his supervision, the inspector, Collegiate Councilor (sixth grade) Aleksandr Del', gave the following data about Monsieur Jean Jourdan (Ivan Zhurdan) and his school: he was a Court Councilor (seventh grade) and Cavalier, a French citizen, a Roman Catholic, and had been issued a certificate (no. 375) on 1/13 May 1826 to establish a boarding school for boys. According to the answers given to the questions on the official form, there were no deviations from the program as proposed to the authorities when establishing the school. The subjects, all successfully taught, were Orthodox religion, Roman Catholic religion, Protestant-Lutheran religion, history, geography, mathematics, Russian, French, German, drawing, dancing, and fencing, and all the teachers were certified to teach. The annual fees for full board were 450–600 silver rubles, for half-board 350 silver rubles. The fulfillment of Christian obligations was observed; the premises were extremely respectable; cleanliness, neatness, and discipline were in general very well observed. The pupils were maintained in a manner that corresponded to the fees paid for them, and the institution had all the necessary school equipment (RGIA: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5188. S Vedomostiami o chastnykh pansionakh i shkolakh v Sanktpeterburge za 2-uiu polovinu 1847 g. 3 Ian. 1848 – 27 Ian. 1848. [With Information about private boarding schools and private schools in St. Petersburg for the second half of 1847. 3 January 1848 – 27 January 1848 (OS)], fol. 80 r). When James and Willie attended the school there were fifty pupils (Anna Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg September 24, 1846, NYPL: Swift Papers). It was considered a first-class boarding school, equivalent to a Russian “gimnazium” (RGIA: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 4196. Delo po donesenii Direktora Uchilishch S. -Peterburgskoi Gubernii o Sanktpeterburgskikh chastnykh pansionakh i shkolakh 3 Okt. 1826 – 18 Noiabr. 182[6] [File containing the report of the Director of Schools of St. Petersburg Province about private boarding schools and private schools in St. Petersburg 30 Oct. 1826 – 18 Nov. 182 [6], fol. 2v); see also Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 310–311).

In his Memoirs, the artist P.P. Sokolov, who had spent four years at Jourdan’s school, said of it: “This educational institution was considered first-class and the teachers were all highly thought of. Mons. Jourdan, his wife and both daughters, who helped him, were people with an extremely solid education and beautiful upbringing. For this reason Petersburg high society eagerly consigned their children to his care” (P.P. Sokolov, Vospominaniia [Memoirs], ed. E. Gollerbakh [Leningrad: Komitet popularizatsii khudozhestvennykh izdaniĭ, 1930], pp. 57–58).

515. According to the newspaper, Major Whistler left St. Petersburg on Tuesday, 3 September [15 September NS] 1846 for Lübeck on the Aleksandra (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 200, Thursday, September 5 [September 17 NS], 1846, p. 884). He therefore placed the boys at Monsieur Jourdan's school on 2/14 September, as is confirmed in a letter of Anna Whistler's of 12/24 September 1846: "he has been gone a week and two days ... they entered [the school] the day before their father left" (Anna Whistler to General J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, Sept. 24, 1846, NYPL: Swift Papers).
516. From the time of his arrival in St. Petersburg in August 1842 until he went to meet Debo in Hamburg in September 1846, Major Whistler had worked without a break (Harden, "Whistler," p. 156).
517. Deborah Whistler had departed St. Petersburg on 16 September 1845; her father left that city on 15 September 1846.
518. The initials p.p.c. on a gentleman's calling card stood for "pour prendre congé." The message meant that Consul Abraham Priest Gibson was announcing his departure from St. Petersburg. When Anna Whistler had arrived in St. Petersburg, he had appeared in person (in propria persona) to welcome her. Anna Whistler seems to have thought that Consul Gibson was leaving Russia permanently. See Gibson in Appendix E and Image 279.
519. The school's cuisine had apparently at first been French. In his Memoirs, the artist P.P. Sokolov, a former pupil, wrote: "I couldn't complain about life at the school; they didn't feed us badly, but for a long time I couldn't get used to French cooking with its sweet sauces and salads. Buckwheat groats, sour cabbage soup and borshch appealed to me far more than these refinements of French gastronomy" (Sokolov, Vospominaniia, pp. 58, 295).
520. Anna Whistler to General J. G. Swift, St. Petersburg, September 24, 1846, NYPL: Swift Papers.
521. Monsieur Jourdan's boarding school was located at this time in the house of Mrs. Afrosimova, a general's wife, at No. 8 on the Moika River in the First Ward of the First Admiralty District. It faced onto the Field of Mars. On the other side of this area for military reviews was the Summer Garden (Pushkarev, Opisanie Sanktpeterburga 1839, pt. 2, pp. 52, 53; Pushkarev, Putevoditel', pp. 86–87). In Nistrem, the house is said to be No. 2 (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 10).

In his Memoirs, the artist P.P. Sokolov, a former pupil, also referred to the fact that “in their free time ... the pupils were taken en masse to the Summer Gardens, where they played and ran to their hearts’ content along the marvelous paths thick with greenery” (Sokolov, Vospominaniia, p. 58).

522. Their first Saturday home was 19 September 1846.
523. The grey trousers and black jackets in which James and Willie appear in the 1847 pastel by Émile François Dessain (1808–1882) are the uniform of Monsieur Jourdan’s school (see Image 27).
524. This is Joseph Harrison Eastwick (2 or 3 December 1834 – 15 February 1917), who was called Hass.
525. The word “he” was omitted after “father.”
526. William Henry Harrison, son of Joseph Harrison Jr. and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (called Henry), also attended Jourdan’s school. His parents were traveling in Europe, and he boarded there. He spent part of the Sunday of this first weekend after the opening of school at the Whistlers’ home.
527. Psalms 42:3: “My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, where is thy God?”
528. Dr. James Rogers, the family physician, called in for consultation the director and chief physician of the Nicholas Children’s Hospital in St. Petersburg, Dr. Johann Friedrich Weisse (Reval 22 February / 4 March 1792 – Reval 5/17 August 1869). He carried out his medical studies in Dorpat from 1811 to 1815. As a student, he worked in the Military Hospital in Riga, caring for the sick. In 1815, he went to Germany, France, and England for four years, for further improvement, and attended the lectures of various doctors, including Goelis, a specialist in children’s diseases. In 1820, he settled in St. Petersburg and was doctor at the prison until 1846. In 1835, he was appointed director of the newly founded Children’s Hospital. He held this post for twenty-five years and turned the Nicholas Children’s Hospital into an exemplary institution. He celebrated his fiftieth anniversary as a doctor in 1865 and retired from his practice, returning to Reval, where he died on 5/17 August 1869 of heart disease. Of note among his published works are: “Über die Diarrhoe entwöhnter Kinder und deren cur durch rohes Fleisch” [“Concerning Diarrhea in Weaned Infants and Their Cure by Means of Raw Meat”], Journ. F. Kinderbeilk. [Journal of Pediatrics] 4 [1845], and “Über die Cholera-Epidemie im Kinderhospital” [“Concerning the Cholera Epidemic in the Children’s Hospital”], Journ. F.

Kinderheilk. 14 [1848] (Biografisches Lexikon der hervorragenden Ärzte aller Zeiten und Völker [Biographical Dictionary of Distinguished Doctors of All Times and Peoples] [Berlin, Germany: Urban and Schwarzenberg, 1934], p. 885).

529. Major Whistler and Deborah returned home on the Vladimir, a recently built 20-passenger iron steamship (Capt. Lt. Krashennikov), which began its run between St. Petersburg and Stettin on 19/31 May 1846 (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 97, Thursday, May 2 [May 14 NS], 1846, pp. 422–423). If the sailing conditions had been favorable, they were supposed to be spending the night of 6–7 October at Cronstadt and would actually arrive in St. Petersburg on the 7th during the day.
530. According to the newspaper, Major Whistler arrived on 25 September [7 October NS] on the Vladimir from Stettin (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 219, Saturday, September 28 [October 10 NS], 1846, p. 966).
531. John Bouttatz Whistler, aged 13 months and 15 days, died on 2/14 October 1846 (PREC STP, no. 5650). Whistler wrote to Maxwell on 6 November 1846 of the baby's death. His letter is not among the Maxwell Papers at the N-YHS. Maxwell responded on 13 December 1846 to Whistler's announcement and apparent request concerning burial of the child's body in the United States as follows:

I need scarcely say to you how deeply grieved I am to hear of the loss of your little one. – I would not, my dear friend, renew your affliction, with whatever consolation my feeble pen, could convey to you or your inestimable lady, upon so sad an event, – nor indeed can I pretend to do so, when you have the solace derived from the Christian fortitude and resignation of M<sup>rs</sup> Whistler. – It is my wish and it shall be my care to perform the mournful duty your friendship has assigned me – I beg you to be perfectly satisfied that all shall be properly conducted. (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, December 13, 1846, N-HYS, Maxwell Papers).

Maxwell performed this “melancholy duty” around the 21st of January 1847 (John S. Maxwell, New York, 22 January 1847, to Colonel C.S. Todd, Shelbyville, Kentucky, C.S. Todd Papers, The Filson Club, Louisville, Kentucky [hereafter, Filson: Todd]). The other topics touched on in Maxwell's letter of 13 December 1846, are the loss of the steamer Atlantic and Whistler's trip to Hamburg

- to meet Deborah and the nostalgia it awoke in Maxwell over his and Whistler's trip in 1842. He also brings to our attention the fact that he has in his possession a pencil drawing of himself by James: "James will have to take my portrait in oil colours some day, if only to compare it with the one he took with his pencil, which is now in my possession" (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, December 13, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). The whereabouts of this drawing are unknown to me.
532. Matthew 24:44: "Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Also Luke 12:20.
533. These lines are from "The Sinless Child," a long narrative poem by "Mrs. Seba Smith," who was Elizabeth Oakes (Prince) Smith (North Yarmouth, ME 12 August 1806 – Hollywood, NC 15 November 1893). The poem was published in the Southern Literary Messenger in March 1842. It brought her "popular and critical acclaim .... In the poem, the unworldly heroine is released from a corrupt world through death. Its publication as the title piece in a collection of her poems in 1843 established [her] reputation."
534. Persons mentioned in the entry for Friday [October] 16th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall (M<sup>r</sup> Ropes); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' physician (my kind physician, doct R, good doct Rogers); Rev. Dr. Edward Law, chaplain of the English Church (Our Pastor); Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old M<sup>rs</sup> Leon); Kirk Boott Whistler, deceased brother of John Bouttatz Whistler (Kirkies); and George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes (George Prince, M<sup>r</sup> Prince).
535. Matthew 25:41: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."
536. "The Funeral Service was performed over the body (previous to its removal to America for interment)," by Rev. Dr. Edward Law on 5/17 October 1846 (PREC STP, no. 5650, p. 341). Because of the harsh climate, marriages, baptisms, and deaths were frequently performed at home (Biber, English Church, p. 72).
537. John Bouttatz Whistler fell ill on 27 September 1846.
538. Deuteronomy 33:25: "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass; and as thy days, so shall thy strength be."
539. The consulting physician called in by Dr. James Rogers was Dr. Johann Friedrich Weisse. The "W" would have been pronounced

- like “V,” but Anna Whistler wrote “F.” See Note 528 above for Weisse’s biography.
540. “Blistering” refers to the practice of applying irritants “to the body in the belief that diseases could be brought out from internal organs to the surface to be dispelled. This was then carried out with a blistering plaster made of fat or wax applied to the skin” (Jen Willetts, “19th Century Medical Terms,” Free Settler or Felon?, accessed 19 September 2017, http://www.jenwilletts.com/19thcentury\_medical\_terms.htm). “The practice ... was performed by deliberately giving the patient a second degree burn and then draining the resulting sore” (“Blistering,” A History of Allopathy, accessed 29 January 2021, <http://naturalhealthperspective.com/tutorials/allopathy.html>).
541. Matthew 19:14: “But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.”
542. Psalms 111:10: “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth for ever.” Proverbs 9:10 opens with the identical statement, but Anna Whistler was adamant about obedience and therefore probably intended Psalms 111:10. Anna Whistler omitted “is” in her quotation.
543. Hebrews 12:29: “For our God is a consuming fire.”
544. 1 Corinthians 15:55–57: “<sup>55</sup> O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? <sup>56</sup> The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. <sup>57</sup> But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.”
545. Persons mentioned in the entry for Thursday evening 29th Oct. who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Rev. Dr. Edward Law, chaplain of the English Church (Our pastor); Mary Elizabeth (Mosley) Law, his wife (M<sup>rs</sup> Law); George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes (George Prince); Thomas Scales Ellerby, pastor of the British and American Chapel (M<sup>r</sup> Ellerby); Mary (Bealey) Ellerby (his dear good wife); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers’ physician (our kind doct); Andrew McCalla Eastwick of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mr. Eastwick); William Hooper Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall (our kind neighbor Mr. Ropes); Helene Funck, Anna Whistler’s friend (Miss Funk); John Randolph Clay, chargé d’affaires of the American Legation (our Ambassador’s interest); the deceased Mary Gent Hirst (Miss Hirst); and the deceased

- Lucy Williston Ann (Grosvenor) Nichols, wife of their Lebanon, Connecticut, pastor, Rev. John Cutler Nichols (M<sup>rs</sup> Nichols). The phrases “all our countrymen from Alexandrofsky” and “our sympathising countrymen at Alexandrofsky” suggest that not only Andrew Eastwick, but American employees of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick were present. Some had made John Bouttatz Whistler’s coffin. The Harrisons were not present because they were traveling at this time.
546. The main German churches in St. Petersburg were the Church of St. Peter on the Nevskii Prospekt between Bol’shaia Koniushennaia and Malaia Koniushennaia streets, the Church of St. Anne between Kirochnaia and Furshtatskaia streets, and the Church of St. Catherine on Vasilievskii Island along the First Line on Bol’shoi Prospekt (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, pp. 222–223; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 3, pp. 241–242, 243–246, 254–255; Shul’ts, Kbramy Sankt-Peterburga, pp. 248–255). None of the cited sources refers to a new organ for any of these churches or, indeed, any of the other German churches of St. Petersburg in 1846. It is known that organ concerts were given in the Church of St. Peter (Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn’ Peterburga, p. 69).
547. The sympathizing family were Archibald Mirrielees (Aberdeen 7 September 1797 – London 13 February 1877) and his third wife, Jane (Muir) Mirrielees (Greenock 21 December 1810 – 3 September 1875) (see Images 268–269). Also present could have been Sarah Jane Mirrielees (b. 1830), daughter of Archibald Mirrielees and his first wife, Sarah Newbold (Spurr) Mirrielees (d. 1835). Her brother, William (b. 1828 or 1829), also the son of Archibald and Sarah Newbold (Spurr) Mirrielees, was away at university in Scotland.
548. Ecclesiastes 7:2: “It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.”
549. Galatians 6:9: “And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.”
550. The family attended two church services on Sunday, 6/18 October 1846.
551. “Last Saturday” was 12/24 October 1846.
552. Anna Whistler to Gen. J. G. Swift, St. Petersburg, Sept. 24, 1846, NYPL: Swift Papers.

553. The English bookstore, or Kirton's, had moved from the house of Liprandi on Galernaia Street to the house of Bremme on the corner of New-Isaac Street next to the Horse Guard Indoor Riding Range (Konnogvardeiskii manežh), thus requiring the Whistlers to walk several blocks, from the First Ward of the First Admiralty District to its Third Ward (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 30; Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 295).
554. On Saturday, 31 October 1846, Anna Whistler wrote a letter to Eliza (Lamb) Maingay (see Image 259), which her son, William Bonamy Maingay (see Image 260), would take to England.
555. It has not been possible to locate the letter sent from Ireland by Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226), traveling with his wife, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (see Image 227). They had left their baby, Alicia McNeill Harrison, with Anna Whistler, her godmother.
556. It has not been possible to locate the letter from Rev. John Cutler Nichols of Lebanon, Connecticut.
557. It has not been possible to locate the source of "Let power be given – to draw – not them to Earth but us to Heaven." I am inclined to think Rev. Nichols himself was the author.
558. Several hymns in The Springfield Collection of Hymns for Sacred Worship that are based on Psalm 23 contain references to "living water gently flows" (Hymn 82), "Refreshing water flows" (Hymn 83), "peaceful rivers, soft and slow" (Hymn 84), and "living waters gently pass" (Hymn 85) (William Bourne Oliver Peabody, The Springfield Collection of Hymns for Sacred Worship [Springfield, MA: Samuel Bowles; Boston: Leonard C. Bowles, 1835]).
559. It has not been possible to identify Mr. Bainbridge, despite attempts made to locate appropriate documents at the India Office Library in London.
560. The court choir rehearsal took place on Friday, 30 October 1846. Anna Whistler probably meant to write "court singers."
561. The second Sunday after Anna Whistler lost John Bouttatz Whistler was 25 October 1846. She seems to be referring to "Awake my soul and with the sun," by Thomas Ken, when she speaks of the morning hymn.
562. Persons mentioned in the entry for [Saturday] November 14th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Maria (Cammann) McNeill, Anna Whistler's sister-in-law (Sister Maria's health); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (Mrs Gellibrand); Elizabeth Hannah Ropes, sister of Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand

(Elizabeth Ropes); George William Whistler, Deborah Delano Whistler, James Abbott Whistler, and William McNeill Whistler (four darling children); Joseph Swift Whistler, Kirk Boott Whistler, Charles Donald Whistler, and John Bouttatz Whistler (four whom God took early); and Andrew McCalla Eastwick of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (Mr Eastwick).

563. This entry suggests that Major Whistler left on 26 October / 7 November 1846 to meet Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' in Moscow.
564. Chudovo was the town in which Colonel P.P. Mel'nikov (see Image 247), head of the Northern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, lived. It is pronounced “Choo'duhvuh.”
565. Captain William George Williams (South Carolina 1 January 1801 – Monterrey, Mexico 23 September 1846), USMA Class of 1824, was promoted to second lieutenant 7th Infantry on graduation day. He served on topographical duty from 24 July 1824 to 28 January 1834, surveying, among other places, the site for a fort on Pea Patch Island, Delaware River, in 1831; the site of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara in 1835–1836; and the site of the Charleston, South Carolina, and Cincinnati, Ohio, projected railroad, 1836–1837. Promoted to captain in the Corps of Topographical Engineers on 7 July 1838, he was in charge of the construction of harbor works on Lake Erie, 1838–1843, and superintendent of survey both of the Northwestern Lakes, 1841–1846, and of the Boundary between Michigan and Wisconsin, 1845–1846. He was appointed chief topographical engineer of the Army commanded by Major-General Zachary Taylor (see Image 51) in the War with Mexico, 6 July to 21 September 1846, when he was mortally wounded in Monterrey. He died of his wounds on 23 September 1846, in a Mexican hospital. “His last message to his friends was: ‘I fell in front of the column’. His remains were recovered under the direction of a committee of the citizens of Buffalo [New York] and were buried with Military Honors on March 9, 1847.” Burial was in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Buffalo, New York. The memorial also records information about his wife, America Pinckney (Peter) Williams (1803–1842), great-granddaughter of Martha (Custis) Washington (Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, pp. 330–331; Adrian George Traas, From the Golden Gate to Mexico City: The U.S. Army Topographical Engineers in the Mexican War, 1846–1848 [Washington, DC: Office of History, Corps of Engineers and Center of Military History,

- U.S. Army, 1993], p. 135; Memorial ID 15571201, findagrave.com).
566. It has not been possible to locate George William Whistler's letter.
567. Colonel William Whistler (Hagerstown, MD 1782 – Northwest Territories 4 December 1863), U.S. Army, was the eldest child of Major John and Ann (Bishop) Whistler and brother of Major George Washington Whistler. "Garland" was Joseph Nelson Garland Whistler (Green Bay, WI 19 October 1822 – Florida 20 April 1899), USMA Class of 1846, U.S. Army, son of Colonel William Whistler and Mary Julia (Fearson) Whistler (1787–1878). Upon graduation from West Point, J.N.G. Whistler entered the army as brevet second lieutenant and married. During the War with Mexico, he took part in the siege of Vera Cruz (National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, vol. 9, p. 48). He was made a brevet first lieutenant in August 1847 for gallantry and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, Mexico (Frances B. Heitman, Historical Register and Dictionary of the U.S. Army, 2 vols. [Washington, DC: Government Printing Office, 1903], vol. 1, p. 1026). See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E and Images 34–35.
568. The wife of J.N.G. Whistler was Eliza Cobham (Hall) Whistler (16 April 1819 – 14 August 1887).
569. The steamship Great Western (Capt. B.R. Mathews) left Liverpool for New York at 4 p.m. on Saturday, 12 September 1846, carrying 211 persons, of whom 126 were passengers. On Saturday, 19 September, a violent storm came up, during which the extent of the destruction caused to the ship left the passengers with no hope. Around 9 p.m. on Sunday, "Rev. M. Balch, at the request of several passengers, administered the Holy Communion in the cabin, to upward of sixty persons – many of whom received it there for the first time in their lives." The storm reached its climax on Monday, the 21st, and abated around noon. On Tuesday morning, the passengers "assembled in the cabin to render an act of common prayer and thanksgiving." At the conclusion of the service, it was resolved that a suitable monetary testimonial be made "to the captain, officers, and crew" and that "The Great Western Fund" be set up "for the relief of the families of those whose heads and supporters [were] lost at sea" (New York Evening Post, October 1, 1846; supplement to The Times [London], October 19, 1846, pp. 8–9). The casualties must have occurred among the crew, as the list of "passengers arrived" was said to

- number 126, i.e., the same as the number that started out (New York Tribune, October 1, 1846). The Whistlers' friends, the Crufts, and members of their party are listed as: "Mr. W.S. Cruft and lady, Miss A. Cruft, Mr. J. Cruft, and Miss Fitch" (New-York Herald, September 30, 1846; New York Tribune, October 1, 1846). Anna Whistler's source of information about the Great Western seems to have been George William Whistler's letter.
570. On 3 November 1846, the Whistlers celebrated their fifteenth wedding anniversary. For the announcement of their marriage in 1831, see Brooklyn Star, November 9, 1931 (Card Index for the Brooklyn Star, Brooklyn Historical Society).
571. Joseph Harrison Jr. of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (the Harrisons, M<sup>rs</sup> H) (see Images 226–227) arrived on Wednesday, 4 November 1846. They spent the day with their children, William Henry and Alicia McNeill, at the Whistler home.
572. Deuteronomy 33:25: "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass; and as thy days, so shall thy strength be."
573. Hawker's The Poor Man's Evening Portion for 7 November centered on the last nine words of Luke 9:34, which in its entirety says: "While he thus spake, there came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud." The reference is to the Transfiguration of Christ, when the voice of God comes "out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him" (Luke 9:35). Anna Whistler's interpretation is based on Hawker's contemplations on the passage. For her, the symbolism of the passage is that Christ "has enabled me to feel it to be good to enter the cloud of affliction where His glorious presence becomes visible to the mourner who cannot bear the false glitter of this worlds joys." She is referring to an unidentified edition of Hawker's Evening Portion. The fourth edition was published in 1819. It was published together with The Poor Man's Morning Portion in 1842. See Note 457 above.
574. The town of Spâ, "a watering-place in the province of Liège, Belgium, celebrated for the curative properties of its mineral springs," has given its name to the term "spa" as "a town, locality, or resort possessing a mineral spring or springs; a watering-place of this kind" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "spa").
575. "A collar-cum-wrap, the popular pelerine, was worn by women of all ages in the early 1840s ... It was usually an elbow-length cape modified from the wider, more elaborate capes of the 1830s.

While pelerines were often cut of dress material to match cottons or silks, the dressier types [such as the one Mrs. Harrison bought for Anna Whistler] were either of lace, net or cotton lawn – plain or decorated with either tambour, chain stitch, tape or muslin appliqué, or white work embroidery (broderie d'Anglaise) – and were edged with either piping, a bias-cut self-frill, or lace ... The cut was either straight at the hem, rounded or pointed in back and front. The pelerine sometimes had long tabs or points, which were worn either tied at front, lapped and pinned, or tucked under the belt." In the 1840s, it was sometimes called a "bertha" (Joan L. Severa, Dressed for the Photographer: Ordinary Americans and Fashion, 1840–1900 [Kent, OH; London, UK: Kent State University Press, 1995], pp. 13, 546; for an example of a fine embroidered pelerine see p. 55 and Image 366).

576. "Brussels lace" is a "costly kind of pillow-lace made in Brussels and its neighbourhood, noted for the thickness and evenness of its texture, and the delicate accuracy of its forms" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "Brussels lace").
577. Tyrol gloves are outdoor gloves made of boiled wool and act as a mid- or stand-alone layer. They are warm and wind-resistant. Quick-drying, they may be washed on the hand and pulled into shape (Mrs. Johnstone, "October Fashions," The Woman's World, ed. Oscar Wilde, 3 vols. [London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne: Cassell, 1888–1890], vol. 1, p. 568).
578. William (see Image 238), son of Andrew McCalla Eastwick and Lydia Anne (James) Eastwick, was born on 1/13 August 1846, and baptized on 29 October / 10 November 1846 by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (see Image 253) (PREC STP, no. 5665).
579. The brothers of Mr. and Mrs. Eastwick were William Smith Eastwick and William James.
580. The sponsors for William Eastwick were Joseph Senior Kirk, principal foreman at the Aleksandrofsky Head Mechanical Works, and his wife, Charlotte (Petersen) Kirk.
581. Major Whistler returned from the inspection of the railroad on 19 November / 1 December 1846.
582. It has not been possible to locate these letters written by Major Whistler.
583. "Count Kleinmikhel, the Minister of Public Works, is the sum totem of everything. He raised himself from nothing and is the most zealous perhaps among Ministers, but the kind of zeal is - rather questionable ... With Russians he is very severe, but self-respect prevents him being so with foreigners. Major Whistler handles him well, and a contractor said that the Major rides him” (entry of 21 March 1844 in Raymond and Prince, “Whistler,” pp. 10–11).

584. Harrison, Winans and Eastwick built “in the early spring of 1845 ... a single-track branch 1.5 miles long from the Alexandrovsk Factory to a point on the main line 3.2 miles from the St. Petersburg passenger station.” It “was completed in early December.” “In the spring and summer of 1846 the first 3.2 miles of mainline track from the St. Petersburg passenger station to the branch to Aleksandrovsk were laid ... Mel’nikov was ordered to complete as soon as possible track laying for an additional 12.8 miles to Kolpino ... [and] Harrison and Winans undertook to lay the tracks ... The line between St. Petersburg and Kolpino, with the branch to Aleksandrovsk, a total of 17.5 miles, was the only track laid by the American locomotive builders, who did it ... to have some track on which to test their locomotives and rolling stock and to give experience to the locomotive drivers whom they were contractually obligated to train ... Work proceeded well, and by December track had been laid along the main line to Kolpino, with 9 miles of the originally planned double track and 7 miles along which only one track had been laid with ballast. This section of the railway was used for experimental traffic through the winter of 1846–1847.” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 238–239). Haywood points out that Anna Whistler was referring specifically to this line in her entry of 5 December 1846 (Haywood, p. 254).
585. “Colpener” is Kolpino, pronounced “Kawl’peenuh,” which “was a small town on the Izhora River and ... the site of the Izhora Factories of the Admiralty” (Haywood, pp. 172, 277).
586. Countess Kleopatra Petrovna (Khorvat) Kleinmikhel’ (b. Il’inskaia) (d. 1865) and her husband (see Image 243) were expected to come by train from Kolpino. Instead, she met him at Chudovo (called Tchoodver in this entry) by coach on Monday, 18/30 November 1846. They took over Colonel Mel’nikov’s house for the night, while he and Major Whistler, who stayed with him when in Chudovo, were put up by another officer. The Kleinmikhels traveled by coach on the Moscow Chauseé from Chudovo to St. Petersburg the next day. Their house was located on the Fontanka at Obukhov Bridge (Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn’ Peterburga, p. 46). See Kleinmikhel’ in Appendix E.

587. “The Institute of Transport Engineers, which was formally opened on November 1 [OS], 1810, ... gradually grew in size and breadth of curriculum and became an exclusive militarized institution, the administration and faculty of which were military officers and the student body of which was admitted by competitive examination and was drawn increasingly from the ranks of the nobility” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 127). “On January 19 [OS], 1844, Nicholas I ordered that admission be restricted to young men of noble rank. However, the Institute was not a preserve of the higher aristocracy, which was not attracted by an engineering career, but rather of the middle and lower gentry, like Mel’nikov. Anna M. Whistler did remark that her husband’s Russian engineering colleagues were courteous, hospitable, and ‘all educated as gentlemen’” (Haywood, p. 128).
588. The Russian word for “holiday” is spelled “prazdnik” and pronounced “prah’znyeek.” Anna Whistler has added the English plural suffix -s.
589. During the period in which Major Whistler was away (from 26 October / 7 November to 19 November / 1 December), the official holidays were 8/20 November, the feast day of St. Michael the Archangel; 14/26 November, the feast day of Philip the Apostle; and 16/28 November, the feast day of St. Matthew, Apostle and Evangelist. He had written to his family that two unspecified official holidays had been celebrated in the interior, but his children had not had any official holiday at Monsieur Jourdan’s (Mesiatsoslov na 1844 g., p. xi and unnumbered page for November).
590. James was kept at school as a punishment on 16/28 November 1846.
591. Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, James’s drawing teacher (see Images 167–170), had come as usual on Saturday to give James a lesson from 4 to 6 o’clock.
592. They went back to school on Sunday, 17/29 November 1846.
593. Two further legal holidays (Old Style) in November, when all offices and schools were closed, were 19 November, commemorating the death of Alexander I (see Image 418), and 20 November, celebrating the accession of Emperor Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) to the throne (although the day of accession was considered to be 19 November). The New Style equivalents would be 1 and 2 December (Mesiatsoslov na 1842 g., p. xi).

594. The river closed on Saturday, 16/28 November 1846.
595. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti carried the following announcement about the patchiness of the freezing:

The Neva this year is an unusual sight. On Saturday ice appeared once again and the bridges were drawn aside. On Monday the ice had stopped almost to the piers of the permanent bridge that is being built, but [the area] below the bridge was completely free. Today at the Smol'nyi Monastery passage across the Neva is along planks. Opposite the Fifth Line of Vasilievskii Island they are chopping through the ice to put down the Isaac Bridge, while further on opposite the Eleventh Line they are ferrying people across in skiffs and jolly boats, as they do in Summer. (no. 264, Wednesday, November 20 [2 December NS], 1846, p. 1158)

See also Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 253, Wednesday, November 6 [November 18 NS], 1846, p. 1106; no. 246, Sunday, November 10 [November 22 NS], 1846, p. 1122; and no. 261, Saturday, November 16 [November 28 NS], 1846, p. 1144.

596. Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 266, Wednesday, November 23 [December 5 NS], 1846, p. 1168; no. 268, Tuesday, November 26 [December 8 NS], 1846, p. 1175; no. 271, Friday, November 29 [December 11 NS], 1846, p. 1183; no. 274 Tuesday, December 3 [December 15 NS], 1846, p. 1197; and no. 284, Sunday, December 15 [December 27 NS], 1846, p. 1242.
597. Joseph Harrison Eastwick's (3 December 1834 – 15 February 1917) birthday was celebrated on Wednesday, 20 November / 2 December 1846.
598. Seventeenth-century engravings depict showmen at fairs using the magic lantern to project frightening “ghosts and monsters.” The apparatus was simple: “an oil lamp inside a box with a metal reflector that reflected the light through a painted slide. The image from the slide was focused onto a white wall or screen. By the 19th century with the development of photography, lantern lenses and slides were improved and became a standard teaching aid. Due to the popularity of the lantern shows small tinplate versions were made for children” (Schools Information: Victorian Playthings [London: London Toy & Model Museum, n.d.], brochure). The magic lantern for the child consisted of a tin box, with a funnel on the top ... and a door on one side of it. This funnel, by being bent, ... serves the double purpose of letting out the smoke, and keeping in the light. In the middle of the bottom of the box is placed a movable tin lamp ... which must have two or three good lights, at the height of the center of the polished tin reflector ... In the front of the box, opposite the reflector, is fixed a tin tube ... in which there slides another tube ... The sliding tube has, at its outer extremity, a convex lens of about two inches diameter; the [fixed] tube also has a convex lens fixed in it ... of three inches diameter. The focus of the smaller of these lenses may be about five inches. Between the [fixed] tube ... and the lamp, there must be a slit or opening ... to admit of the passage of glass sliders, [which one could paint oneself], mounted in paper or wooden frames, ... upon which sliders it is that the miniature figures are painted, which are intended to be shown upon the wall. The distinctness of the enlarged figures depends not only upon the goodness of the magnifying glass, but upon the clearness of the light yielded by the lamp ... It may be purchased ready made of any optician ... The lamp being lighted, and the room darkened, place the machine on the table, at some distance from the white wall or suspended sheet, and introduce into the slit ... one of the sliders ... with the figures inverted. If the movable tube ... be then pushed in or drawn out, till the proper focus be obtained, the figures on the slider will be reflected on the wall, in their distinct colors and proportions, with the appearance of life itself and of any size, from six inches to seven feet, according to the distance of the lantern from the wall. Movements of the figures are easily made by painting the subject on two glasses, and passing the same through the groove. (William Clarke, Boys Own Book: A Complete Encyclopedia of All Athletic, Scientific, Recreative, Outdoor and Indoor Exercises and Diversions, 5th rev. ed. [New York: Leavitt and Allen Brothers, [1870], pp. 116–119)

599. On the evening of Thursday, 21 November / 3 December 1846, the Whistler boys had to return to attend school Friday, 4 December, and half of Saturday. During this day, Miss MacMaster, governess to the Wood children, came with three of them – Helen Wood, Catherine Elizabeth Wood, and William Nicholson Wood – to meet James and Willie. William Henry

- Harrison, who also attended Monsieur Jourdan's school, came to dinner.
600. Henry and Annie Harrison's baby sister was Alicia McNeill Harrison.
  601. Continuing instances of Annie Harrison's epilepsy are mentioned in her father's letters of 1847 and 1849 (Joseph Harrison Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky, November 21 (OS), 1847 and August 29, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1).
  602. On Saturday, 19 December 1846, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (see Image 227) came to the Whistler home and waited for her son, Henry, who attended Monsieur Jourdan's school with James and Willie.
  603. On Saturday, 12 December 1846, Andrew McCalla Eastwick (see Image 233), of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, and Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick (see Image 234) came to the Whistler home with their baby, William Eastwick (see Image 238), hoping to meet Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' family physician (our good doct), who had attended John Bouttatz Whistler during his last illness. It has not been possible to identify the Eastwick baby's nurse.
  604. The marriage of Harriet Henley (6 August 1824 – Cheltenham 20 March 1856; see Image 273) and William Whishaw (of Archangel) (10 February 1820 – Ettington, Warwickshire 6 June 1882) took place on 7/19 December 1846, at the English Church (PREC STP, no. 5676, p. 343). Deborah Whistler would have appreciated in Harriet (Henley) Whishaw that she was very witty, extremely musical, a great reader, and had "a very happy temperament" (James Whishaw, A History of the Whishaw Family, ed. M.S. Leigh [London: Methuen, 1935], p. 163, 165, 166, 174–175).
  605. The Russian phrase for "trade rows" or "arcade of shops" (literally, "merchants' yard") is spelled "gostinyi dvor" and pronounced "gosstee'nee dvor'." The building stands between the Nevskii Prospekt, Bol'shaia Sadovaia Street, Chernyshev Alley, and Gostinnaia Street. Its external appearance had not changed by the 1850s but had been enhanced in recent times by the presence of luxury stores rivaling some of the best stores on the Nevskii Prospekt. It is here that James and Willie bought ice skates. See Note 259, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, for a fuller description of this establishment.
  606. William Saunders (b. 7 January 1830; bap. 9 June 1830) was the son of Catherine (Miller) Saunders (c. 1802 – Kensington, London 29 June 1882) and John Saunders (Ratcliff, Middlesex 1799 – Wanstead, Essex 5 June 1865), a “hoop bender” (cooper). His parents were married in South Leith, Midlothian, on 9 August 1825. John Saunders is listed in the 1851 Census for Wanstead, Essex, as cooper and stockholder, born in Ratcliff, Middlesex, living at 16 Snaresbrook, in a hamlet near Wanstead, with a cook and housemaid. His estate amounted to under £40,000. William Saunders was not named as one of the executors of the will proved in July 1865; he was, however, named as an executor in the will proved in double probate in March 1866. The estate of Catherine (Miller) Saunders amounted to about £1800. In St. Petersburg, William Saunders lived in the home of his uncle, William Miller, hemp and herring merchant, at 31 Galernaia Street (BRBC STP 1845, fols. 37, 55; SoG; OPRS; IGI for London, England; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1865, 1866, 1882; Manchester Times, July 8, 1882; Baptisms in St. Anne, Limehouse, 1830; 1851 Census for Wanstead, Essex; 1851 Census for Leith, Midlothian; Sir Bernard Burke, A Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage, 47th ed. [London: Harrison and Sons, 1885], p. 921). For further information about William Saunders’s uncle, William Miller, see the biography of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”

607. Deborah Whistler had most likely gone in the week before Christmas (New Style) to No. 76 Galernaia, the home of John Henley (7 February 1767 – 1 July 1855) and Anastasia (Whishaw) Henley (9 December 1783 – 17 February 1875). They were the parents of Harriet (Henley) Whishaw, at whose marriage Deborah had been present on 7/19 December (Whishaw, History, p. 149; BRBC STP 1845, fol. 25).
608. “[Elizabeth] went to Mrs. Whistler’s last evening to spend Christmas Eve, though they had only 4 young ladies as they are in affliction on account of the death of their beautiful baby” (Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand to Wm. L. Ropes [her cousin], St. P., 25th Dec. NS 1846, MHS: Ropes Papers).
609. Kirton’s English bookshop was located in the house of Bremme on the corner of New-Isaac Street, next to the Horse Guard Indoor Riding Range (see Image 137), in the Third Ward of the First Admiralty District (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 1, p. 30; Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1851, p. 295).
610. Luke 2:14: “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.”

611. Luke 18:15–16: “<sup>15</sup> And they brought unto him also infants, that he would touch them: but when his disciples saw it, they rebuked them. <sup>16</sup> But Jesus called them unto him and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.” See Hymn 87 (“The gentle Saviour calls Our children to his breast”) for the Baptism of Infants in Book of Common Prayer ... in the United States, pp. 161–162, and Hymn 258 (“Jesus, kind, inviting Lord”) for Baptism in Hymns for the Use of the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 157. The “four dear children He has yet left us” were George William Whistler, Deborah Delano Whistler, James Abbott Whistler, and William McNeill Whistler. The “four children who have gone before us” were Joseph Swift Whistler, Kirk Boott Whistler, Charles Donald Whistler, and John Bouttatz Whistler.
612. It has not been possible to locate these letters of George William Whistler. Reasons for his depression may have been that he could not yet marry his fiancée, Mary Ducatel, and that he had hoped to work for Harrison and Winans and achieve a partnership, but had received a veto from his father. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E and Images 12–13.
613. Matthew 10:37: “He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me.”
614. It has not been possible to locate any notes of sympathy at the death of John Bouttatz Whistler written by St. Petersburg friends of Anna Whistler.
615. “Grivennik,” pronounced “gree’vennyeek,” was the name of the ten-kopek coin that the messenger received as a tip (Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, p. 53; Chistova, Byt Pushkinskogo Peterburga, p. 197).
616. Anna Whistler is referring to her entry of Saturday, 19 December.
617. Ecclesiastes 7:2: “It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.”
618. Anna Whistler is referring to the sister of Helene Funck. Wilhelmine Elisabeth (Funck) Grooten (b. St. Petersburg 18/30 September 1807) was married on 12/24 August 1836 (Amburger Datenbank, ID 18877). She had six children between 1837 and 1846. Friedrick, born in 1838, died in 1841. The five “under nine years of age” were Wilhelmine (b. 1837), Sophie (b. 1840), Alexander (b. 1842), Caroline (b. 1844), and Theodor (b. 1845) (RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov', fols. 66r, 66v, 67r, 69r, 69v, 193v). Jannie Swint of Interlibrary Loan Services, Simon Fraser University, provided a translation of Dutch comments in the registers.

619. This word should be "sister."
620. The child, born on 30 November / 12 December 1846, was given the name Hedwig Elisabeth (RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov', fol. 70v). Her birth date in the diaries (Sunday, 13 December) does not correspond to that in the church register.
621. Mrs. Grootten died on 5/17 December 1846, at the age of thirty-nine, of complications resulting from childbirth (RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov', fol. 194v).
622. The occupation of her husband, Heinrich Grootten (St. Petersburg 21 April / 3 May 1801 – St. Petersburg 24 April / 6 May 1860[?]), is given in 1838 as merchant and in 1846 as sugar manufacturer (RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov', fols. 66v, 70v; Amburger Datenbank, IDs 20925, 18877).
623. Chapter 14 of St. John constitutes part of the farewell discourse of Jesus to his apostles before going to the Garden of Gethsemane and to his death, a discourse in which he alludes to his resurrection. In addition to the words "In my father's house are many mansions," other well-known lines in this chapter are: "I go to prepare a place for you," "I am the way, the truth and the life," and "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." Some of the text of Mrs. Grootten's pastor's speech at her funeral was taken from John 14.

The pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church (see Image 128) from 1842 to 1867 and in 1872–1873 was Willem Leonard Welter (Heiloo, Holland 13 December 1816 – Hees [Huize De Koepel bij Nijmegen], Holland 13 February 1900). He completed his theology studies at Utrecht in 1834 and was called to St. Petersburg on 21 June 1842. He married on 26 May 1848 Thalia Hermanna Bonifacia Preuyt (Meppel, Holland 3 June 1825 – St. Petersburg 6 October 1850) ("Biografische gegevens van de predikanten bij de Hollandse Hervormde Kerk in Sint-Petersburg, 1817–1927" ["Biographical Data of the Pastors at the Dutch Reformed Church in Saint Petersburg, 1817–1927"], De Hollandse Hervormde Kerk in Sint-Petersburg 1713–1927 [The Dutch Reformed Church in Saint Petersburg 1713–1927], accessed 27 May 2021, <http://resources.huygens.knaw.nl/> retroboeken/hollandse_hervormdekerk_petersburg/#page=0&accessor=toc&view=imagePane).

624. The funeral service for Mrs. Grooten was held on 10/22 December 1846, in the Dutch Reformed Church (see Image 128), located on the Nevskii Prospekt near the Police Bridge (RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov', fol. 194v; Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 475; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 3, pp. 264–265). She was buried in Volkov Cemetery, located at the city limits beyond Iamskaia. The cemetery is divided into Orthodox, Old Believer and other-denominational grounds (Grech, p. 78). Her name is not in Böhm, Wolkovo Lutherischer Friedhof.

Because of the sympathy felt by Peter the Great for Holland, the Dutch played an outstanding role in the early history of St. Petersburg. On the whole, they were masters of seafaring, marine officers, merchants, doctors, and builders. Beginning in 1708, they worshipped in the Lutheran church in the courtyard of Cornelius Cruys (1655–1727) and had their own pastor as of 1717. In November 1719, the Dutch bought the house in the Admiralty district belonging to Pierre Pusi and set up a church and school in it. On 6 April 1733, they acquired a one-story house on the corner of the Nevskii Prospekt and the Moika River that had previously belonged to the architect Jean-Baptiste Le Blond (1679–1719) and transferred their church to it. In 1736, this building burned down; it was not replaced until some five years later. In 1797, I. Kreber proposed building a magnificent cathedral, but his project was not acted upon. Another project offered in 1830 by R. Rigel also failed to be realized, because the architect refused to make required changes. It was not until 15 July 1831 that the building of a new cathedral with a façade decorated with a four-column portico, proposed by the Frenchman Paul Jacot (1798–1860), was begun.

Round in plan and holding four hundred people, the church occupied the second floor and was decorated with paired Corinthian columns. On the pediment above them was the Latin inscription: Deo et servatori sacrum (To God and Those Who Serve the Sacred), and in the tympanum the figures of two angels. Above the flat roof of the building rose a gently sloping cupola on top of which was a cross. The façades of the side wings of the church building with the semicircular tops of the first-floor windows formed an unbroken arcade in which shops and apartments were found. The interior was illuminated by a silver chandelier. The stucco work was by F. Balin, the murals by Vasiliev, and the organ by Master Friedrich. On 14 January 1834, the Prince of Orange and his son (the future Dutch kings Wilhelm II and Wilhelm III) were present at the consecration of the church.

Starting in the nineteenth century, the service was held in Dutch only in summer, after navigation commenced; in the remaining months of the year, it was in German, as the small congregation (of about 300) had become strongly Germanized (Shul'ts, Khramy Sankt-Peterburga, p. 260; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 3, pp. 264–265).

625. Ellen, the English nurse at the Ellerbys, is the abovementioned Eleonora Lee (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 35).
626. On 4 November 1846, Maxwell wrote an eight-page letter to Major Whistler from Nyack, New York, where the Maxwells' country home, Roslyn, was located (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, Nyack, Rockland County, New York, November 4, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). In it, he mentioned having earlier written another letter to Whistler from Nyack, but did not say when he had written it. The letter of 4 November is the only extant Maxwell letter from Nyack at the N-YHS. Anna Whistler says nothing in her diary of the contents of this letter, received on 28 December 1846. This seems strange, because it contained a description of a visit made by Maxwell to Stonington, Connecticut, an event one would expect Anna Whistler to select for mention. The letter discusses at length local elections (Maxwell almost ran for Congress), politics in general, Colonel Todd, General Talmadge, the synonymy of Whistler's name with that of Russia, and Maxwell's wish to sell his letters to Harper's.
627. This is Eleanor Wylie Grant (c. 1813 – 4/17 October 1901), also called Miss G in this entry.
628. Major Whistler had asked for James and Willie to be allowed to come home on 24 December to celebrate New-Style Christmas. They went back to Monsieur Jourdan's on Sunday, 27 December.
629. The Mirriellees family (Archibald and Jane [Muir] Mirriellees, and his daughter Sarah; see Images 268–269) lived at 78 Galernaia (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 37).
630. Anna Whistler is referring to Saturday, 26 December 1846.
631. Revelation 20:13: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works."

632. Anna Whistler omitted the word “were.”
633. The steamer Atlantic left New London, Connecticut, between 9 and 10 o’clock on the night of Wednesday, 25 November 1846. About half an hour later, she was struck by a very heavy sea. After losing her works, she began to drift towards Fisher’s Island. She was buffeted by the gale all of Thursday and was wrecked on the rocks at Fisher’s Island on Friday morning at 4 o’clock. There were 100–115 passengers on board. The steamer was equipped with “over a thousand life-preservers,” which they donned, some wearing two and some three, or the loss of life would have been greater. The Mohegan attempted to go to her rescue, but the captain of the Atlantic, Isaac Kip Dustan (b. April 1808; bap. Sutton on the Forest, Yorkshire 20 November 1814; d. 28 November 1846) ordered that the distress flag be hauled down, because he saw that the “efforts would be ineffectual.” The courageous Captain Dustan was one of those who lost his life. He left a wife and five young children, who received the news of his death when his body was brought to his home (in Tompkinsville, Staten Island). His funeral was from his home on Sunday, 29 November 1846, at one o’clock (“Loss of the Atlantic,” New York Evening Post, November 28, 1846) and burial was in the Moravian Cemetery (J.J. Clute, Annals of Staten Island From its Discovery to the Present Time [New York: Charles Vogt, 1877], pp. 371–378). His widow was Phoebe Ann (Simonson) Dustan (12 August 1809 – 27 April 1893), whom he married at the North Chapel, Staten Island, on Sunday, 21 April 1833 (New York Spectator, April 25, 1833). The five young children were Charlotte Eleanor (1846–1906), Louisa Morgan, Mary Matilda, Nannie, and Charles W. Dustan (24 October 1834 – 13 July 1892) (Staten Island Historical Records). His mother was Sarah Dustan (1771 – 1862) (Moravian Cemetery; Staten Island: Plot records). See also John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, Dec. 13, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. The tragedy of this shipwreck was used as an argument to stress the need for “a land route entire,” “a railroad from Boston to New York” (American Railroad Journal, and General Advertiser for Railroads, Canals, Steamboats, Machinery and Mines, Saturday, December 5, 1846, p. 777).
634. It has not been possible to locate these letters, which Anna Whistler received from Maria (Cammann) McNeill, her sister-in-law, and Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, her sister, on Wednesday, 30 December 1846.

635. Anna Margaretta (Kunze) Lorillard (16 August 1791 – 23 November 1846), daughter of the late Rev. John C. and Margaretta (Muhlenberg) Kunze, and widow of Jacob Lorillard (22 May 1774 – 20 September 1838), New York merchant, whom she married on 12 October 1809, died at the age of fifty-six on Monday, 23 November 1846, in Manhattanville, New York (Gertrude A. Barber, comp., Deaths Taken from the New York Evening Post, vol. 23, From October 31, 1846 to August 3, 1847, ts, 1940, p. 9, N-YHS; Henrietta Meier Oakley & John C. Schwab, The Muhlenberg Album [New Haven: Tuttle Press, 1910], no pagination). Her portrait, by an unidentified artist (see Image 53), was presented to the N-YHS by her grandson, H. Schuyler Cammann, in 1945 (Catalogue of American Portraits in the New-York Historical Society, 2 vols. [New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1974], vol. 1, p. 487). There is no obituary for Mrs. Lorillard in the New York newspapers. As Dr. George P. Cammann, MD, Maria (Cammann) McNeill's brother, was married to Anna Catharine Lorillard, daughter of Anna Margaretta and Jacob Lorillard, the account Maria (Cammann) McNeill sent to Anna Whistler may have come from him and/or his wife. See Whistler ... Farifax in Appendix E.
636. Mrs. Lorillard's dying words were to recite "The Lord's Prayer."
637. Revelation 14:13: "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Revelation 22:14: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."
638. The child who died was Emma Ripley (26 May 1838 – 21 August 1846), daughter of Major James Wolfe and Sarah (Denny) Ripley, of Springfield, Massachusetts. The other "little daughter" who had died was Isabella Ripley (3 February 1836 – 6 February 1844). Major Ripley, USMA Class of 1814, was the commandant and superintendent of the Springfield Armory, Massachusetts (Thomas J. Wallace, "Portrait of An Ordnance Office," p. 1, Springfield Public Library Local History Room). It has not been possible to locate this letter from Charlotte (Sanford) Adams Barnes nor the memoir by Rev. Henry Washington Lee.
639. On 10 December 1846 in Springfield, Massachusetts, Adeline Denny Ripley (21 June 1825 – 8 April 1902) married, as his second wife, Robert Chamblett Hooper (8 April 1805 – 26

November 1869), a wealthy Boston merchant (Pope and Hooper, Hooper Genealogy, p. 150). Anna Whistler's remarks may have been based on the fact that Adeline Ripley was some twenty years younger than her husband. Reverend Henry Washington Lee (see Image 44), Anna Whistler's friend and former pastor, performed the ceremony (The Daily Republican (Springfield, MA), Saturday, December 12, 1846, p. 3).

640. Matthew 13:45–46: “<sup>45</sup> Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls: <sup>46</sup> Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it.” This has been interpreted as “Some ... dedicate themselves to God's kingdom because, being able to judge the value of other claims being made on them, they value it more” (New Oxford Annotated Bible, p. 1189).
641. The Old-Style Christmas holidays, which began on 21 December 1846 / 2 January 1847, marked the end of James and Willie's studies at Monsieur Jourdan's school. The school moved later in 1847 from its prestigious location near the Summer Garden to the house belonging to Pel', No. 47 Panteleimonov Street, in the First Ward of the Liteinaia District. It lost many students in the second half of 1847. The figure of fifty pupils that Anna Whistler spoke of when her sons entered in September 1846 fell to thirty. While not giving all the reasons why this had happened, the inspector attributed the considerable decrease compared to the first half of the year as partly due to the school's relocation, but stressed the praiseworthy set-up of the school and the owner's diligence and care (RGIA: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5188, fol. 80r (see Note 514 above for document title); Anna Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, September 24, 1846, NYPL: Swift Papers).
642. On Christmas Eve, 24 December 1846 / 5 January 1847, James and Willie went to the home of Edward John and Mary Ann (Parland) Morgan, whose children were Maria Frances, Edward Delmar, and Fanny Elizabeth. They lived at 31 Galernaia Street. It was to this same home that Deborah and Major Whistler went a few days later to a party on Russian New Year's Eve (see this same entry, for Saturday 23rd of our style being 11th of Russian style). See also Morgan and Parland in Appendix E.
643. While at Monsieur Jourdan's school, James had not attended the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. In fact, he was not registered in a drawing course at the Academy in 1846 or 1847. One assumes that now he was going over to the Academy to draw under Koritskii's tutelage; however, Koritskii recorded in his diary on

- 30 December 1846 / 11 January 1847 that he “was painting a portrait of the American” (“Ja pisał portret s Amerikantsa”) (GRM OR: Koritskii, Zapisi, fol. 22v). James could also have been sitting for his portrait, as there is a period of twelve days between Koritskii’s entry and Anna Whistler’s (11–23 January [NS], 1847), during which James often went to the Academy. See the biography of James Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and Koritskii in Appendix E.
644. The French term “tableaux vivants” (singular “tableau vivant,” but also sometimes written “tableaux vivant”) means “living pictures.” A tableau vivant is “a silent and motionless person or group of people posed and attired to represent a well-known character, event, or work of art” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “tableau vivant”). “The genre peaked in popularity between 1830 and 1920. During a performance of tableaux vivant, a cast of characters represented scenes from literature, art, history, or everyday life on a stage. ... In Victorian England, people used tableaux vivant as a parlor game to amuse guests and engage them in a deeper appreciation of art” (Shannon Murphy, “Tableaux Vivant: History and Practice,” Art Museum Teaching, 6 December 2012, accessed 1 February 2021, <https://artmuseumteaching.com/2012/12/06/tableaux-vivant-history-and-practice/>).
645. Edward Peers Eastwick (12 January 1833–1926; see Image 235) was the eldest Eastwick child. His Old Style birthday was 31 December.
646. This could be 14 or 15 January (NS) 1847.
647. Sarah B. Schofield (1817–1891), niece of the Rev. T.S. Ellerby’s wife, Mary (Bealey) Ellerby, came to Russia to be a governess to their daughters, Lucy, Alice, and Emily, in the 1840s. She is also mentioned by her future husband as being there in July 1848 (Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, p. 86) and by Joseph Harrison Jr. in 1849 (J. Harrison Jr to Anna M. Whistler, June 22 (OS) 1849, Alexandroffsky, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). See Ellerby in Appendix E and Image 257.
648. The extended Ropes family – “Mama, Papa, Auntys – Uncle G” – went over to Vasilevskii Island “to [an] annual feast at Maligins ... to eat bleenies” (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg. Feb 19th Monday eve [1849], GUL: Whistler Collection, W383). Bliny (pronounced “blee’nee”) were pancakes eaten only during Shrovetide. The extended Ropes family were:

William Hooper Ropes (Papa); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes (Mama); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (Mrs. G) (see Images 266–267); William Clarke Gellibrand (Uncle G, Mr G) (see Image 265); Joseph Samuel Ropes (Mr. J. Ropes); and Elizabeth Hannah Ropes (Lizzie) (see Image 267). Mrs. Gellibrand and Elizabeth Hannah Ropes were also “Auntys.” The merchant’s name was Malygin. His house was No. 25 in the Fourth Ward of the Vasilievskaiia District, between the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Lines (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 1, p. 217). To the already-plural Russian word “bliny,” Anna Whistler added the English plural -s.

649. “Although Russia had incorporated the Caucasus into its empire, its writ and authority did not run throughout all this territory. In particular, two areas proved difficult to control: Circassia and Dagestan. Two campaigns secured eastern Circassia and another, in 1862, secured western Circassia ... In Dagestan ... successive leaders ... of the Muslim Imamate ... preached a holy war against foreigners, secular rulers and landowners ... This insurrection encouraged Avars, Chechens, and Azeris to fight the Russians too. Russian campaigns against Imam Shamil (1797–1871), who had become a legendary leader [1834–1859] of Caucasian resistance to Russian hegemony, cost them 12,000 casualties between 1840 and 1845” (Ian Barnes, Restless Empire: A Historical Atlas of Russia [Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 2015], p. 81). For a discussion of serfs in the army, see Wirtschafter, Serf to Soldier. For a discussion of the war in the Caucasus, see Curtiss, Russian Army, pp. 152–175). For a discussion of the length of military service for various classes, see both Wirtschafter and Curtis.
650. “Oil-silk,” also called “oiled silk,” is silk treated with oil to make it water-tight (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “oil-silk”).
651. Major George W. Whistler to General J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, January 18, 1847, NYPL: Swift Papers; Major George W. Whistler to General J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, April 8/20 1847.
652. Galatians 6:7: “Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.”
653. 1 Samuel 1:15: “And Hannah answered and said, No, my Lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit; I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have poured out my soul before the Lord.”
654. Philippians 3:8: “Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ.”

655. When John Stevenson Maxwell was seriously ill in 1844, he was given the armchair by Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, the American envoy, who jokingly told him to keep it for the future Mrs. Maxwell. But when Maxwell was leaving Russia, he gave it to the Whistlers (John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, 11 May 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 34).
656. These are the Russian words for “semolina meal,” spelled “mannaia kasha” and pronounced “mahn’nuhyuh kah’shuh.” It resembles cream of wheat. James’s diet was prescribed by Dr. James Rogers.
657. The fifteen-kopek coin was called “piataltynnyi” (Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, p. 54; Chistova, Byt Pushkinskogo Peterburga, p. 197).
658. It is not possible to say whether “young Mr Merrielees” is William Spurr Mirrielees (b. St Petersburg December 1828), son of Archibald (Aberdeen 7 September 1797 – London 13 February 1877) and Sarah (Spurr) Mirrielees, or one of the nephews of Archibald Mirrielees: i.e., William or John, the sons of James Mirrielees; or William Philip, the son of William Mirrielees. For more detailed information about the Mirrielees family, see “Piety and Profit: Archibald Mirrielees (1797–1877),” in Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, pp 1–57, and Pitcher, Muir i Meriliz, pp. 10–46.
659. It has not been possible to locate this letter, received from George William Whistler on Monday, 25 January 1847.
660. It has not been possible to locate this letter from Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22), who was visiting her son, Charles Johnston McNeill, in Florida. Anna Whistler regretted that she herself could not contribute to Charles’s comforts. It is not clear whether she meant financial aid. Some years after her mother’s death, she attempted to arrange a loan for him. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E. Extant letters written by Martha (Kingsley) McNeill may be found in USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers (letter dated 1814) and NYPL: Swift Papers (letters dated 1827, 1830, 1831, 1832, and 1838). See Appendix I for the letter of 12 January 1852 (some three months before her death) from Pomfret, written jointly with Anna Whistler to Catherine (McNeill) Palmer in Stonington, which clearly shows in its style and expressions, how great her moral and religious influence on Anna Whistler was. They sound alike.

661. William Gibbs (see Image 31) and Maria (Cammann) McNeill lived at 67 Irving Place in New York.
662. Helene Funck's sister was Wilhelmine Elizabeth (Funck) Grooten. She had died of complications resulting from childbirth. Anna Whistler had attended her funeral on 10/22 December 1846 at the Dutch Reformed Church (see Image 128).
663. The Dorcas Society, taking its name from the woman in Acts 9:36–41 who spent her life making clothes for the poor, distributed clothes to the poor. Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, William Clarke Gellibrand, William Hooper Ropes, and Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes were active members.
664. This quotation and several that follow are taken from Mark 14:3–8, the parable of the woman who poured a box of precious ointment over Jesus's head, causing some present to murmur against the wastefulness of her action; the ointment could have been sold and the money given to the poor. Mark 14:6–7: “<sup>6</sup> And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? She hath wrought a good work on me. <sup>7</sup> For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always.” Anna Whistler cites Charlotte Leon as an example of a woman attempting to do good to the poor.
665. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday morning Feb 6th 1847 who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Charlotte Leon, pensioner (old friend M<sup>rs</sup> Leon, revered old acquaintance, Grandma Leon); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (my own dear Mother); Pheodocia, their servant (Phedocia); Mary (Bealey) Ellerby (M<sup>rs</sup> Ellerby); Emily Ellerby (cherub Emily, darling Emmy); Elizabeth Hannah Ropes (Elizabeth Ropes, Elizabeth); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (M<sup>rs</sup> Gellibrand); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' physician (Doct Rogers); and Thomas DeKay Winans of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick (M<sup>r</sup> Winans). The Whistlers' coachman was named Pyotr, but in this entry is called Nikolai (Nicoli).
666. The visit on 20 January / 1 February 1847 was the last time Anna Whistler saw Charlotte Leon alive.
667. Ecclesiastes 12:5: “Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home and the mourners go about the streets.”

668. Anna Whistler was talking about Saturday, 30 January 1847.
669. On Friday, 5 February 1847, Major Whistler visited Colonel Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (see Image 248), head of the Southern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.
670. This endearing form of the name “Anna” is spelled “Annushka” and pronounced “Ahn’nooshkuh” (Petrovskii, Slovar’ russkikh lichnykh imen, p. 51). She seems to have been part of the kitchen staff.
671. Luke 18:16: “But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.”
672. Charlotte (Jenner) Leon, aged 83, died on 24 January / 5 February 1847 (PREC STP, no. 5690, p. 347). She gave her birthday as April 20th, so she was actually 82 years old (entry of April 10 [1845], NYPL: AWP, Part II). See Leon in Appendix E.
673. Mark 14:8: “She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.”
674. Matthew 25:20–21: “<sup>20</sup> And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. <sup>21</sup> His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.”
675. It has not been possible to locate the note from Dorothea (Halliday) Baird (Mrs Frank Baird) inviting Debo to a party on Saturday evening, 6 February.
676. There are many references in the Gospels to the day of preparation (Friday) for the Jewish Sabbath (Saturday): Matthew 27:26; Mark 15:42; Luke 23:54; and John 19:14, 31, and 42. The Crucifixion of Jesus took place on the day of preparation.
677. Matthew 3:15: “And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.”
678. Luke 16:8: “And the Lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.”
679. The collection taken up on 7 February 1847 was for the starving victims of the Great Irish Famine (see Image 203), resulting from the failure of the potato crop due to a blight caused by the fungus, Phytophthora infestans. The first potato failure occurred in 1845. It was succeeded by a second in late 1846, when the crop was almost totally destroyed. “Conditions in Ireland had been widely reported by 1847 and significant relief was raised throughout the world” by private organizations to supplement the inadequate aid from the government (Stephen J. Campbell, The Great Irish Famine: Words and Images from the Famine Museum, Strokestown Park, County Roscommon [Strokestown Park, Ireland: Famine Museum, 1994], pp. 21, 22, 24, 35, 45).

The sermon reference to “the poor Scotch” concerned the Highland Potato Famine. “In 1846, the same blight that affected the Irish crops also caused the failure of potato crops in Scotland ... The potato famine in Scotland may not be as well known as the situation in Ireland as relief programmes were perhaps better organized and more effective in the Highlands and Islands. Crop failures in Scotland continued into the 1850s, and famine relief programmes became semi-permanent operations. While the mortality rate was less than other Scottish famines in the 1690s, and 1780, the Highland potato famine eventually caused over 1.7 million people to leave Scotland during the period 1846–1852” (James Mitchell, NLS, to E. Harden, 21 March 2011).

The collection taken up in the English Church on 7 February 1847 received notice in The Morning Chronicle (London), as follows:

The Committee of the British Association for Relief of Extreme Distress in the Remote Districts in Ireland and Scotland ... acknowledge the receipt of a letter from Mr. Gladstone, informing them that he had paid into the Bank of England the sum of £424.9s.6d., ... transmitted from St. Petersburg, being the amount of a collection made by British subjects in the Chapel of the British Factory on Sunday, 26th January O.S. (7th February), after a sermon preached by the Rev. Edward Law, chaplain, to be applied in conformity with the directions contained in her Majesty’s letter to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury. (The Morning Chronicle (London), Saturday, February 27, 1847).

Included in the abovementioned notice in The Morning Chronicle (London) was the statement:

The Committee of the British Association for Relief of Extreme Distress in the Remote Districts in Ireland and Scotland acknowledge to have received with much pleasure, through the hands of Wm. Gladstone, Esq., for the relief of the suffering poor in those countries, the sum of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS, being part of a public subscription made in the city of St. Petersburg.

Anna Whistler was distressed by the fact that the rich congregation of the English Church (see Images 110–111), which had raised 1800 silver roubles, or £424.9s.6, had not done enough compared to the congregation of the British and American Chapel (see Image 125), of which Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256) was pastor; that “small and not rich congregation” had raised 600 silver roubles. She was placated by the idea that the British merchants, who generally belonged to the English Church, were to make a further contribution.

Dr. James Rogers (our good Doct), who was the physician of the British Legation, made an earlier visit than usual to James in order to attend the service at the English Church and make his offering to the relief fund.

680. There are two possibilities as to the identity of Mr. Arnold. One is Thomas Arnold (13 June 1795 – 12 June 1842), the head master of Rugby and father of the poet and critic, Matthew Arnold (24 December 1822 – 15 April 1888). In addition to his historical works on Rome, his edition of Thucydides, and his lectures on the study of modern history, given at Oxford, he wrote several religious works: “a collection of sermons in three volumes” (published between 1829 and 1834), Christian Life (1841), and two further volumes of sermons, edited and published posthumously by his widow in 1842 and 1845 (Dictionary of National Biography, s/v. “Arnold, Thomas [1795–1842]”). The other possibility is Thomas Kerchever Arnold (1800 – 9 March 1853), a “writer of educational works and theologian.” In addition to Greek and Latin grammars and composition books, he “superintended the publication of English, French, German, Italian and Hebrew grammars.” As a theological writer, he published a series of periodicals that were each shortlived, a volume of sermons in 1845, and Short Helps to Daily Devotion in 1847 (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Arnold, Thomas Kerchever”).
681. In 1847, Orthodox Lent began on 3/15 February, while Western Lent began two days later, on Ash Wednesday, 5/17 February. Easter Sunday occurred on 24 March / 4 April for both the Western and Orthodox churches. James Whistler was very ill for a nine-week period, and Anna Whistler mentions only his lack of envy when Willie went off to the Carnival festivities. See Images 378–379 for icons representing these feast days.

Persons mentioned in the entry for Tuesday night [February] 9th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant, and his wife, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (M<sup>r</sup>. and M<sup>rs</sup>. Gellibrand); Emily Ellerby, youngest daughter of Mary (Bealey) Ellerby (M<sup>rs</sup>. Ellerbys darling baby); Lucy and Alice Ellerby (other two little Ellerbys, elder two little girls); and Eleanora Lee, nursemaid to the Ellerby girls (their nice English nursery maid).

682. Charlotte (Jenner) Leon was buried on 27 January / 8 February 1847 in the Smolensk Cemetery (PREC STP, no. 5690, p. 347). Anna Whistler records the funeral at midnight or later, but she means 8 February. See Leon in Appendix E.
683. Anna Whistler is recalling James's similar attack in the summer of 1843 (entry for S<sup>t</sup> Petersburg, November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWP, Part I).
684. "Blistering" refers to the practice of applying irritants "to the body in the belief that diseases could be brought out from internal organs to the surface to be dispelled. This was then carried out with a blistering plaster made of fat or wax applied to the skin" (Jen Willetts, "19th Century Medical Terms," Free Settler or Felon?, accessed 19 September 2017, http://www.jenwilletts.com/19thcentury\_medical\_terms.htm). "The practice ... was performed by deliberately giving the patient a second degree burn and then draining the resulting sore" ("Blistering," A History of Allopathy, accessed 29 January 2021, <http://naturalhealthperspective.com/tutorials/allopathy.html>). See similar treatment given to John Bouttatz Whistler, referred to in the entry for Friday [October] 16th, NYPL: AWP, Part II, and accompanying Note 540.
685. Persons mentioned in the entry for Saturday evening, Feb 27th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: John Stevenson Maxwell, former secretary to the American Legation in St. Petersburg, when Charles Stewart Todd was envoy (M<sup>r</sup>. Maxwell); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (my Mother, M<sup>rs</sup>. McNeill); Catherine (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler's sister (Kate, Sister, his wife); Dr. George Edwin Palmer, Anna Whistler's brother-in-law (Dr. P.); Emma (Boardman) Palmer, Julia McNeill Palmer, and George Edwin Palmer Jr. (his children); Joseph Swift Whistler, Kirk Boott Whistler, Charles Donald Whistler, John Bouttatz Whistler, the deceased Whistler children (our boys at Stonington); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (M<sup>rs</sup> Gellibrand, M<sup>rs</sup> G); her husband, William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (M<sup>r</sup> G, M<sup>r</sup> Gellibrand); and Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' physician (the doct).

686. Theodore Sedgwick Fay (b. New York 10 February 1807; d. Berlin 24 November 1898; buried Berlin) was a lawyer, newspaperman, author, and diplomat. He “was admitted to the bar in 1828,” but became an editor of the New York Mirror in the same year, where he continued “a series of light essays ... begun by his father.” In 1833, he married Laura Gardenier (New York 16 April 1807 – Bern, Switzerland 31 August 1855) of New York and spent three years traveling abroad with her and “sending home sketches of travel and miscellaneous matter to be published in the [New York] Mirror.” His first novel was Norman Leslie: A Tale of the Present Times (1835), about an actual murder case. It became a best seller until attacked in December of that year by Edgar Allan Poe. He wrote three other novels: Sydney Clifton (1839), The Countess Ida (1840), and Hoboken, A Romance (1843). The latter two had as their subject the exposure of “the evils of dueling.” He wanted to create social change through his novels, as his father before him had wanted to in advocating “the abolition of imprisonment for debt” (The Reader's Encyclopedia of American Literature, p. 330). Eventually, the Fays returned permanently to Europe, where he held various diplomatic posts: first a minor one in London, followed by secretary of legation in Berlin from 1837 to 1853, and minister to Switzerland from 1853 to 1861. Laura (Gardenier) Fay died in 1855, while Fay was minister to Switzerland; his second wife, whom he married in 1861, was Elisabeth Anne Leutwein.

Fay continued writing until well over the age of eighty. He wrote a narrative poem entitled Ulric, or The Voices (1851) about “a German captain of horse who became a disciple of Martin Luther.” He also wrote schoolbooks on geography (1867 and 1873), slavery in America (1865 and 1872), and “a popular political history of Germany” in English (1889) (Dictionary of American Biography, vol. 6, pp. 305–306; Memorial IDs 147351773 and 198358566, findagrave.com).

687. It is possible that “Hogarth's works engraved by himself 153 plates,” ordered by Joseph Harrison Jr. on 12/24 March 1847, was identical to the volume James had been looking at. Harrison may even have seen the book or a catalogue the day before, when he and his wife accompanied the Whistlers home after the Aivazovskii exhibit and spent the day there. Harrison had previously placed a large book order with John Petherum, 94 High Holborn St., London, but on 12/24 March 1847 wrote to R.G. Fairbanks, London agent for Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, telling him the enclosed list was “from Henry C. Bohn’s catalogue for 1846.” He wanted two copies of the Hogarth work (Joseph Harrison Jr. to R.G. Fairbanks, Alexandrofsky, March 12/24, 1847, with an invoice of Books, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1).

688. Anna Whistler omitted the word “room.”

689. Maxwell wrote to Major Whistler:

I hasten to inform you of my return from Stonington, whither I went, with the remains of your infant son. Upon the arrival of the ship Switzerland, by which M<sup>r</sup> Fairbanks [Reuben Goodale Fairbanks] had shipped the box containing his body, M<sup>r</sup> Cruft, of the firm of Newbold and Cruft, immediately applied to M<sup>r</sup> Lawrence, the Collector, for a permit to receive it, without examination. This was given and as soon as possible thereafter, I prepared to proceed to Stonington. I saw General McNeill [William Gibbs McNeill] and a day was appointed for the journey. The General was to write to your son at Baltimore [George William Whistler] to come on, to accompany us and he was also to write to D<sup>r</sup> Palmer [George Edwin Palmer], informing him of the object and time of our intended visit— According to the agreement, I went on board the steamboat at four o’clock in the afternoon, ~~with~~ of Teusday [sic] last, the 19th, taking with me the remains and expecting to meet the General — He was not on board however, and I proceeded alone to Stonington. Early on the morning of Wednesday, I reached D<sup>r</sup> Palmers, and was received by him, as he had been informed by the letter of the General [Joseph G. Swift], of the intended visit— I found him, and M<sup>rs</sup> Palmer [Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer], and M<sup>rs</sup> McNeill [Martha (Kingsley) McNeill] and all in good health — During the morning we deposited the body of the poor child, beside the graves of his departed brothers, in the burial ground upon the premises adjoining the estate of the late M<sup>r</sup> Phelps — and I need scarcely add that all was conducted — ~~with~~ as you would have wished ... The evening of the same day – at nine o'clock, I returned in the steamer and reached the city at five o'clock yesterday morning. I went up to see General McNeill– and M<sup>rs</sup> McNeill [Maria (Cammann) McNeill] informed me in his absence, that he had been very very much disappointed in not reaching the boat in time. The hours of leaving of the different lines for Boston, had recently been changed, he had confused one with the other, and when he reached the ~~place of~~ wharf of the steamer, she had already gone ... Your son did not come on, in consequence of having a cold and his friends, thought it was improper for him to expose himself at this season, without being perfectly well– So my dear friend, I have now informed you of all the particulars attending the fulfilment of the duty, that your friendship confided to me. (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, January 22, 1847, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers).

690. Maxwell wrote Major Whistler that after the burial of John Bouttatz Whistler, “I passed the remainder of the day in the very agreeable society of D<sup>r</sup> Palmer and the family. The Doctor is a fine fellow– M<sup>rs</sup> Palmer a most amiable lady, and M<sup>rs</sup> McNeill an extraordinary person, for her age. She is willing to visit you at St Petersburg, and I have no doubt if she thought you would return a year or two hence, that she would go to Russia and accompany you to this country. The Doctor has several fine ... stout children ... Tell Willie and James, that I often thought while at Stonington of the stories they often recounted of their sports and companions while living there. The very place seemed familiar on this account and I expected every minute to see Jacky McNeil [Patrick Tracy Jackson McNeill, Anna Whistler’s nephew] come in and act a part” (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, January 22, 1847, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers).
691. 1 John 2:15: “Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.”
692. Luke 13:24: “Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able.”
693. 2 Corinthians 6:17: “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.”

694. Romans 6:4: “Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.”
695. Mark 14:8: “She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.”
696. This is a faulty sentence that I cannot make right.
697. Dr. Edward Jenner (17 May 1749 – 26 January 1823; see Image 193) was the discoverer of vaccination.
698. Benjamin Franklin (17 January 1706 – 17 April 1790) was an American printer, philosopher, writer, scientist, inventor, and statesman.
699. Charlotte Leon is referring to the family of Count Stanislaw Szczęśny [Felix] Potocki (1752 – 15 March 1805; see Image 324), who married, as his third wife, Zofia (born Glavani) (1760–1822; see Image 325), in her first marriage, Witt.
700. Stanislaw Potocki, son of the deceased Countess Zofia Potocka (see Image 325), had a house on the English Embankment in the 1820s (Petrovskaiia, Kontsertnaia zhizn’ Peterburga, p. 69; Smirnova-Rosset, Dnevnik, pp. 117–118).
701. See Leon in Appendix E for an explanation of which member of the Naryshkin family may be intended here.
702. On 27 December 1825, William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265) married in England Elizabeth Parkinson (b. 20 June 1794). Mrs. Gellibrand died in St. Petersburg on 5 February 1833. She was the maternal aunt of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, Emily Hall, and Marian Hall. At the time of Mr. Gellibrand’s marriage, Charlotte Leon would have been sixty-one years old.
703. Mrs. Leon, who had been living at 54 Galernaia, moved to the home of Mrs. Mary (Dillow) Snow, a widow, living in the house of Kuprianov at 20 Karavannaia Street, in the First Ward of the Third Admiralty District. Karavannaia is perpendicular to the Nevskii Prospekt, meeting it near His Majesty’s Own Personal Palace (BRBC STP 1845, fols. 134, 154; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 1, p. 62).
704. The Russian word for “laundress” is spelled “prachka” and pronounced “prah’chkuh.”
705. Koritskii himself had recorded earlier, on 30 December 1846 / 11 January 1847, in notes he was keeping on the life and works of Karl P. Briullov (see Image 173), that he “was painting a portrait of the American,” but did not specify who the American was (GRM OR: Koritskii, Zapisi, fol. 22v). I believe it was James, and now it was Willie’s turn. We know that Willie sat to Koritskii at least twice: on 1/13 March and 7/19 March 1847 (see entry dated Wednesday March 23rd, NYPL: AWP, Part II). The whereabouts of both of these portraits are unknown.

706. Anna Whistler is probably referring to Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (see Image 439), who had been postponing his inspection of the railroad with Major Whistler and Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (the Count) (see Image 243).
707. Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna (Pavlovsk 6/18 August 1819 – St. Petersburg 9/21 February 1876; see Image 430), wife of His Highness Duke Maximilian-Eugene-Joseph-August-Napoleon of Leuchtenberg (Munich 20 September / 2 October 1817 – St. Petersburg 20 October / 1 November 1852; see Image 431), gave birth to a son, Evgenii Maksimilianovich, on 27 January / 8 February 1847 (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 25, Friday, January 31 [February 12 NS], 1846, p. 117). He was christened on 1/13 March (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 46, Thursday, February 27 [March 11 NS], 1847, p. 211, and no. 51, Wednesday, March 5 [March 17 NS], 1847, p. 255). His death date is 18/31 August 1901. See Kuz’min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, pp. 193–194, 195–196, 206. Anna Whistler meant to write “to be named.”
708. Anna Whistler and Willie witnessed the funeral procession of Prince Vasil’chikov on Tuesday, 25 February / 9 March 1847. From her vantage point she had the opportunity to see up close Emperor Nicholas I (The Emperor); his brother, Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (Michel); Crown Prince Aleksandr Nikolaevich (the Herétier); and Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (Count Klienmichel). See Images 420–423, 439, 425, 243.
709. Prince Illarion Vasilievich Vasil’chikov (b. 1776; see Image 310) died on 21 February / 5 March 1847 after a long illness; he was seventy or seventy-one years old. He was buried on 25 February / 9 March. His obituary in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti on the day of his funeral contained the following:

His deeds, excellent qualities and feelings were highly valued by Emperor Nikolai Pavlovich, as they had once been by His August Predecessor. More precious to the Prince than the public expressions and decorations with which he was honored and elevated was the unwavering confidence in him on the part of the Monarch, which accompanied him to the grave. The sympathy and attention of His Majesty in the final days of his earthly life mitigated [his] sufferings ... Over his grave, to the tears of his bereaved family will be added wholeheartedly the tears of the great family of the nation, the Father of whom not very long ago said: “Monarchs should thank heaven for such people!” (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 44, Tuesday, February 25 [March 9 NS], 1847, p. 203, taken from Severnaia pchela); see also Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 43, Sunday, February 23 [March 7 NS], 1847, p. 195, and Stroganov, Vasil’chikov, and Kushelev in Appendix E.

710. The Smol’nyi Institute for the Education of Young Noblewomen (see Image 147) was founded by Catherine the Great (see Image 414) in 1764 and “modelled after Mme de Maintenon’s seminary at St Cyr” (Hamilton, Art and Architecture, pp. 180, 190). The boarding school was first housed in the Resurrection Newmaiden Convent, “an establishment for orphan girls,” which had been designed by Rastrelli (1700–1771) for Empress Elizaveta Petrovna (see Image 413) (Hamilton, pp. 180, 190). The more usual name for this Convent was the Smol’nyi Convent, from the Russian word for “tar” (smola), because of its proximity to the area where tar had been stored for the navy in the time of Peter the Great. The future building for the school (1806–1808), built next to the Smol’nyi Convent, was designed by Giacomo Quarenghi (1744–1817), who considered it his masterpiece (Brumfield, History of Russian Architecture, pp. 250–253, 271, 292, 295–296, 319; Shvidkovskii, St. Petersburg, pp. 65–66, 71, 100, 102, 103; Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 3, pp. 183–188). It was located on the corner of Voskresenskaia Naberezhnaia Street and Orlovskaiia Street on the Grand Neva in the Rozhdestvenskaia District, Fourth Ward (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, pp. 103, 104). For a detailed description of the pupils’ activities, chiefly in the time of Catherine the Great, see Pyliaev, Zabytoe proshloe 1889, pp. 46–55; for the 1830s, see Bur’ianov, Progulka s det’mi, vol. 2, pp. 324–331.
711. The trip on the railroad referred to here took place “some days before” 25 February / 9 March 1847, the day of Prince Vasil’chikov’s funeral (see Image 310). Haywood does not refer to this trip in Russia Enters the Railway Age, but describes the railway line on pages 238–239. Major Whistler had eaten at midnight at the home of Joseph Harrison Jr. at Alexandrofsky.

712. See Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 122n62, 131–133, 141–145, 257, 258–260, 397–403. See also George Washington Whistler to General J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, 26 April 1845, 19 December 1845; 18 January 1847; 5 December 1848; and 31 January / 12 February 1849, NYPL: Swift Papers.

By saying “ye servants,” which means “the servants,” in the sense of “only servants,” Anna Whistler is suggesting a derogatory attitude on the part of the masters and railroad administrators towards the serfs.

713. This is Anna Whistler’s slightly incorrect pronunciation of the endearing form of the servant’s name, which should read “Parasha,” pronounced “Pahrah’shuh.” This endearing form represents two given names: Yevpraksiia and Praskoviia. The peasant versions of Yevpraksiia are Apraksiia and Yevprakseia, while for Praskoviia, they are Paraskoveia and Praskoveia (Petrovskii, Slovar’ russkikh lichnykh imen, pp. 104, 182–183, 339–340).
714. Wednesday was 24 March. Major and Anna Whistler and Debo attended on 7/19 March. The exhibit, which ran from 26 February through 8 March [10 March through 20 March NS], consisted of works by a single artist, Academician Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (see Image 178), famous for his marine paintings. As “many admirers of the fine arts, who had not had the opportunity of visiting Aivazovskii’s studio ... had long been making known their wish to see his works again[,] His Imperial Highness [Maksimilian Leuchtenberg], President of the Academy of Fine Arts, had, with the Emperor’s ... permission, ordered that several rooms in the Academy be set aside for an exhibit of Aivazovskii’s paintings” (Sanktpeterburgskie ведомosti 44, Tuesday, February 25 [March 9 NS], 1847, p. 203). For documents concerning the proposal, permission for and announcement of the exhibit, see RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, d. 3224. Delo o vystavke v Akademii kartin Akademika Aivazovskogo dlia pokazaniia publike [Concerning the exhibit in the Academy of paintings by Academician Aivazovskii for the purpose of showing them to the public].

Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (Gaivazovskii) (1817 – 1900) was born in Feodosia in the Crimea, where he received his primary education at the Armenian parish school. The discovery of his talent for drawing resulted in his being taken by a benefactor to Simferopol, where he studied in the local high school from 1830 to 1833. Here his talent was discovered to be extraordinary. One of his drawings was submitted to S. Tonci in St. Petersburg and, in August 1833, Aivazovskii arrived to enrol at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts as a pensioner of the Cabinet of His Imperial Majesty. His talent, accompanied by an equally extraordinary capacity for hard work, resulted in a prodigious artistic productivity, which he himself later assessed at six thousand works, not including watercolors and drawings. He was assigned to the landscape-painting class of Professor M.N. Vorobiev (1789–1855). In 1835, he was appointed assistant to the French marinist, P. Tanneur (1795–1878), who was in the Imperial court service. Aivazovskii received the small silver medal and was put forward by A.N. Olenin (see Image 307), president of the Academy, to paint his first independent work: A View of the Sea in the Environs of St. Petersburg (Vid na vzmor'e v okrestnostiakh Peterburga), for which in 1836 he received the small gold medal. He achieved great acclaim in 1836 for five of his paintings presented at the Academy's autumn exhibition. He came into conflict, however, with the authorities when Tanneur, accused by public opinion of jealousy, complained to Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) that Aivazovskii had shown five paintings instead of one without Tanneur's knowledge. The intercession of Professor A.I. Sauerwied (1783–1844), head of the battle-scene painting class, assuaged the anger of the emperor, who had ordered that Aivazovskii's paintings be taken down. In April 1837, Aivazovskii was assigned to the Baltic Fleet and in summer of that year took part in the fleet's maneuvers in the Gulf of Finland. Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich (see Image 436), second son of Nicholas I, and admiral of the fleet, remained his patron for many years. In September 1837, Aivazovskii received the large gold medal for three marine paintings shown at the Academy exhibition, making him eligible to be sent abroad to study. In 1838, six of his paintings were acquired by Imperial decree for the Academy. The Council of the Academy then decided to send him to Feodosia to devote himself to marine painting. In 1839, he took part in naval campaigns, where his friendship with several fleet commanders aided the development of the sea battle theme in his works. In 1839 as well, the Academy awarded him the title of artist fourteenth class. In July 1830, he was sent to Europe to study for four years. His exhibitions in major cities of Europe were greeted enthusiastically. His painting Chaos (Khaos), executed in 1841, was acquired by Pope Gregory XVI (today it is in a monastery on the island of San Lazzaro in Venice). In 1842, in Naples, he met J.M.W. Turner (1775–1851), who expressed his enchantment with Aivazovskii's Bay of Naples on a Moonlit Night (Neapolitanskii zaliv v lunnuiu noch') in a poem to him. In June–July 1844, Aivazovskii returned to St. Petersburg for a year, where he was elected an academician, appointed the official artist of the Main Naval Staff Headquarters, and received an Imperial commission to execute six paintings of ports and fortresses on the Baltic coast. In 1845, he accompanied Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich on an expedition under the command of Admiral F.P. Litke (1797–1882) to Turkey, Asia Minor, and the islands of the Greek archipelago. In 1845–1846, he took part in the maneuvers of the Black Sea Fleet. In 1846, in Feodosia, he executed two paintings and arranged a celebration of his tenth anniversary as an artist. In the summer of 1846, he was present at the maneuvers of the Baltic Fleet and executed paintings on episodes from the history of the Russian fleet. In February–March 1847, an exhibition was held in the Academy of the paintings exhibited in Feodosia, augmented by seven of his paintings lent from the Imperial collection. After this exhibition he was appointed professor at the Academy. In 1848, he executed a series of paintings depicting sea battles and arranged an acclaimed first Moscow exhibition. Nicholas I was unable to persuade him to live in St. Petersburg, and as of the autumn of 1848 Aivazovskii made his home in Feodosia. For the next fifty years, he had more than fifty solo exhibitions in St. Petersburg and many abroad, including in the United States, which he visited in 1892–1893. He died in Feodosia in 1900. (Although a number of sources were consulted, Aivazovskii's biography in this note is based on G.N. Goldovskii, "Aivazovskii," in Bukharkin, Os'mnadsatoe stoletie, bk. 1, pp. 28–30).

715. One of the seven paintings by Aivazovskii (see Image 178) lent from the Imperial collection was Peter I at Krasnaia Gorka, the painting referred to by Anna Whistler (see Image 179). The full title of this large painting (223 cm x 335 cm) is Peter I at Krasnaia Gorka Lighting a Bonfire on the Shore as a Beacon to his Foundering Ships (Petr I pri Krasnoi gorke, razhigaiushchii kostyor dlia podachi signala gibnushchim svoim sudam). Executed in 1846, its subject was the 31st of August (OS) 1714, when the Baltic Fleet encountered a heavy storm in the Gulf of Finland. On that night, when his ships were threatened with destruction, Peter the Great went ashore in a ship's boat and ordered a bonfire to be lit as a beacon for them. The painting depicts the terrifying storm, dark clouds and flashes of lightning illuminating the foundering ships. Peter the Great is in the foreground, standing on the rocky shore, facing the ships

(N.S. Barsamov, Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii 1817–1900 [Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1962], pp. 67, 180, 195; N.S. Barsamov, Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii 1817–1900 [Leningrad: Khudozhnik RSFSR, 1983], pp. 19, 20). See also G.N. Gol'dovskii, Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii: zhivopis', risunki, akvareli iz muzeev Sankt-Peterburga [Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii: Paintings, Drawings, and Watercolors from St. Petersburg Museums] [St. Petersburg: Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei, 2000], pp. 5, 45, and plate 17). His back is to the bonfire. With his left hand he makes a staying gesture to the people around the bonfire. One holds brushwood to place on the bonfire, another holds a lit torch aloft, a third awaits the signal to light his torch. Today the painting may be seen in the State Russian Museum in St. Petersburg; for a review of the exhibit see Barsamov, Aivazovskii 1983, p. 20.

716. Aivazovskii (see Image 178) executed twenty-seven paintings during 1846, many of which were influenced by his recent trip to Constantinople and travel by sea along the shores of Asia Minor and the Greek Archipelago (Barsamov, Aivazovskii 1962, p. 65). In 1846, he also fulfilled commissions for views of Sevastopol, Feodosia, Kerch, and Odessa, and a series of battle paintings (sea battles at Reval, Vyborg, and Krasnaia Gorka, and two variants of the battle at Chesmé), The Loss of the Frigate “Ingermanland” (Gibel' fregata “Ingermanlanda”), and the abovementioned Peter I at Krasnaia Gorka Lighting a Bonfire on the Shore As a Beacon to His Foundering Ships. This was the first large group of paintings by Aivazovskii having as their subject the history of the fleet (Barsamov, Aivazovskii 1962, pp. 65, 66–67).

Aivazovskii executed two paintings of Constantinople in 1846: Constantinople (Konstantinopl') and View of Constantinople by Moonlight (Vid Konstantinopolia pri lunnom osveshchenii) (see Images 181–182). Also executed in 1846 were View of Odessa (Vid Odessy) (see Image 180), The Port of Cronstadt (Kronshtadtskii port), The Port of the City of Revel' (Port goroda Revelia), and The Port of Helsingfors (Gel'singforskii port) (Gol'dovskii, “Aivazovskii,” pp. 44, 58, and plates 14, 15, and 20; Bulgakov, Aivazovskii, p. 41). They are probably among the paintings Anna Whistler was referring to.

717. In her 1993 PhD thesis, Caroline S.H. Nutty proposes that it was largely due to the influence of the Whistlers that Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226) became interested in art. The Aivazovskii exhibit was “the first documentation of Harrison actually attending an art exhibition, and it occurred in Russia in the company of the Whistlers” (Caroline S.H. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison, Jr. (1810–1874): Philadelphia Art Collector,” 2 vols.

- [PhD diss., University of Delaware, 1993], vol. 1, pp. 145–146). He and his wife, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (see Image 227), spent this day at the Whistlers' home.
718. The sitting on Friday, 7/19 March, was Willie's second sitting for his portrait. The first sitting had been on 1/13 March. Classrooms and pensioners' (gold-medal students') quarters were on the third floor of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. Koritskii (see Images 167–170) was not a gold-medal student, but was closely associated with Karl P. Briullov (see Image 173), academician, mentor, and family friend.
719. James had not been out of the house for nine weeks. He was permitted by Dr. James Rogers to take a drive on 8/20 March, the day the exhibit closed. There is nothing to suggest that he went to see it then.
720. The Palm Market in 1847 commenced on Thursday, 13/25 March. Russian Orthodox Easter occurred on Sunday, 23 March / 4 April. Anna Whistler made no further comments about Easter 1847. See Images 378–379 for icons representing these feast days.
721. Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (see Image 439) visited the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225) on Tuesday, 11/23 March 1847.
722. Anna Whistler apparently meant to write “between.”
723. Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) visited the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225) on 4/16 March 1847, which was a Tuesday. See Major G.W. Whistler to General J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, April 8/20, 1847, NYPL: Swift Papers; J. Harrison Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, March 7/20 [sic] 1847, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fols. 51–54; and Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 276–277. The emperor was accompanied by Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (Count K), Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich (the Herétier), and Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich (Grand Duke Constantine), as well as unnamed members of the Court (see Images 243, 425, 436). Thomas DeKay Winans (see Image 229) was the engineer on the train. While relying partly on Anna Whistler's diaries, Haywood pointed out that although she wrote that “the Héretier,” Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich, was present at Aleksandrofsky, Harrison later wrote “that at the time he was in the Caucasus and inspected the factory only later” (Haywood, p. 283n86).

724. The day after the emperor's visit to the American works was 5/17 March.
725. The letters conferring the award and Major Whistler's response are to be found in RGIA: Fond 207, op. 5, d. 346. O nagrazhdenii lits uchastvuiushchikh v postroenii S-P-M. zh. d. 4 marta 1847 g. – 21 marta 1847g. [Concerning the awards made to persons participating in the building of the St. P.-M. r.r. 4 March 1847 – 21 March 1847] (16 March – 2 April NS)].

Major Whistler wrote on 11 March (OS) 1847, to Count Kleinmikhel': "of this high mark of His Majesty the Emperors approbation, I shall ever feel proud, and for the very flattering light in which it has pleased Your Excellency to represent my services, and the very kind manner in which you yourself presented me with the insignia of the order, and communicated to me His Majestys approbation, I shall ever feel most grateful, and I pray Your Excellency to receive my most respectful and sincere acknowledgments" (RGIA: Fond 207, op. 5, d. 346, fols. 19 r and v). On the Russian translation of the letter, Kleinmikhel' wrote in Russian: "Have read it with pleasure" (RGIA: Fond 207, op. 5, d. 346, fol. 20r).

The Order of St. Anne (see Image 252) was founded in 1735 by Duke Karl-Friedrich of Holstein-Gottorp in honor of his recently deceased wife, Anna Petrovna, Peter the Great's daughter. It came to be part of the system of Russian orders in 1797 on the day Paul I (see Image 417) was crowned emperor. The motto of the order was "To Those Who Love Justice, Piety and Faith," and the order was awarded for "great deeds in civil service and labors for the public benefit." The Order of St. Anne (2nd class) was a red enameled four-armed cross with a gold border and azure ornamentation between the arms of the cross. In a central medallion was "a painted image of St. Anne in a landscape." The second-class order was worn around the neck on a red ribbon with a yellow stripe running down each side of it but leaving a red edge. As of 1829, an Imperial crown was added to the first and second class of the order and "was attached to the upper arm of the cross" (Nancy Eickel, ed., Moscow: Treasures and Traditions [Washington, DC: Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service; Seattle and London: University of Washington Press, 1990], pp. 141, 258; Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, pp. 136–137; V.A. Durov, Russkie i sovetskie boerye nagrody [Russian and Soviet Military Awards] [Moscow: Istoricheskii muzei, Vneshtorgizdat, 1990], pp. 5, 36–39). A snippet of the

- scarlet and yellow ribbon without the cross is in GUL: Whistler Collection, W662.
726. Colonel Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (see Image 247), head of the Northern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, and Colonel Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (see Image 248), head of the Southern Administration, were promoted to the rank of major general (RGIA: Fond 446, op. 6, d. 2. Vysochaishie prikazy ianv. 9, 1847 – dek. 6, 1847 [Highest Orders Jan. 9, 1847 – Dec. 6, 1847]).
727. Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226), Thomas DeKay Winans (see Image 229), and Andrew Eastwick (see Image 233) each received a diamond ring from the emperor. The value was equivalent to $750 US, and it was possible to receive cash instead (Joseph Harrison Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandrofsky, March 18/30, 1847, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison Jr. to sister, Martha, Alexandroffsky, April 4/16, 1847). The letters conferring the awards and the responses of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick are to be found in the same file as those concerning Major Whistler's Order of St. Anne (2nd class) (RGIA: Fond 207, op. 5, d. 346[see Note 725 above for document title]).
728. Persons mentioned in the entry for [Thursday] April 15th who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: the Whistlers' laundress (Pratchka); Dr. James Rogers, the Whistlers' physician (Doct Rogers, our good doct); and General Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (gen.<sup>l</sup> Melnikoff).
729. Sarah Jane Mirrielees's (b. 1830) mother (M<sup>ES</sup> M) was her step-mother, Jane (Muir) Mirrielees, as of 21 July 1844 her father, Archibald Mirrielees's (Aberdeen 7 September 1797 – London 13 February 1877), third wife (Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, pp. 18, 19–29). Her aunt was her step-mother's sister, Mary Muir (1815 – buried 24 August 1896), who had come to Russia in the spring of 1846 (Pitcher, pp. 18, 19–29, 31, 33–34; H. Pitcher, Cromer, Norfolk, to E. Harden, 11 July 2000). Sarah Jane Mirrielees's biological mother was Archibald Mirrielees's first wife, Sarah Newbold (Spurr) Mirrielees (d. 1835). They were married in Sheffield, England, on 14 February 1828 (Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, pp. 14, 16).
730. The lack of stability of the local climate has almost become proverbial for determining the lack of character of the people. Sudden changes in the atmospheric temperature in Petersburg are so varied and rapid that it is impossible to guarantee in the morning what the weather will be like in the afternoon. The distinguishing feature of the climate consists in a gradual periodic movement of the average temperature of the months (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, p. 35).

731. The Sunday before was 20 April / 2 May 1847.
732. Tuesday and Wednesday were 22 April / 4 May and 23 April / 5 May 1847.
733. Anna Whistler, James, and Willie saw Nicholas I reviewing a regiment on Friday, 25 April / 7 May 1847.
734. Mary (Grant) Gwyer (c. 1811 – 25 November / 7 December 1894) was the wife of Samuel Keate Gwyer (c. 1808 – St. Petersburg 27 November 1879 ), whom she had married on 27 January / 8 February 1842 (PREC STP, nos. 5139, 500). They lived on the English Embankment (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 21; the house number is not given).
735. Anna Whistler left a blank here for the name of the regiment.
736. The lady was Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna (Maximiliana-Wilhelmina-Augusta-Sofia-Maria) (Darmstadt 27 July / 8 August 1824 – St. Petersburg 22 May / 3 June 1880; see Images 426–427), Princess of Hesse-Darmstadt, the wife of Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich (Moscow 17/29 April 1818 – St. Petersburg 1/13 March 1881; see Image 425), with their children, Grand Duke Nikolai Aleksandrovich (Tsarskoe Selo 8/20 September 1843 – Nice 12/24 April 1865; see Image 429) and Grand Duchess Aleksandra Aleksandrovna (Tsarskoe Selo 18/30 August 1842 – St. Petersburg 16/28 June 1849). Grand Duke Nikolai Aleksandrovich died in Nice of cerebrosppinal meningitis (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, p. 266). His brother, Grand Duke Aleksandr Aleksandrovich (St. Petersburg 26 February / 10 March 1845 – Livadia 20 October / 1 November 1894), became Alexander III (Kuz'min, p. 82).
737. On 11/23 April 1847, His Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich (St. Petersburg 9/21 September 1827 – Pavlovsk 13/25 January 1892) and Her Highness Princess Alexandra-Frederica-Henrietta-Antoinna-Marianna of Saxe-Altenburg (Altenburg 26 June / 8 July 1830 – St. Petersburg 23 June / 6 July 1911) were betrothed (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 88, Tuesday, April 22 [May 4 NS], 1847, p. 409). She received the name of Aleksandra Iosifovna (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, pp. 94, 170). See Images 436–438.

738. On 10/22 April 1847 in St. Petersburg, Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna (see Images 426–427) gave birth to a son, who was given the name Vladimir (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 80, Saturday, April 12 [April 24 NS], 1847, p. 365). Vladimir Aleksandrovich was christened on 30 April / 12 May (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 94, Tuesday, April 29 [May 11 NS], 1847, p. 433, and no. 95, Wednesday, April 30 [May 12 NS], 1847, p. 437). He died in St. Petersburg on 4/17 February 1909 (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, p. 120).
739. On Tuesday, 18 May 1847, neighbors came to the Whistler home to celebrate Major Whistler's 47th birthday. Only Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Image 266) is identified.
740. Anna Whistler, writing to James on his forty-second birthday, mentioned these gifts and "the established custom ... of presenting ... gifts" to others on one's birthday (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Talbot House [Hastings], 11 July 1876, GUL: Whistler Collection, W552).
741. It has not been possible to locate the notes that James and Willie wrote to their father on his birthday.
742. The Demidov Home for the Care of Workers was located on the Moika opposite the New Holland building. It was founded in 1833 by Anatolii Nikolaevich Demidov (1812–1870) and was under the "August Patronage" of the empress. It consisted of four divisions: (1) for the care of workers; (2) for the upbringing of poor young women; (3) for the care of young female children; and (4) for the feeding of the poor. In the wing of the Home along the Moika there was a store, open every day, for the sale of needlework and for the exhibition of such articles at the end of Lent. The articles were made by women who either received work from the institution to do at home or who brought their own work to sell in the store. The work consisted of custom orders for the sewing of linens, dresses, gloves, and embroidery. The young women in the second division received an education in a few subjects, but particular attention was paid to perfecting their skills in needlework.

A special exhibit was held annually for the sale of needlework produced by these young women, who were the pensioners of members of the Imperial family, of the founder of the Home, and of the Imperial Philanthropic Society, etc. (Bur'ianov, Progulka s det'mi, vol. 2, 102–107; Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1846, pp. 187–189). Handmade work, made in the men's division, was also available for sale at the Demidov store.

Anna Whistler wrote that she bought the gift “as” instead of “at” Demidov’s.

743. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti carried the announcement that on 5 May (17 May NS) at 10 a.m. the locomotive of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway pulled several cars to the village of Kolpino (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 101, Thursday, May 8 [May 20 NS], 1847, p. 465). The formal opening took place on 7/19 – 9/21 May (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 337).
744. Anna Whistler seems to have written two entries for Wednesday, 19 May: the previous one for the birthday of her husband and this one, the day of arrival of the Ingersolls and the Bliss family (see her entry a year later for Friday the 19th of May 1848). The second entry is erroneously dated 21 May. See Bliss in Appendix E.
745. “Monday – May 17th 1848 [sic: 1847] I could hardly believe my senses when I came on deck this morning! ... The land in the far distance, covered with snow: fields of ice about us, ploughing our way through ... I never before felt such pinching cold! and yet this is the 17th of May! ... We fell in with several ships, all more or less; ice bound ... Thursday [sic: Tuesday] May 18th. At about 3 o'clock this morning, our steamer came to a stop! – we were some 40 miles from Cronstadt, and the ice floes permitted us to go ‘thus far and no further’. Some two hundred sailing vessels, and the steamers keep us company! the cold is more intense than yesterday, and remaining on deck is out of the question. At noon a steamer from Cronstadt to Stettin is in sight, and is forcing its way towards us thro’ the ice pack. We ‘fired up’, and started breaking the paddles of the side wheels, but reaching Cronstadt in the evening” (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fols. 1, 2, 3). See also Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 102, Friday, May 9 [May 21 NS], 1847, p. 469.
746. The reference is to Benjamin Ropes Prince (1822–1902). See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E and Image 270.
747. The American envoy, Ralph Isaacs Ingersoll (New Haven, CT 8 February 1789 – New Haven, CT 26 August 1872), and his son, Colin Macrae Ingersoll (New Haven, CT 11 March 1819 – New Haven, CT 13 September 1903; see Image 280), who was his private secretary ad interim attached to the Legation, arrived in St. Petersburg on Wednesday, 19 May 1847, as did the Bliss family (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fols 4–5, 8). Anna Whistler’s entry of May 23rd, in which the date is wrong, breaks off in mid-sentence, and the next entry was written in Preston, so she did not have time to record that on Thursday 15/27 May they entertained the Ingersolls, who met at their home “most of the American Colony ... the Ropes’ of Boston, and Mr. Gillebrand ... who married Miss Ropes” (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 16). See Bliss in Appendix E.

748. The Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti carried the following announcement of the departure of the Bliss family: “George Bliss and wife Mary, son George and daughter Sarah; accompanying them a courier, Antonio Saliba, foreigner.” Their domicile was in the First Admiralty District, Fourth Ward, No. 240–41 (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 103, Saturday, May 10 [May 22 NS], 1847, p. 476). This means they were staying at the misses Benson’s boarding house at 240–241 English Embankment. As they were not staying long in St. Petersburg, they placed the first of the three required departure announcements soon after they arrived. The other two appeared in Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 104, Sunday, May 11 [May 23 NS], 1847, p. 480 and no. 106, Thursday, May 15 [May 27 NS], 1847. See also BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fols. 7–8; Autobiography of George Bliss, pt. 1, N-YHS: Bliss Papers, fols. 33, 38–41; and Bliss in Appendix E.
749. The date is Friday, 21 May, St. Nicholas Day (9 May OS), an official holiday. The feast day was dedicated to the Springtime Nicholas (Nikola Vesnii), the protector of seamen, fishermen, commerce, and agriculture (Fedosiuk, Chto neponiatno u klassikov, p. 21). He was also considered an intercessor for the peasants, who believed that if you asked St. Nicholas for something he would tell the Savior (Rozhnova, Radonitsa, pp. 73–4, 171). The celebration Anna Whistler mentions was an annual pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Nicholas. After a Mass, there was a procession with the miracle-working icon from the church where it was kept (see Image 410) “to and from a chapel slightly over three miles away, where, it was said, the holy image had first appeared” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 277). The opening of the sixteen-mile section of railway from St. Petersburg to Kolpino “was set to coincide with this religious festival” (Haywood, p. 277). After the procession, the local fair was declared open (“Poezdka po novoi zheleznoi doroge. Pis'mo k redaktoru” [“A Ride on the New Railway. Letter to the Editor”], Illustratsiia [Illustration] (June 1847): pp. 345–347). The depot that Major Whistler had to be at by 8 a.m. several mornings that week was a temporary station built next to the permanent building, which “was still under construction.” The opening of the St.

Petersburg–Kolpino section took place on 7–9 / 19–21 May 1847:

For first-class passengers there was the Imperial car and for second-class the three recently completed passenger cars. In each of these cars 42 benches for 84 passengers were installed. For third-class passengers, 24 flat cars were used, each having 26 benches for 78 passengers, thus providing a total capacity (excluding first class) for 2,124 passengers. The first passenger train from St. Petersburg arrived at Kolpino about 10 a.m. on May 5, with the fares being 75, 50 and 25 kopecks for the three classes. The railway was not officially opened until May 7. The day of greatest traffic was ... May 9, which was a cloudy day with the morning temperature slightly below freezing. Nevertheless large crowds gathered at the St. Petersburg terminal. ... Three trains were dispatched, taking about 45 minutes to make the journey, a start-to-stop average of about 21 m.p.h. (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 277–278).

This section of the railway was “the only part ... opened to the public for another three years” (Haywood, p. 278), and the only completed part Major Whistler lived to see.

750. Anna Whistler and her sons landed at Hull on 12 June 1847. The three announcements of the departure from St. Petersburg of “Anna Whistler, wife of an Engineer, with two sons, James and William, and a servant, Mary Brennar [sic: Brennan], foreigners resident at 237 English Embankment,” appeared in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 108, Saturday, May 17 [May 29], 1847, p. 478; 110, Tuesday, May 20 [June 1], 1847, p. 508; and 112, Thursday, May 22 [June 3], 1847, p. 518.
751. Anna Whistler’s letters to her husband, written on 8 June 1847 on board the steamer Nikolai and on 10 June 1847 at the Hotel “Stadt Hamburg” in Lübeck, give greater detail about their life on board the ship and their stay in Lübeck. The letters are particularly interesting for the expression in them of Anna Whistler’s deep love for her husband and her analysis of her own character and that of James (Anna Whistler to George W. Whistler, Tuesday morning June 8th 1847 Steamer Nicolai; “Staat Hamburg” Lubec June 10th 1847, GUL: Whistler Collection, W353).
752. The Vittoria Hotel stood at the corner of Nelson and Queen streets, facing the River Humber. It was named for Wellington’s victory at Vittoria, news of which was received in Hull on the day in 1803 that the hotel was ready for opening (Port of Hull Monthly Trade Review 13, no. 6 [June 1917]: p. 15).

753. Although the Hull directories and burgess rolls contain no reference to William Ropes or to the firm of William Ropes, the directories of 1846 and 1848 list two Bamfords: (1) “Bamford Charles, wine and spirit merchant, 76, Lowgate; h. 3 George street”; and (2) “—— [Bamford] Charles, jun., hide & bark merchant, 32, High street; h., Cottingham Hall” (F. White and Co., General Directory of Kingston-Upon-Hull, and the City of York, Sheffield, UK: F. White, 1846; William Stephenson, ed., Stephenson’s Directory of Kingston-Upon-Hull and Its Environs (Hull: W. Stephenson, 1848). Mr. Ropes’s letters were more likely to the second Bamford, who sent his clerk to assist Anna Whistler.
754. They took the train to York on Sunday, 13 June 1847.
755. A description of York Cathedral (see Image 461), or York Minster, as it was called after it was rebuilt following the fire of 20 May 1840, is given in The Stranger’s Guide Through the City of York, Describing the Magnificent Cathedral, the Parish Churches, St. Mary’s Abbey, the Yorkshire Museum, and Every Object of Interest in the City, Together with an Historical Account from the Earliest Times (York, England: Blyth and Moore, [c. 1846], pp. 18–28. On Wednesday, 20 May 1840, “the whole of the nave” burned down (Stranger’s Guide 1846, p. 29). It had been fully reconstructed by the time Anna Whistler, James, and Willie saw it.

[The west front of the Cathedral consists] of two uniform steeples, 196 feet in height, connected by a lofty gable, surmounted by an open battlement ... In the centre division is the grand entrance into the church, by two spacious doors, separated by a stone mullion, and over these is a splendid window ... The whole front is 124 feet in breadth ... Above the centre door sits a figure of the founder, William de Melton, bearing a model of a church on his hand; the tracery of the arch represents the story of Adam and Eve in paradise ... In the South tower hang a peal of twelve bells ... In the North tower is suspended a stupendous bell, “The Great St. Peter,” ... cast on the 18th of January, 1845, ... the largest ever cast in this country ... The usual place of entrance, and the oldest part of the minster, is the South Transept, a fine specimen of early English architecture ... the Lantern Tower separates the Transepts; it is lighted by eight windows of stained glass, ... the roof, rising to a height of 186 feet from the floor, is beautifully adorned with tracery ... The North Transept though of a later date, differs little in style from the South. At the end is a window of exquisite beauty ... the painted glass represents embroidery ... In one corner of this Transept is the entrance to the Chapter House ... an octagon of 63 feet in diameter, the height to the middle knot of the roof is 67 ft. 10 inches, without the interruption of a single pillar, being entirely dependent for support on a pin geometrically placed in the centre. The outside, however, is strengthened by eight buttresses ... Below the windows are 44 stalls for the canons who composed the chapter ... Here you have figures of men and beasts in the most antic postures; ... the Great Western Aisle or Nave, is the most spacious of any church in Europe, except St. Peter's, at Rome ... It is divided into three aisles, the pillars forming eight equal arches; the foliage in the capitals exhibit a great variety of design, no one capital having the same foliage around ... an open gallery runs on both sides of the nave, intended for spectators to view the grand ceremonies of the Romish church ... The view of the interior of this stupendous pile is inconceivably magnificent ... Upward, the eye is dazzled with the immensity of space; in front, is a vista of 524 feet in length, and at the extremity the noble east window ... The West window is ... a perfect specimen of the leaf tracery that marks the style of the 14th century ... But the glory of the whole is the Great East Window ... 75 ft. high, and 30 feet 9 inches broad ... Each pane of glass is nearly a yard square; the figures are in general from 2 feet 2 inches to 2 feet 4 inches high, the heads beautifully drawn. A stone gallery runs across dividing the window into two parts. The view from this elevation is inconceivably grand; the whole interior of the church, a vista of more than 500 feet is before you, with the beautiful west window at the termination ... The approaches to the minster have latterly been much improved by the removal of a number of old houses which stood so near the church as to preclude all view of the building. (Stranger's Guide 1846, pp. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 28)

756. The "Station of the York and North Midlands Railway Company [was] a handsome building" occupying "the site of a monastery of mendicant friars, founded by Henry III," and "anciently called Les Toftes or Kinge's Toftes" (Stranger's Guide 1846, p. 45). At this time, the location was called "Toft Green."

757. The Royal Hotel was at the corner of Museum and Blake Streets, more or less opposite the present site of the North Yorkshire County Library (Slater's Royal National Commercial Directory and Topography of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire (Manchester, UK: Isaac Slater, 1849), p. 557).
758. The Royal Hotel was often known as Etridge's Royal Hotel or Etridge's Hotel, from the name of its proprietor, Thomas Etridge (Slater's Directory of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, p. 557).
759. A Yorkshire farmer's breakfast is described in Joan Poulson, Yorkshire Cookery (London: B.T. Batsford, 1979), p. 20, but there is no literature in the local studies collection of the York Library about what comprised Etridge's Yorkshire breakfast.
760. It is not possible to determine who conducted the services on 13 June 1847, the day of Anna Whistler's visit, nor what the scheme of service was, as there is a gap in the service registers between 1837 and 1872. The earliest order of service in the York Minster Archives is 1861, and the earliest scheme of service 1881 (Peter Young, York Minster Archives, to E. Harden, 16 May 2001).
761. The previous Sabbath was Sunday, 6 June 1847.
762. Anna Whistler seems to mean that they left Russia ten days before the Sabbath spent in York (13 June).
763. Kate Prince, who had come to America in 1827 from England at the age of seven with her parents and only sister, Leslie (bap. Manchester 1812), had been taken back by her father, John Dynely Prince to attend the Manor School in York in 1833, when she was thirteen. She returned to Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1836, perhaps because Leslie Prince, who was in England in 1836, died in Liverpool on 25 May. Her body was sent home for burial (M. Humberston, supervising librarian, Genealogy and Local History Library, Connecticut Valley Historical Museum, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 20 May 2002; Vital Records of Lowell Massachusetts to the End of the year 1849, vol. 4: Deaths [Salem, MA: Essex Institute, 1930], p. 245; The Liverpool Chronicle, Saturday, May 28, 1836; Kate (Prince) Livermore to Elizabeth R. Pennell, September 5, 1906, LC: P-W, box 292, fol. 2898v). It has not been possible to ascertain where she was buried. A local historian says she cannot have been buried in Lowell Cemetery, which did not open until 1841; nor is she listed as reburied there (Catherine Goodwin, Chelmsford, MA, to E. Harden, 15 September 2002). However, the Vital Records of Lowell, MA cite “G.R.5” as her place of burial. For information on the Manor School see following Note.

764. St. Mary’s Abbey (see Image 462) was a monastery founded in the time of Edward the Confessor for a small community of Benedictine monks, and dedicated to St. Olave. The dedication was changed to St. Mary by William II, who granted large tracts of land and great privileges to the fraternity, which subsequently became one of the most extensive and powerful monastic establishments in the kingdom. After being “totally destroyed by fire in 1137,” and lying “in ruins for about 140 years,” it “was rebuilt on a scale of grandeur and extent unequalled in that age,” its “buildings ... inclosing an area of nearly three quarters of a mile. The church was ... equal in size to most cathedrals ... Excavations indicate that the choir and nave were of equal proportions, having eight windows on each ... The principal ruin is a part of [this] church ... and is situate near the church-yard of St. Olave; it consists of eight light gothic window arches, with carved capitals, but the tracery and the greater part of the mullions are decayed; a small part of each end of the church also remains” (Stranger’s Guide 1846, p. 31).

The Yorkshire Philosophical Society, founded in 1822, finding that the collection of its small museum had outgrown the building in which it was housed, “obtained a grant of three acres of the abbey ground on which to erect a building for a Museum, and for the formation of a botanic garden.” “The Society later purchased about six acres that included the abovementioned ruins, thus preserving them from further dilapidation. The Yorkshire Museum opened on 2 February 1830 and housed not only geological, mineral and zoological collections, but “a variety of fragments of beautiful sculpture from the adjoining ruins.” The “highly cultivated garden” Anna Whistler refers to, in the midst of which the ruins were located, was the museum’s gardens. “The grounds [were] entered through Museum-street, through a handsome gateway of the Doric order” and were easily accessible from their hotel on the corner of Museum and Blake Streets (Stranger’s Guide 1846, pp. 34, 35).

After the dissolution of monasteries, Henry VIII “ordered a palace to be built out of [the] ruins [of St. Mary’s Abbey], as a residence for the lord president of the north,” to be called “the King’s Manor.” “James I ... ordered it to be enlarged, and converted into a regal palace,” which he “and succeeding sovereigns” used, although it continued to serve as the lord president’s residence. It served also as “the residence of the [city's] military governors," as a Catholic chapel in the reign of James II, and as the King's Mint. The "site of St. Mary's abbey, including the Manor," was granted to a series of lessees, starting at the end of the seventeenth century. Beginning with its lease by Tancred Robinson, Esq., "the greater part of the palace [was] rented from the family, for several successive generations, by the ancestors of Mrs. and Miss Tate," who, in 1818, were the occupiers and were running "the well known and highly respectable boarding-school for young ladies, ... long ... patronised by some of the principal families in York, and it's [sic] county." "Between 1822 and 1825, the school was "conducted by Mrs. and Miss Roddam" (William Hargrove, History and Description of the Ancient City of York, 2 vols. [York, UK: W. Alexander, 1818], vol. 2, pt. 2, pp. 576, 577, 578, 579; The Stranger's Guide Through the City of York and its Cathedral [York, UK: Bellerby's New Circulating Library, 1825], p. 104).

765. "The Manor house is entered by an arched gateway near Bootham bar, through a spacious court, leading to an inner court, in which are the principal buildings, lately converted into a School for the Blind" (Stranger's Guide 1846, pp. 32–33). This school was established in 1833 as a memorial to William Wilberforce, who was "for 28 years representative in parliament for the County of York" (Stranger's Guide 1846, p. 33). The Manor house and contiguous grounds were leased for ninety-nine years to establish the school for the blind and the first two pupils were taken in on 6 October 1835. In 1846, there were about seventy pupils of both sexes (Stranger's Guide 1846, p. 33). The boarding school for young ladies seems, however, to have existed alongside the School for the Blind for at least the first ten years of the latter's life, i.e., until about the mid-1840s: a pamphlet about the School for the Blind, dated 1883, states that the "ladies' boarding school ... was in existence and in good repute until within the last forty years" (Stranger's Guide 1846, p. 33).
766. The Deanery that stood in 1847 was completed in 1830. It stood on the north side of the Minster and had a conservatory built up against the Minster Library. It was described in 1978 reminiscences of the late 1920s as a "large, solid, square, 3-storied, symmetrical, mock-gothic pile ... in grey stone with an imposing porch and high carved chimneys" (Bernard Barr, lecture, York Minster Library, 1983, ts, p. 19).
767. This is Rev. Canon George Trevor, DD (1809 – Marton-in-Cleveland 8 June 1888), rector of All Saints Pavement York, 1847–1868; Magdalen Hall, BA 1846, MA 1847; DD Hartford College, US 1847; honorary MA 1880, honorary DD Durham 1886; Chaplain E.I.C.S. 1836–1846; Canon and Prebendary of York 1847; rector of Burton St. Peter 1868–1871; rector of Beeford, Yorkshire, 1871 until his death (Alumni Oxonienses, p. 1438; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Trevor, George”). Anna Whistler went later in the day with Willie and Mary Brennan to hear Rev. Canon Trevor at All Saints Church but was unable to remain for the service because it was to take place an hour later than she had anticipated.

768. Scarborough (see Image 463) was called in 1841 by Dr. Granville, author of The Spas of England, the “Queen [of] English sea-bathing places” and “a bay of Naples on the north-east coast of England.” It was a marine spa, “combin[ing] the advantages of mineral springs with those of a convenient and luxurious sea-bathing shore.”

As described by Granville, Scarborough had only since the late 1820s been making improvements in its offerings. Granville made reference to the “New Spa,” “which, like a turreted castle, is strongly seated on a sea wall nigh the shore, at the foot of [a] high bank covered with green, beneath Olive Mount.” Inside were “two mineral springs,” which “were formerly very insufficiently protected by a mean-looking building, from the inroads of the sea.” “Between this spot, and another equally high ground opposite, beyond which stand the two springs ... [is] a chasm four hundred feet wide ... with a depth of nearly eighty feet.” Cliff Bridge has been built across the chasm, “resting upon light iron arches, and supported by three square stone insulated piers seventy feet high; ... a lofty, open, iron railing serves as a protecting parapet along each of its sides.” “On the broad sands of [the] shore [below,] the Scarborough races are held,” when the tide recedes; and the bridge, from which the public can watch the races, has been called “the grandest stand of any race-ground in the world.” “In a small, sunken court of the castellated [Gothic] building, surrounded by stone walls, are the lion-mouthed spouts, known as the ‘North and South Wells or Spas’. [They are] placed at some little distance from each other, from which the mineral water is continually pouring.”

If one stands with one’s back “turned to the sea and its sweeping bays, ... the eye [is directed] to the toll-gate ... at the furthest extremity of the bridge [, where] the circular platform of ‘the Cliff’ expands. backed by its oblong square, formed of neat dwelling-houses.” On the left, one sees “the long side and square tower of Christchurch," a recently constructed building. Also visible is "the beginning of a projected grand crescent," begun in 1833, which, when completed, "will mask an unsightly range of stables erected on the same ridge." The Crescent was completed in 1857, but not according to the plan originally projected.

"Descending towards the sloping ravine at the bottom of which runs the road that passes under the bridge, to reach the Strand, the ridge ... terminates in a green knoll," where the Scarborough Museum, "a rotunda of Roman-Doric structure," is located. It is constructed of Hackness Stone, considered both beautiful and valuable because "in the quarry it is very soft, easily chiselled, and readily fashioned into architectural decoration; but ... soon becomes hard [and durable] on exposure to the air." The museum belongs to the Scarborough Philosophical Society. Built "for the display of British geological specimens ... the principal room, ... thirty-five feet high, and lighted from an aperture in the dome, ... contains sloping shelves, in which are displayed fossil specimens, such as corals; recent shells, and birds and animals." "[Every] part of the museum can be seen at once," because of this arrangement.

If one's "eye now returns to the centre of the Cliff Bridge, ... to the right or north side," one sees "[a] bold line of cliffs ... emerg[ing] from within the opening of Scarborough harbour, and ... project[ing] into the sea." The summit of this line of cliffs "rises higher the farther it stands out, until upon its loftiest point, ... more than three hundred feet above the highest tide, it exhibits the once famed, but now ruinous castle, within the surrounding walls of which lie concealed nineteen acres of smiling green land." One will see the parish "church of St. Mary, with its square tower ... farther inland, add[ing] to the effect of this picture by its contrast with the remains of the embattled walls of the castle; beyond which, the outline, gradually descending to the horizon, terminates at some distance with the piers of Scarborough harbour."

"Here [will be found] the many and heavy clusters of red brick dwellings of the humbler classes, which are thickly huddled together right and left of the opening of the harbour, spread some way inland, and form the primitive and old town of Scarborough."

Granville then goes on to praise the cold and warm baths; the strand with its walkers and equestrians in the early morning; the bathing-machines "on their broad wheels"; the outstanding fish to be had for dinner; the lack of dancing, sociability, and theater, but the availability of inland and water excursions, and angling. The Gazette shows a predominance of farmer aristocracy “from the East and West ridings” until August, replaced at that point by “those of a superior class.” Also lauded is the availability of jet, quarried at Whitby and cut into ornaments in Scarborough.

Finally, Granville praises the climate of Scarborough. Despite “its exposure on the east coast, . . . winds in an easterly direction” do not last longer here than in other areas. Scarborough is sheltered by hills that make “the winters remarkably mild,” and it is “open to the whole day’s sun” (Granville, Spas of England, vol. 1, Northern Spas, pp. 150, 157, 158–159, 160, 162, 175, 176–177, 179–181, 183–192).

In 1841, the population of Scarborough was about 9500; in 1851, about 12,000 (Arthur Rowntree, ed., The History of Scarborough [London: J.M. Dent and Sons, 1931], p. 281). “Houses were built on the east side of St. Nicholas Cliff in the [eighteen] forties with gardens on the undercliff” (Rowntree, p. 286–287); this is where Mrs. Ropes and Anna Whistler and their children were staying. “The earliest recorded display of fireworks took place [there] in 1844” (Rowntree, p. 275). See also Jack Binns, The History of Scarborough: From Earliest Times to the Year 2000 (Pickering, Yorkshire: Blackthorn, 2001), pp. iii, 234–235, 366–369.

769. Psalms 107:8: “Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!”
770. For Scarborough, see Note 768 above .
771. This is probably a reference to Andrew’s Temperance Hotel, 22 Newborough Street, Scarborough.
772. In the 1851 Census for Scarborough, the Wilsons, who owned 5 Cliff Terrace Cottages, appear as follows: “4 St. Nicholas Cliff—William Wilson (44, born Limehouse in London, a Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries, London, 22 years a General Practitioner), his wife Elizabeth (49?, Lodging House Keeper, born at East Ayton, near Scarborough) and their children, William Henry (16), Elizabeth Jane (13) and Walter (12), together with William’s mother, Philadelphia Alice (71) and sister-in-law, Mary Taylor (55, widow).”
773. The Scarborough Gazette and List of Visitors, which appeared weekly, confirms the stay in Scarborough of Mrs. Ropes and family of St. Petersburg in the issues of 5, 12, 19, and 26 June 1847, at 5 Cliff Terrace Cottages, owned by Mr. Wilson. Mrs. Ropes is Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers’ neighbor across the hall in St.

Petersburg. With her were her four children: Ellen Gellibrand Ropes, Mary Emily Ropes, Louisa Harriet Ropes, and William Hall Ropes. It was not possible to find printed confirmation in the Gazette of Anna Whistler's stay of one week. Her diary, however, confirms that she moved after a few hours from the Temperance Hotel to the Cliff Terrace Cottages and in a letter to his father James mentions "M<sup>rs</sup> Rope's cottage ... where we passed last week so delightfully!" (James Whistler to Major Whistler, Preston, Monday, June 21, 1847, GUL: Whistler Collection, W654).

774. Mrs. Ropes's mother was Harriet (Parkinson) Hall of Leeds. See Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall in Appendix E.
775. Cornelians, or carnelians, are a variety of chalcedony, a semi-transparent quartz, that has a clear deep-red, flesh-red, or reddish-white color. It polishes well, and is much used for seals because it is hard and tough.
776. This is William Hall Ropes. The Russian word for "nurse" is spelled "nianiushka" and pronounced "nyah'nyooshkuh."
777. The death of Emily Hall in 1846 is dealt with at length earlier in the entry for [Wednesday] April 15th.
778. Blackpool has a long stretch of coastline that is roughly divided into three areas: the North, Central, and South shores. Anna Whistler, James, Willie, and Mary Brennan had come from Yorkshire to Lancashire to stay in Preston with Anna Whistler's half-sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley and her husband, John Winstanley, for the summer. Accompanied by Anna Whistler's other half-sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, who shared a room at the Winstanley home with her, Anna Whistler, James, and Willie traveled to Blackpool without either Mary Brennan, who had gone to Ireland, or Eliza and John Winstanley.
779. According to the 1851 Census for Preston, Eliza and John Winstanley had a housemaid, unmarried, forty-two years old, named Elizabeth Chapman, born in Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland.
780. This is John Winstanley's brother, William Winstanley, MD, (6 December 1772 – 15 May 1852) of West Cliff, Preston. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 473.
781. Thomas Harper Whitaker, surgeon, of Beck Head, was summoned, as will become clear later in the text (Mannex, History, Topography, and Directory of Westmorland, and of the Hundreds of Lonsdale and Amounderness in Lancashire, Together with a Descriptive and Geological View of the Whole of the Lake District [Beverley, UK: W.B. Johnson, 1851], p. 359; Kendal Mercury Almanac [no publication information] for 1860 and 1861).

782. This is Richard Stuart Picard (bap. 16 January 1807 – 26 November 1887) of Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland, husband of John Winstanley's niece, Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
783. Kirkby Lonsdale (see Image 70) was a small market town on the west bank of the Lune River in the district of Cumbria (formerly Westmorland), about fifteen miles North-Northeast of Lancaster. It "had a charter for a market and fair as early as the year 1227" (Mannex, Westmorland, p. 348).
784. Calomel (mercurous chloride or protochloride of mercury) was used as a purgative.
785. Reverend Henry Walter McGrath (Dublin 1803 – Torquay 27 July 1884) was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he received his BA (1825) and MA (1830). He became deacon in 1829. He was PC of Walton-le-Dale from 1832 to 1837, and at the time of Anna Whistler's diaries was rector of St. Ann's, Manchester (August 1837 – 1852). He was rector of St. Paul's, Kersal Moor, from May 1852 to 1865. He was "hon. canon of Manchester 1858 to his death." He lived in Torquay from about 1878 until his death. He was the author of "The Sacraments, practically rejected by unitarians" in Unitarianism Confuted (1839) (Boase, Modern English Biography, vol. 2, p. 606).
786. The Parish Church of Walton-le-Dale was St. Leonard's.
787. March 25, 1847, had been appointed by Queen Victoria as a Day of Humiliation for the famine in Ireland (see Image 203). "The appointing of public fasts in cases of extraordinary danger was a custom coeval with the first institutions of society; it prevailed amongst the Israelites during those cruel wars and persecutions recorded in the Old Testament ... It had pleased the rulers of our nation to appoint this day to be kept as a solemn fast – a day of penitence and humiliation, for one of the severest visitations which could befall a people" ("The Fast Day in the Metropolis," The Times [London], Thursday, March 25, 1847).
788. Reverend McGrath is listed as pastor of St. Leonard's in 1832, but "the list is somewhat incomplete ... regarding dates when the duties of the officiating clergy terminated" (Frank Coupe, Walton-

- le-Dale: A History of the Village* [Preston, UK: Guardian, 1954], pp. 68, 69). His successor is listed as pastor in 1837 (Coupe, p. 69).
789. See Note 841 below for Henry Francis Beasley.
790. They had lunch on Sunday, 11 July, James's thirteenth birthday, at Cooper Hill (see Image 464), the home in Walton-le-Dale of Charles Swainson (6 July 1780 – 27 April 1866) and his wife, Catherine (Bradshaw) Warbrick Swainson (c. 1782 – between 1847 and 1851), who had married in 1802 (Hope F. Healy, An Historical Narrative of a Swainson Family From the West Yorkshire and Lancashire Counties of England 1513 to the 1880's [Decorah, IA: Anundsen, 1993], pp. 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 107); IGI for Lancashire; The Preston Chronicle and Lancashire Advertiser, April 28, 1866; printed registers of Walton-le-Dale). Charles Swainson was a partner in one of the largest cotton mills in Preston: Swainson, Birley and Co. (see Image 470) (Hope Koontz, "The Swainson and Birley Cotton Manufacturers of Preston from 1790," The Manchester Genealogist 28, no. 1 (1992): pp. 13–18; David Hunt, A History of Preston, 2nd ed. [Lancaster, UK: Carnegie, 2009], pp. 200, 207). Cooper Hill is discussed in Coupe, Walton-le-Dale, p. 170. It is possible that Charles Swainson was already a widower at this time (Healy, Swainson Family, p. 105).
791. A letter addressed to Mrs. L. Yates, secretary in the parish office of St. John's Church in Preston, with questions about John and Eliza Winstanley as communicants, including identification of their pew number, and asking for the location of the church's archives, went unanswered.
792. Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth (bap. 6 April 1808 – 28 February 1867) was the wife of Thomas Ainsworth (bap. 27 March 1804 – 28 June 1881), nephew of John Winstanley (Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xii). She is also mentioned in Eliza Winstanley's diary in Appendix D. See Ainsworth and Stirling in Appendix E.
793. Frances Jane (Swainson) McGrath (Yorkshire 20 February 1816 – 12 December 1886) was the wife of Rev. Henry Walter McGrath (IGI for Yorkshire). Mary (Woodville) Swainson (Liverpool 1 October 1811 – Sherwood near Torquay, Devon 31 May 1878) was the wife of Frances Jane (Swainson) McGrath's brother, William Bradshaw Swainson (c. 1809 – 24 September 1862), master cotton spinner; they married on 23 April 1836 (1841 and 1851 censuses for Walton-le-Dale; IGI; Marriage Register of St. John, Great Stanmore, Middlesex, GLRO; Healy, Swainson Family, p. 105).

794. Around the time of his marriage (1837) to Mary Laurie Stirling, Thomas Ainsworth “purchased the mills at Cleator, in Cumberland, [and] the property at the Flosh” (Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xiii).
795. Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth was the eldest daughter of Rev. John Stirling, DD, of Craigie, Ayrshire (Ainsworth, p. xii).
796. Unitarianism is a “type of Christian thought and religious observance which rejects the doctrines of the Trinity and the Divinity of Christ in favour of the unipersonality of God” (Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, s.v. “Unitarianism”).
797. As the will of Rev. John Stirling lists the names of all of his children except for Laura Margaret (bap. 1822) and Annabella Fullarton (bap. 1824), it is plausible to assume that they are the dead sisters Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth was referring to. The child who had died was Thomas Hatton Ainsworth (d. 1847).
798. Mrs. Ainsworth’s other two children at this time were David Ainsworth (1842 – 21 March 1906) and John Stirling Ainsworth (30 January 1844 – 24 May 1923) (Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xxii).
799. 2 Corinthians 6:14: “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?”
800. According to the 1851 Census for Preston, Eliza and John Winstanley had a coachman named George Parkinson, fifty-four years old, married, born in Leyland, Lancashire. Although the 1851 Census lists Mary Parkinson, married, sixty-four years old, born in Rufford, Lancashire, as a servant to the head of household, under “Occupation” she is listed as “Wife” to George Parkinson. They are the George and Mary referred to later in this entry.
801. The old church is St. Mary’s Priory Church, Lancaster, on the north side of Castle Hill (Mannex, Preston, pp. 482–483). Anna Whistler does not mention the Castle, from which the hill takes its name and which at the time continued to be a prison (Mannex, pp. 480–482).
802. The monument in the church yard bears the inscription: “Catherine, widow of Henry Richmond, M.D., formerly of Liverpool and late of Bath, and daughter of John Atherton of Walton Hall, Esq., died 30 Jan. 1819, aged 84. Soli Deo Gloria what though affliction here would heave a sigh, that one so loved - and so revered should die.” The tombstones were re-arranged in 1972 (K.H. Docton, Tombstones and Memorials in the Churchyard of St. Mary’s Priory Church [Lancaster, UK: printed by the author, 1973], p. 39; Grimshawe, Memoir of Richmond, pp. 398–438). The inscription differs slightly in Grimshawe.

803. The court house referred to is the Crown Court of Lancaster Castle, of which it has been said that “there is no court in the kingdom in which more persons have been sentenced to death” (L. Crook, Complete History and Illustrated Guide of Lancaster Castle [Lancaster, UK: Shires, 1936], pp. 9–12; T.A.J. Waddington, Waddington’s Guide to Lancaster Castle [York, UK: printed by the author, c. 1902], pp. 24–25; Mannex, Westmorland, p. 482).
804. See MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, no. 16, p. 11.
805. Hornby Castle, a mansion with distinctive crenellated walls and towers, is situated on the summit of a hill above the river Wenning (see Image 465); “the original baronial mansion is said to have been erected soon after the [Norman] Conquest.” It “stands on the site of a Roman villa.” Both Thomas Grey and Mrs. Radcliffe have described the view from the castle (Mannex, Westmorland, p. 531).
806. The church referred to is St. Mary’s Church (see Image 462). In 1851, it was described as standing “in a spacious burial ground near the verge of a steep bank that rises from the river Lune, and is here ascended by a flight of forty-six steps, with eleven broad landings ... and is supposed to have been erected soon after the Norman Conquest” (Mannex, p. 348).
807. Kirkby Lonsdale (see Image 70) was described in 1851 as follows: “Most of the houses in the town have been rebuilt within the last sixty years, and are designed with good taste; and the streets are clean and well paved. The walks in the vicinity of this town are truly delightful, and the fine hanging gardens and luxuriant plantations by which it is surrounded, contrast well with the white walls and blue roofs of the houses, throwing over the whole scene a pleasing and cheerful aspect” (Mannex, p. 348).
808. Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard (19 March 1800 – 4 June 1875) was the wife of Richard Stuart Picard and niece of John Winstanley. Anna Whistler had known Elizabeth Winstanley before her marriage (1835) to Richard Stuart Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.

809. The child was John Richard Picard (b. 6 December 1842; bap. 10 December 1842; d. 7 October 1933). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
810. Anna Whistler means Casterton Hall in Casterton township, on the opposite side of the River Lune, one mile NNE of Kirkby Lonsdale. "The stately mansion of W.W. C. Wilson, Esq. and the Rev. W.C. Wilson, M.A. ... stands upon an eminence, and is surrounded by fine plantations" (Mannex, Westmorland, p. 351). The place she is writing of is made even clearer when she speaks later in this entry of "ornamented grounds."
811. Isabella Simpson (bap. 14 August 1814 – 12 August 1889), called "Lala," a Scotswoman of independent means, is listed, like her sister Jane Simpson, in the 1841 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale as residing in the household of Richard Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
812. Mary Jane Picard (bap. 15 May 1838 – 8 September 1892) and Margaret Stuart Picard (bap. 27 April 1841 – 10 May 1883), were the daughters of Richard Stuart Picard's brother, Thomas Picard (bap. 18 April 1808 – 17 September 1846) and Mary (McDonald) Picard (c. 1812 – 21 August 1850). They also lived in Kirkby Lonsdale, on New Road. Mary Jane Picard's married name was Carey; Margaret Stuart Picard's married name was Wray. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
813. The famous schools of Casterton included the Servants' School, the Clergy Daughters' School, the Preparatory Clergy Daughters' School, and a National School. The Servants' School, established in 1820 at Tunstall by Rev. William Carus-Wilson, MA (1791–1859) and permanently established in 1838 at Casterton, educated poor girls to be servants and teachers. In 1823, Mr. Carus-Wilson also established at Cowan Bridge near Tunstall the Clergy Daughters' School, for the education at low cost of the daughters of poor clergy, most of whom, "on leaving the school, are provided for as governesses in respectable families." The school was later transferred to Casterton. The Preparatory Clergy Daughters' School was established in 1837, chiefly for the education of orphan children, who later entered the Clergy Daughters' School. A National School was established about 1841.

Of these schools, the Clergy Daughters' School achieved the greatest fame. Charlotte Brontë and her sisters Maria, Elizabeth, and Emily were enrolled there in 1824, the year it opened. In 1825, Maria and Elizabeth were sent home ill and died shortly thereafter: Maria of consumption, Elizabeth of typhoid fever. The school sent Charlotte and Emily away. Charlotte Brontë wrote disparagingly of these early days of the school and of Mr. Carus-Wilson in Jane Eyre (1847), where the Clergy Daughters' School became the Lowood School, Mr. Carus-Wilson became Mr. Brocklehurst, her sister Maria became Helen Burns, and Kirkby Lonsdale became Lowton. This detraction brought forth the defense of the school by other former pupils, resulting in a public controversy (Mannex, Westmorland, p. 353; H. Carus-Wilson, ed., Genealogical Memoirs of the Carus-Wilson Family [Hove, UK: Emery and Son, 1899], pp. 38–39; Winifred Gérin, Charlotte Brontë: The Evolution of Genius [Oxford, UK: Clarendon, 1968], pp. 1–16).

When Anna Whistler wrote that Casterton's schools were far-famed, she was not alluding to Jane Eyre, which had not yet been published. It appeared several months later, on 16 October 1847, the wedding day of her step-daughter, Deborah Delano Whistler, and Francis Seymour Haden.

The church which Anna Whistler speaks of is the Casterton Church, built in 1833 by William Wilson Carus-Wilson (1822–1883), son of Rev. William Carus-Wilson.

814. The owner of Casterton Hall was Rev. William Carus-Wilson, MA. See Carus-Wilson, Memoirs, pp. 38–43.
815. Their surgeon was Dr. Thomas Harper Whitaker (c. 1812 – 14 November 1873) of Beck Head in Kirkby Lonsdale (Mannex, Westmorland, p. 348; Edward Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes: Being the Heraldry, Epitaphs, and other Inscriptions, in the Thirty-two Ancient Parish Churches and Churchyards of that County, 2 vols. [Kendal, UK: T. Wilson, 1889], vol. 2, p. 114). His name is given a few lines later in this entry.
816. The misses Mary (c. 1799 – 22 April 1880), Anne (c. 1806 – 2 November 1888), and Elizabeth (c. 1809 – 23 November 1889) Tomlinson were living with their brothers, Anthony Battersby Tomlinson (c. 1797 – 14 November 1865) and William Tomlinson (25 January 1815 – 12 March 1874) in Biggins House, a mansion one mile west of Kirkby Lonsdale. All are listed in the 1851 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale as landed proprietors. They were a very wealthy family. Anthony Tomlinson left effects under £30,000 at his death; William, effects under £25,000; Mary, a personal estate under £45,000; Anne, a personal estate of almost £73,000; and Elizabeth, a personal estate of almost £223,000 (1851 Census: 0107/2441, fol. 488, p. 11; Mannex, Westmorland,

- pp. 351, 357; R.S. Boumphrey and C. Roy Hudleston, An Armorial for Westmorland and Lonsdale [Gateshead, UK: Northumberland Press for Lake District Museum Trust and Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society, 1975], p. 298); National Probate Calendar (UK), 1866, 1874, 1880, and 1889; Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes, vol. 2, pp. 111–112).
817. Miss Tomlinson must have seen a portrait of Charles Donald Whistler in the possession of Eliza Winstanley, or the latter saw the engraving in the possession of Miss Tomlinson and remarked on its resemblance to the child. It is clear from the text that the engraving had been sent to Anna Whistler by Eliza Winstanley some time before Anna Whistler and Miss Tomlinson ever met.
818. This is Margaret (Winstanley) Ware (b. 12 April 1801; bap. 17 April 1801; d. 16 April 1877), widow of William Ware, Esq. (c. 1793 – before 15 June 1843), a banker, whom she married on 7 April 1828, at Bolton Castle cum Redmire. They had a son, William Ryder Ware (31 March 1830 – buried 1 October 1834).
819. The Simpson sisters were Jane and Isabella. See Note 811 above.
820. Isabella Simpson was called “Lala.” She was governess to John Richard Picard and his first cousins, Mary Jane Picard and Margaret Stuart Picard. See Notes 809 and 812 above.
821. The 1841 Census for Richard Picard of Wilsons Yard, Kirkby Lonsdale, lists only one domestic servant: Eleanor Wilson, age eighteen. The 1851 Census for the Picard household at 120 Beck Head, Kirkby Lonsdale, lists Elizabeth Richardson, age nineteen, unmarried, cook, and Anne Anderson, fifteen, unmarried, housemaid. It is not possible to say whether these three girls, who would have been about twenty-four, fifteen, and eleven in 1847, are “the three nice servant maids” Anna Whistler is speaking of. See MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, no. 15, p. 11.
822. The portrait of John Richard Picard is discussed in MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, no. 14, p. 11.
823. Betty (Ryder) Winstanley (27 November 1770 – 29 March 1843) was the widow of Woodcock Winstanley (30 August 1768 – 10 October 1828).
824. North Gate seems to have been the name of the house belonging to Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard’s mother and father (see previous Note) in Aysgarth, Wensleydale (Michael C. Fitter, The Wrays of Wensleydale [printed by the author, 1984], p. 86).

825. Richard Stuart Picard lived to be eighty and outlived his wife by twelve years.
826. This was probably Friday, 9 July 1847, in the first full week of July.
827. It has not been possible to locate this letter from Thomas Harper Whitaker to James Whistler.
828. Thomas Harper Whitaker was married to Hannah (Atkinson) Whitaker (Kirkby Lonsdale 26 May 1827 – Kirkby Lonsdale 5 May 1886). There is no indication in the censuses for 1851 to 1871 that they had any children. See also Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes, vol. 2, p. 114.
829. Chaddock Hall (see Image 467) was situated in the township of Tyldesley in the Parish of Leigh.
830. Anna Whistler is referring to Wednesday, 14 July 1847.
831. Astley Station was on the Liverpool and Manchester Railway line and was the nearest station to Chaddock Hall at that time, about 2 ½ miles away.
832. “Old Peter” was probably Peter Edge, male servant, aged seventy, whose residence was Chadwick Lane in Tyldesley (1841 Census for Tyldesley with Shackerley).
833. George Parkinson was coachman to Eliza and John Winstanley.
834. Robert Smith (1781 – 27 November 1863) was a local cotton mill owner. Anne Smith (1798 – 21 December 1881) was his sister. Mary Smith (bap. 31 January 1820 – 28 March 1896) and Betsey Smith (bap. 17 February 1823 – 8 April 1899) were the nieces of Robert and Anne Smith and the daughters of Richard (bap. 6 October 1785) and Elizabeth (Allen) Smith, who married in 1819. Betsy Smith’s married name was Morley.
835. Although Anna Whistler thought Mary, with her good health and cheerfulness, would make a good clergyman’s wife, it is the fragile Bessie who married and whose husband was a clergyman.
Anna Whistler meant to write “in some village” in this sentence.
836. Lord Francis Egerton (1 January 1800 – 18 February 1857; see Image 468) was the first Earl of Ellesmere. In 1803, the third Duke of Bridgewater, builder of the first commercially successful English canal, died a bachelor, leaving his property in trust to his nephew, Baron Gower, later Marquis of Stafford and Duke of Sutherland. On the latter’s death, the income from the trust was to go to his second son, Francis Leveson-Gower, on condition that he take his grand-uncle's family name, Egerton. In 1837, Lord Francis Egerton came to live on the estate in Worsley (H.T. Milliken, Changing Scene: Two Hundred Years of Church and Parish Life in Worsley, 3rd rev. ed. [Worsley, UK: printed by the author, 1985], p. 6; Burke's Peerage, 1869, p. 410).

837. Harriet Catherine Egerton (1800 – 17 April 1866), 1st Countess of Ellesmere, was the daughter of Charles Greville, Esq. (2 November 1762 – 26 August 1832) and Lady Charlotte Cavendish Bentinck Greville (3 October 1775 – 28 July 1862), daughter of the third Duke of Portland (Debrett's Peerage; Gentleman's Magazine 63, pt. 1, p. 372; IGI; The Times [London], September 1832; Burke's Peerage, 1869, p. 410).
838. Lord Francis Egerton (see Image 468), on coming to Worsley to live, set about “improving the living standards of the people of the district,” building first “a day school at Worsley ... then a temporary church, St. George's chapel, in ... the mining district of Walkden. The Worsley school, later known as St. Mark's School, ... was completed in 1838.” Three more schools were built “in the next four years,” as well as “a recreation center for miners in Walkden” (Milliken, Changing Scene, p. 7). In 1844, he established a Reading Room and Library in Worsley (Milliken, p. 8).

Lady Egerton, on arriving in Worsley, “immediately asked the Bridgewater Trustees to take the married women out of the [coal] pits and to employ no other females or young boys. She organized for the girls, as they were released, to attend the Juvenile School where they could learn to read, write and do accounts, while the wife of the headmaster taught them domestic work so that they could find jobs in service and eventually make better wives and mothers.” She founded the Walkden Church Visiting Society, “which annually distributed useful articles of bedding and clothing and whose members paid monthly visits to every cottage” (information from C. Elsie Mullineux, Worsley local historian).

839. When Anna Whistler came to visit her half-sisters in 1829, the mansion at Worsley was the Brick Hall. It had been erected by the Duke of Bridgewater when he turned the Old Hall into offices for his various business undertakings. In 1837, when Lord Francis Egerton came to Worsley, he lived at the Brick Hall, but was making plans for the construction of a new building, which received the name of Worsley New Hall (Milliken, Changing Scene,

- p. 7). It was a Gothic-style mansion, designed by the architect Edward Blore (1787–1879). Construction took place in 1840–1846.
840. The foundation stone of the new church, St. Mark's, was laid on 14 July 1844. St. Mark's was designed by George Gilbert Scott (later Sir) (1811–1878) and is considered one of his finest churches. It was consecrated on 2 July 1846, and in that same week "Lord Francis Egerton was raised to the Peerage, taking the title of Earl of Ellesmere" (Milliken, pp. 8–9). From 1846 to 1850, St. Marks was a chapelry of the parish of St. Mary Eccles.
841. The Irish preacher was Henry Francis Beasley (Dublin 1807 – 1879), temporarily replacing the incumbent, Charles Cameron, who was ill. The 1847 baptism register for St. Mark's, Worsley, shows that Charles Cameron's name appears until 5 April 1847, while after this date, up to December 1847, H.F. Beasley's name appears as officiating minister. The burial registers show that Beasley conducted most of the burials in 1847. However, the burial records between 1846 and 1850, the year in which St. Vincent Beechey was appointed vicar, show that between Cameron and Beasley four other ministers also conducted burials, and that between Beasley and the arrival of St. Vincent Beechey, there were two or three other ministers. It does not seem that Cameron returned to the post at any time (Rev. Michael Ainsworth, St. Mark's Worsley, to E. Harden, 9 March 2000, 19 July 2001).
- Beasley entered Trinity College, Dublin, on 1 November 1824, at seventeen years of age and received a BA in 1829 and an MA in November 1832 (Alumni Dublinenses: A Register of the Students, Graduates, Professors and Provosts of Trinity College in the University of Dublin (1593–1860), ed. George Dames Burtchaell and Thomas Ulick Sadleir, new ed. [Dublin, Ireland: A. Thom, 1935], p. 52). He was appointed assistant curate in the Church of Great Budworth on 28 November 1840 and ordained deacon on 13 December of that year (Ordination Papers, Cheshire County Council Archives and Local Studies, EDA 5/173). He is recorded in the Clergy List for 1847 [London: C. Cox, 1847] [hereafter, Clergy List and the year] as curate of Wilmslow, near Macclesfield, Cheshire, working under W. Brownlow, the Wilmslow incumbent.
842. Charles Cameron (c. 1807 – 1 December 1861), "the rightful and youthful incumbent," was the son of Lucy Lyttleton (Butt) (29 April 1781 – 7 September 1858) and Rev. Charles Richard Cameron (May 1779 – 10 January 1865), who were married on 12 June 1806. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford (BA 1831, MA 1834). From 1840 to 1844, he was the incumbent of St. James Dudley. In July 1846, he was put in charge of St. Mark's Church, Worsley, and is variously described in the burial registers (the only registers of that period retained at the church) as "Perpetual Curate" and "Incumbent." He conducted burials from July 1846 until early April 1847. Because his health showed signs of being undermined by consumption, he was sent to the south of Europe to recover. "The pattern [of the burials he conducted] suggests that from the start Cameron needed or used the assistance of others (up to his last entry, he did 20 out of 75 funerals ...), fell ill in 1847, recovered enough to do a stint of duty in mid-1848 (and one funeral in October) but nothing thereafter" (Rev. Michael Ainsworth, St. Mark's Worsley, to E. Harden, 19 July 2001). We know little of the period after 1848, except that he married on 24 April 1851 Marcia Sarah Elizabeth Burrell (c. 1824 – 22 October 1889), with whom he had at least five children. From 1853 to 1856, he was the incumbent of the donative of Oxhey, Watford, Hertfordshire, and perpetual curate of Christ Church Longlane, Trusley, Derbyshire from 1860 until his death the following year. He died during divine service in Heckingham Church, Lincolnshire. He authored The Tyranny of Popery by an Eye Witness as Seen in Italy (1853) and edited The Infallible Way to Contentment (1849) and The British Workman (1855–62), as well as writing a life of his mother, published in the year of his death (Boase, Modern English Biography, vol. 1, pp. 522, 524; Rev. Michael Ainsworth, St. Mark's Worsley, to E. Harden, 9 March 2000, 19 July 2001; IGI; 1861 Census). The life of his mother is entitled The Life of Mrs. Cameron; Partly an Autobiography, and from Her Private Journals, Etc., Edited by her Eldest Son (London: Darton, 1861). The second edition, published by his brother, is The Life of Mrs. Cameron, revised and edited by Rev. George Thomas Cameron M.A. (London: Houston and Sons, 1873). Mrs. Cameron, like her famous sister, Mrs. Sherwood, wrote children's literature.

843. Charles Cameron's aunt was the famous author of children's literature, Mary Martha (Butt) Sherwood (Stanford, Worcestershire 6 May 1775 – Twickenham 20 September 1851), elder daughter and second child of Rev. George (Lichfield 26 December 1741 – no earlier than 29 September 1795) and Martha (Sherwood) Butt (c. 1751 – 20 March 1817). Her father, rector of Stanford and Clifton-on-Teme, was appointed in 1784 "one of the Chaplains in Ordinary to his Majesty George the Third” (Sophia Kelly, ed., The Life of Mrs. Sherwood, Chiefly Autobiographical, with Extracts from Mr. Sherwood’s Journal during his Imprisonment in France & Residence in India [London: Darton, 1857], p. 43). She was brought up by remarkable parents who were too simple and good to understand “life as it really is” (Kelly, p. 116). Concerning her childhood, she said her “early impressions were most beautiful as regarded natural things, and classical as regarded intellectual things” (Kelly, p. 17). She was taught Latin by her mother, who learned the language specifically to teach it to her. She also learned Greek and had access to several important libraries belonging to her father and to neighbors. In 1788, her father was further presented with the Vicarage of Kidderminster, and the family moved from their idyllic country life to the city. Eventually they were able to return to Stanford. After her father’s death, the family moved to Bridgenorth. Here, Mary and Lucy Butt took up “Sunday School work on the lines laid down by Hannah More” (M. Nancy Cutt, Mrs. Sherwood and her Books for Children [London: Oxford University Press, 1974], p. 2). It was always “a matter of course” and “a matter of instinct” to her that she was to be a writer (Kelly, Life of Mrs. Sherwood, p. 118). At nineteen, her career was launched, when she published, anonymously and against her will, by subscription, The Traditions, the proceeds from which were used to benefit a family friend in financial straits. In 1803, she married her first cousin, Henry Sherwood (c. 1776 – 6 December 1849), of the 53rd Foot Regiment, then serving in England. In April 1805, they departed with the regiment for India, leaving their first child, born in 1804, with Mrs. Sherwood’s mother. “During [the] ... five-month voyage,” Mrs. Sherwood’s “well-developed Evangelical urge crystallized” (Cutt, Mrs. Sherwood, p. 2), and by the time she arrived in India “she had ... decided that her appointed work lay in the religious education of the young and of the heathen” (Cutt, p. 3). Her Evangelical doctrine of this period is characterized as “unyielding” (Cutt, p. 4), and her writing of an “intensity that sets it above most of the work of the more tranquil days” after their return home (Cutt, p. 4). On returning from India in 1816, with five children of their own and two adopted orphans to raise, they settled in Wick. Mrs. Sherwood opened “a small select boarding-school for girls” (Cutt, p. 4), which she ran from 1818 to 1830.

On giving up the school, she toured the Continent with her family, returning to England in 1832 and devoting herself “to novel writing and story-telling” almost until her death (Cutt, p. 4).

They lived first in Worcester. In this period, Mrs. Sherwood lost a brother and two daughters, but her son, a clergyman, married and lived near the Sherwoods, while her youngest daughter married and lived with the Sherwoods. In 1849, her son-in-law and husband died, and she and her widowed daughter moved to Twickenham, where Mrs. Sherwood died in 1851. Mrs. Sherwood produced over a period of some fifty years more than four hundred works, including “books, tales, tracts, texts, magazines, articles in periodicals, chapbooks, and Sunday school rewards” (Cutt, p. ix). The theories of Evangelical doctrine “diffused by [her] writings,” while not originated by her, “dominated education for half a century; and governed missionary activity abroad” (Cutt, p. ix). When Anna Whistler wrote of Mrs. Sherwood, the latter was famous and rich, and her career was chiefly behind her; she would live only some four years more. There is no indication in the diaries that Anna Whistler had read Mrs. Sherwood’s works growing up, but according to her step-niece, Emma Palmer, Emma, James and Willie read them on Sundays when other books were forbidden (McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, p. 155).

The works consulted to prepare this biography of Mrs. Sherwood are: Kelly, The Life of Mrs. Sherwood; F.J. Harvey Darton, ed., The Life and Times of Mrs. Sherwood (1775 – 1851) from the Diaries of Captain and Mrs. Sherwood (London: Wells Gardner, Darton, 1910); Cutt, Mrs. Sherwood; and Naomi Royce Smith, The State of Mind of Mrs. Sherwood (London: Macmillan, 1946).

844. Because Mrs. Sherwood is mentioned in the previous sentence, “she” in the next sentence may seem to refer to her. This identification is supported by the fact that Mrs. Sherwood cared for orphaned girls. Her first two children born in India died in infancy. She then began to accept into her care orphaned white girls. They were either the daughters of widowed British soldiers or they had lost both parents. A number of these girls were then adopted by British families. The Sherwoods themselves adopted two girls: Sally Pownal and Mary Parsons, who returned with them permanently to England in 1816, later marrying and settling near them. But neither Mrs. Sherwood’s biography by her daughter, Sophia Kelly, nor the biography by Darton, mentions a wealthy orphan girl shipwrecked on her way home from India and taken in by Mrs. Sherwood. It therefore makes more sense to interpret “she” as a reference to Lady Ellesmere. It then becomes plausible that the wealthy orphan is living in Worsley, and that the ladies of the Ellesmere family will serve as good examples of charity to her (Kelly, Life of Mrs. Sherwood, pp. 311, 325–326, 330, 376, 409, 432, 468, 469–470, 488, 494, 496, 504, 514, 545, 550, 551; Darton, Mrs. Sherwood, pp. 438, 460). It has not been possible to identify the shipwrecked wealthy orphan.

845. It has not been possible to determine the date of this Sunday.
846. The date should read “September. Saturday 11th.”
847. Mary Brennan, who had been visiting her family in Ireland, came to join Anna Whistler, James, and Willie at South Shore, Blackpool. She arrived from Preston with Anna Whistler’s half-sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, and her husband, John Winstanley. Mary Brennan rode on the dicky with George Parkinson, the Winstanleys’ coachman, and his wife, Mary Parkinson, the Winstanleys’ servant (see Note 779 above). The Winstanleys are referred to throughout this entry (Sister and Brother Winstanley, Uncle & Aunt, Sister Eliza & kind M<sup>r</sup> W, Sister, M<sup>rs</sup> Winstanley, Eliza, Aunt Winnie, Aunt Eliza, M<sup>r</sup> Winstanley).
848. Anne Clunie (10 June 1793 – 18 May 1882) was Eliza Winstanley’s first cousin, the daughter of Alicia (Clunie) McNeill’s brother, John Clunie, and not related to Anna Whistler. She appears in the diaries and for many years in Anna Whistler’s correspondence. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
849. As July 28 was their second day at Blackpool, their fortnight lasted from 27 July to 9 August 1847.
850. Poulton is a village on the outskirts of Blackpool in the more rural area of the Fylde coast and is part of the neighboring district of Wyre.
851. Reverend John Hull (1803 – 8 March 1887) was vicar of St. Chad’s Church in Poulton from 1835 to 1864. His wife was Lucy (Brooke) Hull (1812 or 1813 – 6 September 1899). Reverend Hull was the nephew of John Winstanley. See Winstanley... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 73.
852. According to the 1851 Census for Poulton, the governess at the Vicarage was Alice Rebecca Bell, unmarried, possibly twenty years of age, born in Richmond, county of York (HO 107/2269, fol. 601, p. 18).
853. According to the 1851 Census for Poulton, there were four children at the Vicarage who could have been present in 1847: Lucy Jane, sixteen; Sarah Winstanley, thirteen; Robert Bevon, seven; and Frances Mary, five; all “scholars (at home)” (HO

- 107/2269, fol. 601, p. 18). John and Charles William, who were listed respectively as two years old and two months old in the 1841 Census, do not appear in the 1851 Census (HO 107/497, bk. 6, fol. 22). Sarah Winstanley Hull, not Lucy Jane Hull, was James's age.
854. St. Chad's Church was the parish church of Poulton.
855. This is Dr. John Hull, MD (30 September 1764; d. London 17 March 1843; buried Poulton 22 March 1843; see Image 73), husband of John Winstanley's sister Sarah (1765–1842).
856. Aunt Marion Anne (Clunie) Wilkin(s) (bap. 20 August 1771) was the sister of Alicia (Clunie) McNeill, mother of Eliza Winstanley (see Image 40) and Alicia McNeill (see Image 39). She was the widow of William Wilkin(s) (bap. 4 October 1806), whom she had married on 19 April 1805. She was also the sister of Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs (24 July 1762 – 9 November 1844) of Edinburgh, whom Eliza Winstanley visited in the summer of 1843 (Eliza Winstanley's diary, Appendix D; IGI; Will of Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs, probated 26 November 1844).
857. This is Priscilla Eliza (Wilkin) Cragg (b. 1817 or 1818; bap. 6 February 1824; d. 17 September 1861), wife of William Cragg (c. 1812 – 13 July 1898), carrier and lodging house keeper (1851 Census for Blackpool, HO 107/2269, fol. 457, p. 4/5), who was first cousin to Eliza Winstanley and Alicia McNeill. See details of the will of John Winstanley in Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E. The Craggs were married on 25 August 1844. Their daughter, Mary Anne Isabella Cragg, was baptized on 10 December 1844.
858. The second Saturday at Blackpool was 7 August 1847.
859. This seems to be Sir James Wemyss (30 April 1796 – 1849), sixth Baronet of Bogie and eighth Baronet of Wemyss (1822–1849), "a writer to His Majesty's Signet, in Edinburgh." He was unmarried and without issue (Sir John Wemyss-Kessler, The House of Wemyss: A Thousand Year History [Bowie, MD: Heritage Books, 1996], p. 126).
860. Richard (c. 1775 – 31 December 1861) and Esther (Smith) (bap. 18 November 1777 – 4 July 1863) Ormerod were the parents of Ann (Ormerod) Haden (c. 1802 – 24 September 1847), wife of the Rev. John Clarke Haden (1805 – 29 October 1869), uncle of Deborah Delano Whistler's future husband, Francis Seymour Haden (16 September 1818 – 1 June 1910). The Ormerods lived in Fleetwood. In 1848, their address was 11 Upper Queen's Terrace (Slater's Directory 1848, p. 193). Esther (Smith) Ormerod was the sister of the Smith family of Chaddock Hall (see 1871 Census for Worsley, Boothtown).

861. Ann (Critchley) Walton (bap. 23 January 1772 – 11 October 1848), referred to as “M<sup>rs</sup> Walton” and “old lady” in this entry, was the daughter of Agnes (Nickson) Critchley (1748–1828) and Henry Critchley (c. 1739–1791), a chapman. Agnes (Nickson) Critchley was the daughter of a surgeon, Richard Nickson (1713–1775) and his wife, Ann (1724–1792), who were married at Leyland in 1746. Agnes (Nickson) Critchley’s “maternal grandfather, Roger Mawdesley (d. 1765) had been an innkeeper.” “Agnes herself was landlady of the Stag Inn (now the Roebuck), which stands beside Leyland Cross.” In 1770, Agnes married Henry Critchley at Leyland. “She was among the local innkeepers who played a key role in the establishment of the Fox Lane hand weavers’ step-houses by funding the ‘Union Street’ building society (1793–1808).” The Critchleys “had a large family,” some seven children. Ann Critchley (bap. 23 January 1772 – 11 October 1848), their eldest child, married on 12 July 1806 at Preston John Walton (1761 – 24 November 1843), a “gentleman of Preston,” who seems to have also had interests in the weaving trade.

The 1841 Census for Preston shows that John Walton, eighty years old, and Ann Walton, seventy years old, and their daughter, Agnes, thirty years old, lived in Friargate, along with two female servants. All three Waltons were of “Independent Means” (IGI; 1841 Census for Preston, HO 107/499/4; Dr. David Hunt, curator, South Ribble Museum, Leyland, Lancashire, to E. Harden, 15 July 2011 (enclosing a research paper for South Ribble Borough Council, including a genealogy of Ann Critchley, by William E. Waring) and 27 January 2012; The Preston Guardian, October 14, 1848; Liverpool Mercury, December 1, 1843).

862. Agnes Walton (bap. St. John’s Preston 12 June 1807 – Wellfield 14 November 1886), the daughter of Ann (Critchley) and John Walton (see previous Note), was of “Independent Means.” She married in Leyland on 25 August 1859 Samuel Ryley (bap. St. John’s Preston 1792). She “established the Riley Alms Houses in Fox Lane, Leyland,” which “came to be administered by Osbaldeston’s Charity.” She bequeathed to this charity an oil portrait of her father, John, another of her grandmother, Agnes (Nickson) Critchley, and a colored sketch of herself (see Image 469). At her death, she was Agnes of Edstaston, Salop. Her personal estate amounted to c. £10,000 (Dr. David Hunt, curator,

- South Ribble Museum, Leyland, Lancashire, to E. Harden, 15 July 2011 (enclosing a research paper for South Ribble Borough Council, including a genealogy of Ann Critchley, by William E. Waring); IGI; 1841 Census for Friargate, Preston; 1851 Census for Leyland; 1861 Census for Edstaston for Ryley family (RG 9/1886); 1871 Census for Edstaston for Ryley family (RG 10/2792); 1881 Census for Edstaston for Ryley family (RG 11/2667); National Probate Calendar (UK), 1886).
863. Anna Whistler, James, and Willie were going to visit the Sandlands, who lived at 10 Cambridge Street in Liverpool. In this entry, Mrs. Eliza Sandland is referred to as “M<sup>rs</sup> Sandland”; her daughter, Eliza Sandland, is referred to as “Eliza” and “Eliza Sandland”; and her son, John Dorlin Sandland, is referred to as “John Sandland.”
864. “Aunt Winnie” is Eliza Winstanley, whose husband was known to the Whistler children as “Uncle Winny.” The whereabouts of the sketch of her are unknown (MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, no. 17, p. 11).
865. This is “Cousin Anne Clunie,” mentioned in the next paragraph of the diaries.
866. The whereabouts of the copy of the engraving of Miss Waltons are unknown (MacDonald, no. 18, p. 11).
867. The subject of the engraving of Miss Waltons that James copied seems to be the “old hermit at his devotions.”
868. Edge Hill Station (see Image 61) was on the main railway line out of Liverpool.
869. John Dorlin Grayson (bap. 31 March 1807 – 1 September 1847) and his sister, Elizabeth Grayson (bap. 26 April 1821 – 8 September 1847), the children of Charles Grayson and Betsey H. Sandland’s sister, Hannah (Dorlin) Grayson, died of cancer within a week of each other.
870. Roby was a small township in the suburbs of Liverpool dating from the sixteenth century. It began as an agricultural township and became an industrial one particularly with the development of the Liverpool–Manchester Railway in 1830 (Alan King, Huyton and Roby: A History of Two Townships [Liverpool, UK: Department of Leisure Services, Metropolitan Borough of Knowsley, Libraries Division, 1984], pp. 3, 31, 32, 39, 42, 44, 54).
871. See John Sandland’s letter to the Pall Mall Gazette in June 1874, which is referred to in Sandland in Appendix E. In the letter, he speaks of himself as a “toddling child” walking with the teenaged Anna Whistler, when his family lived in the United States. It has not been possible to find a June 1874 issue confirming the date. The only article about Whistler published in June 1874 in the Pall Mall Gazette is a review entitled “Exhibition of Mr. Whistler’s Paintings and Drawings” (June 13, 1874, p. 11).

872. John Dorlin Sandland took James and Willie to the Sessions House in Rumford Street to hear a trial. The Assizes, or law courts, were held here until 1851. They were going to be housed in the Neo-Classical St. George’s Hall on Lime Street, opposite Lime Street Railway Station in the center of Liverpool. “The foundation stone ... was laid in 1838 to commemorate the coronation of Queen Victoria, but the actual building of the hall did not start until 1842” (“History of the Hall: Liverpool,” BBC website, accessed 13 February 2021, http://www.bbc.co.uk/liverpool/culture/2002/08/st\_georges/history.shtml). “The Law Courts and holding cells were opened in 1851” (“St. George’s Hall, Liverpool,” Lancaster Past website, accessed 13 February 2021, <https://lancashirepast.com/2017/08/01/st-georges-hall-liverpool/>). St. George’s Hall, opened completely to the public “in 1854 as a grand hub for music festivals and the Civil and Crown courts,” was “one of the finest examples of neoclassical architecture in the world” (“St. George’s Hall,” Visit Liverpool website, accessed 13 February 2021, <https://www.visitliverpool.com/things-to-do/st-georges-hall-p8033>).
873. “Hail fellow well met” is an expression indicating that the participants are “on a most intimate footing” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “hail-fellow”).
874. Hugh McNeile (1795–1879) was appointed perpetual curate of St. Jude’s Church, Liverpool in 1834. He received the BA from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1815; MA in 1821; and DD in 1847. In 1820, he was ordained to the curacy of Stranorlar in Donegal. He was presented to the rectory of Albury in Surrey in 1822, by Henry Drummond, MP, inclining at first toward the tenets of Edward Irving, as did Drummond. He drew large congregations through his eloquence, preaching frequently at St. Clement Danes Church in London. He received a canony in Chester Cathedral in 1845. In 1866 he was made dean of Ripon. He held strong evangelical views and opposed the church of Rome vigorously (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “McNeile, Hugh”).

875. Using the departure date of the Montezuma (see Note 881 below), we can determine that the date of Dr. Hugh McNeile's lecture was Thursday, 12 August 1847. Anna Whistler attended with Mrs. Sandland's daughter Eliza.
876. Romans 6 concerns the moral consequences of faith: "the wages of sin is death," while those who have faith in Christ are dead to sin but alive to God (see New Oxford Annotated Bible, p. 1367).
877. On Sunday morning, 15 August 1847, Anna Whistler went a second time to hear Dr. McNeile preach.
878. On the evening of 15 August, Anna Whistler heard Dr. McNeile a third time. In his Second Epistle, Peter speaks of the necessity of steadfastly adhering to the "things that pertain unto life and godliness" as opposed to earthly things, which will be destroyed when the end of the world comes.
879. What James was guilty of in his mother's eyes is not clear.
880. The famous American Boarding House, where Anna Whistler visited the Bliss family on Monday, 16 August 1847, was located at 133–135 Duke Street in Liverpool. Its proprietress was Mrs. Mary Blodget (Mrs. Samuel Chase Blodget). It seemed particularly to attract American sea captains and American consuls. Among the latter, the most famous was Nathaniel Hawthorne, appointed in 1853 (James O'Donald Mays, Mr. Hawthorne Goes to England, [Ringwood, UK: New Forest Leaves, 1983], pp. 55, 56, 58, 62, 64, 147–154, 191).
881. Anna Whistler says the Blisses left Liverpool on the Montezuma on the Monday that she visited them for the last time, which was 16 August; however, the only sailing of the Montezuma from Liverpool during August and the early part of September 1847 in Lloyd's List was given as 17 August. The Master was Lowber (Lloyd's List, London, Wednesday, 18 August 1847). The ship probably left at midnight or shortly thereafter.
882. The diaries do not at all indicate that, when the Blisses left St. Petersburg after a brief stay, Deborah went with them. Nor do the diaries explain that she joined them so suddenly on their Swiss trip because she was recovering from an unhappy love affair with a Russian army officer (N-YHS: Bliss Papers, vol. 1, fol. 39). See the biography of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s."
883. Anna Whistler's friend, Annie Ormerod, had married Rev. John Clarke Haden on 20 January 1847. Reverend John Clarke Haden

(Derby 6 May 1805 – Nightingales, Buckinghamshire 29 October 1869) was the son of Dr. Thomas Haden (22 September 1761 – 1840), a Derby physician. He received the BA from Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in 1827 and the MA in 1830. He became deacon in 1828 and priest in 1829. He was minor canon of St. Paul’s Cathedral in London from 1834 to 1849 and rector of Hutton in Essex from 1839 to 1869. He was also precentor and minor canon of Westminster Abbey from 1846 to 1869. He was priest-in-ordinary to William IV from 1834 to 1837 and to Queen Victoria (see Image 287) from 1837 to 1869. “By his ability and energy were organized the special Sunday evening services established in the nave of the Abbey under Dean Trench A.D. 1858.” A curious incident reported in his obituary is that once he was shot at by someone in St. Paul’s Cathedral during a weekday service, but escaped unharmed. He is buried at Chalfont St. Giles in Buckinghamshire. The Bible quotation on the plain stone memorial tablet to him, on the wall of the north cloister of Westminster Abbey, near the door into the nave, reads: “I was glad when they said unto me, we will go into the House of the Lord” (Psalms 122:1).

He had married on 20 January 1847 Anna Whistler’s friend, Ann Ormerod (c. 1802 – 24 September 1847), daughter of Richard Ormerod (1775 –1861) and Esther (Smith) Ormerod of Chaddock Hall (bap. 1777 – 1863). By the time of the marriage of Deborah Delano Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden on 16 October 1847, Ann Ormerod had died. He married, on 14 August 1850, as his second wife, Sarah Mair (15 September 1815 –1898), of Nightingales, Chalfont St. Giles, Buckinghamshire (John Crockford, Crockford’s Clerical Directory for 1860 [London: Crockford’s Clerical Journal and Directory Offices, 1860] [hereafter, Crockford’s Clerical Dictionary and the year], p. 257; “John Clarke Haden, priest/minister,” Westminster Abbey website, accessed 13 February 2021, <https://www.westminster-abbey.org/abbey-commemorations/commemorations/john-clarke-haden>; Memorial ID 34716050, findagrave.com; Alumni Cantabrigienses, vol. 3, p. 185; The Times [London], November 4, 1869; Illustrated London News, November 13, 1869).

884. John Clarke Haden and Ann (Ormerod) Haden lived at 4 Dean’s Yard, Westminster, London S.W.
885. The Maingay home was Wellesley House in Shooters’ Hill, Woolwich, “a village in Kent, on the south bank of the Thames, eight miles from London by land, and ten following the course of the river. Here, in the reign of Henry VIII., a dockyard for the construction of vessels of the royal navy was established; and ever since, the place has been distinguished as an arsenal for naval and military stores. From the river a view is obtained of the dockyard and arsenal, now greatly improved. The ground, for nearly a mile in length, is bounded by a stone quay, and surrounded on the land side with various storehouses and workshops. Among these is included a laboratory for the preparation of cartridges, bombs, grenades, and shot. Adjoining are barracks for artillery and marines, military hospitals, etc; on the upper part of Woolwich Common is situated a royal military academy for the education of young gentlemen designed for the army. Strangers are not admitted to the dockyard and arsenal without an order from an officer of the Board of Ordnance (Chambers's Information 1842: p. 211). See Maingay in Appendix E.

886. Egremont is a community within the town of Wallasey in the north-eastern part of the Wirral Peninsula. The town sits on the western bank of the River Mersey, about 2 km from its mouth at the Irish Sea, and lies about 10–35 m above sea level. It is historically part of Cheshire, and is bordered by the communities of New Brighton to the north, Liscard to the west, and Seacombe to the south. It was considered part of the Liscard township until the 1820s. Egremont is named for the Cumberland birthplace of a Captain Askew, who built a house in the area in the early 1830s. The Egremont ferry, built in 1827, was the longest pier on Merseyside until 1946 (“Egremont,” History of the Wirral Peninsula website, accessed 14 February 2021, <http://www.wirralhistory.uk/egremont.html>). “In days past Egremont and the surrounding area was a place of peaceful green fields, leafy lanes, farm buildings and cottages ... As time went on a large number of houses were built and the district became mainly residential. The beach around the ferry became popular for families” (Noël E. Smith, Almost an Island: The Story of Wallasey [printed by the author, 1990], p. 72).
887. Anna Whistler is referring to William Vallance (Newton Abbott, Devon c. 1797 – Liverpool 23 April 1863). The William Vallance family lived at 1 or 2 West Derby Street, Liverpool (1841 and 1851 censuses for West Derby, Liverpool). William Vallance is listed in Liverpool directories at 2 West Derby Street, as merchant and agent to the Medical, Legal and General Life Assurance Company. See the biographies of the Dunscombe and Vallance families in Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.

888. On 24 July 1830, William Vallance married Margaret McGill Dunscombe (St. John's, NL c. 1807 – buried West Derby, Lancashire 18 July 1851) in St. John's, Newfoundland. They were living in Liverpool, Lancashire, when Anna Whistler visited them. She speaks of Margaret McGill (Dunscombe) Vallance as “an early friend.” This is probably because her sister, Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann, was the sister-in-law of Anna Whistler's sister-in-law Maria (Cammann) McNeill, through whom Anna Whistler could have met her. See their biographies in Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
889. George Hoyles Dunscombe (St. John's, NL 30 August 1817 – Florida 21 March 1871) would have been able to have news of William Gibbs McNeill and Maria (Cammann) McNeill, as the latter's brother, Henry J. Cammann, had been the husband of Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann, George Hoyle Dunscombe's sister. See their biography in Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
890. William and Margaret (Dunscombe) Vallance had at this time about six children. The first, Mary Eliza Dunscombe Vallance (b. St. John's, NL 16 May 1831), was their only daughter “in her teens” in 1847 and is therefore most likely the “eldest daughter Minnie” referred to by Anna Whistler. The younger children whom Minnie helped care for could have included George Dunscombe (born Devon July 1838), Christopher Bridge (b. West Derby 23 July 1841), Margaret Jane (b. Liverpool, October 1842), and Frederick Julian (b. Liverpool October 1843) (1841, 1851, and 1861 censuses for Liverpool; Ancestry Family Tree; Gertrude Crosbie, comp., Births, Deaths, Marriages in Newfoundland Archives, 1825–1850 and 1860–1865, Maritime History Archives, Memorial University, St. John's, NL).
891. Anna Whistler maintained her relationship with the helpful Mr. Maude at least into the 1860s. Writing to Deborah (Whistler) Haden in 1863 from Richmond, Virginia, she asked her to try to get Mr. Maude to find out “whether the Trenholm house connected with Charleston SC would forward letters [Deborah] might enclose ... for her at Ch[arleston]” (Anna Whistler to Deborah Haden, Richmond, Virginia, 4 August 1863, GUL: Whistler Collections, W515). “The firm of Fraser, Trenholm and Co. of Liverpool was the financial clearing house for Confederate agents abroad” (Toutziari, vol. 3, pt. 1, pp. 654, 655). Anna Whistler may be wrong in calling Mr. Maude Edward. The 1851 Census for Liverpool, Parish of Everton, lists an Edwin Maude not an Edward.

892. He was Francis Seymour Haden (16 September 1818 – 1 June 1910; see Image 20), physician, future husband of Deborah Delano Whistler and nephew of Rev. John Clarke Haden and Ann (Ormerod) Haden. He lived at 62 Sloane St. in London.
893. Kirk Boott (see Image 43), the founder of Lowell, Massachusetts, was married to Anne Haden (1788–1869). His wife was one of twin daughters of a Derby physician, Dr. Thomas Haden (22 September 1761-1840), and aunt to Francis Seymour Haden (John L. Hobbs, “The Boott and Haden Families and the Founding of Lowell,” Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society Journal 66 (1946): pp. 64, 66). The Whistlers and Bootts were close friends, as Kirk Boott had been instrumental in bringing George Washington Whistler to Lowell to begin “the manufacture of locomotives” (Hobbs, p. 65). The closeness of their friendship is attested to by the fact that Anna and George Whistler’s third son was the namesake of Kirk Boott. Thus, the long friendship between the Boott and Whistler families in Lowell was a point in favor of the marriage of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden, despite their brief acquaintance.
894. It has not been possible to locate either the originals of these letters or the copies sent by Anna Whistler to her husband. The Joseph Swift Papers at the NYPL contain Major Whistler’s response to his wife’s announcement of Francis Seymour Haden’s proposal (Major George W. Whistler to Anna Whistler, Moscow Sep<sup>r</sup> 17th 1847, NYPL: Swift Papers).
895. It has not been possible to locate the letter written by Deborah Whistler to her father.
896. Major Whistler wanted Deborah to come back to St. Petersburg for the winter, but finally left the decision in Anna Whistler’s hands (Major George W. Whistler to Anna Whistler, Moscow Sep<sup>r</sup> 17th 1847, NYPL: Swift Papers). He asked for and received permission from Nicholas I for five weeks’ leave to go to England, giving as his reason not his daughter’s marriage but his sons’ illness, which might require them to be left in England (RGIA: Fond 219, op. 1, d. 11. Ob otpuske Uistlera za granitsu i o ego smerti [Concerning leave granted to Whistler to go abroad and concerning his death]). The seventeen documents in the RGIA file concern Major Whistler’s four requests for leave to travel abroad, all connected with family matters. Documents 8 through 13 concern his trip to England in 1847. Although he went both for Deborah’s wedding and because James and Willie

- might not return to St. Petersburg, he did not mention the wedding as a reason.
897. Frances Seymour Haden's mother was Emma (Harrison) Haden (1794–1881).
  898. Mary Love Boott (c. 1820 – 6 December 1897), daughter of Dr. Francis (see Image 80) and Mary (Hardcastle) Boott (brother and sister-in-law of Kirk Boott of Lowell, Massachusetts), was engaged to Charles Sydenham Haden (29 September 1822 – 1898), brother of Francis Seymour Haden. They were married on 19 January 1848.
  899. Francis Seymour Haden's sister was Rosamund Haden (16 November 1820 – 19 February 1912). Her married name was Horsley. She was not the only sister; there were also Jane Haden (bap. 6 March 1817) and Emma (Haden) Bergeron (b. 2 November 1819; bap. 6 December 1822; d. 28 July 1858), who married on 4 June 1840 Charles Bergeron. It is possible that Jane died in infancy, as there are no other records for her (National Probate Calendar (UK), 1858; IGI).
  900. Francis Seymour Haden's father was Charles Thomas Haden, MD (2 October 1786 – 11 January 1824). I have not seen his memoir in print.
  901. Anna Whistler apparently pronounced the surname of Austrian composer Franz Joseph Haydn (1732–1809) the same way as the surname Haden.
  902. This is Anne (Haden) Boott (1788–1869), of Lowell, Massachusetts.
  903. The 1849 Directory for Liverpool lists the following: “Stewart, William, Boarding school, Holly Bank, 23 Canning Street, Birkenhead.” Birkenhead was a market-town situated on the Cheshire side of the River Mersey, opposite Liverpool, about 3 miles from the sea. As of 1801, there were only 110 inhabitants and in 1821 only 236. In 1844, the building of its docks was begun (“Birkenhead, Cheshire,” UK Genealogy Archives website, accessed 14 February 2021, <https://ukga.org/index.php?pageid=913>; Smith, Story of Wallasey, p. 72; 1851 Census for Birkenhead). Anna Whistler had apparently proposed to her husband that they leave James and Willie at Holly Bank, expecting to return to St. Petersburg with Debo.
  904. The undated continuation of this lengthy entry indicates that it was written some time after the beginning of 1848. It continues the account of preparations for Debo's marriage; the wedding; the return of Major and Anna Whistler, James, Willie, and Mary Brennan to St. Petersburg; and their life there. Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison's announcement to Anna Whistler that she had started the New Year by using a volume of family prayers Anna Whistler had presented her with at Christmas 1847 helps date the entry as having been written after New Year's Day 1848.

905. Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (see Image 40) and Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (see Image 39) went to see whether Major Whistler had arrived on the train. For a brief summary of the "development of the railway system in and around Preston," see Hunt, History of Preston, pp. 197–198, 336n16.
906. Major Whistler was carrying government dispatches from the U.S. Legation in St. Petersburg to the U.S. Legation in London. This entitled him to receive a courier's passport and to have his transportation costs paid (AVPRI: Fond MID Kants., [Fond Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Chancery], 1847, op. 469, d. 39 (États-Unis/Mr. Ingersoll/Mr. Clay/, St. P. 18/30 September 1847, Ingersoll to Nesselrode).
907. Major Whistler arrived on Monday, 11 October. The wedding was to have taken place on Thursday, 14 October, but was changed to Saturday, 16 October.
908. Anna Whistler is referring to William Stewart (b. Manchester c. 1801), professor of Classics and Modern Languages, fifty-five years old, and his wife, Jean (b. Manchester c. 1807), forty-four years old (1851 Census for Birkenhead).
909. Thomas Mein Clunie (1827 – 1 April 1898) was a corn merchant in Liverpool. He was a nephew of "Cousin Anne Clunie" (1861, 1871, and 1881 censuses for Liverpool; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1898; 1859 Gore's Directory of Liverpool and Its Environs [Liverpool: Mawdsley, 1859]). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
910. It has not been possible to ascertain who the tailor was.
911. "The initial impetus [for "polka" fashions] came from the dance itself, which was the subject of a real craze all over Europe (coinciding with a revival of interest in dancing in general). It is said to have originated in Prague in about 1837, spreading to Vienna, St. Petersburg ... and Paris, and arriving in England in 1844 ... The connection with James Knox Polk (see Image 50) arose because the dance also arrived in the USA in 1844, just as he had become President, the coincidence apparently causing much amusement, as well as fueling the popularity of the dance there. ... printed records of such crazes are fairly ephemeral” (N.A. Marshall, curator of Dress and Nursery Collections, Bethnal Green Museum of Childhood, London, to E. Harden, 10 August 1995). “Polkomania” took over Petersburg society in 1844 (Petrovskaiia, Kontsertnaia zbirn’ Peterburga, p. 87).

The polka jacket as worn by boys seems to have been a short mantle or jacket, made of cashmere or velvet lined with silk, having loose sleeves that were not full-length. It was worn over a blouse or tunic, the sleeves of which were therefore partly visible. The jacket was fastened at the front with hooks and eyes, which were concealed by buttons, bows or buckles (Gazette of Fashion, plates and descriptions from issues between 1849 and 1854, supplied by Miles Lambert, Curator of Costume, Gallery of Costume, Platt Hall, Rusholme, Manchester).

912. The only confectioner in Bold Street included in McCorquodale’s Liverpool Directory for 1848 is G. Adolphus Eve of 100 Bold Street.
913. A “Fly” is a carriage for hire.
914. Emma Elizabeth Maingay (6 February 1826 – 27 December 1904), Deborah Whistler’s closest friend in St. Petersburg, was the only bridesmaid at her wedding. They remained lifelong friends. See Maingay in Appendix E.
915. Major Whistler had last seen the Sandlands in 1842 when on route to St. Petersburg to take up his appointment as consulting engineer of the proposed St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.
916. The Sandlands were in mourning for Elizabeth Grayson (bap. 26 April 1821 – 8 September 1847) and John Dorlin Grayson (bap. 31 March 1807 – 1 September 1847), niece and nephew of Betsey (Dorlin) Sandland.
917. The surviving mother was Hannah (Dorlin) Grayson. The young widow was Jane Grayson, listed in the 1851 Census as age forty-three. The two fatherless boys were George Enoch Grayson and Henry H. Grayson, listed in the 1851 Census as ages seventeen and sixteen respectively. There were three younger daughters as well.
918. The obituary of John Grayson is not in the Whistler Papers.
919. Mary Brennan was waiting for the Whistlers along with a Winstanley housemaid, Elizabeth Chapman, unmarried, forty-two years old (1851 Census for Preston).

920. Anna Whistler omitted the word “we.”
921. Major Whistler and James traveled to London on the evening of 13 October; Major Whistler had to deliver dispatches on 14 October. They traveled back to Preston on 14 October, arriving in the early hours of 15 October.
922. The following information, taken from Hunt, History of Preston, serves as a background for the economic situation in Preston that led Anna Whistler to think the noise outside John Winstanley’s house was connected with the discontent among the cotton mill workers. Apparently, some of the cotton masters, or cotton Lords, of Preston, had been to see John Winstanley, probably on legal matters. “Throughout much of the nineteenth century the cotton industry was the main driving force of economic growth in Preston” (p. 199). “[D]irectly related to the growth of textiles,” the population of Preston increased “from 11,887 people in 1801 to 69,361 in 1851” (p. 183). In the 1830s and 1840s the expansion reached “40 per cent per decade” (p. 183). “In the 1840s alone, accommodation for an additional 18,500 people had to be found,” and “grossly inadequate housing was hastily thrown up ... [for] the mill workers” (p. 183). Living conditions were horrendous (pp. 183–185). “Preston’s ... mill wages were generally among the lowest in the county, at least in the first half of the nineteenth century. Since the ... rates of pay in neighbouring towns reflected the various local conditions it was generally believed that an advance in wages paid in Preston would push up the rates in the rest of the industry. Accordingly, Preston became a great battleground, with both sides receiving aid and support from the adjacent towns ... In the first half of the ... century control of the ... industry lay very much in the hands of the cotton masters and their families” (p. 204). “By 1836 the town had 42 mills employing perhaps one fifth of its population. The 1830s and ‘40s were perhaps the industry’s most significant period of expansion in Preston ... perhaps best exemplified by the erection of Swainson and Birley’s ‘Big Factory’ ..., while in 1845 William Ainsworth announced the construction of ‘the largest power-loom weaving shed in the world’” (p. 199). But the late 1830s and early 1840s were also a period of economic depression (p. 199). It was very severe in 1842 (p. 214). Two attempts by the Chartists to present their Charter petition to ameliorate the situation (in 1839 and 1842) were “thrown out by Parliament” (p. 214). There were strikes and riots. “Preston became ... the classic mill town” (p. 182). “Charles Dickens used contemporary accounts of the town during the Great Lockout

- [1853–4] as the background for ... Hard Times. His description of ‘Coketown’ is thus loosely based on Preston” (p. 223). Anna Whistler did not give an opinion of the unrest. She was entertained by the Swainsons and met members of the Ainsworth family at the Winstanleys’ home (see Images 470–473).
923. The kaftan was a man’s floor-length outer garment with long sleeves, of Oriental origin. In the nineteenth century, it was worn by merchants and peasants, the garment of the former differing from that of the latter in the quality of the cloth used and a few details of construction (R.M. Kirsanova, Kostium v russkoi khudozhestvennoi kul’ture 18 – pervoi poloviny 20 vv. (Opyt ènsiklopedii) [Dress in Russian Artistic Culture of the 18th – First Half of the Twentieth Century (An Attempt at an Encyclopedia)], ed. T.G. Morozova and V.D. Siniukov [Moscow: Nauchnoe izdatel’stvo Bol’shaia rossiiskaia ènsiklopediia, 1995], pp. 122–123.) John Winstanley’s kaftan was made of fur or lined with it.
924. “Visite” is the “generic name for a loose outdoor covering ranging from a pelerine, mantle or cloak, to a caped overcoat in the 1880’s” (Cunnington, Cunnington, and Beard, Dictionary of English Costume, p. 230).
925. Elizabeth Chapman was housemaid and Hannah Smith cook in the Winstanley household (1851 Census for Preston).
926. The Reverend John Clarke Haden, uncle of Francis Seymour Haden, had come from the home of his late wife’s parents. Ann (Ormerod) Haden, his wife of only a few months, had died on 24 September 1847.
927. The vicar (1840–1877) of St. John the Divine Parish Church in Preston, where Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden were to be married, was Rev. John Owen Parr (8 August 1798 – 12 February 1877). He graduated from Brasenose College, Oxford, BA 1818, MA 1830. Before being “instituted to Preston” (16 April 1840), he held positions as curate of Henley-on-Thames and vicar of Durnford in Wiltshire. “In 1844 he was appointed Rural Dean, and in 1853 nominated Honorary Canon of Manchester ... [he] held several public offices in Preston and was identified with many public movements” (Henry Fishwick, The History of the Parish of Preston in Amounderness in the County of Lancaster [Rochdale, UK: James Clegg, The Aldine Press; London: Elliott Stock, 1900], pp. 191–192). The church is “located high on the Church Street / Fishergate ridge ... [and] occupies one of the oldest sites in the town” (Hunt, History of Preston, p. 31). The church as the Whistlers knew it no longer exists; in 1854–1855 it was almost completely torn down and rebuilt (Thomas R. Flintoff, Preston Church and Chapels [[Preston]: Carnegie Press, 1985], p. 4).

928. It has not been possible to locate this letter.
929. Romans 12 concerns “the consecrated life” of the Christian, dedicated to “the law of love,” “overcoming evil with good” and leaving justice to be meted out by God (New Oxford Annotated Bible, pp. 1374–1375).
930. After the death of their mother, Alice (Clunie) McNeill, Eliza and Alicia McNeill went from Wilmington, North Carolina, to live in Scotland with their maternal grandmother, Isabel (Finlay) Clunie. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Images 39–40.
931. The 1841 Census for Preston lists a female servant named Sarah Tweedale, age twenty-five, in the home of John and Eliza Winstanley. The 1851 Census lists Mary Parkinson, Elizabeth Chapman, and Hannah Smith as female servants in the home of John and Elizabeth Winstanley. Mary and Elizabeth were sixty-four and forty-two years old, respectively. Hannah, the cook, was twenty-five. From this information, it is not possible to identify the young maids who wished to see Debo in her wedding dress.
932. There was no child in the family of James Chapman of Railway House, Preston, named John. Johnnie Chapman could have been “either James or Alfred who was later known as ‘Jack’ to [James] Whistler” (Robin Spencer to E. Harden, 10 November 1991).
933. His mother was Eliza (Hatton) Chapman (1805 – 18 February 1850) (Certified Copy of an Entry of Death for Eliza Chapman, Sub-district of Preston, County of Lancaster, GRO). See Chapman in Appendix E.
934. The “wedding scramble,” or “poor oot,” was a tradition in Britain (mainly Scotland) in which a “shower of silver ... was thrown to the crowd as the bride and bridegroom drove away.” Although in 1840 it was thought by some to be “a custom no longer in use,” there are records of its practice well into the twentieth century (“Poor oot, n.,” Scottish Language Centre website, accessed 15 February 2021, <https://www.scotlandscotland.com/articles/view/id/4538>). “Presumably this originally symbolised the new husband sharing his ‘good fortune’ and demonstrating his happiness” (“Poor oot,” Ich Scotland website, accessed 15 February 2021, <http://ichscotland.org/wiki/poor-oot>).

935. “Chip” refers to “wood (or woody fibre) split into thin strips for making hats and bonnets” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “chip, n. 4.a.”)
936. Major Whistler had written to William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31) in 1842 of the reverence accorded the portrait by the Winstanleys: “As to the portrait, (which by the by I consider very bad) it is spoken to every morning” (George W. Whistler to Wm. G. McNeill, Adelphi Terrace London, Aug 15th 1842, NYPL: Swift Papers). As Major Whistler had taken a dislike to Francis Seymour Haden in the few days of their acquaintance, he would not toast him. Nor did he ever again write to Deborah until he was dying, because he felt “he could never mention her husband” (Anna Whistler to Deborah Haden, London In my own room 8 Bolton Row Saturday morning Dec. 14 [1867], GUL: Whistler Collection, W535). The whereabouts of this portrait are unknown to me.
937. One of the superstitions connected with weddings was that tiny crumbs of wedding cake would be passed through the bride’s wedding ring and given to the guests. They would place the crumbs under their pillows that night and dream of their future spouses (Simon R. Charsley, Wedding Cakes and Cultural History [London: Routledge, 1992], pp. 108, 109). The subject is depicted in an oil painting by John Everett Millais (1829–1896) called The Bridesmaid (1851), now in the Fitzwilliam Museum (Marcia Werner, Pre-Raphaelite Painting and Nineteenth-Century Realism [Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2005], pp. 150–151).
938. Eliza (Hatton) Chapman’s daughters were Emily, age nineteen; Rose, age seventeen; and Eliza, age sixteen.
939. The word “to” was omitted after “stairs.”
940. They were members of the family of John Winstanley’s brother, William, a physician and justice of the peace. After the death of his wife, Elizabeth (Hardman) Winstanley, in 1845, Dr. William Winstanley “built ‘a very handsome house’ at West Cliff, Preston, fronting the river Ribble, where he lived with his unmarried sister-in-law, Anna Hardman, who adopted Alice, daughter of one of Winstanley’s nephews, Robert, whose mother had died when she was young” (Eliza Winstanley to Kate Palmer, Preston, 2 January 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W1080); Robin Spencer, “Whistler’s Early Relations with Britain and the Significance of Industry and Commerce for his Art: Part I.” The Burlington Magazine 136, no. 1093 [1994]: p. 217). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 473.

941. This tradition dates back to “the ancient Hebrews, Egyptians and Assyrians”:
- When striking a bargain, in this case a marriage, sandals were traded as a symbol of the change of authority over the daughter from father to husband. The bride’s father would give the groom one of his daughter’s old shoes. Her future husband would then tap her on the head, accepting his new authority and responsibility over her. Guests in Tudor times would throw old shoes at the newly wed couple. It was supposed to bring good luck and assure fertility in the marriage if they or the carriage they were riding in was hit. (“Rice and Shoe Throwing: How it Started,” Live Life website, accessed 15 February 2021, <https://www.livelifeguide.com/rice-and-shoe-throwing-how-it-all-started/>)
942. Puce is a dark purple brown or brownish purple colour.
943. Eliza Winstanley, James, and Willie went to show themselves to Ann (Critchley) Walton (see Note 861 above).
944. The word “of” was omitted after “husband.” The two ceremonies occurring a year apart were the memorial service in the Whistlers’ home for John Bouttatz Whistler on 16 October 1846, and the wedding of Deborah Delano Whistler on 16 October 1847.
945. Edward Ormerod (c. 1811 – 27 February 1899) was listed in the 1881 Census as gentleman, seventy years of age, born in Manchester, Lancashire.
946. Mr. Richard Ormerod (c. 1775 – 31 December 1861) was the father of the recently deceased Ann (Ormerod) Haden.
947. Mrs. Edward Ormerod was Harriet (Ibbetson) Ormerod (c. 1820 – 17 April 1850). She and Edward Ormerod were married on 4 May 1841. He married on 21 September 1854, as his second wife, Frances Ballantyne Dykes (6 October 1814 – 31 January 1894).
948. The bereaved mother of Ann (Ormerod) Haden was Esther (Smith) Ormerod (bap. 18 November 1777 – 4 July 1863) of the Smith family of Chaddock Hall.
949. Ecclesiastes 7:2: “It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.”

950. The Monday after the wedding was 18 October 1847.
951. Aunt Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (see Image 39) and James went to say goodbye again to Mr. William Stewart and his wife, Jean, who ran a boarding school in Birkenhead called Holly Bank.
952. Tuesday was 19 October 1847.
953. The hotel at Euston Station was the Euston Hotel.
954. The Whistlers took Emma Maingay home to Shooter's Hill on Wednesday, 20 October 1847. "Woolwich is a market town and parish in the hundred of Blackheath and lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, 8 miles SE from London – situated on elevated ground, rising gently from the south bank of the Thames ... Shooter's Hill in this parish, is chiefly to be noted as the the residence of many respectable families, and the summer retreat of many opulent individuals, attracted by the salubrity of the situation and the extensive views which it commands over a wide district of the county" (Pigot's Directory of Kent 1840). The Maingays' home was called Wellesley House.
955. For the Maingay family members, see Maingay in Appendix E and Images 258–264.
956. This may be Maria Pavlovna Tuchkova (25 March 1821 [OS] – 11 April 1858 [OS]), a lady-in-waiting to Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna. She was the daughter of Pavel Alekseevich Tuchkov (1775 – 24 January 1858 [OS]) and Aleksandra Petrovna (Nekliudova) Tuchkova (30 June 1798 [OS] – 24 June 1869 [OS]). Anna Whistler's correspondence shows that she actually visited the sick Miss Tuchkov in late 1848, and her conversation with Miss Tuchkov's mother suggests that the Maingays might have invited Miss Tuchkov to visit them in England (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. P. Oct 3rd 1848 Tuesday, GUL: Whistler Collecction: W363).
957. L. Bonnet, The Family of Bethany; or Meditations on the Eleventh Chapter of the Gospel According to St. John, 10th ed. (London: James Nisbet, 1844).
958. Frederick and Emily (Lillie) Maingay were now twelve and thirteen years old.
959. It has not been possible to locate a Waterloo Hotel on the Thames in the 1840s.
960. "Nearly opposite the houses of Parliament stands Westminster Abbey [see Image 475], open to inspection on the north and east, but much crowded upon by paltry dwelling-houses on the west.

... Here a monastic institution was founded on the introduction of Christianity into Britain. Under Edward the Confessor, an abbey was raised upon the site of the ruined monastic building. The ground plan, as usual, bore the form of the cross; ... It [became] the place for the inauguration of the English monarchs, and William the Conqueror was crowned here ... in 1066. Henry III. enlarged the abbey, and the building continued in the state in which he left it until Henry VII. added a chapel, built in the florid Gothic style, ... the most splendid structure of the age, ... it was enjoined that the remains of royalty alone should be interred within its walls. During the reign of Henry VIII., the abbey was considerably defaced, but on the surrender of its revenues, Henry raised Westminster to the dignity of a city, and its abbey was constituted a cathedral. It was, however, afterwards reunited to London in 1550. Westminster Abbey, during the reign of William and Mary, was thoroughly repaired, and the towers added at the western entrance, under the direction of the celebrated Sir Christopher Wren. ...

The length of the abbey is 416 feet; breadth at the transept, 203 feet; nave, 102 feet; height of the west towers, 225 feet. The exterior measurement, including Henry VII.'s Chapel, is 530 feet.

On entering at the great western door between the towers, the magnificence of the abbey at once strikes the beholder with reverential awe: nearly the whole of the interior appears in grand masses of towering Gothic columns of grey marble, connecting the pavement with the roof, and separating the nave from the side aisles. A screen divides the nave from the choir, which is surmounted by a noble organ, while beyond, the eye soars amid graceful columns, tracery, and decorated windows, to the summit of the eastern arch that overlooks the adjacent chapels. The walls on either side display a great profusion of sepulchral monuments ...

Above the line of tombs there are chambers and galleries, once occupied by nuns. ... The northern window is richly ornamented with stained glass, representing the Holy Scriptures surrounded by a band of cherubim, in the centre; on the sides, the Saviour, the Evangelists, and Apostles, appear in recumbent attitudes. From this window proceeds a calm ray of light, very advantageous to the display of the beautiful sculpture on which it falls. There are numerous tombs and monuments of noble persons, exquisitely imagined and executed, in emblematical groups or in faithful portraiture ...

The Chapel of Edward the Confessor is at the eastern end of the choir, and contains the shrine of St. Edward ... Here also is the coronation-chair, under which is placed the celebrated stone brought from Scone in Scotland by Edward I., in 1297. The Chapel of Henry VII. is also at the eastern end of Westminster Abbey; and among the ashes of many whose brows were decorated with diadems, are those of Mary and Elizabeth. The ascent to this splendid piece of Gothic art, which has been extolled as the wonder of the world, is by steps of black marble beneath a stately portico. The entrance gates display workmanship of extraordinary richness in brass. The effect produced on entering this chapel is solemn and elevating: the lofty ceiling is wrought in stone into an astonishing variety of figures and devices; the stalls are of oak, having the deep tone of age, with Gothic canopies, all elaborately carved. Here are installed the knights of the most honourable the Order of the Bath ... The pavement is composed of black and white marble, beneath which is the royal vault. The magnificent tomb of Henry VII. and Elizabeth his queen, stands in the body of this chapel in a curious chantry of cast brass, most admirably executed, and interspersed with effigies, armorial bearings, and devices, alluding to the union of the red and white roses.

Westminster Abbey is a collegiate church, with a dean and chapter, who possess a considerable authority over the adjoining district. The abbey may be considered as subdivided into nine chapels; but in the present day divine service is performed only in a space enclosed with wood, near the eastern extremity of the building. It takes place daily at ten in the morning and three in the afternoon, though sometimes none are present but the officials. The public worship of the parish is conducted in the adjacent church of St. Margaret.

The abbey is usually entered by a side door at Poet's corner, which is nearly opposite the House of Lords. Here strangers will find admittance daily, and be conducted through the building on payment of certain fees" (Chambers's Information 1842, p. 217).

961. The Colosseum is located at "the south end of [Regent's] Park," where it "stands conspicuous, with its immense Doric portico and circular roof, rising from a polygon of sixteen faces, occupying an area of 400 feet. The main design of this large structure is to exhibit a kind of panoramic view of London, and this is accomplished with surprising fidelity and effect. The representation is exhibited as seen from the top of St. Paul's, and to gain this imaginary height, the visitor mounts a central tower"

(Chambers's Information 1842, p. 219). "By the aid of machinery that carries a moveable room through the centre of the building, the visiter is raised to a level with the summit of the panorama, and thus spared the trouble of mounting the staircase" (Edward Mogg, Mogg's New Picture of London; or, Strangers' Guide to the British Metropolis, 11th ed. [London: printed by the author, 1848], p. 194). The building, "commenced in 1824, and completed in 1827," is made of "brick, faced with cement, tinted to imitate stone. The interior is judiciously disposed into a saloon, where works of art are exhibited ... The gardens surrounding the Colosseum comprise conservatories, waterfalls, fountains, a Swiss cottage, a marine cave and grotto, all of beautiful construction" (Mogg, p. 194). By April 1845, "the Grand Panorama of the Metropolis [had] been almost entirely repainted" (The Illustrated London News, April 26 and May 3, 1845).

962. "St. Paul's Church, the most prominent object in London, and whose lofty dome towers in majesty over the mean rows of brick houses which environ it, stands in the centre of an enclosed churchyard of limited dimensions, at the head of Ludgate Hill Street. A church was planted here four hundred years before the Norman Conquest, and under various shapes and extensions, it remained till destroyed by the great fire in London, in 1666. An entirely new edifice was then erected in its stead, the important work being committed to Sir Christopher Wren. It is built in the form of a Greek cross, and measures 514 feet in length, 286 in breadth, and 370 in height, to the topmost pinnacle. Outwardly, the walls, which have a dark sooty appearance, except where bleached with the rains, exhibit a double range of windows. There are three porticoes at as many entrances, on the north, west, and south. That on the west is the principal, with twelve lofty Corinthian pillars below, and the angles above crowned with handsome bell towers, the size of ordinary church towers or steeples. But this entrance, which fronts the street called Ludgate Hill, is apparently disused, and the common entrance is by the north portico and flight of steps. On entering, the impression produced by the vastness of the internal space is very great ... The only objects designed to please in detail are the statues and sepulchral monuments ranged along the sides of the aisles. The revenues of St. Paul's are considerable, and support several prebendaries and other functionaries, the institution being a collegiate church. Prayers are read every morning and afternoon. Through some fine open screenwork, a view is obtained of the place where the usual services are performed, and which is highly decorated with dark oaken carved work ... [One] may mount by means of stairs and ladders to the top of the cupola; ... the extensive view ... comprehends the whole of London, with the country beyond its outskirts, and the Thames rolling placidly in its winding course through the dense mass of houses ... The clock-work and great bell ... always attract the notice of visitors. The pendulum measures fourteen feet in length, while the mass at its extremity is one hundredweight. The great bell, which is only rung when a member of the royal family dies, is placed in the southern turret above the western portico, and weighs four and a half tons, and is ten feet in diameter. The fine deep tones of this mighty bell, on which the hours are struck, sweep solemnly in a quiet evening across the metropolis, and are heard distinctly ... several miles distant. In the immediate vicinity of St. Paul's, the town has a retired cloistered appearance, the names of the very streets and lanes giving token of their former connexion with the religious structure and its clerical attendants. The enclosed churchyard is surrounded by a street, not of the broadest dimensions, closely hemmed in with houses, now chiefly dedicated to trade, the lower storeys being, as usual, shops. An open arched passage on the south side of the churchyard leads to Doctors' Commons, or the offices connected with the ecclesiastical courts. St. Paul's is open each week day from 9 to 11, and from 3 to 4 ; and on Sunday from 10 to 12, and from 3 to 5. An authorized tariff of fees is exhibited at the door (Chambers's Information 1842, p. 214–215).

963. "The Parks, which form one of the most beautiful features of the metropolis, are situated chiefly in a series from the back of Whitehall Street, in a westerly and northerly direction, and are thus blended with the fashionable end of the town. The most ancient of these open grounds is St. James's Park, so called from St. James's Palace, which partly bounds it on the north. Originally these grounds were a marshy waste, which was drained and otherwise improved by Henry VIII., who also took down an ancient hospital dedicated to St. James, and built on its site the palace now called St. James's. Charles II. improved the grounds by planting the avenues of lime-trees on the north and south sides of the park, and forming the Mall, which was a hollowed, smooth, graveled space, half a mile long, skirted with a wooden border, for playing at balls. The southern avenue was appropriated to aviaries: hence it derived the appellation Birdcage Walk. The centre of the park was occupied by canals and ponds for aquatic birds. William III. threw the park open to the public for their recreation. It is nearly a mile and a half in circumference, and the avenues form delightful shady promenades. In the centre is a fine piece of water, interspersed with islands, and covered with swans and various water-fowl. On each side are spacious lawns, dotted with lofty trees and flowering shrubs. The lawns are separated from the avenues by iron railings, and at each entrance is a keeper's lodge. There are seven or eight entrances to the park, the king's guard doing duty at each, day and night. At the east side of St. James's Park is a large graveled space called the Parade, on which, about ten o'clock every morning, the body-guards required for the day are mustered – about seven or eight hundred men; and here the regimental bands perform every morning between ten and eleven o'clock ... north from the parade, is a broad flight of steps, giving entrance to the park from Waterloo Place, constructed by order of William IV.; these steps are surmounted by a lofty column, commemorative of the late Duke of York, which occupies the spot where lately stood Carlton Palace, the favourite residence of George IV. while Prince Regent. The buildings near this, which overlook the park, are lofty and elegant. Farther along the Mall, or avenue, is St. James's Palace, an inelegant brick structure, having its front toward Pall-Mall ... This palace is used only occasionally by the queen, the principal royal residence being now Buckingham Palace [see Image 476]" (Chambers's Information 1842, p. 218).

Anna Whistler's friend, Eliza Isabella Wellwood (Stevenson) Smith, and her husband, Thomas Macdougall Smith, lived near St. James's Park, at 1 Chapel (or Duke) Place, Delahay (or Duke) Street, Westminster. Delahay Street and Duke Street were connected; Delahay became Duke at the bend in the road. There was a chapel in Duke Street called Duke Street Chapel that was just past the bend in the road. Chapel Place was probably adjacent to the Duke Street Chapel. Delahay Street was occupied predominantly by engineers, including T.M. Smith, and Isambard Kingdom Brunel (1806 –1859) lived on Duke Street. These streets no longer exist. See Stevenson and Smith in Appendix E.

964. Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw (bap. 22 July 1792 – 7 March 1875); her daughters, Catherine Maccallum Shaw (bap. 13 July 1820 – 18 March 1888) and Georgina Shaw (bap. 25 October 1821 – 10 May 1902); and her mother, Catharine (Fraser) Wardrop (1768 – 4 March 1850) were living at Park House, Clapham, Surrey (Registers of the parish church of Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire, Buckinghamshire Record Office, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire; Certified Copy of an Entry of Death for

- Georgina Shaw and for Catherine Wardrop, GRO; OPRJ). The widowed Mrs. Shaw and her daughters ran a series of schools. See the biographies of the Shaw and Wardrop families in Appendix E (hereafter, Shaw and Wardrop) and Images 486, 488. Anna Whistler made an engagement to go with Eliza Isabella Wellwood (Stevenson) Smith to visit Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw, but was unable to do so because of time constraints.
965. Anna Whistler is referring to 1829, when she visited Georgina Shaw with Frances (Morton) Stevenson (bap. 27 April 1783 – 16 October 1845). Pigot and Co.'s National London and Provincial Commerical Directory for 1832-3-4 (London: J. Pigot, 1832; hereafter, Pigot's London Directory and the year) lists under “Academies-Gents” a boarding and day preparatory school at Cadogan Terrace, Sloane Street, run by Georgina Shaw. The name “Calcutta House” does not appear, but it is clear from subsequent biographical information given by Anna Whistler that this was the name of the school.
966. This was Dr. Francis Boott, MD (see Image 80), brother of the Whistlers’ friend, Kirk Boott (see Image 43), of Lowell, Massachusetts.
967. “Paternoster Row is a continuation of Cheapside, but is not used as a thoroughfare, though it communicates by transverse alleys or courts with the Churchyard, and, at its western extremity, by means of another cross alley, called Ave-Maria Lane, leads into Ludgate Hill ... ‘[T]he Row’, as it is familiarly termed, is a dull street, hardly wide enough to permit two carriages to pass each other, with a narrow pavement for a single rank and file on each side, and a gutter in the middle. The houses are tall and somber in their aspect, and the shops below have a dead look, in comparison with those in the more animated streets. From a very remote period, this alley has been the seat of booksellers and publishers, who, till the present day, continue in such numbers as to leave little room for other tradesmen” (Chambers’s Information 1842, p. 215). Although Anna Whistler does not identify what type of book she was buying for Debo’s birthday, No. 56 Paternoster Row was the location of the Religious Tract Society.
968. It has not been possible to determine the name of Deborah and Seymour Haden’s housekeeper in 1847; perhaps she did not live in. In the 1851 Census for 62 Sloane Street, Chelsea, in addition to the Hadens and their two children (a daughter, Annie Harriet, age two; and a son, Francis Seymour, age one), there are the Cook, age twenty-four, named Anne Grub (?); the Housemaid, age twenty-five, named Mary Glen (?); the Nurse, age twenty-two, named Mary Jordan; and the Errand Boy, age thirteen or eighteen, named George Day. No housekeeper is mentioned. In the 1841 Census, no Haden is listed as living at 62 Sloane Street.

969. In the 1840s, there was a Cadogan Literary and Scientific Institution on Cadogan-Gardens, Sloane Street. In April 1842, a meeting was held there for examining a group of pupils who had “been instructed in English history by means of the Polish mnemonic method” used in “public schools in Paris.” In September 1846, a “To Let” notice appeared in the London Daily News announcing the availability of an unfurnished house, “facing the middle of the Cadogan-Gardens,” that would be “very eligible for a ladies’ school, and permanent lady boarders.” A meeting “in aid of the Ladies’ Society for Promoting the Improvement of the Children of Negroes and People of Colour in the British West Indies” was held here on 21 March 1848 (Kentish Mercury [London], April 16, 1842; London Daily News, September 16, 1846; Morning Chronicle (London), March 22, 1848). There is no Cadogan Gardens listed in the 1841 and 1851 censuses.
970. Haden made a trip to Italy and Switzerland in spring–summer of 1844, during which he produced four Italian sketchbooks and journals (GUL: Whistler Collection, Whistler NB 15–18). The journey recorded “begins at Paris on February 27, 1844, and breaks off after August 21, 1844, in Geneva” (Richard S. Schneiderman, A Catalogue Raisonné of the Prints of Sir Francis Seymour Haden [London: Robin Garton, 1983], p. 31n21). “These sheets were not removed from the sketchbook, so would not answer the question of what was on the wall [of Debo’s boudoir]” (K. Lochnan, Art Gallery of Ontario, Toronto, to E. Harden, 19 July 2005).

“[O]nly a small number of works out of the total production of this trip has been preserved” (Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 21) (see Images 213–222). Seven are in the British Museum: “Near Rome” (c. 1844); “Portrait of the Marquise de Belluno, sketching at Velletri” (“13? June 1844”); “Rome from near the Ponte Molle” (“15th. May. 1844”), with a “sketch of the Castel S. Angelo etc.” on the reverse of the one of the two leaves; “View at Tivoli” (“17 April 1844”); “Baths of Caracalla, Rome” (1844); “Portrait of Duval le Camus” (“Roma 9. April 1844”); “Maecenas’ Villa at Tivoli” (“April 17th 1844”) (Richard S. Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: A Reassessment of His Etchings and Water Colors,” master’s thesis, University of Cincinnati, 1973, list of plates, nos. 1, 3, 4, 6, 7; A.V. Griffiths, London, to E. Harden, 27 August 1997). Two are in the Metropolitan Museum of Art: “Houses on the Tiber” (c. 1844); “Pisa” (c. 1844) (Schneiderman, list of plates, nos. 10, 11; Heather Lemonedes, New York, to E. Harden, 5 September 1997). One is in the Albright-Knox Gallery of Art: “The Colosseum” (1843–1844) (Schneiderman, list of plates, no. 5; Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, pp. 21, 22, 43, 45, 47; Paul McLaughlin, Buffalo, NY, to E. Harden, 10 March 2006). One is in the NYPL: Tomb of Porsenna “called that of Horatii/Albano June/xiii 1844” (Nancy Finlay, New York, to E. Harden, 28 August 1997). In Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” this watercolor is called “Landscape with Classical Ruins” (list of plates, no. 12). One is in the Victoria and Albert Museum: “Castle of Savelli. From the Inn at Albano” (8 June 1844) (Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” list of plates, no. 9; Charles Newton, London, to E. Harden, 28 September 2005). One is in the Cincinnati Art Museum: “Neapolitan Palace of Joanna Secunda” (c. 1844) (Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” list of plates, no. 8; Kristin Spangenberg, Cincinnati, to E. Harden, 22 September 2005). There is also a drawing of “A Small Street in Amalfi” (1843–1844), the present whereabouts of which are unknown (Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” p. 95; Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 47). In 1985, two drawings entitled “Town of Naples & Palace, Naples,” and “Cicero’s Bath Room,” on a single sheet of paper “inscribed by Haden and dated 1843,” were offered in the exhibition catalogue of Haden’s work produced by “Garton & Cooke in association with Th. Laurentius” (p. 3). I have no information about whether they were sold or to whom.

Schneiderman records that Haden was in Italy in 1843 (see Naples sketches above) and later in life dated some of his drawings of Italy 1843 (Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” p. 22). He further records that Haden was in Italy in 1845, as the Harrington collection catalogue lists four pencil sketches of Italy dated that year: Vicenze (18 August 1845), Mavano (c. 1845), Liona (c. 1845), and Venice (20 August 1845) (Schneiderman, p. 27). Schneiderman also mentions a drawing of Naples dated 1 July 1845 (Schneiderman, p. 26), the whereabouts of which are unknown (Schneiderman, p. 27). Any sketches of Switzerland from the 1844 trip do not seem to have survived. Haden probably made further sketches of Switzerland during his trip there in the summer of 1847, but, except for Summit of Cader Idris (Wales, 1847), no art work by Haden survives from the years 1845 to 1848 (Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 22). For a discussion of the Italian sketches see Schneiderman, “Sir Frances Seymour Haden: Reassessment,” pp. 22–31, 95–96. For a discussion of “the significance of Haden’s [1844] trip and its wider implications,” see Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, pp. 20–22, 31.

971. They sailed for Hamburg on the Victoria on 23 October 1847.
972. “Broad cloth” is a “fine, plain-wove, dressed, double width, black cloth, used chiefly for men’s garments” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “broadcloth”).
973. The Whistlers landed in Hamburg on Monday, 25 October 1847.
974. In 1847, the Whistlers were staying in the now completely rebuilt and remodeled Streit’s Hotel “in the beautiful new square” (see Image 82). Anna Whistler’s delighted comments about the appearance of the square confirm that it had not yet been completed when she was in Hamburg in 1843 (see the entry for St Petersburg. November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWP, Part I, and accompanying Note 55).
975. Initially “synonymous with drap cloth” (derived from “Drap-de-Berry,” “a kind of woollen cloth, coming from Berry in France”), the term “drab cloth” was “applied to a hempen, linen, or woollen cloth of the natural undyed colour, whence attributive in drap or drab colour, i.e. the colour of this cloth” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “drab, n.2”).
976. The Hotel “Stadt Hamburg” in Lübeck was located at Klingenberg 1. The host of the hotel, whom Anna Whistler referred to as Mr. Flukes, was Georg Theodor Pflüg (Celle 1793 – Lübeck 1876) (Otto Wiehmann, Archiv der Hansestadt Lübeck, to E. Harden, 21 July 1994). Pflüg owned a collection of paintings that the Whistlers viewed on several occasions. James referred to “a very fine head by a Spanish master” in the collection in a letter to his father (James Whistler to Major G.W. Whistler, [Preston], Monday, June 21, [18]47 & July 3, GUL: Whistler Collection, W654). The collection was sold in 1874. There is a brochure listing the works, their buyers, and the price paid for each painting: Verzeichniss der Gemälde – Sammlung von Georg Theodor Pflüg senior zu Lübeck 1874, Gedruckt bei H.G. Rahtgens [Catalogue of the Collection of Paintings of Georg Theodor Pflüg Senior of Lübeck 1874, printed by H.G. Rahtgens].

977. Anna Whistler is referring to the death of Charles Donald Whistler on board the Alexandra in 1843.
978. The Russian steamers Nikolai and Alexandra plied the route between Travemünde and Cronstadt.
979. Dr. Adair Crawford (London 19 October 1790 – London 13 June 1879) was graduated MD in 1820 from Edinburgh University. The medical graduates card file at Edinburgh University Library has a card for him, with a biographical note, which says: “LRCP London 1833. Assistant Physician London Fever Hospital. Visited St. Petersburg 1848 and became Member of Imperial College of Physicians there. Practised later again in London. Published various contributions.” As he was “[n]ot in Edinburgh list,” it was conjectured that he was “possibly same as James Crawford M.D. Ed. 1820, with thesis De Ictero [Concerning Jaundice]” (Jo Currie, Edinburgh, to E. Harden, 22 November 1993). The National Probate Calendar (UK) for 1880 shows, however, that he was “John, otherwise Adair,” Crawford. He did not stay long in St. Petersburg, leaving sometime in the summer of 1848. In that same year, he published his Observations on the Asiatic Cholera, during a Residence in St. Petersburg in 1848, and on Its Prevention and Cure; with an Account of the Sanitary Regulations Proposed to Be Adopted against the Spreading of the Disease in This Country, Metropolitan Sanitary Commission (London: W. Clowes and Son for Her Majesty’s Stationery Office, 1848). The Introduction is dated “August 31, 1848,” and gives his address as “3, St. James’ Street, Pall Mall” (see also the London and Provincial Medical Directory, 1851 [London: John Churchill, 1851][hereafter, London and Provincial Medical Directory and the year], pp. 26, 60). The publication was only twenty-four pages long, as his chief object was “to urge upon the attention of the public” that “cholera is almost invariably preceded by premonitory symptoms of derangement in the function of the digestive organs,” chiefly by diarrhea. If proper remedies are used “to check these premonitory symptoms on their first appearance . . . , the progress of the disease is generally arrested, and the development of its dangerous and unmanageable symptoms prevented.” He left it for physicians resident in St. Petersburg to undertake a “full account of the course of the epidemic” there, and praised them for the “indefatigable zeal and courage” they displayed at great personal peril (Crawford, Introduction, Asiatic Cholera, p. 3). He was also the author of “Inflammation of the Brain,” and the article “Inflammation” in The Cyclopaedia of Practical Medicine (London: Sherwood, Gilbert and Piper, 1833–1835, pp. 700–815)

- (London and Provincial Medical Directory 1851, p. 60). At the time of his death, he was living at 18 Montague Street at Russell Square (London and Provincial Medical Directory 1880, p. 1303). His personal estate was under one thousand pounds (National Probate Calendar (UK), 1879). See also Dr. Williams's Library, Birth Certificate; 1851 Census for St. Johns, Hampstead; 1871 Census for St. James, Plumstead; London and Provincial Medical Directory 1865, p. 75).
980. The Record was published from 1828 to 1848 in London. Its principles were "those of what are called the Low Church or Evangelical ... division of the Establishment; ... Its pervading character is religious; and the evangelical sentiment which it strenuously supports finds free and piquant expression in its columns. At the same time it affords as much of general news as, there can be no doubt, satisfies persons of strong religious feelings" (Newspaper Press Directory, 1851 [London: Mitchell, 1851]).
981. The sons of Prince Pyotr Georgievich (1812–1881) and Princess Teresia-Vil'gel'mina (1815–1871) Oldenburg to whom Dr. Adair Crawford could have been appointed moral tutor were Nikolai Petrovich (St. Petersburg 27 April 1840 – Geneva 8 January 1886) or Aleksandr Petrovich (St. Petersburg 25 May 1844 – Biarritz 6 September 1932) (see Images 294–296) (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, pp. 291, 297).
982. Collegiate Secretary (10th grade) Karl Vladimirovich Knorring (1823–1871) was junior secretary of the Russian Embassy in Brazil (Mesiatsoslov na 1844 g., p. 121). See BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fols. 90–91 about meeting him at the Whistlers' home on 21 January 1848. As a Baltic German his name was Karl Gotthard von Knorring.
983. Young Knorring's father was Adjutant General (1838) Vladimir Karlovich Knorring (18 February 1786 – 2 January 1864 [OS]), aide-de-camp to the emperor, general of cavalry (1841), and commander of the reserve corps of the Horse Guard. As a Baltic German his name was Karl Pontus Woldemar von Knorring. In 1843, while Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (see Image 439) was abroad, V.K. Knorring was commander of the entire guard corps (Serene Vitale, Pushkin's Button, trans. Ann Goldstein and Jon Rothshild [New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1999], p. 340).
984. Young Knorring's mother was Luisa Andreevna (Severina) Knorring (7 September 1796 – St. Petersburg 20 October 1843). She married Vladimir Karlovich Knorring on 24 February 1815

- (OS). Korf pointed out the difference in the social status of Knorring's parents. His mother was the daughter of a man in commerce, and when her husband married her he could not yet foresee that he would have his present career (Korf, Dnevnik God 1843-i, pp. 245, 328, 469). She was a close friend of Anna Whistler's friend Helene Funck. As a Baltic German her name was Luise Henriette Severin von Knorring.
985. On their return from England to St. Petersburg, the Whistlers received a welcome from William Bonamy Maingay (W<sup>m</sup> Maingay) (see Image 260); Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes and William Hooper Ropes, their neighbors across the hall (M<sup>rs</sup> Ropes, her husband); Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and William Clarke Gellibrand, English merchant (M<sup>r</sup> and M<sup>rs</sup> Gellibrand); and their adopted daughter, Elizabeth Hannah Ropes (Lizzie Ropes) (see Images 265–267).
986. George Henry Prince had the Whistlers' apartment put in order while they were in England.
987. This servant was named Matvey (Matthew), pronounced "Mahtvyey'."
988. A "roundabout" was a "snug, fitted jacket worn by boys in the 1840s through 1860s, buttoned at front and cut off at or slightly below the waist" (Severa, Dressed for the Photographer, p. 547).
989. Marie the cook returned to their employ and was presented with a blanket shawl, which is "a shawl made of blanketing or heavy woolen cloth" (Merriam Webster Online, s.v. "blanket shawl," accessed 20 March 2021, <https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/blanket%20shawl>; see also Patricia Hunt-Hurst, ed., Clothing and Fashion: American Fashion from Head to Toe, vol. 2, The Federal Era through the 19th Century [Santa Barbara, CA: ABC-CLIO, 2016], p. 204).
990. Christine the laundress also returned to their employ and received an English cap. "Caps of the early 19th century [were] loosely divided into three basic styles: the lace cap, the draped cap, and the mob cap. The lace cap and draped cap are fairly self-explanatory ... The mob cap is a large soft hat which covers all of the hair and is typically bordered by a broad ruffle or decorative frill. ... The simple mob caps of the early 19th century [were] worn mainly by female servants" (Mimi Matthews, Fashionable Caps for 19th Century Matrons both Young and Old, 30 August 2015, accessed 20 March 2021, <https://www.mimimatthews.com/2015/08/30/fashionable-> caps-for-19th-century-matrons-both-young-and-old/). What Anna Whistler presented Christine with was not, however, simple, but abundantly beribboned and meant for dressing up rather than work; indeed, it was above Christine's station. Anna Whistler is surprising here in her frivolity.

991. The cow was named Bosiushka, the Russian diminutive and endearing form of "Bossie," pronounced "Baw'syooshkuh." She had been left with the family of Andrew McCalla and Lydia Anne (James) Eastwick (see Eastwick in Appendix E and Images 233–234).
992. Mrs. Francis Baird (Dorothea); Mrs. Joseph Statter (Eleanor); Mrs. Matthew Anderson (Ann Elizabeth); Madam Nadezhda Filipovna Mel'nikova, wife of Aleksandr Petrovich Mel'nikov, and one of their daughters (Kleopatra, age seven; Aleksandra, age ten; or Olga, age seventeen), called on Anna Whistler. Mrs. Statter and Mrs. Anderson were related by marriage, as Mrs. Statter's maiden name was Anderson. Madam Mel'nikova and her daughter were the sister-in-law and niece of Colonel Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (see Mel'nikov in Appendix E and Image 247).
993. Marie Olga, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (see Images 226–227), was born on 5/17 September 1847 and baptized on 1/13 December 1847 (PREC STP, p. 359). She was named for the two surviving daughters of Nicholas I (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, 10/22 October 1847, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1). Rev. Dr. Edward Law performed the ceremony.
994. Colin McCrae Ingersoll (see Image 280) stood proxy for Thomas Poulterer (27 June 1832 – 10 August 1890) (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fol. 67).
995. Mrs. Maria Isabella Hewett, Joseph Harrison Jr.'s youngest sister (b. c. 1825), married in October 1846 and recently widowed, is given as godmother in the Parish Register of the English Church. However, her surname was Leland (PREC STP, p. 359). Her husband, Theodore Leland, suffered from ill health and shortly after their marriage was sent alone to New Orleans to be restored, but the sixty-day sea voyage resulted in his death ten days after arriving in New Orleans (Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, March 7/20 [sic: 7/19], 1847, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison Jr. to R.G. Fairbanks, Alexandroffsky, April 14/26, 1846 [sic: 1847]; Joseph Harrison Jr. to W.S. Nightingale, Alexandroffsky, June 18/30, 1847; Joseph Harrison Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, August 9/21, 1847). Mrs. Leland had arrived in Russia on Sunday, 3/15 August 1847 (Edward Eastwick to Charles James, Alexandroffsky, August 19th 1847 Thursday, Eastwick Letters). Later in this entry she is called “Aunty Maria.”

996. The Russian word for “wet nurse” is spelled “mamen’ka” and pronounced “mah’minkuh” (see Image 363, showing a wet nurse in her costume).
997. The Russian word for “little darling” is spelled “dushen’ka” and pronounced “doo’shinkuh.”
998. Both William Hooper Ropes and Ralph Isaacs Ingersoll gave a Thanksgiving dinner party. For the description of a previous Thanksgiving dinner at the home of William Hooper Ropes, see John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, January 1, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 27. The flavor of the dinner and of one of the guests invited by Ralph Isaacs Ingersoll was recorded by Colin M. Ingersoll:

November 25th. Thanksgiving day, at home! and we have had the “American Colony” to dine at the Legation—a handsome dinner, table beautifully set, and our French cook beat all previous efforts in the cuisine. The pea nuts which my good mother sent in a box, with canned oyster, to us, was a feature on the occasion—they are never seen here, and while we had no ‘cider and pumpkin pie’—we had some choice Tokay from Prince Metternichs cellar—a present—the only trouble about it being, according to one of our good hearted guests, that ‘the wine glasses were too small! While at table, letters from the U.S. were brought in, nearly every body getting a letter. (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fol. 57)

His mother was Margaret Catherine Eleanor (Van den Heuvel) Ingersoll (c. 1788 – 23 December 1878). The French cook was Madame Françoise Dumée.

999. As Henry was born on 23 December and Annie on 25 December, a joint birthday party was held for them on 24 December.
1000. Doctor James Ronaldson Handyside was attending Mrs. Harrison.
1001. The English book store, or Kirton’s, had moved from the house of Liprandi on Galernaia Street to the house of Bremme on the corner of New-Isaac Street next to the Horse Guard Indoor Riding Range (Konnogvardeiskii manežh), thus requiring the Whistlers to walk several blocks, from the First Ward of the First Admiralty District to its Third Ward (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 30; Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 295).

1002. Anna Whistler is referring to Georgiana, Lady Bloomfield (London 13 April 1822 – Hertford 21 May 1905; see Image 292), daughter of Thomas Henry Liddell, first Baron Ravensworth. She had been maid of honor to Queen Victoria (see Image 287) from December 1841 to July 1845. On 4 September 1845, she married the Honorable John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield (see Image 291), envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Great Britain to Russia. He “succeeded his father as second Baron Bloomfield in the peerage of Ireland [on] 15 August 1846” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Bloomfield, John Arthur Douglas”; Bloomfield, Reminiscences, vol. 1, p. 1). See also the entry for Monday [January] 5th [1846] Russian Christmas Eve and accompanying Note 252.
1003. Through the efforts of Lord Bloomfield (see Image 291), Imperial permission was granted to establish an English school under his patronage in St. Petersburg exclusively for the young children, both male and female, of English citizens in that city. A house belonging to Pets on the Fifth Line of Vasilievskii Island was rented for this purpose, and the school opened on 6/18 November 1847. The director was the Rev. Elijah Smith (11 March 1800 – 10 October 1870) and the supervisor Rev. Dr. Edward Law. The subjects taught were: religion; reading, writing, and grammar of the English, German, and Russian languages; arithmetic; geography; history; penmanship; and private lessons in Latin, French, music, and needlework. The teachers were Rev. Smith, E. Smith, Mr. Breitfuss, Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Knirsh. The forty-six pupils, all of them boarders, consisted of thirty-one boys and fifteen girls. The annual fee was 131 silver rubles. If two or more students were from the same family, their fee was reduced (TsGIA SPb: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5109. Ob otkrytii v S.-Peterburge shkoly dlia detei Anglichan. 11 Noiabria 1847 g. – 19 Dek. 1851 g. [Concerning the opening of a school in St. Petersburg for the children of Englishmen 11 November 1847 – 19 December 1851, fols. 1–3). A list of all forty-six pupils’ names and their fathers’ trades can be found in this file (fols. 4r and v). See the biography of Elijah Smith in Appendix E. Because William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265), communicant of the British and American Congregational Church, was a generous supporter of the school, the pastor of that church, Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256), and his wife, Mary (Bealey) Ellerby, were made members of the gentlemen's and ladies' committees.

1004. Anna Whistler resumed writing her diary on Tuesday, 25 April 1848. A very important event that had occurred in February 1848 and is omitted because of this gap was the publication of Maxwell's book The Czar, His Court and People. In his last extant letter to Major Whistler among his papers at the N-YHS, written on 11 February 1848, Maxwell said:

It will be out and for sale in a few days and I would send you a copy if I supposed there was any chance of its reaching you. However, it would appear, a very poor affair to you, conversant as you are by your long residence, with the Russian people. I have been as fair as possible in my remarks. There is no extenuation - naught set down in malice- I wrote the manuscript originally for the amusement of my leisure hours and the information of my friends—and now I have been induced to let it go to the public—You will see at least that I have been fair – and as just as any opportunities of judging would permit—Don't be too severe— (John S. Maxwell to George Washington Whistler, New York, February 11, 1848, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers)

The second important event that had occurred was the Easter season. In 1848, Orthodox Lent began on 23 February / 6 March and Western Lent two days later, on Ash Wednesday, 25 February / 8 March. Easter Sunday took place for both groups on 11/23 April.

In her opening entry of 25 April, two days after Easter Sunday, Anna Whistler limits herself to lamenting the lack of devotion in the congregation of her church, whose members attend only in Passion week, but otherwise prefer secular festivities.

1005. After Rev. Elijah and Mrs. Smith arrived from London, the school opened and the number of pupils rose to eighty. In addition to William Clarke Gellibrand, other generous donors, such as Francis Baird (see Image 275), the foundry owner, and Charles Wood (see Image 271) of the Petrovsky Cotton-Spinning and Weaving Mill, contributed large sums to support the school. Charles Wood also placed his son, William Nicholson Wood, in the school as a boarder. The Smiths, however, were found to be poorly prepared to carry out their duties as teachers. On 6 February 1848, Rev. Smith tendered his and his wife's resignation to the school's Committee. It was accepted on condition that they remain in their posts until 26 June 1848. As their replacements, the Committee invited a male and female teacher from England who were fully qualified and had presented excellent testimonials of their ability. All of this information was communicated to Privy Councilor Mikhail Nikolaevich Musin-Pushkin (1795–1862), head of the St. Petersburg Educational District, in a letter from Rev. Dr. Edward Law (see Image 253) and James Cattley (see Image 255), secretary of the British School, dated [no later than 5] April 1848 (TsGIA SPb: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5109. Ob otkrytii v S.-Peterburge shkoly dlia detei Anglichan, 1847–1851, fol. 6r).

1006. It is known that Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby (see Image 256) gave an annual sermon at Alexandrofsky to the young (Jubilee Commemorative Volume, pp. 26–27). The room in which he preached was located in the garret of the house in which the Harrisons and Eastwicks lived (see Images 239–240).
1007. Mr. Archibald Mirrielees's (1797–1877; see Image 268) guest was John Melville (15 August 1802 –19 August 1886), Scottish colporteur and evangelist, an unofficial agent in charge of the British and Foreign Bible Society's work in the south of Russia, based in Odessa, between 1837 and c. 1875 (James Urry, "John Melville and the Mennonites: A British Evangelist in South Russia, 1837 – c. 1875," Mennonite Quarterly Review 54 (1980): p. 305; IGI). See the biography of John Melville in Appendix E and Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Oct. 3rd 1848. Tuesday, GUL: Whistler Collection, W363). Listening to him, Anna Whistler felt that Rev. John Cutler Nichols (M<sup>r</sup> Nichols) and Rev. Henry Washington Lee (M<sup>r</sup> Lee) would have enjoyed his stories, as would have her mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (my dear Mother).
1008. "The clergyman in Moscow" was Christopher Grenside (Great Massingham, Norfolk 4 July 1818 – Beckenham, Kent 23 April 1885), son of Rev. Christopher Grenside and Mary (Bent) Grenside. He was a Cambridge University alumnus: "Adm. pens. at Peterhouse, Apr. 27, 1837. Matric. Michs. 1837; B.A. 1841; M.A. 1855. Ord deacon, 1842; priest, 1843. British Chaplain at Archangel, 1843–7; at Moscow, 1847 –53. C. of Rochford, Essex, 1854 –7. C. of St Mark's Lyncombe, Somerset, 1858–60. C. of St John-the-Evangelist, Charlotte Street, London, 1861 –2. C. of

- Sheffield, Yorks, 1863. V. of Old Malton, 1864 –70. R. of Thorpe-Bassett, New Malton, 1870 –81. Lived latterly at Thorpe-Bassett. Died Apr. 23, 1855, at Norfolk House, Beckenham” (Alumni Cantabrigienses, vol. 3, p. 144). He married on 3 August 1843 Fanny Bottomley (Enfield, Middlesex c. 1820 – Bromley, Kent 1 June 1896) in St. Andrews, Enfield, Middlesex. They were the parents of William Christopher Grenside (d. 16 July 1908), Frederick Ralph Grenside (b. Arkhangel’sk 1845), Henry Nicholas Grenside (Moscow c. 1852 – Westminster, London 4 December 1908), and George Alexander Grenside (Pentonville, London 1854 – Malton, Yorkshire 1924) (Thomas Alfred Walker, Admissions to Peterhouse or S. Peter’s College in the University of Cambridge: A Biographical Register [Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1912], p. 458; Clergy List for 1885; Crockford’s Clerical Directory 1860; 1881 Census; The Guardian [Manchester], April 29, 1885; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1896; Amburger, Die Pastoren, p. 182).
1009. On Saturday, 22 April 1848, Anna Whistler received a letter from “Henriet Hallback,” an old friend, who was writing her from Frankfort am Main. Henriette Wilhelmine (Bohlen) Halbach (Philadelphia 15 September 1803 – Baden-Baden 14 March 1870) was the daughter of Bohl Bohlen (Schiffdorf [near Bremerhaven] (26 September 1754 – Philadelphia 11 September 1836) and Johanna Magdalena Oswald (New York 1 August 1770 – Amsterdam 13 February 1805). Bohl Bohlen was a gin merchant and the Dutch consul in Philadelphia. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
1010. “Chartism [was] the first sustained, inclusive working-class movement in modern English history” and “referred to the People’s Charter, an electoral bill of rights which, delivered to an unresponsive ... Parliament in the form of a petition in 1839, 1842, and 1848, demanded ... [in] a six-point program ... universal manhood suffrage, the secret ballot, payment for members of Parliament, abolition of the property qualification for members, equal electoral districts, and annual elections” (Richard D. Altick, Victorian People and Ideas [New York: W.W. Norton, 1973], pp. 89–90). The unsuccessful presentation of the Chartists’ third petition to Parliament, on 10 April 1848, accompanied by a huge demonstration in London, took place in this period of revolutions across Europe. See “What happened on 10 April 1848?”, The Illustrated London News, April 15, 1848.

I assume that the quote from Henriette Halbach's letter ends with the words "were starving?"

1011. The Proclamation was read in all the Russian Orthodox churches on Sunday, 14/26 March and published the following day, Monday, 15/27 March. For the Proclamation, see M.D. Filin, ed., Russkii mir v litsakh Imperator Nikolai Pervyi. Nikolaevskaia èpokha. Slovo russkogo tsaria. Apologiia rytsaria. Nezabvennyi [The Russian World through Personages series, Emperor Nicholas I. The Epoch of Nicholas I. The Word of the Russian Tsar. The Apologia of a Knight. Unforgettable] (Moscow: Russkii mir, 2002), p. 272. For an English translation of the Proclamation, see Lincoln, Nicholas I, p. 287; for the year 1848, see Lincoln, pp. 269–290. The Russian-language manifestos about the revolutions taking place in Western Europe were translated and published in the French language newspaper, Journal de St. Pétersbourg (the equivalent of Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti), from which Anna Whistler copied them.
1012. Anna Whistler is showing the people's reaction to the manifesto of Nicholas I by recording what the Whistlers' servant, Matvei (pronounced "Mahtvyey"), said.
1013. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 3, fol. 58.
1014. Colin Ingersoll (see Image 280) records in his journal only that on 24 March (NS) he "witnessed a fine military exercise ... in the 'military ménage', where, recognized by Grand Duke Aleksandr he was "given an 'assigned place'" (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 3, fol. 50). Anna Whistler seems to be referring to some time after 27 March.
1015. March 25 (NS) was the feast day of the Annunciation of the Most Holy Mother of God (Blagoveshchenie). It "commemorates the announcement of the Incarnation by the angel Gabriel to the [Blessed Virgin Mary] and the conception of Christ in her womb (Lk. 1:26–35)" (Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, s.v. "annunciation of the BVM"). All offices and schools were closed (Mesiatsoslov na 1842 g.). It occurred during Lent, and Western Easter in 1848 occurred on 23 April. The feast day of the Epiphany was celebrated on 2/14 February. See Images 376, 379 for icons depicting the Annunciation and Easter Sunday.
1016. Princess Alexandra-Frederica-Henrietta-Antoinna-Marianna of Saxe-Altenburg (Altenburg 26 June / 8 July 1830 – St. Petersburg 23 June / 6 July 1911; see Images 437–438) was confirmed in the Russian Orthodox faith on 5/17 February 1848, and received the name of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna. The betrothal

- took place on 6/18 February 1848 (Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familia, p. 94). Anna Whistler, James, and Willie were in England at the time of the wedding (30 August / 11 September 1848). Colin Ingersoll (see Image 280) described in his journal the confirmation and betrothal ceremonies and gave details of the Grand Duchess's dress, which he also described personally to Anna Whistler (BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 3, fols. 21–25). See also Son inosti, pp. 110–111, 117–118, 127–134).
1017. See Image 372, showing the dresses of a group of ladies-in-waiting.
1018. “Miss T–” is probably Maria Pavlovna Tuchkova (25 March 1821 [OS] – 11 April 1858 [OS]), a lady-in-waiting to Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna. She was the daughter of Pavel Alekseevich Tuchkov (1775 – 25 January 1858 [OS]) and Aleksandra Petrovna (Nekliudova) Tuchkova (30 June 1798 [OS] – 24 June 1869 [OS]). Anna Whistler knew her through Eliza Maingay, who had asked Anna Whistler to take a copy of Bonnet's The Family of Bethany to a “Miss Tuchkov” when the Whistlers brought Emma Maingay back to Shooter's Hill after Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden's wedding (see the entry for Preston, September, Saturday 10th [1847], AWPD: Part II). Anna Whistler would have asked Miss Tuchkov to help her get a ticket to the gallery of the chapel, because of the latter's influence. However, when Miss Tuchkov could not fulfill her request, Anna Whistler went to the gallery of the great hall with a group of women using tickets obtained through the favor shown some of the English nursery governesses in the employ of the Heir to the Throne.
1019. On this birthday, Anna Whistler presented her husband with a watch guard jointly made by Eliza Sandland, daughter of Betsy Hewitt (Dorlin) Sandland of Liverpool, and herself.
1020. The portrait would seem to have been close to completion, and Major Whistler returned to the portrait painter's for an 8 a.m. appointment on 22 May. No further mention of the portrait is made in the diaries. It has not been possible to establish with certainty who the portrait painter was, but I would like to suggest that it may have been Karl Friedrich Eugen Biber (1823–1876), the brother of Mr. Biber, James and Willie's tutor. When Major Whistler died, Mr. Biber, no longer in their employ, sent a letter of condolence to Anna Whistler, in which “he spoke of the great affliction of his brother at the loss of his first patron” (William

- Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg 10th May 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W978). This may mean that Mr. Biber's brother was an artist (as well as a teacher of French) and had received his first commission from Major Whistler. When Major Whistler was dying, he bequeathed a portrait of himself to Colonel Pavel Mel'nikov and, as no other portrait of him executed in Russia is extant or mentioned in any of the archival materials I have consulted, it was probably this portrait. It has not been possible to locate Mr. Biber's letter.
1021. Colin McCrae Ingersoll (see Image 280) had arrived in St. Petersburg with his father, Ralph Isaacs Ingersoll (the ambassador) on 19 May 1847, Major Whistler's birthday. The George Bliss family of Springfield, Massachusetts (the Bliss') were passengers on the same ship (entry for Wednesday [May 21st [1847], NYPL: AWPD: Part I, and accompanying Notes 747 and 748; BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 3, fol. 83). Ingersoll pointed out that 19 May was also the only day in the year that the prisoners in the Peter and Paul Fortress could receive visitors.
1022. "Yesterday" was Thursday, 18 May 1848.
1023. Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev's palace (see Images 302, 151) was located on the Palace Embankment (Petrovskaiia, Kontsertnaia z'bizn' Peterburga, p. 49). Members of the Ropes family (our next door neighbors) watched the review from there. They knew Count Kushelev because they spent every summer at the dacha of William Hooper Ropes's sister, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Image 266), and her husband, William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265), near Count Kushelev's model farm on the Peterhof Road.
1024. Persons mentioned in the entry for Monday [May] 22nd who have appeared earlier in the diaries are: Dr. George Edwin Palmer, Anna Whistler's brother-in-law (Doctor Palmer, her good husbands p-S); Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Anna Whistler's sister (My Sister Kate, the blessed mother, dear Kates letter); Monsieur Biber, James and Willie's tutor (Mons Biber); Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother (my tender mother, a dear mother): Deborah (Whistler) Haden (Debos fond words); and Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, Anna Whistler's half-sister (my Sister Alicas account).
1025. See Note 1020 above concerning Karl Friedrich Eugen Biber.
1026. The new daughter of Dr. George Edwin Palmer (Doctor Palmer, good husband) and Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer (My Sister Kate the blessed mother, dear Kates letter) was Anna Whistler Palmer (7 April 1848 – 28 May 1928). Her married name was Stanton. It has not been possible to locate any of the letters mentioned here.

1027. Willie had gone for a walk with his and James's tutor, Monsieur Biber.
1028. The first Saturday of June 1848 was 3 June.
1029. A.I. Shtukenberg (see Image 250), who was at this time in charge of Section V of the Southern Administration (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 311), recalls in his memoirs that Major Whistler visited him for the last time in Pen'kovo in 1848, accompanied by his little son (Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 2, fol. 516). For more information about Shtukenberg, see Koritskii in Appendix E. Major Whistler and Willie returned home on 28 June.
1030. The three announcements of Dr. James Rogers's departure appeared in Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti: no. 124, Saturday, June 5 [June 17 NS], 1848, p. 500; no. 126, Tuesday, June 8 [June 20 NS], 1848, p. 509; and no. 128, Thursday, June 10 [June 22 NS], 1848, p. 518. He therefore left some time after 10/22 June, returning on 1/13 November (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg Wednesday, November 14, 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366). He encouraged the Ingersolls to leave as well. See also BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 3, fols. 84, 88–91 on the cholera epidemic, peasant superstition, and killing of doctors.
1031. The Whistlers' cook was named Marie. She was Finnish.
1032. It has not been possible to identify the Whistlers' greengrocer.
1033. It has not been possible to ascertain who Ivan, the servant, was. His name appears here for the first time.
1034. The Camilla (Capt. Alfred Brownless) departed for London on 19 June / 1 July 1848 with 29 passengers. Among those listed were "the wife of Engineer-Major Whistler and family" (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 142, Sunday, June 27 [July 9 NS], 1848, p. 574). Major Whistler, together with Andrew McCalla Eastwick and William Mirrielees, accompanied Anna Whistler, James, Willie, and Mary Brennan to Cronstadt. Archibald Mirrieless had a son named William, but he also had two nephews named William. All three boys are known to have been in Russia. It is not clear which William is meant here.

1035. The church so famous for its sculptures by Bertel Thorvaldsen (see Image 478) was Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady) (see Images 480–484), which Anna Whistler called “Frow Kurkin” (Anna Whistler, aboard the S.S. “City of Aberdeen,” to James, 22 September 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W360). Up until the hour spent in Copenhagen, Anna Whistler had seen only reproductions of these sculptures, in May 1845 at the home of the Law family.

Bertel Thorvaldsen (Copenhagen 19 November 1770 – Copenhagen 24 March 1844) was the son of an immigrant from Iceland, whose profession was carver in wood of ships’ decorations, and a mother who “was the daughter of a parish clerk near Lemvig in Jutland.” He was admitted at the age of eleven to the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Copenhagen, where he demonstrated outstanding talent. He studied sculpture there until 1793. On completion of his education at the Academy, he was awarded a stipend for further study in Italy, which he did not take up for some four years. He left for Rome on 30 August 1796 and arrived there on 8 March 1797 to study for three years. He remained instead for forty, achieving great success, wealth, and fame as a Neo-Classical sculptor. He lived in Rome from 1797 until 1838, but made a trip to Copenhagen in 1819, at which time he received the commission to create the massive statues of Christ and the Twelve Apostles and baptismal font for Copenhagen’s cathedral, Vor Frue Kirke.

Thorvaldsen’s brilliant career began with his sculpture from classical mythology (1803) of Jason and the Golden Fleece that “attracted the attention of the Italian sculptor Antonio Canova.” Among his other famous sculptures are the “Alexander Frieze of 1812 in the Palazzo del Quirinale, Rome, modeled ... in anticipation of a visit by Napoleon”; the marble monument (1823–1831) for the tomb of Pope Pius VII in St. Peter’s Cathedral in Rome; the carving in natural rock of a dying lion (1819), located in a small park in Lucerne, Switzerland, “commemorat[ing] the hundreds of Swiss Guards ... massacred in 1792 during the French Revolution”; the bronze equestrian statue (1817–1832) in Warsaw of Józef Poniatowski (1763–1813), a Polish revolutionary, who became a marshal of France; and the marble sculpture of the Three Graces and Cupid (1821) in Copenhagen. Thorvaldsen created in all more than five hundred and fifty sculptures, sculptural reliefs, and portrait busts. He did not return permanently to Denmark until 1838, where he was granted “freedom of the city.”

The desire of the citizens of Copenhagen to build in honor of Thorvaldsen a museum (see Image 479) to house his “original models of the sculptures he created for numerous European countries” and for his native land, as well as his “drawings and sketches for sculptures and reliefs ... and his extensive collection of [contemporary] paintings, and art works and [artifacts] from Greek, Roman and Egyptian antiquity” received the cooperation of the artist, who had donated his art collection “to the Danish people in 1830” and declared his wish also to be buried in the museum.

Although the commission to design the museum was given to the architect Michael Gottlieb Bindsbøll (1800–1856), ultimately the old Royal Coach House, located near Christiansborg Palace in the center of Copenhagen, was renovated for the purpose. It is two stories high and has a basement consisting of small rooms, each containing a single piece of sculpture; the Christ Hall and entrance hall were new.

The museum was in the process of construction from 1839 to 1848. Unfortunately, Thorvaldsen suffered a heart attack while attending a performance in the Royal Danish Theater on the evening of 23 March 1844 and died. As the museum was unfinished, his coffin was placed in a chapel in Vor Frue Kirke. On 6 September 1848, it was transferred to the burial chamber in the courtyard of the Thorvaldsen Museum, a few days before the museum’s official opening on 18 September 1848. His works can be found in major international museums such as the Louvre in Paris, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, and the State Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg (“Thorvaldsen Museum-Copenhagen, Denmark,” Official Local Tourism Attractions on Waymarking.com, accessed 13 April 2021, https://www.waymarking.com/waymarks/WMJ3QM\_Thorvaldsen\_Museum\_Copenhagen\_Denmark; Encyclopedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Bertel Thorvaldsen,” accessed 5 October 2021, <https://www.britannica.com/biography/Bertel-Thorvaldsen>; Dyeke Helsted, O. Andrup, and Povl Eller, “Bertel Thorvaldsen,” Danske Biografiske Leksikon [Danish Biographical Dictionary], accessed 11 April 2021, https://biografiskeleksikon.lex.dk/Bertel\_Thorvaldsen, translated into English by Jutta Kitching, Vancouver, BC). It was during their one-hour visit to Vor Frue Kirke that Anna Whistler, James, and Willie saw Thorvaldsen’s temporary resting place.

The history of the locations of the bronze equestrian statue of Józef Poniatowski is too complicated to be reproduced here.

For Robert Baird's meeting with Thorvaldsen at the latter's studio and his subsequent viewing of Thorvaldsen's sculptures in Vor Frue Kirke, see Robert Baird, Visit to Northern Europe: or Sketches Descriptive, Historical, Political and Moral, of Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland, and the Free Cities of Hamburg and Lübeck, 2 vols. (New York: John S. Taylor, 1841), vol. 1, pp. 219–223, 229–230, 232–238.

1036. Tivoli Gardens, opened in 1843, was only some five years old when the Whistlers made their brief stop in Copenhagen. A fifteen-acre plot, it stood “on the previously reserved fortified zone outside the western gate of Copenhagen, where the city’s distillers used to graze their cattle in summer” (Bent Rying, Denmark: History, vol. 2 of Danish in the South and North, 2 vols. [Copenhagen: Royal Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 1988], p. 260). It was founded by Georg Carstensen (31 August 1812 – 4 January 1857), son of a diplomat, who was raised largely in the Middle East, although “his schooling took place in Denmark.” After extensive travel, he “returned to live permanently to Copenhagen in 1839,” where his work in publishing two periodicals taught him “how to arrange popular entertainment.” In 1841, King Christian VIII granted him “permission to establish and run” a pleasure garden that he initially called “Tivoli and Vauxhall,” after the Jardin de Tivoli in Paris (itself named after the town of Tivoli in Italy) and Vauxhall Gardens in London; by the time the gardens opened, the name had been reduced simply to “Tivoli.” Construction began in May 1843, and the gardens opened on 15 August of that year. “The season lasted until 11 October, at the end of which Tivoli had seen 174,609 guests” (“The Beginning,” and “The Founder,” Tivoli website, accessed 3 March 2016, <http://www.tivoli.dk/en/om/historie/tivolis+grundlaegger/>). “Tivoli was from the very start in 1843, a great success with a variety of attractions: restaurants, concerts, flower gardens, and many amusements [sic] rides. In the evening the park was illuminated and at closing hours fireworks lit up the gardens and parts of the city.” The garden had a lake, and a fountain beside which was a concert hall for theater performances and “human exhibitions” of “exotic and tropical” individuals portraying “everyday life in India” (“Tivoli–Copenhagen,” Copenhagen Portal website, accessed 18 February 2021, <https://www.copenhagenedk.com/CPH-Map/CPH-Tivoli.asp>).

1037. Frederiksborg, located some 40 km north of Copenhagen, is the site of Frederiksborg Castle built in the reign (1588–1648) of Christian IV (1577–1648). It “is built of red brick, in the Gothic style, on three little islands in a small lake, which are connected by bridges. The chief wing so completely covers the island on which it is built, that it seems to rise immediately from the water, ... The village of Hilleröd surrounds the castle lake on three sides, and on the fourth it is bounded by pleasant walks and gardens laid out on the sloping banks of the lake.” The Royal Castle contains an extensive collection of portraits that were described in 1849 as being “interesting in an historical point of view, and not as works of art.” “The gardens ... are laid out in the French style.” The description in Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe stresses the “lovely walks around Frederiksborg, whence the castle is seen to great advantage,” and the beauty of the Royal Forest (Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe, vol. 1, pp. 86, 87).
 “The old building was demolished in 1599 and the Flemish-born architect Hans van Steenwinckel the Elder [c. 1550–1601] was charged with planning the new building. After his death in 1601, his sons Hans [1587–1639] and Lorenz [d. 1619] completed the assignment. The main four-storey building with its three wings was completed around 1610 but work continued on the Chapel until 1618” (“Frederiksborg Castle,” Wikipedia, accessed 13 April 2021). The erroneous rendering of the surname as “Heenwinkel” in Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe and biographical dictionaries, such as Thieme and Becker, Lexikon der Bildenden Künstler (p. 519), have hindered identifying him.
1038. Sunday was 2 July 1848.
1039. Monday was 3 July 1848.
1040. According to the list of aliens submitted by Alfred Brownless, master of the steamer Camilla, twelve aliens arrived at London on his ship from St. Petersburg and Copenhagen on 11 July 1848: the Countess de Berg, lady, and her maid, Miss Antoinette Zuerer, both of St. Petersburg; Monsieur Schanlan, apothecary, Madam Francoise Dume, servant, and S. Munier, hatter, all from France; Mr. G. Schirning, Danish government officer, Mrs. F. Wallich, lady, D.F. Oster, government officer, and Lieutenant E. Lauritzen, all of Copenhagen; Franz Potemsky, servant, and Hein Nebendahl, traveler, both of Russia; and Hindus Kissan Das Bairage, traveler, from Bengal (Lists of Immigrants July 1848, HO 3/48, PRO). Apparently, Americans were not considered aliens by British immigration. As the Countess de Berg was the only foreign countess on board, it is probably she and Miss Zuerer that Anna Whistler intended when she spoke of the “Italian Countess and her companion.” Either Mr. Schanlan or S. Munier was the Frenchman who was “very amusing” to James and Willie. Madame Françoise Dume (or Dumée), the Ingersoll family cook, is the French cook referred to (AVPRI: Fond MID, Kants. [Fond Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Chancery], 1848, op. 469, d. 60/Etats Unis, Ralph I. Ingersoll to Nesselrode St. P., 18/30 June 1848, fol. 11). For further information about her, see BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 60. “Hein Nebendahl” is most likely Johann Heinrich Nebendahl, a merchant of the Second Guild, residing in St. Petersburg (Amburger Datenbank, ID 74471). Hindus Kissan Das Bairage was the “Hindoo whose portrait Jemie is wishing to take.” The Hindus would, of course, be of interest to Whistler specialists because of the possibility that James drew his portrait and gave it to him, but attempts to further identify him have not been successful. No consulted native speaker of German could propose a meaning for “Das Bairage.”

The passenger lists in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti were selective. In announcing the departure of the Camilla, the newspaper gave the following information: “wife of Adjutant-General Berg and family; American Ambassador Ingerson [Ralph I. Ingersoll]; Secretary of the same embassy Inkrol [Colin M. Ingersoll]” and the Whistlers (Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 142, Sunday, June 27 [July 9 NS], 1848, p. 574).

1041. Shanklin (which Anna Whistler recorded as “Shantlin”) is “a parish in the East Medina liberty, Isle of Wight, 8 miles south-east of Newport, and 9 miles from Ryde, on the coast” (see Image 490) (Kelly’s Directory 1847, p. 1265).
1042. The whereabouts of these journals are unknown to me and to all Whistler specialists I have consulted.
1043. Robert Patterson Flenniken (near Carmichael, Greene County, PA March 1802 – San Francisco 11 October 1878), a lawyer by profession, was appointed from Pennsylvania as U.S. chargé d’affaires to Denmark on 11 January 1847. He left the office on 15 September 1849 (“List of U.S. Consular Offices By Post, 1789-1939” and “Appointment Records, Lists and Record Cards,” NAUS; Judges of the United States, 2nd ed. [Washington, DC: Bicentennial Committee of the Judicial Conference of the United States, 1983], p. 166).
1044. Danish archivists inform me that “Sharon” is not a Danish surname; however, despite Anna Whistler’s lack of punctuation in this sentence, she seems to mean that he is “the Danish gentleman.” He may have been a foreigner with Danish citizenship. In any case, both he and the doctor, a “proud citizen of Copenhagen,” disembarked there. On her way back to Russia in September 1848, when she once again visited Copenhagen, Anna Whistler wrote James that she had not seen either Mr. Sharon or the doctor, which seems to indicate that both lived there (Anna Whistler, aboard the S.S. “City of Aberdeen,” to James, 22 September 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W360). It has not been possible to identify Mr. Sharon. The city residents’ book of St. Petersburg for the letter “Sh,” which lists property owners, gives the name of a foreign merchant, Nikolai Petrov Sharon. It also gives the names of the heirs of a deceased councilor and nobleman in the Polish service, Nikolai, and his deceased wife, Iustina Sharon. However, as Mr. Sharon’s first name is not given in Anna Whistler’s diary, it is impossible to know whether she met the foreign merchant, one of the sons or grandsons who were the heirs of Nicholas and Iustina Sharon, or someone else named Sharon (TsGIA SPb: Fond 781, op. 4, d. 82. Alfavit gorodskoi obyvatel’skoi knigi 1820g. “Sh” [Alphabetical listing of city residents’ book for 1820, “Sh”], fols. 10r, 36v). The volume goes beyond 1820. For an explanation of why the city residents’ book came into being, see George E. Munro, “Compiling and Maintaining St. Petersburg’s ‘Book of City Inhabitants’: The ‘Real’ City Inhabitants,” in St. Petersburg 1703 – 1825, ed. Anthony Cross (Basingstoke, UK; New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2003), pp. 80–98. This book should be consulted as well for its many other excellent articles on the administrative organization of St. Petersburg.

1045. Described later in this entry as having personally known and loved Thorvaldsen, the doctor is, I assume, Oluf Lundt Bang (1788–1877; see Image 485), the obstetrician who had come to Russia for a consultation concerning the illness of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (see Images 434, 444, 451) in 1844 (Bang, Livs Minder, pp. 296–305). He was also a poet and at his death left a manuscript of his autobiography in verse, Livs Minder (Memories of Life), in which he reminisces about his friendship with Thorvaldsen (V. Meisen, “Ole Bang – læge” [“Ole Bang – Doctor”], in Danske Biografiske Leksikon, accessed 11 April 2021, https://biografiskeleksikon.lex.dk/Ole\_Bang\_-\_l%C3%A6ge, translated into English by Catrin Norrby, Vancouver, BC). He also published his reminiscences of his trip to Russia to attend Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (Oluf

Lundt Bang, Zarskoje-Selo mindeblade fra Rusland, Juni 1844 [Tsarskoe Selo: Reminiscences of Russia, June 1844] [Copenhagen: Luno, [1844]]. These memorial poems about her and her son are considered “beautiful and successful,” while much of his production was considered mediocre because of the ease with which he could “improvise rhyme upon rhyme” (Bang, Livs Minder, pp. 326).

1046. A valét-de-place, also called “a lacquy-de-place,” is a hired guide for the traveler. Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe describes him generally as “of dubious moral character” and recommends that the traveler seek him out at Mrs. Wilson’s boarding house, which has the best ones. His usual per diem charge was one-and-a-half silver rubles. He would obtain tickets of admission to all sights requiring it. “The landlord of the inn has generally a permanent ticket” (Murray’s Handbook for Northern Europe, vol. 2, 408).
1047. The palaces which the doctor might have pointed out to Anna Whistler and her children were Amalienborg, where the Danish royal family lived, Christiansborg, and perhaps Rosenborg.
1048. Renowned Danish sculptor, Bertel Thorvaldsen (19 November 1770 – 24 March 1844; see Image 478) was commissioned in 1820 to execute a number of statues for Vor Frue Kirke (the Church of Our Lady) (see Images 480–484): for the interior, statues of Christ, the twelve apostles, and various reliefs; and for the pediment above the main entrance a group sculpture of John the Baptist preaching in the desert. He worked on this project almost until his death. He began in 1821 with sketch models of Christ, Peter, and Paul. In a few years, he had plaster models of all the figures, including the Baptismal Angel. In subsequent years, he transferred the statues for the interior of the church into marble and the pediment figures into terra cotta. By the mid-1830s, all the marble statues except for the apostles Thaddeus and Andrew were completed. In 1841, he made new sketch models of these two apostles, which were not, however, completed in marble until after his death (Dyveke Helsted, Eva Hanschen, and Bjarne Jørnaes, Thorvaldsen, trans. Ann and Janus Paludan [Copenhagen: Thorvaldsen Museum, 1990], pp. 6–8).
1049. “The figure of Christ [see Image 481] is Thorvaldsen’s only world-famous statue ... It differs from traditional, ecclesiastical representations of Christ by portraying neither the crucified Christ nor Christ in Judgment; Thorvaldsen has shown his Christ on earth among mankind. The print of the nails and the wound in his side are there, but are shown with extreme restraint as recognition symbols.

There are many legends about the special expression and the position of the arms on this statue; some have spoken about a divine intervention in the creation, others, on the contrary, of the arms of the clay model sinking overnight. It is easy to forget – in such oversimplified theories – the very real battle that Thorvaldsen had with the proportions of this giant figure in relation both to its final site and to its function. That Thorvaldsen had in fact owned a painting which probably served as model for the figure of Christ (Peter Cornelius: the Five Wise and the Five Foolish Virgins, 1816, now in the Düsseldorf Museum of Art) does not change the fact that the figure is a sculptural success.

It has been pointed out that the strongly compelling effect of the statue is due to the contrasting signals coming from the stylized reserve of the face on the one hand and the bodily warmth of the arms on the other; the welcoming gesture of the arms on the one hand and – on the other – the fact that the figure, resting on the back foot, gives the impression that it is withdrawing” (Helsted, Hanschen, and Jørnaes, p. 89).

1050. Thorvaldsen executed a baptismal font in Rome that he presented in 1827 to Iceland. The font for Vor Frue Kirke that he worked on in that same year (see Image 482) is a version of the Angel of the Annunciation. It contains features of the Iceland font. “Instead of the lily [the angel] offers the shell with which the Christ on the font for Iceland is being baptized while the wreath of flowers which rests on top of the [Iceland font] is here used to crown the head of the angel” (Helsted, Hanschen, and Jørnaes, p. 90).
1051. The image of Thorvaldsen’s baptismal font (see Image 482) also shows the carpet. “The colours [of the carpet] are black, beige, red and olive-green.” “It was made by the ladies of the congregation” and has a “pattern [of] round medallions with geometric ornaments.” The manner of making it is called “stramaj med korssting” (carpet embroidered in cross-stitch). “A similar carpet was made ... to be placed on the floor in front of the altar (not the antependium).” “The carpet is no longer under the font, [having been] removed before 1977.” It is “in the museum of the church,” but has been “put away in a way that makes it impossible to make ... a photo of it” (Susanne Torgard, Copenhagen, to E. Harden, undated letter postmarked 2 May 2005).

1052. Thorvaldsen, who died on 24 March 1844, was interred in a small chapel in Vor Frue Kirke. His coffin was transferred to the newly completed Thorvaldsen Museum on 6 September 1848. It was placed in “a sunken burial chamber . . . built under the centre of the courtyard, decorated with white lilies on a blue ground.” On 18 September 1848, “the museum was opened to the public” (Helsted, Hanschen, and Jørnaes, Thorvaldsen, p. 112).
1053. The terra cotta figure on the pediment was of St. John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness (see Image 484).
1054. Plaster did not withstand the climate of St. Petersburg well. It became “stained and cracked with the humidity and frosts of autumn and peel[ed] off with the storms and severe cold of winter . . . before spring-time the statues in stucco upon the Winter Palace, and in the niches of the imperial and noble dwellings, [had] lost their heads or arms or some other member, and certainly present[ed] a most woful [sic] and ludicrous appearance” (Maxwell, Czar, p. 75).
1055. The Whistler party arrived in London on Monday, 10 July 1848, late at night. They should have arrived on Saturday, July 8.
1056. Reuben Goodale Fairbanks, who was living at Albert Terrace, had left Russia some time before October 1846 and had become Harrison, Winans and Eastwick’s agent in London. When the remains of John Bouttatz Whistler were being sent home in October 1846, Fairbanks was responsible for shipping them from London to New York (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, Monday, December 13, 1846; New York, January 22, 1847, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). He was joined in London at an undetermined date by his wife and children. See Fairbanks in Appendix E.
1057. This is Lucy Lee (Webb) Fairbanks (24 November 1806 – March 1870), who married Reuben G. Fairbanks on 11 March 1831, in Windham, Connecticut (Fairbanks, Genealogy, pp. 225, 841; Barbara Pittman, assistant town clerk of Windham, CT, to E. Harden, 23 March 2005; 1860 U.S. Federal Census for 6th Ward Brooklyn City, County of Kings, State of New York, 16 June 1860; 1870 U.S. Federal Census for Fordham Town of West Farm, County of Westchester, State of New York, 11 July 1870). After her husband left Russia, she and their children joined him in London.
1058. It has not been possible to locate Anna Whistler’s letter to Major Whistler, written during the night of 11 July 1848.

1059. Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, unlike Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, is never referred to by Anna Whistler as an American. The 1851 Census for Preston, Lancashire, records that she was born in North America and was a British subject. There is a possibility that she was born in the Bahama Islands. She was raised in Scotland and moved to Preston when she married her second husband, John Winstanley. It is not clear whether Anna Whistler speaks of England as Eliza Winstanley's "adopted country" simply because she moved there after marrying an Englishman. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 40.
1060. "Hyde Park is part of the ancient manor of Hida, which belonged to the monastery of St. Peter, at Westminster, till Henry VIII. appropriated it differently. Its extent is about 400 acres, part of which is considerably elevated. The whole is intersected with noble roads, lawns with luxuriant trees, planted singly or in groups, presenting beautiful examples of diversified prospects. At the south-east corner, the entrance from Piccadilly, on an elevated pedestal, stands a colossal and dark statue of Achilles, cast from the cannon taken at Salamanca and Waterloo, weighing thirty tons, and 'erected to the Duke of Wellington and his companions in arms, by their countrywomen'.
- The long sheet of water called the Serpentine River enriches the scenery of Hyde Park. At its western extremity is a stone bridge of five large and two smaller arches, erected in 1826, giving access to the gardens of Kensington Palace. On the level space of Hyde Park, troops of the line are occasionally reviewed. The great road through the Park to Kensington is denominated Rotten Row, and is a fashionable resort for equestrians wherein to show off their high-bred horses. Other roads display countless elegant equipages of the nobility, gentry and others; while the footpaths, which are railed off from the roads, are crowded with the well-dressed inhabitants of London, enjoying the salubrity of the air and the gaiety of the scene, more particularly between two and five on a Sunday afternoon. There are five entrances open from early morning till nine at night. No stage or hackney coaches are permitted within the gates of Hyde Park" (Chambers's Information 1842, p. 218).
1061. The saying "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" appears in Laurence Sterne's (1713–1768) A Sentimental Journey (1768), where it is applied to his character Maria. It first appeared in George Herbert's Outlandish Proverbs (1640) as "To a close shorne sheepe, God gives wind by measure." It comes from an earlier

French proverb, “À brebis tondue Dieu mesure le vent,” and means that God metes out to each person only as much suffering as that person can bear (Jennifer Speakes, ed., Oxford Dictionary of Proverbs Online, s.v. “God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb,” accessed 13 April 2021).

1062. The Fairbankses had lost three sons to death and had one son and four daughters at this time (R.G. Fairbanks to A.M Eastwick, 1 Crookside Lane, London, June 2, 1848 Friday, Eastwick Letters). They were: Mary (b. 1837), Henry (b. 1840), Sarah (b. 1841), Annie (b. 1843), and Helen (b. 1847). In 1848, Mary would have been about eleven years old, Henry about seven years old, Sarah about six years old, Annie about five years old, and Helen about seven months old. Their years of birth and ages have been calculated using data from the 1860 U.S. Federal Census for the First District 6th Ward of Brooklyn City in Kings County, New York, and the 1870 U.S. Federal Census for Fordham, Town of West Farm, in Westchester County, New York.

The name Margaret appears in the 1860 Census at the end of the list, after that of the youngest Fairbanks child, instead of chronologically. It is possible, therefore, that she was actually a servant, but there is no indication that she was and ditto marks indicate that she is Fairbanks. See Fairbanks in Appendix E 1063. “Ramsgate, a sea port, market town, and parish in the Cinque port, liberty of Sandwich, of which it is a member; is delightfully situate in a small vale, having the sea on the east and south sides of it, ... 74 miles E. b S. from London: by the South-Eastern Railway it is 97 miles to London ... In 1841, the parish is stated to contain ... a population of 10,909 souls. ... This formerly obscure village, built in the form of a cross, ... has become one of the most celebrated watering places, and a favourite resort for the fashionable circles of the day. It is delightfully situated on the declivity of a hill, commanding a beautiful prospect of the English channel, and the streets are well paved and lighted with gas. ... The facilities for sea-bathing at Ramsgate are superior to most other watering places on this coast” (Samuel Bagshaw, History, Gazetteer and Directory of Kent, 2 vols. [Sheffield, UK: G. Ridge, 1847], vol. 2, p. 190).

1064. Deborah (Whistler) Haden, wife of Francis Seymour Haden, MD, was five months pregnant.
1065. Daniel 6:20: “And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?"

Daniel 6:26: "I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and steadfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end."

1066. "According to Daria Haden and William H. Carey of Boston, Charles Sydenham Haden was a clerk in a silk shop in St Paul's Courtyard in 1845" (Spencer, "Whistler's Early Relations with Britain," p. 214). In 1848, he "got a very good place at Ellis and Evrrington's, one of the first houses in the city" (Travel Journals of Rose Horsley 1848, MS. Eng.e 2197, Archive of the Horsley Family, Bodleian Archives and Manuscripts, Weston Library, University of Oxford). In 1854, Rosamund Haden married the artist John Callcott Horsley (1817–1903).
1067. Charles Sydenham Haden (29 September 1822 – 1898) and Mary Love (Boott) Haden (c. 1820 – 6 December 1897) were married on 19 January 1849 by Rev. John Clarke Haden, uncle of the former, who had also married Deborah (Whistler) Haden and Francis Seymour Haden on 16 October 1847. See the biography of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s."
1068. Frances Seymour Haden's mother, Emma (Harrison) Haden (1794–1881), and his sister Rosamund Haden (1820–1912), are listed in the 1851 Census for Chelsea as lodgers at 60 Sidney Street (HO 107/1473, PRO).
1069. This reference is to Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, Chelsea (see Image 477), where Anna Whistler attended the service on 16 July. It was consecrated in 1830. The first vicar (1832–1836) was Rev. Henry Blunt. He was succeeded by Rev. Richard Burgess (Sowerby, Yorkshire 4 December 1796 – Brighton 12 April 1881). "A convert from Roman Catholicism," Burgess "was ordained deacon in 1820, and priest in 1823." He entered "St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1824 ... and graduated Bachelor of Divinity in 1835." "In 1828 ... he was chaplain to the English residents in Geneva." "In 1831 he became chaplain to a Church of England congregation in Rome." "In 1836 [he] was presented ... to the rectory of Upper Chelsea ... He took a particular interest in the church's contribution to national education." "From 1850 until his death he held the prebendal stall of Tottenham in St. Paul's Cathedral." He "was honorary secretary to the London Diocesan Board of Education and to the Foreign Aid Society.” “Having lectured to early meetings of the Institute of British Architects, founded in 1834, he was made an honorary member of the Institute and became corresponding member of the Pontifical Archaeological Academy at Rome.” “In December 1869 Gladstone, on behalf of the crown, presented him to the rectory of Horningsheath with Ickworth.” His writings include: A Description of the Circus on the Via Appia near Rome (1828), The Topography and Antiquities of Rome (2 vols., 1831), Lectures on the Insufficiency of Unrevealed Religion, and on the Succeeding Influence of Christianity (1832), Greece and the Levant (1835), Sermons for the Times (1851), and A City for the Pope; or, The Solution of the Roman Question (1860) (Baillie, British Biographical Archive, Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Burgess, Richard”).

1070. The “celebrated preacher” whom Anna Whistler heard at Westminster Abbey on the afternoon of 16 July 1848 would seem to be Rev. Dr. Christopher Wordsworth (30 October 1807 – 20 March 1885), who preached at both the morning and the evening services. He was the nephew of the poet, William Wordsworth (1770–1850). Four clergymen were in Westminster Abbey that day and two officiated (Brighton Gazette, July 20, 1848).
1071. The minister Anna Whistler heard opposed the idea of the Second Coming of Christ, but we do not know whether it was “speculation on the time and manner of the Coming” that roused his opposition (Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, s.v. “Parousia”).
1072. “The palace of her Majesty in St. James Park [see Image 476] [was] built in the reign of King George IV., on the site of Buckingham House by John Nash, and completed in the reign of William IV., but never inhabited by that sovereign ... When the grant was given by Parliament it was intended only to repair and enlarge old Buckingham House; and therefore the old site, height, and dimensions were retained. This led to the erection of a clumsy building, and was a mere juggle on the part of the king and his architect – knowing as they did that Parliament would never have granted the funds for an entirely new Palace. On her Majesty’s [Queen Victoria’s] accession several alterations were affected ... and new buildings added to the south. The alterations were made by Mr. Blore, and her Majesty entered into her new Palace on the 13th day of July, 1837 ... In the spring of 1846 Sir Robert Peel informed the Lords of the Treasury that her Majesty had been for some time subjected to great inconvenience ‘from the insufficient accommodation' afforded by the Palace ... the private apartments in the north wing 'were not calculated originally for a married sovereign – the head of a family;' that the Nursery department was confined 'to a few rooms in the attics of the same wing;' and that the basement story of the wing was used by the Lord Chamberlain's department for 'store-rooms and work-shops;' that there was a constant noise and a continual smell of oil and glue; ... [and] 'the kitchen again is a nuisance to the Palace.' Mr. Blore's estimate amounted to £150,000 ... the nuisance complained of was so great that the work was commenced forthwith ... When her Majesty is in town the [marble] arch is surmounted by a standard of silk. The metal gates [were] designed and executed by Samuel Parker and [are] of exquisite workmanship ... The pictures ... were principally collected by George IV. The Dutch and Flemish pictures of which the collection chiefly consists are hung together. They are almost without exception first-rate works. The portraits are in the State Rooms adjoining." Artists represented include: Dürer, Mabuse, Rembrandt, Rubens, Van Dyck, Cuyp, De Hooghe, Metz, Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Sir William Allan (Peter Cunningham, Hand-Book of London, Past and Present, ed. Michael Robbins [East Ardsley, UK: EP Publishing, 1978], pp. 86–87, reprinted from the second edition, published in 1850 by John Murray). The 2016 BBC television production Victoria gives a visual presentation of the problems of Buckingham Palace in the 1840s.

1073. "Uncle Clarke" was Rev. John Clarke Haden, who had presided over the marriage of his nephew, Francis Seymour Haden, MD, (see Image 20) and Deborah Delano Whistler (see Images 17–19, 21) on 16 October 1847, in Preston, Lancashire.
1074. The friend whom Anna Whistler, James, Willie, and Debo visited was Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw (bap. 22 July 1792 – 7 March 1875). See Shaw and Wardrop in Appendix E and Image 486.
1075. Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw's mother was Catharine (Fraser) Wardrop (1768 – 4 March 1850; see Image 488), widow of William Wardrop (20 March 1769 – 14 November 1802), secretary to the Bank of Scotland (intermittently from 1792 to 1807) (Certified Copy of an Entry of Death for Catharine Wardrop, GRO; Alan Cameron, archivist at the Bank of Scotland, Edinburgh, to E. Harden, 8 March 1994, enclosing details from salary sheets for William Wardrop [1/275/1]). Anna Whistler had met Georgina Shaw (see Image 486) through the Stevenson family eighteen years earlier.

1076. Anna Whistler is referring to 1829. Pigot's London Directory 1832-3-4 lists under "Academies – gents." a boarding and day preparatory school at Cadogan Terrace, Sloane Street, run by Georgina Shaw. The name "Calcutta House" does not appear, but, as Anna Whistler indicates in this entry, that was the name of the school.
1077. All five of Mrs. Shaw's children had survived into adulthood. Her three sons were John Shaw (bap. 14 August 1815), William Wardrop Shaw (bap. 13 July 1820 – 9 September 1895), and Alexander Wardrop Shaw (bap. 19 June 1823 – 1 August 1858) (Index to the registers of the parish church of Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire, Buckinghamshire Record Office, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire). As William Wardrop Shaw was not married until 1852, he cannot be the widowed son returning home with two motherless children whom Anna Whistler refers to. His brother, John, had married his second wife in 1841. The son who was coming home to Georgina Shaw must therefore have been Alexander Wardrop Shaw.
1078. Mrs. Shaw's two daughters were Catherine Maccallum Shaw (bap. 13 July 1820 – 18 March 1888) and Georgina Shaw (bap. 25 October 1821 – 10 May 1902).
1079. John Shaw (1792 – on or before 16 October 1823; see Image 487), a surgeon and apothecary, is listed in Pigot's London Directory 1832-3-4 as living in High-Street, Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire. He was buried on 16 October 1823, aged thirty-one years (entry from Bishop's Transcripts for Gt. Marlow 1823, D/A/T/129, Buckinghamshire Record Office, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire). His personal effects amounted to £1,500 (Wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, Prob 11/1677, 1823 Nov. 650, PRO). Georgina Shaw was left with five children, the youngest of whom had been baptized in June 1823.
1080. Mrs. Shaw's brother in India was Alexander Wardrop (Falkirk 5 December 1794 – Calcutta 6 June 1832).
1081. The 1851 Census for Georgina Shaw's household in Loats Road, Clapham, shows that it was a school for girls, of which she was the "school mistress," while her two daughters were teachers.
1082. "The Isle of Wight is situated in the English Channel, at a short distance from the main-land of Hampshire, of which county it has commonly been reckoned a part. The channel, which divides it from the grand line of our southern coast, varies in width from two to six miles, and bears the appellation of the Solent Sea ... In circumference, [it] may be about seventy-five miles ... Its extreme length, from east to west, ... is about twenty-three miles; its greatest breadth, from north to south ... rather exceeds thirteen miles (Barber's Picturesque Guide to the Isle of Wight, new ed. [London: Henry G. Bohn, 1850], p. 1, first published in 1834 as Barber's Picturesque Illustrations of the Isle of Wight by Simpkin and Marshall [London]). It is called the "Garden of England." "The climate is well known to be ... pure, mild, and salubrious ... Its softness and warmth, as compared with that of England in general, are provided by the luxuriant growth, in the open air, of the myrtle, geranium, and other trees and shrubs, which commonly flourish, so exposed, only in more southern latitudes. Evergreens of great size and beauty, over which the winters pass without appearing to affect their foliage or vigour, also constitute a prominent feature of the island. In every point of view, the Isle of Wight may be recommended as a fit place of residence, during the whole year, to invalids" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 3).

1083. As this entry is dated July 22 [1848], they would seem to have arrived on July 19.
1084. Gosport is "a seaport and fortified town in the Portsdown division of Hampshire ... situated within the parish of Alverstoke, and on the western side of Portsmouth Harbour, near its entrance, 73 miles south-by-west from London." As described in 1838, it was "a market-town of importance, and in time of war ... a place of great activity." "About the beginning of the [nineteenth] century it was strengthened by a line of bastions." "The Royal Clarence Yard, within the lines, contains the brewery, victualling department, etc., from which the Royal Navy are supplied." "There are several distilleries, and an extensive iron foundry, where chain cables and anchors are made." "Near the extremity of the point of land which forms the west side of Portsmouth Harbour is situated the Royal Hospital of Haslar, founded at the suggestion of the earl of Sandwich, and erected between ... 1750 and 1762." The hospital "is intended exclusively for ... sick and wounded seamen" and contains "accommodations for more than 2,000 patients." "The population of Gosport with Alverstoke [which] was 12,637 in 1831," had increased greatly as a result of the transfer of the victualling department from Portsmouth. "Anglesea, about two miles from Gosport, on Stoke's Bay, is a new and fashionable watering-place" (Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, Market Towns of Hampshire in the Early 19th Century [Boston: Little, - Brown, 1853], vol. 11, p. 231–232, reprinted by Old Town Books and Maps, 2008).

1085. “Ryde is most commonly the point of debarkation for visitors to the Isle of Wight ... the pier ... extends 1740 feet into the sea, and ... affords a charming marine parade and observatory” (Barber’s Picturesque Guide, pp. 8, 9; Market Towns of Hampshire, pp. 35–36).
1086. “Cousin Anne Clunie” (10 June 1793 – 18 May 1882) was Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley’s first cousin, the daughter of Alicia (Clunie) McNeill’s brother, John Clunie, and not related to Anna Whistler. She appears not only in the diaries but for many years in Anna Whistler’s correspondence. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
1087. “The Young Cottager” is the story of twelve-year-old Jane S—— of Brading, who attended Bible classes held by the young Rev. Legh Richmond in the first curacy to which he was ordained. Never absent from instruction but always silent, she seems unremarkable even to him, until her withdrawal from the classes because of consumption and the subsequent private conversations with him in her home as she lies dying reveal a depth of Christianity he has not encountered before in a child. He administers Communion to her at her request. On her deathbed, she pleads with her parents and brother to lead a Christian life and then dies embracing Rev. Richmond. Published first as one of his three “Annals of the Poor” “for the benefit of the poor,” it appeared in 1815 in the collection Annals of the Poor. Containing The Dairyman’s Daughter (with considerable additions), The Negro Servant, and The Young Cottager. By the Reverend Legh Richmond, A.M., Rector of Turvey, Bedfordshire; and Chaplain to His Royal Highness, the Duke of Kent and Strathern (New Haven, [CT]: Whiting and Tiffany, 1815), pp. 190–288. In this publication, “The Young Cottager” was presented “in the form of a connected and finished story ... in an edition more particularly calculated for the higher and middle classes of society,” for “families in general and to young people in particular,” with the “hope that these Christian memorials of persons in humble life, may awaken or cherish a spirit of holy emulation amongst those who move in the superior ranks, to ‘follow them as they followed Christ’” (Richmond, p. 6). They visited Jane’s grave (see Image 492) another day.
1088. “On leaving Brading [see Image 489], the fine bay of Sandown opens to the view. This beautiful bay, where the blue waters roll at times with magical enchantment, is bounded in the east by the white cliffs of Culver, and in the west, by the dark and mountainous point of Dunnose ... the fort built by Henry VIII. ... commands the entrance of the bay ... during the American war it was attacked by privateers, but without success" (The Isle of Wight Visitors' Book; Containing an Account of Its Watering Places, with a Minute Description of the Principal Tours in the Island, 6th ed. [Portsea, UK: Samuel Horsey, 1843], p. 58). "The tourist will be amply repaid by a visit to this beautiful spot, which, strange to say, the public conveyances usually avoid" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 31).

1089. "Shanklin village is much sheltered by the semi-circular form of the lofty downs which nearly inclose it on two sides, while at the same time it possesses sufficient elevation to enjoy a fine view of Sandown Bay, and the ocean beyond ... Altogether, the spot is as sequestered and rural, as though it were placed many miles inland, instead of being in the immediate vicinity of the grandest coast scenery, and close to [Shanklin Chine]" (see Image 490) (Barber's Picturesque Guide, pp. 63–64).
1090. Daish's hotel and posting house was "on the top of the hill" and "with its cottage front, parterres, &c. resemble[d] the rustic seat of a private gentleman, rather than a house of public character"; Williams's Shanklin hotel and posting house was located "in the village street" (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265; Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 64).
1091. The two provisional shops were William Merwood, grocer and draper, and William and John Saunders, grocers. The two butchers were Henry Cooper, and Joseph Hollis. The two shoe makers were William Chessell and James Warder. There were two bakers: James Hayden and William Higgs. The blacksmith was George Harris (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265). Anna Whistler says that there was one baker, and her later comments suggest that Higgs was that baker.
1092. About halfway between Shanklin's two hotels was the road leading to Shanklin Chine (see Image 490), the best-known chine on the Isle of Wight, chine meaning "any considerable chasm in the cliffs of the Island" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, pp. 64). Legh Richmond has given an account of his visit to Shanklin Chine in The Young Cottager.

In a widely sweeping curve of a beautiful bay, there is a kind of chasm, or opening in one of the lofty cliffs which bound it. This produces a very romantic and striking effect. The steep descending sides of this opening in the cliff are covered with trees, bushes, wild flowers, fern, wormwood, and many other herbs, here and there contrasted with bold masses of rock or brown earth.

In the higher part of one of these declivities, two or three picturesque cottages are fixed, and seem half suspended in the air.

From the upper extremity of this great fissure, or opening in the cliff, a small stream of water enters by a cascade, and flows through the bottom, winding in a varied course of about a quarter of a mile in length; and then runs into the sea, across a smooth expanse of firm hard sand, at the lower extremity of the chasm. At this point, the sides of the woody banks are very lofty, and, to a spectator from the bottom, exhibit a mixture of the grand and beautiful not often exceeded. ...

I walked up by a steep pathway, that winded through the trees and shrubs on the side of one of the precipices. At every step, the extent of prospect enlarged, and acquired a new and varying character by being seen through the trees on each side. Climbing up a kind of rude, inartificial set of stone stairs in the bank, I passed by the singularly-situated cottages which I had viewed from beneath, ... [and] arrived at the top of the precipice. ... From this point the abyss, occasioned by the great fissure in the cliff, appeared grand and interesting. Trees hung over it on each side, projecting not only their branches, but many of their roots in wild and fantastic forms. (Richmond, Annals of the Poor, 1815, pp. 237–238, 245, 246)

Barber, in his Picturesque Guide, refers to Richmond's text:

The stream which finds its way to the sea through the chasm it has so greatly assisted in producing, rises in the down beyond Shanklin, and, as it approaches the village, may be tracked as it flows by the fine forest trees that line its banks. Its course, just before it reaches the head of the chine, is along a bed of stones, placed to prevent the further wear of the sand-rock, and thence over a broad flat stone, supported as a projecting ledge to increase the effect of the fall, the natural descent of which is about thirty feet. The half-way view from which the cascade is seen on the one hand, and, behind, and around, nothing but the precipitous winding sides of the abyss is picturesque beyond description, especially if the sun aids the effect by throwing into alternate light and shade the projections and recesses on one side, while the other wholly sleeps in comparative gloom. Another striking effect, as noticed by Mr. Richmond, is that produced by the mouth of the chasm, when the spectator stands facing it on the shore. Here the cliffs are about 280 feet high, and the width of the opening at top is at least 300 feet. The desolate and barren aspect of the rocks on the left offers a fine contrast to that of their opposite neighbours, whose steepes are clothed with wood, and broken by cottages and gardens, the latter well stocked with vegetables and fruit trees ... At the foot of the cliff is the habitation of a fisherman, to whom visitors are indebted for the path cut along the arid rock to the summit of the chine, and who expects a small gratuity from those who ascend the chasm by means of the accommodation he has provided. (Barber's Picturesque Guide, pp. 66–67).

1093. “John Campbell Cameron, esq. Tower Cottage” (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265).
1094. “The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and was built in the reign of King Stephen, when his brother Henry de Blois was Bishop of Winchester” (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265). Located “near the southern extremity of the village”, it was “a little edifice of very primitive appearance, whose smallest windows are not above eleven inches wide, and all whose larger ones have evidently been inserted since the original building. A church stood here before the time of Domesday Book, as is seen from its mention in that venerable record, where it occurs under the name of Senclix. Properly, ... it is a chapel annexed to the rectory of Bonchurch: but it was formerly taken out of the parish of Brading, where the inhabitants still bury their dead; and a pension of ten shillings is paid annually from the chapel to the rector of Brading, as an acknowledgment to the mother church. The chapel was built by one of the Lisles, and endowed with fifty acres of land, together with the tithes of many tenants of the manor. As to parochial assessments, it is considered a separate parish” (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 63).
1095. “On leaving Shanklin we pass a most lovely piece of country. Ascending the hill a fine view opens before us; and below we see the little village of Luccombe, celebrated for the small Chine which it contains ... If it has not the magnificence of Shanklin Chine, it is not wanting in beauty; its dark brown cliff, with - patches of green and hanging wood, its lofty trees, which shade and adorn the deep ravine; its rushing water murmuring and falling to a fine shore, with the little cottages which are adjacent, give it a most picturesque appearance “ (The Isle of Wight Visitors’ Book, p. 83). “The deep romantic chasm called Luccombe Chine ... was formerly a favourite resort of smugglers” (William White, History, Gazetteer and Directory of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight [Sheffield, UK: Robert Leader for the author, 1859], p. 643).

1096. “Bonchurch is a lovely village and sea bathing place, pleasantly situated in the eastern and most beautiful part of the Undercliff, between Ventnor and Dunnose Head ... Its parish contains only 618 acres of land, rising boldly from the East-end Landslip, Dunnose Head, and Luccombe Chine, to the lofty hill called St. Boniface Down (White, Directory of Hampshire, p. 642).
1097. “Ventnor, a handsome modern town and rapidly improving sea bathing place, on the southern coast of the Isle of Wight, is picturesquely seated on the terrace road and on the woody and rocky declivities of the romantic Undercliff, descending to the waters of the English Channel, on the south; and sheltered on the north by a steep range of limestone rocks, or upper cliffs, rising precipitously to the height of from 90 to 100 feet, and crowned by bold ranges of lofty Downs, rising several hundred feet higher ... on the eastern part of the Undercliff, between Bonchurch and Steephill Castle. ... In 1844, an act of Parliament was obtained ‘For better Paving, Lighting ... and otherwise Improving part of the Parish of Newchurch, called Ventnor’” (White, Directory of Hampshire, pp. 638–639).
1098. Jean Frédéric Oberlin (Strasbourg 31 August 1740 – Ban-de-la-Roche 1 June 1826) was a Lutheran “clergyman and philanthropist” in Alsace. “He was educated at Strasbourg ... and in 1767 became pastor at Ban-de-la-Roche.” He “spent the rest of his long life [there] in labor for the material and spiritual improvement of his impoverished parishioners.” Each month he delivered “three sermons in French and one in German.” His work included “practicing medicine, founding a savings and loan bank, introducing cotton manufacturing, and bringing modern agricultural techniques to the region.” He also helped build better roads, and founded and maintained orphan asylums. “Substantial cottages were erected” for the populace, “and various industrial arts were introduced” as well as “an itinerant library” (George Edwin Rines, ed., The Encyclopedia Americana, 30 vols. [New York: Encyclopedia Americana, 1918–1920], s.v. “Oberlin, Jean Frédéric”).

Seeing the luxuriant soil on the Isle of Wight, where so much more could be grown, thus making their food less expensive, Anna Whistler was reminded of Oberlin’s success with barren fields. He organized an agricultural club, “introduced new vegetables and gave instruction as to their cultivation.” He “investigated ... the nature of the [local] soil and learned what it was adapted to produce.” He replaced an unproductive kind of potato with one from France, which produced a successful crop. He brought “much waste land ... into use” by teaching his parishioners about fertilizers and irrigation and introduced “better and more modern” agricultural implements. The agricultural club was followed by a horticultural society and nurseries. “Trees more appropriate for the climate” were introduced. He applied the principles he taught to two barren fields owned by the parsonage and created “a fruitful orchard in a few years,” winning over skeptics who had been unwilling to accept his mixing piety with practical and utilitarian proposals for an improved life. Anna Whistler would have appreciated that religious motives not only underlay all he planned and taught, but that this foundation was visibly evident (Augustus F. Beard, The Story of John Frederic Oberlin [Boston, New York, and Chicago: Pilgrim Press, 1909], pp. 98, 99 100, 101, 102, 103). She wished that her sister, Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer (Kate) could see the gardens.

1099. It has not been possible to identify Mrs. Reid, their housekeeper at Madeira Cottage in Shanklin.
1100. The young couple, who, it is suggested, arrived on 21 July, but can not have, were James Phillips (Tottenham, Middlesex 1814 – 1873) and Anna (Mendham) Phillips (Camberwell, Surrey 11 February 1816 – 13 March 1886), who took lodgings at Madeira Cottage with their daughter, Anna Maria (b. Amptill, Bedfordshire; bap. 11 May 1841 – 30 April 1911). James Phillips and Anna Mendham were married on 2 July 1840 (The Times [London], July 3, 1840). His occupation is given in the 1841 Census as chemist, in 1851 as “income from houses,” and in 1861 and 1871 as “Justice of the Peace.” The address given for this household in 1851 was 26 Grove Road, Brixton, Borough of Lambeth. Anna Whistler supplied James with a slightly different address in December 1848, urging him to contact the Phillipses during his Christmas holidays with the Hadens (Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg 4 December 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W 370). In 1841, the Phillipses had three female servants: Sarah Danford, Mary Danford, and Mary Sharpe, all aged twenty. In 1851, they had two female servants: Martha Briggs and Jemima K[unclear], both unmarried and both twenty-two years old. It is not possible to say whether one of these five young women was the servant maid who accompanied the Phillips family to the Isle of Wight in 1848. Anna Maria Phillips, aged twenty-nine, of Battersea, married on 14 December 1871 (by license) George Horton (c. 1842 – 23 December 1901) aged twenty-eight, an engineer of Clapham, at Holy Trinity, Clapham, Surrey (Holy Trinity, Clapham, Register of Marriages, March 1871 – April 1876, London Metropolitan Archives; Microfilm of Register of Baptisms 1801–1837, the Peckham Hanover Chapel (Independent), PRO).

1101. Anna Whistler omitted the word “been.”
1102. The references to the dates of Debo’s arrival and of the later accident with the bow and arrow are confused. Debo would seem to have come to the Isle of Wight close to the end of July, if the Phillipses arrived more than a week before her. But if the accident occurred a week after Debo’s arrival, the date of the accident would have been well after 1 August, the date of the next entry.
1103. It has not been possible to ascertain who Francis Seymour Haden’s best friends in Bath were.

Bath was a spa town. It “lies at the bottom of a valley, encompassed by a triple circle of hills, rising higher the farther they are removed from the city ... the lesser or nearest hills are ... splendidly grand, from the ... number of striking buildings with which they are studded, as well as for their beautiful verdure, the gardens and plantations which decorate their surface ... In the midst of these hills, ... with various altitudes of from four to eight hundred feet above the level of the ocean, – the old city of Bath itself being only forty feet above that level, – the Avon ... is seen winding and turning, as it descends into the level valley ... On the narrowest tongue of land which the sudden bend this river makes ... is seated the Old Bath, or the Bath of the Romans, with its hot springs occupying the centre ... Old though this part of Bath may be, ... it has been in almost all its parts modernized and embellished ... Its former antique air therefore is gone ... Milsom-street ... leads us ... into the heart of what may be considered as the second or intermediate city of Bath. It is the creation of the last sixty or seventy years ... This doubling of the original city was the result of that singular attraction imparted to Bath by the palmy and glorious days of its now-departed 'monarch', which brought strangers to it not only from every part of England, but from foreign lands also ... Queen-square ... and the Circus ... occupy the centre of this newer section of Bath ... [which also contains] the Royal Crescent ... arranged upon the slope of a hill ... [A]scending still higher ... the new city has taken possession of the high common and its descending slopes, and there established its ... crescents and places ... [A] glance cast in the direction of the south-east embraces ... another sweep of succeeding hills ... principally arranged ... as detached villas with their surrounding gardens. This fourth region of modern Bath ... a level tract of land, a quarter of a mile wide, and twice that length, presents as it were a new town, strongly contrasting by its exquisitely-finished buildings, its magnificent streets, and open squares, and the general air of grandeur that prevails over the whole district, with the oldest part of the city ... to which it lies exactly opposite" (Granville, Spas of England, vol. 3, Southern Spas, pp. 368–371).

1104. Rennet is produced "from the stomach of an unweaned calf, containing rennin and used in curdling milk for cheese" (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. "rennet").
1105. "Pretty fair maid" may refer to the singing game "Green Grass," a matchmaking game, which was in vogue from the 1820s to the 1920s (Iona Opie and Peter Opie, The Singing Game [Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1985], p. 117). It contains the words "Come all ye pretty fair maids / And dance along with us" and "We'll take this pretty fair maid / We'll take her by the hand" (Opie and Opie, p. 116). For a discussion of "Green Grass," see Opie and Opie, pp. 116–120.
1106. Matthew 10:29: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father."
1107. The guests were Mary Anne (Parland) Morgan (c. 1813–1882) (Mrs M) and her daughter, Fanny Elizabeth (1841–1934) (her little Fanny), who was seven years old. See Morgan and Parland in Appendix E.
1108. The Morgans had in their employ in 1845 Fanny Alcock, governess, and Jane Morris, nurse (BRBC STP 1845, fols. 3, 40), but the reference in the diary is to "Mrs. Morgan's maid." The three announcements of their departure from St. Petersburg, not listing any domestics, appeared in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti

- 82, April 15 [April 27 NS], 1848; no. 84, April 17 [April 29 NS], 1848; and no. 86, April 20 [May 2 NS], 1848.
1109. This is a reference to Mrs. Francis Baird (Dorothea [Halliday] Baird)'s fancy ball.
1110. It has not been possible to locate the letters of Major Whistler written to his wife in the summer of 1848.
1111. "Mr. M" is Edward John Morgan (1812–1876), husband of Mary Anne (Parland) Morgan. See Morgan and Parland in Appendix E.
1112. Although gazetteers for towns on the Isle of Wight have been consulted, there are no gazetteers available for 1848 specifically. It has not been possible, therefore, to identify either the families whom they did not visit in St. Petersburg or the Russian family.
1113. The rector was the Reverend Justly Hill (c. 1782 – 18 March 1853), venerable archdeacon of Buckinghamshire and the rector of Tingewick in that county, as well as the rector of Bonchurch with Shanklin on the Isle of Wight (Clergy List for 1852, p. 130). The Isle of Wight living was "a rectory with Bonchurch in the diocese of Winchester, and gift of the families of Hill and Popham" (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265). Reverend Hill had been the incumbent at Bonchurch since 1809 (Clergy List for 1852). The 1851 Census gives his age as sixty-nine years and his address as The Parsonage (HO 107/1664, fol. 502, p. 11). For commentary on the Shanklin Church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, of which Rev. Hill was rector, see Note 1094 above.
1114. For information about the dissenting chapel, see the biography of Rev. Henry Smith in Note 1116, NYPL: AWPD, Part II.
1115. "Last Sunday" was 30 July 1848.
1116. The "zealous and eloquent young minister" was Richard Henry Smith (London 10 February 1821 – Hampstead, Middlesex 13 November 1884). The son of a Congregational minister, Smith "originally intended to be a printer and bookbinder." On deciding to be a Congregational minister, he entered Highbury College. "He displayed, at an early period of his ministerial career, the qualities which characterized him through the remainder of his life – viz., great courage, faith and determination." "His career was unique, useful, and self-sacrificing." While living in Brading, Isle of Wight, waiting for "an invitation to a vacant pulpit," he worked to promote "the religious interests of the inhabitants." This led to an invitation by the local Congregationalists "to become their minister." Despite the fact that "the chapel was wretchedly situated” and the income small, he accepted. In time, he was instrumental in raising funds to have a schoolhouse with a playground built for “the children of Dissenters” (who had “no day school”) as well as a house for the schoolmaster, “a new chapel [and] a minister’s house.” He also succeeded in establishing a “Dissenters’ burial ground.” Anna Whistler met him and his wife and young family of two children after these endeavors had been accomplished, for she was charmed by the “new gothic chapel” with the Smiths’ attractive apartment in the basement and the beautiful garden, which was actually a burial ground. Reverend Smith next went to Halesworth in Suffolk. Here there was not “scope enough for his special powers,” so he went to Surbiton, near Kingston-on-Thames, and essentially proceeded as he had at Brading. First he opened “a room in his house,” leading to the eventual building of a chapel. He “resigned his charge in 1861, and became minister of Hope Chapel, Hanley.” “[A]n amateur artist and art critic ... he [also] used art as a means of preaching.” At Hope Chapel, he was “especially successful among the working classes, who came in large numbers to hear his Sunday afternoon lectures, and to see the large pictures illustrating the parables, which he painted week by week for their benefit.” In 1865, he quit Hanley and went to Gospel Oak Fields, near Hampstead Heath, where once again he undertook to form a congregation, resulting in the building of the Gospel Oak Congregational Chapel in that same year. He remained here until June 1881, when ill health required him “to tender his resignation.” He died on 13 November 1881. After the death of his first wife, Rev. Smith married twice more. From his three marriages, he had at least twelve children.

“When at Surbiton he, for a time, spent his Mondays in copying the cartoons of Raphael at Hampton Court.” This resulted in his Expositions of the Cartoons of Raphael (1860) and Expositions of Raphael’s Bible (1868). His Expositions of Great Pictures (1863) was similar in structure but broader in scope. A fourth publication, The Gospel Oak Gallery of Bible Pictures and Portraits (1878) “was ... more popular” in nature, “and was intended to enforce the writer’s views on physiognomy and the connection between countenance and character.” He also wrote a number of works about and for children.

His “preaching was distinguished for its suggestiveness and great spiritual power. He had formed a high ideal of the Christian life, and he condemned departures from that ideal with a pungency of expression which sometimes gave to his ministry an - air of sternness and severity. He had a dread of mere religious conventionalities and mechanical contrivances to secure religious ends, and insisted on the necessity for living by principle, and not by expediency." Anna Whistler appreciated these qualities in the still-young Reverend Smith, noting in her diary his zeal and eloquence and his "deeply impressive and interesting manner" in addressing children, all of which led her to pay him one of her highest compliments: that "the name of dissenter is merged in that of christian," in meeting "with such an one as" he (Censuses for 1851, 1861, 1871, and 1881; The Nonconformist and Independent 256, no. 5, new series, November 20, 1884; The Congregational Yearbook, 1885, pp. 227–229; Register of Baptisms, Lock's Fields Independent Chapel, York Street, Walworth, Surrey, RG 4/4202, NAUK; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1884; The Hampstead and Highgate Express, November 15, 1884, p. 30, and November 22, 1884).

1117. It has not been possible to identify a book entitled "The Week" to which Anna Whistler is referring; there are also a number of periodical publications bearing that title.
1118. "The Parsonage [see Image 491] is remarkable for the luxuriant growth of myrtles which envelop its walls, and are found to stand the severest winters without protection" (G. Brannon, The Pleasure Visitor's Companion in Making the Tour of the Isle of Wight, 25th ed. [Wootton, UK: printed by the author, 1857], p. 30).
1119. Isaiah 61:3: "To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called Trees of righteousness, The planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified."
1120. Neither the 1841 nor 1851 censuses for Shanklin lists a housekeeper at The Parsonage. Perhaps she did not live in. The female listed who was closest in age to Archdeacon Hill was his wife, Jane Helena Hill (c. 1787 – 30 August 1858), aged sixty-four in the 1851 Census.
1121. Matthew 11:28: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
1122. "The Church, like the village, takes its name from St. Boniface; 'Bonchurch' being only a contraction from 'St. Boniface Church'... it stands on [a] ... steep declivity that leads down to [the sea]. Shaded by reverend elm-trees, and affording some indications of Norman architecture, it is a little edifice that cannot be viewed without interest ... the first erection of the building ... is supposed to have taken place shortly subsequent to the Conquest ... A large oaken cross is placed within the east window, and forms a conspicuous addition to the communion-place" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 74).

1123. It has not been possible to determine the source of the quotation "country down to the sea beach."
1124. "Perhaps no part of the Isle of Wight has undergone greater changes during the last few years than Bonchurch. This salubrious and beautiful spot, sheltered from the winter cold by a range of elevated downs at the north and east and still more effectually guarded against the summer heats by its perpetual sea breeze, had long possessed a high reputation as a resort of the invalid no less than of the tourist ... The original village, with the exception of two villas, consisted of a few rustic cottages ... containing perhaps about sixty inhabitants. But in the year 1837 a large portion of the land was advertized to be let on building leases ... The houses ... have been so judiciously placed, each in its own domain ... as to add to the beauty of the view, and there are now some sixteen or eighteen villas, either occupied by resident families or furnishing accommodation of a very superior description" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 74**).
1125. It has not been possible to locate this letter, which Anna Whistler says she wrote to her husband on 1 August 1848.
1126. Saturday was 5 August.
1127. Anna Whistler probably should have written "just as I."
1128. Monday was 7 August.
1129. "The celebrated Culver Cliffs range along the ... side of the peninsula [which ends in Bembridge Point]; they are four hundred feet high, and command ... a most extensive view, of which the main feature is the broad bosom of the British Channel. Culver Cliffs were the scene of the Rev. Legh Richmond's meeting with the 'Negro Servant', which, together with the surrounding scenery, he so well describes in the tract published under that title" (Barber's Picturesque Guide, p. 30–31; Richmond, Annals of the Poor, 1815, pp. 139–187). The Negro Servant is the story of a black servant who had been freed by his master and whom Richmond baptized.
1130. For the new gothic chapel at the entrance to Brading see Note 1116 above, the biography of Rev. Richard Henry Smith.

1131. Anna Whistler did not go back to record where they picked up Mr. Phillips (Mr P), James, and Willie.
1132. Reverend Richard Henry Smith married in the Ongar, Essex, registration district in the September quarter of 1845 Hannah Maria Andrews (Stanford Rivers, Essex 10 June 1819 – Ryde, Isle of Wight 1 June 1856) (Certificates of Nonconformist Baptisms. NA ref. R6 5/79. [Certificate] F no. 3170, Parchment Series, Dr. Williams’s Library, London; The Nonconformist, June 4, 1865, p. 410). Their two children at this time were Hannah Jane Smith (Brading, Isle of Wight 18 July 1846 – no earlier than 1901) and Richard Henry Smith (Brading, Isle of Wight 28 February 1848 – Halesworth, Suffolk 20 December 1852) (The Nonconformist, July 22, 1846, p. 506, March 8, 1848, p. 163, and December 22, 1852, p. 1013; 1901 Census for Walsall, Staffordshire, RG 13/2703).
1133. It has not been possible to identify “the old sexton.”
1134. The vicar of Brading (1846–1862) was Dunbar Isidore Heath (1816–1888). He graduated from Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1838. He “was prosecuted for expressions in his sermons considered derogatory to the Thirty-Nine Articles, and sentenced in 1861 to deprivation of his benefice.” His case became “a precedent in the other ecclesiastical suits, by which the relations between Church and State are being largely modified.” He was the author of several works, including: The Future Human Kingdom of Christ (1852–1853) and A Defence of My Professional Character (1862) (Men of the Times: A Dictionary of Contemporaries Containing Biographical Notices of Eminent Characters of Both Sexes, 12th ed. [London: George Routledge and Sons, 1887], p. 514; Boase, Modern English Biography, vol. 1, pp. 1410–1411; John Foster Kirk, A Supplement to Allibone’s Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, 2 vols. (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott, 1891), vol. 2, p. 801; Alumni Cantabrigienses, vol. 3, p. 311).
1135. The Oxford Movement in the Church of England had as its aim the restoration of the High Church principles of the later-seventeenth-century Church. With the withdrawal of John Henry Newman (1801–1890) from the Oxford Movement, its leader became Edward Bouverie Pusey (1800–1882). Anna Whistler obviously objected to the fact that Puseyism thereby promoted a church closer to Roman Catholicism in its views and revealed the closeness through its garb.
1136. Little Jane’s grave (see Image 492) is located by “the eastern wall of the church.” At the time of her death, Richmond planted a yew tree nearby, but it soon withered (Richmond, Annals of the Poor, 1815, p. 286). In 1822, when memorials were erected in Brading to the cottagers of the Annals of the Poor, with Richmond present (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Richmond, Legh”), he had a stone placed on her grave, bearing an epitaph written by him:

Ye who delight the power of God to trace,
And mark with joy each monument of grace,
Tread lightly o’er this grave, as you explore
‘The short and simple annals of the poor.’

A child reposes underneath this sod,
A child to memory dear, and dear to God;
Rejoice, yet shed the sympathetic tear,
Jane, ‘the Young Cottager’, lies buried here.

(Legh Richmond, Annals of the Poor, new ed.
[Philadelphia, PA: New York: Robert Carter and Brothers, 1850], p. 14)

1137. Annals of the Poor, 1815, pp. 211–212, 247–248.
1138. Tuesday was 8 August.
1139. It has not been possible to locate this letter from Major Whistler describing his illness and loneliness without his family. This bout of illness marks the beginning of the decline in his health that resulted in his death some eight months later. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.” It has also not been possible to locate Anna Whistler’s reply.
1140. The infant is George Whistler Eastwick, born on 19/31 March 1848 and baptized on 29 October / 10 November 1848 (PREC STP, no. 5665, p. 342; see Image 238). He died one week before Major Whistler, on 19/31 March 1849 (PREC STP, no. 5931). His body was sent to America for interment.
1141. His parents, Lydia Anne (James) Eastwick (Mrs E) (see Image 234) and Andrew McCalla Eastwick (Mr E) (see Image 233) watched at the bedside of Major Whistler.
1142. “Mr & Mrs G” are William Clarke Gellibrand (see Image 265) and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand (see Image 266).
1143. William Hooper Ropes and Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes and their children always spent their summers at the dacha of Mrs. and Mrs. Gellibrand.

1144. The seven children of Charles Wood and Lydia (Procter) Wood and their governess, Miss McMaster, were staying in a cottage on the same estate as the Gellibrands and Ropeses. See Wood in Appendix E and Images 271–272.
1145. Mrs. Charles Haden was Mary Love (Boott) Haden (c. 1820 – 6 December 1897).
1146. Wednesday was 9 August.
1147. “Between Shanklin and Appuldurcombe is a series of pasturing downs, falling with a regular descent on the south, but on the north their slope is abruptly broken by a fine range of cliff, composed chiefly of grey free-stone, and feathered by hanging ash and other self-sown trees. On the edge of this beautiful precipice stand the ruins of an ancient building, called Cook’s Castle: its history appears to be lost in oblivion; but it is a well-known and very picturesque subject, seen from a variety of points ...” (G. Brannon, Graphic Sketches of Well-Known Subjects in the Isle of Wight [Wootton, UK: printed by the author, c. 1839]). MacDonald says that “No sketches of the Isle of Wight have survived unless some of the drawings in the St. Petersburg sketchbook date from the trip” (MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 12). She refers the reader to No. 7 on p. 24 of the St. Petersburg sketchbook, where one of the drawings “could just possibly be a view of the Needles with the lighthouse on the end” (MacDonald, p. 4).
1148. It has not been possible to determine who “the Parlans” were. An avenue of pursuit is the St. Petersburg Parland family, of which Mary Ann (Parland) Morgan was a member; however, one would expect that Anna Whistler would have identified St. Petersburg people more exactly.
1149. Anna Whistler probably means they entered the magnificent park surrounding the mansion of Appuldurcombe, which was the property of Lord Yarborough (Barber’s Picturesque Guide, pp. 55–58; see Image 493). Barber describes the walk from Appuldurcombe to Shanklin, which gives in reverse order an idea of the beauties of the route taken by Anna Whistler’s group, who walked from Shanklin through Appuldurcombe and on to Cook’s Castle:

We recommend all travelers, whose health and time will permit, to walk from Appuldurcombe to Shanklin: the lovers of nature, in her combined beauty and grandeur, can enjoy few finer treats, should the weather prove propitious. Leaving the park attached to Lord Yarborough's noble seat, we enter a luxuriant copse, crowned by a precipitous height, and an artificial ruin [Cook's Castle] on the right hand, and commanding a succession of beautiful views to the left. As the prospect in the last-mentioned direction opens, it becomes truly magnificent, and comprehends, if we ascend the utmost elevation on Shanklin Down, not only at least one half of the Island, but the English Channel, the Solent, and the south coast of England to a vast extent. We must make a détour to gain the extreme elevation mentioned, which is nearly 800 feet above the level of the ocean; but even if content with the more moderate height afforded by the direct route, the views will be found to surpass description. Nothing can exceed the variety and beauty of the inland scene, everywhere rising into alternate swells and hollows, some of which are of a grand character, while others constitute a succession of petty undulations resembling the waves of the sea. The surface equally alternates between the richest crops and brown or flowering heath: while the blue Solent appears at every break between the downs in the distance. In a deep dell on the left, beneath the cliff along whose edge we are proceeding, two cottages ... appear ... Soon after passing them, we begin to descend towards Shanklin Church. (Barber's Picturesque Guide, pp. 62–63)

The First Earl of Yarborough had died in 1846 and “the estate remained for some time unoccupied” (White, Directory of Hampshire, p. 637).

1150. Because Anna Whistler could not include a visit to Preston in the summer of 1848, her sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (Sister Eliza, my sister, Aunt W, Aunt Eliza, Sister; see Image 40) and her husband, John Winstanley (Mr Winstanley, my brother Winnie, brother Winstanley, Uncle W, Mr W), traveled to the Isle of Wight to visit her. They brought with them wine and silver utensils from Francis Seymour Haden, husband of Anna Whistler's step-daughter, Deborah (Whistler) Haden.
1151. “Napier Lady, Beech” [sic] (Kelly's Directory 1847, p. 1265; Kelly's Directory 1852, p. 1377); “Napier Lady, Swiss Cottage” (Hunt and Co.'s Directory for Hampshire ... including the Isle of Wight [Weymouth: Benson and Barling, 1852]). This residence was between Culver Cottage and Adelaide Cottage (1851 Census for Shanklin). Lady - Elizabeth (Younghusband) Napier (1785 – Shanklin, Isle of Wight 19 December 1857), the widow of Lt. Edward Elers, RN (1781 – 1814), married on 12 June 1815 Capt. Charles Napier of Merchistoun Hall, Stirlingshire, RN (6 March 1786 – 6 November 1860). At the time of this diary entry, he was Sir Charles Napier, KCB (4 December 1840) and rear-admiral of the Blue (9 November 1846) (William R. O’Byrne, A Naval Biographical Dictionary [London: John Murray, 1849]), pp. 802–804; Anderson, Scottish Nation, vol. 3, p. 242; Keith Scott, Scott, 1118–1923: Being a Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Border Family of “Scott” [London: Burke, 1924] p. 81; Lord Monson and George Leveson-Gower, eds., Memoirs of George Elers, Captain in the 12th Regiment of Foot (1777–1842) [London: William Heinemann, 1903], p. 309).

1152. It was Captain George Charles Elers Napier (b. 1812; bap. 17 August 1812; d. 20 December 1847), the son of Lady Elizabeth Napier and her first husband, Lt. Edward Elers, RN, and the adopted son of Admiral Sir Charles Napier, who had died at sea. He was drowned when the Avenger steam frigate, which he had assumed command of on 20 November 1847, “was wrecked on the Sorelle rocks, in the Mediterranean” a month later (O’Byrne, Naval Biographical Dictionary, p. 804; Monson and Leveson-Gower, George Elers, p. 309; Anderson, Scottish Nation, vol. 3, p. 242). His sister-in-law and the boy of three were Eliza Louisa (Daniel) Napier (1808 – Ryde, Isle of Wight 15 April 1892) and Charles Elers Napier (Purbrooke, Hampshire 10 November 1845 – drowned off Fowey 5 September 1872), the wife and son of George’s brother, Edward Hungerford Delaval Elers Napier (Westbourne, Sussex bap. 21 April 1808 – Shanklin, Isle of Wight 19 June 1870), whom she married in 1844. Edward Hungerford Delaval Elers Napier was also the adopted son of Admiral Sir Charles Napier (Monson and Leveson-Gower, George Elers, p. 309; 1861 Census for Shanklin, RG 9/659, fol. 134, p. 10; IGI; Gentlemen’s Magazine 24, pt. 2 (1845): p. 634; Edward Walford, The County Families of the United Kingdom; or, Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland [London: R. Hardwicke, 1868]; The Times [London], September 13, 1872, p. 481).
1153. This is Elizabeth Isabella Cottnam Maclean (bap. Isle of Coll, Argyllshire 25 November 1783 – Bath, Somerset 21 April 1854). On 28 September 1848, Eliza Winstanley wrote James that if he should ever go to Bath, he should look up her “old friend Miss Maclean at Partis College . . . a mile or two out of the town” (Eliza

- Winstanley to James Whistler Kirby Lonsdale 28th Sept<sup>r</sup> [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W1078). The 1870–71 Post Office Directory for Bath contains a description of a charitable institution called Partis College, on Upper Bristol Road. It was founded in 1824 by Mrs. Ann Partis, formerly of Bath, for the purpose of “receiving and pensioning 30 ladies (members of the Established Church) widows, or unmarried orphans, etc. etc. etc.” According to the 1851 Census, an Elizabeth Maclean, age sixty-seven, was living in this institution in the parish of Weston in the area of Batheaston, Bath. She was the daughter of Hannah Barbara (Cottnam) Maclean and Lt.-Colonel Lachlan Maclean (d. 1 June 1816), major of the Tower of London and resident governor (Gentleman’s Magazine 86, pt. 1 (1816): p. 571; Wells Journal, May 27, 1854) and the sister of the Mary McLean, whose portrait hung in the Winstanley home (entry for S<sup>t</sup> Petersburg. November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Note 22).
1154. Berwick-upon-Tweed is “a port, borough, market-town, parish, and county of itself, 55 miles (E. by S.) from Edinburgh ... containing 8484 inhabitants” (Samuel Lewis, A Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, Comprising the Several Counties, Islands, Cities, Burgh and Market Towns, Parishes, and Principal Villages, with Historical and Statistical Descriptions, 2 vols. [London: Lewis, 1846], vol. 1, p. 124).
1155. Blackgang Chine (see Image 494) takes its name from “the Saxon gange, which signifies any opening or way in a cliff to the sea shore” and from the “almost universal [black] colour of the faces of the cloven sand-rocks.” “From the summit of the Chine we have a noble prospect of the whole line of coast westward, including Chale, Brixton and Fresh-water Bays; the towering cliffs of Freshwater; the Needles Rocks; and the coast of Dorsetshire in the extreme distance The descent to the pebbly beach is worth performing, in order to obtain an interesting view of the Chine as it appears from it.” Blackgang Chine Hotel had been “recently built on the property of W.H. Jacobs, Esq.” From it, one had a view of “the sea-coast as far as the Needles.” One could descend from the hotel to the Chine on muleback (Barber’s Picturesque Guide, p. 84). Barber’s Picturesque Guide contains no mention of a curiosity shop at the top of the Cliff. James’s memory of this spot surfaced many years later in a letter to his mother from Venice: “At last the ice and snow have left us, and now the rain is pouring down upon us. Today reminds me of our stay long ago at the Black Gang Chyne!” (A.J. Bloor, “The Beginnings of James McNeill Whistler,” The Critic 48 (1906): p. 124).

1156. Anna Whistler meant to write “Cliff.”
1157. Harriet Bourmaster (c. 1781 – St. Thomas House, Ryde, Isle of Wight 6 January 1863), daughter of Admiral John Bourmaster, married Sir Archibald Collingwood Dickson, Bart. (30 June 1772 – 18 June 1827) and became Harriet Lady Dickson. They had eleven children (Glasgow Herald, January 9, 1863; L.G. Pine, The New Extinct Peerage, 1884–1971 [Baltimore, MD: Genealogical Publishers, 1973]).
- Many years later, Anna Whistler again mentioned Lady D, in a letter to James (Anna Whistler to James Whistler Talbot House [Hastings, England], Monday 12 June [1876], GUL: Whistler Collection, W549). Debo had been asked to play Beethoven’s Kreutzer Sonata at a musical evening given by Lady D to the blind King George V of Hanover. The event was reported and Lady D identified in The Times: “The King and Princess Federica dined with Lord and Lady Denbigh, at 2, Cromwell Houses, South Kensington ... Lady Denbigh afterwards had an evening party” (“King George of Hanover,” The Times (London), June 13, 1876, p. 8). Lord Denbigh was Basil Feilding (1719–1800), 6th Earl of Denbigh. He married on 12 April 1757 Mary Cotton (1727–1782), daughter of Sir John Cotton (d. 1752) and Jane Burdett (Burke’s Peerage, 1869, p. 322; IGI).
1158. It has not been possible to determine whether “Jack last” is a game. Perhaps it refers to the story of Jack and his eleven brothers.
1159. Rowe’s Illustrated Cheltenham Guide, published in 1845, describes the town as follows:

The town of Cheltenham is situated in the beautiful vale of Gloucester, between the left bank of the Severn and the lovely Cotswold range, which indeed forms the splendid back ground to that portion of the vale in which Cheltenham is seated – a bold projecting escarpment of the range, called Leckhampton Hill, forms a prominent feature in the landscape surrounding the Town, and from whose summit may be enjoyed a most beautiful and expansive view of the vale of Gloucester, the Malvern Hills, and the distant Welch Mountains.

Since the discovery of the Mineral Springs in 1716, Cheltenham has been gradually rising into importance; the visit of His Majesty, King George the Third, with the Royal Family, in 1788, gave it great celebrity, and from a mere village it has become one of the most extensive, and certainly the most elegant town in the Kingdom.

Although Cheltenham (as a Manor) dates its existence to the times previous to the compilation of “Doomsday Book,” by William the Norman, yet it now possesses no remains that would identify it with so early a period of its history; ... The Parish Church is the only building of importance forming the exception to this statement, and the date of its erection may be fixed in all probability at about the 11th century. (George Rowe, Rowe’s Illustrated Cheltenham Guide [Gloucester, UK: printed by the author, c. 1845], pp. iii–iv)

The principal spas described by Rowe are the Montpellier (pp. 27–29), Royal Old Wells (pp. 35–37), and Pittville (pp. 56–59).

1160. The Scarborough Gazette contains no entries for June 1847 that might identify “the lady D.”
1161. The little twelfth-century church dedicated to St. Lawrence (see Images 495–496) “stands in the small village of St. Lawrence, located on the Undercliff, two miles west of Ventnor.” Until 1842, it was the smallest church in England, 20 feet long and 12 feet wide (6 feet high, to the eaves), but in 1842, a small chancel 9 feet long was added, depriving it of that status. “The east window is decorated with a transparent painting of the Resurrection, in a stained glass frame, [donated] in 1798.” “The smallness of the structure is perhaps one chief evidence of its antiquity; and it is far from improbable that the walls, in great part, are of the Saxon era, though all the arches for windows cut in them are of much more recent date” (Barber’s Picturesque Guide, p. 79; White, Directory of Hampshire, 1859, p. 636).

APPENDIX A

EPIGRAPH

"Gentleness is a mild atmosphere, and it enters into a child's soul like sunshine into the rose-bud. Slowly, but surely expanding into beauty & vigour"

"Gentleness is a mild atmosphere, and it enters into a child's soul like sunshine into the rose-bud – slowly, but surely expanding into beauty & vigour"

This quotation is written on a flyleaf of the diaries. It is taken from an early parenting manual, The Mother's Book, by Lydia Maria Child (1802–1880),<sup>1</sup> who also wrote the highly successful American Frugal Housewife: Dedicated to Those Who Are Not Ashamed of Economy (1829). She would later become known for her anti-slavery writing.<sup>2</sup>

A comparison of the handwriting in the quotation from Child with that of Anna Whistler's letters corroborates that the handwriting in both is that of Anna Whistler.

The epigraph follows the New York Public Library's book plates, on the inside cover of her diaries, which read "Anna Palmer Draper Fund, to the memory of her father, Courtland Palmer Sr." and "Presented by Mrs. Henry Draper to the New York Public Library." The page with the book plates has the library stamp of SEP 26 1908.

NOTES

1. Mrs. [Lydia Maria] Child, The Mother's Book (Boston, MA: Carter, Hendee and Babcock; Baltimore, MD: Carter, 1831), p. 2.
2. Encyclopedia Britannica Online, s.v. "Lydia Maria Child," accessed November 15, 2020, <https://www.britannica.com/biography/Lydia-Maria-Child>

APPENDIX B

“EXCERPT FROM THE MARQUIS DE CUSTINES TRAVELS IN RUSSIA IN 1842”<sup>1</sup>

The figure of the Empress is very elegant & tho she is extremely thin I find an indefinable grace about her whole person. Her mein far from being haughty as I had been informed is expressive of an habitual resignation. On entering the Chapel she was much affected & I thought she was going to faint... Her soft blue eyes, rather sunken, told of deep sufferings supported with angelic calmness. Her look full of feeling has the more power, from its seeming unconsciousness of possessing any. Faded before her time & so weak that it is said she cannot live long, her appearance gives the idea of a passing shadow, of of [sic] something that belongs no more to earth. She has never recovered from the anguish she had to undergo on the day of her accession to the throne. and conjugal duty has consumed the rest of her life. She has given too many idols to Passion, too many grand dukes to the Emperor— Every one sees the state of the Empress but no one mentions it. The Emperor loves her. When ill in bed he attends her himself, watches by her bedside & prepares & administers her food & medicine. No sooner is she better than he destroys her health with the excitement of fêtes & journeys, but the moment danger to her health is again apprehended he renounces all his projects... The nearer any of us is placed to the imperial sun the more he is a Slave to the glory attached to his situation. The Empress is dying under the weight of this Slavery—

From my own observation this must be unjust, as ungenerous, for if the wife of any Sovereign is happy in her family it is the Empress of the Czar Nicolas. but I am told her constitution was undermined by her fondness for amusement. late hours at routs, excess in dancing, frequent attendance at Theatres &c. Now the Imperial family is an example to their court, benevolent & considerate the ladies are at the head of all charitie[s] & their early hours are quite established.

NOTE

1. Appendix B is a single, abridged quotation from the Marquis de Custine's La Russie en 1839, in the 1842 English translation. It is his description of the exhausted and nervous appearance of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna, attributed by him to the stress of (1) the Decembrist rebellion in 1825, which threatened her husband's accession to the throne and the entire Imperial family with assassination and (2) her years of bearing children (de Custine, Empire of the Czar, pp. 137–138; see also pp. 159, 161). This passage, copied in Anna Whistler's hand, is followed by her response to what she deemed to be Custine's lack of generosity and of justness in attributing the empress's debility to a subservience to the emperor's whim and thereby suggesting an unhappy marriage. But although Custine was implying that the emperor had power, he was not saying the marriage was unhappy. Anna Whistler entitled the quotation "Excerpt from the Marquis de Custine's travels in Russia in 1842." A. Th. Von Grimm, in his biography of Aleksandra Fyodorovna, whom he knew personally, corroborates in detail Custine's statement and also does not suggest an unhappy marriage (von Grimm, Alexandra Feodorovna, vol. 1, pp. 157, 246).

APPENDIX C

Lines<sup>1</sup> written on the death of dear Elizth Haslewood, by her Sister Catherine aged 11 years—! Elizth died 25th July 1843 aged 17!

A very sweet and lovely child
And very precious, – Gentle, mild,
But now, sweet Girl, she's left us all.
And gone at her kind Fathers call.

Though she no longer lingers here.
Yet to us all she's very dear.
We must not call her down to this,
From that bright world, of heavenly bliss.

Now, she has done with suffering here.
And gone to see her Saviour dear,
Now she has left her earthly place
And gone to see her Makers face.

Now, she is praising him above,
Though all on Earth, her dearly love
But still we must not for her Moan.
Although she was a precious loan.

NOTE

1. A comparison of the handwriting in this copy of Catherine Haslewood's lines with the writing in Eliza Winstanley's diary recorded in Appendix D shows that Eliza Winstanley copied the poem for Anna Whistler.

APPENDIX D

From Eliza I. Winstanley,<sup>1</sup> to her Sister Anna M Whistler, on her leaving Preston for St. Petersburg, that the incidents of her visit abroad should also be recorded.

August 1843.<sup>2</sup>

Commencement of a Journey, from Preston.<sup>3</sup>

By Eliza I. Winstanley<sup>4</sup>

I left home on thursday the 15th of June 1843 – at 20 minutes past eight in the morn<sup>g</sup>. under very favorable auspices, My Husband<sup>5</sup> came with me to the North Union Station,<sup>6</sup> where I parted with him. He was in pretty good health and did not object to my going to visit an old aunt<sup>7</sup> who I had not seen for many years.

M<sup>rs</sup> Chapman,<sup>8</sup> & her young friend Miss Thompson,<sup>9</sup> went in the same Carriage, with me to Liverpool, and my Nephew Woodcock Winstanley<sup>10</sup> accompanied me as far as Kirkside.<sup>11</sup> I left our Nephew & Niece M<sup>r</sup> & M<sup>rs</sup> Ainsworth<sup>12</sup> at home with Winstanley, the former, being on the Invalid list, with a severe attack of Influenza, was the only circumstance that cast a damp on my setting out! – We had a most agreeable & quick journey to Liverpool, where my Sister<sup>13</sup> & Isa, Johnstone<sup>14</sup> met me at the Edge Hill Station.<sup>15</sup>

Alicia accompanied me to M<sup>r</sup> Salisbury. where I went to pay a first visit to my dear young friend, (formerly Anne Cunliffe)<sup>16</sup> now the wife of Kingston Salisbury Esq<sup>re</sup> She welcomed me most kindly & I rejoiced to see her so comfortably settled. I could only remain a short time with her as the “Achilles” was advertised to sail at twelve at noon; my Sister went on Board with Isabella Johnstone and I. but very soon took leave of us, as preperations were then making for the vessel leaving the Dock. and at a quarter before one we were fairly off. There were a great many Passengers, and also much variety amongst them. There were several Jews, some Turks, a french party, and two very pleasing Russian Ladies with a nice little Girl the Daughter of the Stewardess having taken them at all, as there were no other Passengers for the Island. Their Father came to meet his children, & the little things shed tears, (of joy I doubt not) I was very frightened. the Boat seemed to me to get almost under the Steamer at parting. There were several Boys on board going home for the holidays, and three of them had agreed to order a seperate dinner for themselves & had each a Pint of Sherry & some Porter. which made them so tipsey, that they caused both amusement & regret to many of our party one of them, a very Gentlemanly Boy from Glasgow, declared it sh<sup>d</sup> be a lesson to him, never to act in the same way again. I hope he may keep this resolution.

“M<sup>rs</sup> Handyside”<sup>17</sup> (one of the Ladies) the name of her Sister was Miss Henley.<sup>18</sup> I am that particular in mentioning them as I. [Isa] learnt in the course of the voyage, that they had met with my Brother, Whistler<sup>19</sup> at M<sup>r</sup> Laws,<sup>20</sup> the English Clergy man at St Petersburg, and I was anxious to secure their acquaintance for my Sister Anna Should it be her Lot to reside there. Those Ladies mean to return in Sep<sup>r</sup> God willing. They were very agreeable and informed me, that they were born in Poland, but had lived many years in Russia. they were very Lady like in their manners & appearance, and told me that the Russians were a sociable People! — I felt rather anxious not to be known by any of the Passengers, as I did not intend to visit my friends in Edin<sup>g</sup> or any where else in Scotland, except my aunt at Portobello.<sup>21</sup> my visit being specially to her, and I had fixed, that I should not be more than a week absent from my Husband. I soon found, however that I could not long remain incog. as very shortly after we were off from Liverpool, as Isabella and I were walking to & fro, on the Deck, a Lady accosted me as “M<sup>rs</sup> Wellwood”<sup>22</sup> I replied that, was my name, but a long time ago, and I said the Lady am “M<sup>rs</sup> H. Gordon”<sup>23</sup> with whom I was very glad to renew my acquaintance, she had with her, “Janet”<sup>24</sup> her eldest Daughter a very nice lively, pleasing Girl. she had been introduced to a french Deputy & his wife and a Sister of the latter, & they carried on a most animated conversation in french, in which my young friend Isabella took a part. M<sup>rs</sup> G. and I kept much together, she had lately lost her good Husband,<sup>25</sup> and I felt interested in the sad scenes, she had lately witnessed and in much, that had occurred since we last met. She, like myself, had not secured sleeping accommodation, and the Passengers were so numerous, that we were obliged to make the best of such beds as the Stewardess could make up for us. and she kindly agreed that those who wished to be together should be put in the same State room. we remained on Deck as long as it was safe so to do, at night, and we had a variety of amusing & interesting scenes. The Sea was beautifully calm, and we had all great reason to bless God with thankful hearts for his mercies to us. Two sweet little Girls were put on shore by a small Boat at the Isle of Man,<sup>26</sup> they were very young travellers to be without protection. I regretted not having known sooner of their being on board, for the Capt<sup>n</sup> had found much fault for

The time of retiring to rest, at length arrived, and I laughed heartily, when I saw fourteen Beds. put up to the best advantage around a small Cabin about ten feet square and six in addition on the floor of the same apartment. We truly were a merry set, and all seemed disposed to enjoy the change, from our own comfortable homes, one very nice good humoured looking young Lady came down, the last from the Deck, & remarked that she must try to have a little sleep, as she had been travelling for two nights before. She was not long before she put her threat in execution, tho' her head was very near the Curtain, which supplied the place of a door to our apartment. The two french Ladies, were close to my head & kept chattering to my neighbour Miss Gordon at such a rate, that I was repeatedly obliged to say "taisez vous" to their great amusement. another Lady lay very near the foot of my Bed and as Pillows were scarce, the end of my mattress served in part for that purpose, so that I was afraid of giving her a kick now & then. she however took all in good part. I was not inclined to sleep much, and was somewhat annoyed by toothach. I sat up in bed using remedies, which I had brought with me, and, notwithstanding the pain looked round & smiled upon my sleeping companions, some very quiet & others giving a little snore, in proof of their being really asleep. I did forget myself, long enough to feel quite refreshed, and awoke at 1/2 past three when, first one, & then another began to talk, and in a short time we were all once more on foot and one pair after another, went on Deck. the Morn<sup>g</sup> was bright and beautiful. The Sun had just risen in full splendor. I was delighted and could not sufficiently, thank God for permitting me to view so glorious a sight the grand scottish mountains soon came in sight, and as we approached to Greenock,<sup>27</sup> the Islands and wooded shores were a rich feast to the eyes. oh! it was lovely beyond description, and although the air was not quite clear, still we could see “Ben Lomond,”<sup>28</sup> Ben Nevis,<sup>29</sup> &c &c in the distance towering their lofty heads, and adding to the beauty of the numberless lovely places on each side of the Clyde where stood many a noble looking Mansion, and I trust, where also dwelt many warm kind hearts ready and willing to dispense the good things so bountifully bestowed by an unerring Providence. we reached Greenock about 1/2 past six oClock on friday Morn~~g~~ we found there was not a Train for Glasgow<sup>30</sup> till 1/2 past eight, we therefore proceeded by a small steam boat, and landed safe at Glasgow at ten oClock. we then took leave of our agreeable companions, and M<sup>r</sup> Maclean,<sup>31</sup> (a friend of Alicia’s) kindly assisted us, in looking after our Luggage and we went direct to the Glasgow and Edin<sup>g</sup> Station.<sup>32</sup> near which, we procured a cup of Coffee & some refreshment, and we went on by the 11 oClock Train. we were placed in the Coach with three very starched looking Ladies (old maids I thought) they seemed too full of self importance to speak to us, they only went a short way with us, and at parting, by way of example, I handed them their parcels, and they were induced to say “much obliged & good morn~~g~~ a servant and Carriage, were in waiting for Isabella, at Falkirk,<sup>33</sup> and there we parted, with, I believe mutual regret. we had been very happy together and we had very much enjoyed our prosperous voyage & journey.

Nothing occurred worthy of remark from Falkirk, till we reached the all beauteous City of Edin<sup>g</sup> <sup>34</sup> at twelve oClock, I felt a great deal, on entering it, & driving along Princes Street,<sup>35</sup> I called to enquire about the Carlisle Mail,<sup>36</sup> thinking of my return home, and after obtaining the wished for information I almost immediately, went on to Portobello by a Stage Coach, which was about setting off from the Princes St Office. The sun, shone bright and all the well known spots appeared to welcome me to the land of Cakes.<sup>37</sup> an old lady and Gentleman were in the Coach with me, they were very civil but did not much interrupt my reverie ‘till we arrived at our destination.

Arrival at Portobello. June 16th

I went immediately to Brighton Crescent,<sup>38</sup> all anxiety to see my dear Aunt, but, what was my astonishment on finding the gate locked and no admittance. I sent a Boy over the railing who repeatedly pulled the Bell, without any success. The windows being open, made me feel pretty certain that my aunt had not gone from home. I therefore concluded that the Servant must have gone out which proved to be the case. I tried to obtain assistance from the next House, and there again I met with a disappointment. I was not invited to come in & rest, this I determined not to mention, which, I afterwards found, was a prudent plan as the servants, were not on good terms. In the course of half an hour Catherine<sup>39</sup> appeared, She had been at Market and was much dismayed at my early arrival. She is quite a Meg Merrilee<sup>40</sup> sort of character! as soon as she was aware it was me; she exclaimed, "Bless me, is that you? here already! "What will my Leddie say? she never expected you till the evg! and you said in your letter it might be late."

I explained as briefly as possible and begged she would open the Gate, which was not so easily done, with the violent shaking it had experienced, the lock was spoiled & it would not open. at length Mrs Biggs, came out, and could scarcely be persuaded that it was really me. she was quite shocked to see me so changed for the worse in appearance. "oh! my dear said she, what a reception "to give you after coming so far to see me" "And O. how fat you have grown, alas! I should not have known you" She then brought a small ladder & I tried to get over the rail & had nearly stuck fast It was most ludicrous, I could not refrain from laughing. and was very thankful to be on the ground once more. It was then resolved that a Smith must be got, and my aunt sent Catherine with me to her opposite neighbour "Mrs Ansels"<sup>41</sup> who Cath<sup>nc</sup> said was a real Lady. she received me very politely & sent a joiner, who happened to be working for her, to try to force the lock of the Gate. He succeeded, and returned in a short time. I was then very anxious to be off, and in the midst of the excitement, I did not observe how near I was to the Chimney piece, I had taken my shawl off, being exceedingly warm, and in throwing it over my shoulder, it caught a China jar, which fell on the hearth, broken to atoms. I was stunned, and mortified at my own stupidity. The old lady clasped her hands & uttered in great vexation “what have you done? my Dresden China, oh! oh! I expressed my unfeigned regret, in the most civil terms I possibly could, but could not appease my Hostess, till I said I should do all in my power to repair her loss, to which she assented, and I held out my hand in token of kindness, but she curtsied & said good morn<sup>g</sup> and I was not sorry to lose sight of so uncourteous “ a real Leddie.” — I returned to my Aunt, who received me very cordially, and by & bye she asked me what I would have to eat”. “my dinner,” said I, as soon as convenient “we dine at five oClock” I begged that while I staid it might be rather earlier which was, agreed to. tho Catherine was inclined to rebel, on the score of it not being genteel. My aunt however was really pleased to see me & inclined to humour my fancies. as far as she could. we dined about four oClock, and we were not long, before we began to talk over old stories. and before the ev<sup>g</sup> was over I heard of many grievances, and of the shocking manner in which nearly, the whole of her own family had treated her. But the relatives of her Husband, had always shewn her the most unremitting kindness and respect. I was glad to make my escape for a little & followed Catherine to a China shop, where I purchased a pair of tall purple glasses for flowers. the best that were to be had, & sent them to M<sup>rs</sup> Ansel. and she was graciously pleased to accept them, in lieu of her “Dresden China jar”. On Saturday Morn<sup>g</sup> the 17th of June, I arose from my comfortable Bed, much refreshed after the fatigue of the two preceding days. my aunt resumed her theme, of the ill usage she had met with all her life from her unkind relatives. and she talked much of the immense deal of trouble she had had with the laying out & securing the Sum of two hundred pounds, left to her by M<sup>r</sup> Hunter,<sup>42</sup> for her own life, & after her decease to her Sister M<sup>rs</sup> Wilkin.<sup>43</sup> I knew, that it was only left in trust to her for the behoof of her Sister & her family and I thought it only right to undeceive her, & tell her how it really was. I did so! she would not credit what I said at first. but when I assured her that I had seen M<sup>r</sup> Hunters will, & that my Husband also saw it, she was perfectly astonished! & enraged beyond description. and declared she would not rest till she was at the bottom of the whole affair. she was so angry, that I bitterly repented having mentioned it at all. we had a weary day of it. fortunately I had the comfort of hearing from my dear Husband in the ev<sup>g</sup>

Sunday 18th – This was a lovely day, and we spent it very peaceably. I read to my Aunt and to Catherine frequently and as much as was practicable we avoided worldly, & exciting subjects. I did not go to Church, as I did not wish to be known. I thought much of my own dear home, and wished I was again with my Husband. tho' my Aunt was very kind to me, yet she grieved me by the strange things she was continually saying of others who were, or had been dear to me.

On monday Morn<sup>g</sup> — The dreadful theme of M<sup>r</sup> Hunters Legacy was resumed, and my Aunt gave way to a passion so very violent, stamping her foot, & knocking the table that I was quite alarmed her face was so inflamed, I feared she might have a fit. I offered to write to the Executer, M<sup>r</sup> Pringle<sup>44</sup> for a Copy of that part of the will. I did so, which a little appeased her. my head ached and I told her how poorly she had made me. she was afterwards, more upon her guard. she walked out with me in the afternoon and was extremely pleasant, & most kind to me. On tuesday the 20th inst. we met about the usual hour of nine at breakfast, I was very happy, having another letter from my dear Husband from Underfield,<sup>45</sup> & he was very well but M<sup>r</sup> & M<sup>rs</sup> Ainsworth still Invalids. — My Aunt and I continued our old family histories, we seldom agreed in opinion but I took care to be very calm in asserting mine, which I did very candidly. My worthy Nephew Rob<sup>t</sup> Scott Moncrieff<sup>46</sup> came this forenoon to see me. I was very much gratified by his great kindness, he promised to come again & to bring my dear Niece Anna Boswell.<sup>47</sup> He also undertook to secure my place in the Carlisle Mail for thursday night. — my aunt was quite pleased with his visit and she was very chatty & upon more agreeable subjects during the rest of the day. she presented me with a Broach, set with my Mothe'rs<sup>48</sup> hair, & also a Bible & Prayer Book which had belonged to my Grand Mother<sup>49</sup> and my uncle James.<sup>50</sup> all of which I prize much. I occasionally walked to the Beach. and Catherine assured me I should not be recognised. “ye need na, be feared, naubody'll ken ye here, nau more than I wad ken my first sark”<sup>51</sup> On wed<sup>z</sup> morn<sup>g</sup> Aunt Biggs came down to breakfast, quite in full force and declared her intention of sending for a Carriage & taking me with her to M<sup>r</sup> Millars<sup>52</sup> at Fisherrrow in the afternoon, that she might consult him about the momentous will. The day proved very fine, & we went, and were most hospitably received, & I was very glad to be with my good old friend M<sup>rs</sup> Millar<sup>53</sup> once more. we took tea there & M<sup>r</sup> James Millar drove us back to Portobello in the evg M<sup>r</sup> Millar did not know exactly how the Legacy was left. But told M<sup>rs</sup> Biggs it would be an easy matter for her to refund the Interest & put all to rights, with her Sister I really enjoyed my visit this evg very much. and my aunt was in pretty good spirits. I did not think her maid Catherine quite approved of her proceedings, she never likes to lose sight of her “Leddy”.

On Thursday the 22nd a letter arrived from M<sup>r</sup> Pringle confirming my statement, as to the Legacy being entirely for the behoof of M<sup>rs</sup> Wilkin, so the matter was now at rest only it did not afford satisfaction to M<sup>rs</sup> Biggs. The weather continued beautiful, there was no rain during my stay at Portobello. I had another letter from my dearest Winsl<sup>y</sup> but a poor account of the Invalids at Underfield. I had this morn<sup>g</sup> a most delightful visit from my dear Anna Boswell, & her sweet little daughter Sybella<sup>54</sup> Bob Scott also came again to see me. I walked with them to the Beach, and saw them off again by the Coach.

I passed the afternoon with my poor aunt and sorely I was grieved to see her so very unhappy, viewing almost every thing in the worst light. and repeating again and again the even, barbarous treatment she she [viz] had received from every member of her family. The hour for my departure at length arrived, and at 8 oClock in the evg I said good bye to Catherine, and took an affectionate leave of my old Aunt, who I was truly sorry to part with, notwithstanding all. and I lamented leaving her with such an artful evil minded person as her Serv<sup>t</sup> in whom she places, implicit confidence. She takes care to blow the coal, & keep her in mind of all she has ever heard against the members of her family who had offended her. It was truly with an undescrivable feeling of pity that I left my Aunt in the power of such a person, for evidently she has a great deal to say with her. May the Almighty see fit to renew a right spirit within them I pray. On my arrival at Princes Street, my kind Nephew Bob Scott was waiting for me. I left my luggage at the Coach Office, & went with my good friend to his House 17 Leopold Place he had a nice supper ready for me, we enjoyed a friendly chat till ten oClock when a neat little Carriage drove to the door & took us to the Office where the Mail was to depart from. I went over to Register Street, and saw my old servant Magdalen,<sup>55</sup> the eldest Daughter of my faithful Old Nanny.<sup>56</sup> The good Girl was delighted to see me! she has been very fortunate Her Husband keeps an Inn at the east corner of Register Street, his name is Robertson.<sup>57</sup> It is a large House & well frequented. after having a short but pleasing conversation with her, I returned to the Coach Office to wait for the Mail and at half past ten oClock I got into it, & bade adieu to my kind friend M<sup>r</sup> Scott, who remained with me to the last —

The Journey from Edinburgh

all the Luggage I had with me, was contained in a Carpet Bag, which I wished to have inside but a Gentleman, who was already in the Coach objected to it; and I thought it best to give way and allowed my Bag to be put into the Boot! I was very glad to see a Lady seated opposite to me. I had been wishing so much that I might have a female Companion during the night. I have much reason to thank God for all his goodness to me! The evening was most lovely. I did not at first feel at all inclined to sleep. But the Lady, told me, she had been travelling for the last two days and all night also from London, she had arrived in Edin<sup>g</sup> at 1/2 past two this day, & was now setting out for London again, and she meant to return to Edin<sup>g</sup> without taking a nights rest at all, she had promised to be back in Auld reekie<sup>58</sup> by Monday Morn<sup>g</sup> next if she was alive & well. she was young & her appearance was very interesting. my curiosity was excited about her, from the first hints she threw out of her extraordinary proceedings. — She was of course much worn out with fatigue, as she said, both of body and mind. and I rejoiced to see her, asleep in a very short time. and so was the old Gentleman I was in a very happy mood. delighted to find myself really on my way home again. I mused on the great mercies of Providence on the many causes, I had for thankfulness. I enjoyed the wonderful beauty of the night.

It was the shortest, in the whole year I seemed to be surrounded by blessings, and I did feel truly thankful to Almighty God who also gave me a cheerful heart, fully to appreciate the mercies bestowed upon me. we picked up another female Passenger who left us at Gala Shiels,<sup>59</sup> I still felt very wide awake and I had hitherto had no conversation with my more drowsy companions. a Decent looking man came in at Gala Shiels, he did not look very promising for a Companion, but I began to talk to him & I found him very intelligent about the Crops and all

Country Matters. The sun rose betwixt three & four o'clock and was very magnificent amongst the Hills, I was charmed with the beauty & grandeur of the scenery. But most unfortunately I became very sleepy, just when we came to the prettiest part of the whole road, betwixt Longham and Longtown,<sup>60</sup> I missed seeing Netherby Hall<sup>61</sup> etc I was however greatly refreshed when I awoke; and we got on speedily to Carlisle, where we found a good breakfast awaiting us. I enjoyed mine very much. and after we were seated in the Coach again, we entered into a very animated conversation. The old Gentleman and I became quite good friends, and he asked me if I had forgiven him for not permitting my Bag to be inside with me I assured him I had, tho' I told him I thought him rather cross at the time. The young Lady before mentioned, was very pensive, & gave us many mysterious hints as to her unfortunate circumstances, she said she scarcely cared what became of her! I advised her strongly to write to inform her friends in Edin<sup>g</sup> that she could not return to them without resting a night in London, as if she did not, the probability was, that she would be very ill, & perhaps never recover, she said then her troubles would be at an end! The old Gentleman enquired which country she was bound for were she to leave this world? and begged her to reflect, that then, she must be either in a state of perfect happiness or misery. And it was too serious a change to be thought lightly of. she sighed deeply and assented to the solemn truth. In the course of conversation, she alluded several times to what, a "Mr Lennox"<sup>62</sup> had said, and spoke of being at the Opera; and some how or other, I fancied she had something to do with the stage. I said to her I should not be surprised, were I to see her name in the Newspapers. she said it was not impossible. I begged her to write her name in my pocket Book if she had no objection, she at once took the pencil & wrote, "Elizth Angel"<sup>63</sup> and said if I made enquiry I might hear of her in Manchester. I was resolved to do so for my curiosity was great! - as we drew near to Kendal,<sup>64</sup> my spirits mounted very high I was so delighted at the prospect of seeing my dear Husband & some of our loved friends from Kirkby.<sup>65</sup> my fellow travellers were greatly amused with me, the old Gentleman said he had never met with a wife who spoke of her Husband with such animated affection. "he surely must be something wonderful! the Sun shone bright. The day was most splendid, and I enjoyed it to the uttermost. we arrived at Kendal about two o'clock, and as soon as the Coach stopped I saw my Husband at the door of the Inn!<sup>66</sup> he seemed quite well, and I was as happy as any human creature could be. Rich<sup>d</sup> Picard and dear Marg<sup>t</sup> Ware, & Jane Picard<sup>67</sup> also met me. I had not seen dear Marg<sup>t</sup> since she lost her Mother and dear Husband.<sup>68</sup> she was glad to see me, yet sorrow was painted on her fine countenance. I felt ashamed of my apparent want of sympathy, for I was so overjoyed. that I could not control my tongue and I talked at the rate of nineteen to the dozen, all the time we were at dinner, and while we remained at the Inn. — we proceeded to Kirkby to tea, where we had a very joyful meeting with dear Elizth Jane & Isabella & the darling little John.<sup>69</sup> Mrs Picard Sen<sup>t</sup> <sup>70</sup> soon joined us. I talked all the ev<sup>g</sup>. relating many anecdotes of my weeks visit at Portobello. Not omitting Catherine, telling M<sup>rs</sup> Ansel what a grand Lady I was “daily driving out in my Carriage with four Horses, or six if I thought proper.” — and also the lecture she gave me for never driving her Leddy out, when I was last in Scotland & gratifying her by letting my Carriage stand at her door.

NOTES

1. A portrait (present whereabouts unknown) of the beautiful Eliza (McNeill) Wellwood was painted by Sir Henry Raeburn (1756–1823) (see Image 40). The portrait is said to have been sold in 1917 by the Ehrich Galleries in London to an American collector. A reference photograph of the portrait is deposited with the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. Attempts by me to ascertain the location of the records of the Ehrich Galleries and of the Ehrich-Newhouse Galleries have not been successful, and the identity of the purchaser of the portrait remains unknown.
2. The handwriting in these comments about why Eliza Winstanley gave Anna Whistler a copy of her diary is that of Anna Whistler.
3. I am deeply grateful to Michael J. Welch, my London researcher, and to Lorna E. Kinnaird, Dunedin Links Genealogy, Edinburgh, for providing the genealogical research for Eliza Winstanley's journal. The wills of Mrs. Isabella (Finlay) Clunie, Eliza's grandmother; Miss Isabel Clunie, Eliza's aunt; and Mrs. Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs, Eliza's aunt, offer much clarification of the Clunie family genealogy as well as add some details to the biographies of heirs, lawyers, friends, and executors that Eliza Winstanley heard her Aunt Charlotte Biggs mention. The wills show, for example, the interesting information that neither Mrs. Isabella (Finlay) Clunie nor Isabel Clunie left an inheritance to Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (see Image 39), then in her twenties, but Eliza (McNeill) Wellwood received £1000 from her grandmother, and £10 was allotted to her by her aunt for the purchase of a mourning ring as a memorial of that aunt.
4. The handwriting in this copy of the diary is that of Eliza Winstanley.
5. Eliza Winstanley's second husband was John Winstanley, solicitor, of Preston. Hereafter, any available detailed information will be given only for persons who have not already appeared in Anna Whistler's St. Petersburg diaries. Persons who have already appeared in those diaries will be identified again briefly, and the reader will be referred to their biography in Appendix E (if available). For John Winstanley, see Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
6. Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley's trip was quite complicated. She traveled by train from North Union Station in Preston to Edge Hill Station in Liverpool. At Liverpool, she boarded a steamer that stopped at the Isle of Man and then proceeded to Greenock. Because of the lengthy wait that would have been required to take a train from Greenock to Glasgow, she traveled there by steamboat. She then traveled by train from Glasgow to Edinburgh. Here, she traveled by stage coach to the Portobello area to the home of her aunt. Her return journey was by the Carlisle coach from Edinburgh, which made a stop at Galashiels. She ended her solo journey in Kendal and proceeded by coach to Kirkby Lonsdale with her husband and a party of friends, who had come to Kendal to meet her. See Images 61–70, and 74–75 of some of the stops along her journey.

The North Union Line was opened on 1 November 1838, cutting the travel time from Preston to Liverpool to one-and-three-quarter hours (Hunt, History of Preston, p. 198).

7. Eliza Winstanley was going to Edinburgh to visit her mother's sister, Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs (b. Whitekirk, East Lothian 24 July 1762; bap. Whitekirk, East Lothian 30 July 1762; d. Portobello, Edinburgh 9 November 1844) (Glasgow Herald, November 11, 1844). Charlotte Biggs is listed in the 1841 Scottish Census as 70 years old, of independent means, and born in the county. She was the widow of James Biggs (d. Memel 24 March 1806), a British wood merchant of Memel, East Prussia ("At Memel, James Biggs, Esq. formerly of Glasgow," "Deaths March 1806," The Scots Magazine and Literary Miscellany 68, no. 1 [1806]). Although in his obituary James Biggs is said to be "formerly of Glasgow," he seems to have been of English descent. There is no James Biggs born or baptized from 1750 to 1790 listed in the Old Parish Registers for the whole of Scotland. It was not possible to discover his age at death, or location of birth, or confirmation of marriage between him and Charlotte Biggs in Scottish archival materials. In her will, Charlotte Biggs refers to the Knox family, the "kind relatives" of her husband, James Biggs, who Eliza Winstanley mentions in this diary as hearing about from Charlotte Biggs. This may be an avenue of pursuit to learn more about James Biggs. One of the executors of Charlotte's will, proved on 24 January 1845, was Andrew Lawson Knox, her nephew; perhaps the investigation should begin with him. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
8. This is most likely Eliza (Hatton) Chapman of Preston. See Chapman in Appendix E.
9. Miss Thompson is probably the daughter of Esther (Proddow) Thompson (b. 7 September 1807; bap. Crosthwaite, Cumberland 1 October 1807; d. Preston 3rd qtr. 1868) of 8 Stanley Place in

- Preston, with whom Alicia McNeill lodged in 1861 (1861 Census for Preston, Ecclesiastical District of Christchurch, RG9/3129, fol. 109, p. 41).
10. Thomas Woodcock Winstanley was a son of John Winstanley's brother, Thomas. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
  11. Kirkside was a suburb of Liverpool.
  12. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Thomas and Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth, who were both ill. See Ainsworth and Stirling in Appendix E.
  13. Eliza Winstanley is referring to her younger sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 39.
  14. For Johnston/Johnstone, see the biography of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill in Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E and Image 22. It has not been possible to identify Isabella (Isa) Johnstone.
  15. Edge Hill was in the West Derby ward of Liverpool (J.A. Picton, Memorials of Liverpool: Historical and Topographical, Including A History of the Dock Estate, 2 vols. [London: Longmans, Green, 1873], vol. 2, p. 485). The main railway station of the Liverpool and Manchester Line occupied "a large proportion of the land east of Tunnel Road between Wavertree Road and Smithdown Lane" (Picton, vol. 2, pp. 514–515). The Liverpool and Manchester Railway (and thus the Edge Hill Station; see Image 61) was opened on 15 September 1830, and the event marred by the accidental death of one of the officials, who, being unwell, fell onto the rails, was run over by the engine, and died a few hours later (Picton, vol. 1, pp. 488–489).
  16. Ann Cunliffe (b. 10 January 1816; bap. Chorley, Lancashire 1 March 1816; d. Myerscough 25 January 1884) was the eldest daughter of John and Sarah Cunliffe. Her father was described in the 1851 Census for Liverpool as "Deputy Lieutenant and one of Her Majesty's Justices of the peace for the County of Lancaster. Landed proprietor and occupier of 200 [?] Employing 10 Ag. Labourers." She married on 29 March 1843 in Garstang, Lancashire, Edward Kingston Salisbury (b. 8 July 1802; bap. St. Mary, Manchester 28 March 1803; d. Liverpool 20 October 1845), son of Samuel and Harriet Salisbury. They had two children: Sarah Jane (Liverpool 4 October 1844 – still alive and unmarried in 1916) and Edward Kingston (Myerscough 15 November 1845 – Warren County, VA 13 December 1916). The son was born after his father's death. The widowed Ann

- (Cunliffe) Salisbury was living in her parents' household at Myerscough House, Myerscough, Lancashire, at the time of the 1851 Census for Liverpool (IGI; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1884; 1851 Census for Liverpool, HO 107/2270; The Liverpool Journal, April 1st, 1843, p. 7; The Liverpool Mail, October 25, 1845, p. 7; Transcript of Register of St. Mary's Church, Manchester, SoG; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1917; The Liverpool Mercury and Lancashire General Advertiser, October 24, 1845, p. 15).
17. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Anastasia/Anastatia Henley (28 June 1822 – 16 November 1910), who married in St. Petersburg on 16 April 1839 Andrew Handisides (25 July 1805 – 9 June 1887). They had no children and adopted Louisa, one of the daughters of Andrew's brother, Dr. James Ronaldson Handisides (c. 1796 – 11/23 December 1872) (Whishaw, History, pp. 151, 154).
  18. Miss Henley is Harriet Henley (6 August 1824 – Cheltenham 20 March 1856), sister of Anastasia/Anastatia (Henley) Handisides (Whishaw, pp. 163, 165).
  19. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Major George Washington Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21), calling him her brother with the meaning of brother-in-law, the husband of her half-sister, Anna (McNeill) Whistler (see Images 1–5).
  20. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Rev. Edward Law (see Image 253), pastor of the English Church in St. Petersburg.
  21. Portobello (see Image 68) is a town three miles east of Edinburgh city center and a favorite resort for sea-bathing (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 373; Munro and Gittings, Scotland, p. 387).
  22. Eliza Winstanley's first husband was Colonel Robert Wellwood. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
  23. The lady was Mrs. Jane Gordon of Great George Street, Liverpool, 40–44 years old and born in England or Wales, but not in Lancashire. (1841 Census for Liverpool, HO107/565/1). The 1851 Census shows that the widowed Mrs. Gordon and some of her children were by then living in Edinburgh; the 1861 Census shows her to still be living there with two relatives.
  24. Janet Gordon was the eldest of the eight children of Jane and Harry Gordon. She was born in Lancashire and was 20–24 years old in 1841 (1841 Census for Liverpool, HO107/565/1). Janet married at 2 Doune Terrace on 10 August 1848 George More,

- Esq. W.S. (“Marriages,” Caledonian Mercury (Edinburgh), August 14, 1848).
25. Mrs. Gordon’s recently deceased husband was Harry Gordon, merchant, of Liverpool, aged 50–54 in the 1841 Census, and born in Scotland (1841 Census for Liverpool, HO107/565/1). He had died in Liverpool on 19 March 1843, at his house in Great George Street (“Deaths,” The Liverpool Mercury and Lancashire General Advertiser, March 24, 1843).
  26. The Isle of Man (see Image 62) was at this time under English rule. “In about 1720 the contraband trade [here] had greatly increased” and in the years 1756–1765 had “assumed such proportions that, in the interests of the Imperial revenue, it [had become] necessary to suppress it. . . . There was some alleviation” to efforts “to extract as much revenue as possible” from this “pestilent nest of smugglers” between 1793 and 1826. Because of the resultant suppression of smuggling and “a large and increasing surplus “ of revenue, “representations [by] the Manx people to British ministers in 1837 [and 1844” resulted in “a somewhat less stringent customs tariff” (“History of the Isle of Man,” Wikipedia, accessed 15 July 2020).
  27. Greenock (see Image 63) is “a sea-port, burgh, and market-town, in the Lower ward of the county of Renfrew, . . . 22 [miles] (W.N.W.) from Glasgow, and 65 (W.) from Edinburgh . . . containing 36,936 inhabitants . . . the town is beautifully situated on the south shore of the Frith of Clyde . . . [It is] the native place of [James] Watt . . . the celebrated improver of the steam-engine” (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 522–523).
  28. The mountain of Ben Lomond (see Image 64) is located within the parish of Buchanan, in the county of Stirling. It is “the highest point of the Grampian [hills], rising 3000 feet above the sea, and commanding from its summit, which is of conical form, a prospect, on the north, of an interminable range of mountains rising in succession, one above another, and, on the south, of all the rich and varied scenery in the tract from the Western Isles to the Frith of Forth. It is one of the most striking and commanding objects in the country, and never fails to excite the admiration of every beholder” (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 157).
  29. Ben Nevis (see Image 65) is “a granite mountain rising to a height of 4409 feet to the east of Fort William in Lochaber . . . [and] the highest peak not only in Scotland but in Great Britain. In association with Carn Mòr Dearg to the northeast, it forms a vast

- northwestern-facing horseshoe. It is a challenging venue for ice and snow climbing (Munro and Gittings, Scotland, p. 65).
30. Glasgow (see Image 66) is “a city, the seat of a university and a sea-port, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the Lower ward of the county of Lanark, and situated ... 23 miles (E. by S.) from Greenock, ... 43 (W. by S.) from Edinburgh...; containing 120,183 and, with the suburbs of Barony and Gorbals, 274,533 inhabitants.” “The city is built on the north bank of the river Clyde” (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 478, 483).
  31. Mr. Maclean may have been a brother to Alicia McNeill’s friend, Miss Elizabeth Maclean, of Bath (see the entry for St Petersburg. 1848. September, NYPL: AWPB, Part II, and accompanying Note 1153).
  32. “The Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway ... was commenced in October, 1838, and opened on the 21st of February, 1842. It is forty-six miles in length” (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 489). The Glasgow and Edinburgh Station is located at George-square in Glasgow (Lewis, p. 379).
  33. “Falkirk [is] a burgh, market-town, and parish in the county of Stirling ... containing 15,621 inhabitants ... 24 [miles] (W. by N.) from Edinburgh ... The town is situated on the road from Linlithgow to Glasgow, and consists of one principal street, nearly a mile in length, and of several smaller streets (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 412–413). Here, Eliza Winstanley and Isabella (Isa) Johnstone parted company.
  34. “Edinburgh, a city, the seat of a university, and the metropolis of the kingdom of Scotland, [is] situated ... 42 [miles] (E. by N.) from Glasgow, 92 1/2 (N. by W.) from Carlisle, ... containing 56,330, and including the suburban parishes of St. Cuthbert and Canongate, 138,182 inhabitants.” The terminus of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway was located at the Haymarket (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 361, 379).
  35. Princes Street (see Image 67), in the New Town, is about three-quarters of a mile in length. On the north side are buildings of various types. As there are almost no buildings on the south side, “a magnificent terrace of fine houses with pleasure-grounds in front” affords panoramic views of the valley and beyond the great rock on which Edinburgh Castle stands and the Old Town (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 372; Tourists’ Handy Guide to Scotland [Edinburgh: William Patterson; London: Simpkin Marshall, 1872], p. 2).

36. The coach for Carlisle stopped in Kendal (see Images 69, 73), the final destination in the portion of her diary that she copied out for Anna Whistler.
37. “The Land o’ Cakes” refers to Scottish oatcakes. Robert Fergusson (1750–1774) used the expression in his poem “The King’s Birthday in Edinburgh”: “Oh, soldiers! For your ain dear sakes / For Scotland’s, alias, Land o’Cakes.” Robert Burns (1759–1796) used the expression in his poem “On the Late Captain Grose’s Peregrinations Thro’ Scotland”: “Hear, Land o’Cakes and brither Scots” (Maurice Lindsay, The Burns Encyclopedia [London: Robert Hale, 1995], p. 209).
38. Eliza Winstanley’s aunt, Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs, lived on West Brighton Crescent, Parish of Duddington, Burgh of Portobello (1841 Scottish Census, 684/11/77). Her will, drawn up on 26 November 1844, defines the area of land belonging to her, which she seems to have acquired on 18 June 1828.
39. Mrs. Biggs’s servant was Catherine Peterkin (c. 1801 – Macduff 26 May 1855). If she was still in Mrs. Biggs’s employ at the time of the latter’s death, she was to receive ten pounds, “a suit of mournings becoming her station,” and all of Mrs. Biggs’s printed cotton gowns. As she is listed in the 1841 Scottish Census as 40 years old, she was born c. 1801. She died on 26 May 1858, age 57, single, at Gellymill Street in Macduff (Statutory Deaths 1858 in the Burgh of Banff, County of Banff, 147/01/0059, p. 20).
Civil registration of births, deaths, and marriages in Scotland commenced in 1855.
40. Meg Merrilies (see Image 71) is the old gypsy woman in Sir Walter Scott’s novel Guy Mannering (1815). She succeeds in thwarting a plot to kidnap Harry Bertram, to whom she was once nurse, but dies in the attempt. She is also the subject of a song by Keats: “Old Meg she was a Gipsej,” which he copied into a letter to his sister, Fanny, written on 3 July 1818, in Auchencairn, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland, where he was on a walking tour with Charles Armitage Brown (1787–1842). The poem was first published in November 1838 (Stillinger, Keats Complete Poems, pp. 201–202; 446–447; John Barnard, ed., John Keats Selected Poems [Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin, 2007], pp. 128–129, 253).
41. It has not been possible to find any information about a Mrs. Ansel/ Ansell/ Ansell. Sources consulted were the Old Parish Registers of Baptisms, Old Parish Registers of Deaths, Old Parish Registers of Marriage Banns, the Statutory Records of Deaths, and the 1841 Scottish Census.

42. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Robert Hunter, Esq., of Wharton Place, Edinburgh, who, in the 1812 will of Mrs. Isabella (Finlay) Clunie is identified as “late” in the accountants’ office of the Bank of Scotland.
43. Mrs. Biggs had the right to enjoy the liferent of £200 by the settlement of the late Robert Hunter, Esq., of Wharton Place, Edinburgh, but was directed to leave that sum to her sister, Mrs. Marion Ann Clunie or Wilkins (b. 9 August 1771; bap. 20 August 1771), widow of William Wilkins, Esq., late of Leyland, Lancashire, in liferent and to her children in fee. In her will, she directed that, although the said sum was paid to her under deduction of a legacy duty and expenses, she wished that the entire sum of two hundred pounds should at her death be appropriated for behoof of her said sister and her children. In the will of Isabella Clunie, William Wilkins is identified as “Inspector of Taxes” for Yorkshire.
44. Isabella Clunie, sister of Alicia (Clunie) McNeill, Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs, and Marion Anne (Clunie) Wilkin, mentioned in her will of 15 November 1819, proved on 30 April 1824, that her sister, Margaret, was the wife of John Pringle, a naval surgeon, of Portobello. It may be he who was the executor of Mr. Robert Hunter’s will.
45. Underfield was pair of buildings in the South Lakeland District, in the civil parish of Coulton, Lancashire. Originally one house built in 1649, it consisted at this time of two houses, with extensions having been added to it in about 1800, and with outbuildings between (National Heritage List for England, Historic England website, accessed 12 January 2021, <https://historicengland.org.uk/listing/the-list/list-entry/1266432>). “The early nineteenth century saw the county gain fame as the Lake Poets and other artists of the Romantic movement, such as William Wordsworth and Samuel Taylor Coleridge, lived among, and were inspired by, the lakes and mountains of the region” (“About Cumbria,” Co-Curate database, Newcastle University, accessed 12 January 2021, <https://co-curate.ncl.ac.uk/cumbria/>). John Winstanley and the Ainsworths were making their way to Kendal to meet Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley.

46. Robert Scott Moncrieff (b. Edinburgh 7 April 1828; bap. Edinburgh 29 April 1829; d. Edinburgh 25 June 1906; see Image 72) was the son of Robert Scott Moncrieff ( 1 December 1793 – 18 June 1869), Advocate, and Susanna (Pringle) Moncrieff (4 October 1796 – 16 May 1840). He lived at No. 17 Leopold Place, according to the 1841 Scottish Census. He is also referred to in the diary as Bob Scott and as Mr. Scott. He became an East India Merchant. He married Katharine MacKinness (Catherine Mary MacKinness). His death on 25 June 1906 occurred at 7:30 AM at 43 Macdale Crescent, Edinburgh, and his age was given as 80 years old (Baptisms: 1829/685–1/560, p. 71 of 509, Edinburgh, OPRS [mis-indexed: should be 1828]).
47. Anna Mary/Maria Boswell was born Anna Mary Wellwood and baptized on 8 March 1798 at Warkworth, Northumberland (IGI). Her parents were Andrew Moffat Wellwood (b. Dunfermline, Fife c. 1769) and Maria (Taylor) Wellwood, who were married on 12 March 1794 in Warkworth, Northumberland (IGI; death entry for Anna Mary Clarke, Statutory Records of Deaths, 685/050145). Her first husband was John James Boswell, a surgeon, whom she married on 22 March 1825 in Edinburgh (IGI). They had four children, all born in Edinburgh: Robert (b. 16 May 1826); Sibella (bap. 27 July 1833); John James (bap. 23 February 1835); Susan Wellwood (bap. 28 September 1839). John James Boswell died circa 1843 (Index to Scottish Wills and Inventories). Anna Boswell married in 1848, as her second husband, Ralph Clarke, a naval officer (IGI). She died on 9 February 1872 at the age of 74 in the District of Newington, City of Edinburgh (Death entry for Anna Mary Clarke, Statutory Records of Deaths, 685/050145).
48. Eliza Winstanley's mother was Alice (Clunie) McNeill (Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
49. This was probably Eliza Winstanley's maternal grandmother, Isabella (Finlay) Clunie (Scott, p. 423). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
50. "Uncle James" was probably her mother's brother, James Clunie (b. 14 March 1769) (Scott, p. 423), in 1819 "Collector of the Customs" in Berwick, according to the will of Mrs. Isabella Clunie.
51. One's "first sark" (shirt) would be so tattered as to be unrecognizable after many years. The implication is that Eliza Winstanley was so changed in appearance since the years when

- she was married to Colonel Robert Wellwood (d. 1820), that no one in Edinburgh would recognize her.
52. The family of William Millar lived in Fisherrow on the west side of the town of Musselburgh, Midlothian, and about 2–3 miles east along the coast of the Firth of Forth from Portobello. William Millar (d. c. 1846) was a tanner and merchant (1841 Scottish Census for Inveresk with Musselburgh, Midlothian). His wife, Agnes (c. 1779 – 13 April 1859) was born Pringle and may thus have been related to the Pringle relatives of Charlotte Biggs. They were married on 18 June 1813 at Inveresk with Musselburgh, Midlothian (Banns of Marriage: 1813/719/60, p. 429 of 453, Haddington, OPRS). Their children, all born in Inveresk with Musselburgh, were Isabella (bap. 9 May 1814), James (bap. 21 December 1815), Thomas (bap. 9 August 1817), and Agnes Gilmour (bap. 27 March 1821) (1841 Scottish Census for Inveresk with Musselburgh, Midlothian).
  53. See previous Note.
  54. Sibella Boswell (bap. Edinburgh 27 July 1833 – Newington, Edinburgh 21 December 1898) later married James Lawson Hill, writer to the Signet. At her death, she was 66 years old (Statutory Records of Deaths in the District of Newington, City of Edinburgh: 685/05 1275).
  55. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Magdalen (Main) Robertson (bap. Bathgate 21 October 1798), whose age in the 1841 Census for the Parish of St. Cuthbert's is given as 35 (1841 Census 85/02143/02013). By the time of this census, she and her husband, Donald Robertson, had three children: Robert (b. Edinburgh 1 July 1837), Thomas (bap. Edinburgh 4 January 1839) and Andrew (b. Edinburgh 21 August 1840). In the 1841 Census for New Grey Friars, these three Robertson children are listed as living together with an Ann Sutherland, aged 28, identified as "servant for the Robertsons," in the household of Margaret Moon, aged 32, identified as "widow cleans Heriot school." Their ages are given as Robert (4), Thomas (2), and Andrew (9 months) (1841 Census 685/01059/01015). By the 1851 Census, Magdalen and Donald Robertson also had three daughters: Margaret (bap. Edinburgh 22 March 1842), Francis [sic] (b. Edinburgh 6 May 1844), and Anne (bap. Edinburgh 23 November 1846). In the 1851 Census for the Parish of Burntisland, County of Fife, Magdalen Robertson is listed as "innkeeper's widow," aged 50, born in Fife, Dunfermline, who is a lodger in the lodginghouse kept by Fanny McFarline. Lodging

- there with their mother are three of her children: Thomas (13), Margaret (9), and Fanny (7). No burial entry was located for Magdalen Robertson from 1846 to 1854; no death certificate was located for Magdalen Robertson from 1855 to 1858 (Banns: 1836/685–1/650, Edinburgh; Baptisms: 1840/685–1/580, Edinburgh; Baptisms: 1846/685–1/590, p. 245 of 446, Edinburgh, OPRS); and there does not seem to be a will or administration for Magdalen Robertson. When Eliza Winstanley visited her in 1843, the hotel was prospering.
56. Magdalen Main's mother, former nanny to Eliza Winstanley, was Elizabeth Easton (Eastoun) Main (b. and bap. Bathgate 30 December 1764), daughter of Robert Easton and Agnes (Anderson) Easton. She married on 30 April 1785 in Bathgate Alexander Main. No burial entry has been found for her in the Old Parish Registers of Burials in Scotland (OPRS of Marriage Banns, OPRS of Baptisms, OPRS of Burials).
  57. Magdalen (Main) Robertson's husband was Donald Robertson (bap. Blair Atholl 5 September 1795 – Edinburgh 31 March 1858), son of Donald Robertson and Marion (Stewart) Robertson. It is not possible to establish the date of their marriage. They lived at 1 W. Register St., St. Cuthberts, Edinburgh, where Donald was tavern keeper. His age is given in the 1841 Census as 45 (1841 Census for Edinburgh 685–2/143/13). The Edinburgh Gazette contains some entries about him in connection with the sequestration of his estate in 1847. He is described therein as “Hotel Keeper, West Register Street, Edinburgh.” His hotel was the “Guildford Arms Hotel, (Robertsons). West Register Street, Edinburgh.” It is given as the place where his creditors met. A William Robertson, a brewer of Summerhall, Edinburgh, was elected trustee of Donald Robertson's estate in 1847 and sold the hotel in 1849 (The Scotsman (Edinburgh), Wednesday, March 21, 1849). There does not seem to be a will or administration for him. He was buried at St. Cuthbert's Burying Ground.
  58. The city of Edinburgh was called “Auld Reekie” (“Old Smoky”) because of the pall of smoke that hung over it.
  59. Galashiels (see Image 74) is “a manufacturing town, burgh of Barony, and parish, partly in the district of Melrose, county of Roxburgh, and partly in the county of Selkirk, ... 32 [miles] (S.S.E.) from Edinburgh; containing 2140 inhabitants, exclusively of 2396 in the parish of Melrose, into which the town extends ... The principal trade carried on here, and to which the town owes its importance, is the woollen manufacture, which has been gradually brought to a very high state of perfection” (Lewis, Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 458–459).

60. Longham is a tiny village in Norfolk, containing the medieval church of St. Andrew and St. Peter. “Longtown is a small and neat market town and township, in the parish of Arthuret ... about 9 [miles] N. by W. from Carlisle ... and 82 S. from Edinburgh; pleasantly situated on the mail road between the last named city and Carlisle; and on the south bank of the river Eske ... The town is respectable in appearance, the streets being spacious, and the houses neatly built. Many of the lower classes are employed in weaving for the manufacturers of Carlisle.” In 1831, the township of Longtown had 2,049 inhabitants (Pigot and Co.’s National Commercial Directory for 1834; [of] Chester, Cumberland, Derbyshire, Durham, Lancaster, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Rutlandshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Westmoreland, Worcestershire, Yorkshire (London and Manchester: Pigot, [1834]), p. 104 (hereafter, Pigot’s Directory of Chester ... Yorkshire and the year).
61. “Netherby township, about two miles from Longtown, contains Netherby Hall [see Image 75], the elegant mansion of Sir J.R.G. Graham, Bart. M.P. and is situated on an eminence commanding an extensive prospect over a flat but well cultivated country, interestingly spotted with pleasant hamlets and neat cottages, which, being all whitened, have a remarkable and picturesque effect upon the verdant landscape. – The township is in the same parish as Longtown, and contained [in 1851, 358] inhabitants” (Pigot’s Directory of Chester ... Yorkshire 1831 and 1855, p. 104).
62. Samuel Morton Lennox was a comedian of the Queen’s Theatre in Manchester. Elizabeth Angel’s comments suggest a possible difficult romantic involvement with him. He married on 3 November 1844 at the Collegiate Church, Manchester, a Miss Craven, also of the Queen’s Theatre, Manchester (Liverpool Mail, November 9, 1844; Liverpool Standard and General Commercial Advertiser, November 12, 1844). See the biography of Elizabeth Angel in Appendix E (hereafter, Angel).
63. Elizabeth Angel was a young actress, the protégée of Edward William Elton (August 1794 – d. in the wreck of the Pegasus off the Holy Island of Lindisfarne 20 July 1843; see Image 76), a well-known London actor of the Drury Lane Theatre. When Eliza Winstanley met her in the coach, Angel had just resigned from the Theatre Royal company in Manchester to take up residence with the Adelphi Theatre company in Edinburgh. She was extremely depressed over her personal life and, it would seem, romantic involvement with Samuel Morton Lennox in Manchester. See previous Note and Angel in Appendix E.

64. Kendal (see Image 69) is the largest “town (parish), South Lakeland district, administrative county of Cumbria, historic county of Westmorland, northwest England. ... The outline of a Roman fort is traceable...” It had a weekly market starting in the late twelfth century and fairs as of the early fourteenth century. The cloth called “Kendal green,” from which foresters’ clothing was made, was manufactured here” (Encyclopedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Kendal, England, United Kingdom,” accessed 5 October 2021, <https://www.britannica.com/place/Kendal-England>).
65. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland (see Image 70), where her friends, Richard and Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard, lived. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
66. The Carlisle coach stopped at the Inn in Kendal (see Image 69).
67. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Richard Stuart Picard (bap. 16 January 1807 – 26 November 1887) and Margaret (Winstanley) Ware (b. 12 April 1801; bap. 17 April 1801; d. Leyburn, York 16 April 1877), his sister-in-law (IGI). A Jane Picard (c. 1809 – 28 November 1881), aged 30, is listed in the household of Christopher Picard of Lake Bank, Claife, Hawkeshead, Lancashire, in the 1841 Census, without further identification is the sister of Christopher (1841 Census HO107/-529/6). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
68. For Margaret (Winstanley) Ware; her mother, Betty (Ryder) Winstanley; and her deceased husband, William Ware, see Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
69. Eliza Winstanley is referring to Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard, wife of Richard Stuart Picard; Jane and Isabella Simpson, who lived with them; and John Richard Picard, son of Eliza (Winstanley) and Richard Stuart Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
70. Mrs. Picard Senior was Jenny Picard (c. 1785 – Kirkby Lonsdale 6 July 1849), wife of Thomas Tunstall Picard (buried at Kirkby Lonsdale 31 August 1826). They were the parents of Christopher (bap. Leck 17 December 1805), Richard Stuart (bap. 16 January 1807 – 26 November 1887), and Thomas (bap. 19 April 1808) (IGI). In the 1841 Census, Jenny Picard and her son Thomas, manufacturer, are listed in the household of Christopher Picard of Lake Bank, Claife, Hawkeshead, Lancashire (1841 Census HO107/-529/6).

APPENDIX E: BIOGRAPHIES

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Ainsworth and Stirling .....	1083
Angel .....	1086
Benson .....	1090
Bliss .....	1112
Bobrinskii .....	1114
Bodisco and Williams .....	1118
Brennan, Bergin, Keefe .....	1129
Buttats .....	1144
Chapman .....	1150
Cruft and Fitch .....	1155
Destrem .....	1159
Eastwick .....	1162
Ellerby .....	1180
Fairbanks .....	1188
Gibson .....	1194
Hall .....	1196
Harrison .....	1201
Hedenschoug .....	1217
Hirst .....	1222
Kleinmikel' .....	1229
Klovov .....	1235
Koritskii .....	1239
Kraft .....	1267
Law .....	1272
Leon .....	1277

Maingay .....	1288
Mauran .....	1306
Maxwell .....	1308
Maynard .....	1315
Mel'nikov .....	1341
Mehville .....	1348
Morgan and Parland .....	1353
Poizat .....	1357
Robertson .....	1362
Rogers .....	1365
Ropes, Gellibrand, Prince, Hall .....	1371
Sandland .....	1396
Shaw and Wardrop .....	1401
Elijah Smith .....	1405
Stevenson and Smith .....	1411
Stoeckl, Howard, Swift, Ironside .....	1416
Stroganov, Vasil'chikov, Kushelev .....	1425
Thayer and Parker .....	1438
Whistler, Swift, Kingsley, McNeill, Cammann, Rodewald, Flagg, Boardman, Gibbs, Chen, Palmer, Easterbrook, Lorillard, Dunscombe, Vallance, Boblen, Halbach, Fairfax .....	1444
Winans .....	1488
Winstanley, McNeill, Wellwood, Picard, Ware, Hull, Simpson, Clunie, Wilkin, Biggs, Cragg .....	1508
Wood .....	1528

AINSWORTH AND STIRLING

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ainsworth are spoken of in the diaries as nephew and niece to John and Eliza (McNeill) Winstanley (see Image 40) by virtue of the fact that Thomas Ainsworth's mother and John Winstanley's first wife were Hatton sisters (of whom there were seven). Thomas Ainsworth (bap. Preston 29 March 1804 – 28 June 1881) was the son of David (c. 1773 – 13 May 1819) and Alice (Hatton) (c. 1776 – 1 December 1827) Ainsworth.<sup>1</sup> They made their home in Preston. David Ainsworth and his younger brother, Thomas, were partners in the cotton-spinning business.<sup>2</sup> The death of David Ainsworth while his son Thomas was still at school precluded Thomas's going to college, while his extreme youth made it impossible for him to "take his father's place in the business partnership," and resulted in the closing of the business.<sup>3</sup> On the death of his mother and shortly thereafter of one of his three sisters (Charlotte [c. 1809 – 18 July 1828]), all younger than himself, Thomas Ainsworth left Preston "with his two remaining sisters" and "went to live at Summer Hill ... in North Lancashire."<sup>4</sup> He was already engaged in flax spinning in this area and became very successful.<sup>5</sup> In his religion, he was a staunch Unitarian.<sup>6</sup> On 24 May 1836, he married Mary Laurie Stirling (bap. 6 April 1808 – 28 February 1867), eldest daughter of the Rev. John Stirling, D.D., of Craigie, Ayrshire, and of Mary (Macquhae) Stirling.<sup>7</sup> Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth's father had been moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.<sup>8</sup> "About the time of his marriage, [Thomas] Ainsworth purchased the mills at Cleator, in Cumberland."<sup>9</sup> He also bought "the property at The Flosch."<sup>10</sup> In addition to flax spinning, he was a "pioneer in the commercial development of West Cumberland ... one of the first to commence iron-mining ... in that district ... also a large farmer."<sup>11</sup> He and his wife were living at the Flosch during the period covered by the diaries, and all of their children were born there.<sup>12</sup> At the time Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) speaks of meeting Mrs. Thomas Ainsworth, the Ainsworths had two sons, David (1842 – 21 March 1906) and John Stirling (later Sir) (30 January 1844 – 24 May 1923)<sup>13</sup> and had lost a son named Thomas Hatton (d. 1847).<sup>14</sup> Their fourth son, William Macquhae (20 December 1848 –

26/27 May 1891), was born just after the period covered by the diaries.<sup>15</sup> Thomas Ainsworth was one of the executors of John Winstanley's will.

Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth had seven sisters: Isabella (bap. 8 October 1809), Jane Erskine (bap. 12 February 1811), Elisabeth (bap. 18 December 1812), Lydia Ainsworth (bap. 18 December 1814), Rose-Sophia (bap. 22 September 1818), Laura Margaret (bap. 1 October 1822), and Annabella Fullerton (bap. 24 June 1824), as well as three brothers: William (bap. 30 August 1816), John (bap. 13 July 1820), and James (bap. 8 October 1827), all with the same parents and baptized in the same place as she: Craigie by Kilmarnock, Ayrshire.<sup>16</sup> At the time of Anna Whistler's meeting with her, she had lost two sisters: Laura Margaret and Annabella Fullerton.<sup>17</sup>

For a tribute to Thomas and Mary Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth and further details of their lives, see Ainsworth, Memorial, pp. x–xxiv.

NOTES

1. Ainsworth, Memorial, pp. x, xii, xxii; Anthony Hewitson, History (from A.D. 705 to 1883) of Preston, in the County of Lancaster (Preston, UK: Chronicle Office, 1883), p. 516.
2. Ainsworth, Memorial, p. ix.
3. Ainsworth, p. xi.
4. Ainsworth, pp. xi, xii; Hewitson, History of Preston, p. 516.
5. Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xii.
6. Ainsworth, p. xii.
7. IGI; Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xii gives the year only and states it to be 1837.
8. Ainsworth, pp. xii–xiii.
9. Ainsworth, p. xiii.
10. Ainsworth, p. xiii.
11. Ainsworth, p. xvii.
12. Ainsworth, p. xiii.
13. Ainsworth, p. xxii; IGI; Michael Stenton and Stephen Lees, comps., Who's Who of British Members of Parliament, vol. 2: 1886–1918 (Hassocks, UK: Harvester Press; Atlantic Highlands, NJ: Humanities Press, 1978), pp. 3–4.

14. The death of Thomas Hatton Ainsworth was registered in the Whitehaven District in the March quarter of 1847.
15. Ainsworth, Memorial, p. xii.
16. OPRS.
17. As the 1846 will of Rev. John Stirling lists all of his children except for these daughters, it seems plausible that they are the two who had died by July 1847, when Anna Whistler met Annie Laurie (Stirling) Ainsworth (Will of John Stirling, Ayr Sheriff Court Inventories 1846, SC/44/14).

ANGEL

It is difficult to trace Miss Angel before December 1842 and after September 1843. As recorded in Eliza Winstanley’s diary (Appendix D), she wrote her name in Eliza Winstanley’s pocketbook as “Elizth Angel,” but is called in a theater bill announcement, it would therefore seem erroneously, “Miss M. Angel.”<sup>1</sup> “Elizabeth Angel” may, moreover, have been her stage name. There is thus little to anchor her with and help find her dates; we can nevertheless present a biography of her for this short period based chiefly on non-genealogical sources.<sup>2</sup>

A “Miss Angel” appeared in productions at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, from December 1842 to 9 June 1843 before transferring to the Adelphi Theatre, Edinburgh.<sup>3</sup> Her first appearance there was on 28 June 1843, when she was referred to in a billing as “Miss M. Angel.”<sup>4</sup> Nothing has been found to indicate how long she stayed in Edinburgh, but a “Miss Angell, late of the Theatre Royal, Manchester,” made her first appearance in Birmingham in a production on 25 September 1843.<sup>5</sup> On 20 February 1845, a “Miss Angel” performed at the Theatre Royal in Bath.<sup>6</sup>

At the Theatre Royal, Manchester, in January 1843, Miss Angel appeared as Cora in Pizarro.<sup>7</sup> A benefit in her honor, just before her departure from Manchester, was performed on 30 May 1843: she played the role of Mariana in The Wife: A Tale of Mantua, by Sheridan Knowles (1784–1862).<sup>8</sup> On Wednesday, 7 June 1843, she was to appear in Knowles’s The Secretary as Lady Laura Gaveston, but she was indisposed.<sup>9</sup> On 28 June 1843, “Miss M. Angel” made her first appearance at the Adelphi Theatre, Edinburgh, as Desdemona in Othello.<sup>10</sup> On 25 September 1843, she made her first appearance as Juliet in Romeo and Juliet.<sup>11</sup> She may also be the “Miss Angel” who performed at the Theatre Royal, Bath, on 20 February 1845, in The Dream at Sea and as “Jane Shore” in The Tragedy of Jane Shore; or, The Royal Favourite.<sup>12</sup>

Miss Angel’s tutor, “to whom she was apprenticed,” was Edward William Elton (London August 1794 – Lindisfarne 20 July 1843; see Image 76), “the well-known actor of the Theatres Royal Drury-lane and Covent-garden.”<sup>13</sup> She lost her tutor when Mr. Elton died in the fatal wreck of the steamer Pegasus off the Holy Island of Lindisfarne on 20

July 1843.<sup>14</sup> He left seven motherless children, who became orphans, “the youngest not eight years of age.”<sup>15</sup> A subscription in aid of them, which was enthusiastically greeted by the public, was announced in the Morning Post (London) on 7 August 1843.<sup>16</sup>

Assessment of Miss Angel as an actress varied according to people’s positions as theater reviewers, theater managers, and theater audiences. In December 1842, she was described after her first performance in Manchester, when she played Desdemona, as someone who would “acquire a position of no little eminence in the company,” if she “continue[d] to please as in this her first effort.”<sup>17</sup> Her appearance and presentation were described in the same review as follows:

She has a clear, transparent face, through which there is seen a mind of no ordinary cast, whilst her manner is at once easy and graceful, winning upon her audience by its very simplicity. We were glad to find so little stage trick about her (for a professed pupil), and if she would but discard the false mode of pronouncing some of her words (a mode which we know to be very fashionable among many of our leading actors...), we should be mightily pleased with her, – it was indeed the only little blemish we could discover. Presuming her to be but recently acquainted with the stage, her Desdemona was a beautiful performance.<sup>18</sup>

When her benefit was announced, it was stated that “No member of the corps dramatique of our Theatre Royal is more deserving of the public than Miss Angell ... Independently of her great accomplishments as an actress, her ladylike demeanour in social life, and her many excellent qualities of heart and mind, entitle her to general support.”<sup>19</sup> “Her style is pure, her manners graceful, and in the lighter shades of tragic character, or in the refinement of high comedy, we know few actresses of the present day who can compete with her. It will be long, we fear, before we have an actress equal to her in merit.”<sup>20</sup> It was felt by then that “the higher range of tragedy” was not her forté, that while she was “full of exquisite grace and fine feeling – the very perfection of gentleness – she [was] deficient in the grandeur of tragic passion, more from physical weakness than mental appreciation.” A reviewer’s appreciation of her talent caused him to urge the theater manager, Mr. Roxby, to exhibit “a careful judgement in filling the vacancy” caused by her departure from the company.<sup>21</sup>

In Edinburgh, to which she had gone with Edward Elton, the theater columnist pointed out that her debut there was considered “far from successful.” He felt that the “indiscriminate applause” and “injudicious praise . . . lavished upon her in Manchester” had been “fatal to [her] rising talent” and had caused her to wrongly estimate her “present status” as a actress.<sup>22</sup>

When Eliza Winstanley met her in the coach, Elizabeth Angel had possibly already moved to Edinburgh, but she had not yet made her debut there. She was also deeply distressed at that point by her relationship with Samuel Lennox, who remained behind in Manchester as a comedian at the Queen’s Theatre, but we do not know whether he had already become involved with the Miss Craven whom he married some eighteen months later. Miss Angel mysteriously alluded to her circumstances and seemed not to care whether she lived or died. This is the background for the concern both Eliza Winstanley and the “old Gentleman” felt for her.

NOTES

1. The Scotsman (Edinburgh), June 23, 1843.
2. I am deeply grateful to Michael Welch, London, for finding the newspaper articles and to Christine Manzer, Vancouver, BC, for finding the books and internet references.
3. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, December 17 and December 31, 1842, January 14, May 27, June 3, and June 10, 1843; Manchester Times, May 27 and June 10, 1843; Manchester and Salford Advertiser, June 24, 1843.
4. The Scotsman (Edinburgh), June 28, 1843.
5. Aris’s Birmingham Gazette, September 25, 1843.
6. Bath Chronicle and Weekly Gazette, February 20, 1845.
7. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, January 14, 1843.
8. Manchester Times, May 27, 1843.

9. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, June 3 and June 10, 1843.
10. The Scotsman (Edinburgh), June 28, 1843.
11. Aris's Birmingham Gazette, September 25, 1843.
12. Bath Chronicle and Weekly Gazette, February 20, 1845.
13. Manchester and Salford Advertiser, June 8, 1843; Buxton Herald, July 27, 1843.
14. For his career, with its tragic end, see Thomas Marshall, Lives of the Most Celebrated Actors and Actresses (London: E. Appleby [1848?]), pp. 153–154; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Elton, Edward William”; J. Murray, “The Wreck of the Steamship Pegasus,” Gregor MacGregor’s website, accessed 27 November 2020 http://www.gregormacgregor.com/Tod&Macgregor/pegasus\_story.htm
15. Buxton Herald, July 27, 1843.
16. Morning Post (London), August 7, 1843. “The chair at a preliminary meeting in London for the purpose was taken by Charles Dickens [1812–1870]” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Elton, Edward William”).
17. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, December 31, 1842.
18. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, December 31, 1842.
19. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, May 27, 1843.
20. Manchester Times, May 27, 1843.
21. Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, June 10, 1843.
22. All quotations in this paragraph are taken from the Manchester and Salford Advertiser, July 8, 1843. It should be pointed out that Angel had already been assessed while she was with the Theatre Royal there as being too weak physically to play such a heavy dramatic role as that of Desdemona.

BENSON<sup>7</sup>

The misses Benson – Sarah (b. 27 March 1805; bap. St. Peter’s Monkwearmouth, Durham 24 April 1805; d. Hartlepool, County Durham 1 April 1866; buried Mere Knolls Cemetery, Sunderland 3 April 1866)<sup>2</sup> and Elizabeth (b. 3 March 1804; bap. St. Peter’s, Monkwearmouth, Durham 24 April 1805; d. Kingston-upon-Hull, Yorkshire 18 June 1887; buried Mere Knolls Cemetery, Sunderland, County Durham 21 June 1887)<sup>3</sup> – ran a boarding house on the English Embankment a few doors down from Ritter’s house, where the Whistlers and Ropeses lived.<sup>4</sup> They were the daughters of George Benson (b. Monkwearmouth, Durham 10 November 1777; d. November or December 1819; buried Monkwearmouth, Durham 2 December 1819) and Barbara (Finley) Benson (b. c. 1783; d. February 1851; buried Monkwearmouth Shore 21 February 1851), who were married by license on 7 June 1802 in St. Peter’s Church, Monkwearmouth, County Durham.<sup>5</sup>

The reason they had chosen to come to St. Petersburg may possibly be that their first cousin, Lucy Sherrard Finley (Sunderland, Durham 15 April 1817 – London 13 November 1893; see Image 340) had chosen to go there. Lucy Finley was the fourth child and eldest daughter of the ten children of Mary Ann (York) Finley (b. Southwark, London 1793; bap. St. Saviour’s, Southwark, May 1793; d. New South Wales 1877; buried Dubbo Cemetery, New South Wales) and Matthew Smith Finley (Monkwearmouth, County Durham 12 December 1778 – Tower Hamlets, London 24 February 1847), who were married on 25 April 1810 at St. Dunstan’s in the East near London Bridge. Required by circumstances to earn her own living, Lucy Finley went to St. Petersburg in about 1840, when she was about twenty-three years old. There, she was employed for eight years as governess to Sofia Mikhailovna Muravieva (1833–1880)<sup>6</sup> the only daughter of the eminent family of Count Mikhail Nikolaevich Muraviev-Vilenskii (1796–1866; see Image 342).<sup>7</sup> Her success may have encouraged Sarah and Elizabeth Benson to also venture out of England. One must remember, however, that they were about a dozen years older than she and must have already been engaged in a profession in England, which it has so far not been possible to establish. When her duties permitted, Lucy Finley spent time with her two cousins at their boarding house, a traditional English governess whose bad teeth the American dentist Edward Maynard, a boarder (see Image 329), operated on without remuneration; and the maker of beautiful embroidered gifts that she gave for Christmas at her cousins' celebrations.

The Benson sisters came to St. Petersburg in about 1841 and in 1855, during the Crimean War (1853–1856), returned to England. On 19 March 1855, Elizabeth Benson “presented a petition for a licence” to run a boarding house, which was granted.<sup>8</sup> It was called the Mansfield Hotel and was located at 4 Mansfield Street, Portland Place.<sup>9</sup> On 9 April 1855, Miss Benson announced that “she has taken the above-named Hotel, and hopes to make it as comfortable and convenient to her Guests, as that she has just left in the capital of Russia. N.B. French and German languages spoken.”<sup>10</sup> On 5 January 1856, a Petition in Bankruptcy was filed against “Elizabeth Benson and Sarah Benson ... Spinsters and Copartners, Hotel and Boarding-house Keepers.”<sup>11</sup>

They were treated with great sympathy by the Bankruptcy Court in its proceedings of 26 March 1856, where it was explained that they were “single ladies [who] had for twelve years carried on business at St. Petersburg, keeping a boarding establishment in that city, but which they had been compelled to give up at the commencement of the war. On their return to England they invested the whole of their capital, about 1500l., in a similar establishment in Mansfield-street, Portland-place, but which proved a failure ... the official assignee said he had no doubt that the bankruptcy had arisen through the bankrupts believing that they would have equal success in London as in St. Petersburg ... [it was] also thought it was a case in which the Court might grant a first-class certificate with the full approbation of the creditors. His honour had much satisfaction in granting a certificate of the first class,”<sup>12</sup> which was the least severe of bankruptcy laws.<sup>13</sup> On 19 December 1856, “one of Her Majesty’s Commissioners was to sit ... at the Court of Bankruptcy ... in order to make a Second Dividend,” which means that the government would make a second payment to the debtors in England to whom the Benson sisters were liable.<sup>14</sup> In the meantime, they had applied for passports on 12 May 1856<sup>15</sup> and had returned to Russia.<sup>16</sup>

Notices in British newspapers confirm that their boarding house was in operation in 1852, 1853, 1854, part of 1855, part of 1856, 1857, 1864, 1867, 1868, and 1869.<sup>17</sup> Murray's Handbook which appeared in a completely new edition in 1865, having totally abandoned its 1849 edition, also listed it, with high praise.<sup>18</sup> Sarah Benson died on 1 April 1866 in Hartlepool, County Durham, it would seem in the home of her sister Barbara (Benson) Hunter, on Regent Street.<sup>19</sup> Elizabeth Benson closed the boarding house, located in these years at 78 English Embankment,<sup>20</sup> which she had been operating with the help of her nieces, “and sold off her furniture in June [1869], and together with her nieces, left for England shortly afterwards.”<sup>21</sup>

No will has been found for Sarah Benson. She has not been found in any English census, so it seems she was in Russia on the dates of all the censuses during her lifetime (1841, 1851, and 1861). Elizabeth Benson appears in the English censuses of 1871 and 1881. She signed a will dated 3 January 1881 in Kingston-upon-Hull and two codicils dated 14 February 1882. She died on 18 June 1887. Her personal estate, after deduction of expenses, amounted to around £1450. She left, all to relatives, a considerable number of art objects and household items representing substantial wealth. For example, to “Lucy Sherrard [Finley] Atkinson (Widow) the large water colour painting of a Lake in Siberia painted by her late Husband – the two garnet studs – the gold brooch in small diamonds and amethysts and the gold pencil case.” In addition to other paintings by Atkinson, one hundred and twenty-six stereoscopic views of European and English sites and subjects, along with her stereoscopic glass, were bequeathed to other family members, as were portraits of her friend, Charles Blacker Vignoles (1793–1875), British railway engineer, who may have stayed in the boarding house during the period of 1847–1853, when he was building the Nicholas Chain Bridge over the Dnepr River in Kiev, “the longest of its kind in the world” at that time.<sup>22</sup>

* * * * *

The extant letters of two Americans residing at the boarding house in the 1840s – John Stevenson Maxwell to his mother and Dr. Edward Maynard to his wife – present amusing and informative impressions of the establishment located in the house of Rall and sometimes called “the home of the American Sea Captains.”<sup>23</sup> Their correspondence contains comments about the two landladies, some of the other boarders, the internal arrangement of the two floors occupied by the boarding house, its amenities, and the social life it housed. John Stevenson Maxwell (1818–1870), secretary of the American legation in St. Petersburg from July 1842 to November 1844, stayed with the misses Benson for the month of October 1844, after returning from a summer’s tour of Europe and before resigning his post. As a Russian diplomat on home leave with his family required more spacious quarters, Maxwell graciously exchanged his rooms at the request of one of the landladies, but was happy with his new quarters: “My bed room, and my parlour, both very nice rooms, furnished and carpetted after the English fashion overlook the fine English Key (as it is called) and the Neva.”<sup>24</sup>

Counter to one of the misses Benson’s expectations, he announced that, while he would take breakfast and lunch in his room, he would appear at the public table for dinner.<sup>25</sup> Dinner with the other boarders (eleven of the twelve were American sea captains and supercargoes and the twelfth another diplomat) became the occasion for Maxwell’s hilarious rendition to his mother of the Yankee dialect and the patterns of thinking of one of the sea captains, while praising them all for their demeanor:

These men were all respectable men, and after all my wandering I sat down with pleasure among them and found myself among eleven of the most intelligent persons I had dined with in a long time. It was quite exciting for me to hear them talk, and I went into politics – Tyler, Clay and Polk with a vehemence which had long lain dormant. Most of them were Whigs – all had their views original and striking. Some were temperance men, even to tea and coffee, tobacco and segars [sic: cigars] – others were full of fun, and all were entertaining. There was one character ... who was a perfect specimen of far down East, a regular Yankee who looked more like a parson than a sailor. You should hear him talk. You would die. It is his first trip to Russia. “I’ve hearn tell,” says he, “on this country afore – but I’m astonished some I guess. I’ve hearn tell in the newspapers all about Russy but amazing sake’s they didnt tell one half. Wall, now, it is wonderful I’ll swan (swear). I went down to old Virginny once, and I thought that bad enough, kinder inhospitable like, nothing but agie (ague; sickness) hung on till I took Kinine [sic: quinine] enough to kill a horse. But I guess Russy is worse than old Virginny, any how. It looks agie like here, and kinder inhospitable too – Jist to see now, them ere people in the streets, eating black bread and salt, why the niggers to hum (at home) or do better than that. Do you call that living? do you tell me that them people in sheep skins are human critters? No you dont, no you cant any how you can fix it, I wish my wife and my dater Mealey Ann (Amelia Ann) could jist see the nasty fellers a chawing up of that black bread, they would open their eyes some and have something to tell to the folks down to Salem.” [Probably concerned over the icing up of the river], ... leaning forward to Miss Benson, he said “Can you tell me marm how many days is required before I can receive my papers of clearance from the Custom House? No sir – said Miss Benson – Wall “said he, the gals to hum beat all the gals in this world for sailing afore the wind. My dater Mealy Ann couldn’t live no how, no where on earth, without knowing such things, as well as as teaching Sunday school.” This will give you some idea of this Yankee Captain and although he is such a queer one, I hear he is a man of means and a good merchant.<sup>26</sup>

A few days later, when the sea captains had mostly sailed, there were “only one or two Americans left.” But Maxwell, along with two other diplomats – the Russian diplomat with his wife, sons, and daughter; the other diplomat alone – “shed quite a diplomatic lustre around the banquet hall of the men who go down to the sea in ships; [they occupied] the upper part of the table and the Captains [were] seated below ... All goes very well, nobody has been choked, nobody lost an appetite.” The social difference seemed not to matter. There was, however, an awkward moment. “The conversation [was] general and often turn[ed] upon the United States.” While Maxwell was talking to the Russian diplomat about the probability of the election of Mr Clay [see Image 281] ... one of the Captains, informed the company that he had won a chest of tea here upon the election of General Harrison and would be very happy to make the same bet upon the election of Mr Clay, and informed the [Russian diplomat], who was speaking English at the moment, that if he had any doubts as to it he would like to be taken up. Of course this was a stumper to his Excellency, but as it was said with good grace, it was taken in good spirit. Some of these strangers can scarcely credit that these men are sailors, so well behaved and well dressed are they.<sup>27</sup>

Maxwell’s most charming vignette, however, captures the personality of one of the misses Benson as well as revealing more of his own. With the departure abroad or elsewhere into the city of its boarders,

[e]very noise has hushed in the now deserted rooms and our landlady looks quite woful [sic], with the end of the travelling season, which has been by no means profitable ... A few minutes since I had a visit from Miss Benson, who seemed in considerable trepidation – She is a kind landlady, but unfortunately very fat and ugly. Nevertheless I was glad to see her and directed the man in waiting to place a chair for Miss Benson. Miss Benson, then proceeded to unravel her mystery and like all women who have really any thing to say was sometime coming to the point – The amount of her story was, that no less a person than Sir Dyce Sombre [see Image 321] was in the house and she had heard dreadful things about him and wanted to know if he was really mad or not. I informed her that Sir Dyce Sombre was the produce of an Englishman crossed upon a woman of Hindustan, that his mother was a princess of India of great rank and wealth and that he had inherited her titles and her money – That he was educated partly in India partly in Gt Britain, that upon his visit to the latter country he married the daughter of the Earl of Somebody and soon after his marriage evinced such a jealousy and acted so strangely in consequence thereof, that he was pronounced a ~~mad~~ madman by the family of his bride, who took proceedings not only to effect a divorce but to deprive him of the disposal of his property – and that in the discussion that ensued thereon the opinions of the faculty both in London and in Paris, were decidedly that Sir Dyce, from constitutional or[ganization or from Eastern habits and ways of thinking, was mad upon the subject of his wife, but perfectly sane in all other particulars. It was true he had challenged Sir Robert Peel, and the Prince Albert ~~with~~ for having criminal conversation with his lady but all this arose from his diseased state of mind at the moment – Miss Benson seemed relieved upon my statement. Oh M<sup>r</sup>. Maxwell, how I wish you had been home to dinner yesterday to see what a dark complexion he has. I was sure he was a Prince all the time – one of the real old fashioned princes such as they used to have in the Arabian nights – and then such big black eyes. looking seven ways for Sunday – What said I, did his eyes glare. Yes they did indeed – they shone like mahogany tables – Beware then, said I, for these Indians are terrible fellows after the girls and if you should strike his fancy, what might not happen. Miss B. tried to look killing and said with a sigh, Ah, M<sup>r</sup>. Maxwell I have seen too much of the world and grown too wise to marry, and I wouldn't have such an old fellow any way – Well, I replied, take care, there's no telling – and there's no immediate danger from your lodger. Did you ever hear of Shakspeare [sic]? Didn't I, said she. I saw him play Helmet [sic: Hamlet] in Lannen [sic: London] once – Well, Shakspeare said once upon a time, “beware of jealousy, tis a green eyed monster,” and there is nothing so correct. so whenever you see anything green in the eye of M<sup>r</sup>. Sombre, look out for a storm, keep out of his reach and lock up all the servant girls – Oh law M<sup>r</sup>. Maxwell is he so bad as that, oh the wretch must be worse than a Frenchman I had here last year; how his poor wife must have suffered. Well said I, there is no danger, and he will reward you handsomely if you make him comfortable, for his allowance as directed by the English Court of Chancery is £100 per day, about $500 – Miss Benson having satisfied her curiosity as to the history of her new guest, arose, courtesied [sic: curtsied] and disappeared – she ~~capita~~ captivated the heart of Carter the lion tamer<sup>28</sup> who was here last year, and who knows but her dumplings and puddings, may not successfully “minister to a mind diseased.”<sup>29</sup>

* * *

Dr. Edward Maynard<sup>30</sup> spent the period from 20 September 1845 to 20 April 1846 at the misses Benson’s. He described the sisters as being “fat enough to be what they seem – very good people.”<sup>31</sup> And so they were. During his seven months with them, they looked out for his every need, e.g., supplying him with steel pens when his broke and he had to use a quill instead.<sup>32</sup> During “a rather threatening illness – brought on by a cold in the head,” they gave him the best of care.<sup>33</sup> When he was preparing to leave St. Petersburg, they offered to “procure anything for [Mrs. Maynard] or the children that [he might] direct and have all packed and shipped in order” after his departure.<sup>34</sup>

His expenses were to be “about $2.20 per day” and he expected that there would be “extra charges; as in England, enough to double it:– so much for candles, ... soap, ... washing bed linen...”<sup>35</sup> He described and drew his room from the point of view of sitting at a table, where he was writing, naming what was to the left, right, back, and front of him:

On my left in the corner is the “peecky” or stove – following around toward the left, comes next the door from the passage – in the corner the wash stand, – towel stand – bed with its two pillows one atop the other, by the head of which is the candle stand where I lay your picture that I may see it the last thing every night – a closet in the partition wall (2 feet thick) made by closing the door that leads through to the next room and hanging another so as to enclose the 2 feet depth – bureau and in front of it my guncase and trunk; – then comes 3 windows towards the quay with 2 pier glasses and tables – an operating table and chair before the centre window – a sofa behind me, (closing another doorway) and chairs in various places. The walls you see are very thick – yet such is the marshy nature of the ground that the passage of a carriage rapidly on the pavement in front of the house will make the whole house vibrate and the dishes rattle on the table. This house had, like many if not most houses here, no passages like those in use with us at home; and the thin partition between my room and the passage now existing, has been recently made by the present occupants and account for this partition being so thin. Before the fire is a yard and a half of common carpeting, and under my feet some 6 by 8 of carpet in one piece something like a Brussels carpet but not so rich – woven with a border all around. There is another yard or so of ingrain before the bed, and the rest of the floor is naked and polished with wax every week by fellows who wax all the floors in the house (except the kitchen, etc.) at so much a month or year. My floor is one of those figured [inlaid] ones of which I wrote and of which I have made sketches.<sup>36</sup>

Breakfast is on the table ... from 8 to 10 or 11.
Lunch at 1 or half past, dinner at half past 5, and tea about half past 9 or 10. Go to bed somewhere between 11 and 2 and get up in time for breakfast. The good custom of having a cup of coffee about 10 minutes or so after dinner prevails here; with the coffee, Turkish pipes or cigars – quite after the manner of the Asiatics.<sup>37</sup>

(For the floorplan of Maynard’s room, see Image 330.)

After learning that the emperor was not in town nor expected back in less than a month, Maynard and his fellow dentist, George Washington Parmly (b. 22 October 1819; d. London 15 August 1892; buried Brompton Cemetery, London; see Image 339),<sup>38</sup> a family friend practicing in Europe, who had accompanied Maynard from London, engaged a “valet de place,” an Englishman who had been living in Russia for some twelve years; this man was their guide and interpreter when they went sightseeing. They needed him, as the “very waiters of the house where we board do not seem to have, all of them put together, a dozen words of English or anything else except Russian.”<sup>39</sup>

Maynard “did not attempt anything but English” at meals, where, in addition, French, Russian, and German were spoken, but he listened “very attentively to the pronunciation of all others and [could] generally know what [was] the subject of conversation.”<sup>40</sup> He admired the presentation there of meals: “They have a good way of serving at the table – the meats are cut and put on a dish, niveh, and the dish (with a knife or fork or spoon or all) is carried to each one, that he may take such a piece as he pleases.”<sup>41</sup>

He enjoyed the performances put on at the misses Benson’s establishment. One such entertainment was a group of about twenty soldiers whom an army officer brought there to sing national Russian songs ... The soldiers (in uniform – they are never out of it) stood in a knot facing each other, and at the conclusion of each song the time was quickened – one struck in with a tambourine, a little circle was formed, open on one side to the view of the audience, and another commenced a peculiar sort of noisy, shuffling dance – then another joined him, holding in each hand a stick a foot long on which were arranged little bells and red bits of cloth so as to make them look like 2 bouquets of flowers at a distance – these he flourished about as he danced – the two moving about in the circle and dancing not merely with their feet and legs, but all over, and putting themselves into queer and amusing attitudes – very greatly to the gratification of those who had the good luck to see him.<sup>42</sup>

During the Christmas and New Year’s season of 1845–1846, Maynard “was requested to go upstairs (where the boarders usually spend the evening) and see a Russian custom,” the mummers:

I ... went up and saw five men in masks and fantastic dresses – one played a guitar while four danced a simple but peculiar figure and step – for about five minutes, when they bowed to the company and withdrew. Miss Benson tells me this is one of the ways in which the Russian servants amuse themselves at this time of year, – they mask [see Image 333] and go about from house to house where they have acquaintances in the kitchen and so amuse themselves, each other, and the company.<sup>43</sup>

On Christmas Day, they had a Christmas dinner, including champagne.<sup>44</sup> On Sunday, 30 December 1845, when the emperor returned to St. Petersburg, the boarders and one of the landladies “filled four sledges and took a nice ride about the city” to see the illuminations.<sup>45</sup> In the evening, another group of mummers, “not servants like the others but respectable people, probably some acquaintances of the Bensons, but nbo, nobody knows, came in and danced.” Because of some robberies that had taken place, the mummers were now required to include among them at least one person known to them. These mummers “were 3 men or 4 women – one woman played the piano while the rest of the party paired off with some of [the boarders] and danced quadrilles.”<sup>46</sup>

On New Year’s Eve (OS) 1845, the boarders had a great merry-making. First of all, in a separate room there were privately arranged several tables covered with presents of candy, bon-bons, jewelry, and all sorts of things usually given away at such times. The presents were divided into parcels or lots and the name of the person for whom it is designed written upon a label and placed by the side. In the centre of the room is a pine (or other evergreen) tree, like those in our door-yard for size, the branches all hung with candles, kisses, bon-bons, fruit, etc. etc., and on the branches are placed a dozen or two little wax candles of various colors, all burning and lighting up the tree most beautifully. Some of the presents last night were of considerable value – sets of silver table spoons, ditto gold-band china plates, etc. – made to the Misses Benson by two brothers who visit them frequently. Having been of some service professionally to three of the family, gratuitously, I came in for a liberal share of their favors – the more valuable for having been, most of them, wrought by the hands of the givers with a feeling of gratitude. My presents were – from Miss Elizabeth Benson a black velvet Greek hat, elaborately worked with a pattern in chain stitch (from a design I gave) lined with pink silk, and decorated with a splendid variegated silk tassel. From Miss Sarah Benson a pair of purple velvet slippers wrought in chain stitch and bound with the fur of the gray Siberian squirrel; – From Mrs. Flood an elderly lady, a pair of red woollen knit cuffs to draw over the hand above the gloves to keep the wrists warm. From Miss Lucy Finley (cousin of the Bensons [see Image 340]) a gilt morocco case or box to hang against the wall and contain matches; – the front of the box being a running flower piece beautifully wrought in fine worsted. Beside these I had a plate full of little sugar bon-bons, etc, etc. After the company was admitted to the room and the presents had all been admired, thanks given, congratulations received, jokes passed etc., etc. we returned to the dining room (it being large) and there we danced until about 2 o'clock; stopping just before 12 long enough to fill our glasses with champagne all around and as the first stroke of the clock announced the New Year, wishing each other a happy new year and many return of it – touching our glasses with those of the ladies, etc. – etc. – etc. – etc. – we drank bumpers. I ought to have mentioned before that from another lady, a boarder, a Miss Spershott, I received a present of a purse at Christmas as a token of gratitude for services in saving some of her teeth and taking out a half dozen others.<sup>47</sup>

The Benson sisters also took Maynard shopping and to visit their friends, such as Mrs. Flood, whom he came to call “mother,” because she was close in age to his wife’s mother.<sup>48</sup>

The passing years show that the Benson sisters and their establishment in St. Petersburg continued to be praised by boarders for hospitality and kindness.<sup>49</sup> The sisters themselves gave the “first impression ... (confirmed on near acquaintance)” of being “a couple of good hearted, jolly, old (no elderly) maids; fat, fair, and forty or fifty.”<sup>50</sup>

NOTES

1. I am deeply grateful to Michael J. Welch, my London researcher, for supplying genealogical information about the misses Benson and historical detail of their careers in the boarding house business, thereby enhancing Maxwell’s and Maynard’s descriptions of the sisters and the inner life of their St. Petersburg establishment.

I wish also to express my gratitude to Cynthia McGrath, descendent of Edward Maynard, for her permission to publish his drawings from his original letters, which are in her possession. When her cousin, Rodney S. Hatch, published his copies of the letters, he was not aware that the originals were still extant. Because his typewritten copies of the letters contained no drawings, Hatch had a professional artist create drawings for his book based on Maynard’s verbal statements that he was including drawings he had made of certain persons, places, and objects. I have not used these drawings not only because the originals exist, but because Hatch’s artist created drawings that Maynard himself never included. For example, the stunningly handsome portrait in Hatch’s book, said to be of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Emperor Nicholas I, is not of him; Mikhail Pavlovich was not attractive, as Maynard himself has shown, and the words he wrote next to his own portrait of Mikhail Pavlovich – “isn’t he a beauty?” – were facetious. Maynard also did not draw a portrait of Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna, wife of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, while Hatch’s artist did. See Images 330–337 of Maynard’s drawings of his room at the misses Benson’s boarding house, of Emperor Nicholas I and Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, and of other aspects of his life in St. Petersburg.

2. England, Select Births and Christenings, 1538–1975, IGI; Shields Daily Gazette, April 6, 1866; Mere Knolls Cemetery Burial Index. No will has been found for Sarah. Sarah Benson probably died at the home of her sister Barbara (Benson) Hunter, who was living in Regent Street, Hartlepool, at the time of the 1861 Census.
3. England, Select Births and Christenings, 1538–1975, IGI; Sunderland Daily Echo and Shipping Gazette, June 20, 1887; Mere Knolls Cemetery Burial Index. At the time of probate (30 November 1887), Elizabeth Benson’s estate amounted to £1620, 2s., 3d., in addition to which, her valuable bequeathed possessions were considerable (National Probate Calendar [UK], 1887).
4. Their boarding house was numbered 240–241 English Embankment according to the departure notices concerning the Bliss family published in the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 103, Saturday, May 10 [May 22 NS], 1847, p. 476; 104, Sunday, May 11 [May 23 NS], 1847, p. 480; and 106, Thursday, May 15 [May 27 NS], 1847.
5. Baptism of Elizabeth Benson, in Bishop’s Transcripts for Monkwearmouth, County Durham, held in the Durham University Library; transcript of parish registers, IGI; National Burial Index for England and Wales; 1841 Census; England, Select Births and Christenings, 1738–1975, IGI.
6. Sofia Mikhailovna Muravieva married in 1856, as his second wife, Sergei Sergeevich Sheremetiev (1821–1884), a colonel in the Cavalier Guard Regiment and Master of the Hunt (P. Dolgorukov, Rossiiskaia rodoslovnaia kniga [Russian Genealogical Book], 4 vols. [St. Petersburg: Tip. III Otdeleniia Sob. E.I.V. Kantseliarii, 1854–1857], vol. 3, pp. 504–523).
7. Count Mikhail Nikolaevich Muraviev-Vilenskii (Moscow 12 October 1796 – St. Petersburg 12 September 1866) was called by the Russians “the supressor” for his stifling of uprisings and Polish nationalism and by the Poles and Lithuanians “the oppressor” and the “hangman of Vilnius,” for the same reasons. Both assessments refer to the forced russification of the Poles and Lithuanians of Northern Krai (today, Belarus and Lithuania) after the uprising in November 1830. “Vilenskii” in his name is based on the name of the capital of Lithuania, Vilnius. Feeling that the Roman Catholic priests and the Polish students were chiefly “responsible for the spread of Polish nationalism, ... he made it his priority to close Vilnius University and to expel Catholic priests from other educational facilities” (“Mikhail Muravyov-Vilensky,” World Heritage Encyclopedia, accessed 26 April 2021, http://self.gutenberg.org/articles/Mikhail\_Muravyov-Vilensky; Alexandr Bendin, Mikhail Muraviev-Vilenskii Usmiritel' i reformator Severo-Zapadnogo kraia Rossiiskoi Imperii [Mikhail Muraviev-Vilenskii: Suppressor and Reformer of the Northwestern Region of the Russian Empire]. Names Achieving Russian Glory [Moscow: CIS-EMO, 2017], title page).

In her employer's home, Lucy Finley came to know of his otherwise politically inclined relatives, Sergei Ivanovich Muraviev-Apostol (St. Petersburg 28 September / 9 October 1796 – St. Petersburg 13/25 July 1826), who was hanged as one of the five ringleaders of the Decembrist Rebellion (1825) (Lincoln, Nicholas I, pp. 17–47), and Sergei's brother Matvei Ivanovich Muraviev-Apostol (St. Petersburg 25 April / 6 May 1793 – Moscow 21 February / 5 March 1886), who was exiled to Siberia for his participation in that rebellion, and whom she later visited, when traveling there with her husband. She met as well in her employer's home the families of other exiled Decembrists (Nick Fielding, South to the Great Steppe: The Travels of Thomas and Lucy Atkinson in Eastern Kazakhstan, 1847–1852 [London: FIRST, 2015], pp. 42n23, 75–76). Fielding's book is the first biography of the Atkinsons and is based on papers in the possession of their descendants.

In 1846, Lucy Finley's life took a turn that would change it forever. She met (it is not known where) (Fielding, p. 40) Thomas Witlam Atkinson (Cawthorne, near Barnsley, West Riding, Yorkshire 1799 – Lower Walmer, Kent 13 August 1861; see Image 341), an architect and artist about to become, with the personal permission and endorsement of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423), a traveler and explorer in Siberia and Central Asia. From the time Thomas Atkinson left on his travels in March 1847 until the beginning of January 1848, he wrote Lucy sixty-six letters. Returning to Moscow on 7 February 1848, after an eleven-month absence, he wrote to her again, asking her to come to Moscow. She arrived there on 16 February and on 18 February, “with the consent of General Mouravioff’s [Muraviev’s] family,” they were married in the Chapel of the British Consulate from the home of Actual State Councilor Ivan Vasil’evich Kapnist (c. 1794 – 10 October 1860), the civilian governor general of Moscow (2 May 1844 – 13 September 1855) and a relative of the Muraviev family: “Thomas Witlam Atkinson, native of Silkstone in the county of York in England, widower, artist by profession, of the English church, and Lucy Sherrard Finley, spinster, late resident in St. Petersburg, also of the English church, were married according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England this 18th day of February” (Fielding, pp. 69, 159; copy of the Register of British Deaths and Marriages Belonging to the British Chapel in Moscow, Ms. 11, 193/11, fol. 936, Guildhall Library, London; Mrs. Atkinson [Lucy Sherrard Finley Atkinson], Recollections of Tartar Steppes and Their Inhabitants [London: John Murray, 1863], pp. v–vi). Lucy Finley married Atkinson not knowing that he was committing bigamy, nor becoming aware of it until after his death. They set off together on travels until 1853 “through Siberia, south to the Kazakh steppes and eastward as far as Irkutsk and the Chinese border,” covering over forty-thousand miles. They arrived back in St. Petersburg on 24 December 1853 and remained in Russia throughout the Crimean War, returning to Britain in 1858 (Fielding, South to the Great Steppe, p. 159). On 4 November 1848, early in their travels, a son was born, whom they named Alatau Tamchiboulac Atkinson (Kapal, now eastern Kazakhstan 4 November 1848 – Hawaii 24 April 1906) (The Hawaiian Star (Honolulu), April 24, 1906). Thomas Atkinson wrote two books based on their travels: Oriental and Western Siberia: A Narrative of Seven Years’ Explorations and Adventures in Siberia, Mongolia, and Part of Central Asia (London: Hurst & Blackett, 1858) and Travels in the Regions of the Upper and Lower Amoor and the Russian Acquisitions on the Confines of India and China (London: Hurst & Blackett, 1860). In neither of them did he mention his wife and son, because of the potential legal consequences of their bigamous marriage, but he did write of them warmly in his diaries (Fielding, South to the Great Steppe, p. 50). After his death, Lucy Sherrard (Finley) Atkinson published her own memoirs of their travels: Recollections of Tartar Steppes and Their Inhabitants (London: John Murray, 1863). For a different assessment of the Atkinsons’ lives and the reflection of their personalities in the books they wrote, see Anthony Cross, “The Testament of a Forgotten ‘Wife,’” in Anglo-Russian Aspects of Cultural Relations between Great Britain and Russia in the Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Centuries: Selected Essays, ed. Anthony Cross (Oxford, UK, and Providence, RI: Berg, 1993), pp. 245–255.

In BRBC STP 1845 (fols. 19, 20), Lucy Finley is identified as “Finlay, Miss Companion.”

8. The Era (London), March 25, 1855.
9. Morning Post (London), June 9, 1854.
10. Home News for India, China and the Colonies (London), April 9, 1855.
11. “In one year in [England] they lost £1,270, and became involved to the amount of £850. The assets amount[ed] to £454, bad debts to £804, including a debt of £684 from Mr. W. Reece, late of St. Petersburg, and £50 from Count Skolkoff” (The Era (London), February 24, 1856, quoted in The London Gazette, March 28, 1856, p. 1217).
12. London Evening Standard, March 28, 1856.
13. Bankruptcy and Insolvency, vol. 161: Debated on Monday 11 February 1861, col. 294, House of Commons Hansard, UK Parliament website, <https://hansard.parliament.uk/Commons/1861-02-11/debates/fa985347-ebed-4167-9322-233a6c4b4dc2/BankruptcyAndInsolvency>
14. The London Gazette, March 28, 1856, pp. 4066–4067.
15. Index to Register of Passport Applications 1851–1903 for the year 1856, FO 611/6, NAUK.
16. A letter to Glasgow from St. Petersburg published in The Glasgow Herald for 17 December 1856 announced:

The Miss Bensons are stout elderly ladies, who used to have a boarding house here; they had made pretty well, when the war came and sent them home. They had to sell off when nobody wanted to buy, so they lost nearly all. They have now set up again in a very nice house on the Neva. I can tell you it is rather a pleasure to get back to open fires, blankets (sheets and feather bed we had at Moscow), Times uneffaced from the embassy, and other minor comforts.
17. “Local Intelligence. Banbury Mechanics’ Institute. Sketches of Foreign Travel,” Banbury Guardian, November 25, 1852; “Letters from the Continent, Letter III,” Liverpool Mail, June 25, 1853; Newcastle Journal, February 15, 1854; Home News for India, China and the Colonies (London), April 9, 1855; The Era (London), February 24, 1856; Alloa Advertiser (Scotland), March 7, 1857; Manchester Courier and Lancaster General Advertiser, December 26, 1864; Morning Post (London), April 11, 1867; “Skating at St. Petersburg,” Field: The Country Gentleman’s Newspaper (London), April 18, 1868, and January 1, 8, 11, 15, 22, and 29, 1870.

John Shaft, mentioned in the Liverpool Mail (June 25, 1853) as working for the misses Benson, is listed in the BRBC STP 1845 (fol. 52) as “Commissioner, married, [living at] 47 Galernic, three males, two females [in household].”

18. “The English traveller who prefers home comforts and the use of his native tongue to a foreign mode of life and speech, is strongly recommended to the boarding-house kept by the Misses Benson. No. 78 on the English Quay (Angliskaya Gostinitsa, Angliskaya Naberejna). The apartments are quite English in their neatness and cleanliness. The table-d-hôte is well loaded with substantial English fare, varied with dishes taken from the “Diner à la Russe.” The charges vary from rs. 3 50 to rs. 4 50 per diem for bed and board. The waiters understand English, and the worthy and obliging proprietresses are ever ready to assist the helpless traveller with their knowledge of the country and its language, particularly with information respecting the sights of the capital. A commissioner in attendance. The Queen’s messengers put up at this house” (Murray’s Handbook for Travellers in Russia, p. 54).
19. 1861 Census for Hartlepool, County Durham.
20. “Skating at St. Petersburg,” Field: The Country Gentleman’s Newspaper (London, January 22 and 29, 1870).
21. “Skating at St. Petersburg,” Field: The Country Gentleman’s Newspaper (London), January 29, 1870.
22. 1861 Census for Hartlepool, County Durham; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1887; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Vignoles, Charles Blacker.”
23. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 30, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 43.
24. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, entry for October 16 in letter of October 15, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 45.
25. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 30, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 43.

26. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 30, 1844.
27. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, October. 15. 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 45.
28. James (John) Carter (c. 1813 – 11 May 1847), called “the American Lion King,” who died at the age of 34, was an American animal tamer who performed in Britain, Europe, and the USA. In Britain, he was employed by Astley’s Royal Amphitheatre. In comparison to his predecessor’s act, which involved actual physical contact with the animals, “Carter’s act was criticized because the lions and tigers seemed too tame,” even though he worked “behind a wire screen with horses, zebras, crocodiles, ostriches, lions, tigers and leopards, and at one point even drove a harnessed lion like a chariot horse” (Peta Tait, “Ferocious Lion Acts,” in Fighting Nature: Travelling Menageries, Animal Acts and War Shows [Sydney, Australia: Sydney University Press, 2016], p. 21).
29. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, entry for October 17 in letter of October. 15. 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 45.
- “David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre [Sardhana, Bengal 18 December 1808 – London 1 July 1851; see Image 321] was an Anglo-Indian held to be the first person of Asian descent to be elected to the British Parliament” (“David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre,” World Heritage Encyclopedia, accessed 26 April 2021, http://self.gutenberg.org/articles/David\_Ochterlony\_Dyce\_Sombre). His lineage and background are too complex to be elaborated upon here (see “David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre,” World Heritage Encyclopedia). After his mother “died in 1820, ... David was taken over and brought up by [his maternal grandmother, Begam Sumroo] as her son and heir ... She transferred to him her wealth, and the administration of her principality but her attempts to have him accepted by the British as ruler on her death were to no avail. ... He married in [England on] 26 September 1840 the Honourable Mary Anne Jervis, third daughter of the second Viscount Saint Vincent. ... He also got himself elected as MP for Sudbury in July 1841, and was then deposed in April 1842 after objections from the loser [The Dictionary of National Biography states that he was “unseated for ‘gross, systemic, and extensive bribery” (s.v. “Dyce-Sombre, David Ochterlony”).] He accused his wife of adultery with various men including her own father, [resulting in her having] him certified insane and held under restraint, with the support and consent of his sisters ... and their husbands. ... David escaped his guards and fled to France, where an attempt to have him extradited failed” (“David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre,” World Heritage Encyclopedia). He then traveled extensively throughout Europe, which possibly explains why he was in St. Petersburg. He was examined by numerous doctors during his travels, and judged to be sane, “but his attempts to reverse the judgement were brushed aside. ... Finally, with a change of Government [in England], there seemed a chance of success. He returned to England with indemnity from arrest, but a few days before the case was due to be heard he died suddenly in excruciating agony from a septic foot on 1 July 1851” (“David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre,” World Heritage Encyclopedia). He had disinherited his wife, who contested his will; she “won the case sometime around 1856, and became the richest woman in England.” Conflicting reports say that he “was buried in the catacombs at Kensal Green cemetery on 8 July [1851]” (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Dyce-Sombre, David Ochterlony”) and – more confusingly – that he was “buried at once in an unmarked grave, which has not been touched since – yet his body was also returned to India to be buried in Sardhana” (“David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre,” World Heritage Encyclopedia).

30. See Maynard in this Appendix and Image 329.
31. Edward Maynard to Mrs. Ellen Maynard [hereafter, Maynard], letter no. 1, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia Sunday September 21, 1845, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 33.
 In citing Maynard’s letters, the date given is that of the entry within his letter; letters were written over the course of a week, until the next diplomatic courier departed.
32. Maynard, letter no. 9, p. 1, St. Petersburg, December 1/12 [sic: 13] 1845, in Hatch, p. 71.
33. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 1, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 82.
34. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 9, St. Petersburg, Friday 11, January 1846 / 23, January 1846, in Hatch, p. 96.
35. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia Sunday September 21, 1845, in Hatch, p. 33.
36. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 10, St. Petersburg, Wednesday night, October 22, 1845 1845, in Hatch, p. 63.

37. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 12, St. Petersburg, Sunday night, November 16, 1845, in Hatch, p. 65.
38. Memorial ID 207541926, findagrave.com.
39. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia Sunday September 21, 1845, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 33.
40. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 18, St. Petersburg, Russia Sunday morning, October 12, 1845, in Hatch, p. 49.
41. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 20, St. Petersburg, Russia Thursday night, October 16, 1845, in Hatch, p. 51.
42. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 8–9, St. Petersburg, Saturday morning, November 8, 1845, in Hatch, p. 61–62.
43. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 2, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 83.
44. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 2, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846.
45. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Monday, December 31, 1845, in Hatch, p. 84.
46. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Monday, December 31, 1845.
47. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 3–4, St. Petersburg, Tuesday, January 1, 1846, in Hatch, p. 84–85.
 Later, Maynard found that Miss Spershott was “rapidly acquiring a very bad reputation – almost everyone in the house [including him] suspect[ed] her of improper intimacy with one of the boarders.” He regretted that he had given her “many hours of labor that might have been bestowed upon some more deserving person.” While he did “not wish to make an enemy of her by returning the purse now,” he intended to do so just before he left Russia, as he did “not wish to have any such remembrances from such people. God forgive me if I do her an injustice” (Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Monday P.M. January 14, 1846, in Hatch, p. 93). Miss Spershott left the boarding house for Moscow around 18 February 1846, after announcing that she was going to marry a Frenchman there, news greeted by other boarders with much doubt (Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 8, St. Petersburg, Monday night, March 18, 1846, in Hatch, p. 119).
48. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Saturday evening, January 12, 1846, in Hatch, p. 89.

49. “Letters from the Continent, Letter III,” Liverpool Mail, June 25, 1853; Newcastle Journal, February 15, 1854; Home News for India, China and the Colonies (London), April 9, 1855; The Era (London), February 24, 1856; Alloa Advertiser (Scotland), March 7, 1857; Manchester Courier and Lancaster General Advertiser, December 26, 1864; Morning Post (London), April 11, 1867; “Skating in St. Petersburg,” Field: The Country Gentleman’s Newspaper (London), April 18, 1868, and January 1, 8, 11, 15, 22, and 29, 1870.
John Shaft, mentioned in the Liverpool Mail (June 25, 1853) as working for the misses Benson, is listed in the BRBC STP 1845 (fol. 52) as “Commissioner, married, [living at] 47 Galernie, three males, two females [in household].”
50. “Local Intelligence. Banbury Mechanics’ Institute. Sketches of Foreign Travel,” Banbury Guardian, November 25, 1852.

BLISS<sup>1</sup>

The Bliss family were friends of the Whistler family (see Images 1–21) from the years when the latter lived in Springfield, Massachusetts (1838–1842).

The Honorable and Colonel George Bliss (16 November 1798 – Springfield, MA 19 April 1873) graduated from Yale College in 1812 and was admitted to the bar in 1815, having studied law in the office of his father. He began his practice in Monson, Massachusetts, then went into partnership with his father-in-law, Jonathan Dwight, as the law firm of Dwight and Bliss.

His title of colonel was the result of his service as an aide to General Jacob Bliss in the War of 1812. He was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1827, 1828, 1831, 1832, 1833, 1839, and 1853; in 1853, he was speaker. In 1835, he was a member of the Senate and for a time president of the Senate.

Colonel Bliss was one of the projectors of the Western Railroad, which brought him into close contact with Major Whistler. He became the general agent of this railroad and president of it from 1836 to 1842. He took part early in the movement to build the Springfield and Hartford Railroad. He was president of the Michigan Southern Railroad from 1850 to 1852 and again from 1853 to 1860, and of the Chicago and Mississippi Railroad in 1853 and 1854.

He was a director and the first president of the Chicopee Bank in Springfield, which opened in 1836, and president of the Springfield Cemetery from 1847 to 1872. He was also a philanthropist.

On 20 April 1825, he married Mary Sheperd Dwight (24 February 1801 – 12 February 1870), daughter of his law partner. They were the parents of two children.

Their daughter, Sarah Dwight Bliss (3 June 1826 – North Hartley, QC 8 September 1896) was a close friend of Deborah Whistler. Sarah Bliss married George Walker (1 April 1824 – Washington, DC 15 January 1888) on 24 October 1849 in Springfield, Massachusetts. They are both buried in the Bliss family plot in Springfield Cemetery.

The Blisses' son, George Bliss Jr. (b. Springfield, MA 3 May 1830; d. Wakefield, RI 1 September 1897; buried Springfield, MA 4 September 1897), a lawyer, married, as his first wife, Catherine Van Renssalaer Dwight (29 March 1835 – 28 September 1884) and, as his second wife, Anais Casey (30 July 1848 – 9 April 1939). He was a convert to Catholicism in his second marriage. George Bliss Jr. produced an autobiography. In it he referred to the love affair between Deborah Whistler and a Russian officer that was the cause of her traveling with the Bliss family in Europe in 1847. He also referred to the feisty James: “I remember at St. Petersburg greatly disgusting one of major Whistler’s young sons, a boy, as I remember, of twelve or thirteen years, because I had never had on a pair of boxing gloves and could not box. The aforesaid disgusted Jimmy – then a handsome curly headed boy – has since become famous as Whistler, the artist.”

The Bliss family was also close to the family of Capt. William Henry Swift, Major Whistler’s brother-in-law. When Capt. Swift’s first wife died, their daughter, Mary Swift, was brought up in the Bliss home.

NOTE

1. This biography of the Bliss family is a composite from the following sources: Chapin, Sketches of Old Springfield, pp. 59, 62; George Bliss [the son], typed copy of his autobiography to 1876, N-YHS: Bliss Papers, fols. 39–40. See also Whistler ... Fairfax and Stoeckl, Howard, Swift, Ironside in this Appendix.

BOBRINSKII

Count Aleksei Alekseevich Bobrinskii (Bobrinskoi) (St. Petersburg 6/18 January 1800 – Smela, Government [Province] of Kiev 4/16 October 1868; buried in the Church of the Annunciation, Alexander Nevsky Monastery; see Image 86) was the eldest surviving son of Count Aleksei Grigorievich Bobrinskii (Winter Palace, St. Petersburg 11/23 April 1762 – Bogoroditsk 20 June/2 July 1813; buried at Bobriki; see Image 87) and Anna Dorothea von Ungern-Sternberg (Reval 9/20 January 1769 – St. Petersburg 28 March/9 April 1846; buried at Bobriki).<sup>1</sup> His father was the illegitimate son of Empress Catherine II (Catherine the Great), born Princess Sophie-Augusta-Friederike of Anhalt-Zerbst (Stettin 21 April / 2 May 1729 – St. Petersburg 6/17 November 1796; see Image 414), and Prince Grigorii Grigorievich Orlov (Liutkino, Tver' Province 6/17 October 1734 – Neskuchnoe 13/24 April 1783; see Image 312).<sup>2</sup> “The name Bobrinskoi is derived from that of the country place of Bobriki, which Catherine the Great bestowed upon her son; but a more fanciful derivation is that the first Count was smuggled out of the Winter Palace hidden in a beaver muff, the Russian word for beaver being bobr.”<sup>3</sup>

Count Aleksei Alekseevich was a “Lieutenant in the Regiment of Hussars of the Guard 15/27 October 1817; transferred to the Chevaliers Guardes Regiment 1818; retired from military service with the rank of Captain and was appointed Equerry to the Imperial Court 17/29 April 1824; entered the Department of Crown Lands 21 January/2 February 1827; transferred to the Ministry of Finance 31 October/12 November 1827; built the first Russian sugar mill on his estate at Smela 1838; Privy Counsellor 17/29 October 1841; built the first Russian railway between St. Petersburg and Tsarskoie-Selo [1838]; Actual Privy Counsellor 25 April / 7 May 1845; Master of the Horse 9/21 April 1854; Knight of the Orders of St. Stanislas (1st class) 30 June/12 July 1846, St. Anne (1st class) 6/18 December 1848, St. Vladimir (2nd class) 17/29 April 1863, and the White Eagle (1st class) 31 October/12 November 1865; his statue in bronze by Schroeder was erected at Kiev in 1872 by public subscription as a tribute to a great pioneer of Russian industry.”<sup>4</sup>

He married at St. Petersburg on 27 April/9 May 1821, Sofia Aleksandrovna Samoiloova (4/15 October 1799 – Paris 11/23 November 1866; buried in the Church of the Annunciation, Aleksandr Nevsky Monastery), daughter of Count Aleksandr Nikolaevich Samoilov and Princess Ekaterina Sergeevna (Trubetskaia) Samoiloova. Sofia Aleksandrovna was maid of honor to empresses Maria Fyodorovna (see Images 415–416), wife of Paul I (see Image 417), and Elizaveta Alekseevna (see Image 419), wife of Alexander I (see Image 418), and “a close personal friend of the Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna, consort of the Emperor Nikolai I, and Zhukovskii dedicated several of his poems to her.”<sup>5</sup> They had three surviving sons.<sup>6</sup>

Although he possessed enormous capital and was very close to the Court, Bobrinskii was not at all ambitious and always preferred useful labors to court life.<sup>7</sup> He was “an enlightened landowner” with an interest in scientific and technological advances.<sup>8</sup> He was always ready to make those material and moral expenditures that he thought could be useful to the prosperity of Russia and mankind.<sup>9</sup> He was “a millionaire, owning up to twelve thousand serfs.”<sup>10</sup> He “had large landholdings in Tula and Kiev provinces,” for example, “forty thousand desiatinas of land (1 d. = 2.7 acres) in Tula Province.”<sup>11</sup> “On his estates in Kiev Province he had introduced sugar refining factories”<sup>12</sup> with much success. He was one of the best Russian agronomists, and other branches of agriculture on his estates were also in model condition: the improvement of agricultural machinery; deep cultivation and rational fertilization of fields; model cultivation of grains in general according to the climatic conditions of that part of the country; artificial meadows and the sowing of grasses.<sup>13</sup>

In addition to sugar refining, his interests lay in the development of Russian industry, specifically, in exploration for coal deposits and the building of railroads. Given the high cost of firewood, he explored for and found on his estates both peat and lignite and, subsequently, in Tula Province, coal, for running his factories.<sup>14</sup> He also sought publication of his book O primenenii sistem okhranitel'noi i svobodnoi torgovli k Rossii i o znachitel'nom ponizhenii tamozhennogo dokhoda po vvedenii tarifa 1857 goda [Concerning the Application of Systems of Protective and Free Trade to Russia and Concerning the Significant Decrease in Customs Income After the Introduction of the Tariff of 1857], which appeared in July 1868, a few months before his death.<sup>15</sup>

He was chosen by Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) to serve on the Construction Committee of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway “because he was an enthusiastic supporter of railways.”<sup>16</sup> Although he “had little knowledge of the technological aspects of railways, ... he had ... considerable experience in economic and financial matters” and had exhibited outstanding ability in his service since 1832 in the credit division of the Ministry of Finance, where “he continued to report to Count Kankrin,” the Minister.<sup>17</sup> He had helped provide the private financial backing needed by Franz Anton von Gerstner, who built “the first railway in Russia except for factory and mine railways,” between St. Petersburg, Tsarskoe Selo, and Pavlovsk, completed in April 1838, “an experiment to show the advantages of railways” for Russia.<sup>18</sup> He gathered economic data and “was entrusted with calculating the potential costs of construction” of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.<sup>19</sup> He was one of the two men instrumental in the “eventual authorization of the railway in January 1842.”<sup>20</sup>

In posthumous testimonies to him at an extra-ordinary session of the Committee of Sugar Refiners in 1868, he was described as an excellent family man, good-humored, iron-willed, of an enquiring mind, patriotic, selflessly working for the good of his country, industrious, modest in the extreme and a fanatic about honesty. His trustfulness went so far that he seriously told a colleague he could not believe that an honorable person could ever tell a lie, a gullibility that sometimes cost him dearly.<sup>21</sup>

NOTES

1. David Geoffrey Williamson, comp., The Counts Bobrinskoi: A Genealogy, foreword by Count Bobrinskoi (Edgware, UK: James V. Poate, 1962), pp. 17, 18, 28; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 3, pp. 112–113; Iu. M. Lotman, N.A. Makarenko, and E.V. Pavlova, Litsa Pushkinskoi èpokhi v risunkakh i akvareliakh Kamernyi portret pervoi poloviny deviatnadsatogo veka [Personages of the Pushkin Era in Drawings and Watercolors: The Chamber Portrait in the First Half of the Nineteenth Century] (Moscow: Iskusstvo, 2000), pp. 331–332, 347–348.

2. Williamson, Counts Bobrinskoi, p. 17; Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, p. 302.
3. Williamson, Counts Bobrinskoi, p. 17.
4. Williamson, p. 28. He bought 250 thousand rubles' worth of shares in the Tsarskoe Selo Railway (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 3, p. 113).
5. Williamson, p. 28.
6. Williamson, pp. 28–30.
7. Moskovskoe o-vo sel'skogo khoziaistva [Moscow Agricultural Society]. Komitet sakharovarov [Committee of Sugar Refiners], Èkstraordinarnoe sobranie Komiteta g.g. sakharovarov v pamiat' grafa Aleksieia Alekseevicha Bobrinskogo: Protokol zasedaniia, vospominaniia S.A. Maslova, N.P. Shiskova i rechi M.D. Tolstogo, I.I. Polimistova, N.D. Bernadaki, S.A. Pakhomova [Extra-ordinary Meeting of the Committee of Sugar Refiners in Memory of Count Aleksiei Alekseevich Bobrinskoi: Protocol of the Session, Recollections by S.A. Maslov and N.P. Shiskov and Speeches by M.D. Tolstoi, I.I. Polimistov, N.D. Bernadaki, and S.A. Pakhomov] (Moscow: V universitetskoi tipografii [Katkov], 1869); title on cover: Vospominaniia o grafe Aleksee Alekseeviche Bobrinskom (hereafter, Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov), p. 24.
8. Haywood, Beginnings, p. 97.
9. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, p. 24.
10. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, p. 20.
11. Haywood, Beginnings, p. 97; Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, p. 20.
12. Haywood, Beginnings, p. 97.
13. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, pp. 24–25.
14. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, pp. 13–16.
15. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, p. 13; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 3, p. 113.
16. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 18.
17. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 18.
18. Haywood, Beginnings, pp. 85, 102, 103, 108; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 3, p. 113.
19. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 23, 60.
20. Haywood, Beginnings, p. 169.
21. Vospominaniia ... sakharovarov, pp. 22, 35.

BODISCO AND WILLIAMS<sup>1</sup>

Baron Aleksandr Andreevich Bodisco (Moscow 18 October [OS] 1786 – Georgetown, DC 23 January [NS] 1854; see Image 283) began his government service on 12 April (OS) 1799, when he was registered as a titular cadet (14th and lowest grade in the Table of Ranks) in the State College of Foreign Affairs. On 29 August (OS) 1804, he was made an interpreter. In 1806, his services were made use of to bring foreigners in St. Petersburg to take the oath of allegiance to the emperor. On 31 December (OS) 1808, he was made a collegiate assessor (8th grade). In 1812, he was sent as a courier to Erebro to General of Engineers P.K. Sukhtelen (Suchtelen) and appointed to serve under him. On 29 December (OS) 1812, he was promoted to court councilor (7th grade). In 1813, he was twice sent with despatches from Stralsund to the main headquarters of Emperor Alexander I. On 29 January (NS) 1814, he was sent from Kiel to the emperor in Langres with news of the conclusion of peace between Sweden and Denmark. On receiving the news, the emperor decorated Bodisco with the Order of St. Anne (2nd class). On 21 February (NS) 1814, Bodisco went from Hannover to Berlin with the treaty of peace concluded between Russia and Denmark, after which he again served under General Sukhtelen, who sent him to Stockholm and Paris with news of the conclusion of talks concerning Norway. In 1817, he temporarily carried out the duties of Russian consul general in Stockholm, for which he was awarded the diamond insignia of the Order of St. Anne (2nd class). On 13 August (OS) 1818, he was made a gentleman of the emperor's bedchamber [kamerger]. On 3/15 January 1820, he was appointed councilor of the embassy in Stockholm. On 20 January / 1 February 1820, he was sent as a courier from Stockholm to St. Petersburg. On 5 February (OS) 1824, he was appointed gentleman-in-waiting [kamerherr] of the Court of His Imperial Majesty. On 22 August (OS) 1826, he was promoted to state councilor (5th grade). On 5 April (OS) 1830, he received the Order of St. Vladimir (3rd class). On 10 April (OS) 1832, he attained the rank of actual state councilor (4th grade). On 18 November (OS) 1832, the country house “Vanenhof,” in Kurland, which had been granted to him for twelve years by the Ukase of 10 September (OS) 1827, was ordered to be returned to the State as of 12 June (OS) 1833. He was instead granted from the State Exchequer for twelve years eight hundred silver rubles per year. On 5 December (OS) 1834, he received the Order of St. Stanislav (2nd class, with star). On 17/29 January 1836, on the death of Count Sukhtelen, he was confirmed temporarily as chargé d'affaires at the mission in Stockholm. On 16/28 March 1837, he was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America. He arrived in Washington, where he presented his credentials to President (1837–1841) Martin Van Buren (1782–1862) on 5 May (NS) 1838. He remained in this post until his death. On 14/26 April 1840, just after his marriage, he was promoted to privy councilor (3rd grade). On 13/25 March 1844 (during the period in which the Bodiscos are mentioned in Anna Whistler's diaries), Baron Bodisco was awarded, in addition to the eight hundred rubles per year awarded him in 1832, a further twelve hundred rubles, starting 12/24 June 1845; from that date for six years he was to receive two thousand silver rubles per year. On 15/27 April 1844, in consideration of his zealous service and insufficient income, he was further awarded, as an addition to his salary, two thousand silver rubles per year. On 22 August / 3 September 1846, he received a badge of distinction for forty years of flawless service (he had received similar badges of distinction every five years, beginning with his twenty-fifth year of service). On 21 April / 3 May 1847, he was made cavalier of the Order of St. Anne (1st class). On 24 February / 8 March 1850, as a manifestation of Imperial favor for his long and zealous service and useful labors, he was made a cavalier of the Order of St. Vladimir (2nd class, large cross). On 13/25 August 1851, he was awarded two thousand silver rubles per year for six years, beginning 12/24 June 1851 (this is the pension he refers to in his will). On 22 August / 3 September 1852, he was awarded a badge of distinction for forty-five years of flawless service. His service record also indicates that his mother owned 400 serfs in Moscow and Kaluga provinces, and that he was of the Lutheran faith.<sup>2</sup>

Harriet Beall Williams (c. 1824 – Southsea, Portsea Island, Southampton 20 June 1890; see Images 284–285) was the daughter of Rebecca (Beck) (c. 1804 – buried at Oak Hill Cemetery, Washington, DC 26 April 1880) and Brooke Williams (c. 1790 – Georgetown, DC 1 September 1843), who were married on 4 September 1822.<sup>3</sup> She had the following brothers and sisters: Caroline Virginia (c. 1826 – buried Oak Hill Cemetery 17 March 1854), Brooke B. (c. 1828 – buried Oak Hill Cemetery 20 November 1894), Eliza (27 June 1830 – 14 January 1850), Edward (15 November 1834 – buried Oak Hill Cemetery 28 February 1890), William Lewis (19 November 1837 – buried Oak Hill Cemetery 22 August 1887), Bodisco (b. 13 September 1841).<sup>4</sup> Their father was chief clerk in the Adjutant General's office.<sup>5</sup>

Harriet Beall Williams's marriage on 7 April 1840,<sup>6</sup> at the age of sixteen, to Baron Alexander Andreevich Bodisco, then fifty-three years old, was an exciting social event.<sup>7</sup> The story is told that in 1838, when Harriet, some fourteen years old, was a day student at Miss English's Seminary in Georgetown, Baron Bodisco, who also lived in Georgetown (at 3320 O Street), and who had only recently arrived to take up his diplomatic post, gave a sumptuous Christmas party for his nephews, at which Harriet was a guest. The Baron became interested in her, courted her, and in April 1840 they were married. Although her father was alive<sup>8</sup> and the marriage took place in her family's house (on The Heights in Georgetown), he did not give the bride away. Whether the Baron, who chose statesmen his own age as his ushers while the bride's attendants were young like herself, made the decision to have Senator Henry Clay of Kentucky replace Harriet's father in giving her away, or whether her father refused to participate in the wedding, remains a mystery. Her father died on 1 September 1843; his funeral was held at Christ Church on 2 September 1843,<sup>9</sup> but the location of his grave has continued to elude researchers.

The splendor of the trappings of the wedding, brilliant reception, and extensive festivities, all planned by the Baron and so exciting to onlookers and participants alike, gain a different perspective when set against the moment of truth experienced by one of the young attendants. Seeing the Baron and her own handsome father together, she became aware of the former's "curious ugliness," "his manner at variance with all [her] ideas of dignity," and "suddenly had an instinct into another aspect of this gay marriage."<sup>10</sup> But the marriage "was a happy one to [Baron Bodisco] and evidently of contentment to [his wife]."<sup>11</sup> He dropped "much of the frothiness of his ways," "made all her family his," and gained “in every way the respect of many who thought it a risky marriage.”<sup>12</sup>

They had seven children:<sup>13</sup> Nicholas Alexander (b. Georgetown, DC 6/18 April 1841; bap. Christ Church 18 December 1841); Alexander André (b. 10 October 1842; bap. Christ Church 9 April 1843; d. Georgetown, DC 2 September 1843; funeral service Christ Church 3 September 1843); Constantine (b. 8 December 1844; bap. Christ Church 12 June 1845; d. May 1896); Alexander (b. Georgetown, DC 26 November 1846; bap. Christ Church 9 June 1847); Athenais Septimanie (b. 17/29 August 1848; bap. Christ Church May 1849); Olga Georgianna (b. 10/22 February 1851; bap. St. John’s Episcopal Church 1851); and William Corcoran (b. Argayl Farm<sup>14</sup> 21 July 1852; bap. Christ Church 8 January 1853).

In his will, written in French and dated 1 July 1853, Baron Bodisco did not enter “into the details of the Education that I desire to be given to our Children,” because of the “unlimited confidence” he had “in the principles and in the excellent qualities of my dear Wife.” However, after stressing that they must first of all “become good Christians,” he went on to emphasize that they must “become ... good Russians, for the happiness to belong to that great Nation, must be considered by them, as a favor from Heaven, and as a distinction for their future life and their destiny.”<sup>15</sup> It has not been possible to obtain much information about the Russian aspect of the Bodisco children’s lives. There is a file in the RGIA in St. Petersburg, dated 3 November 1866 – 28 January 1867, about Alexander Bodisco’s appointment to the Chancery of the Ministry of the Imperial Court that shows he completed the course of studies at the Imperial Alexander Lyceum with the right to the rank of 10th grade (collegiate secretary).<sup>16</sup> It is said that Constantine also received his education in Russia and “came to Washington as third secretary of the Legation.”<sup>17</sup> He married an American, Charlotte Elizabeth Barton, on 9 July 1867 in the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, DC.<sup>18</sup>

Harriet Beall (Williams) Bodisco was received at Court in Russia and given the sobriquet “the beautiful American.” An exquisite portrait of her in the luxurious robes of state she wore when presented to the Imperial Russian Court was painted by Johann Conrad Dörner (1809–1866) in 1844 (see Image 285). The Bodiscos were married about fourteen years. Baron Bodisco died on 11/23 January 1854<sup>19</sup> in Georgetown, DC, and was buried in a plot bought in that same year at Oak Hill Cemetery, as were subsequently many members of both sides of the family.<sup>20</sup> In his will, Baron Bodisco stated that his fortune, which was to be divided into seven equal parts for his wife and six children, consisted of “the income of two thousand silver rubles derived from the Pension I obtain from the Kindness of the Emperor since the 24 June 1851 until 24 June 1857, of all the salary due to me on the day of my decease, of all my personal property or furniture, of all my Silver, of a house at St. Petersburg, and of 10 shares of the 1st Insurance Company against fire.”<sup>21</sup> He encouraged his wife, who would “likely become a Widow at an age when it would be still convenient for her to marry again,” to “take for a husband only such a man as will be worthy of her and whose social position and well established fortune will be able to assure to my Wife and to the Children issue of the second marriage, a becoming and perfectly independent existence.”<sup>22</sup> His fortune and the second marriage were thus very exactly separated, in the interest of protecting his own children’s inheritance. If his widow remarried, her guardianship of the children of the first marriage would at once cease and, should she die, her portion of the inheritance would revert to the children of the first marriage.<sup>23</sup>

On 29 May 1860, Harriet Beall (Williams) Bodisco, then about thirty-six years old, was given in marriage by President (1857–1861) James Buchanan (1791–1868) at Christ Church, Georgetown, to Captain Douglas Gordon Scott<sup>24</sup> (Aldridge, Staffordshire 20 December 1827 – Walton, Surrey 6 November 1911) of the Madras (Indian) Army. Scott’s career is as follows. He was appointed to the Eighth Regiment Native Infantry (Madras) on 15 June 1846 with the rank of ensign. He was appointed captain on 23 October 1857. For part of the period 1859 to 1862 he was recorded as being “On Furlough.” He was appointed lieutenant colonel at the Madras Staff Corps on 4 February 1872 and retired on 20 November 1878 as major general.<sup>25</sup> The Scotts had a daughter, Frances Mary Douglas, who was born on 8 October 1861. She married on 16 May 1886 Henry Philip Picot (d. London 29 August 1937).<sup>26</sup> Harriet Beall (Williams) (Bodisco) Scott died intestate on 20 June 1890 at the age of sixty-six at Southsea, Portsea Island,

Southampton. Her name on her death certificate is given as Henriette Belle de Bodisco Scott (Beall is pronounced Bell) and on her probate record as Henrietta Belle de Bodisco Scott.<sup>27</sup> Her personal estate amounted to about £882.<sup>28</sup> Douglas Gordon Scott died on 6 November 1911 at the age of eighty-three at Walton, Surrey.<sup>29</sup> His personal estate amounted to about £9,000.<sup>30</sup>

When Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) met “the beautiful American” during the St. Petersburg winter season of 1843–44, the latter was between nineteen and twenty years old, had been married some three-and-a-half years, and had borne two children, one of whom had died. Her lack of interest in religion and her love of the social events so much a part of diplomatic life were totally at odds with Anna Whistler’s style of living. Her frank preference for Russian society over American Anna Whistler found shocking. Maxwell considered her “pretty ... weak and ignorant.”<sup>31</sup> But she took her part in the life she had chosen “amiably and well,”<sup>32</sup> and had “one great and happy quality. Whatever she cannot avoid, she makes the most of.”<sup>33</sup> Most women, including Anna Whistler, wrote of her beauty and her magnificent clothes and jewelry. Jessie Benton Fremont, in her memoirs, spoke with respect of the late Baron Bodisco, the real focus of her essay, but was restrained in her comments on the still-living and remarried widow, commenting only on her continuing outward beauty and her stoutness.<sup>34</sup>

Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) was already acquainted with Baron Bodisco, who had negotiated the contract between him and the Russian government in 1842 in Washington, DC. Anna Whistler entertained Baron Bodisco and his wife at the Whistler home in St. Petersburg after meeting them at Colonel Todd’s (see Image 278), but she commented only on Mrs. Bodisco and her child.

NOTES

1. I am deeply grateful to the following persons for supplying biographical and genealogical information for the Beall and Bodisco families from American sources: Jane C. Sween, librarian and genealogist of the Montgomery County Historical Society, Rockville, MD; Robert W. Lyle, curator of the Peabody Room, Georgetown Regional Branch of the District of Columbia Public

- Library; Matthew Gilmore, reference librarian at Martin Luther King Memorial Library (MLKML), Washington, DC; Bonnie Hedges of The Historical Society of Washington, DC; Marilyn A. Duncan, assistant library director of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution (NSDAR), Washington, DC; and the records of Christ Church in Georgetown, DC, provided by its director of administration and archivist, Glenn A. Metzdorf.
2. AVPRI: Fond DLS i KhD, f. spiski, op. 464, d. 402. Formuliarnyi spisok o sluzhbe Chrezvychainogo Poslannika i Polnomochnogo Ministra pri Soedinennykh Amerikanskikh Shtatakh Tainogo Sovetnika Bodisko. Sostavlen 5<sup>go</sup> Oktiabria 1853 goda [Fond DLS and KhD, Service Records, op. 464, d. 402. Service Record of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America Privy Councilor Bodisko. Compiled on 5 October 1853] (hereafter, AVPRI: Bodisko).
  3. Eleanor Mildred Vaughan Cook, The Brooke Beall Family and the Johns Family, July 1986 (hereafter, Beall and Johns). Birth dates here are inferred from age at death and death dates. Information about the family burial plot at Oak Hill Cemetery is from Olographe Testament. See also the obituary of Brooke Williams in the National Intelligencer, September 2, 1843; Abstracts of Marriage and Death Notices from the National Intelligencer (Washington, DC), 1800–1850, Roll 2: 1835–1846, 2 September 1843, NGS Special Publication no. 41, The Historical Society of Washington, DC; Old Marriage Records of the District of Columbia, vol. 22, p. 381, NSDAR; and Mrs. Thaddeus M. Jones, Oak Hill Cemetery Records, Vinnetta Wells Ranke and Caroline Nugent Miller, comps., Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. [District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution] 17 (1936), ts, p. 69.
  4. Inscriptions from Tombstones in Rock Creek Cemetery, section C, p. 63, NSDAR; Mrs. Carroll Power, “Christ Episcopal Church, Georgetown, D.C.” Mrs. Elmer Curry, comp., Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. 27 (1936), ts, p. 9; list of family members buried in Plot 396½ in Oak Hill Cemetery in Olographe Testament.
  5. See the obituary and Abstracts of Marriage and Death Notices cited in Note 3 in this biography. Brooke Williams died “in the 53rd year of his age, after a severe illness of some months.”
  6. Daily National Intelligencer, Friday, Apr. 10, 1840, p. 4, col. 5 (Olographe Testament); Mrs. Carroll Power, “Christ Episcopal - Church” and “St. John’s Episcopal Church, Georgetown, D.C.,” Mrs. Elmer Curry, comp., Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. 27 (1936), ts. The marriage license was dated 7 April 1840. This is the date given for the actual marriage, however, in Old Marriage Records of the District of Columbia, vol. 22, p. 382, NSDAR.

7. For later accounts, see John Clagett Proctor, “Count Bodisco, Russian Envoy, and Young Bride Made Social History Here,” The Sunday Star (Washington, DC), September 8, 1940 and John Clagett Proctor, “How We Bought Alaska from Russia,” The Sunday Star (Washington, DC), February 28, 1943. See also the following books and articles about old Washington, DC: William A. Gordon, “Old Homes on Georgetown Heights,” Records of the Columbia Historical Society 18 (1915): pp. 81–82; Grace Dunlop Ecker, A Portrait of Old Georgetown (Richmond, VA: Dietz Press, 1951), pp. 289–295; Sally Somervell Mackall, Early Days of Washington (Washington, DC: Neale, 1899), pp. 311–328; Wilhelmus B. Bryon, “Some Myths in the History of Washington,” Records of the Columbia Historical Society 31–32 (1930): pp. 49–51; Mary Mitchell, Chronicles of Georgetown Life, 1865–1900 (Cabin John, MD: Seven Locks Press, 1986), pp. 49–50; Ben. Perley Poore, Perley’s Reminiscences of Sixty Years in the National Metropolis, 2 vols. (Philadelphia: Hubbard, 1886), vol. 1, pp. 305–306; Jessie Benton Fremont, Souvenirs of My Time (Boston: D. Lothrop, 1887), pp. 7–33; Deering Davis, Stephen P. Dorsey, and Ralph Cole Hall, Georgetown Houses of the Federal Period, Washington, D.C. 1780-1830 (New York: Architectural Book Publishing, 1944), pp. 74–75; Virginia Clay-Clopton and Ada Sterling, A Belle of the Fifties: Memoirs of Mrs. Clay, of Alabama, Covering Social and Political Life in Washington and the South, 1853–66 (New York: Doubleday, Page, 1905), pp. 25, 31–34. The reader should be aware that there are many factual errors among these sources as well as in the newspaper articles referred to in this biography.
  8. The mistaken idea that Brooke Williams was not alive was given as an explanation of why Henry Clay gave the bride away (Allen Diehl Albert Jr., “Baron Bodisco’s Gorgeous Wedding to Harriet Williams,” National Illustrated Magazine, June 1904).
  9. Glenn A. Metzdorf, Christ Church, DC, to E. Harden, 14 September 1994.
  10. Fremont, Souvenirs, pp. 19–20.
  11. Fremont, p. 31. In his will, he said, “I thank my dear Wife for having embellished my life and wish with my whole heart that

- hers may continue without clouds until the last moment of her Existence” (Olographe Testament).
12. Fremont, Souvenirs, p. 31.
  13. All baptismal information and most birth date information about the Bodisco children has been supplied by Glenn A. Metzdorf, director of administration and archivist, Christ Church, DC (letter to E. Harden, 22 August 1994). There is no birth or baptismal record at Christ Church for Olga. Her date of birth is taken from her father’s service record (AVPRI: Bodisko). Her baptism, indicated only as having taken place in 1851, and her second name, Georgianna, are recorded in Power, “St. John’s,” p. 7, Power, “Christ Episcopal Church,” pp. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12. The children are recorded in their father’s service record as Protestants. Some of the other children’s birth dates in the service record and Olographe Testament are confusing. In the service record, where all dates are given in Old Style, some of the birth dates are actually New Style. In his will, Baron Bodisco made a mistake in citing the birth date of at least one child. In the two documents, Harriet Beall (Williams) Bodisco is called either Harriet Brooke or Henrieta Brooke: i.e., her father’s name, Brooke, is given in observance of the Russian use of a patronymic. Excerpts from Baron Bodisco’s will appeared in “Great Grandson of Count Bodisco Replies to Roland Carr’s Query,” The Georgetowner, February 2, 1956, a response to “Who Is ‘Annett Bodisco’? Query by Roland T. Carr, Vice Pres., Riggs Bank,” The Georgetowner, January 5, 1956, MLKML.
  14. Land Records Libery, WB 120, fol. 9, MLKML.
  15. Olographe Testament.
  16. RGIA: Fond 472, op. 36, d. 75. O prichislenii k Kantseliarii Ministerstva Imperatorskogo Dvora okonchivshogo kurs nauk v Imperatorskom Aleksandrovskom Litsee, s pravom na chin X klassa Aleksandra Bodisko 3 noiab. 1866–28 ianv. 1867 [Concerning the appointment to the Chancery of the Ministry of the Imperial Court of Alexander Bodisco, who has completed the course of studies at the Imperial Alexander Lyceum, with the right to the rank of 10th grade 3 November 1866-26 January 1867]. During the period in which the file was compiled, he reached his twentieth birthday. The file contains his father’s final service record, compiled on 30 January (OS) 1854, and a Russian translation of the proof of baptism of Alexander Bodisco attested to on 6 June (NS) 1847 by Rev. S.G. Gassaway of Christ Church, Georgetown. The final service record contains the same information as AVPRI: Bodisko.

17. The Georgetownner, February 2, 1956, MLKML.
18. Power, “St. John’s,” p. 24; The Georgetownner, February 2, 1956, and a list of children born to Constantine and Elizabeth (Barton) de Bodisco, MLKML.
19. He is buried in lot 396½ (purchased 1 March 1854) at Oak Hill Cemetery. On the base of the monument, his date of death is given as “11/30 Jan. 1854” (list of family members buried in Plot 396½ in Oak Hill Cemetery in Olographe Testament). This is not possible because of the 12-day difference between the Julian and Gregorian calendars in the nineteenth century. According to his final service record, and to his biography in Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar’, he died on 11 January Old Style, the New Style equivalent of which is 23 January. His funeral took place on 25 January (The Star [Washington, DC], January 26, 1854).
20. List of family members buried in Plot 396½ in Oak Hill Cemetery in Olographe Testament.
21. A codicil dealt with his U.S. property: the Georgetown house, Argayl farm, and some two hundred sixty-six thousand dollars (“Codicil to My Olographe Testament,” provided by Robert W. Lyle, curator, Peabody Room, Georgetown Regional Branch of District of Columbia Public Library).
22. All the foregoing quotations from his will come from Olographe Testament. See also The Georgetownner, February 2, 1956, MLKML.
23. If all the children of the first marriage died before their mother, she would inherit everything; however, at her death it would go to Baron Bodisco’s adopted children, who were his nephews, Waldemar and Boris, and their sister, Caroline (Olographe Testament and “Codicil to My Olographe Testament” [see Note 22 above]). Caroline de Bodisco had married Harriet Beall (Williams) Bodisco’s brother, Brooke B. Williams (at Christ Church, Georgetown, on 2 December 1847) (Glenn A. Metzdorf, Christ Church, DC, to E. Harden, 22 August 1994 and 14 September 1994).
24. Glenn A. Metzdorf, Christ Church, DC, to E. Harden, 22 August 1994; Proctor, Sunday Star, September 8, 1940.
25. The India Register for the years 1847–1897, India Office Library, London.

26. Foreign Office Lists, NAUK; Biographical Index, India Office Library, London.
27. Certified copy of an Entry of Death for Henriette Belle de Bodisco Scott, Registration District: Portsea Island, Sub-district of Landport, County of Portsmouth, GRO; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1890.
28. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1890.
29. Certified copy of an Entry of Death for Douglas Scott, Registration District, Chertsy, Sub-district of Walton, County of Surrey, GRO.
30. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1911.
31. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, Wed. June 5 in letter of Sunday, June 2, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 36.
32. Fremont, Souvenirs, p. 31.
33. John S. Maxwell to Mr. Hugh Maxwell, St. P., Wed., June 5 in letter of Sunday, June 2, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 36. He went on to say: "... and now that she must go back to Washington, she says there is no place like it on earth, and desires to be off immediately."
34. Fremont, Souvenirs, pp. 31, 33.

BRENNAN, BERGIN, KEEFE<sup>1</sup>

Mary Brennan (bap. 20 May 1828 – 25 May 1895) had a brother, James (1 February 1822 – 4 September 1886), who emigrated to the United States, arriving in New York on 9 May 1840.<sup>2</sup> Both were born in Ballyhale, Kilkenny, Ireland, the children of Martin and Mary (Maher) Brennan [sic].<sup>3</sup> It seems plausible that Mary Brennan, because she was a minor, arrived in the United States with James.

James Brennan took out initial naturalization papers in 1842 in Springfield, Massachusetts, and became a citizen of the United States on 20 February 1849 at the Hampden County Court of Common Pleas in Springfield.<sup>4</sup> He resided in Springfield until his death.<sup>5</sup>

His occupation in the 1840s was probably that of laborer.<sup>6</sup> In the early 1850s, he was employed by the Western (Boston and Albany) Railroad, and from the 1860s to 1880, his occupation is listed specifically as both fireman and engineer for the Western Railroad.<sup>7</sup>

James Brennan married Mary Hogan, but it has not been possible to locate a marriage record for them. Mary (Hogan) Brennan, who was born around 1827, died in Springfield on 26 July 1889, at the age of sixty-two.<sup>8</sup> She as well was born in Ireland. According to the 1860 U.S. Federal Census (where the surname is spelled Brinnan), they had five children: Anna (14), John (12), Mary (9), James (6), and Margaret (1). Their daughter, Mary, married John Barrett, had three children, and lived in Springfield until her death at the age of eighty-one on 2 June 1931.<sup>9</sup> It is to Mrs. Barrett that her aunt gave or ordered to be given (it was not bequeathed) the portrait of James Whistler painted in 1844 in St. Petersburg by C.A.F. Fiessler<sup>10</sup> (see Image 24) and presented to Mrs. Barrett's aunt by Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5).

Another Brennan brother, Patrick, was a carpenter, living in Stonyford, County Kilkenny, Ireland, not far from Ballyhale.<sup>11</sup> His interest in emigrating to the United States in 1850<sup>12</sup> may have been connected with the fact that their mother died in Ireland in late 1849 or early 1850.<sup>13</sup> But Mary received a letter from him on 25 June 1850, saying he had decided “to remain in Stoney Ford.”<sup>14</sup>

While we know when Mary Brennan was baptized, we have no birth date for her, and documents for her marriage and death and the 1860

U.S. Federal Census give her age variously.<sup>15</sup> All of the ages given indicate that when she went to work for the Whistlers she had to have been less than ten years old, which seems unlikely. If we assume that she was baptized in the year in which she was born, she would have been about fifteen in 1843, when we know for certain that she was in their employ. She may have been in their employ, however, from at least October 1842, when Anna Whistler and the children moved from Springfield to Stonington after Major Whistler's (see Images 7–8, 21) departure for Russia.<sup>16</sup>

She traveled to Russia with Anna Whistler and the children in August 1843. Not long after their arrival, partly because of the death of Charles Donald, who had been her particular charge, she proposed returning to her brother James in Springfield, but then decided not to.<sup>17</sup> Anna Whistler made efforts to arrange for her to have the companionship of nursemaids in the employ of other Whistler family friends, such as the Ropeses and Ellerbys. Mary became more courageous about making friends, but she seemed to seek out only other nursemaids.<sup>18</sup> Arrangements were made on several occasions for her to travel to the United States and to visit her family in Ireland.<sup>19</sup> She accompanied Anna Whistler and the children to England in the summers of 1847<sup>20</sup> and 1848, and remained in London in 1848 with Deborah Whistler Haden (see Images 17–19, 21),<sup>21</sup> who was expecting her first child in December of that year. Thus, like James Whistler (see Images 24–29), Mary never returned to St. Petersburg again.

When Anna Whistler returned to the United States in the summer of 1849, she lived in Stonington with the Palmers (see Image 37) while deciding upon a more permanent place of residence, and Mary remained with her.<sup>22</sup> Mary continued in the employ of Anna Whistler throughout most of the 1850s, but her situation was somewhat unstable. There are unexplained outbursts of rude behavior toward Anna Whistler recorded in the latter's diary for January 1850, when they were living in Pomfret, their first move,<sup>23</sup> but they may have been connected with the death of Mary's mother.

The peripatias of Anna Whistler's life and her financial difficulties seem to have been the cause of the instability of Mary's life. Anna Whistler was poor after Major Whistler's death, and the visits she made to family and friends were partly intended to save her money. Mary did not accompany Anna Whistler when the latter traveled to England for extended stays with family, nor when she went to visit her brother, Charles Johnston McNeill, in Florida. Anna Whistler also made visits in the United States to close friends – such as the Eastwicks, Harrisons, and Winanses – but it is not always clear what Mary did then. She may have gone to stay at these times with her brother James, whom she frequently visited.<sup>24</sup> Both she and Anna Whistler suffered on these occasions.

At Christmas 1852, Anna Whistler was in London with the Hadens and did not return home until May 1853.<sup>25</sup> She was concerned about having to write twice to Mary Brennan because she had not heard from her.<sup>26</sup> In April of 1854, Anna Whistler and Mary were in Stonington when the former received an invitation to visit Baltimore. This left Mary disconsolate, and the offer to take her along drew only great indignation because Mary was afraid “to meet any linked with our breaking up.”<sup>27</sup> Nevertheless, despite her fears, Mary was with Anna Whistler in Baltimore in autumn of 1854.<sup>28</sup> Although she told Anna Whistler in December 1854 that she wanted to return to her New York connections,<sup>29</sup> she stayed on. In 1855, because of her poverty, Anna Whistler shared a house with her nephew Donald McNeill Fairfax (see Image 35) and his first wife, Virginia Cary (Ragland) Fairfax, in Baltimore until April, but Mary was with her.<sup>30</sup> In late November – early December 1855, with Anna Whistler’s permission, Mary visited her brother James for two weeks.<sup>31</sup> In December of 1856, expecting that Anna Whistler would go to visit Charles Johnston McNeill in Florida, Mary informed James Brennan that he might “hope for her spending the winter in Springfield.”<sup>32</sup> Mary found herself forced to stay in Springfield, to the mutual trial of herself and Anna Whistler, while Willie Whistler contemplated where he would next pursue his studies.<sup>33</sup> Anna Whistler hoped Mary might find employment in Springfield with Mrs. Barnes, until she herself could “see [her] way clearer,”<sup>34</sup> but that does not seem to have happened. Mary “cheered herself with the hope that Willie” might induce his mother “to keep house for him in Phila. and that she [might] be [their] fag again! never to leave [their] house!”<sup>35</sup>

In the winters of 1858–59 and 1859–60, Mary Brennan was again or still living in Springfield and was unable to leave there to help Anna Whistler move before spring 1860.<sup>36</sup> She apparently had taken a new position in the late 1850s, for in 1860 she was registered in the U.S. Federal Census for Springfield and enumerated as a servant (Brinnin, age twenty-eight) living with Ellen Child [sic], a widow, at 6 Chestnut Street.<sup>37</sup> The interesting fact in this census return is that one of the other two female servants in the Childe household was an Ellen Bergen, nineteen years old. She was most likely a relative of Martin Bergin, whom Mary Brennan married on 9 June 1861, at St. Michael’s Roman Catholic Cathedral in Springfield.<sup>38</sup>

Martin Bergin (25 September 1834 – 4 May 1897) was also born in Ireland and was, like the Brennans, from Kilkenny.<sup>39</sup> He arrived in New York in July 1851 and note was made that he was a minor.<sup>40</sup> He was “naturalized in the Superior Court of Hampden County in Springfield. No specific date is given, but the naturalization occurred between 1853–1867.”<sup>41</sup> It had to have occurred before 1862, when Anna Whistler refers to New Haven as the Bergins’ domicile.<sup>42</sup>

His occupation is given in the marriage record as “grocer.” Although his place of residence is given there as Springfield, his name does not appear in the Springfield directories at all. In their marriage record, in 1861, Martin and Mary both give their age as twenty-six, making Mary two years younger than she was in the 1860 U.S. Federal Census. Their witnesses were James Welsh and Anne Bergin, and the officiating cleric was M.P. Gallagher. Martin’s parents are given as Stephen and Ellen. His mother’s maiden name was Murphy.<sup>43</sup> The names of Mary’s parents are not given.

Mary (Brennan) Bergin died at 586 Grand Avenue in Ward 6, New Haven, Connecticut, on 25 May 1895.<sup>44</sup> Her death certificate lists her age as fifty-six, but the age she gave on her marriage record in 1861 would have made her sixty years old at her death, and her baptism date suggests she was sixty-seven. The death notice in the New Haven Register states that Mrs. Martin Berigan [sic] would receive a solemn requiem mass at St. Patrick’s Cathedral in New Haven.<sup>45</sup> Her body was brought by train to Springfield on 27 May 1895. After her funeral service, she was buried in “cemetery plot #1259 in the Hill Section of Calvary Cemetery in [nearby] Chicopee.”<sup>46</sup> The plot was purchased by her husband when she died.<sup>47</sup>

Martin Bergin “was in the grocery and meat business” in New Haven.<sup>48</sup> At some time, he served as an alderman.<sup>49</sup> He sold his business there, apparently after his wife’s death, “and intended to open a store in [Springfield] or Holyoke.”<sup>50</sup> On 4 May 1897, while visiting his relatives in the Holyoke area, he died tragically in a hotel in Holyoke owned by a niece of his. The gas jet in his room “had not been turned fully off,” and he died of asphyxiation.<sup>51</sup> His funeral took place on May 5 at the Church of the Holy Rosary, and he was buried in the same plot as his wife.<sup>52</sup> They had no surviving children.<sup>53</sup>

Mary Brennan was devoted to the Whistler family. Her particular faithfulness to Anna Whistler was exemplified on Christmas Day 1845, when she gave her mistress “a carved ivory seal for [her] desk” with her initials on it in silver and “a chaste cart dog at the top.”<sup>54</sup> On route to England in June 1847, Anna Whistler wrote her husband, assuring him for some unclear reason that Mary was not spoiled, but “modest, humble & trying to anticipate all our wants.”<sup>55</sup> Mary seemed to justify this assessment when she offered to sleep on the floor of the cabin because of a lack of berths.<sup>56</sup>

When Major Whistler died, Mary communicated to Anna Whistler that she would not leave her and perhaps offered to take a smaller salary, for Anna Whistler wrote to James: “Tell my good Mary how gratifying it is to me to hear such proofs of her attachment to me—she will cheerfully then lighten my toils—for we must all do our part upon a very small income.”<sup>57</sup> Anna Whistler described the hardworking young woman as “a host in herself.”<sup>58</sup> And, as late as 1874, she received proof “of the faithful and loving attachment of [her] good old servant Mary who altho a very respectable M<sup>rs</sup> Bergin residing in New Haven ... sign[ed] herself [your] ‘Servant Mary’.”<sup>59</sup> To this Anna Whistler responded: “There are not many like her.”<sup>60</sup>

A third surname needs to be grouped with Brennan and Bergin: that of Keefe (O’Keefe, Kief, O’Kiefe). Anna Whistler referred to a Thomas in 1849 when she wrote of James Brennan.<sup>61</sup> While identifying James as Mary Brennan’s brother, she did not clarify who Thomas was. But, as a sister of Martin Bergin later married a Thomas Keefe, also from Ballyhale, Kilkenny,<sup>62</sup> it seems plausible to assume that the abovementioned Thomas was Thomas Keefe. He was born on 9 August 1824 and arrived in New York on 1 August 1841,<sup>63</sup> about a year after James Brennan. He made his domicile in Springfield, Massachusetts, from at least 1842, and became a citizen of the United States on 15 February 1847.<sup>64</sup> In 1852, he was working at the Springfield depot.<sup>65</sup> He married Margaret Bergin on 8 May 1853 in Cabotville (now Chicopee), Massachusetts.<sup>66</sup> The names of Margaret Bergin's parents are not given in the marriage record<sup>67</sup>; only the name of Thomas Keefe's father, Richard, is given. Thomas's occupation is given in the U.S. Federal Census for 1860 (Chicopee) as mason.<sup>68</sup> At that time, the Keefes had three children: Mary (6), John (4), and Ella (2).<sup>69</sup> Thomas Keefe is not recorded in the 1870 U.S. Federal Census, so he may have died between 1860 and 1870. Neither the statewide nor the local vital records record his death, but Margaret (Bergin) Keefe is listed as a widow in the Holyoke city directories in 1876.<sup>70</sup> She continued to appear in the Holyoke city directories until 1911.<sup>71</sup> The Holyoke City Clerk's Office has no death record for her.<sup>72</sup>

A final intriguing question arises from these biographies. All the persons were from Ballyhale, Kilkenny, the population of which in the 1830s was 369.<sup>73</sup> Who or what could have been the impetus for the departure of these three families from this tiny town in Ireland with the specific destination of Springfield, Massachusetts?

NOTES

1. I am deeply grateful to Margaret Humberston, supervising librarian of the Genealogy and Local History Library, Connecticut Valley Historical Museum, Springfield, Massachusetts, for the painstaking research she carried out on my behalf in Springfield, Massachusetts, and New Haven, Connecticut, on the Brennan, Bergin and Keefe families.
2. Mary Flood, Kilkenny Archaeological Society (KAS), Kilkenny, Ireland, to E. Harden, 7 March 2002; Death Certificate for [Mary] Bergin, Bureau of Vital Statistics State of Connecticut; Springfield Daily Republican, September 6, 1886; Naturalization papers for James Brennan, Waltham, MA, NAUS. The KAS found only one baptismal record for a Mary Brennan in Ballyhale in the period

1823–1833. This Mary Brennan had three siblings, born in 1830, 1832, and 1835. Anna Whistler never refers to them in her correspondence, so perhaps they died. That this Mary Brennan is the one we are looking for seems borne out by the fact that a James Walsh was a sponsor at the baptism in Ballyhale, and a James Welsh was a witness at her wedding in Springfield (M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 11 January 2002).

Anna Whistler said her Mary “was a farmers daughter in the north of Ireland” (Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 1205 Arch St., Philadelphia, Nov. 11th [1858], GUL: Whistler Collection, W495). Anna Whistler was mistaken. Kilkenny was a town in Kilkenny County, located in the south of Ireland (Kerby A. Miller, Emigrants and Exiles: Ireland and the Irish Exodus to North America [New York: Oxford University Press, 1985], frontispiece map).

3. Ballyhale Catholic Parish records, Register 1, p. 73 for Mary Brennan. “We can confirm that all Catholic Baptisms marriages and burials prior to 1900 have been computerised. However in relation to the Catholic Parish of Ballyhale the very earliest baptisms date from 1823, and marriages from 1855. Hence we are not in a position to provide the marriage of Mary’s parents if this took place in Ballyhale” (Mary Flood, KAS, to E. Harden, 7 March 2002). For James Brennan’s birthplace, see NA: J. Brennan.
4. M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 2 April 2002; NA: J. Brennan.
5. Springfield Daily Republican, September 6, 1886.
6. His initial application for naturalization in 1842 gives his occupation as laborer (NA: J. Brennan). In August 1849, he and someone named Thomas offered through Mary Brennan that wherever Anna Whistler chose to live they were willing “to leave their work for a few days if [she needed] their assistance in unpacking the furniture” arriving from Russia. James Brennan promised that he would help his mother “if he can get the same wages he had formerly,” because “his work is increased and his profits reduced under the present system” (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Stonington. Aug. 23rd. 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W389).
7. When James Brennan acquainted Anna Whistler with his situation in 1849 (see previous Note), she felt she had to ask her step-son, George, to write to a Mr. Gray about a job for him (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Stonington. August 23rd.

1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W389). Henry Gray (c. 1814 – 19 December 1870), a brushmaker in Boston, had received “proprietorship of one of the restaurants” on the Providence and Stonington Railroad in 1838 through Major Whistler. He later joined Major Whistler in Springfield and became a collector on the passenger trains of the Western Railroad, succeeding to master mechanic. On the retirement of General James Barnes as superintendent of the Western Railroad in 1850, Henry Gray was appointed to the position, which he held for seventeen years (“Death of Henry Gray,” Springfield Daily Republican, December 20, 1870). He apparently did help James Brennan, as the latter was employed by the Western Railroad starting in the 1850s. See Bessey’s Springfield Directory for 1851-1852 (Springfield: M. Bessey, 1851), p. 44 (name spelled Brannon). James Brennan is not indexed in the 1850 US Federal Census. The 1860, 1870, and 1880 censuses all identify his occupation.

8. Springfield Daily Republican, July 28, 1889.
9. Springfield Evening Union, June 2, 1931, p. 4; Springfield Daily Republican, June 3, 1931, p. 4. According to the records of the Diocese of Springfield Catholic Cemeteries, she was buried in St. Michael’s Cemetery in Springfield, Section 6, Lot 37, Grave 4E (Lynn Carney, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 10 April 2002).
10. This watercolor portrait has already been described in the biography of James Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.” It would seem to have been gifted rather than bequeathed to Mary Barrett, as neither Mary Bergin’s will nor that of her husband contains any reference to it (Estate of Mary Bergin, no. 13, 171 and Estate of Martin Bergin, no. 13, 172, New Haven Probate District, Connecticut State Library, Hartford, CT).
See William Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg 10th May 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W978, in which reference is made to the packing up of Mary Brennan’s pictures. See also Springfield Daily Republican, July 8, 1934.
11. George Henry Bassett, Kilkenny City and County Guide and Directory, facsimile edition (Kilkenny, Ireland: Grangesilvia, 2001), pp. 288, 289.
12. On 1 May 1850, Anna Whistler had received twenty dollars for Mary Brennan from Captain William Henry Swift, her late husband’s brother-in-law, who had power of attorney to act for Anna Whistler in financial matters. The money, an “advance of [Mary’s] next quarters wages [was] to be applied by her for sending for her brother in Ireland” (entry of May 1st: April 29, AMW 1850 Diary). Mary Brennan was also receiving interest on three hundred dollars invested for her by Captain Swift (entry of July 23: July 21, AMW 1850 Diary).

13. Entry of February 26: February 24, AMW 1850 Diary.
14. Entry of June 25: June 23, AMW 1850 Diary.
15. Marriage Record (1861), Massachusetts Statewide Vital Records; Certificate of Death for [Mary] Bergin, Bureau of Vital Statistics, State of Connecticut; 1860 US Federal Census.
16. It is known that the Whistlers had a nursemaid named Mary while in Stonington, and that she left their employ to marry. Her marriage took place on 12 January 1840. A Mary Russell was traveling on the ill-fated Lexington (see Image 46), which burned at sea on 13 January, while on route from New York to Stonington. Her purpose in traveling to Stonington had been to take leave of the Whistlers (Boston Transcript, January 25, 1840; Salem Gazette, January 28, 1840). It seems plausible to assume that Russell was her married name. The details of this terrible disaster, in which only 4 passengers were saved, are to be found in Benjamin F. Thompson, History of Long Island from Its Discovery and Settlement to the Present Time, ed. Charles J. Werner, 3rd ed., 2 vols. (New York: Robert H. Dodd, 1918), vol. 1, pp. 411–420. The Whistlers moved to Springfield in the summer of 1840. There is no evidence, however, that Mary Brennan, who had probably arrived in the United States in May 1840 with her brother and would have gone with him to Massachusetts, replaced Mary Russell. I wish to thank Colonel (retired) Merl M. Moore of Falls Church, Va., for the Boston Transcript reference. Colonel Moore, when we met in the late 1980s, was engaged in research on American artists up to 1860 and was affiliated in his project with the National Portrait Gallery in Washington, DC.

George Washington Whistler was doubly grieved by the death on 1 January 1840 of his fifteen-year-old son, Joseph Swift Whistler, and by the loss of a friend and acquaintances on the Lexington. He did not, however, refer in any way to Mary Russell (George W. Whistler to General J.G. Swift, Springfield, 31 January 1840, NYPL: Swift Papers).
17. Entry for January [1/13] 1844, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
18. Mary Brennan “soon became friendly with [the] English nurse” of the Princess Dolgorukii on board the ship to England in 1847 (Anna Whistler to Major Whistler, Tuesday morning June 8 1847).

Steamer Nicolai , GUL: Whistler Collection, W353). She was also witness at the marriage of Jane Morris (nursemaid in 1845 “at Mr. Morgan’s,” BRBC STP 1845, fol. 40) to John Tilt at the English Church on 20 May/June 1, 1848 (PREC STP, no. 582[8]).

19. In addition to Anna Whistler’s diary entries, see, e.g., Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison 62 Sloane St. June 19, 1849, LC: P-W, box 34, in which it is reported that Mary is going “to visit her friends in Ireland while I am in Liverpool the week previous to our embarking for N York”; Anna Whistler to Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Fleetwood. Monday. July 15th 1849, in which it is reported that “Mary is now visiting her mother in Ireland.”
20. Anna Whistler to Major Whistler, Tuesday morning June 8th 1847. Steamer Nicolai, GUL: Whistler Collection, W353.
21. Anna Whistler to James Whistler. In my room. St. Petersburg. tuesday evening Sept 26th 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W361: “I promise both you and Mary we shall send for you to come to us.”
22. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Stonington Aug 23rd. 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W389. Mary has returned from a trip to her brother James with the report that both he and someone named Thomas have offered to take off a few days to help Anna Whistler unpack her furniture wherever she decides to live.
23. Entries of Friday, January 18: January 16 and Monday, January 21: January 19, AMW 1850 Diary.
24. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Scarsdale Monday evening Dec. 15th [18]56, GUL: Whistler Collection, W472.
25. Anna Whistler to my own dear friend 62 Sloane Street Christmas Eve 1852, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 35–36; Anna Whistler to my own dear friend 62 Sloane St. Feb. 21st, 1853 Monday afternoon, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 37–40; McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, p. 132. The “dear friend” is Margaret Getfield Hill.
26. Anna Whistler to my own dear friend 62 Sloane St. Christmas Eve 1852, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 35–36. The “dear friend” is Margaret Getfield Hill.
27. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Stonington. Thursday afternoon 27th. 1854, GUL: Whistler Collection, W436. The 27th fell on a Thursday in April and July in 1854. As James was preparing for a June exam, this letter would seem to have been written in April.
28. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Monday morning Oct. 30th [1854], GUL: Whistler Collection, W439. The letter cannot be

- dated earlier than 1853, as the death of Willie Wyatt [McNeill], referred to in it, occurred on 4 June 1853. It is connected with W436 and should probably be dated 1854. Anna Whistler expected in W436 to stay at the Perrine family's dacha. Mary made a sacrifice in coming to Baltimore with her, expecting to see James, but James was evidently preferring the luxurious life at "Alexandroffsky," the Winans estate in Baltimore, to being with his mother and her in more modest accommodations. Both Mary Brennan and Anna Whistler were very upset. For Mary's attachment to James see also Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 176 Preston St. Jan 1st. 1855, GUL: Whistler Collection, W443; Anna Whistler to James Whistler [Baltimore] 8 January 1855, W444; and Anna Whistler to James Whistler Baltimore 15 January 1855, W445.
29. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Baltimore, 7 December 1854, GUL: Whistler Collection, W442.
  30. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 1 & 2 January 1855 [Baltimore], GUL: Whistler Collection, W443; Anna Whistler to James Whistler Monday evening Jan 8th. 1855 [Baltimore], W444; Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Monday PM Jan 15th 1855 [Baltimore], W445. Anna Whistler suffered in this arrangement, as she and Virginia Fairfax did not like each other (Anna Whistler to James Whistler 20 or 21 March 1855 [Baltimore], GUL: Whistler Collection, W450; and Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret and Stonington, 2–5 November 1855, W464.
  31. Anna Whistler to Deborah Haden, Scarsdale, 10 Dec. 1855, GUL: Whistler Collection, W465.
  32. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Scarsdale Monday evening Dec. 15th [18]56, GUL: Whistler Collection, W472. Mary wrote to her brother on the 14th. She went in February 1857 (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Scarsdale Cottage, Thursday Jan 29 [1857], GUL: Whistler Collection, W475).
  33. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Richfield Sulphur Springs July 13th [1857], GUL: Whistler Collection, W480. W481, also written from Richfield Springs, is dated July 15, 1857; thus the tentative year assigned to W480.
  34. Anna Whistler to James Whistler. Alexandroffsky Villa April 27. [18]57, GUL: Whistler Collection, W478.
  35. See Note 33 in this biography. Also Anna Whistler to James Whistler St Johns River E Florida March 23rd 1858, GUL: Whistler Collection, W490. For Mary's attachment to Willie, see

- the poignant letter from Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 13 February 1855, GUL: Whistler Collection, W447.
36. Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 1205 Arch St., Nov. 22, [18]59, GUL: Whistler Collection, W502; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 1205 Arch St., March 27, 1860, W503; and Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 148 Joralemon St., Brooklyn, May 7, 1860, W505.
  37. Ellen Childe was the widow of Captain John Childe (30 August 1802 – 2 February 1858), a graduate of West Point, Class of 1827. He resigned his commission on 1 December 1835, and went on to become an eminent builder of railroads, beginning with the Western Railroad. He was, therefore, a colleague of Major Whistler, to whom he had rented the property at 6 Chestnut Street in the early 1840s. On 27 September 1854, Captain Childe's first wife, Laura (Dwight) Childe, and their eldest daughter, Lelia, were lost at sea in a ship's collision. He next married on 23 October 1856, Ellen Wills Healey, who, at his death on 2 February 1858, was left with their son, John Healy Childe, born 18 January 1858, and her step-daughter, Mary, twelve years old (1860 US Federal Census; Charlotte Edwards Warner, A Chronicle of Ancient Chestnut Street [Springfield, MA: C.W. Bryan, 1897], pp. 24–25; Chapin, Sketches of Old Springfield, pp. 140–141; IGI).
  38. Marriage Record (1861), Massachusetts Statewide Vital Records.
  39. Marriage Record (1861), Massachusetts Statewide Vital Records; Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897.
  40. M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 9 May 2002; Naturalization papers for Martin Bergin, Waltham, MA, NAUS.
  41. M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 2 April 2002. Margaret Humberston “tried to get copies of his papers from the Supreme Judicial Archives, but they wrote back to say that their records are incomplete for that period.” See also the record card for Martin Bergin, noting Certificate Number 552 1/8 – Vol. 1 – Yr. 1853–1867, with the date of naturalization not shown, Waltham, MA, NAUS.
  42. Anna Whistler to Mr. Gamble, Northampton, February 19, 1862, GUL: Whistler Collection, W512.
  43. Massachusetts Statewide Vital Records, 1841–1905, vol. 472, p. 736. The KAS reports “no ‘match’ for him with parents as given,” but “a search of county database records revealed a family of Stephen Bergin and Ellen Murphy recorded in the Catholic Parish of

- Lisdowney.” Among the children is an Ellen Bergin (bap. 1 September 1837) (Mary Flood, KAS, to E. Harden, 19 February 2004, 31 March 2004). The figures for Ellen Bergin’s age also vary, like those for Mary Brennan.
44. Death Certificate for [Mary] Bergin, Bureau of Vital Statistics, State of Connecticut.
  45. New Haven Register, May 25, 1895. St. Patrick’s was a church, not a cathedral. Its death records did not begin until 1951, and it closed in the 1960s (Maria Medina, Archdiocese of Hartford, to E. Harden, 16 December 2004).
  46. Springfield Sunday Republican, May 26, 1895, p. 8. The first Catholic parish in Springfield was not established until 1847, while the earliest Catholic church in the area, Holy Name of Jesus Church, located in Chicopee, was established in 1838 (Rev. Richard F. Meehan, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 27 February 2002). Mary Brennan would have attended the Chicopee Church, and this may be why she wished to be buried in Chicopee.
  47. M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 2 April 2002.
  48. Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897.
  49. Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897.
  50. Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897.
  51. Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897; Massachusetts Statewide Vital Records, 1841–1905, vol. 472, p. 736. His death was deemed accidental.
  52. Springfield Daily Republican, May 6, 1897: p. 8, col. 4; M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 2 April 2002.
  53. Springfield Daily Republican, May 5, 1897. The baptismal records for St. Patrick’s Church, New Haven, now kept at St. Michael’s Church, New Haven, were searched from 1861 to 1868, but no Bergin children were located.
  54. Entry of Saturday night, December 27 [1845], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
  55. Anna Whistler to Major Whistler, Tuesday morning, June 8th, 1847. Steamer Nicolai, GUL: Whistler Collection, W353. She had expressed similar sentiments in the entry for Thursday [Sept.] 26th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.

56. Anna Whistler to Major Whistler, Tuesday morning, June 8th, 1847. Steamer Nicolai, GUL: Whistler Collection, W353. This Anna Whistler would not permit.
57. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Alexandroffsky May 10th 1849. Thursday, GUL: Whistler Collection, W388; Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 19th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34.
58. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret tuesday night Feb. 10th, GUL: Whistler Collection, W406. They were preparing to move to Scarsdale. Although no year is given, it is most likely 1852. Anna Whistler also informed James that “Mary was delighted to hear from [him].” See also Anna Whistler to Meg, [Stonington] Friday afternoon 20th, LC: P-W, box 34, in which Mary’s labors to make things nice in their “dwindled circle” are reported.
59. Anna Whistler to Mary Emma Eastwick, Albyns Essex Sept. 8th, 1874 [Sept.] 9; [London] 2 Lindsey Houses Sept. 23 [1874], LC: P-W, box 34. The “dear Sister” addressed here is Mary Emma Eastwick.
60. Anna Whistler to Mary Emma Eastwick, Albyns Essex Sept. 8th, 1874 [Sept.] 9; [London] 2 Lindsey Houses Sept. 23 [1874]. See other comments about their mutual attachment in GUL: Whistler Collection, Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 1205 Arch St., Nov. 22, [18]59, W502; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 1205 Arch St., March 27, 1860, W503; and Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 148 Joralemon St., Brooklyn, May 7, 1860, W505.
61. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Stonington. Aug 23rd. 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W389. She also referred to a Thomas in 1838 (Anna Whistler to Catherine McNeill, Stonington, Ct. May 1st 1838, GUL: Whistler Collection, W345). We know, however, that he was not Thomas Keefe, as the latter did not come to the United States until 1841. Kate McDiarmid says that the Stonington Thomas, an Irishman, worked for the Whistlers for eight years: first in Lowell, Massachusetts, going with them to Stonington, when they moved there in 1837, and to Springfield in 1840 (McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, pp. 30, 31, 32). She recorded some of Thomas’s reminiscences of the Whistler family, but, as she often did not cite her sources, we have only her tantalizing statement that these reminiscences were published in the newspapers (p. 30).

62. Marriages registered in the Town of Chicopee County of Hampshire for the year 1853, p. 367.
63. Naturalization papers for Thomas Kief, Waltham, MA, NAUS. The KAS reports “no record of Thomas (O)Keefe’s baptism noted from Ballyhale Catholic records which commence in 1824, understandably they may be incomplete for the early years” (Mary Flood, KAS, to E. Harden, 19 February 2004).
64. NA: T. Kief.
65. Anna Whistler to James Whistler Pomfret tuesday night Feb. 10th [1852], GUL: Whistler Collection, W406. Although no year is given, it is most likely 1852, as, in the 1850s 10 February fell on a Tuesday only in 1852.
66. Marriages registered in the Town of Chicopee County of Hampshire for the year 1853, p. 367.
67. However, the abovementioned county database records revealed that Stephen Bergin and Ellen Murphy had a daughter, Margaret (bap. 22 May 1831) (Mary Flood, KAS, to E. Harden, 19 February 2004, 31 March 2004).
68. US Federal Census for Chicopee 1860.
69. US Federal Census for Chicopee 1860.
70. M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 9 May 2002.
71. M. Humberston to E. Harden, 9 May 2002.
72. M. Humberston to E. Harden, 9 May 2002.
73. M. Humberston to E. Harden, 9 May 2002; Samuel Lewis, A Topographical Dictionary of Ireland, Comprising the Several Counties, Cities, Boroughs, Corporate, Market and Post Towns, Parishes, and Villages, with Historical and Statistical Descriptions, 2 vols. (Baltimore, MD: Genealogical Publishing, 1984), first published in 1837.

BUTTATS

Ivan Frantsevich Buttats (Bouttatz)<sup>1</sup> (Moscow 2 June [OS] 1809 – 25 July [OS] 1876)<sup>2</sup> was the son of Frants Buttats (c. 1774 – after 1824), a medical doctor. His father was one of the first doctors engaged in large-scale smallpox vaccination in Russia.<sup>3</sup> Buttats had a brother, Aleksei Frantsevich Buttats (c. 1810 – 23 March 1846), also working for the railroads.<sup>4</sup> They were therefore often referred to in their files as Buttats 1 and Buttats 2. Ivan Frantsevich was a Russian citizen, born in Moscow. He was of the Lutheran faith, gentry class, and a bachelor.

He entered the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers on 8 February 1826. On 5 December 1827, he was made sub-ensign (2nd class), and on 19 July 1828 sub-ensign (1st class). On the basis of his performance on examinations, he was promoted to ensign on 2 July 1829. He was made second lieutenant on 19 June 1830 and lieutenant on 14 June 1831. He was made captain on 2 December 1835 and, for excellence, major on 6 December 1841.<sup>5</sup>

Among the projects he was engaged in were the following: on 5 March 1830, he was appointed a coach (repetitor) in the Institute; on 29 July 1831, he was appointed to help build the highway from Pulkovo to the Krasnoe Selo highway; on 27 March 1833, he was sent to Sestroretsk to engage in work on the munitions factory there; in 1834, he was appointed to work on the reconstruction of the cupola of Trinity Cathedral of the Izmailov Regiment; on 4 January 1841, he helped build the Anichkov Bridge over the Fontanka River; on 22 February 1842, he was temporarily put at the disposal of the Committee for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.<sup>6</sup>

Probably the most desirable and interesting assignment he received was being selected to travel to the United States to help persuade Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) to accept the post of consulting engineer for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He had made known to P.P. Mel'nikov (see Image 247), when the latter was seeking someone to accompany him to the United States in 1838, that he knew English. Mel'nikov had said he would choose Buttats if his Institute colleague, N.O. Kraft (see Image 248), declined, but Kraft accepted.<sup>7</sup>

Buttats's later appointment<sup>8</sup> to the post, in 1842, gave him the opportunity to see London, where he bought geodesic instruments for the Russian government.<sup>9</sup> Accompanying Major Whistler back to Russia, he had the further opportunity to see Paris and Brussels.<sup>10</sup>

On his return to Russia, Buttats was appointed head of the Drafting Department of the railway and taught drafting courses in the Transport Institute.<sup>11</sup> He held the rank of lieutenant colonel as of 6 December 1843.<sup>12</sup>

In his report of 12 December 1844 to the emperor, Count P.A. Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243) said that Lt. Colonel Buttats had requested permission to retire from the service for personal reasons. As his service record met the requirements for retirement in the rank then held by him, with the right to continue wearing his uniform, Kleinmikhel' requested this, and Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) approved his request on 28 December 1844 / 7 January 1845.<sup>13</sup>

In 1845, when the last Whistler child was born and baptized John Bouttatz, Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) recorded that Major Bouttatz was engaged in some mines on the border of Russia and China. With this announcement, he disappears from her diaries.<sup>14</sup>

Buttats's brother, Captain Aleksei Frantsevich, who was in the Construction Division of the Corps of Transport Engineers, held in 1845 the post of head of the Sixth Distance of the IVth Section of the Eleventh District of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He was married and had at least two daughters. One was named Vera, and in 1845 she was four years old. On 23 March 1846, he died, and Ivan Frantsevich took on the support of these daughters, in whole or in part, for the next thirty years.<sup>15</sup>

On 28 May 1874, the director of the St. Petersburg–Warsaw Railway requested that retired Engineer Lt. Colonel Buttats be confirmed head of the newly re-organized Stores Administration with compensation appropriate to his rank. Buttats was confirmed, receiving a salary of three thousand rubles per year with travel expenses of six hundred rubles.<sup>16</sup>

Buttats died on 25 July 1876 at 2:45 p.m.,<sup>17</sup> and on 26 July 1876 a telegram was sent to the chairman of the Council of the Administration saying that the entire staff of the Stores Administration wished to be present at the carrying out of the body of Buttats on Wednesday, 28 July, and asked that while they were absent the store be closed.<sup>18</sup>

On 2 August 1876, the director of the St. Petersburg–Warsaw Railway, writing to the Council of the Administration, explained the overwhelming circumstances of Buttats’s professional and family life. The deceased’s grave and prolonged illness was in many respects brought on by the constant and unrelenting labors he bore for the good of the Railway Society. On being confirmed in the position of head of the Stores Administration in May 1874, during the reorganization of the stores he had to assume special duties connected with introducing the new order of clerical work, given the complete lack of preparedness of his staff. These labors, together with his declining years, resulted in destructive consequences for his health. Fires in the workshops in 1876 required further increased efforts on the part of the Stores Administration, and Buttats spent whole days and nights in the store trying to avert further misfortunes. His ceaseless efforts resulted in a physical and emotional breakdown, and soon after the fires he took to his bed permanently. But he had one further moral obligation that he had taken on, when he promised his dying brother that he would assume the support and care of his brother’s daughters. Until his very death, he gave them the larger part of his relatively small salary. With his death, one niece was again reduced to no means of support. The director therefore petitioned the Council for funds to cover the deceased’s burial expenses and to maintain the niece until she could find further means of support. On 4 August 1876, the Council voted to support the director’s two requests by giving Buttats’s niece three months’ financial aid, equal to 750 rubles of his salary.<sup>19</sup>

This, then, was the man for whom Major and Anna Whistler named their last child, John Bouttatz Whistler.

NOTES

1. His name will be spelled as Buttats throughout this biography. It will be spelled Bouttatz when reference is made to Anna Whistler’s diaries and to the child the Whistlers named for him.
2. His birth and death dates are taken from his final service record in RGIA: Fond, 258, op.1, d. 2995. Glavnoe Obshchestvo Rossiiskikh zheleznykh dorog. Lichnyi sostav. Buttats Ivan Nachal'nik magazina. [Main Society of Russian Railways. Staff. Buttats Ivan Head of the Store]. All dates are cited Old Style, unless otherwise indicated.

3. Information about Frants Buttats is taken from RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, d. 15. Formul'iarnyi spisok o sluzhbe Doktora Statskogo Sovetnika Buttatsa [Service Record concerning the service of Doctor and State Councilor (5th grade) Buttats] (In pencil on the cover is written "Frants Buttats"); and from Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'. As his age in this service record was given as fifty, and that of his sons Ivan and Aleksei as fifteen and fourteen respectively, and we know Ivan Frantsevich Buttats was born in 1809, the year of this service record should be 1824.
4. For Aleksei Frantsevich Buttats, see RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, d. 15. Formul'iarnyi spisok o sluzhbe Doktora Statskogo Sovetnika Buttatsa [Service Record concerning the service of Doctor and State Councilor (5th grade) Buttats] and Fond 207, op. 16, d. 15. Formul'iarnyi spisok o sluzhbe i dostoinstve Korpusa Inzhenerov putei soobshcheniia Kapitana Buttats 2. 11 Okruga putei soobsheniia Za 1845 god [Service and Merit Record of Captain Buttats 2 of the Corps of Railway Engineers of the 11th District of Transport for 1845]. There is also a service and merit record for this brother for 1841, in which he is erroneously identified as Andrei Frantsov. As the name of his wife in these records is identical, both service records are for Aleksei Frantsevich.
5. RGIA: Fond 200, op. 1, d. 6133. Formul'iarnyi spisok o sluzhbe i dostoinstve Korpusa Inzhenerov putei soobshcheniia Maiora Buttatsa 1820 1842 goda [Service and merit record of Major Buttats 1 of the Corps of Transport Engineers. 1842].
6. RGIA: Fond 200, op. 1, d. 6133.
7. Mel'nikov, Svedeniia, fols. 193r, 193v.
8. RGIA: Fond 219, op. 1, d. 3347. O posylke v Ameriku Maiora Buttatsa dlia vyzova v Rossiuu Maiora Uistlera [Concerning the sending of Major Buttats to America to invite Major Whistler to come to Russia].
9. RGIA: Fond 219, op. 1, d. 3347. O posylke v Ameriku Maiora Buttatsa dlia vyzova v Rossiuu Maiora Uistlera. V Stroitel'nyi Kommissiiu SPb – Moskovskoi/zheleznoi dorogi Korpusa Inzhenerov Maiora Buttatsa Raport. No. 1. 25 Marta/4 Aprelia 1842 [To the Construction Commission of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. Report of Major Buttats of the Corps of - Engineers. No. 1. 25 March / 4 April 1842]. The Report was written in London.

10. George W Whistler to Major William Gibbs McNeill, Adelphi Terrace, London, August 15, 1842, NYPL: Swift Papers; William H. Swift to Gen. J.G. Swift, Springfield, September 4, 1842.
  11. RGIA: Fond 200, op. 1, d. 2884. Ob opredelenii v Institut KPS uchitelem chercheniia planov KI Maiora Buttatsa. Nachalos' 6 Sent., 1842 g. Resheno 18 Sent. 1842 g. [Concerning the appointment of Transport Engineer Major Buttats to the Institute of the KPS as teacher of drafting. File started on 6 Sept. 1842. File concluded on 18 Sept. 1842].
  12. RGIA: Fond 446, 1844, op. 13, d. 4. Vsepoddanneishie doklady GUPSiPZ 12 Dek. 1844 g. 1229 Buttats [Most Devoted Reports of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings 12 Dec. 1844, 1229 Buttats].
  13. RGIA: Fond 446, 1844, op. 13, d. 4 (see previous Note for document title) and Fond 446, op. 6, d. 1. Vysochaishie prikazy [Imperial Orders], 15 Dek. 1844 g. – 26 Dek. 1844 g., fol. 3v.
  14. Entry for October 23rd [1845], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
  15. RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, d. 15 (see Note 3 above for document title); Fond 446, op. 6, d. 1. Vysochaishie prikazy 15 Dek. 1844 g. – 26 Dek. 1844 g., fol. 62v; Adres-Kalendar', ili, Obschii Shtat Rossiiskoi Imperii na 1844g [Address Calendar, or, the General Staff of the Russian Empire for 1844], pt. 1, p. 287.
  16. RGIA: Fond 258, op. 1, d. 2995 (see Note 2 in this biography for document title).
  17. Institut russkoi literatury Akademii nauk (Pushkinskii dom) (IRLI) [Institute of Russian Literature of the Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House)] Fond 2/Б-93 6696 contains a photograph of Buttats from an old portrait album (indicated on the photo itself) with the time of his death among the brief information written on the back: “Inzhener-Polkovnik Ivan Frantsovich Butats, stroitel' anichkovskogo mosta, skonchalsia v Peterburge 25 Iulia 1876 g. v 2 ch. 45 m. po poludni [Engineer Colonel Ivan Frantsovich Butats, builder of the Anichkov Bridge, died in Petersburg on 25 July 1847 at 2:45 in the afternoon].” On the front of the photograph is written: “Stark au coin de Liteine and Panteleimonovskaya No 25/23 [Stark on the corner of Liteinaia and Panteleimonovskaia streets].” A request for permission to publish this photograph has not been answered at the time of publication of this manuscript.

18. RGIA: Fond 258, op. 1, d. 2995.
19. RGIA: Fond 258, op. 1, d. 2995.

CHAPMAN

The Chapman family were friends of John and Eliza Winstanley (see Image 40), and neighbors on Fishergate.<sup>1</sup> The father of the family, James Chapman (9 April 1791 – Preston 20 May 1861), entered the Royal Navy on 1 October 1805, as first-class volunteer. He attained the rank of midshipman on 22 June 1806, and, except for a period of about four months in 1809–1810, served under Captain Robert Campbell from 1805 until July 1814. Having passed his examination on 4 December 1811, he was promoted to lieutenant on 24 October 1814. “He was placed on half-pay, after serving for some time at the blockade of the Chesapeake, August 16, 1815,” and was not since that time “officially employed.” His name appeared “as a supernumerary for passage, on the books of no fewer than 73 ships of war, owing to the circumstance of his having been appointed Master of 18 or 19 different prize-vessels.”<sup>2</sup>

He seems next to have worked as a master of merchant ships until 1830. In 1818 and 1826, he wrote to the Admiralty concerning leave from the Navy in order to take command of merchant ships sailing from Liverpool to Calcutta belonging to Messes. Cropper, Benson and Company of Liverpool.<sup>3</sup>

He then became a railway company secretary. On 16 June 1830, at the first general meeting of the Wigan Branch Railway Proprietors, he was appointed treasurer, secretary, and superintendent of the railway at a salary of £300 per annum.<sup>4</sup> In October 1833, it was resolved that the Wigan Branch Railway Company and the Preston and Wigan Railway Company be consolidated to form the North Union Railway Company.<sup>5</sup> At the first meeting of the new North Union Railway Company on 4 June 1834, it was resolved that James Chapman be offered the office of secretary with a salary of £500 per annum, which he accepted.<sup>6</sup> Among the names associated with this railway company were Charles Swainson, John Winstanley and Edward Cropper (see abovementioned merchant ships). The final memo by James Chapman, dated 1 April 1856, states that he left the Company’s service.<sup>7</sup> He died at Preston on 20 May 1861, aged seventy, leaving effects under £16,000.<sup>8</sup>

On 31 October 1826, he married Eliza Hatton (1805 – Preston 18 February 1850), third daughter of Thomas Hatton, Esq., a Liverpool wine-merchant. They had three daughters and six sons:<sup>9</sup> Emily (20 July 1828 – Liverpool 25 September 1909), Rose Walbran (18 September 1829 – 9 March 1905), Eliza Adelaide (20 November 1830 – 28 March 1901), James Gregson (1 June 1832 – 20 October 1902), George Robert (18 July 1833 – 4 May 1880), Edward Charles (b. c. 1834; bap. 16 January 1835), Alfred (b. c. 1838 – 11 July 1917), Valentine Walbran (b. c. 1842; bap. 13 October 1848 – 1 May 1915), and Thomas Skipwith (b. c. 1844; bap. 13 October 1848 – after June 1881).<sup>10</sup> On 18 February 1850, Eliza (Hatton) Chapman died of tuberculosis, leaving her husband with nine children.

The beginnings of what were to be life-long friendships between the Chapman and Whistler children are recorded almost immediately upon the latter's arrival in Preston. In August 1843, James and Willie "went with the little sons of Mr. Chapman to ride on their donkey." The bouquets for Deborah Whistler's (see Images 17–19, 21) wedding in October 1847 were the gift of Mrs. Chapman. The only guest who attended the wedding service, aside from the bride's family, was a Chapman child called Johnnie, who may have been James.<sup>11</sup> In the autumn of 1848, James Whistler (see Images 24–29) and George Chapman, both fourteen, "were sent to a school at Portishead, near Bristol."<sup>12</sup> "George Chapman, who developed a talent for portraiture, remained on close terms with [James] Whistler for most of his life."<sup>13</sup> Thomas Chapman also painted. He "was invalided out of the navy," later "went to Sarawak for the climate ... where after 'commanding' Rajah Brooke's 'Army' for a while he died."<sup>14</sup> An undated letter from James Whistler to Tom Chapman, presumed to have been written in summer 1881, around the time Tom was invalided out of the Navy, explains to him how to paint a portrait.<sup>15</sup> Emily, who did not marry, recorded in her diary, covering the years 1857–1893, that James Whistler and her family had "regular contact."<sup>16</sup> Edward, whose age was given as six in the 1841 Census for Preston, is probably the Charles whose age in the 1851 Census is given as sixteen, and who is listed as "surgeons pupil." The Medical Register for 1860 contains the name of a Charles Edward Chapman, who became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1857, joined the Register in 1859, and had as his address the Islington Workhouse, where presumably he was the medical officer.<sup>17</sup>

He last appears in The Medical Register in 1872, with the same address.<sup>18</sup> A curious fact of his biography is that both he and Alice Thornton Chapman, a child adopted by the Shaw sisters (see Shaw and Wardrop in this Appendix), were associated with Islington.<sup>19</sup> He “recommended [James] Whistler to make a recuperative journey to the Pyrenees in 1862, after he had supposedly absorbed white lead while painting The White Girl.”<sup>20</sup>

Eliza Adelaide Chapman married on 20 August 1851 John Gerald Potter (Dinting, Derbyshire July 1829 – London 9 January 1908), who, together with his father, ran a wallpaper-manufacturing business in Darwen, Lancashire, with London and eventually Paris branches and “a large foreign trade.”<sup>21</sup> Her brother, Alfred, was apprenticed as a mechanical engineer in 1854, and later specialized in designing sugar-processing plants, which resulted in an international career.<sup>22</sup> Both John Gerald Potter and Alfred Chapman became major collectors of James Whistler’s works.<sup>23</sup>

NOTES

1. The family’s address in the 1841 Census for Preston is Fishergate, and in the 1851 Census “Railway House” on that street (1841 and 1851 censuses for Preston).
2. The foregoing information about Lt. James Chapman’s naval career is taken from O’Byrne, Naval Biographical Dictionary, p. 186. See also Spencer, “Whistler’s Early Relations with Britain,” p. 219n45. His date and place of death is taken from a certified copy of an Entry of Death for James Chapman, Sub-district of Preston, County of Lancaster, PRO.
3. Letters from Lieutenants 1818, ADM 1/2829, no. C 66, and letters from Lieutenants 1826, ADM 1/2833, nos. C 45 and 83, PRO.
4. Wigan Branch Railway Proprietors Minutes, 1830–1833, RAIL 534/1, PRO.
5. Wigan Branch Railway Proprietors Minutes, 1830–1833.
6. North Union Railway Board Minutes, 1834–1839, RAIL 534/4, PRO.
7. North Union Railway Board Minutes, 1841–[18]56, RAIL 534/29, PRO.

8. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1861.
9. O’Byrne, Naval Biographical Dictionary, p. 186.
10. Registers of baptisms at St. Nicholas, Liverpool; Registers of baptisms at St. Philip, Liverpool; Register and transcription of the register of baptisms at the Parish Church, Preston; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1880, 1901, 1902, 1905, 1909, 1915, and 1917; Hampshire Telegraph and Sussex Chronicle, May 8, 1880; Torquay Times and South Devon Advertiser, June 24, 1881; 1841 and 1851 censuses for Preston.
11. Robin Spencer has told me that James Whistler later called James and Alfred “Jack.”
12. Spencer, “Whistler’s Early Relations with Britain,” p. 220. The article supplies copious detail for the biographies of several of the Chapman children.
13. Spencer, p. 220.
14. Notes by Joseph W. Revillon [grandson of George William Whistler] identifying Thomas S. Chapman, roll 4601, LB 13, AAA: JMcNW.
15. James McNeill Whistler to TS Chapman [summer 1881] (from the original given to Joseph W. Revillon by Mary O’ Mellor, granddaughter of Gerald Potter), roll 4601, LB 13, AAA: JMcNW.
16. James McNeill Whistler to TS Chapman [summer 1881]. See also extracts from Miss Emily Chapman’s Diary, LC: P-W, box 280, fols. 563–570. She wrote Elizabeth Pennell that “though [she] saw a great deal of both Mrs. Whistler, and her sons for many years, [she could] only find here and there short notices, which might perhaps be of use in settling a date” (fol. 561).
17. The Medical Register: Printed and Published under the Direction of the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom (London: General Medical Council, 1860) (hereafter, Medical Register and the year), p. 60l. The 1861 Census for Clapham does not show a Charles Edward Chapman at the Islington Workhouse.
18. Medical Register (1872). The 1871 Census for Clapham does not show a Charles Edward Chapman at the Islington Workhouse.
19. 1881 Census for Clapham, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. James, RG 11/636, fol. 48, p. 8).
20. Spencer, “Whistler’s Early Relations with Britain,” p. 220.

21. Spencer, p. 221.
22. Spencer, p. 220.
23. Spencer, pp. 221–222.

CRUFT AND FITCH

Of the members of the Cruft and Fitch families who traveled to Europe, at least four of whom Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) met, the two males have the fullest biographies. William Smith Cruft (Boston 17 February 1815 – Paris 16 July 1851) and James Jackson Cruft (Boston 20 December 1826 – Boston 25 August 1849) were the sons of Elizabeth Storer (Smith) and Edward Cruft, a well-known Boston shipping merchant.<sup>1</sup> William graduated from Harvard College in 1834, having “entered ... very reluctantly,” “passed [his] time there very unpleasantly,” and left “very gladly,” because he really wanted to be a businessman.<sup>2</sup> After graduation, “he entered the counting-house of R.G. Shaw and Company,” where he worked until 1836.<sup>3</sup> At the end of 1836, he moved to New York and formed a co-partnership with Cleayton Newbold, “a New York merchant, under the firm name of Newbold and Cruft, as general commission merchants.”<sup>4</sup> Their firm, at 65 Broad Street, was destroyed by the great fire of 19 July 1845, and they moved to 47 South St. but were listed at the old address in 1846–47. From 1847–48 to 1852–53, although William Smith Cruft had died in 1851, the firm appears as Newbold and Cruft and was located at 4 Broadway. In 1854–55, the name of the firm appears as Newbold and DeGroot, William De Groot having been a partner since at least 1851.<sup>5</sup>

Harvard records show that William S. Cruft received an MA in 1837.<sup>6</sup> In that year, he “visited Europe to make his house known and establish correspondence.”<sup>7</sup> He returned to the United States in 1838, but because of failing health went again to Europe in 1841.<sup>8</sup> Recovered, he returned home and on 22 November 1842, married at Trinity Church in Norwich, Connecticut, Sophia Ingram Fitch (New Hartford, NY 10 December 1817 – no later than 1881), the daughter of Mary Ingram (Rogers) and Stephen Fitch.<sup>9</sup>

Stephen Fitch manufactured iron and farmed in Bozrah, Connecticut, until his marriage in 1817, at which time he settled in New Hartford, Oneida County, New York, until 1832. In that year, he moved to Norwich, Connecticut, and when his wife died in 1837, resettled in his birthplace of Bozrah. Here, together with his brother Asa, he manufactured cotton goods.<sup>10</sup>

In 1844, William S. Cruft's health failed again, and he and his wife embarked on a two-year trip, first to the milder climate of Madeira and then to the Continent, including Russia, from late December 1844 until September 1846.<sup>11</sup> His condition did not improve, and on 19 April 1850, they again applied for passports.<sup>12</sup> William S. Cruft died in Paris on 16 July 1851 at "Meurice's Hotel ... after a lingering attack of consumption," with his "father, sister and wife ... present."<sup>13</sup> His body was brought home and buried on 14 August 1851 in Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge, Massachusetts.<sup>14</sup> It has not been possible to ascertain the further biography of Sophia Ingram (Fitch) Cruft.

While the Crufts were on their 1844–46 European trip, William's sister, Annah Pickman Cruft, and his brother, James Jackson Cruft, applied for passports, on 1 December 1845 and 20 May 1846, respectively.<sup>15</sup> The only further biographical information available for Annah P. Cruft is that she was also buried (on 21 July 1888) in Mount Auburn Cemetery.<sup>16</sup> James Jackson Cruft graduated from Harvard College, BA in 1846.<sup>17</sup> In June 1846, his health failing, he sailed from New York for Marseilles, afterwards joining William, and returned home in September. In October, he entered the Medical School in Boston, but his health failed again and he withdrew in September 1847. From May to October 1848, he again traveled extensively. In April 1849, he sailed to St. Petersburg, where he suffered soon after his arrival a severe hemorrhaging of the lungs, necessitating his return home. He arrived on 21 July and on 25 August died.<sup>18</sup> He was buried in Mount Auburn Cemetery on 27 August.<sup>19</sup> The Harvard records show that he was awarded an MA in 1849.<sup>20</sup> It is possible that he was in St. Petersburg in 1846, as the record of the 1849 trip says he "again set sail for St. Petersburg."<sup>21</sup>

The final family member whom Anna Whistler met in Russia was Sophia Cruft's sister, Mary Elizabeth Fitch (New Hartford, NY 27 July 1827 – after 1881). She married twice: first, on 9 February 1854, Richard Henry Winslow (d. 14 February 1861); second, Dr. R.C.M. Page, both of Westport, Connecticut.<sup>22</sup>

NOTES

1. Cecil H.C. Howard, “Thomas and Esther (Marlowe) Carter and Their Descendants,” Essex Institute Historical Collections 66 [1930]: pp. 124, 260–261; “Marriages and Deaths,” New England Historical and Genealogical Register (NEHGR) 3, no. 4 (1849): p. 407; “Marriages and Deaths,” NEHGR 6, no. 4 (1852): p. 390; “Marriages and Deaths,” NEHGR 21, no. 1 (1867): p. 79; Ann Smith Lainhart, “John Haven Dexter and the 1789 Boston City Directory,” NEHGR 140, no. 3 (1986): p. 247.
2. 1834 Class Book, HUD 234.714OF, Harvard University Archives, Cambridge, MA (hereafter, HUA).
3. Quinquennial File, HUA.
4. Quinquennial File, HUA.
5. New York City directories, N-YHS.
6. Quinquennial File, HUA.
7. Quinquennial File, HUA.
8. Quinquennial File, HUA.
9. IGI; Biographical File, HUA; Lorraine C. White, comp., Barbour Collection of Connecticut Vital Records (Baltimore, MD: Genealogical Publishing), vol. 1, p. 90.
10. D. Hamilton Hurd, History of New London County, Conn., with Biographical Sketches (Philadelphia: J.W. Lewis, 1882), p. 380.
11. Quinquennial File, HUA.
12. M1372: Passport Applications 1795–1905, no. 4409, NAUS.
13. Consular Letters. Paris, France. Vol. 10 (January 14, 1851 – December 1857). July 18, 1851 S.G. Goodrich, US Consul, to The Hon. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, NAUS
14. Mount Auburn Cemetery record for Lot no. 476.
15. NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 17, passport no. 630, and p. 28, passport no. 1069.
16. Mount Auburn Cemetery record for Lot no. 476.
17. Biographical File, HUA.
18. 1846 Class Book, HUD 246.714 OF, fols. 155–156, HUA.
19. Mount Auburn Cemetery record for Lot no. 476.
20. Biographical File, HUA.
21. 1846 Class Book, HUD 246.714 OF, fol. 156, HUA.

22. IGI; Hurd, History of New London, p. 380; Joanna Foster, “Recollections: Pride of Westport and True Hospitality,” Carousel (November 1989): pp. 10, 38.

DESTREM

Engineer General Jean-Antoine Maurice Destrem (31 July 1788 – 10/22 November 1855; see Image 246), called Moris Gugonovich by the Russians, was born in Fanyeau, France in July 1788. In April 1810, at the request of Alexander I (see Image 418), he and three other graduates of the Polytechnic School in Paris and the École de Ponts et Chaussées [School of Bridges and Roads], “entered Russian service ... with the permission of Emperor Napoleon I,” to teach in the newly founded Institute of Transport Engineers. Destrem and Bazaine (1786–1838) were sent to build ports on the Black Sea: specifically, to design the project for the port of Eupatoria and to construct hydraulic works in the port of Odessa.<sup>1</sup> When the War of 1812 broke out, all four Frenchmen “were placed under surveillance and then exiled for two years to Irkutsk.”<sup>2</sup> At the war’s end, “they returned from exile and decided to remain permanently in the tsar’s service.”<sup>3</sup> “Fabre [1782–1844] and Destrem resumed their work in the south, taking command of expeditions of Institute graduates and other officers to build the port of Taganrog, complete the Georgian Military Highway and improve waterways between the Volga and Don and along the Kuban and Riom.”<sup>4</sup> Later, Destrem was sent to the Institute of Transport Engineers, where he taught mechanics<sup>5</sup> and became professor in 1818.<sup>6</sup> In 1820, he published Principaux de Mécanique [Principles of Mechanics] in French, an account of S.D. Poisson’s Traité de mécanique [Treatise on Mechanics] (Paris: Courier, 1811), expanding the sections on engineering.<sup>7</sup> He was the first editor of Zhurnal Putei Soobsbcheniia [The Journal of Transport], which began to appear in 1826.<sup>8</sup> In 1833, he published Mémoires surs divers objets relatif à la science de l’ingénieur [Thoughts on Diverse Topics of Engineering Science] (St. Petersburg, 1833).

Starting in the early 1830s, for a decade Destrem had been against the building of railways, as opposed to canals, in Russia.<sup>9</sup> In autumn of 1841, however, “he submitted a special report favorable to the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, disagreeing with his colleagues in the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings.”<sup>10</sup> Both of his positions were viewed by his contemporaries as opportunistic, reflecting in each case the opinion of his superior.<sup>11</sup> As chairman of the Temporary

Technical Commission of the Department of Railways, of which Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) became a member in February 1843, Destrem, apparently on the instruction of Count Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243), continually supported Major Whistler's proposals for building the railway.<sup>12</sup>

Destrem eventually became director of the Department of Planning and Estimates. He was instrumental in building the fortifications of Cronstadt.<sup>13</sup> He participated as well in the construction of the Annunciation Bridge (see Images 140–142), for which he was promoted to engineer general on 22 November / 4 December 1850, the day after it was officially opened.<sup>14</sup> He also “direct[ed] the engineering work of the defence of Sebastopol.”<sup>15</sup> The Times (London) reported in December 1854 that “he is spoken of as an engineer officer of the greatest merit and ... has a remarkable talent for poetry, united to profound mathematical knowledge,” and that while “he is the author of several beautiful compositions ... his best work is said to be a translation into French verse of the fables of the Russian Lafontaine, Kriloff [see Image 186].”<sup>16</sup> Such cultural accomplishments prompted Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) to describe him as “very intellectual.”

He was married to Françoise Tenant de la Tour (1806–1855), and they had three children: Dmitrii, Sofia, and Hugo.<sup>17</sup> General Destrem died in Tsarskoe Selo on 10/22 November 1855.<sup>18</sup>

NOTES

1. A.N. Bogoliubov, V.E. Pavlov, and N.F. Filatov, Augustin Betankur (1758–1824) Uchenyi, inzhener, arkhitekt, gradostroitel' [Augustin de Bethancourt (1758–1824): Scholar, Engineer, Architect, City Builder] (Nizhnii Novgorod: Nizhegorodskii gos. un-t, 2002), p. 106; Dmitrii Gouzévitch and Irina Gouzévitch, “Des ingénieurs français au service de la couronne russe au début du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle: sources en Russie et en Ukraine” [“Concerning Some French Engineers in the Service of the Russian Crown from the Beginning of the 19th Century: Sources in Russia and in Ukraine”], in La France et les français en Russie: nouvelle sources, nouvelles approches (1815–1917) [France and the French in Russia: New Sources, New Approaches (1815–1917)], ed. Annie Charon, Bruno Delmas,

- and Armelle Le Goff (Paris: École National des Chartes et Archives Nationales, 2011), pp. 103–138.
2. Alfred J. Rieber, “The Rise of Engineers in Russia,” Cahiers du monde russe et soviétique 31, no. 4 (1990): p. 548.
  3. Rieber, p. 548.
  4. Rieber, p. 548.
  5. Bogoliubov, Pavlov, and Filatov, Augustin Betankur, p. 106.
  6. Bogoliubov, Pavlov, and Filatov, p. 111.
  7. Bogoliubov, Pavlov, and Filatov, p. 113.
  8. Bogoliubov, Pavlov, and Filatov, p. 141.
  9. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 19.
  10. Haywood, p. 19.
  11. Haywood, p. 19.
  12. Haywood, p. 155.
  13. The Times (London), December 19, 1854, p. 8.
  14. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 364, 365.
  15. The Times (London), December 29, 1854, p. 8.
  16. The Times (London), December 27, 1854, p. 8.
  17. “Destrem Moritz Ivanovich (Jean-Antoine-Maurice Destrem) (1788–1855),” Napoleon and Revolution (blog), accessed 10 January 2022, <https://impereur.blogspot.com/2017/05/jean-antoine-maurice-destrem-1788-1855.html>; “Burial: Destrem Jean-Antoine-Maurice,” Destrem Maurice Gugovich (Jean-Antoine Maurice) (blog), Smolensk Lutheran Cemetery, accessed 10 January 2022.
  18. Obituary of Engineer–General Destrem, in “Rossiia” [“Russia”], Otechestvennye Zapiski [Notes of the Fatherland] 104, no. 11 (1856): p. 115; see also Amburger Datenbank, ID 87766.

EASTWICK

Andrew McCalla Eastwick (14 September 1810 – 8 February 1879; see Image 233) was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He “attended the public schools until his twelfth year,” then took a job and went to night school.<sup>1</sup> After first working “in a machine shop,” he went to work for Philip Garrett, a Philadelphia locomotive builder, where he was shortly made foreman, and at twenty-one became a partner.<sup>2</sup> On 12 April 1832, he married Lydia Ann James (14 February 1815 – 15 December 1890; see Image 234), daughter of Maria (Quicksall) James (1793–1855) and John T. James (1780–1832).<sup>3</sup> In 1835, the firm of Garrett and Eastwick took on as foreman Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226), who in 1837 became a partner.<sup>4</sup> On Garrett’s retirement in 1839, “the firm was reorganized as Eastwick and Harrison.”<sup>5</sup>

Harrison, as is explained in the Winans and Harrison family biographies in this Appendix, was invited to Russia in early 1843 to bid for the contract to build the locomotives and rolling stock for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He went without Eastwick, met Thomas DeKay Winans (see Image 229) on route, and together with him bid successfully for the contract. Their new firm was called Harrison, Winans and Eastwick. Once the contract was signed, “Eastwick closed down entirely the American operation, thereby ending the existence of Eastwick and Harrison,” and set out for Russia, “bringing with him tools and instruments from his factory.”<sup>6</sup>

Eastwick was issued a U.S. passport (no. 1857) in Washington, DC, on 6 March 1844, and another (no. 959) for himself and a son, who, family letters show, was his eldest son, Edward Peers Eastwick (12 January 1833 – 1926; see Image 235)<sup>7</sup> in London, where he was made the bearer of dispatches to St. Petersburg.<sup>8</sup> Mrs. Harrison and the two Harrison children were under Eastwick’s care on the boat to England, where they were entrusted to Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Images 226–227).<sup>9</sup> Andrew and Edward Eastwick arrived in St. Petersburg on 22 May 1844.<sup>10</sup> Their living quarters were in a house that they shared with the Harrisons at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225). Andrew Eastwick made the acquaintance of John Stevenson Maxwell, secretary of the American Legation, on 24 May 1844.<sup>11</sup> In September 1844, Eastwick learned that his wife had given birth to a stillborn daughter, Julia, on 12 August 1844.<sup>12</sup> Once Lydia Eastwick recovered, she decided she would come to Russia with their remaining children (see Images 236–237). Her mother, whom both she and Andrew Eastwick hoped would join them in Russia, decided not to do so because of her age. Encouraged by Andrew Eastwick to bring a governess with her to Russia, Lydia Eastwick was unable to persuade a Miss Valance, one of the children’s school teachers, to accept the position<sup>13</sup>; however, a Miss Anna G. Melish, a Scotswoman and a friend of Miss Valance’s, who seemed very qualified, agreed to go with her and the children.<sup>14</sup> The group departing the United States consisted of Mrs. Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick; the five other Eastwick children: Joseph Harrison, known as Hass (2 or 3 December 1834 – 15 February 1917), Charles James (27 October 1836 – 31 May 1908), Philip Garrett (18 June 1838 – 1 February 1905),<sup>15</sup> Margaret (1840–1862), and Maria James (11 August 1842 – 1926), all described by R.G. Fairbanks as “beautiful”;<sup>16</sup> and Miss A.G. Melish, their governess. Lydia Eastwick was issued a U.S. passport (no. 2785) for the group in Washington, DC, on 4 February 1845.<sup>17</sup> She and her charges reached London on 27 April 1845 and were met by Andrew Eastwick.<sup>18</sup> Two U.S. passports were issued in London for St. Petersburg on 9 June 1845: one to Mrs. Eastwick and children (no. 1638), the other to Miss Melish (no. 1640).<sup>19</sup> Andrew Eastwick was issued passport no. 1639 and made the bearer of dispatches.<sup>20</sup> They arrived in St. Petersburg sometime in June 1845 and took up quarters at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works, where Andrew and Edward Eastwick lived on the first floor of the house they shared with the Harrisons (see Images 239–240).<sup>21</sup>

Miss Melish did not fare well in Russia. To understand her plight and failure there, it is necessary to examine Andrew Eastwick’s own childhood and education, which colored his subsequent humorless views on the subject and created a heightened anxiety in him: “In my youth I was left a poor orphan at a very early age, and the little education I obtained was at a charity school, between the age of 7 and 13.”<sup>22</sup> He therefore felt he could not “urge ... too strongly the necessity of obtaining knowledge in the springtime of your life.”<sup>23</sup> His anxiety concerning the early acquisition of good “habits in writing and composition [was] very great,”<sup>24</sup> because his own lack of early training caused him to frequently experience mortification when he himself wrote a letter. Even as an adult he felt “deficient in appropriate words to impress upon [Edward’s] mind the full force of [his] anxiety.”<sup>25</sup> He spoke of the great “pleasure and satisfaction” he felt as the quality of Edward’s letters to him improved.<sup>26</sup>

He did not like the “home system of education, as [he] found it difficult to have a teacher in the house, take that interest in the welfare of children as is done in well-regulated schools, or in fact to have them perform their duty.”<sup>27</sup> This was his feeling even when he urged his wife to bring along with her to Russia a governess she could personally vouch for. Lydia Eastwick had been sceptical about taking a stranger with her,<sup>28</sup> but Miss Valance, who had known Miss Melish for many years, even before the latter spent seven years as a governess in the American South, recommended her highly. To Lydia Eastwick, Miss Melish seemed “nearer 40 than 30,” of “very good disposition,” and “devoted to children.” She was “of a very good family”; her deceased father had been “a map publisher in Chestnut Street [Philadelphia] at one time”; and she could teach music, Italian, and French, and was “capable of giving the children a good English education,” so important to Andrew Eastwick. Lydia Eastwick therefore agreed to hire her, but for 400 dollars a year rather than the 500 Miss Melish had requested.<sup>29</sup> The conditions were set down in a contract signed on 25 April 1845.<sup>30</sup> Miss Melish was let go after she had been in Russia approximately six weeks. Her letter to Andrew Eastwick justifying her actions as a teacher shows that he and his wife considered Miss Melish’s conduct with the children erroneous, and that Lydia Eastwick, in particular, reprimanded her in the presence of the children, accusing her of neglecting them.<sup>31</sup> Although obsessed by the idea of a classic English education for his sons, and having in his employ a governess recommended by his own wife as capable of giving such an education, Andrew Eastwick dismissed Miss Melish because she tried to use amusement as a tool to instill a love of reading in what she forthrightly called the Eastwicks’ spoiled American children.<sup>32</sup> There is evidence that she remained in Russia for two years beyond her dismissal by him, because on 17/29 October 1847, Andrew Eastwick reported her death to Edward, telling him that she had “died at sea 17 days from Kronstadt.”<sup>33</sup> He wrote Edward that he had “no particulars of what was the cause” of her death, but supposed they would “learn more particulars hereafter,” and did not recall whether he had already informed his son of her death.<sup>34</sup> With these seemingly unconcerned remarks about her, Miss Melish disappears from the extant Eastwick correspondence.

In the subsequent absence of an opportunity for his sons to have a classic English education, Andrew Eastwick sent Edward to boarding school in Germany in September 1847 and filled his letters to this eldest son with precepts and admonitions, feeling “satisfied that my children will execute every nerve to be a credit to their parents and an ornament in society.”<sup>35</sup> Monsieur Le Coq, one of the tutors engaged after the departure of Miss Melish, was also not found satisfactory, for Andrew Eastwick had written Edward that “if [he did] not see a change in the exertions of Monsieur Le Coq,” he would consider having Philip and Charles come along when he took Joseph to join Edward in Germany in July 1848.<sup>36</sup> Lydia Eastwick’s consternation at the idea of parting with all three remaining sons at once, added to Andrew Eastwick’s own reluctance, kept him from taking Philip and Charles to Germany. In late January 1849, the Le Coqs left the Eastwicks’ employ, and Andrew Eastwick proceeded with preparations to take Philip and Charles to Germany.<sup>37</sup> In the end, he decided that on their trip back to the United States in May 1849, he, Lydia Eastwick, the two girls, and baby William would pick up all four boys in Germany, and they would be placed in “a good English seminary” in America.<sup>38</sup>

Andrew Eastwick’s anxiety from his childhood days permeated all aspects of his life. Allusions to fear and anxiety run through his letters, as do doubts of others’ ability to be discreet. He was in charge of the office at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works, and he worked very hard. He handled all the correspondence, both in Russia and internationally,<sup>39</sup> and drew up the contracts. He was also responsible for large sums of gold and silver, which he would take to Cronstadt to be sent to England.<sup>40</sup> He was anxious about traveling in Europe alone because of his lack of proficiency in languages, and tried to attach himself to a courier or be made a courier because of the protecting advantages of such an appointment.<sup>41</sup> He was so busy that, in June of 1847, Edward reported to an aunt that for three years he, Edward, had been “within six miles” of St. Petersburg but unable to visit it. He intended to do so that summer because after the visit of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) to the Works, “my father’s business will not be so heavy this year,” and “he will be better able to go with us.”<sup>42</sup> In 1848, in anticipation of the firm’s acceptance of a contract “to finish the New Bridge over the Neva,” Andrew Eastwick was again extremely busy “in preparing conditions of the contract and guarding against responsibilities.”<sup>43</sup> Work on the bridge “obliged [him] to visit town every day,” as well as do the office work.<sup>44</sup> All these duties exhausted him, so that he had “little inclination to do anything at night but rest.”<sup>45</sup> Nevertheless, he seems from the time of “his arrival in Russia ... to have played a much less important role” than his two partners, and received little mention “in official documents dealing with matters concerning the firm and the Russian government.”<sup>46</sup>

With Eastwick’s arrival in Russia in 1844, friction between him and Harrison began, with the latter complaining that Eastwick “behaved in a ‘distasteful’, ‘intolerable’ and ‘outrageous’ manner toward him.”<sup>47</sup> In part, “since in America [Eastwick] had been the senior partner in the firm of Eastwick and Harrison” and had “helped to launch Harrison’s career,” Eastwick “may have resented Harrison’s attitude” and his own reversed role in Russia as simply “the manager of the firm’s office.”<sup>48</sup> “Harrison in his correspondence often projected the impression that he wished to be the leading person in the firm and certainly never underestimated his own worth and importance.”<sup>49</sup> He “sometimes acted in a high-handed and overbearing manner toward [William Lewis] Winans”<sup>50</sup> (see Image 232). There were also difficulties between Harrison and R.G. Fairbanks.<sup>51</sup> But there were difficulties as well between Eastwick and Thomas Winans. “By the autumn of 1848, matters had deteriorated to the extent that Harrison ... threatened to leave the firm ... [and] Winans ... stated that he would not remain alone in Russia with Eastwick.”<sup>52</sup> From “the beginning of ... 1849 Eastwick ... had nothing to do with the business.”<sup>53</sup> On 4 April 1849, Harrison stated in a letter that “Eastwick would soon be leaving for America but might return in the next year,” and that “he and Winans could carry on their work by themselves, while allowing Eastwick to continue sharing in the profits just as if he were still in St. Petersburg and carrying his share of the work load.”<sup>54</sup>

All three contractors expected to become rich in Russia, but Eastwick was obsessed with the idea. John Stevenson Maxwell, secretary of the American Legation, who was presented to Eastwick on 24 May 1844, two days after Eastwick’s arrival in St. Petersburg, had already heard from someone a week before that Eastwick was “solely bent upon making a fortune here and so engrossed as [sic] been his thoughts that he seems to have known little that was going on in the political world.”<sup>55</sup> Eastwick’s letters to his son Edward, explaining how to record his finances and accounts, as well as letters to others, reveal that he was always aware of how much he himself was earning and spending, and that he had in mind a sum that would satisfy him at the end of his stay in Russia, and, if necessary, even allow him to take less in a sellout transaction in order to achieve other goals. It was as if he had a system for becoming rich, and his dogged pursuit of this system was what antagonized his partners, who subsequently capitulated to his wishes. A number of his letters contain attempts to persuade hesitant friends and relatives to join him in Russia for the purpose of becoming rich. He was somewhat paranoid in refusing to speak, even in his letters to his wife, of the friction pitting Harrison and Winans against him, lest she and others leak what he would divulge. It is the rare letter between the Eastwick spouses that contains even a glimpse into the three partners’ exasperation and hostility.

Lydia Eastwick alluded to difficulties Harrison and Winans were having with office matters while Andrew Eastwick was in London in March 1849 and to Winans’s hostility towards her husband: “Mr. Winans inquired of me when you was coming home. I think him and Mr. Harrison find the office business more than they expected. Mr. Harrison is obliged to go to town in the evenings to see the Major [Whistler]. I believe they have a great deal of difficulty with the lawsuit and I think they wish you were here to attend to it. I thought Mr. Winans ought to be the last one to ask when you were coming back. Mr. Harrison also asked me the same question yesterday in church at the Works. My answer was that you had just arrived in London and that you did not say anything about when you were coming home.”<sup>56</sup>

Andrew Eastwick was the most candid he had ever been in writing about the hostility of the firm's partners towards one another when he wrote to his wife from Russia in 1850, where he had returned to wind up the firm's affairs. He referred to "this detestable place."<sup>57</sup> He had settled matters to a point where he could say approximately how much money would be coming to him. As Harrison and Winans were "remain[ing] in the business," closing it up was being left to Eastwick and Thomas Winans's brother, William. Eastwick did not in any way suggest that he was being squeezed out; he spoke of "the vacancy occasioned by my withdrawal." He was "fully prepared to make a considerable sacrifice" financially, because having to risk being iced in for the winter, away from all his family until 1851, would "cause me much anxiety." He felt, however, that a satisfactory proposition would not be made, "as Mr. Wm. Winans is a shrude [sz] and cunning fellow, and not possessed of an over abundance of moral sensibility." He concluded his remarks on the subject of his buyout with: "I would write on many points, if I was not fearful that my letters would be misunderstood or be seen by others than yourself," implying a certain suspicion of Lydia Eastwick's ability to understand what he expressed or to be discreet.

Andrew Eastwick and his family left St. Petersburg on 6/18 May 1849, on the same steamer as Anna Whistler and Willie (see Images 1–5, 27, 30).<sup>58</sup> Both families had suffered recent personal losses: George Whistler Eastwick (see Image 238) had died on 31 March, and George Washington Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) on 7 April. The Eastwicks took the opportunity to travel in Europe and, although Anna Whistler anticipated that they would all sail for America on the same ship, in the end, she, James (see Images 24–29), Willie, and Mary Brennan went alone.<sup>59</sup>

In June 1850, Eastwick returned to St. Petersburg, Harrison having agreed that "as former office manager [he] would be quite capable of settling accounts with the Russian government concerning work done since 1844," a matter Harrison estimated would take several months.<sup>60</sup> In September 1850, Harrison "arranged with the help of Thomas Winans to have William Winans buy out Eastwick's share of the business," which "was done on October 2 (O.S.), thereby formally ending the existence of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick.”<sup>61</sup> On 7/19 October 1850, Eastwick left Russia permanently, “a rich man,” “far richer,” Harrison said, “than he deserved to be.”<sup>62</sup> Eventually, the warring partners became reconciled, for the Eastwicks’ last child was called Thomas Winans, and in 1862, in a letter to Eastwick, Harrison addressed him as “Dear Friend.”<sup>63</sup>

After their Russian sojourn, the Eastwicks returned to Philadelphia, where Andrew Eastwick joined the City Bank of Philadelphia, eventually becoming its president. “He became, after the consolidation of the city, a member of the Common Council from Twenty-second Ward.” “He was first a Whig and later a Republican.” He was also an inventor, for example of “the equalizing beam.”<sup>64</sup> In 1850, Eastwick bought Bartram Gardens on the Schuylkill River, the estate of John Bartram, the botanist. The Eastwick family lived in the old house on the estate while a new house, a “Norman villa,” was being built. In late 1851, the family moved to the new house, which was called Bartram Hall. Andrew Eastwick died there on 8 February 1879, and Lydia Ann Eastwick on 15 December 1890. After Andrew Eastwick’s death, the city of Philadelphia, through his former head gardener, entered into negotiations to buy a portion of the property, “including the old Bartram House and gardens and a few acres surrounding them,” for a city park. In the year of Lydia Eastwick’s death, the purchase was concluded.<sup>65</sup>

The Eastwicks had fourteen children. In addition to the six who went to Russia with them, two more were born in Russia: William (1/13 August 1846 – 7 January 1887)<sup>66</sup> and George Whistler (b. 19/31 March 1848), who died at New Alexandrofsky, aged one year, on 19/31 March 1849 (a week before Major Whistler’s death), and for whom a funeral service was performed on 22 March/3 April 1849, after which his body was placed in the vault of the English Church and later removed for interment in the United States (see Image 238 for a portrait of the two boys with their mother).<sup>67</sup> The abovementioned stillborn daughter born in 1844 in the United States was the other child who died. After their return to the United States, five more children were born: Lydia Anne (3 April 1850 – 1918), Mary Emma Harmar (23 or 24 December 1851 – 1928), Kate (14 December 1853 – buried Philadelphia 27 December 1879), Andrew McCalla (29 September 1855 – 1 January 1934), and Thomas Winans (31 May 1857 – 1880).<sup>68</sup>

The following brief biographies are those of the sons who came to Russia with their parents. Edward Peers Eastwick and Joseph Harrison Eastwick both later “studied chemistry at Göttingen University.” Edward Peers went into the sugar-refining industry and formed the company of Havemeyer and Eastwick. Joseph Harrison Eastwick became a chemist and “held a position for years in Philadelphia.” Charles James Eastwick “spent most of his life as cashier of the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company.”<sup>69</sup> Philip Garrett Eastwick “entered the navy during the Civil War and became first assistant engineer on the battleship ‘Monongahela.’” A civil engineer, “he became connected” in 1870 “with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company” and “laid out the towns of Seattle and Tacoma, Washington.” He next worked for the U.S. Government in “Pacific coast engineering work”: for example, “the building of jetties at the mouth of the Columbia.” He contracted yellow fever in Panama in January 1905, while visiting his son, P.G. Eastwick Jr., the manager there of the International Banking Corporation. His body was brought back to Portland, Oregon, for interment.<sup>70</sup>

Anna Whistler considered the Eastwicks good friends, and Edward was “quite a favourite of hers.”<sup>71</sup> Many instances of times spent together and generous acts by the two families toward one another appear in the St. Petersburg diaries, the Eastwick correspondence, Anna Whistler’s correspondence, and her 1850 Diary. They attended the public festivities together at the marriage of Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna (see Image 432) at Peterhof. The Whistler family made visits to the Eastwick home at Alexandrofsky (see Images 239–240), and the Whistler children attended birthday parties there. During the stopover in Hamburg on their way home from Debo’s wedding, the Whistlers visited Edward Eastwick, who had been sent there to study. Lydia Eastwick accompanied Anna Whistler to the communion altar at the English Church in St. Petersburg (see Images 110–111) after Debo married. Both Andrew and Lydia Eastwick kept vigil by Major Whistler’s sickbed in autumn 1848. The Whistlers left their cow with the Eastwicks when they went to England. Andrew Eastwick had steel skates made at Alexandrofsky for James and Willie. When George Whistler Eastwick was born on 8 April 1848, the two Eastwick girls spent two weeks with Anna Whistler, “whom ... all [the Eastwicks] so highly esteem[ed].” Andrew Eastwick comes across as a kind and thoughtful man, especially at that poignant moment when the coffin of John Bouttatz Whistler was borne off to the English Church vault in the Eastwick carriage.<sup>72</sup>

Their friendship continued after the Russian sojourn, as did his thoughtfulness and kindness. In April 1850, the first anniversary of Major Whistler’s death, Andrew Eastwick purposely visited the Palmers in Stonington and then Anna Whistler in Pomfret so that on his upcoming trip to St. Petersburg he could accurately “report [on them] to the circle there.”<sup>73</sup> Anna Whistler considered him a close-enough friend to write to him after that visit, with a request that he go “to see Mr. Harrison’s father about the loan of $1000 for [her] brother Charles,”<sup>74</sup> about whom she was greatly distressed. His response was to himself offer “to arrange for the loan ... so as to prevent [Anna Whistler] or Capt<sup>t</sup> [Wm. H.] Swift being made responsible.”<sup>75</sup> He was “a friend in need,” whom Anna Whistler and her family remembered for this deed in their prayers.<sup>76</sup> In 1860, when Anna Whistler was planning to take a trip to England, the Eastwicks invited her to store her household furnishings at their home.<sup>77</sup>

Anna Whistler was also a frequent visitor at Bartram Hall<sup>78</sup> and attended the Philadelphia weddings of Eastwick children. Her correspondents included the Eastwicks’ daughter, Mary Emma, to whom there are at least three extant letters.<sup>79</sup> And, when Andrew Eastwick died (of typhoid pneumonia), the frail Anna Whistler in Hastings wrote Lydia Eastwick a letter of sympathy, assessing him as “so kind a husband and wise a parent.”<sup>80</sup>

NOTES

1. Thomas Lynch Montgomery, ed., Encyclopedia of Pennsylvania Biography, vol. 14 (New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1923), pp. 11–12.
2. Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, p. 11.
3. James Genealogy, page not numbered, Eastwick Letters.
4. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 95–96.

5. Haywood, p. 96.
6. Haywood, p. 256.
7. The first extant Eastwick letter from Andrew M. Eastwick, dated London, April 28, 1844, to his wife, Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick, includes a letter from Edward P. Eastwick, dated London April 24, 1844, to his mother (letters dated April 24, 1844, Wednesday, and April 28, 1844, Sunday, Eastwick Letters).
8. NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 14, passport no. 1857; and RG84, C18.2, passport no. 959.
9. Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison and her children, Annie and Henry Harrison, traveled with Andrew Eastwick from New York to Portsmouth, England, where they arrived on 22 April 1844, and were met by Joseph Harrison Jr., who then accompanied his family to Russia (Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, London, April 28th, 1844 Sunday, Eastwick Letters; Edward Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, London, April 24th, 1844 Wednesday).
10. Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, St. Petersburg, May 23, 1844 Thursday.
11. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. P., entry of Friday, May 24, in letter of May 17, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 35.
12. Lydia Eastwick and Sarah Eastwick [Andrew Eastwick's sister] to Andrew Eastwick, Philadelphia, August 5th 1844 Monday, and August 13 [1844], Eastwick Letters. Mrs. Eastwick did not speak of her pregnancy in her unfinished letter of August 5th. Her sister-in-law informed Andrew Eastwick in her letter of August 13th of the somewhat premature birth of the stillborn baby on August 12th.
13. Lydia Eastwick to Andrew Eastwick, Philadelphia, December 30th, 1844 Friday, Eastwick Letters; Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works December 21st 1844/January 2, 1845 Thursday; Eliza (Eastwick) Cowperthwait [sister (1805–1846) of Andrew Eastwick] to Andrew Eastwick, entry dated Philadelphia, February 27, 1845, in letter of Lydia Eastwick to Andrew Eastwick, dated Philadelphia, February 23rd, 1845, Thursday.
14. Lydia Eastwick to Andrew Eastwick, Philadelphia, March 25th 1845 Tuesday.

15. The dates of these three sons are taken from their tombstones in The Woodlands Cemetery (R. Cooper, Philadelphia, to E. Harden, 27 September 2004).
16. Reuben G. Fairbanks, congratulating the Eastwicks on the birth of George Whistler Eastwick, remarked on the beauty of the other Eastwick children and anticipated that the latest addition must therefore also be beautiful (R.G. Fairbanks to Andrew Eastwick, 1 Crookside Lane, London, June 2, 1848 Friday, Eastwick Letters).
17. NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 38, passport no. 2785. Miss A.G. Melish received a separate passport as well, dated 15 March 1845. She is described as forty-five years old, five feet tall, forehead middling, eyes gray, nose thin, mouth small, chin sharp, hair brown, complexion fair, face round (p. 1, passport no. 31).
18. Andrew Eastwick to Charles James, London, May 20th, 1845, Tuesday, Eastwick Letters. Charles Quicksall James (1808–1900) was Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick’s brother (James Genealogy, Eastwick Letters).
19. NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2, passport nos. 1638, 1640.
20. NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2, passport no. 1639.
21. Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer [his father-in-law], Alexandroffsky, February 27, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Cast Iron Foundry near St. Petersburg, June 2nd, 1844, Sunday, with additional entries by Edward Eastwick to his mother and brothers on June 4, 1844, Tuesday, and June 6th, 1844, Thursday, Eastwick Letters. There were two dwellings, one on either side of the Works. Andrew and Edward Eastwick lived in one of them, along with Joseph Harrison Jr. It is described extensively, along with its garden in the abovementioned letter of 2 June 1844, from Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, with whom he had left a map of the Works. The house was in need of repair. It was not as pretty as and smaller than the other dwelling, but they had no choice, as Foulon, the former director of the Works before their conversion, still lived in the other dwelling. In mid-July 1844, Andrew and Edward Eastwick and the Harrisons moved into the dwelling vacated by Foulon. This house and garden are described briefly in a letter from Edward Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick dated Alexandroffsky, July 19, 1844 Friday. Some reference to it can also be found in the letter from Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick dated St. Petersburg, 3 July 1844.

22. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works St. Petersburg December 12th/24th 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
23. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works St. Petersburg December 12th/24th 1847 Friday.
24. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky November 7th/19th 1848 Sunday.
25. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky November 7th/19th 1848 Sunday.
26. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, St. Petersburg, June 8th/20th 1848 Tuesday; Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky November 7th/19th 1848 Sunday.
27. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, St. Petersburg, June 8th/20th 1848 Tuesday.
28. Lydia Eastwick to Andrew Eastwick, Philadelphia, February 23rd, 1845 Thursday. In 1845, February 23 was a Sunday.
29. Lydia Eastwick to Andrew Eastwick, Philadelphia, March 25th 1845 Tuesday. All preceding details about Miss Melish's background and personal qualities are taken from this letter.
30. Agreement between Lydia Ann Eastwick and Anna Melish 25 April 1845, Eastwick Letters.
31. Anna G. Melish to Andrew Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, July 20, 1845 Sunday.
32. Anna G. Melish to Andrew Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, July 20, 1845 Sunday. Andrew Eastwick's serious approach to life is also reflected in his comments on a children's birthday party at the Harrisons':

There is to be a big time upstairs today celebrating Henry and Annie's birthdays. All our little ones, as well as some 30 or 40 more big and little, I understand are invited to take dinner and cut capers in the afternoon and evening. Such nonsense you know I do not approve of. I will therefore leave a description of all the preparations and jollifications to be given to you by some of your brothers who doubtless will write you on the subject. (Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg December 12th/24th 1847 Friday).

He did not, however, forbid his children to attend the party.

33. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, October 17/29th 1847 Friday. On 3/15 May 1847, the Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti (p. 488) published one of the three required announcements of departure for Anna Melish, a citizen of the United States of America, who was living in the Rozhdestvenskaia District First Ward in the house of Suchkov, which was located between Dyogtiarnaia and Mytnenskaia streets and between II and III Rozhdestvenskaia streets (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', pp. 154, 155). Although the Rozhdestvenskaia District was larger than all the other districts, it was less populated. Its streets were badly paved, the buildings were poor-looking and ugly, and the majority of its inhabitants were peasants who worked as coach drivers or did other unskilled labor (Pushkarev, Nikolaevskii Peterburg, p. 64).

Perhaps Miss Melish canceled the trip that should have followed the three announcements, for a notice of her death appeared in the New York Post of 6 October 1847, saying that she died on 8 August 1847 on the barque Eurotas and was the daughter of the late John Melish (1771–1822) of Philadelphia, an accomplished map-maker and author. The Eurotas (Capt. Lunt) was going from St. Petersburg to Boston. It cleared Elsinore, Denmark, on 20 July 1847, and arrived at Boston on 10 September 1847 (The Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, July 26, 1847; Lloyd's List, July 26 1847, and September 30, 1847).

Miss Melish does not appear in the 1830 or 1840 US Federal Census for Philadelphia or anywhere else in the United States, but if she was living in someone else's household, she would not be named in these censuses. Margaret Melish, the widow of John Melish, survived her husband, but it has not been possible to find her in the 1830 or 1840 censuses either, and therefore to say whether she was the mother of Anna Melish.

34. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, October 17/29th 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
35. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, December 12th/24th 1847 Friday.
36. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, St. Petersburg, June 8th/20th 1848 Tuesday.
37. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick [letter addressed to all four sons], St. Petersburg, January 14th/26th 1849 Friday;

- Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, London March 14th 1849 Wednesday.
38. Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, Hamburg March 28 1849 Wednesday.
  39. Harrison, Winans and Eastwick “opened a house in London for the transaction of the mercantile part of our business in [England],” and “all letters hereafter for us must be directed, care of Harrison, Winans & Eastwick, No. 1 Crooked Lane, Chambers, London” (A.M. Eastwick to Charles James, London, May 20th, 1845, Tuesday).
  40. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, May 12th/24th 1848 Wednesday.
  41. Andrew M. Eastwick to Lydia A. Eastwick, Hamburg March 28 1849 Wednesday.
  42. Edward Eastwick to his Aunt Mary, Alexandroffsky, June 21st, 1847 Monday.
  43. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, January 18th/30th 1848 Sunday.
  44. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, St. Petersburg, April 2nd/14th 1848 Friday; Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, April 21st/3rd May 1848 Wednesday.
  45. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, April 21st/3rd May 1848 Wednesday.
  46. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 279.
  47. Haywood, p. 404.
  48. Haywood, p. 418n84.
  49. Haywood, p. 418n84.
  50. Haywood, p. 419n110.
  51. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to R.G. Fairbanks, Alexandroffsky, February 26, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George H. Prince, Alexandroffsky, April 24, 1849; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George H. Prince, April 29, 1849.
  52. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 404.
  53. Haywood, p. 404.

54. Haywood, pp. 404, 418n84; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, April 4, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1.
55. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, May 17, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 35.
56. Lydia Anne Eastwick to Andrew M. Eastwick (in London) Alexandroffsky February 28th/12th March 1849 Monday, Eastwick Letters.
57. Andrew M. Eastwick to Mrs. Lydia A. Eastwick, Care of Charles E. Lex, Esq. Sixth near Arch Street Philadelphia, Pa. United States, St. Petersburg September 15th/27th 1850 Friday. All quotations and information in this paragraph are taken from this letter.
58. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 404, 418n85.
59. Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 19th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34.
60. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 404, 418n86.
61. Haywood, p. 411, 419n104.
62. Haywood, p. 411, 418n105.
63. Joseph Harrison to Andrew Eastwick, Paris, October 3, 1862, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 6.
64. All quotations in this paragraph are taken from Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, p. 11.
65. Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, p. 12; Mrs. Andrew M. Eastwick, “Bartram Hall,” written for the City History Society of Philadelphia and read at the meeting of Wednesday, 14 December 1910, Publications of the City History Society of Philadelphia (Philadelphia: published by the Society, 1930), vol. 2, pp. 209–213. The article includes a portrait of Andrew McCalla Eastwick.
66. William was born on 1/13 August 1846 and baptized on 29 October/10 November 1846 by Rev. Dr. Edward Law (see Image 253) (PREC STP, no. 5665). His death date is taken from his tombstone in The Woodlands Cemetery (R. Cooper, Philadelphia, PA, to E. Harden, 27 September 2004).
67. RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 4. Register of the Chapel of the British Factory St. Petersburg [1847–1867], no. 5931.
68. Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, pp. 12, 13; The Rev. C. Reed Brinkman, rector of St. James’ Church of Kinsessing,

- Philadelphia, PA, to E. Harden, 22 June 2004; “Children of Lydia and Andrew Eastwick,” page not numbered, Eastwick Letters.
69. The biographical material about Edward Peers Eastwick, Joseph Harrison Eastwick, and Charles James Eastwick cited here comes from Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, p. 14.
  70. Biographical material about Philip Garrett Eastwick is taken from The Morning Oregonian, February 3, 1905, and Montgomery, Pennsylvania Biography, p. 14.
  71. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works St. Petersburg November 14/26 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
  72. The sources for these examples of friendship are the St. Petersburg diaries of Anna Whistler and Eastwick Letters. From the diaries: entry for [Saturday] November 14 [1846], NYPL: AWPD, Part II; entry for Saturday Dec 5th [1846]; entry for Preston. September. Saturday 10th [1847]; entry for sometime after January 1, 1848; entry for September 1848. From Eastwick Letters: Joseph H. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, 23rd October (O.S.) Friday; Joseph H. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, St. Petersburg, February 13th, 1848 Sunday; Joseph H. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, Alexandroffsky, April 21st, 1848 Friday; Andrew M. Eastwick to Edward P. Eastwick, St. Petersburg, April 2nd/14th 1848 Friday.
  73. Entry of April 28: April 26, AMW 1850 Diary. Mrs. Eastwick had just given birth to Lydia Ann (3 April 1850), their eighth surviving child.
  74. Entry of May 4: May 2.
  75. Entry of May 16: May 14.
  76. Entry of Mon., May 22: May 20.
  77. Anna Whistler to Deborah Haden, New Brighton, 4 May 1860, GUL: Whistler Collection, W504.
  78. Eastwick, “Bartram Hall,” p. 212. Both Anna Whistler and Willie, together and separately, were visitors at Bartram Hall. See Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 2 December [1857], GUL: Whistler Collection, W487; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Philadelphia, 29 June 1858, W492; Anna Whistler to James H Gamble [Philadelphia] [16/30 October 1858], W473 (the place and date of this letter has been suggested by the Centre for Whistler Studies); Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble,

- Philadelphia, 17 October [1858], W494; Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Philadelphia, 18 November 1858, W496.
79. Anna Whistler to M.E. Eastwick, Albyns. Essex. Sept. 8th 1874, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 65–68; Anna Whistler to my dear young Friend. Talbot House. 43 St. Marys Terrace. Hastings. Wednesday. July 19. 1876, fols. 81–84; and possibly Anna Whistler to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, 2 Lindsey Houses, Chelsea. London. Sat., Oct. 29th 1870.
80. Anna M. Whistler to Lydia Ann Eastwick, 43 St. Mary's Terrace Hastings July 4, 1879 Friday, Eastwick Letters, fols. 498–503. Andrew McCalla Eastwick's death notice appeared in The Ledger, February 10 and 11, 1879.

ELLERBY<sup>1</sup>

Thomas Scales Ellerby (Manchester, Lancashire 18 March 1810 – Toronto, ON 11 June 1892; see Image 256)<sup>2</sup> was the son of Martha (Scales) and William Ellerby. His father, a bookseller, was the agent to a religious tract society at No. 15 Picadilly, Manchester.<sup>3</sup>

Thomas Scales Ellerby, having “from infancy ... enjoyed the inestimable privileges arising from the instructions and examples of parental piety, and at an early age [been] deeply impressed with sentiments of religion,”<sup>4</sup> left his parents’ home in Manchester when he was fourteen. While away from home, he lost his piety and religion. “This was [his] character during a residence of nearly seven years in Leeds, and whilst attending the ministry of the Rev<sup>d</sup> R.W. Hamilton – and also that of [his] relative the Rev. Thomas Scales.”<sup>5</sup> On returning to his parents in Manchester, he eventually regained his faith through “the ministerial labours of the Rev<sup>d</sup> Dr McAll.”<sup>6</sup> In Manchester, he worked as a clerk in the firm of Radford’s and Company, iron founders and merchants, for four years until “the death of a confidential Servant” resulted in his being offered the post. As his acceptance “would ... have been quite inconsistent with [his] views as to the ministry,” he consulted with Dr. McAll and the Rev. Mr. Scales and as a result declined the offer and instead set about “pursuing a course of private study.” He wrote a memoir called Memorials of Felix Neff, the Alpine Pastor in 1833.<sup>7</sup> He had taught in “Dr. McAll’s Sabbath School, ... been a visiting member of the Christian Instruction Society and ... frequently addressed small congregations both in Manchester, and in an adjourning village.” He was “admitted to the communion of Dr. McAll’s church in February 1834.” In applying to the non-conformist Highbury College on 22 April 1835, he stated that he had “just completed his twenty-fourth year.”<sup>8</sup>

Thomas Scales Ellerby attended Highbury College from 1835 to 1839. On 3 July 1840, he was married to Mary Bealey (c. 1810 – 18 August 1885), daughter of Ralph Bealey, bleacher, at the Providence Chapel, High Street, Rochdale, Lancashire, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Independents, by John Ely, Minister of Leeds.<sup>9</sup> He was ordained at Islington Chapel, Middlesex, on 15 July 1840, for the English and American Church in St. Petersburg,<sup>10</sup> which “was opened for public worship” on 24 August / 5 September 1840.<sup>11</sup> The Ellerbys lived in “very nice apartments” in the church, which was “a very neat and pretty building, large, airy and roomy,” with an organ.<sup>12</sup> Ellerby served in St. Petersburg from 1840 to 1853.<sup>13</sup> In a history of the church, his sermons were said to have been “thoughtful and scholarly,” and he himself was described as “possessed of great ability and tact.”<sup>14</sup> A parishioner said they “like[d] him very much,” found him “very amiable – pious & devoted & withal a good scholar, tho not so eloquent a speaker as Mr. [J. Croumbie] Brown.”<sup>15</sup> There was a great increase in the membership of the church during his tenure.<sup>16</sup> In 1844, he started Sunday services at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225) – holding them at Joseph Harrison Jr’s, house – for the English and American mechanics employed there, “and partly as a result of these efforts there came into existence the Congregational Church at Alexandroffsky.”<sup>17</sup> A feature of his preaching at Alexandrofsky was an annual sermon to the young.<sup>18</sup> His poor health “compelled him in 1845, and again in 1849, to leave” Russia for a time, which created some difficulties, as he did not have a clergyman in his congregation who might stand in for him.<sup>19</sup> While in England in 1845, he wrote “an appeal to the British Legislature,” asking that, as the British and American Chapel, “since [its] formation ... twenty-five years ago,” had performed divine worship and regularly observed “the Rites of Baptism, and Burial according to the usages of the Congregational Dissenters of Great Britain,” its “right to perform the Marriage Ceremony” be recognized.<sup>20</sup> In May or June 1853, his health failed “to such a degree that the physician thought the delay of another week dangerous.”<sup>21</sup> He was safely in England by 2/14 June, and the fears that he might never “be able to live and labor again in [the] climate” of St. Petersburg proved true.<sup>22</sup>

The BRBC STP 1845, which also contains entries made in not-always-specified subsequent years, carries the information that the Ellerbys had two sons and two daughters and that “Eleonora Lee, nurse, spinster,” lived with them at the Chapel.<sup>23</sup> In 1846, the Ellerbys had at least three daughters,<sup>24</sup> and in 1848, the BRBC STP 1845 lists the three daughters as Lucy (St. Petersburg c. 1842 – Toronto, ON 18 July 1920), Alice (St. Petersburg 1844 – Toronto, ON 19 December 1900), and

Emily (Manchester, Lancashire c. 1845 – Toronto, ON 29 January 1930).<sup>25</sup>

There is information that Ellerby next served as chaplain of the British Embassy in Vienna, but a check of Foreign Office lists of clergy at British embassies has failed to confirm this.<sup>26</sup> He then settled in Toronto, Ontario, where he was pastor from 29 May 1856 to March 1866 of Zion Congregational Church, “historically, ... the mother church of congregationalism in Ontario.”<sup>27</sup> In 1866, he joined establishment:<sup>28</sup> i.e., the Anglican Church. “He was ordained deacon on 28 October 1866, by the First Bishop of Huron”<sup>29</sup> and, on 17 February 1867, priest. In 1866–1867, he served as incumbent of Exeter, from 1867–1870 was curate of St. George’s Church in Toronto, and from 1870–1882 incumbent of St. George’s in Sarnia, Ontario.<sup>30</sup> He was superannuated from the Diocese of Huron in 1882<sup>31</sup> and took up residence again in Toronto, where, “on the death of Rev. Johnstone Vicars, in 1886 [he] was appointed by the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews to succeed him as their Canadian Agent, settled in this city.”<sup>32</sup> Although elderly, Rev. Ellerby “threw himself into this work with great energy,” pursued “it with more than ordinary ability, perseverance and success,” and seems to have held this post until his death.<sup>33</sup> In 1888, in her will dated 8 September, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, who had been a communicant of the British and American Chapel in St. Petersburg when Rev. Ellerby was rector, bequeathed one hundred pounds to him.<sup>34</sup>

Mary (Bealey) Ellerby died in Toronto on 18 August 1885, at the age of seventy-five, and was buried in St. James’ Cemetery. Reverend Ellerby died in his 83rd year on Saturday, 11 June 1892, in Toronto at his residence, 237 Spadina Avenue, and was buried on 14 June in St. James’ Cemetery,<sup>35</sup> in the same plot as his wife. Lucy M. (age seventy-eight) and Emily C. (age eighty-five) are also buried there.

Alice Louisa Ellerby married George Mountain Evans (Ireland 1828 – Orillia, ON 23 May 1891) in Sarnia, Ontario, on 21 December 1870. The monument on their graves in St. James’ Cemetery records that four infant children are also buried there: Mary (d. 2 September 1874, one year, one month old); Edith (d. 2 January 1876, five days old), Theodore (d. 8 February 1877, four days old), and Henry (d. 17 December 1884, three years, nine months old). Buried here as well are two sons who survived: Charles F.E. Evans-Lewis (1871 – 10 May 1939) and Vernon L. Evans (1878 – April 1955).

* * *

There was also a niece of Mary (Bealey) Ellerby's in St. Petersburg working as governess to her aunt's daughters. She was Sarah Bealey Schofield (b. Rochdale, Lancashire 30 October 1817; bap. Rochdale, Lancashire 28 December 1820; d. Stirling 5 February 1891; see Image 257),<sup>36</sup> daughter of Mrs. Ellerby's sister, Sarah (Bealey) Schofield (b. Radcliffe, Lancashire c. 1800 – after 1861)<sup>37</sup> and of Robert Schofield (Yorkshire, England c. 1797 – Buenos Aires 23 September 1825).<sup>38</sup> Her father, a merchant in South America, was a partner in a disastrous fishing and livestock business venture in the Falkland Islands in 1823–24.<sup>39</sup> He died of alcoholism in Buenos Aires on 23 September 1825, at the age of twenty-eight, and was buried there in the Socorro Protestant Cemetery.<sup>40</sup> After his death, her mother returned to England.<sup>41</sup>

Anna Whistler recorded that Sarah Bealey Schofield was in Russia in 1846 and 1847.<sup>42</sup> In July 1848, she was still or again in Russia, and was recorded by her future husband, Charles Bell (1831 – Stirling 28 February 1915), as being among the respectful crowd at Alexandrofsky (she was staying at the Eastwicks) on 10/22 July, when his father's coffin was being taken to St. Petersburg for a funeral service at the British and American Chapel.<sup>43</sup> Sarah Bealey Schofield and Charles Bell were married at the Parish Church in the Parish of Radcliffe on 3 September 1857 from the house of her uncle, Richard Bealey, J.P., Radcliffe, Manchester.<sup>44</sup> They continued to live in Russia, returning to England in 1867, when "Charles Bell left the firm of Muir and Merrilees." They lived first in Brighton "for his health," and then moved to Scotland.

NOTES

1. I am deeply indebted to Clifford Collier of the Toronto Genealogical Society for his extensive research on the Ellerby family in Canada on my behalf.
2. Journal of the Incorporated Synod of the Church of England in the Diocese of Toronto, 1892 [JISCE] (1892): p. 33. See also "Deaths," The

- Toronto Daily Mail*, June 13, 1892. This newspaper account contradicts his age at death given in JISCE. For his birth date, see The Incorporated Synod of Huron Fonds, Index and Abstract of the Clergy Register of the Diocese of Huron, vol. 1, p. 5.
3. Pigot's Directory of Chester ... Yorkshire (1829), pp. 349, 402. That the William Ellerby listed in Pigot's was the father of Thomas Scales Ellerby is corroborated by the latter's marriage certificate (see Note 9 in this biography).
  4. Thomas Scales Ellerby's application to Highbury College, London, dated Manchester 22nd April 1835, 352/3/1i, Dr. Williams's Library, London.
  5. Thomas Ellerby's application to Highbury College (see Note 4 above). Rev. Thomas Scales was his maternal uncle. Reverend Richard Winter Hamilton (6 July 1794 – 18 July 1848) was minister of Belgrave Independent Chapel in Leeds. See the entry for [Wednesday] April 15th [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, and accompanying Notes 299 and 317.
  6. Thomas Ellerby's application to Highbury College (see Note 4 above). Reverend Dr. McAll wrote the recommendation supporting his application to Highbury College.
  7. T.S. Ellerby, Memorials of Felix Neff, the Alpine Pastor (London: Hamilton, Adams; Manchester: W. Ellerby; Liverpool: D. Marples, 1833).
  8. All the foregoing information is from Thomas Ellerby's application to Highbury College (see Note 4 above).
  9. Certified copy of an Entry of Marriage for Thomas Scales Ellerby and Mary Bealey, GRO; William H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. Sept. 14/26. 1840 and Sept. 27 / Oct. 9. 1840 (one letter), MHS: Ropes Papers.
  10. "Ordinations of Ministers and Missionaries from October 1839 to October 1840," The Congregational Calendar and Family Almanac for 1840 (London: Jackson and Walford, [1840]), p. 101. The information on his "Biography Card" at Dr. William's Library says he was ordained on 15 July 1839, but as it was copied from printed sources, including the above, it seems to be a copying error.
  11. Joseph S. Ropes to his aunt [Mrs. Hardy Ropes], St. P., June 24 / July 6. 1841, MHS: Ropes Papers.

12. Joseph S. Ropes to Mrs. Hardy Ropes, St. P., Sept. 20 / Oct. 2. 1840; Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P., June 24 / July 6. 1841.
13. Jubilee Commemorative Volume, p. 87. Here it is stated that Mr. Ellerby served until 1853, and that in 1854 the pastor was the Rev. Henry Mills Haskell, BA. A copy of this rare publication is held by Dr. Williams's Library. See also George Lawrence Parker to Harriet Ropes Cabot, Carver, MA, MHS: Ropes Papers. Reverend Parker was rector of the British–American Church from October 1906–1909. See his article “Local Links with Russia,” Boston Herald, September 1941.
14. Jubilee Commemorative Volume, p. 28.
15. William H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P., Sept. 14/26. 1840 & Sept. 27 / Oct. 9. 1840 (one letter), MHS: Ropes Papers. Ropes said Mrs. Ellerby was “a most lovely woman” and “upon very intimate terms with [his wife].” See also Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P., Sept. 19 / Oct. 1. 1840.
16. Jubilee Commemorative Volume, p. 28.
17. Jubilee Commemorative Volume, pp. 26–27.
18. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, [St.P.] Sat. morning Jan. 20th 1849. GUL: Whistler Collection, W378.
19. Jubilee Commemorative Volume, p. 28.
20. Thomas S. Ellerby to James Cooke Evans, Esq., Manchester, 3rd Sept. 1845. He pointed out that he had no difficulty in performing the marriage ceremony for Americans and had “the authority of Col<sup>l</sup> Todd the American Ambassador to the Court of Russia – And also one of our hearers for affirming that all such Marriages are deemed valid in the United States” (FO 65/340, PRO).
21. Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand to William Ladd Ropes, Peterhoff, June 2/14 [1853], MHS: Ropes Papers, Ms. N-174. The year assigned to this letter is based on the fact that William Ladd Ropes marked it “Rec’d 8 July 1853.”
22. Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand to William Ladd Ropes, Peterhoff, June 2/14 [1853]. She makes it clear that because of Rev. Ellerby's departure “our little chapel is shut, in consequence of the difficulty of getting anyone to take Mr. E's place.”
23. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 17.
24. Entry for August 12/24 [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.

25. Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, p. 86.
26. “St. George’s Church, Sarnia,” in In Commemoration of One Hundred Years of the Ministrations of the Anglican Church in the City and Township of Sarnia, 1840–1940 ([Sarnia, ON]: Canadian Printers, [1940]), no pagination.
27. “Resignations, Removals and Settlements, 1855,” The Congregational Yearbook (1856): p. 202; J. Ross Robertson, Landmarks of Toronto, 4th series (Toronto: printed by the author, 1904), p. 474; JISCE, p. 33. Zion Church had burned down in February 1855, and Rev. Ellerby’s predecessor had resigned in June of that year. The new church was dedicated in September 1856 (Robertson, Landmarks, p. 474).
28. “Removals of Ministers,” The Congregational Yearbook (1867): p. 256.
29. JISCE, p. 33; Robertson, Landmarks, p. 474; Huron Index and Abstract, vol. 1, p. 5.
30. Crockford’s Clerical Directory for 1890, p. 401; Huron Index and Abstract, vol. 1, p. 5.
31. Crockford’s Clerical Directory for 1890, p. 401. Elsewhere, it says that he resigned and was superannuated in 1881, while the dates given under his photograph are 1870–1882 (St. George’s Church Sarnia, Ontario 125th Anniversary 1848–1973 (Sarnia, ON: s.n., 1973), no pagination).
32. JISCE, p. 33.
33. JISCE, p. 33; W.T. Gidney, The History of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews (London: London Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews, 1908), p. 518.
34. If he predeceased Mrs. Gellibrand (which he did), the money was to be divided equally among those of his children still living when she died. She described him in the will as “now residing in Toronto, Canada.”
35. Gidney, History of the LSPCAJ, p. 518. The age at death of all members of the Ellerby family is taken from family tree records at St. James’ Cemetery.
36. Register of Births and Baptisms of St. Stephen’s Church at the Countess of Huntingdon’s denomination in the parish of Rochdale, Lancashire, from 1810 to 1837. TNA ref. RG 4/996, fol. 65, NAUK.
37. 1861 Census for Salford, Lancashire.

38. IGI; certified copy of an Entry of Marriage for Charles Bell and Sarah Bealey Schofield, GRO.
39. Roberto C. Laver, The Falklands/Malvinas Case: Breaking the Deadlock in the Anglo-Argentine Sovereignty Dispute, vol. 40 of Developments in International Law (The Hague: Nijhoof, 2001), p. 54.
40. Register of Burials in the First Protestant Cemetery, 1821–1833, Archives of St. John’s Cathedral, Buenos Aires.
41. It has not been possible to find a death date for Sarah Schofield’s mother.
42. Entry for August 12/124 [1846], NYPL: AWPD, Part II; entry for January 11/23, 1847.
43. Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, pp. 85–86.
44. Information in this and the final two sentences is from Romanes, p. 87.

FAIRBANKS

Reuben Goodale Fairbanks, son of Silas and Eleanor (Goodale) Fairbanks, was born on 29 December 1804 in Litchfield, New York, one of twelve children.<sup>1</sup> He married on 11 March 1831 in Windham, Connecticut, Lucy Lee Webb (Windham, CT 24 November 1806 – West Farm, Westchester, New York March 1870).<sup>2</sup> At this time, he was living in Brooklyn (a part of Pomfret, Connecticut, in the 1880s).<sup>3</sup>

Lucy Lee (Webb) and Reuben Goodale Fairbanks had nine children: George Carmichael (1835–1837), Mary Eleanor (Charlton, MA 16 June 1837 – Bronx, New York 10 April 1908), Edward Reuben (1838–1839), Henry Webb (9 September 1840 – August 1865), Sarah Lucy (b. 23 September 1841), Annie Julia (b. 29 January 1843), Charles Albert (1846–1846), Helen Louise (25 December 1847 – 25 October 1848), and Alice Amanda (b. 22 October 1851).<sup>4</sup>

Reuben Goodale Fairbanks was a partner in the railroad-contracting firm of Carmichael, Fairbanks and Otis of Westfield, Massachusetts, in the 1830s.<sup>5</sup> Otis died in 1839, and the firm became Carmichael, Fairbanks and Company by 1840.<sup>6</sup> The identity of Carmichael and Fairbanks has been established by a search of Hampden County (MA) Deeds, which confirmed “a deed involving Daniel Carmichael, R.G. Fairbank & Co., ‘gentlemen’ of Springfield, Mass., who bought land in Springfield in 1841.”<sup>7</sup> In another deed, dated February 1840, “Carmichael, Fairbank and Co. of Springfield, ‘gentlemen’” sold land in Springfield. This deed was not recorded until 1855. The deed was signed by “Daniel Carmichael and R.G. Fairbank.”<sup>8</sup> R.G. Fairbanks, nevertheless, did not appear in the censuses for Massachusetts consulted for 1820–1880.<sup>9</sup>

When “the question of obtaining American mechanics” to come to Russia “to set up and supervise the operation” of the excavators and pile drivers arose in late 1842, Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) recommended and vouched for Fairbanks “as an experienced and reliable man.”<sup>10</sup> The firm had experience “in operating steam excavators during the construction of the Western Railroad.”<sup>11</sup> Captain William H. Swift called Fairbanks “one of my oldest and best contractors.”<sup>12</sup> On 18 March 1843, a “Mr. Fairbanks” was issued a diplomatic passport by the U.S. Embassy in London “as bearer of despatches to St. Petersburg.”<sup>213</sup> He arrived in Russia some time between 4 and 18 April 1843: “nothing of any great interest has ... transpired except the arrival of M<sup>r</sup> Fairbanks, a person invited by this government to contract for the excavations etc. to be made upon the proposed line of railroad between this and Moscow.”<sup>214</sup> In July 1843, Colonel Todd (see Image 278), the U.S. envoy to St. Petersburg, reported that Fairbanks “had made a contract with the Russian Government for half the route ... presumably ... the Northern Administration.”<sup>215</sup> In praising America, Maxwell singled him out, among others: “here is M<sup>r</sup> Fairbanks astonishing the natives with piledriving machines and excavators.”<sup>216</sup> But this steam machinery was “to find limited application and [its] operation ... was far from a signal success.”<sup>217</sup> By “late 1846, the use of his steam machinery was coming to an end.”<sup>218</sup>

It is not possible to say exactly when Fairbanks left Russia, but in April 1846, when he was granted a patent for Scotland, his address was Cecil Street in the county of Middlesex.<sup>19</sup> He became the agent of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick in London, and when the remains of John Bouttatz Whistler, the youngest Whistler child, were being sent home in October 1846, Fairbanks was responsible for shipping them from London to New York.<sup>20</sup> By November 1847, Fairbanks and George Henry Prince had announced that they were “going into the Ice business – exporting it to London.”<sup>21</sup> Fairbanks wrote every Friday to Major Whistler, and when James was left in England in the fall of 1848, he could avail himself of this opportunity to send a letter to his parents.

Fairbanks had come to Russia without his wife and children, who Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) said were living in Pittsfield. Inquiries to the Berkshire Athenaeum<sup>22</sup> produced negative results. It is more likely that Anna Whistler made a mistake and meant Litchfield, the town in New York State where Fairbanks was born. Perhaps he had sent his family to stay with his relatives while he was in Russia. Inquiries to the historian for the Town of Litchfield and to the Herkimer County Historical Society also produced negative results.<sup>23</sup>

After Fairbanks moved from Russia to England, his family joined him there. Anna Whistler met Mrs. Fairbanks and the children in July 1848. She did not record any of the children’s names in her diary. Fairbanks, however, had written Andrew McCalla Eastwick (see Image 233) on 2 June 1848, congratulating him on the birth of George Whistler Eastwick and telling him that he had lost three of his own sons, “who would now have been of the respective ages of 13, 9, and 2 years.”<sup>24</sup> He still had one son and four daughters.<sup>25</sup> The names of the children Anna Whistler could have met were, therefore, Henry, the only surviving son, who would have been about seven years old, and the daughters Mary, Sarah, Annie, and Helen. Mary would have been about eleven years old, Sarah about six years old, Annie about five years old, and Helen about seven months old. On 25 October 1848, Helen died.<sup>26</sup>

In 1860, R.G. Fairbanks, an engraver, fifty-five years old, and his wife, Lucy, fifty-three years old, were residing in the First District, Sixth Ward, of Brooklyn City in Kings County State of New York with their children: Mary, born in Massachusetts, twenty-one years old; Henry, born in Massachusetts, nineteen years old; Sarah, born in Massachusetts, eighteen years old; Annie, born in Massachusetts, sixteen years old; and Alice, born in New York, eight years old.<sup>27</sup> The female named Margaret, whose name is listed in the 1860 Census after those of the children, who was twenty-one years old, born in Ireland, and the same age as Mary Fairbanks, must have been a servant, although this occupation is not indicated next to her name. Usually the first and last name of servants and visitors are listed, but the ditto marks next to her name seem to indicate that her surname was also Fairbanks.<sup>28</sup>

In the 1870 U.S. Federal Census, Reuben Fairbanks, railroad contractor, sixty-four years of age, was living in Fordham, West Farm, in Westchester County, New York with Mary, born in Massachusetts, twenty-five years old (listed as 21 years old in 1860), and Alice, born in New York, eighteen years old, both “at home.”<sup>29</sup> Lucy Lee (Webb) Fairbanks had died in March 1870 (see Note 2 in this biography).

In the 1875 New York Census, Reuben G. Fairbanks, agent for Silex Lead Company, was living in Fort Ann, Washington, New York, with two female servants.<sup>30</sup> In the 1880 U.S. Federal Census, R.G. Fairbanks, widower, Silex Manufacturer, age seventy-five, was living in Fort Ann, Washington, New York, with Mary, age forty-two, and Sarah, age forty-eight.<sup>31</sup>

He died on 5 October 1882, age seventy-seven, of pneumonia, in Manhattan, New York.<sup>32</sup> His daughter, Sarah L. Fairbanks, was named as administratrix in the probate records.<sup>33</sup> He was buried in Woodlawn Cemetery in the Bronx, New York.<sup>34</sup>

Alice Amanda Fairbanks married in Manhattan, New York, on 3 May 1883, Sidwell S. Randall.<sup>35</sup>

NOTES

1. Fairbanks, Genealogy, p. 255.
2. Certified copy of the Fairbanks/Webb Marriage Record, Office of the Town Clerk for the Town of Windham, in a letter from Ann M. Bushey, town clerk, Willimantic, CT, to E. Harden, 6 April 2005; US Census Mortality Schedules, New York, 1850–1880, for Lucy L. Fairbanks.
3. Fairbanks, Genealogy, p. 841.
4. Leonard Lee and Sarah Fiske Lee, comps., John Lee of Farmington, Hartford Co., Conn., and His Descendants, 2nd ed. (Meriden, CT: Republican Record Book Print for the Lee Association, 1897), p. 96. Mary Eleanor is listed here as having died in 1837, but she was still alive in 1870 (1870 US Census for Fordham, West Farm, in Westchester County, New York, 11 July 1870); Massachusetts Births and Christenings, 1639–1915, NYPL; New York City Municipal Deaths, NYPL.
5. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 108, 123.
6. Haywood, p. 123.
7. Hampden County (MA) Deeds, bk. 113:548, in a letter from Cynthia Hagar Krusell, local historian, Marshfield, MA, to E. Harden, Marshfield Hills, MA, 28 March 2003.
8. Hampden County (MA) Deeds, bk. 175:195, Cynthia Hagar Krusell to E. Harden, 28 March 2003.
9. Cynthia Hagar Krusell to E. Harden, 28 March 2003.
10. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 108, 123.
11. Haywood, pp. 108, 123.
12. William H. Swift to Gen. J.G. Swift, Washington, May 13, 1843, NYPL: Swift Papers.
13. NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2.
14. John S. Maxwell to [his father] Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, April 18, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 10.
15. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 108–109, 123.

16. John S. Maxwell to [his uncle] Dr. John B. Stevenson, St. Petersburg, May 6, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.
17. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 109, 123.
18. Haywood, pp. 109, 123.
19. In October 1846, The Edinburgh New Philosophical Journal announced that Reuben Goodale Fairbanks had, on 13 April 1846, been granted a patent for “certain improvements in machinery and apparatus for making moulding or manufacturing bricks, tiles, and other articles from earthy or plastic materials” (“List of Patents granted for Scotland from 23d March to 22d June 1846,” The Edinburgh New Philosophical Journal 41 (1846): p. 209).
20. John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York. Monday. December 13. 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers; John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York. January 22. 1847.
21. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fol. 50. See also the reference to this undertaking in the diary of Henry K. Fettyplace, who visited St. Petersburg briefly in July 1848 and met his “old friend and schoolmate, George Prince,” while calling on Major Whistler (entry for Monday 24th July, PEM: Fettyplace Journal). Fettyplace mistakenly thought Mr. Fairbanks was an Englishman.
22. Kathleen M. Reilly, Berkshire Athenaeum, Pittsfield, MA, to E. Harden, 19 May 1988; Ruth Degenhardt to E. Harden, answer, dated 16 July 1988, on a photocopy of a letter from E. Harden to her.
23. Sylvia V. Betts, Historian, Town of Litchfield, Clayville, NY, to E. Harden, 8 August 1994; no response from the Herkimer County Historical Society.
24. R.G. Fairbanks to A.M. Eastwick, 1 Crookside Lane, London, June 2, 1848 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
25. R.G. Fairbanks to A.M. Eastwick, June 2, 1848.
26. Lee and Lee, John Lee, p. 96.
27. The 1860 US Federal Census for the First District 6th Ward of Brooklyn City in Kings County State of New York, 16 June 1860 ... Post Office Brooklyn.
28. The 1860 US Federal Census ... Post Office Brooklyn.
29. 1870 US Federal Census for Fordham, Town of West Farm in the County of Westchester, State of New York, 11 July 1870.

30. 1875 New York State Census, NYPL.
31. 1880 US Federal Census, NYPL.
32. Register of Burials, 1767–1970, Church Records, Episcopal Diocese of New York, NYPL.
33. New York Wills and Probate Records, 1659–1999, NYPL.
34. Register of Burials, 1767–1970, Church Records, Episcopal Diocese of New York, NYPL.
35. New York Marriages, 1686–1980, NYPL.

GIBSON

Abraham Gibson Priest (Rindge, NH 10 July 1791 – London 30 November 1852; see Image 279) was the son of John (1761–1830) and Rebecca (Gibson) Priest (1765–1814). He changed his name to Abraham Priest Gibson early in his life. He was appointed the American consul general in St. Petersburg in 1819 and served in this post for thirty-one years, resigning in 1850.<sup>1</sup> In St. Petersburg, he lived on Galernaia Street in the building belonging to Brandt, which stood alongside the building of the Holy Synod.<sup>2</sup> Through his “diligent reporting,” there exists “a fairly complete file of arrivals and departures of American ships and their cargoes” to and from Russia.<sup>3</sup> “The severity of the climate undermined [his] health to such an extent as to render a ... residence in a milder atmosphere absolutely necessary for its reestablishment.”<sup>4</sup> He annually “pass[ed] the winter months in the sunny south of Europe,” which enabled him “to serve for thirty-one years as one of the most competent and valuable American consuls.”<sup>5</sup> Anna Whistler’s diaries confusingly imply that his departure in 1846 was permanent, as he gave some of his furniture to the Whistlers on that occasion. John Stevenson Maxwell characterized him as “an amiable but sensitive old Bachelor, who has lived here long enough to be made quite nervous by the climate and been in office long enough to become particularly attached to all the forms of ceremony and etiquette.”<sup>6</sup> He saw Gibson as “a singular sort of a personage,” who “must amaze the faculty,”<sup>7</sup> and physically as “an extraordinary man. What a constitution he must have had.”<sup>8</sup> Gibson contracted tuberculosis while serving in Russia.<sup>9</sup> He resigned his post in 1850 and died, unmarried, on 30 November 1852 in London, England.<sup>10</sup>

NOTES

1. Mehitable Calef Copenhagen Wilson, John Gibson of Cambridge, Massachusetts and his Descendants, 1634–1899 (Washington, DC: McGill and Wallace, 1900), pp. 74–76.
2. Grech, Ves’ Peterburg 1846, p. 25; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 2, p. 39.
3. Norman E. Saul, “American Merchants in Russia, 1815–1845” (paper delivered at the American Association for the - Advancement of Slavic Studies [AAASS] Convention, Washington, DC, November 1990), note 27.

4. Patricia Herlihy, “The Honored Few: American Consuls in the Russian Empire, 1800–1870” (paper delivered at the AAASS Convention, Washington, DC, November 1990), p. 3.
  5. Herlihy, p. 3.
  6. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 9, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 21.
  7. John S. Maxwell to George Washington Whistler, Paris, November 18. 1845, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.
  8. John S. Maxwell to George Washington Whistler, New York. Monday–December 13. 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.
  9. Herlihy, “Honored Few,” p. 5.
  10. Wilson, John Gibson, p. 76; NEHGR 7, no. 2 (1853): 196. The NEHGR erroneously says he died in St. Petersburg.

HALL

Robert Hall was born 9/20 February 1761. He was taken from the English Navy into Russian service on 31 December 1774 / 11 January 1775 and came from Livorno (Leghorn) to Cronstadt in Vice-Admiral Samuel Greig's (1735–1788) squadron. He spent all of 1775 in the Naval Corps studying naval science and in 1776–1778 was at sea, first in the Gulf of Finland and then on the Baltic Sea. He was appointed warrant officer (michman) in May 1779 and spent the next two years sailing from Cronstadt to Livorno and back on the frigate Simeon in the squadron of Counter-Admiral Borisov. On 1/12 January 1782, he was made a lieutenant and, after completing a course on the Simeon from Cronstadt to the English Channel, was appointed to Arkhangelsk. In 1783–1784, he completed two tours from Arkhangelsk to Cronstadt on the frigate Voz'mislav and the ship Vladislav. It has not been possible to find any information for the period from his birth until he entered the English Navy.<sup>1</sup>

“In 1785 he joined the Joseph Billings [c. 1758–1806] Expedition. He played an important role in moving men and equipment across Siberia, and in building two ships – the Slava Rossii (Glory of Russia) and Dobroe Namerenie (Good Intent) – in Okhotsk. However, in September 1789 the Dobroe Namerenie, with Hall in command, was taken out to sea and subsequently floundered. In Nizhekamchatsk during 1789–1791 Hall built and launched another ship, the Chernyi Orel (Black Eagle), and sailed her with Billings in the Slava Rossii among the Aleutian Islands as far as Unalaska. Rather than moving on to the American continent for further exploration, the expedition headed into the Bering Sea, visiting St. Lawrence Island and in August entering St. Lawrence Bay on the Chukotskii Peninsula. From here Hall returned to Unalaska with Gavriil Sarychev [1763–1831] and wintered over, 1791–1792, at the settlement of Illiuliuk. They had a difficult time; 17 men died of scurvy and most of the others became too unfit to handle the ship for a summer of exploration. Hall, therefore, came back to Kamchatka and undertook no further activities related to the expedition. Although he was a key figure in the overall Billings initiative, and important as a shipbuilder, Hall's two voyages to Unalaska barely advanced Russian knowledge of the area or contributed to the scientific work of the enterprise.”<sup>22</sup>

“In 1790, Father Vasilii Sivtsov, chaplain to the navy expedition commanded by Joseph Billings, Roman Gall (Robert Hall), and Gavriil Sarychev at Three Saints Bay on Kodiak Island, chrismated a Tlingit man previously baptized by a layperson.”<sup>23</sup>

In 1805–1809, on the occasion of the rupture with England, he was removed from service and, together with other Englishmen in Russian service, sent to Moscow. Nevertheless, in that period he was made vice-admiral. He became a Russian citizen in 1810. He returned to St. Petersburg, and in 1811 was made commander-in-chief of the Black Sea fleet. In 1816, he was made commander of the Port of Riga. In 1830, he was made an admiral and appointed commander-in-chief of the Port of Arkhangelsk and military governor of the city.<sup>4</sup>

He received many orders, the final being, in 1839, the diamond attachments to the Order of Alexander Nevsky, which he had received in 1836.<sup>5</sup>

He died suddenly on 23 January / 4 February 1844, while standing during the Sunday morning service at the English Church in St. Petersburg (see Images 110–111).<sup>6</sup> His funeral took place in the English Church on Thursday, 27 January / 8 February.<sup>7</sup> Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5), who recorded attending the service, did not state on what day it took place, only that she attended. The mourners were predominantly military and she devoted her remarks to the pomp accorded Hall.<sup>8</sup> On the next Sunday (30 January / 11 February), Rev. Law (see Image 253) spoke with praise of Hall, while delivering a sermon that concentrated on death.<sup>9</sup> Hall was buried in the Volkov Lutheran Cemetery.<sup>10</sup>

A description of his voyage to the northeast shores of Siberia was first published in London in 1802 with the title An Account of a Geographical and Astronomical Expedition to the Northern Parts of Russia, performed in the Year 1785, to 1794, narrated from the Original Papers by Mart. Sayer. It was then translated into German, French, and Italian. It was translated into Russian by Captain Sarychev of the Billings Expedition in 1811, in St. Petersburg, under the title Puteshestvie kapitana Billingsa cherez Chukotskuiu zemliu, ot Beringova proliva do Nizhnekolymskogo ostrova, i plavanie kapitana Galla po sev.-vost. okeanu v 1791 g., s priloženiem slovaria 12 narečiij ètikb narodov [The Voyage of Captain Billings over the Chukot Land from the Bering Strait to Nižnekolyma Island, and the Navigation by Captain Hall in the Northeast Ocean in 1791, with an Appendix of a Dictionary Containing Twelve Dialects of Those Peoples] (St. Petersburg: Morskaja tipografija, 1811).<sup>11</sup>

Hall Island, a small, uninhabited island 3.5 miles northwest of Saint Matthew Island in the Bering Sea, is notable for its bird species and as a walrus haul-out. “Commodore Joseph Billings and Lieutenant G.A. Sarichev anchored between this island and Saint Matthews on July 14, 1791 [OS]. On American maps, since 1875, this island has been called ‘Hall,’ presumably for Lieutenant Robert Hall, who was with Captain Billings.”<sup>12</sup>

Admiral Hall’s wife was Natalia Elisabeth (Pegelov) Hall (31 December 1780 [OS] – 21 September 1853 [OS]).<sup>13</sup> Admiral Hall’s daughter Elizabeth (25 May / 6 June 1801 – 21 August / 2 September 1887) was married to Nikolai Petrovich Tumillo-Denisovich (9/20 May 1791 – 9/21 October 1864), a lieutenant general in the Russian Navy.<sup>14</sup> Both women were members of the Reformed Church.<sup>15</sup> After the Admiral’s death, the two women continued to live in their house on the 9th Rota (Ninth Line) in the Liteinaia District.<sup>16</sup> “Rota” was the word used in the Semyonov Regiment instead of “liniia” to mean “line”; both words mean “street.”<sup>17</sup> Ninth Rota was also called Basseinaia Street.<sup>18</sup>

NOTES

1. All information in this paragraph comes from Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar' and “Dnevnik Aleksandra Vasilievicha Nikitenko, 1833–1834 gg.” [“Diary of Aleksandr Vasilievich Nikitenko, 1833–1834”], Russkaia starina (August 1889): pp. 295–296.
2. Inglis, Historical Dictionary, p. 148.
3. Nora Dauenhauer, Richard Dauenhauer, and Lidia T. Black, Anóoshi Lingít Aani Ká Russians in Tlingít America The Battles of Sitka, 1802 and 1804, Classics of Tlingít Oral Literature 4 (Seattle: University of Washington Press; Juneau, AK: Sealaska Heritage Institute, 2008), pp. xxiv, 214.

4. All information in this paragraph comes from Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'.
5. Polovtsov.
6. PREC STP for 1844, p. 306; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'.
7. PREC STP for 1844, p. 306.
8. Entry for Feb. 14th 1844, NYPL: AWP, Part I.
9. Entry for Feb. 14th 1844, NYPL: AWP, Part I.
10. Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'; “Natalia Elizabeth Pegeloff Hall,” Memorial ID 93613835, findagrave.com. The inscription for Admiral Hall is in English: “Sacred to the Memory of Admiral Robert Hall born February [9, 1761] died January [23, 1844] Wake and life up thyself my Heart [And with the Angels bear thy part].” It was during the playing of this hymn, written by Thomas Ken (1637–1711), that Hall fell dead. The inscription is worn and difficult to read.
The West Kent Guardian (March 9, 1844) and the Leeds Intelligencer (March 16, 1844) both carried a notice of his death.
11. Polovtsov; E.V. Druzhinina, “Sarychev Gavriil Andreevich Exhibit 99,” in Nezabyvaemaia Rossiia [Unforgettable Russia], ed. L.I. Iovleva and G.B. Andreeva (Moscow: Trilistnik, 1997), pp. 86–87.
12. US Board on Geographic Names, “Feature Detail Report for Hall Island,” Geographic Names Information System, US Geological Survey. See also Mikhailovich and Saitov, Peterburgskii nekropol', vol. 1, p. 540; and Ènsiklopedicheskii slovar' Brokgaus–Èfron [Brockhaus and Èfron Encyclopedic Dictionary] (Leipzig: F.A Brockhaus; St. Petersburg: Ilya Èfron, 1890–1907), s.v. “Gall,” and “Billings.”
13. “Natalia Elizabeth Pegeloff Hall,” Memorial ID 93613835, findagrave.com; Amburger Datenbank ID 84207 has the wrong year of death (1835). She shares a monument with her husband. The inscription for her is in German: Heir Ruhet in Gott Natalie Elisabeth Hall geb. Pegeloff geb. d. 31 December 1780 gesl. d. 21 September 1833 [sic: 1853] Selig sind die Friedfertigen den sie warden Gottes lunder heise [Here rests in God Natalie Elizabeth Hall b. Pegeloff, b. 31 December 1780 d. 21 September 1833 [sic: 1853] Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God] (Matthew 5:9). The inscription is worn and difficult to read.

14. Amburger Datenbank, ID 84212; BRBC STP 1845, fol. 26; Reyfman, How Russia Learned to Write, Appendix: Table of Ranks.
15. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 26.
16. Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, pp. 108, 110, 115; BRBC STP 1845, fol. 26; Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, pp. 328–329.
17. Grech, Ves' Peterburg 1851, p. 329.
18. Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 115.

HARRISON

Joseph Harrison Jr. (Philadelphia 20 September 1810 – Philadelphia 27 March 1874; see Image 226) was one of the ten children of Joseph Harrison Sr., a grocer (nr. Gloucester Point, New Jersey 25 November 1778 – Philadelphia 6 December 1858) and Mary (Crawford) Harrison (16 January 1783 – 12 April 1842). He received “what he called ‘a fair English education’” until the age of fifteen. “The desire for intellectual enrichment was instilled in him early, and he later wrote that throughout his life he ‘read every book I could get,’ adding ‘the first piece of furniture I ever bought was a bookcase.’” He was “fourteen when his father’s grocery business failed, and he was forced to begin working.”<sup>1</sup>

He was apprenticed to become a mechanic. His first two employers, between 1825 and 1830, were Frederick D. Sanno, whose company failed, and Hyde and Flint, where, before he reached the age of twenty, he “was made foreman of part of this establishment, with thirty men under him.”<sup>2</sup> He had learned to build stationary steam engines, “but his first experience with steam railway locomotives came only in 1834–1835 when he worked for [William] Norris,”<sup>3</sup> who had “formed the American Steam Carriage Company in Philadelphia.”<sup>4</sup> “In 1835 [he] was engaged as a foreman by the Philadelphia firm of Philip Garrett and Andrew Eastwick and commissioned to build the firm’s first steam locomotive,”<sup>5</sup> which he did successfully. “In 1837 he was made a partner in the firm.”<sup>6</sup> On Garrett’s retirement in 1839, the firm “was reorganized as Eastwick and Harrison”<sup>7</sup> (see Eastwick in this Appendix and Image 233).

In character, Harrison has been described as “an impatient man, sensitive to public opinion and concerned about his image and the public’s perception of him,” “accustomed to getting his own way, and when he did not, he took his business elsewhere.” He “proved to be as gifted a businessman as he was an engineer.” He was “a supremely confident and proud man,” with “a flair for self-promotion” and “a sense of his own historical position.” These last two traits have been pointed out as “mark[ing] all of [his] professional activities,” including art collecting. His motivation has been described as having as its goal improvement, for himself and others. His art collection was not “a statement of the cultural values of his age,” but a “pictorial autobiography.” Portraits of him have been described as revealing “a robust figure, a stern and formidable presence, with a dark beard and deeply set, dark, penetrating eyes.”<sup>8</sup>

Early in 1843, through letters from Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) and Pavel Petrovich Mel’nikov (see Image 247), the Russian engineer who had been in America to study locomotive building, Harrison was invited by the Russian government to come to Russia to bid for the contract to build the locomotives for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.<sup>9</sup> He met en route Thomas DeKay Winans (see Image 229), who was delivering his father’s firm’s model locomotive to Russia to compete with that of an English firm. Although Winans had not been invited by the Russian government to bid for the contract to build the locomotives, Harrison, on his own initiative, invited him “to participate ... in the negotiations.”<sup>10</sup> They were awarded the contract, for some three million dollars, which they “signed on December 27, 1843 / January 8, 1844.”<sup>11</sup> The partnership was now called Harrison, Winans and Eastwick. Andrew McCalla Eastwick (see Image 233) closed down Eastwick and Harrison in America entirely, and in 1844 followed Harrison to Russia.

With Eastwick’s arrival in Russia, Harrison’s character traits led to friction between the two men. Harrison complained that Eastwick “behaved in a ‘distasteful’, ‘intolerable’ and ‘outrageous’ manner” toward him.<sup>12</sup> In part, “since in America [Eastwick] had been the senior partner in the firm of Eastwick and Harrison” and had “helped to launch Harrison’s career,” he “may have resented Harrison’s attitude” and his own reversed role in Russia as simply “the manager of the firm’s office.”<sup>13</sup> “Harrison in his correspondence often projected the impression that he wished to be the leading person in the firm and certainly never underestimated his own worth and importance.”<sup>14</sup> He later “sometimes acted in a high-handed and overbearing manner toward [William Lewis] Winans”<sup>15</sup> (see Image 232). There were also difficulties between Harrison and R.G. Fairbanks.<sup>16</sup> The difficulties in the relationship between Harrison and Eastwick have been taken up in detail in the biography of the Eastwick family in this Appendix. The upshot of this complicated situation is that all three partners agreed to leave the decision-making to William Lewis Winans when their six-year contract was up, and left Russia. Eastwick left in 1849 and returned to wind up the firm's affairs in 1850, leaving there permanently for home in October of that year. Thomas DeKay Winans left Russia for the United States in September 1850. Harrison returned to the United States in December 1852, after spending "1851–52, in England and travelling on the Continent."<sup>17</sup>

* * *

Like his two colleagues, Harrison became very rich. "By 1846, only three years into the project, [he] was sending $5,000 to Philadelphia every month ... to his father-in-law, ... to purchase undeveloped real estate in Philadelphia and Camden, New Jersey."<sup>18</sup>

While living in Russia, Harrison also became interested in art. The first reference to what was to become a life-long passion, and lead to his patronage of art and his desire to build a museum for Philadelphia to house his art collection, appears in Anna Whistler's diaries. She refers to the fact that she, Whistler, and Debo (see Images 17–19, 21) met the Harrisons at the exhibit of Aivazovskii's paintings at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in March 1847 (see Images 178–182).<sup>19</sup>

Harrison's art collection possibly began in St. Petersburg.<sup>20</sup> "The catalogues of his collection include Winter Travelling in Russia and Russian Wolf Hunt by Cornelius Krieghoff (1815–1872); Winter Travelling in Russia (in a Kibitka) and Summer Travelling in Russia (in a Telega), a pair of pictures by Nikolai Egorovich Sverchkov (1817–1898); View of the City of Baku, on the Caspian Sea by Paul von Franken (1818–1884); and works by unidentified artists: A Russian Courier; two Russian religious pictures; two portraits of Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich, son of Nicholas I; a portrait of another Grand Duke; a portrait of Tsar Alexander II; a portrait of Nicholas I after Krüger; a bust of Nicholas I; two engraved portraits of Catherine the Great; an engraved portrait of Alexander of Russia; an engraved portrait of Nicholas I; an engraved portrait of "Empress of Russia"; two lithographs of the Imperial Russian Guard; a photograph of Count Kleinmikhel'; and two photographs of a Russian scene."<sup>21</sup>

As an avid reader, Harrison could now, with the income he was earning, afford to support this other passion of his. His letters and bills from the Russian period show that he purchased many books on a variety of subjects, including art, literature, biography, history, travel, voyages, explorations, and memoirs.<sup>22</sup>

From 1850, when the family left Russia, through 1852, they traveled throughout Europe. Then the children were “enrolled in school in London,” and the parents “toured the Continent, studying art and developing an interest in forming an art collection,” the “first major acquisitions [of which] were made in London at this time.”<sup>23</sup> The entire family was in Paris in 1851 “during the uprising that resulted in the accession of Louis Napoleon as Emperor Napoleon III.”<sup>24</sup> Harrison was acquainted with the American ethnographer and painter, George Catlin (1796–1872), who “had helped him acquire Benjamin West’s ... William Penn’s Treaty with the Indians (1772)” for his Philadelphia mansion.<sup>25</sup> Catlin had tried unsuccessfully to sell his entire collection to the United States, but his proposal was rejected by Congress. In 1852, when it was about to be dispersed through sale in England, Harrison “offered to pay off [Catlin’s] debts in return for taking over his original collection of oil paintings and artifacts as security.”<sup>26</sup> He paid $20,000<sup>27</sup> and “shipped the greater part of Catlin’s Indian Gallery to ... Philadelphia where it was placed in dead storage on the grounds of his boiler works ... Catlin never did redeem it, but after both his and Harrison’s death, the great collection was given to the Smithsonian Institution by [Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison; see Image 227].”<sup>28</sup> In the spring of 1852, the Harrisons returned to Philadelphia. One of the buyers of the Meade Collection of paintings by Spanish Masters, sold in Philadelphia in 1853, “was apparently Joseph Harrison.”<sup>29</sup> In August 1854, Harrison was elected a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia.<sup>30</sup> In October 1854, he bought art works at the auction of Charles Wilson Peale’s Museum. In April 1855, he accepted election to the Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, a position he held for the next fifteen years. In 1855, he also tried unsuccessfully to rescue “the moribund Philadelphia Art Union” financially. In 1864, he “organized the mammoth art exhibition” of the Great Central Fair, a national war relief effort “organized by the United States Sanitary Commission, ... predecessor to the American Red Cross, [which] provided hospital care for wounded Union soldiers.” During the fair, he also opened his own home “for public viewing.”

Like Eastwick and Winans, on returning to the United States in the early 1850s, Harrison set about building a mansion. By 1855, he had found the property he wanted in Rittenhouse Square. He “purchased almost an entire block on the east side of [the Square] ... an undeveloped, low-lying lot that was often flooded,” but in which he could see possibilities, having lived in St. Petersburg, Paris, and London. Samuel Sloan (1815–1894), who had designed the Eastwick residence, was chosen as architect. The three-story Italianate (so called by Sloan) mansion was completed in 1857 and was “popularly and romantically thought to have been inspired by a St. Petersburg palace.” However, the primary influence on it was described by an architect as English, because, while living in London, Harrison could have observed “city residences facing squares.” It was clear that the house was built not for seclusion but for entertainment. Its “most distinctive features ... were the flanking wings,” of which the “north wing housed Harrison’s library [and] the south, the art gallery.” When Harrison died, “it was remarked that ‘The galleries of painting and sculpture in this house are the best to be found in any private house in the country.’”<sup>31</sup> He also had Sloan design and build him a three-story country estate modeled after the Russian dacha, which he called Riversdale. It “was located ten miles north of Philadelphia on the Delaware River in Bucks County”; however, Harrison “spent little time there, and ... sold [it] in the 1860s.”<sup>32</sup>

From 1860 to 1863, the Harrisons and their youngest children were again living in Europe, where they traveled widely and Harrison “devoted himself to the appreciation of art.” He had become frustrated with the business world of Philadelphia, which suspected his motives in preparing a plan “for a single, centralized rail terminal.” He wished also to “escape the ravages of the Civil War,” fearing “for the safety of his property.” After the Battle of Gettysburg, they returned home, but Harrison also had “a new business venture” in mind: the design of “a safe steam boiler that would not explode.” He had tried out his idea in Manchester, England, and his design had “won the highest award at the 1862 London International Exhibition for its originality and merit.” “In 1863 ... he funded the Harrison Boiler Works at the location on Gray’s Ferry Road next to the US Arsenal which had been the site of (the former) Eastwick and Harrison locomotive works.” “Since at least 1857, [he] had been among the city’s few millionaires.” “By 1864, he was one of only twelve Philadelphians with annual incomes over one hundred thousand dollars.” The steam boiler he had designed made him even richer. His achievement resulted also in his election to membership in the American Philosophical Society on 15 July 1864.<sup>33</sup> “In 1867, he was appointed to the fine arts selection committee of American art to be exhibited at the Paris Exposition Universelle.”<sup>34</sup> In 1869, Harrison was confirmed in the Episcopalian Church.<sup>35</sup>

“Harrison’s greatest efforts as a patron were consumed by his relationship with ... the long-established, tradition-laden Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts and the then fledgling Fairmount Park Commission, from which would eventually emerge the Philadelphia Museum of Art ... [to both of which] he ... [gave] time, energy, ideas – and money.” As a result of controversy over the new site for the Academy, Harrison resigned from its board in 1870. In that same year, he was “appointed one of the ten original commissioners of Fairmont Park.” Because of complications with this project as well, in his will he “left his entire collection to his wife.” He died on 27 March 1874 (of kidney disease). Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, in two bequests to the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts (in 1878 and 1912), gave it “some of the most magnificent paintings in its collection.” Ultimately, however, the capital needed for her financial bequests caused the collection to have to be sold and dispersed. Joseph Harrison Jr.’s wish for his intact collection to be left to a free Philadelphia public museum was not realized.<sup>36</sup>

* * *

Joseph Harrison Jr. married on 15 December 1836 Sarah Poulterer (b. Portsmouth, Hampshire 21 September 1817; bap. Portsea, Hampshire 30 November 1817; d. 21 July 1906; see Image 227). She was the daughter of Stephen Poulterer, an auctioneer (c. 1788 – buried Philadelphia 21 January 1867) and Sarah (Rapson) Poulterer (b. England 1785 or 1786), who were married on 3 March 1817 at Alverstoke, Hampshire, England. Her parents emigrated to America in 1819. Her siblings were: William (b. 7 March 1814; bap. Portsea, Hampshire, England 22 May 1814; d. 11 December 1877); Ann (b. 1816); Jane (born England c. 1823); Stephen (b. Pennsylvania c. 1825); Edwin F. (Philadelphia 3 December 1829 – Philadelphia 17 October 1911); Thomas (27 June 1832 – 10 August 1890).

The Harrisons had two children at the time of their going to Russia: William Henry (Philadelphia 23 December 1837 – 10 March 1886) and Annie (Philadelphia 25 December 1839 – Lower Merion, PA 5 January 1915). Once Harrison and Winans signed the contract with the Russian government, Sarah Harrison set about obtaining a passport. She was issued a U.S. passport (no. 1886) in Washington, DC, on 22 March 1844, which was sent to Andrew McCalla Eastwick. She was described as “Age 26, Stature 5<sup>o</sup>/4, Forehead Medium, Eyes Dark Hazel, Nose Grecian, Mouth Full, Chin Round, Hair Dark Brown, Complexion Dark, Face Oval.”<sup>37</sup> She, Henry, and Annie journeyed to England under the care of Andrew McCalla Eastwick, who, in London, entrusted them to Joseph Harrison Jr.<sup>38</sup> Once in Russia, they lived in a house at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works, where they occupied the second floor, and Andrew McCalla Eastwick and his eldest son, Edward Peers (see Image 235), occupied the first floor (see Images 239–240). In Russia, three more children were born: Alicia McNeill (Alexandrofsky 31 August / 12 September 1845 – Lower Merion, PA 24 September 1913), named for Anna Whistler’s half-sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, who was then in St. Petersburg; Marie Olga (born 5/17 September 1847; bap. 1/13 December 1847; d. Lower Merion, PA 22 February 1912), named for the surviving daughters of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423); and Theodore Leland (b. 27 August / 8 September 1849; bap. 12/24 December 1849; d. Radnor, Rosemont, PA 5 December 1933), named for the deceased husband of Joseph Harrison Jr.’s sister, Maria Isabella (Harrison) Leland (1825 – 17 July 1905), who was then visiting the Harrisons.<sup>39</sup> The last Harrison child, born in Philadelphia, was Clara Elizabeth (1 April 1855 – Bryn Mawr, PA 27 January 1940), who became Mrs. Theodore Durant upon marriage.

The Harrison children who figure prominently in Anna Whistler’s diaries are William Henry (called Henry), Annie, and Alicia McNeill. Henry was seven years old when he came to Russia. He attended Monsieur Jourdan's School along with James and Willie in the fall of 1846.

Henry seemed normal in the diaries, but was apparently increasingly unstable mentally as he grew older. An inkling of difficulties was given by Andrew McCalla Eastwick, who wrote to his son, Edward Peers, in Germany in 1847 that "Henry does not improve much. He is as great a calf as ever. I understand they are going to get a governor for him."<sup>40</sup> The Whistler's former governess became Henry's governess in early 1848.<sup>41</sup> In early September 1848, Henry was reported to be boarding at Mr. Hirst's school while his parents were spending six weeks in Germany.<sup>42</sup> Andrew McCalla Eastwick's response to this news was: "I trust it will be to his advantage."<sup>43</sup>

Henry continued to be a problem. Anna Whistler described him thus in 1858: "Henry went to St P after his Xmas at home, no doubt in French a word would describe him. I hope he may not disappoint this fresh effort of his fathers to induce him to become useful to the firm in Russia. I never met with any youth as lacking in refinement of taste, his prospect of fortune must have blighted him."<sup>44</sup>

On 22 April 1859, Henry married Mary Rebecca Orne (c. 1840 – 12 October 1894), daughter of James H. and Sally B. Orne of Philadelphia. His wife's father was a carpet dealer. They had a son, William Henry Harrison Jr. (12 January 1860 – 2 November 1932).<sup>45</sup> James McNeill Whistler painted a portrait of Henry in 1859 (whereabouts unknown), as did artist and poet Thomas Buchanan Read (1822–1872) (whereabouts unknown).<sup>46</sup>

"In the 1860s, Harrison left ... William Henry in charge of [Riversdale] and attendant farms. Henry ... was mentally unstable, spent irresponsibly, and, being 'under the thumb' of the 'bad' family into which he had married, was 'not man enough to assert his independence' (Harrison to Charles E. Lex, August 16, 1862, Letterbook VI). Riversdale became so associated with Henry's illness and his in-laws' greed that Harrison considered it an annoyance and ordered it sold so that Henry's wife's family could not use the property. In the spring of 1863, Henry and his wife joined the Harrisons in Europe, but the trip did not have the desired effect upon his mental health, and in December 1863 Henry was committed to the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane ... Harrison provided generously in his will for both Henry and his son, William Henry Jr.<sup>47</sup>

Annie Harrison was five years old when she came to Russia in 1844. In 1846, 1847, and 1848, she suffered epileptic fits.<sup>48</sup> She married on 14 October 1858 in Philadelphia Lewellyn Fite Barry (1826–1914).<sup>49</sup>

Alicia McNeill Harrison was Anna Whistler's goddaughter. She was left with her godmother when Joseph and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison took a six-week trip in Western Europe in 1846. Her married name was Mrs. William F. Eisenbrey.

For Marie Olga, nothing is recorded by Anna Whistler. She married Thadeus Norris Jr., of the Norris family of (former) locomotive designers.<sup>50</sup>

Joseph Harrison's youngest sister, Maria Isabella (Harrison) Leland (Philadelphia 1825 – Buffalo, NY 1905), also appears in the diaries. At one point, Anna Whistler refers to her as "Aunty Maria." She married in October 1846 Theodore Leland. Her husband suffered from ill health and shortly after their marriage was sent alone to New Orleans to be restored, but the sixty-day sea voyage resulted in his death ten days after arriving in New Orleans. Mrs. Leland arrived in Russia on Sunday, 3/15 August 1847. She acted as godmother to Joseph and Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison's daughter Maria Olga, born on 5/7 September 1847 and baptized on 1/13 December 1847. In 1853, she married, as her second husband, Nathan Roberts Suplee. She outlived him and died in Buffalo, New York, on 17 July 1905.<sup>51</sup>

* * *

The Harrisons and the Whistlers were close friends while in Russia. James and Willie Whistler (see Images 24–30) and William Henry Harrison visited back and forth between St. Petersburg and the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225). The night Whistler died, Willie was staying overnight with "Henry." The three boys attended Monsieur Jourdan's school in the fall of 1846. Harrison was deeply attached to Major Whistler. When the latter died, Harrison was the only other person present besides Anna Whistler, until the moment when he, too, had to leave the deathbed chamber to husband and wife alone.<sup>52</sup> Harrison wrote to his father, his father-in-law, his sister Elizabeth, George William Whistler, and Captain William H. Swift, that he had lost the best friend he had ever had outside his own family and “one whom [he] looked to for advice in all things,” and that Whistler had been loved by everyone.<sup>53</sup> He commissioned a death mask (whereabouts unknown).<sup>54</sup> When Anna Whistler gave up their apartment, she and Willie moved to the Mirrielees home (see Images 268–269) for a week and then on 7 May to the Harrisons, until she and Willie departed St. Petersburg with the Eastwicks.<sup>55</sup> Harrison was “entrusted ... with all the arrangements that are needed in this melancholy matter.”<sup>56</sup> He undertook “all the expenses and toil of boxing those articles of furniture valuable from fond associations of home here –.”<sup>57</sup> His tie to Whistler prompted him to make an extremely generous offer (not accepted by Anna Whistler) of ten thousand dollars to help young George William Whistler (see Images 12–13) establish himself.<sup>58</sup>

Harrison also reacted very positively to Anna Whistler. Writing to his family in Philadelphia after her departure for America in 1849, he said: “You will find her a very good and pious woman. – without any form or ceremony ...”<sup>59</sup> “very kind in her manners, and one whom you will like from the first moment of seeing her ... You may recollect that we left Alicia with Mrs. Whistler, when I went to England to bring Sarah home in 1846 ... their house seemed like home for all of us.”<sup>60</sup>

Nevertheless, even in Russia the two families’ lifestyles differed according to their income. In comparison to Anna Whistler, who gave her sons a modest birthday party, the Harrisons gave their children a lavish one. Henry and Annie, who were born on the 23rd and 25th December, respectively, celebrated a joint birthday on December 24th. The party in 1847 was described by Andrew McCalla Eastwick: “There is to be a big time upstairs today celebrating Henry and Annie’s birthdays. All our little ones, as well as some 30 or 40 more big and little, I understand are invited to take dinner and cut capers in the afternoon and evening.”<sup>61</sup> Once back in the United States, the two families continued to meet and Anna Whistler’s letters show that she often visited the Harrisons during the 1850s, and corresponded with them when she lived in England. But although they remained lifelong friends, Anna Whistler was ambivalent because of her feelings about wealth. She felt about the Harrisons, as she did about the Winanses, that although she was “always

... hospitably entertained” in their homes, those homes were “the center of luxury and indulgence.” She had always preferred “a friendship formed in my youth, matured and cemented by religion,” and went on preferring relationships “cemented by religion” the rest of her life.<sup>62</sup>

One homely incident she recounted of a visit of Willie’s to the Harrisons by invitation gave a comical picture of the Harrison parents and Annie, and a continuing gloomy image of Henry: “Annie is yet very strange, she escaped from the drawing room (after dinner) by one door as Willie and her father entered another and did not return to do the civilities for her mama, who was on the invalid list. Mr. H said ‘As we have no grounds to stroll in – in town – & as I smoke no segars [sic: cigars] so have none to offer – we will talk[?], but soon he began to nap, one of his children awakened him to receive Willie’s parting compliments. I have not heard of Henry Harrison’s return, but he will be no advantage, for he is so eccentric.”<sup>63</sup> But although she continued to visit the Harrisons’ city and country homes, she confessed that she felt the invitations she received were segregating: “I seldom meet any of the family, the distance is too far for me to walk to Ritten house Square often & they have such a rich, fashionable circle now of course they do not invite me.”<sup>64</sup>

She and Willie attended the weddings of Annie Harrison and of Joseph Eastwick in October 1858.<sup>65</sup> In 1868, she wrote to Harrison from London asking his help in getting copies of Willie’s medical diplomas so that he could practice medicine without taking recertification examinations. Harrison had done so, even before she asked, but to no avail.<sup>66</sup> Harrison wrote her a letter of condolence when George William Whistler died.<sup>67</sup>

NOTES

1. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, p. 97.
2. Charles Morris, ed., Makers of Philadelphia: An Historical Work Giving Portraits and Sketches of the Most Eminent Citizens of Philadelphia from the Time of William Penn to the Present Day (Philadelphia: L.R. Hamersly, 1894), p. 121; Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 95.
3. Haywood, p. 95.
4. Haywood, p. 93.
5. Haywood, p. 95. “No American locomotive built after 1840, by any builder, was without [the] Harrison equalizer,” “which redistributed the jarring effect of railway track irregularities, ... [and] made the engine less likely to derail.” “The patent royalties on this invention were among several sources of Harrison’s wealth” (all quotations from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, p. 104).
6. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 95–96.
7. Haywood, p. 96.
8. This appraisal of Harrison’s character is a composite of information from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 105, 135, 140, 142; and vol. 2, pp. 492, 493.
9. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 97; RGIA: Fond 219, op. 1, kn. 14, d. 22427. О приглашеніи в Россію из Америки Механика Гаррисона [Concerning the invitation to the Mechanic Harrison to come to Russia from America].
10. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 98.
11. Haywood, p. 104.
12. Haywood, p. 404.
13. Haywood, p. 418n84.
14. Haywood, p. 418n84.
15. Haywood, p. 419n110.
16. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to R.G. Fairbanks, Alexandroffsky, February 26, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George H. Prince, Alexandroffsky, April 24, 1849; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George H. Prince, April 29, 1849.
17. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 371, 406, 411–412.
18. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, p. 118.

19. Entry for Wednesday March 23rd [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II. In her 1993 PhD thesis, Caroline S.H. Nutty proposed that it was largely due to the influence of the Whistlers that Harrison became interested in art, and that the Aivazovskii exhibit was “the first documentation of Harrison actually attending an art exhibition” (Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 145–146).
20. It is beyond the scope of this biography to discuss in detail Harrison’s art acquisitions. For such a discussion, the reader should consult Caroline Nutty’s two-volume 1993 PhD dissertation, “Joseph Harrison, Jr. (1810–74), Philadelphia Art Collector.”
21. “Appendix: Checklist of the Collection of Joseph Harrison, Jr.,” Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 2, pp. 575, 582, 585, 587, 588, 589; Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 2, 432–433, 455, 507, 508, 525, 526. Most of the Russian art was sold at the 1910 auction of Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison’s estate, and the permanent collection of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, as of 2018, does not include any of the Russian works cited by Nutty (Hoang Tran, Philadelphia, PA, to E. Harden, 13 April 2018). The Woodmere Art Museum in Philadelphia, which owned the Carrara marble bust of Nicholas I by Nikol’skii, deaccessioned it. It was sold in 1978 by Sotheby’s Parke Bernet.
22. For example, he bought Hogarth’s Works Engraved by Himself. 153 Plates in March 1847 (entry for 27 February [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I; Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 156, 157, 158, 159, 346, 393).
23. All quotations in this paragraph are from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 118, 119. See also Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, 13 November 1851, GUL: Whistler Collection, W402. Anna Whistler says that only Henry was enrolled in school while the family traveled. He was in Southampton, England (Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, 25 November 1851, GUL: Whistler Collection, W403). Her source was Joseph Harrison Jr., the whereabouts of whose letter are not known.
24. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, p. 119.
25. Therese Thau Heyman and George Gurney, eds., George Catlin and His Indian Gallery: Catalogue of an Exhibition Shown at the Renwick Gallery Smithsonian Art Museum, 2002 (Washington, DC: Smithsonian American Art Museum; New York: W.W. Norton, 2002), p. 257; Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 205–218.

26. Heyman and Gurney, George Catlin, p. 257.
27. Heyman and Gurney, p. 268.
28. Heyman and Gurney, p. 269.
29. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 29, 30.
30. All quotations and information from this point to the end of this paragraph are from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 119, 120, 219, 220, 231, 253, 257, 258, 263, 266.
31. All quotations and information in this paragraph are from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129.
32. All quotations and information in this paragraph are from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 130, 131.
33. All quotations and information in this paragraph are from Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, pp. 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139.
34. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison,” vol. 1, p. 266.
35. Nutty, vol. 1, p. 141.
36. All quotations and information in this paragraph are from Nutty, vol. 1, pp. 271, 272, 273, 290, 293.
37. NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 15, passport no. 1886, issued on 22 March 1844.
38. Andrew Eastwick to Lydia Eastwick, London, April 28th, 1844 Sunday, Eastwick Letters.
39. On 3/15 November 1845, when Alicia McNeill Harrison was baptized by Rev. Dr. Edward Law at the English Church, William Henry and Annie Harrison were baptized anew (PREC STP, no. 5536, p. 327). For Marie Olga Harrison, see PREC STP for 1847, p. 359. For Theodore Leland Harrison, see PREC STP for 1849, p. 394.
40. Andrew Eastwick to Edward Peers Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, St. Petersburg, December 12th/24th 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
41. Joseph H. Eastwick to [his brother], Edward Peers Eastwick, St. Petersburg, February 13th, 1848 Sunday.
42. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to [his brother], Charles. Alex. August 24 OS [Sept. 5 NS] 1848, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1.
43. Andrew Eastwick to Joseph H. Eastwick [and to Edward Peers Eastwick], St. Petersburg, August 24th/5th September 1848 Tuesday, Eastwick Letters.

44. Anna Whistler to James Whistler [St. Johns River E. Florida] 23 March 1858, GUL: Whistler Collection, W490.
45. IGI; 1850 Census for Philadelphia; Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia, Trace a Cemetery [website]; Funeral director's record of burial of William Henry Harrison, IGI; New York City Deaths, 1892–1902; 1860 Census for Philadelphia; Philadelphia directories for 1861; "Thomas Buchanan Read," Poemhunter (website), accessed July 27, 2020, <https://www.poemhunter.com/thomas-buchanan-read/biography/>.
46. Nutty, "Joseph Harrison," vol. 1, pp. 111; vol. 2, p. 584.
47. Nutty, vol. 1, p. 131.
48. Joseph Harrison, Jr. to George Henry Prince. St. Petersburg, Sept. 26, 1848 [probably OS is intended], HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Miss Elizabeth Harrison, Alex. Dec. 8 (OS) 1848.
49. Anna Whistler to [James H. Gamble] (Philadelphia) [October 1858], GUL: Whistler Collection, W473; Anna Whistler to James Whistler Philadelphia 18 November 1858, W496.
50. Nutty, "Joseph Harrison," vol. 1, pp. 97, 98.
51. From HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1: Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, 10/22 October 1847; Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, March 7/20 [sic] 1847; Joseph Harrison, Jr. to R.G. Fairbanks, Alexandroffsky, April 14/26, 1846 [sic]; Joseph Harrison, Jr. to W.S. Nightingale, Alexandroffsky, June 18/30, 1847; Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Stephen Poulterer, Alexandroffsky, August 9/21, 1847. Also Edward Eastwick to Charles James, Alexandroffsky, August 19th 1847 Thursday, Eastwick Letters; Daughters of the American Revolution, Lineage Book, No. 5162; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Death Certificate Index, 1803–1915, IGI; Philadelphia Inquirer, July 21, 1905; BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fol. 67; PREC STP for 1847, p. 359.
52. Mary D. Whistler [first wife of George William Whistler] to grandmother [Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother] Baltimore, 11 May (NS) 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W960.
53. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Stephen Poulterer, Alex. March 28th (OS) 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Stephen Poulterer, Alex. April 4th [OS] 1849; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George Whistler Esqr. New York from Alexandroffsky

- Head Mechanical Works July 10th (OS) 1849; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Stephen Poulterer Alex. July 25 (OS) 1849; Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Joseph Harrison Sen<sup>r</sup> Philadelphia United States Alex. July 26th (OS) 1849.
54. Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, Saturday evening. Preston. July 7th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34.
  55. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Alexandroffsky, May 10th 1849. Thursday, GUL: Whistler Collection, W388.
  56. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Captain W. Swift, Alex. March 28/April 9 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1.
  57. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Alexandroffsky, May 10th 1849. Thursday, GUL: Whistler Collection, W388.
  58. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Captain W.H. Swift, Topographical Bureau. Washington City U.S. from Alex. April 3/15 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison Jr., [London] 62 Sloane St., June 19 1849, LC: P-W, box 34; Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, Jr., [London], Monday, June 25 [1849].
  59. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to Joseph Harrison, Sen<sup>r</sup> Philadelphia United States Alex. July 26th (OS) 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1.
  60. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to his sister Elizabeth Alex. July 27th (OS) 1849.
  61. A.M. Eastwick to Edward Peers Eastwick, Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works St. Petersburg December 12th/December 24th 1847 Friday, Eastwick Letters.
  62. Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Scarsdale, 27 May 1856, GUL: Whistler Collection, W468.
  63. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Richfield Sulphur Springs [NY] July 13-15 [1857], GUL: Whistler Collection, W480.
  64. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 1205 Arch St. Phila Nov. 18th 1858, GUL: Whistler Collection, W496.
  65. Anna Whistler to [James H. Gamble], [Philadelphia] [October 1858], GUL: Whistler Collection, W473.
  66. Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, 2 Lindsey Row, London, S.W. May 14th 1868, LC: P-W, box 34; Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, London 5 February 1870.
  67. Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, London, 5 February 1870.

HEDENSCHOUG

Carl Robert Hedenschoug<sup>1</sup> was Major Whistler's draftsman in St. Petersburg. He was born in Stockholm in the Parish of St. Jacob on 6 February 1813 and baptized on 21 February.<sup>2</sup> His mother was Hedvig Margareta Holmberg (b. 4 August 1782).<sup>3</sup> His father, a jeweler and magistrate, was Nils Hedenschoug (b. 4 January 1776).<sup>4</sup> Carl was the youngest of three children, the other two being Hedvig Sabina (b. 19 August 1808) and Nils Fredric (b. 6 November 1809).<sup>5</sup>

The Stockholm Taxation Records for 1820 give extensive information about the family. Under the father's name it is noted that he drinks wine and coffee and plays cards, and under the mother's name that she drinks coffee and uses silk in her clothing. Under the name of Carl Robert's maternal grandmother, Hedvig Holmberg (b. 19 April 1743), living in their household at the time, it is noted that she drinks coffee and uses silk in her dresses.<sup>6</sup> As there was a special tax on these items, their use denotes a well-to-do family. There were also four maid servants and five apprentices listed as living in the Hedenschoug household.<sup>7</sup>

After a course of study in Christian teachings, in which he received a passing grade, Hedenschoug partook of Holy Communion for the first time at the Storkyrka in Stockholm on Good Friday 1829.<sup>8</sup>

He left Stockholm in 1830. By 8 April 1841, he had moved to Finland, and by 30 June 1841 was moving from Helsingfors to Reval.<sup>9</sup> He had arrived in St. Petersburg by 16 September 1841, the date on which the vicar of St. Catherine's Swedish Church in that city entered his name in the parish register.<sup>10</sup>

Hedenschoug's profession was that of "mechanicus", a term which used to signify among other things a constructor of machines, railways and bridges.<sup>11</sup> Exactly when he became Major Whistler's draftsman is not clear, but he was certainly in Whistler's employ before 2 June 1844.<sup>12</sup>

On 1 September 1845, he married in St. Catherine's Swedish Church in St. Petersburg Charlotta Wilhelmina Brask, spinster.<sup>13</sup> According to the birth records of the church, Charlotta Wilhelmina was born on 10 September 1827 out of wedlock. Her mother was Anna Wendelin. Of her father the minister wrote: "The father, Bronze Apprentice Carl Gustav Brask, acknowledges his relationship to the child, without promising with all certainty to wed its mother, at least not until a future time.”<sup>14</sup>

Carl Robert and Charlotta Wilhelmina Hedenschoug had five children, all born in St. Petersburg: Olga Sabina (b. 5 June 1846), Emilia Charlotta (b. 15 March 1848), Hilda Maria (b. 14 May 1852), Nils Fredric (b. 14 February 1854), and Robert Waldemar (b. 25 January 1858).<sup>15</sup>

Carl Robert Hedenschoug died in St. Petersburg on 2 December 1861 of tuberculosis.<sup>16</sup>

Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) records in her diaries not only that Hedenschoug corrected Major Whistler’s drawings of engines, but that he also had pretensions to being able to draw portraits,<sup>17</sup> and that the resulting caricatures he produced of James and Willie for a fee were burned by their father.<sup>18</sup>

James (see Images 24–29), however, was very attached to Hedenschoug, who seemed to act partly as a tutor to him. Anna Whistler records that he gave James a writing lesson and exercised with him.<sup>19</sup> Under his tutelage and influence, James was reading a history of Charles XII of Sweden and Peter the Great in the summer of 1844 and came to prefer the former.<sup>20</sup>

The negative traits in Hedenschoug’s character showed themselves early on. In August 1844, James wrote a note to Hedenschoug for the latter’s birthday. As Hedenschoug was born in February, he would seem to have lied about his birth date, hoping to receive a present. Anna Whistler was also taken in and responded with sympathy, recording that Hedenschoug had had “many a happy birth day” in his family’s house and “now [was] dependent on [the Whistlers] for kindness.”<sup>21</sup>

Hedenschoug had a drinking problem and in 1848 possibly stole some silver from the Whistlers.<sup>22</sup> In any case, after the theft occurred he began to absent himself from work, and in late 1848 or early 1849 Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, (see Images 167–170) James’s private Russian drawing teacher, found a replacement for him.<sup>23</sup> Hedenschoug told outrageous stories to get sympathy and money, one of which must have been recounted to James in a letter from Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) in late 1848, for James responded: “How do you like the new Draftsman that Koritsky recommended? ... So Hadenschough has turned out an ungrateful thief – fancy a man asking for money to bury his child that was not dead! What has become of him? Have you heard anything of him since he left? but of course he has taken to drinking again, and has ruined himself.”<sup>24</sup>

Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226) also may have referred to his drinking, when he wrote to Anna Whistler during her stay in England in the summer of 1849, for she responded: “Hadenskougg I fear is but as the swine, returned to wallowing in the mire. alas! why will those who have talents throw them away!”<sup>25</sup>

More than a year after Major Whistler’s death, further evidence of stealing came to light. In sending young George Whistler a box of his father’s papers, Harrison attributed the disappointingly small number of drawings to the fact that “that scamp Heidenschoug” had stolen “many copies of drawings” that Major Whistler had prepared for himself and had sold them “for paltry sums.”<sup>26</sup>

NOTES

1. The spelling Hedenschoug appears in the Church Records for the Parish of St. Jacob, City Archives of Stockholm, Sweden (hereafter, Parish of St. Jacob), C:20, p. 128. In the registers of St. Catherine’s Swedish Church in St. Petersburg, the name is also spelled Hedenschog and Hedenschough (Register of St. Catherine’s Swedish Church in St. Petersburg, Department of Private Archives, National Archives, Stockholm, Sweden [hereafter, St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers], vols. 12, 156; entries in Old Style). See also Folke Ludwigs, “Shvedskii prikhod Sv. Ekateriny i ego arkhiv” [“The Swedish Parish of St. Catherine’s and Its Archive”], in Shvedy na beregakh Nevy. Sbornik statei [Swedes on the Banks of the Neva: Essays], ed. A. Kobak, S. Emmrich, M. Mil’chik, and B. Jangfeldt [Stockholm: Svenska Institutet, 1988], pp. 101–109, and McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, p. 62.

I am greatly indebted to Lena Ånimmer of the National Archives of Sweden and Kurt Larson of the City Archives of Stockholm for the research they carried out on my behalf, as well as their translation and interpretation of the materials they supplied.

2. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vols. 78, 156; Parish of St. Jacob, C:20, p. 128.

3. Parish of St. Jacob, C:20, p. 128; Taxation Records for 1820, Parish of St. Jacob, p. 384, post 772 (hereafter, Taxation Records for 1820).
4. Taxation Records for 1820; Parish of St. Jacob, C:20, p. 128; St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 78; Lena Ånimmer, Stockholm, to E. Harden, 16 August 2000.
5. Taxation Records for 1820.
6. Taxation Records for 1820.
7. Taxation Records for 1820. A taxation record was “prepared every year. The information was collected during November and December of the year before, i.e., the information for 1820 was collected during November and December 1819 ... most of these Taxation Records have been destroyed.” The City Archives of Stockholm “have every tenth year from 1760 to 1830” (Gun Jansson, Stockholm, to E. Harden, 5 March 2002).
8. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 156.
9. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 156.
10. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 156. In leaving a parish, a communicant would receive from the vicar of that parish a certificate of change of address (flyttningsattest), which he was to present to the vicar of his new parish. The original purpose of the certificate was to certify that the person was entitled to take communion, but it sometimes provided other information, such as, in this case, that the person was “free for marriage.” In Hedenschoug’s case, it was first drawn up in 1829 and used in 1830 and 1841. The vicar of St. Catherine’s made a note in the register of parishioners that Hedenschoug left Stockholm in 1829 (Lena Ånimmer, Stockholm, to E. Harden, 25 February 2002).
11. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vols. 78, 156; Lena Ånimmer, Stockholm, to E. Harden, 24 July 2000.
12. Entry for Monday, June 2 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
13. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 85.
14. I have this information only from the City Archives of Stockholm, where the relevant register of St. Catherine’s Swedish Church is numbered C:4, p. 418.
15. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vols. 8, 12. In the City Archives of Stockholm, the register is AI:8, p. 108.
16. St. Catherine’s Swedish Church Registers: vol. 91.

17. Entry for Monday, June 2 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
18. Entry for English Quai-Ritter Dom Sept. 23 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
19. Entry for July 1 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
20. Entry for Tuesday [August 20, 1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
21. Entry for Tuesday [August 20, 1844].
22. "... a Mr Nobody walked off with three more of the old silver table spoons the week before fathers illness. Suspicions fell strong on Hadenskougg, for he had access to the dining room (and they were stolen from the table which was already set for dinner) since then he has been almost entirely absent from the office" (Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg Dec. 4th. 1848 Monday evening, GUL: Whistler Collection, W370).
23. Anna Whistler to James Whistler St. Petersburg Dec. 4th. 1848.
24. James Whistler to his father, [London] Jan. 26, 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W661.
25. Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, Fleetwood, Monday, July 15, 1849, LC: P-W, box 34. It has not been possible to find in the Harrison Letterbook the letter of Joseph Harrison to which she was alluding.
26. Joseph Harrison, Jr., to George W. Whistler, Esq., Alexandrovsky Head Mechanical Works Oct. 22, 1850, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1; see also Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, Saturday evening. Preston. July 7th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34.

HIRST

Thomas Nelson Hirst (Huddersfield 12 November 1794<sup>1</sup> – St. Petersburg 22 May / 3 June 1863)<sup>2</sup> and his sister, Mary Gent Hirst (Huddersfield bap. 22 March 1797<sup>3</sup> – St. Petersburg 23 July / 4 August 1844),<sup>4</sup> were from Huddersfield in Yorkshire. Both they and their sister, Elizabeth Hirst (b. Huddersfield 23 June 1800 – between 1822 and 1844),<sup>5</sup> were baptized at St. Peter’s Church, Huddersfield.<sup>6</sup> They were the son and daughters of William (bap. 14 October 1767 – 6 April 1822) and Ann (Nelson) Hirst, who were married by license at St. Peter’s Church, Huddersfield on 5 January 1793.<sup>7</sup> The Hirst and Nelson families appear to have been in business together as well as, or because of, being connected by marriage. Nineteenth-century Huddersfield directories from 1805 to 1817 cite them as “merchants,” “merchants and manufacturers,” “woolstaplers,” and “woollen manufacturers.”<sup>8</sup>

Thomas Nelson Hirst, bachelor, of the parish of Almondbury, in the county of York, married by license on 9 July 1817 at the Parish Church of St. Marylebone in London Anna Turnerelli, spinster, of the parish of St. Marylebone in the county of Middlesex.<sup>9</sup> Anna (Turnerelli) Hirst (London 5 April 1796 – 20 May 1822) was the eldest daughter of the distinguished sculptor-in-ordinary to the Royal family, Peter Turnerelli (Tognarelli) (Belfast 1774 – London 20 March 1839), and his first wife, Margaret (Tracy) Turnerelli (d. 1835), who married on 19 May 1795.<sup>10</sup> Anna was the sister of the artist, Edward Tracy Turnerelli (London 13 October 1813 – Leamington 24 January 1896), who, from 1836 to 1854, lived in Russia, where, under the patronage of Nicholas I, he visited “the most distant parts of that country ... sketching its ancient monuments.”<sup>11</sup> William Radcliffe, son of Thomas Nelson and Anne (Turnerelli) Hirst, was born in January 1820 (day not given) and baptized on 31 October 1820 at St. Patrick’s Church, Soho, Middlesex.<sup>12</sup> Anna (Turnerelli) Hirst died on 20 May 1822, at the age of twenty-six.<sup>13</sup>

“Thomas Nelson Hirst and John Wood, now or late of Huddersfield, ... Merchants, Dealers, Chapmen and Partners,” were declared “bankrupts” in May 1818.<sup>14</sup> William Hirst Jr., father of Thomas Nelson Hirst, left his estate of about £3000 to his two daughters and to the children of his son, stipulating that the interest from the share of his estate going to his grandchildren when the youngest of them reaches 21 should, until then, be paid out in their maintenance and education.<sup>15</sup> The will also indicated that he had lent his son money and required that the grandchildren's share of the estate be reduced by deducting from it as much money as he had paid or advanced during his lifetime to his son.

How soon after the death of his wife Thomas Nelson Hirst moved to St. Petersburg has not been ascertained. It had to be no later than May or June 1828, when Caroline Holliday (b. 1801), spinster, whom he married in that city on 29 October / 10 November 1828,<sup>16</sup> appears to have become pregnant. Their first child, Caroline, was born on 30 January / 11 February 1829. She died at the age of twenty-one days. A son, Henry, was born on 14/26 March 1830. He died on 15/27 July 1836. A son, Edward Radcliffe, was born on 29 June / 11 July 1833. Another daughter, Elizabeth Mary, was born on 15/27 October 1834. A second daughter named Caroline was born on 13/25 November 1835, but died at the age of sixteen months. A daughter, Maria, was born on 13/25 May 1837.<sup>17</sup> Caroline (Holliday) Hirst died on 8/20 February 1842.<sup>18</sup> On 20 November / 2 December 1842, Thomas Nelson Hirst married Margaret Gordon (c. 1809 – St. Petersburg 22 March / 3 April 1891), widow.<sup>19</sup> He died on 22 May / 3 June 1863 and was buried in the Smolensk Cemetery on 27 May / 8 June 1863 by “Wm. Osborn Jenkyn, M.A. Assistant Minister of the British Church, St. Petersburg.”<sup>20</sup> Margaret (Gordon) Hirst, aged eighty-two, of the Tenth Line, Vasilievskii Island, St. Petersburg, died on 22 March / 3 April 1891, and was buried on 26 March / 7 April 1891, in the Smolensk Cemetery by A.E. Watson, Chaplain.<sup>21</sup>

Nothing is known of Elizabeth Hirst.

Whether Mary Gent Hirst accompanied her brother to St. Petersburg or came later is not clear. She may have been from Preston, as Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5), on arriving in St. Petersburg, gave Margaret (Gordon) Hirst a letter for her from an unidentified correspondent in Preston.<sup>22</sup> Anna Whistler, who became friends with her and frequently visited her, says she was lame and had been bed ridden with cancer for five years when she died in 1844.<sup>23</sup>

Thomas Nelson Hirst owned a house on Vasilievskii Island on the Fifth Line between Bol'shoi and Srednii prospects at No. 31, in which he ran a boarding school for boys. Mary Gent Hirst also lived here. Legend has it that Count Aleksei Andreevich Arakcheev (1769–1834) was born in this house (see Kleinmikhel' in this Appendix and Image 244). The building has been described as German, two stories high, and shaped like an upside-down L, with another separate small two-storied stone wing in the courtyard.<sup>24</sup>

Thomas Nelson Hirst was issued a certificate (no. 762) on 28 May 1829 (OS) to establish his school. In his report for the second half of 1847 on private educational institutions in St. Petersburg under his supervision, the inspector, Court Councilor Iosif Somov, gave the following information about Hirst and his school. A British subject of the Anglican faith, Hirst had a boarding school of the first category for boys in his home. The subjects taught were the Orthodox, Lutheran, and Roman Catholic religions; Russian, English, French, German, and Latin; mathematics; practical arithmetic; bookkeeping; universal history; physics; geography; penmanship and dancing. The number of pupils, their social class and fees were: 82 boys: from the nobility and civil service, 18; clergy, 1; merchant, 57; petit bourgeoisie, 7. Boarding, 27; half-board, 14; day students, 41. Annual fees: boarding, 430 rubles; half-board, 230 rubles; day, 143 rubles. The inspector found that the fulfillment of Christian obligations was observed. Cleanliness, neatness, and discipline were extremely well observed, and the maintenance of the pupils, including sufficient school equipment, corresponded to the fees they paid. The inspector added a note saying that “the institution merits full praise just as it has in the past.”<sup>25</sup>

Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226) sent his son, William Henry, called Henry, to this school. Henry liked it “much better than he did Jourdans,”<sup>26</sup> but a year later his father wrote Anna Whistler, without clarifying, that they were “at present ... not at all satisfied in sending Henry to Hirsts school.”<sup>27</sup> This may not, however, have implied a negative assessment of the school but of Henry, who was eventually confined to a mental institution.<sup>28</sup>

After the death of Thomas Nelson Hirst, his son, called Dmitrii Fomich Girst by the Russians, became the owner of the house and director of the boarding school. Petr Ivanovich Shchukin (1853–1912), who became a wealthy merchant and one of the great art patrons of Russia, attended the Hirst boarding school from 1867 to 1871 and seemed to like it. He left interesting memoirs of his teachers and fellow students.<sup>29</sup> In 1876, Dmitrii Hirst sold the house and school for forty thousand rubles to a man named Humbert, who in 1881 closed the school permanently.<sup>30</sup> In 1884, a man named Bremer built an enormous house in its place.<sup>31</sup>

NOTES

1. Huddersfield Parish Church Registers (HPCR), YK/R301, SoG.
2. PREC STP for 1863, no. 7502, p. 747.
3. HPCR.
4. PREC STP for 1844, p. 312. She was buried on 27 July / 8 August 1844, in the Smolensk Cemetery, the Rev. George Williams presiding.
5. HPCR; The Will of William Hirst the Younger; entry for Monday 17th June [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
6. HPCR.
7. HPCR; IGI. They were both listed as “21 years and upwards” and “of this parish.” The bride spelled her name “Anne” (Index to licenses issued by the Prerogative Court of York, SoG).
8. From SoG: Holden’s Triennial Directory for 1805–06–07: “Nelson, Hurst & Whoolley, merchants”; Holden’s Triennial Directory for 1809–10–11: “Nelson Thos & Co, merchants”; Pigot’s Directory of Chester ...Yorkshire (1814–1815), Merchants & Manufacturers: “Nelson, Hirst & Co, New Street”; and in Pigot’s Directory of Chester ...Yorkshire (1816–1817), Merchants & Manufacturers: “Nelson, Hirst & Co, New Street” and “Nelson, Thomas & Co, Cloth-hall St”; Woolstaplers: “Nelson, Hirst & Co, High-St”; Woollen Manufacturers: “Nelson, Hirst & Co, High-street.”
9. Marriage licenses issued by the Faculty Office of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, SoG; Index to marriages in the Parish Church of St. Marylebone. Catholics were required to marry in the Anglican Church at this period; thus the marriage in St. Marylebone.
10. Microfilm copy of the marriage register of the Church of St. Marylebone, London Metropolitan Archives, SoG; photocopy of the register of christenings in the Roman Catholic Church of St. Patrick, Soho, Middlesex, Westminster Archive Centre, SoG; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Turnerelli Peter (1771/2–1839)”; Rupert Gunnis, Dictionary of British Sculptors, 1660–1851, rev. ed. (London: Abbey Library, 1968), pp. 402–403; Gentleman’s Magazine (1839), pt. 2, p. 545).

11. Tracy (as he called himself) Turnerelli was the fifth child and only son of Peter and Margaret (Tracy) Turnerelli, and the only child still alive at the time of his father’s second marriage in late (December) 1835 (Edward Tracy Turnerelli, Memories of a Life of Toil: The Autobiography of Tracy Turnerelli “The Old Conservative.” A Record of Work Artistic, Literary, and Political, from 1835 to 1884 (London: Field and Tuer; Leadenhall Press; E.D. Simpkin, Marshall; Hamilton, Adams, 1884), p. 35). As this “marriage ... rendered home less happy than before” (Turnerelli, Memories, p. 38), he decided to visit Russia, using the written invitation Emperor Alexander I had given to his father while in England in 1814. Peter Turnerelli had never taken advantage of the invitation and, at his son’s request, gave it to him (Turnerelli, p. 38). But instead of “practising his profession as a sculptor” (Turnerelli, p. 42), Tracy Turnerelli undertook to draw “the Ancient Monuments of the Russian Empire,” titling himself their “Delineator” (Turnerelli, pp. 44, 66).

Although he actually spent eighteen years in Russia, starting for that country “in the beginning of June, 1836” (Turnerelli, p. 40) and setting out for England in August 1854 (Turnerelli, p. 72), he himself called it a sojourn of sixteen years, counting only the time he actually spent in his “rambles” outside St. Petersburg, i.e., from sometime after mid-June 1837 (Turnerelli, pp. 48–49) until June 1853 (Turnerelli, p. 63). The title page of his earlier brief memoirs of Nicholas I, his patron, and of the Imperial family also clearly states that he spent sixteen years in Russia (What I Know of the Late Emperor Nicholas and His Family by Edward Tracy Turnerelli. Sixteen Years Resident in Russia. Author of Kazan, The Ancient Capital of the Tartar Khans, etc. etc. Second Edition. London: Edward Churton, 1855). See also The Times (London), January 25, 1896, p. 6.

There is nothing in the autobiography to suggest that he had any contact with his brother-in-law, Thomas Nelson Hirst, while in Russia. As Hirst was widowed in 1822, when Turnerelli was eight years old, and had gone to Russia some time in the 1820s, it is not likely that they maintained a relationship over the years. But, as Turnerelli attracted much attention and became a well-known eccentric Englishman by sitting out in the open in St. Petersburg and drawing the city's landmarks, it would seem that news of his presence could have reached Hirst's ears (Turnerelli, Memories, pp. 44–46). In any case, Hirst's marriage into so prominent and wealthy a family has a certain mystery about it.

12. Photocopy of the register of christenings in the Roman Catholic Church of St. Patrick, Soho, Middlesex, Westminster Archive Centre, SoG.
13. "Obituaries," Laity's Directory, Catholic Record Society, London, 1822, p. 154.
14. There is little information about this bankruptcy, although some details can be found in The London Gazette, May 16, 1818 and The Times (London), May 18, 1818.
15. The official court copy of the will of William Hirst the Younger was provided by the Borthwick Institute of Historical Research at the University of York. A transcription was provided by Michael Welch.
16. PREC STP for 1828, no number or page given.
17. Index to PREC STP, vol. 4, pp. 130, 131, 142, 175, 192, 203, 211, 221, 223.
18. PREC STP, no. 5143. Caroline (Holliday) Hirst was buried on 12/24 February 1842 in the Smolensk Cemetery.
19. PREC STP for 1842, p. 292, no number given.
20. PREC STP for 1863, p. 747, no. 7502.
21. PREC STP, no. 858, p. 1382.
22. Entry for November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
23. Entry for Friday August 2 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
24. P.I. Shchukin, Vospominaniia Iz istorii metsenatstva Rossii [Memoirs from the History of Patronage in the Arts in Russia], ed. S.O. Shmidt, comp. N.V. Gorbushina [Moscow: Gosudarstvennyi istoricheskii muzei, 1997], p. 30.
25. TsGIA SPb: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5188. S vedomostiami o chastnykh pansionakh i shkolakh v Sanktpeterburge za 2 polovinu 1847g. 3 ianv. 1848 – 27 ianv. 1848 [With information about private boarding schools and schools in St. Petersburg for the second half of 1847. Jan. 3, 1848 – Jan. 27, 1848], fol. 38r and v.

26. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg Wednesday November 1st 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366.
27. Joseph Harrison, Jr. to Anna Whistler, Alexandroffsky, December 6, 1849, HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1.
28. Nutty, “Joseph Harrison, Jr.,” vol. 1, p. 131n87.
29. Shchukin, Vospominaniia, pp. 30–36, 46–47, 88.
30. Shchukin, p. 47.
31. Shchukin, p. 31.

KLEINMIKHEL’

The superior to whom Major Whistler was responsible was Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (30 November [OS] 1793 – 3 February [OS] 1869; see Image 243), head of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings (Russian acronym: GUPSiPZ).

On 7 February (OS) 1808, Kleinmikhel’ entered service as a second lieutenant in the Life Grenadiers Regiment, serving first under his father, Lt. General Andrei Ivanovich, director of the Second Cadet Corps.<sup>1</sup> On 23 March (OS) 1812, he was transferred to the Preobrazhenskii Regiment and made adjutant to Count Aleksei Andreevich Arakcheev (1769–1834; see Image 244), famous for the establishment of military colonies of Draconian discipline. Henceforth, Kleinmikhel’ rose swiftly, achieving the rank of colonel in 1816 at the age of twenty-three and the position of head of staff for the administration of the military colonies. On 8 July (OS) 1820, he was appointed to the rank of major general. On 22 August (OS) 1826, he was made an adjutant general, and on 1 May (OS) 1832 duty general of the Main Staff of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423). On 19 June (OS) 1835, with the re-formation of the administration of the military colonies into a department, he was made director, at the same time heading the inspection department of the Ministry of War. On 16 April (OS) 1841, he was promoted to infantry general. In 1830, he was assigned the task of compiling a historical description of the dress and arms of the Russian military forces; in 1837, at his behest, a special committee was set up for this purpose, on which Kleinmikhel’ served as chairman until 21 October (OS) 1855. The resulting work (in 30 parts), which appeared from 1841 to 1862, was primarily the effort of A.V. Viskovatov (1804–1858), a military historian. In addition, Kleinmikhel’ actively participated on a number of commissions concerned with the building of several structures in St. Petersburg, chief among which was the reconstruction of the Winter Palace (see Images 114–117), which had burned down in 1837. He also directed the building of the permanent bridge over the Neva, which was opened on 21 November (OS) 1850 (see Images 140–142). He served, too, on the commission for the construction of the New Hermitage (see Image 113). On 4 March (OS) 1834, he was appointed chairman of the committee for establishing telegraph communication between St. Petersburg and Warsaw. His chief work, however, was the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. On 1 February (OS) 1842, he was made a member of the Construction Committee and Construction Commission established for this purpose. On 11 August (OS) 1842, he was appointed head of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings. Alexander II dismissed Kleinmikhel’ as head of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings on 15 October (OS) 1855. The dismissal, over which there was much rejoicing among his subordinates, was represented as being the result of a request by Kleinmikhel’ to be allowed to resign because of ill health. He remained an adjutant general and a member of the State Council.

Kleinmikhel’ was married twice. His first marriage, to Varvara Aleksandrovna Kokoshkina (d. 1842), in the 1820s, ended in divorce, with rumors that Kleinmikhel’ was impotent. His second wife, whom he married in 1832, was a widow, Kleopatra Petrovna (Il’inskaia) Khorvat (17 October [OS] 1811 – France 17 January [OS] 1865), who was young, rich, and at the time childless. They subsequently had a large family.<sup>2</sup>

Poorly educated, suspicious of anything technical and of abstract thinking, quick to anger and to heap insults on his unfortunate subordinates, arbitrary and fierce in his conduct towards others, and cynical, he has perhaps been best described by Baron Andrei Ivanovich Del’vig (Delwig) (1813–1887; see Image 251), who was on special assignment to him from 1842 until Kleinmikhel’ retired. Finding that he had been assigned to Kleinmikhel’ at the latter’s request to the emperor, Del’vig wrote in his memoirs: “Although I liked Kleinmikhel from our first meeting for his politeness and energeticness, I had heard from everyone that he was an animal ... and I was very dissatisfied with the aforesaid appointment.”<sup>3</sup> While acknowledging that “Kleinmikhel belongs among the most remarkable people in the reigns of Alexander I and Nicholas I,”<sup>4</sup> Del’vig stressed the negative aspects of his character.

Young Kleinmikhel’, a spoiled only son, lived at home, receiving no education. Registered in the Cadet Corps while his father was its director, he was a first lieutenant at fifteen and assigned to serve under his father, who was then commander of the reserve corps, the main headquarters of which was located in Yaroslavl’. Kleinmikhel’ continued to live with his family and do nothing. This upbringing and his life with his mother and sisters resulted, despite his brutality, in a certain effeminacy in him that persisted into old age.<sup>5</sup>

He became an adjutant to Arakcheev through his father’s ties to the latter, and eventually a colonel and head of staff of the military colonies, where his brutality was such that when Arakcheev wished to punish some part of the military colonies severely, he would say: “I’ll send you Kleinmikhel’,” and when Arakcheev was removed, it was said: “Arakcheev is gone, but his teeth remain.”<sup>6</sup> Later, his anticipated appearance for an inspection of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway had the same effect. When Nicholas I wanted the Winter palace, which had burned down in 1837, to be rebuilt quickly, he appointed Kleinmikhel’ to direct the operations, which, Del’vig says, only Kleinmikhel’ could accomplish. On the completion of the work on 26 March (OS) 1839, the emperor rewarded him with a million rubles and the title of count. The motto on the Kleinmikhel’ coat-of-arms, on which was depicted the Winter Palace, read: “Diligence overcometh all.”<sup>7</sup>

Although the qualified candidate to be in charge of the construction of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway was Major General Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin (1803–1875; see Image 245), the post was given to Kleinmikhel’, who knew nothing about the financial and technical aspects of building railroads, and who, because of his lack of education, was unable ever to attain any understanding of them. He had, moreover, never seen a railway. Despite the fact that in 1842 the line from St. Petersburg to Tsarskoe Selo had been in operation for five years, Kleinmikhel’ had always traveled to Tsarskoe Selo by horse and carriage to see the emperor. The same pressure to finish the work quickly that had been applied by Kleinmikhel’ to the rebuilding of the Winter Palace was applied in the building of the railway.<sup>8</sup> Shtukenberg (see Image 250) said of him: “This was a steel battering ram, who was needed for the Emperor’s imperial will to penetrate the wall of all the obstacles and difficulties encountered ... which is proven by the fact that many useful works in the Department of Transport, postponed for many years, were accomplished only during Kleinmikhel’s tenure in office.”<sup>9</sup>

On assuming his post, Kleinmikhel’ set out to inspect the Moscow Road, which was under repair. The result of this inspection was a sharptongued order, couched in a sarcastic tone, lashing out at various parties and attracting public curiosity and amusement to the extent that people actually subscribed to forthcoming orders, called by one of his witty detractors “Count Kleinmikhel’s travel impressions.”<sup>10</sup>

Many careers were destroyed. No one paid any attention then, says Del’vig, to the fact that his actions were highly arbitrary and his jibes at his subordinates inappropriate. One of his hang-ups in the building of the railway was that the seams of the grouting between bricks must be fine. The latter requirement was, moreover, a dangerous one and the architect Konstantin Andreevich Ton (1794–1881) refused to obey it, for which he was removed as inspector of the station houses being built along the railway line. Many are the stories Del’vig tells of Kleinmikhel’s humiliation of his subordinates, some his own age, who patiently bore his goading and insults because he was in favor with the emperor.<sup>11</sup>

Kleinmikhel’ liked Del’vig, but the latter tried to avoid all closeness out of fear that Kleinmikhel’ would become too familiar with him. He therefore rarely went to the evening gatherings Kleinmikhel’ gave, even when sent for. He pointed out that Kleinmikhel’ had an extraordinary capacity to size people up at first glance and thus know what he could and could not ask of them. Del’vig could not, therefore, avert Kleinmikhel’s use of the familiar “thou” when addressing him.<sup>12</sup>

As for Kleinmikhel’s ignorance and his suspicion of what he could not understand, there is the following story. While in Moscow, he invited several engineers to dinner at 4 p.m. Hearing them arrive somewhat before 4 o’clock, he asked Del’vig with some annoyance why they had come so early. Told that it was almost four, he checked one of the several watches he always carried and announced that it was not yet half past three. Del’vig told him that the timepieces in Moscow were about half an hour ahead of those in Petersburg, whereupon Kleinmikhel’ vented his rage at the Moscow makers of timepieces and ordered that dinner be served. At dinner he recounted the story to his doctor. The latter, ignoring the fact that it was useless to explain the cause of the time difference between the two capitals, started to explain it and in doing so used the word “meridian.” Kleinmikhel’ asked what that was and, on receiving an explanation, said it was all nonsense, that there are no such circles drawn on the earth, that it had all been dreamed up by engineers and that the doctor had become infected by them.<sup>13</sup>

This, then, is the man to whom Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) answered and with whom he traveled to inspect the line. Anna Whistler was relieved when the end of the railway work season came, because her husband’s contact with Kleinmikhel’ would temporarily cease. But Kleinmikhel’ did not address or treat Whistler as he did his Russian subordinates. On the contrary, George Henry Prince said that “Major Whistler handles him well” and reported that “a contractor said that the Major rides him.”<sup>14</sup>

NOTES

1. For the little information available about Kleinmikhel’s father, see Del’vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, p. 7, and Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 42, 55n130. Del’vig’s four volumes of memoirs were later abridged into two volumes briefly annotated by S. Ia. Shtraukh and published as Polveka russkoi zhizni. Vospominaniia A.I. Del’viga 1820–1870 [Half a Century of Russian Life: The Memoirs of A.I. Del’vig 1820–1870].
2. The preceding portion of Kleinmikhel’s biography is a composite from Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar’, vol. 8, pp. 732–733; Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 42, 44–46, 55–56, 70, 585–588, 593n21–27; Del’vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, p. 9; and P.F. Karabanov, comp., “Stats-damy i freiliny russkogo dvora v XVIII i XIX stoletiiakh: Biograficheskie spiski” [“Ladies-in-Waiting and Maids-of-Honour of the Russian Court in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries: Biographical Lists”], Russkaia starina 1 (1871): p. 459.
3. Del’vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, p. 5.
4. Del’vig, p. 7.
5. Del’vig, p. 8.
6. Del’vig, pp. 8–9.
7. Del’vig, pp. 9–10.
8. Del’vig, p. 10.
9. A.I. Shtukenberg, “Iz istorii zheleznodorozhnogo dela v Rossii. Nikolaevskaia doroga mezhdu Peterburgom i Moskvou v 1842–52 gg.” [“From the History of Railways in Russia: The Nicholas Railway between Petersburg and Moscow in 1842–1852,” Russkaia starina 48 (1885): p. 332. Apropos of Shtukenberg’s appraisal of Kleinmikhel’'s achievements, an obituary of the latter predicted that “time was the best appraiser and ... that posterity would remember Count Petr Andreevich kindly” (P.B., “Graf Petr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (3-go fevral’ia 1869 goda)” [“Count Petr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (3rd February 1869)”], Krasnyi arkhiv [Red Archive] 32, no. 3 (1894): pp. 590–591).

10. Del’vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, p. 12.
11. Del’vig, pp. 8–20.
12. Del’vig, pp. 17–18.
13. Del’vig, pp. 66–67.
14. Entry of 21 March 1844, Raymond and Prince, “Whistler,” pp. 10–11.

KLOKOV

The available service records for Captain Petr Petrovich Klokov (b. c. 1817) at the Russian State Historical Archives in St. Petersburg are dated 1842, 1844, 1849, and 1856.<sup>1</sup> Klokov belonged to the gentry of Archangel Province; his parents owned a stone house and a sawmill in Archangel. He was of the Lutheran faith. At the time of Anna Whistler's diary entry of 6/18 June 1845, he was twenty-seven or twenty-eight years old.

He became a cadet at the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers on 18 July 1834 (all dates Old Style) and was promoted to sub-ensign on 15 July 1836. He was made ensign on 13 May 1837 at the age of twenty. On 4 June 1838, he was made second lieutenant and on 21 May 1839 lieutenant. His records show that he had command of French and German. He was in the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers at state expense and was retained at the Institute to continue his course of studies. He was assigned to active service in the First Administration of Roads in the Environs of St. Petersburg on 11 May 1839. He was under arrest from 17 February through 16 April 1841 for "striking a blow with his hand in the face" of a non-commissioned officer of the Life Guards Sapper Battalion named Fokin, but on 16 April 1846 on the basis of articles I and IV of a Most Gracious Manifesto, was released from undergoing trial and investigation and was freed.

On 23 April 1842, he was put at the disposal of the Commission established to build the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He was assigned to work in the Southern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway on 23 May 1842. He was made captain on 6 December 1843. By order of the head of Transport and Public Buildings, Count P.A. Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243), he was put at the disposal of the Department of Railways and assigned to Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) on 28 July 1844.<sup>2</sup> He was put in charge of the experimental railway from St. Petersburg to the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225) and to Kolpino on 28 July 1846. On 5 March 1847, he was awarded the Order of St. Anne (3rd class) because of the orderliness and organization evident at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works, which Nicholas I (see Image 420–423) had visited the previous day. On 19 February 1849, he was made senior officer in the Department of Projects and Estimates of the Department of Railways of the Corps of Transport Engineers. On 27 September 1851, he was made acting director of the First Department of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.

On 20 November 1852, an accident occurred on the railway, for which he was held responsible. An evening freight train was heading from St. Petersburg to Moscow with an excess number of wagons and fewer conductors (i.e., brakemen) than prescribed by the operating regulations. The train was therefore divided internally into two halves, and at one of the stations there was a collision in which a brakeman was killed and locomotives, tenders, and several wagons were somewhat damaged. Moreover, these state-owned wagons were carrying hay that Captain Klovov and the chief mechanic had mown for their own use, taking it from two gardens at the St. Petersburg Locomotive Building, gardens already laid out but not yet turned over by the contractor to the State. Because Klovov had failed to provide the proper supervision, on 28 March 1853 the Head of Transport and Public Buildings ordered that, in addition to being held under arrest during the course of his trial, Klovov was to spend a further month-and-a-half in the guardhouse. There are no details in these service records of the outcome of the trial.

Sometime between 1849 (when he is still listed as a bachelor) and 1856, he married Natalia Petrovna Mezhueva, the daughter of a deceased civil servant. No children are indicated. His father-in-law had attained the rank of collegiate secretary (10th grade). On 22 May 1853, he was appointed by the head of Transport and Public Buildings to be attached to the Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. On 24 August 1853, he was appointed head of the Gatchina Station of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. On 31 October 1853, he was assistant to the head of traffic on the St. Petersburg–Warsaw Railway between St. Petersburg, Tsarskoe Selo, and Gatchina. On 2 March 1856, with the permission of the head of Transport and Public Buildings, he was assigned to handle foreign correspondence for the Department of Railways. It was not possible to find further reports on Klovov's service record nor to ascertain his date of death.

Klokov's behavior during his career was erratic. It is interesting to note that in 1842 his ability was rated as "extremely good" but his performance as only "quite diligent." His performance approximated his ability more as time passed. He apparently learned to control his temper after the incident of striking the non-commissioned officer. His failure to provide proper supervision resulting in the death of a conductor was serious. His dishonesty, while not excusable, amounted to pilfering when compared to the dishonesty with which the Russian civil service and Russian life in general were rife.

Whether he was the Russian nobleman with whom Deborah Delano Whistler (see Images 17–19, 21) had an unhappy love affair, causing her to leave St. Petersburg in May of 1847 with the Bliss family, is taken up in the biography of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s."

NOTES

1. RGIA: Fond 207, op. 16, 1797–1867. Osobennaia Kantseliariia GUPSiPZ. Formul'iarnye spiski. Razdel str. 1–7: formul'iarnye spiski i sluzhebnye dokumenty ofitserov i chinovnikov Ministerstva Putei Soobschcheniia. Podriad No 56, d. 5 Kisl'novskii–Kliauzov [Special Chancery of Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings. Service records. Section pp. 1–7 [Service records and service documents of officers and civil servants of the Ministry of Transport Subsection No 56, d. 5 surnames Kisl'novskii–Kliauzov], fols. 286–295; RGIA: Fond 446, op. 6, d. 2. Vysochaishie prikazy 9 ianv. 1847 g. – 6 dek. 1849 g. [Imperial Orders 9 Jan. 1847 – 6 Dec. 1847, fol. 12r; RGIA: Fond 207, op. 5, 1842–1864. Osobennaia Kantseliariia GUPSiPZ. d. 346: O nagrazhdenii lits uchastvuiuschchikh v postroenii Sanktpeterburgo-Moskovskoi zheleznoi dorogi. Mart 1847 g. [Concerning awards given to persons participating in the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway March 1847], fols. 5 r and v; RGIA: Fond 249, op. 1, d. 5. Po predstavlenii formul'iarnykh konduitynykh i kratkikh spiskov ofitserov, grazhdanskikh chinovnikov i nizhnikh chinov [Concerning the service records, conduct records and brief records of officers, civil servants and lower ranks].
2. It is possible that Klokov knew English, but that it was not recorded in his service record, just as it was not recorded in Bouttatz's record that he knew English. Major Whistler had difficulty with French, but Shtukenberg (see Image 250) says it was the language in which Whistler and he, Shukenberg, conversed.

KORITSKII

Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii (also spelled “Karitskii” and pronounced “Kahrítskee”) was born in 1818 (see Images 167–170). His father, descended from Polish gentry, was a Catholic, and Koritskii was raised as a Catholic.<sup>1</sup> He was the son of Nadezhda Gustavovna (Rudol’f) Koritskaia (d. after 8–9 / 20–21 February 1866)<sup>2</sup> and Osip Ivanovich Koritskii (1/13 January 1778 – 3/15 August 1829). His father was a lieutenant colonel in the Corps of Transport Engineers and from 1823 until his death director of the Vyshnii Volochek navigation system.<sup>3</sup> Koritskii had a sister, Ekaterina Osipovna, who attended the Smol’nyi Institute for the Education of Young Noblewomen<sup>4</sup> (see Image 147) and married Pavel Adol’fovich Meingard (Meinhardt) (St. Petersburg 1812 – Yaroslavl’ 1878),<sup>5</sup> also a transport engineer.<sup>6</sup> From 1824 to 1828, Koritskii’s father supported within his household the Shtukenberg (Stuckenber) family, relatives in straitened circumstances: his wife’s sister, Maria Gustavovna (Rudol’f) Shtukenberg (c. 1795 – 25 October / 6 November 1841); the sister’s husband, Ivan Fyodorovich Shtukenberg (d. 9/21 May 1856); and their children. It was through this aunt that Koritskii first became interested in drawing. His interest was further reinforced through the friendship of his first cousin, Anton Ivanovich Shtukenberg (1816–1887; see Image 250),<sup>7</sup> with Nikolai Dmitrievich Bykov (1812–1884), Shtukenberg’s brother-in-law, who worked at the Academy as a supervisor/tutor (guvernior)<sup>8</sup> and eventually became a famous art collector.<sup>9</sup> Bykov lived at the Academy, and Shtukenberg and Koritskii, who were inseparable friends, frequently visited him. When Koritskii became a student at the Academy, some of the time he lived in Bykov’s apartment.<sup>10</sup>

In August 1832, Koritskii was accepted as a cadet by the Institute of Transport Engineers, to be educated at state expense. He attended the Institute for some six years and was made a sub-ensign in July 1837.<sup>11</sup> However, he had little enthusiasm for study, disliked mathematics particularly, and loved drawing.<sup>12</sup> As a result, he left the Institute without graduating and in July 1838, after passing the examination, entered instead the Construction Division of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings, with the rank of ensign.<sup>13</sup> A few days after transferring, he was appointed to the Main Administration and attached to art institutions (khudozhestvennye zavedeniia).<sup>14</sup>

According to Shtukenberg, Koritskii began to attend the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in 1838 as an external student.<sup>15</sup> In 1839, he was listed as a student in the battle scene class taught by Professor Aleksandr Ivanovich Zauerveid (Sauerweid) (1783–1844).<sup>16</sup> He had attracted Zauerveid’s attention through a small painting he had executed, which was presented to Nicholas I (see Images 420–423),<sup>17</sup> to whom, as Grand Duke, Zauerveid had taught drawing.<sup>18</sup> On 7/19 September 1840, Koritskii, explaining that he had “completed the course of study at the Institute of the Transport Corps,” petitioned the Council of the Academy to permit him to become an external student in order to devote himself “in the hours [he had] free from work . . . to the study of history and portrait painting under the direction of Professor Briullov and for this purpose to attend the art classes of the Academy,” for admission to which he submitted “a study for a painting from life.”<sup>19</sup> He indicated that he had already taken courses in architecture, descriptive geometry, theory of shading, and perspective.<sup>20</sup> He was accepted and became a student of Karl Pavlovich Briullov (1799–1852; see Image 173),<sup>21</sup> the most influential Russian painter of his day and the best known outside of Russia.<sup>22</sup>

In December 1841, he was promoted to sub-lieutenant.<sup>23</sup> On 28 April / 10 May 1842, the curator of the Imperial Hermitage, Frants Ivanovich Labenskii (1769–1850), was petitioned to grant permission and a ticket to Koritskii to copy paintings in the Hermitage (see Image 113).<sup>24</sup> In September/October 1842, he received the large silver medal in the category of history and portrait painting for his Diogenes in a Barrel (Diogen v bochke).<sup>25</sup> In 1843, he submitted a study for a larger work to be executed in fulfillment of the program set for the small gold medal in history painting; the subject assigned him was Orpheus Leading the Shade of Eurydice Out of Hell (Orfei, vyvodiasbchii iz ada ten’ Evridiki).<sup>26</sup> His study received the approval of the Council of the Academy to proceed.<sup>27</sup>

In September/October 1843, the Council of the Academy, taking into consideration the progress Koritskii had made in history painting, moved to obtain Imperial permission for him to be released from the Construction Division of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings, “so that he might perfect himself in painting, for which he has a decided gift.”<sup>28</sup> But the Council’s request met with refusal on the grounds that, because Koritskii had received his education at state expense, he was required to serve for no less than ten years in his department and did not have the right to transfer to another kind of service.<sup>29</sup> In November/December 1843, Koritskii was listed among those students of the Construction Division of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings who were given the civil rank of county secretary (12th grade), the equivalent of sub-lieutenant in the Army.<sup>30</sup> He was appointed architect’s assistant in the drafting section of District IV of the Board of Transport.<sup>31</sup> Beginning in 1843 and continuing until 1847, he assisted Briullov in his work on the cupola frescos for St. Isaac’s Cathedral (see Images 121–124).<sup>32</sup> His domicile was registered in 1844 and 1845 as Bykov’s apartment at the Academy.<sup>33</sup>

Koritskii was one of a few students who were close to “Karl the Great.” He worked for Briullov from 1843 until the latter’s departure from Russia in May 1849 on a year’s leave of absence.<sup>34</sup> Yet, despite the fact that “he lived a very long time with Briullov,”<sup>35</sup> Koritskii did not write the memoir of him, and therefore of himself, that posterity would have liked. Shtukenberg blamed this on his procrastinating nature: “I could say a lot more about [Briullov] than I heard from Koritskii, whom I always upbraid for not writing down what he knows about his great teacher; but it’s hard to coax him into action.”<sup>36</sup> There are extant only some brief daily notes Koritskii kept for the years 1843–1847 that show how extensively he worked for and took care of his ailing mentor. In these few pages, he noted the work of Briullov and his students in and for St. Isaac’s Cathedral, gave information important for dating some of Briullov’s works, and kept a record for the doctors of the dosages and kinds of medications he administered to Briullov.<sup>37</sup> Most information about the relationship between Koritskii and Briullov, therefore, has to be sought in the memoirs of other Briullov students, where it is also not copious.

Briullov had a spacious apartment–studio decorated almost entirely in red on the first floor of the Academy facing the Neva.<sup>38</sup> Those students closest to him were constantly in his studio, because he felt that the best course of study for them was to observe their teacher at work.<sup>39</sup>

They also participated in this work, being taught how lacquer and paints are made and how the ground of the canvas is prepared.<sup>40</sup> Koritskii prepared the palette for Briullov when the latter, now seriously ill, decided to paint a self-portrait in April 1848.<sup>41</sup> Briullov, while executing the main figures in his The Fountain of Bakhbisarai (Bakhbisaraiskii fontan) (dated 1849, but begun several years earlier), delegated Koritskii to paint the surroundings, such as the fountain, plants, and furniture.<sup>42</sup> Koritskii and another student, Il'ia Ivanovich Lipin, worked extensively on the cartoons for Briullov's St. Isaac's Cathedral frescos.<sup>43</sup> Briullov also required his students to copy his own paintings as part of their training.<sup>44</sup>

Some of Briullov's students visited the Hermitage collections with him,<sup>45</sup> where he would expound to them on works by the great Western masters.<sup>46</sup> They often read to him when he was working.<sup>47</sup> An insomniac, he would send for one of them to come read to him at night as well, sometimes for hours, exhausting them but exposing them to interesting literature.<sup>48</sup> He spoke to his student, Apollon Nikolaevich Mokritskii (1810–1870), in 1837 of his intention of setting up evening classes for them all in his apartment, where they could discuss subjects essential to an artist's development and give him their opinions on various topics. Each student would then have to express his individual ideas in drawings executed on the spot.<sup>49</sup> It is said that some of them attended with him the famous "Wednesdays" of his writer and journalist friend, Nestor Vasilievich Kukol'nik (1809–1868), where they saw celebrated literary, artist, and theatre figures.<sup>50</sup>

Briullov tyrannized these students, playing merciless tricks on them.<sup>51</sup> One form this joshing took was caricature, and for a long time Mokritskii and academician Filipp Osipovich Budkin (1806–1850) were the butt of Briullov's caricatures: "then Briullov set upon ... Koritskii and gave himself full rein making fun of him. He did not leave a single circumstance of his life without comment,"<sup>52</sup> depicting him, for example, at the easel, as a cupid, painting the interior of St. Isaac's Cathedral, taking a shower, dancing with girls (see, for example, Images 169–170).<sup>53</sup> Briullov also executed two portrait heads, both said to be of Koritskii: one a pencil sketch of his head facing front, bent forward and looking down (see Image 167); the other an unfinished watercolor, left profile.<sup>54</sup>

In March/April 1844, it was moved by the Academy Council that Koritskii be permitted to carry out the program for the small gold medal in the category of history painting on the subject of Mercury Putting Argus to Sleep (Merkurii usypliaet Argusa).<sup>55</sup> In January 1845, he was awarded the small silver medal for a drawing from a live model, which he executed at the triannual examination on 23 December 1844 / 4 January 1845.<sup>56</sup> In March/April 1845, he presented his study on the subject assigned to him in the program set for the small gold medal in the category of history painting: Vulcan Forging the Arms of Achilles in the Presence of Thetis (Vulkan kuet oruzhie Akhillesu v prisutstvii Fetidy) (see Image 172).<sup>57</sup>

Some time between September 1844 and April 1845, Koritskii also began to give private drawing lessons to James Whistler<sup>58</sup> (see Images 24–29) and continued to do so until James left St. Petersburg in June 1848. Why he was chosen as James’s private drawing teacher can only be a matter of conjecture because of the hiatus in Anna Whistler’s diaries from September 1844 until March 1845. He and Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) could have met as a result of their both being employed by the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings, but the difference in their positions might have precluded that. It is possible that it was Shtukenberg through whom the arrangement was made. Shtukenberg was in charge of building the section of the railroad extending 36 miles eastward from Vyshnii Volochek, and Major Whistler stayed with him when inspecting that portion of the railway line. Whether Major Whistler discussed with him James’s interest in drawing cannot be ascertained from Shtukenberg’s memoirs, but it seems natural that personal subjects should have come up because the memoirs show that the two men had a good relationship.<sup>59</sup> As Koritskii was Shtukenberg’s close relative and an advanced student at the Academy, he would have been a likely candidate for Shtukenberg to propose to Major Whistler. The story of the relationship of Koritskii and James and the hero-worshipping attachment James felt for Koritskii has already been told in the biography of James in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”

In 1846, although Koritskii had a ticket to attend classes, there is no indication of his taking any monthly examinations,<sup>60</sup> but this was not required of advanced students. In 1846, he was also promoted to lieutenant.<sup>61</sup> He is last registered at the Academy in 1847, when he took one monthly examination.<sup>62</sup> From 1847 through early May 1849, he helped care for the ailing Briullov and spent much time copying paintings in the Hermitage.<sup>63</sup> In late 1848, he explained to Major and Anna Whistler “that he [himself] no longer paints in the Isaacs church,” as Briullov’s illness had reached the stage where he “cannot mount the stairs now.”<sup>64</sup> Instead, Koritskii was going “daily to the Hermitage to copy some pictures from the Empress’s cabinet, painted by Bruloff for her majesty.”<sup>65</sup> He was copying “‘The Italian Morning’ a young girl washing at a fountain – and the Noon day sketch ... a peasant gathering fruit” (see Images 174–175)<sup>66</sup> and invited Major and Anna Whistler “to go to the Hermitage to see the pictures now.”<sup>67</sup> He told them that Briullov was “at present painting a beautiful group three nuns at the organ, one playing, the others singing in deep devotion! [see Image 176] ... for the Grand Dutchess [Maria Nikolaevna] Leughtenberg,<sup>68</sup> and so charming Kartizkie [siz] hopes we may see it.”<sup>69</sup> In the first half of 1849, Koritskii made a copy of the famous self-portrait Briullov had painted in 1848, receiving for his effort the thanks of his mentor, who, according to Koritskii, did not give thanks gratis.<sup>70</sup>

Most students left Briullov’s apartment only at night to sleep, but when he became seriously ill they took turns attending him day and night.<sup>71</sup> His heart condition made it imperative in 1849 that he leave Russia for a warm climate. Unable to travel unaccompanied, he planned to take students along. In late January or early February of 1849, Koritskii visited the now frail Major Whistler to discuss what route Briullov should take to reach the island of St. Catherine off Brazil, recommended by his doctors.<sup>72</sup> Despite the fact that Koritskii still had to give over four years of service to the state for his free education, he seemed to think he might have a chance to accompany Briullov abroad. But, whatever the reason, in the end two other students, Nikolai Alekseevich Lukashevich (1821 – 5/17 August 1884) and Mikhail Ivanovich Zheleznov (1825–1891), set out in May with Briullov.<sup>73</sup> Briullov is said to have written to Koritskii from Madeira in June 1849, and an extant reply to Briullov from Koritskii is dated 15/27 July 1849.<sup>74</sup> Whether their correspondence concluded with this exchange is not known to me.<sup>75</sup> Briullov did not go to St. Catherine’s nor did he return to Russia. He died in Italy in 1852.

At the Academy exhibit in autumn of 1849, Koritskii exhibited a portrait of a Mrs. Nikerina (no. 287) and Head of a Girl (Golova devushki) (no. 288).<sup>76</sup> Sometime before May 4/16 1850, he offered for sale a portrait of Empress Maria Fyodorovna (see Images 415–416), wife of Paul I (see Image 417), for the Portrait Gallery of the House of Romanov, but its acquisition was found “unnecessary.”<sup>77</sup>

In March 1853, with his obligation to the state for his education fulfilled, Koritskii left the military service “for domestic reasons,” at the rank of staff captain, with permission to wear his uniform.<sup>78</sup> From June 1853 until his death, he served as junior assistant to the director of the Second Department of the Hermitage,<sup>79</sup> Fyodor (Fidelio) Antonovich Bruni (1800–1875; see Image 183). The Second Department encompassed paintings, drawings, sculpture, porcelain, and bronze and bone objects.<sup>80</sup> On being appointed to it, he continued in his civil rank of county secretary (12th grade).<sup>81</sup> In January 1858, he was made curator of all pictures, marble objects, and works of art in general in the Taurida Palace, and in December 1859 curator of the pictures in the Imperial palaces in the environs of St. Petersburg and in the Taurida Palace.<sup>82</sup> In 1863, irregularities in the performance of his duties were reported. He was found guilty of great disorder in the keeping of inventories and of checklists of pictures and other works of art for individual palace rooms and was issued a severe reprimand.<sup>83</sup> In his disorderliness he seems to have resembled his father, who was so notorious in this respect that it was cited in the entry about him in the Russkii biograficheskii slovar’.<sup>84</sup> Koritskii died suddenly during the night of 8–9/20–21 February 1866 in St. Petersburg<sup>85</sup> and held the rank of court councilor (7th grade) at the time of his death.<sup>86</sup> He seems to have remained a bachelor all his life.<sup>87</sup> His mother asked that the Hermitage Museum consider acquiring seven paintings belonging to him:<sup>88</sup> a study by Aleksandr Andreevich Ivanov (1806–1858) for The Appearance of the Savior to the Magdalene (Iavlenie Spasitelia Magdaline); a portrait of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Pavlovna by Dmitrii Grigorievich Levitskii (1735–1822); Madonna and Child (Bozhitsia Mater s mladentsem) by Fyodor Antonovich Bruni; The Expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise (Izgnanie iz raia Adama i Evy) by the School of Correggio; a copy of Briullov's Annunciation (Blagoveschenie) made by Koritskii; and two paintings of the head of an Italian female by Koritskii from a live model, in a large and a small version.<sup>89</sup> Alexander II, to whom the pictures were submitted for consideration, chose not to acquire them.<sup>90</sup>

Koritskii's art collection, understandably, contained a number of works by Briullov: pieces of the colossal cartoons for the heads of six apostles for St. Isaac's Cathedral;<sup>91</sup> Charles IX Shooting out the Window on St. Bartholomew's Night (Karl IX, streliaiusbchii v okno vo vremia Varfolomeevskoi nochi), intended as an illustration for Dumas's Queen Margot (La Reine Margot) (a watercolor?);<sup>92</sup> an unfinished painting of Sleeping Juno (The Origin of the Milky Way) (Spiasbchaia Iunona: Proiskhozhdenie Mlechnogo Puti);<sup>93</sup> a painting of the head of the Queen of Sheba, copied from a fragment of a painting by Rubens;<sup>94</sup> head of Eurydice (drawing);<sup>95</sup> Peter the Great Drafting at a Table (Petr Velikii, chertiasbchii u stola) (drawing);<sup>96</sup> Leverrier's Discovery (Otkrytie Lever'e), an allegorical depiction of the discovery (in 1846) of the planet Neptune (drawing);<sup>97</sup> Deposition from the Cross (Sniatie so kresta) (drawing);<sup>98</sup> Rodin and Mademoiselle Cardoville (Roden i devitsa Kardovil), an illustration to Sue's The Wandering Jew (Le Juif Errant) (either watercolor or sepia);<sup>99</sup> and Minerva Driving Pleasure Away from Art (Minerva progoniaet ot iskusstva udovol'strie) (drawing?).<sup>100</sup> The whereabouts of all of these works, except Sleeping Juno (see Image 177), are unknown.

Little is known as well of works by Koritskii or their whereabouts. Of his student work, his oil study for Vulcan Forging the Arms of Achilles in the Presence of Thetis (see Image 172) is at the State Tret'iakov Gallery.<sup>101</sup> The State Russian Museum has a portrait of Nicholas I by him.<sup>102</sup> He copied a number of works by other artists. James Whistler's St. Petersburg Sketchbook contains a signed pencil drawing by Koritskii (see Image 171), which is based on a full-length drawing of Napoleon by Briullov.<sup>103</sup> Among other works by Briullov that Koritskii copied are his abovementioned paintings Italian Noon (Ital'ianskii polden'), Italian Morning (Ital'ianskoe utro) (see Images 174–175), and The Annunciation (Blagoveschenie), and his self-portrait of 1848.<sup>104</sup> One of the numerous copies of Briullov's The Last Day of Pompeii (Poslednii den' Pompei) (see Image 204) may be by Koritskii.<sup>105</sup> He also copied Dessain's double portrait of James and Willie Whistler (see Image 24).<sup>106</sup> We know for certain that he worked on a portrait of Willie,<sup>107</sup> and another portrait he worked on may have been of James.<sup>108</sup> In 1855, he painted a portrait of Anton Ivanovich Shtukenberg's son, Alexander.<sup>109</sup>

NOTES

1. RGIA: Fond 472, op. 32 (323/1125), d. 1408. Formulirnyi spisok Pomoshchnika Nachal'nika 2 Otdeleniia Gubernskogo Sekretaria Aleksandra Osipovicha Koritskogo [Service Record of Provincial Secretary Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, Assistant to the Director of the Second Department [of the Imperial Hermitage] (hereafter, RGIA: A.O. Koritskii), fol. 1v. This service record was compiled on 3/15 March 1854 and goes only as far as 1/13 May 1853. Attempts made by me to locate Koritskii's final service record have proven unsuccessful. I wish to thank Galina Andreeva, curator of Russian Painting of the Eighteenth and First Half of the Nineteenth Century at the State Tre'iakov Gallery and head of Research and Projects, for sharing with me the brief unpublished entry on Koritskii she was preparing in 1989 for a forthcoming biographical dictionary of Russian artists. It has since appeared in Gosudarstvennaia Tre'iakovskaia Galereia: Katalog sobraniia. Seria Zhivopis' XVIII–XX vekov [State Tre'iakov Gallery: Catalog of the Collection Series Painting of the Eighteenth–Nineteenth Centuries], vol. 3, p. 198. A recent brief biography of Koritskii, together with a photograph of him, appeared in Sotrudniki Imperatorskogo Ėrmitazha. 1852–1917: Biobibliograficheskiĭ spravocnik [Staff of the Imperial Hermitage, 1852–1917: Biobibliographical Handbook] (St. Petersburg: Izd-stvo Gosudarstvennogo Ėrmitazha, 2004), pp. 85–86. The entry was prepared by V.F. Marishkina.
2. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 151.
3. For an explanation of the Vyshnii Volochek navigation system, the first canal to link the Upper Volga and the Baltic Sea, see Haywood, Beginnings, pp. 5–6. Material about Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii's father comes from A.I. Shtukenberg, "Osip Ivanovich Koritskii. Biografiia" ["Osip Ivanovich Koritskii. A Biography"] Zhurnal Glavnogo upravleniia putei soobshcheniia i publicnykh zdaniĭ [Journal of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings] 33, no. 1 (1861): pp. 37–94, as well as from Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskiĭ slovar', vol. 9, pp. 254–255, and RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fol. 1v.

4. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 59.
5. V.M. Karev, ed., Nemtsy Rossii Ènsiklopediia [The Germans of Russia: An Encyclopedia], 3 vols. (Moscow: ÈRN, 1999–2006), vol. 2, p. 455.
6. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 2, fol. 467. Meingard studied at the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers from 1827–1832. In 1829, he was made an ensign and received hereditary nobility. He graduated with the rank of lieutenant. He participated in the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway (as lieutenant colonel of engineers) and of the St. Petersburg–Warsaw Railway (as colonel of engineers in the 1850s). He superintended the building of the railroad station in Tver'. In 1851, together with his wife and children, he was registered in the second part of the genealogical book of the nobility of Tver' Province. He later served in Yaroslavl', where he was in charge of the Transport District. He was decorated many times. The family name of Meingard was registered in the eighteenth part of Obshchaia Geral'dika Vserossiiskoi Imperii [The General Heraldry of the All-Russian Empire]. In 1868, he was made actual state councilor (4th grade) (Karev, Nemtsy Rossii, vol. 2, p. 455).
7. Anton Ivanovich Shtukenberg (15/27 August 1816 – 7/19 March 1887) was a transport engineer, writer, and poet. He graduated from the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers in 1836 with the rank of lieutenant and was sent to Eastern Siberia, where he spent four years exploring the Transbaikal Mountains and carrying out preliminary surveys of the Krugobaikal Road. In 1842, he was appointed to carry out investigation and then to be in charge of the section of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway being built between the stations of Vyshnii Volochek and Kalashnikov. Beginning in 1851, he served for four years as director of the completed and operational section from the Okulovka station to Bologoe. In 1855, he was sent to the Crimea, where for two years he built military roads. In 1865, he was made a member of the Technical and Construction Committee of the Ministry of Internal Affairs, and in 1873 senior mechanical engineer at the St. Petersburg Municipal Council Governing Board. He remained in these two posts until his death. His writing career began in 1857 and included published biographical essays on both his father, Ivan Fyodorovich Shtukenberg, a well-known hydrographer and engineer-statistician, and his uncle, Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii's father; technical articles; and poetry. His collected poems appeared in three separate volumes: Osenie list'ia [Autumn Leaves], Sibirskie melodii [Siberian Melodies], and Melodii [Melodies]. He also published memoirs of the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. The manuscripts of the three volumes of memoirs he wrote from 1836–1861 are held in the LIIZhT in St. Petersburg. He was married to Olga Aleksandrovna Meingard (25 June / 7 July 1833 – 16/28 February 1902) (Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 23, pp. 449–450; D.D. Iazykov, “Russkie pisateli, umershie v 1887 godu” [“Russian Writers Who Died in 1887”], in Obzor zhizni i trudov pokoinykh russkikh pisatelei [Survey of the Life and Works of Deceased Russian Writers], no. 7 (Moscow: A.I. Snegireva, 1893), pp. 96–97 (addenda appeared in no. 8 of the Survey, [Moscow: Universitetskaia, 1900], pp. 152–153); Böhm, Wolkowo Luterischer Friedhof, p. 89.

8. According to the Statute of 1802, a tutor (guvernior) was assigned to maintain order and discipline in the first and second age groups and to teach Russian grammar and composition, foreign languages (French and German), and arithmetic. He received a separate salary for each of these two duties (Kondakov, Iubileinyi spravochnik, vol. 1, p. 169). The Statute of 1830 made clearer his first duty by qualifying that the tutor was a supervisor (nadziratel') (Kondakov, p. 181). One person in the group of supervisors was assigned to serve as the class inspector's assistant (Kondakov, p. 181). He might also teach Russian or French (Kondakov, p. 181). In the Statute of 1840, the word “tutor” was replaced by “supervisor,” and there were no teaching duties, because the general education school at the Academy had been eliminated (Kondakov, p. 187).
9. Nikolai Dmitrievich Bykov (1812–1884) came from the family of a Petersburg civil servant. He was an external student at the Academy, where he was the pupil of the portrait painter, A.G. Varnek (Warneck) (1782–1843). In 1835, he received the title of non-class artist in portrait painting. In his younger days, he was a supervisor/tutor at the Academy, which both enabled him to get to know many artists who later became famous and awakened his interest in collecting works of art. He married Klara Ivanovna Shtukenberg, sister of Anton Ivanovich Shtukenberg and first cousin of Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii. He eventually came into a large fortune, which made it possible for him to become an art collector, in which pursuit he showed exceptional taste and knowledge. His magnanimity was well known to students of the Academy, to whom he gave financial aid. He was an honorary free associate (pochotnyi vol'nyi obshebchnik) of the Academy and an actual member of the Society for the Encouragement of Artists. He was also a member (glasnyi) of the St. Petersburg City Duma. At his death, he held the civil service rank of actual state councilor (4th grade).

Bykov obtained many interesting pieces from the heirs of the sculptor, B.I. Orlovskii (1796–1837), who executed the figure of the angel for the Alexander column, and from the collector, Count A.I. Musin-Pushkin (1744–1817). He gradually amassed paintings by both Russian (Varnek, Venetsianov, Shchedrin, Basin, Briullov) and foreign (Rubens, Guido Reni, Murillo, Holbein the Younger, Pieter de Hooch) masters. The journal Rossiiia [Russia] wrote that “this foreign portion of [Bykov’s] gallery is extremely rich, and hardly any other private collection in Russia can compare with it in terms of the gems it contains. A good half of it can and ought to embellish the Hermitage.” The collection was characterized not only by paintings but also by drawings, watercolors, engravings, and etching plates, as well as by letters and memoirs for biographies of nineteenth-century Russian artists.

After Bykov’s death, the collection passed to his heirs. A substantial portion of it – seventy-six paintings – was put up for auction at the Society for the Encouragement of Artists in October 1884. Twenty-four pictures were sold. A significant portion of these was acquired by P.M. Tret’iakov (1832–1898). The majority of the paintings, however, remained in the hands of Bykov’s relatives and eventually found their way into museums.

This biography is a composite from the following sources: Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar’, vol. 12, p. 577; Nadezhda Polunina and Aleksandr Frolov, “Russkie kollektsionery. Opyt biograficheskogo slovaria” [“Russian Collectors. An Attempt at a Biographical Dictionary”], Pamiatniki Otechestra [Monuments of the Fatherland] 29 (1994), p. 121; Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 127; Chistiakov, Pis'ma, pp. 121, 161, 546, 555; and from obituaries in Vsemirnaia illiustratsiia [Universal Illustration] 793 (1884), p. 258, and Khudozhestvennye novosti [Art News] 6 (1884), pp. 162–163. The dates in the footnotes of the Russkii biograficheskii slovar’ entry are incorrect.

10. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 731. Spisok Imperatorskoi Akademii Uchenikov poseshchaisichikh Risoval'nye Klassy v techenie 1844 goda [List of pupils of the Imperial Academy attending drawing classes during 1844], fol. 15v; Fond 789, op. 19, d. 733. Kniga dlia zapisi biletov, vydavaemykh uchashchimsia na poseshchenie risoval'nykh klassov na 1845 g. [Book for

- registering tickets issued to pupils to attend drawing courses in 1845], fol. 15r.
11. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 1v, 2r.
  12. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 128.
  13. It would seem that a special arrangement was made for him. Usually, “less capable [students] went from the Institute into the Construction Division with the rank of Ensign, where they served on various projects under the supervision of more senior engineers” (Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 127). Koritskii chose to make this transfer and was almost immediately switched to a position in the Main Administration, where his artistic talents would be put to use.
  14. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 1v, 2r, 2v, 3r; Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 128.
  15. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 128.
  16. N.P. Sobko (1851–1906), in referring to the catalogues of Academy exhibitions, writes that in 1839 Koritskii was a student in Zauerveid’s battle scene class (RNB OR: Fond 708, N.P. Sobko, d. 83 Vystavki v AKh, s 1768 po 1867 gg. Obzor katalogov i ukazatelei. B.d. [N.P. Sobko, Exhibits in the Academy of Fine Arts from 1768 through 1867. Survey of catalogues and guides. No date], fol. 151.
  17. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fol. 129.
  18. V.V. Sadoven’, Russkie khudozhniki batalisty XVIII-XIX vekov [Russian Battle Scene Artists of the Eighteenth–Nineteenth Centuries] (Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1955), p. 85.
  19. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, 1840 g., d. 66 III/2542. Delo o vol’noprikhodiashchikh uchenikakh AKh. 11 Marta 1839 g. – 23 Fevralia 1846 g. [File on external students of the Academy of Fine Arts 11 March (OS) 1839 – 23 February (OS) 1846].
  20. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, 1840 g., d. 66 III/2542 (see previous note for document title).
  21. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 728. Spisok uchenikov Akademii khudozhestv. Obshchii alfavitnyi spisok na 1841 g. [List of pupils of the Academy of Fine Arts. General alphabetical list for 1841], fol. 11r. This list contains the names of pupils in history, portrait, battle scene, landscape, and perspective painting. The information recorded for each pupil includes the category of medals received by him, the names of the works awarded medals, and when. Koritskii is listed here as the pupil of K. Briullov.

22. Karl Pavlovich Briullov (originally Brudeleau) (12/23 December 1799 – 11/23 June 1852) was the son of an artist descended from Huguenots (John Bowlt, ed., The Art of Russia 1800–1850 (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Art Gallery, 1978), pp. 50–51). He received his early art training at home from his father, whose field of expertise was ornamental wood carving. Briullov entered the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in 1809 and graduated in 1821 as a pensioner, with the privilege of further study abroad. The Academy was unable to send its pensioners abroad because of a lack of funds, but in 1822 the privately established Society for the Encouragement of Artists gave Briullov a fellowship to study in Italy. He remained there, chiefly in Rome, from 1823 to 1834. While in Italy, he painted portraits in oil and watercolor of prominent Italians and Russians, a genre he had begun to work in while still in St. Petersburg and would continue to work in all his life. His most famous painting of this period, however, was the historical painting The Last Day of Pompeii (Poslednii den' Pompei) (1830–1833) (in the State Russian Museum), which has been called “comparable in its kind to Géricault’s Raft of the ‘Medusa’ or Delacroix’s Massacre at Chios” (Bowlt, Art of Russia, p. 32) (see Images 204–205). The overwhelming success of the painting resulted in Briullov’s election to the academies of Bologna, Florence, and Parma (he was already a member of the Academy of Milan) (Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 94, 129; Bowlt, Art of Russia, p. 47). The painting was also awarded the first gold medal at the Paris Salon of 1834 (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 132). In the late autumn of 1835, after taking part in an expedition to Greece and Turkey, Briullov returned to Russia, recalled by Nicholas I (see Images 420–423). In late May 1836, he arrived in St. Petersburg, where he was appointed a junior professor (senior in 1846) at the Academy and was put in charge of the class in history painting (Atsarkina, p. 177). Briullov attempted a second historical painting, this time on a Russian subject, The Siege of Pskov (Osada Pskova) (1839–1843), but did not complete the work. He proposed doing mural paintings on subjects from Russian history in the Winter Palace, which was being restored after the fire of 1837, but was turned down by Nicholas I (Atsarkina, p. 187). In January 1839, he married Emilia Timm, an accomplished pianist. The marriage ended in divorce at the year’s end (Atsarkina, pp. 239, 241, 509). Briullov hoped to decorate the ceiling of the dome of the Pulkovo

Observatory with a monumental painting, but again the emperor did not give his permission (Atsarkina, p. 188). In 1843, Briullov was invited to take part in the decoration of the interior of St. Isaac's Cathedral and was assigned to paint the ceiling frescos (Atsarkina, pp. 188, 190). During this period, he also painted some of his best portraits (about eighty), although a large number remained unfinished. Many of them reflect his talent for capturing the sitter's spiritual qualities (Atsarkina, p. 206). In 1847, Briullov's heart condition necessitated his withdrawal from the St. Isaac's Cathedral project. He left St. Petersburg on 9 May 1849, traveling through Poland, Prussia, Belgium, and England, from where he was to sail for Portugal and thence to the island of St. Catherine near Brazil. However, he changed his mind and from Portugal went instead to Madeira, where he lived for about a year. He next traveled to Spain and then settled in Rome in the spring of 1850. He died on 23 June 1852 in the town of Marciano, and is buried in the cemetery of Monte Testaccio in Rome.

23. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 2v, 3r.
24. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, 1840 g., d. 66 III/2542 (see Note 19 in this biography for document title). For regulations concerning copying in the Hermitage, see Levinson-Lessing, Istoriia Kartinnoi galerei Ermitazha, pp. 166–167.
25. Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 2, p. 438, entry no. 24 for 26 September [8 October NS] 1842. This is the date the decision was taken by the Council. He seems to have been informed on 27 September / 9 October 1842 (RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 728, fol. 11r [see Note 21 in this biography for document title]). See also RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735. Spisok uchenikov Akademii, koim vydany bilety dlia poseshcheniia klassov s pokazaniem poluchennykh imi na èkzamenakh medalei. S 1845 po 1849 g. [List of Academy pupils to whom tickets were issued to attend classes, showing the medals received by them on examinations. From 1845 through 1849], fol. 22v.

In 1849, after leaving Russia, Briullov wrote Koritskii that in Cologne he had seen Rubens's Crucifixion of St. Peter and assured him that Rubens's depiction of the cross in this painting was worse than the barrel depicted by Koritskii in his painting Diogenes in a Barrel (M. Zheleznov, ed., Neizdannye pis'ma K.P. Briullova i dokumenty dlia ego biografii [Unpublished Letters of K.P. Briullov and Documents for His Biography] [Geneva, 1867], p. ix; M. Zheleznov, "Neskol'ko slov o puteshestvii K.P. Briullova na Maderu" ["A - Few Words about K.P. Briullov’s Journey to Madeira’], Moda [Fashion] 9 [1851]: p. 67).

26. Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 2, p. 452, entry no. 14 for 12 March [24 March NS] 1843.
  27. Petrov, vol. 2, p. 452, entry no. 14.
  28. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, ch. 2, 1821–1849, d. 2789. Delo po khodataistvu ob uvol’nenii praporshchika [sic] A. Koritskogo iz voennogo vedomstva dlia postupleniia v Akademiiu. 27 sent. 1843 g. [File concerning the attempt to have Ensign [sic] A. Koritskii released from the military department in order to enter the Academy. 27 Sept. (OS) 1843], fols. 1–4; Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 3, p. 8, entry no. 12 for 24 September (OS) 1843. Although incorrectly called an ensign in this document, Koritskii is correctly called sub-lieutenant in other documents in the same file.
  29. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, ch. 2, 1821–1849, d. 2789 (see previous note for document title).
  30. RGIA: Fond 446, op. 6, d. 27. Prikazy Glavnokomanduiushchego GUPSiPZ 1 Ianv. 1844 g. – 30 Aprelia 1844 g. [Orders issued by the Head of Transport and Public Buildings 1 Jan. (OS) 1844 - 30 April (OS) 1844], fol. 24r. The order concerning Koritskii is dated 8/20 January 1844. See also RGIA: Fond 200, op. 1, ch. 4 1829–71. Korpus inzhenerov putei soobshcheniia 1844 Ob arkhitekorskikh pomoshchnikakh pravleniia IV okruga Sikorskoi, Eremeev i Koritskoi [Corps of Transport Engineers 1844 Concerning architects’ assistants of the Board of District IV Sikorskii, Eremeev and Koritskii].
  31. RGIA: Fond 446, op. 6, d. 27, fols. 24r and v (see previous note for document title). This appointment does not appear in his cited service record.
  32. Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 194. The “Karnitskii” mentioned by P.P. Sokolov (1826–1905), Briullov’s nephew and himself later a famous artist, in his memoirs is probably Koritskii; Sokolov, Briullov, and “Karnitskii” were on their way to St. Isaac’s Cathedral (Sokolov, Vospominaniia, p. 76).
  33. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 731, fol. 15v (see Note 10 in this biography for document title) and Fond 789, op. 19, d. 733. Kniga dlia zapisi biletov vydavaemykh uchashchimsia na poseshchenie risoval’nykh klassov na 1845 g. [Book for registering tickets issued to pupils to attend drawing courses in 1845], fol. 15 r.

34. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, ch. 2, 1821–1849, d. 2789 (see Note 28 in this biography for document title).
35. Zheleznov, Neizdannye pis'ma Briullova, p. x.
36. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 2, fol. 456. Shtukenberg frequented the home of his brother-in-law, N.D. Bykov, where Briullov was also often a guest, and has left some interesting remarks about the latter (Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fols. 129–132, 400; II, fols. 401, 449–457). Some of his remarks have been published in Kornilova, Karl Briullov, pp. 52, 161–162.
37. GRM OR: Koritskii, Zapisi, fol. 22; Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 324. In January 1845, Liubov' Stepanovna Borozdna-Voeikova (1813–1894), a young woman who had been Briullov's student in 1834–1835 in Rome, came to St. Petersburg with her mother. She remained there until at least mid-May of that year and met frequently with Briullov. She also visited his studio a number of times when he was not present, approved of by him, as otherwise he insisted that visitors not be allowed. One of the works she examined was the almost-completed St. Alexandra Being Assumed into Heaven (see Image 453), painted in memory of the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (see Images 434, 444, 451). Borozdna-Voeikova's letters are interesting as well, because there are no entries for January–mid-April 1845 in Anna Whistler's diaries. Briullov is depicted as being in a bad humor a good part of the time. Although no mention is made of Koritskii by name, the letters, in referring to Briullov's work on the cupola of St. Isaac's Cathedral, mention that alongside him were working two officer-artists. One of them had to be Koritskii. There are also interesting accounts of her copying a Van Dyke in the Hermitage at Briullov's suggestion and of Briullov's ice-cold, messy studio (Tsentral'nyi gosudarstvennyi arkhiv literatury i iskusstva (TsGALI) [Central State Archive of Literature and Art], Moscow: Fond 707, op. 1, d. 22. Papka "Memuary" o khudozhnitse Liubovi Stepanovne Borozdne-Voeikovoi M.S. (sostvalena khudzhnikom Petrom Fyodorovichem Vimpfen). 1931 god. [File "Memoirs" about the artist Liubov' Stepanovna Borozdna-Voeikova M.S. (compiled by the artist Petr Fyodorovich Vimpfen). 1931], fols. 31r, 32r, 32v, 36r, 36v, 40r, 40v, 41r, 41v, 42r, 42v, 43r, 43v, 44r, 44v, 45r, 45v, 46r, 46v, 47r, 47v, 48r). "M.S." is Maria Stepanovna Voeikova, the sister of the artist. Petr Fyodorovich Vimpfen is the grandson of Maria Stepanovna Voeikova. I wish to express my gratitude to O.M.

- Verbitskaia, the Moscow researcher who copied for me the passages in the folder that she deemed relevant for my work.
38. There was a bedroom and small dining room on the mezzanine; the studio comprised the rest of the apartment (Kornilova, Karl Briullov, pp. 77–78). Briullov also had another studio, along with several other professors, in the “Foundry Courtyard” of the Academy (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 299).
  39. Kornilova, Karl Briullov, p. 140.
  40. Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 305.
  41. Atsarkina, p. 243; N.G. Mashkovtsev, comp., K.P. Briullov v pis'makh, dokumentakh i vospominaniakh sovremennikov [K.P. Briullov in Letters, Documents and Memoirs of His Contemporaries], 2nd ed. (Moscow: Izdatel'stvo Akademii khudozhestv SSSR, 1961), p. 233. Briullov's self-portrait (oil on cardboard 64.1 x 54 cm) is in the State Tre'tiakov Gallery, whose collection it entered in 1925 (Gosudarstvennaia Tre'tiakovskaia galereiia. Katalog zhivopisi XVIII-nachala XX veka (do 1917) goda [State Tre'tiakov Gallery. Catalogue of Paintings from the XVIII Century to the Beginning of the XX Century (to 1917)] [Moscow: Izobrazitel'noe iskusstvo, 1984], p. 68).
  42. Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 250–251, 366.
  43. Atsarkina, pp. 194–195, 305.
  44. Atsarkina, p. 302.
  45. Atsarkina, p. 302; Levinson-Lessing, Istoriia Kartinnoi galerei Ėrmitazha, p. 168; N.L. Priimak, ed., Dnevnik khudozhnika A.N. Mokritskogo [Diary of the Artist A.N. Mokritskii] (Moscow: Izobrazitel'noe iskusstvo, 1975), pp. 146–148; A.N. Mokritskii, “Vospominaniia o Briullove” [“Recollections of Briullov”], Otechestvennye zapiski 12, no. 12 (1855): pp. 180–182. When citing Mokritskii, it is important to consult both his diary and article, because details of the same event may vary between them.
  46. Priimak, Dnevnik Mokritskogo, pp. 14, 146–147.
  47. M. Melikov, “Zametki i vospominaniia khudozhnikazhivopista” [“Notes and Memoirs of an Artist-Painter”], Russkaia starina 86 (April–June 1896), p. 659.
  48. Priimak, Dnevnik Mokritskogo, pp. 97, 98, 102, 118, 121, 144.
  49. Priimak, p. 107. It is not clear that Briullov ever set up evening classes of this kind. Kornilova, however, used this information from Mokritskii's diary not as intention, but as fact (Kornilova, Karl Briullov, p. 142). Atsarkina points out only that Briullov made the students read aloud while he worked and would frequently lecture on the material (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 302).

50. Priimak, Dnevnik Mokritskogo, p. 15; Kornilova, Karl Briullov, pp. 95, 100–101. In the 1840s, however, Briullov frequented these evenings less and less.
51. Priimak, Dnevnik Mokritskogo, p. 13; Kornilova, Karl Briullov, p. 96.
52. Mokritskii, "Vospominaniia," p. 165.
53. These caricatures are in the collection of the State Russian Museum. Their range of subject may be seen in at the easel (inv. no. 100), with a cupid (inv. no. 99), painting the interior of St. Isaac's Cathedral (inv. no. 2260), before the easel (inv. no. 2216), taking a shower (inv. no. 2216), reading in bed (inv. no. 2216), as a figure with a tail (inv. no. 96), dancing with girls (inv. no. 2215), in profile (inv. no. 2215), seen from the back (inv. no. 2215), sitting at a table (inv. no. 97), bandaging a body part of Briullov's (the name of the body part said by Atsarkina to be illegible) (inv. no. 89). I have seen these caricatures. The illegible word is "fontanel," an anatomical term for the soft spot in the skull. In a number of them, Koritskii's face is covered with heavy stubble and he has a dark spot on the left side of his brow that suggests a mole or a wart.

There are also several caricature portraits extant (GRM OR: inv. nos. 2217, 106, 28900; inv. no. A-4714, Gosudarstvennyi literaturnyi muzei Otdel rukopisei [State Literary Museum Manuscript Division], Moscow). Not all are dated, but the period in which they were executed ranges from 1843 to 1848 (Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 418, 419, 428, 436, 441).

54. The sketch, dated 1846, is in the State Tret'iakov Gallery (see Image 167). The unfinished watercolor portrait head said to be of Koritskii, from the period 1843–1847, is in the collection of the State Russian Museum (inv. no. 16017, yellowish paper, graphite pencil, watercolor, 20 x 26.5 cm) (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 472). While not described by Atsarkina as caricatures, these two portraits have been called such by others (V.M. Petiushenko, academic secretary of the State Tret'iakov Gallery, in his letter of permission to publish their sketch of Koritskii; O. Liaskovskaia, Karl Briullov [Moscow–Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1940], p. 177), who use the Russian word "sharzh" to describe them (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 174). "Sharzh" refers to a caricature of a person, but is gentler than "karikatura," which may be a caricature of a person or a scene. I disagree that the sketch is a caricature. It resembles, rather, the drawing of the head of a man in the Hermitage attributed to the school of Donatello (Nikolai Makarenko, ed., Khudozhestvennye sokrovishcha Imperatorskogo Ėrmitazha Kratkii putevoditel' [Art Treasures of the Imperial Hermitage: A Brief Guide] [Petrograd: Obshchina Sv. Evgenii, 1916], p. 223). I do not think the unfinished watercolor portrait head is of Koritskii. On the card in the catalogue it says only: “A rosy-checked smiling man, with his eyeglasses pushed up on his forehead. Shown waist length, in left profile.”

55. Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 3, pp. 15–16, entry no. 26 for 29 March and 7 April [10 and 19 April NS] 1844.
56. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735, fol. 20v (see Note 25 in this biography for document title) and Fond 789, op. 19, d. 728, fol. 11r (see Note 21 in this biography for document title). The date on which the examination was held is seen to be wrong in Petrov when compared with Fond 789, op. 19, d. 728, fol. 11r. Petrov gives the date of the examination as 25 December 1844 [6 January (NS) 1845] (Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 3, p. 28, entry no. 13 for 2 and 16 January [14 and 28 January (NS)] 1845).
57. Petrov, Sbornik materialov, vol. 3, pp. 31–32, entry no. 8 for 28 March [9 April NS] 1845.
58. Anna Whistler says in her diary entry for 5/17 April 1845, only that James had begun to take private drawing lessons from an “officer who ... is a pupil” at the Academy (entry for April 5/17 [1845], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II). She does not mention his surname, Koritskii, until more than a year later (entry for Saturday afternoon, May 30th [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II). Unless one already knew, it could be difficult to deduce from these two entries that they refer to the same person, given the turnover in the Whistlers’ tutors.

If those who have had access to the manuscript of the diaries might fail to deduce this, how much more difficult the task of Russian scholars, who had no access to it. Their success in identifying Koritskii as James’s drawing teacher came to depend on the extent of their access to Western secondary sources. The topic of young James Whistler in St. Petersburg was taken up in Russian art historical literature in 1928, when the art historian, Erikh Fyodorovich [Bakh] Gollerbakh (Tsarskoe Selo 23 March 1895 – Moscow 1945), published an article entitled “Pevets zhemchuzhno-golubykh dalei” [“The Singer of Pearly Pale Blue Distances”] (Vestnik znaniiia [Harbinger of Knowledge] 21–22 [1928]: pp. 1039–1041) for the twenty-fifth anniversary of Whistler’s death. The manuscript of the article shows that Gollerbakh had called it simply “Uistler v Peterburge” (“Whistler in Petersburg”), and that it differed considerably from the published article in length and text (GRM OR: Fond 32, ed. khr. 81. E.F. Gollerbakh. “Uistler v Peterburge” [E.F. Gollerbakh, “Whistler in Petersburg”], fols. 18–19). Gollerbakh referred only briefly to Anna Whistler’s diaries, “which do not exist in a Russian translation” (Gollerbakh, “Uistler v Peterburge,” fol. 18), but did not say from what source he knew of them. Later he wrote an extensive article (unpublished) entitled “Dzhems Uistler i Akademiia Khudozhestv” (“James Whistler and the Academy of Fine Arts”), in which he explained that he had now been able to consult a French translation of the Pennells’ biography of Whistler (James McNeill Whistler, sa vie et son oeuvre. Tradui et adapté de l’ouvrage original de E. et J. Pennell [Paris, 1913]) (GRM OR: Fond 32, ed. khr. 81. E.F. Gollerbakh, “Dzhems Uistler i Akademiia Khudozhestv” [“James Whistler and the Academy of Fine Arts”], fol. 2). In this way, he was able to draw upon the extensive excerpts they quoted, which had been copied for them from Anna Whistler’s diaries by her step-niece, Emma W. Palmer, for their chapter on St. Petersburg (Emma W. Palmer to E.R. Pennell, Stonington, Sept. 25th [1906], Letters Relating to Whistler, LC: P-W, box 296). However, the diary entries in which Koritskii was actually named had not been copied out for the Pennells, so Gollerbakh did not know who Whistler’s private drawing teacher was. In fact, the information about the “young officer” puzzled him, and he confused him with James’s teacher at the Academy. For this and other reasons, Gollerbakh “Dzhems Uistler” contains many errors.

In 1970, E. Nekrasova published a translation into Russian of The Gentle Art of Making Enemies, which marked the first appearance of Whistler materials in Russian. In addition to Nekrasova’s introduction and translation of Whistler’s essay, the book contains his biography and a section of quotations from Whistler’s correspondents, critics, friends, and enemies about him in all phases of his life. In this same year, Nekrasova also published a very brief article about young James Whistler (E. Nekrasova, “Uistler v Peterburge” [“Whistler in Petersburg”], Khudozbnik [Artist] 1 (1970): pp. 43–45. In both her publications, she erroneously proposed that because a young officer was giving James drawing lessons, and because Pavel Andreevich Fedotov (1815–1852), a student at the Academy, was a young officer, James’s private drawing teacher may have been Fedotov

(Nekrasova, Iziaschnoe iskusstvo, pp. 3, 265; Nekrasova, “Uistler v Peterburge,” pp. 43–44, 45.)

A member of “the Finland regiment of the Life-Guard [the Imperial Household troops] stationed in St. Petersburg,” Fedotov retired from military service in 1844 to “devote himself entirely to art,” having attended classes at the Academy part-time since 1835. He painted oil portraits but also became a well-known painter of satirical contemporary genre scenes. He eventually encountered negative “official” reaction to his satirical works and, as a result of the restrictions placed on them and his ensuing poverty, had a nervous breakdown. He died in a mental hospital at the age of thirty-seven (Bowlt, Art of Russia, pp. 50–51). Nekrasova supports her choice of Fedotov by pointing out that in the winter of 1844–1845 he was twenty-nine years old, had just retired from the army at the rank of captain, was attending the Academy and giving private lessons (Nekrasova, Iziaschnoe iskusstvo sozdat’ sebe vragov, p. 265). Her choice of Fedotov was plausible, since the Western sources she cited in her notes to the text did not identify Koritskii as James’s private drawing teacher.

The Russian who correctly named Koritskii as James’s drawing teacher was Valentina Barashkova, a librarian, who in 1983 published an article entitled “‘Ia khudozhnik i ‘rodilsia’ v Peterburge” [“I Am an Artist and I Was ‘Born’ in St. Petersburg”] in Iunyi khudozhnik [The Young Artist] 8 (1983): pp. 32–37. She knew that Koritskii was Whistler’s teacher, because she had read a book not yet published when Nekrasova was writing on Whistler: Roy McMullen, Victorian Outsider: A Biography of J.A.M. Whistler (New York: E.P. Dutton, 1973), in which McMullen not only mentions Koritskii but cites a letter of James’s that mentions him (V. Barashkova, Moscow, to E. Harden, 22 December 1990; McMullen, Victorian Outsider, pp. 31, 32, 36, 37, 43).

59. Shtukenberg’s extensive memoirs contain admiring comments about Major Whistler, who he felt taught him a great deal (Shtukenberg, Memoary, vol. 2, fols. 514–515; Harden, “Whistler,” pp. 152, 159; and Shtukenberg, “Iz istorii zheleznodorozhnogo dela v Rossii” 46, pp. 309–322; 48, pp. 309–336; and 49, pp. 97–128). Shtukenberg’s comments appear in the biography of Major Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”
60. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735, fol. 7v (see Note 25 in this biography for document title).
61. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 2v, 3r.

62. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735, fol. 7v (see Note 25 in this biography for document title).
63. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Wednesday November 1. 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366.
64. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Wednesday November 1. 1848.
65. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Wednesday November 1. 1848.
66. Italian Morning was painted by Briullov in Rome in 1823 and sent to Russia. It was presented to Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna by the Society for the Encouragement of Artists. It is now in the Town Museum of Kiel, Germany (Andreeva and MacDonald, Whistler and Russia, p. 84n42 and Uistler i Rossiia, p. 84n46). Noonday or Italian Noonday was painted by Briullov in Rome in 1827 and also sent to Russia. It is now in the State Russian Museum. A study for the painting is in the State Tret'iakov Gallery (Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 54, 56, 335). In the Gosudarstvennaia Tret'iakovskaia Galereia 1984, this study is described as a "smaller variant-repetition of the painting of 1827." Its measurements are 27 x 22 cm. At the lower left is written in Italian "C.B. Roma"; on the reverse of the canvas is the inscription in Russian "K.P. Briullov Rim 1831" (inv. no. 11017) (Gos. Tret'iakovskaia Galereia 1984, p. 64). In 1835, Mokritskii wrote in his diary of going to see both Italian Morning and Noonday in the empress's boudoir in the Winter Palace (Priimak, Dnevnik Mokritskogo, pp. 46, 171, 183).
67. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Wednesday November 1. 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366.
68. Briullov was painting The Nuns of the Monastery of the Sacred Heart in Rome Singing at the Organ (Monakhini Monastyria Sv. Serdtsa v Rime, poiushchie u organa) (see Image 176). The painting entered the collection of the State Tret'iakov Gallery in 1971. The study (1849) for the painting (oil on paper, 20.1 x 31.6 cm.) is in the State Tret'iakov Gallery (inv. no. 11018), whose collection it entered in 1929 (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 366; Gos. Tret'iakovskaia Galereia 1984, pp. 68–69).
69. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. Petersburg, Wednesday November 1st. 1848, GUL: Whistler Collection, W366.
70. Atsarkina, Briullov, pp. 302, 364.

71. L.M. Zhemchuzhnikov, Moi vospominaniia iz proshlogo [My Recollections of the Past], ed. A.E. Vereshchagina and M.N. Shumova (Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1970), pp. 55, 398; Kornilova, Karl Briullov, pp. 158–159.
72. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, [St. Petersburg], Thursday 3/15 February [1849], GUL: Whistler Collection, W382.
73. RGIA: Fond 789, op. 1, ch. 2, 1821–1849, d. 2789 (see Note 28 in this biography for document title).
74. Zheleznov said in 1867 that few of Briullov’s letters were known, and that he had written few. He recalled one to Koritskii from Madeira in June 1849 (Zheleznov, Neizdannye pis'ma Briullova, p. ix). There is an extant letter from Koritskii to Briullov, dated 15/27 July 1849, acknowledging a letter from him, which may be the one of June 1849 (GRM OR: Fond 31, ed. khr. 170. Pis'mo Koritskogo Aleksandra Osipovicha, ist. zhivopisets, uchenik Briullova – Briullovu Karlu Pavlovichu s pripiskoi Lukashevichu. 15/27 iulia - 1849 g. [Letter of Koritskii Aleksandr Osipovich, hist. painter, student of Briullov—to Briullov Karl Pavlovich, with a P.S. to Lukashevich. 15/27 July 1849], fols. 1r and 1v).
75. I was given very limited access to Briullov papers in the archives of the State Russian Museum and allowed to have photocopies only of two pages from Koritskii’s notes because, they said, a Russian scholar, who was not identified, was working on him.
76. Ukazatel' khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii, vystavlennykh v zalakh Imperatorskoi Akademii khudozhestv [Index of the Works of Art Exhibited in the Salons of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts] (St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1849), p. 20.
77. RGIA: Fond 446, op. 1, d. 378. Min-stvo Imp. Dvora. Kantseliariia Otdelenie 3. V Tsarskom Sele. 4 Maia 1850 g. No. 1771. Otvet na No 2704 [Ministry of the Imperial Court. Chancery. Division 3. In Tsarskoe Selo. 4 May 1850. No 1771. Answer to No 2704] Minister of the Imperial Court Prince Volkonskii to Mr. Marshal Count Shuvalov.
78. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 2v, 3r.
79. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 2v, 3r, 3v, 4r.
80. In the 1851 “Regulations” reorganizing the Hermitage, its five departments were reduced to two. The First Department encompassed medals, coins, engraved stones, the library, engravings, and antiquities (Levinson-Lessing, Istoriia Kartinnoi galerei Ėrmitazha, p. 181).

81. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fols. 2v, 3r, 3v, 4r.
82. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. 2, d. 35. O raznykh predmetakh i prikazaniiakh G. Ober Gofmarshala ... [Concerning various subjects and orders of the Lord Marshall] fol. 2; Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. 2, d. 1. O chinovnikakh i sluzhiteliakh [Concerning civil servants and servitors]), fol. 63.
83. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. 2, d. 1, fols. 78r and v, 79r and v, 80r, 81r and v, 89r and v, 90r and v. See previous note for document title.
84. Shtukenberg, “Osip Ivanovich Koritskii,” pp. 91–92; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar, vol. 9, p. 255.
85. Koritskii’s date of death has been variously published as 1867 and 1873, but the exact date of his death is announced in the report of 10/22 February 1866 by the Director of the Hermitage to the Lord Marshal of the Court: “junior assistant to the curator of paintings, Court Councilor Koritskii, died suddenly [during the night of] the 8th to 9th of February” (Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. 5, d. 2. O skoropostizhnoi smerti mlad. pom. khranit. kartin Ermitazha, Koritskogo, posledovavshei 9/II/1866 g. [Concerning the sudden death on 9/II/1866 [OS] of Koritskii, junior assistant to the Curator of Paintings of the Hermitage], fol. 9). This announcement of his death also included the customary request for funds to bury the deceased.
86. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. 5, d. 2 (see previous Note for the document title).
87. RGIA: A.O. Koritskii, fol. 2r.
88. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. V, d. 4. O priobretenii kartin, graviur, estampov i proch. Nachalos’ 6 Ianvaria 1866 g. Koncheno 6 Fevralia 1867 g. [Concerning the acquisition of paintings, engravings, prints, etc. Begun 6 January [OS] 1866. Concluded 6 February [OS] 1867], fols. 5, 12, 13, 16, 39. The card in the card catalogue clarifies: Kartiny predlozheniia k priobreteniiu. O predlozhenii materi umershego khranitelia Ermitazha N. Koritskoi priobresti dlia Ermitazha, prinadlezhavshikh ee synu, semi kartin ... [Pictures: Proposals for acquisition. Concerning the proposal made by N. Koritskaia, mother of the late curator of the Hermitage, that the Hermitage acquire seven paintings belonging to her son].
89. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. V, d. 4 (see previous Note for document title. There is a study (1834) called Christ Appearing to Mary

Magdalene after the Resurrection (Iavlenie Khrista Marii Magdaline posle Voskreseniia) in the State Tret'iakov Gallery (43.5 x 60.4 cm.) (inv. no. 2510). The preliminary study with the figure of an angel is in the State Russian Museum (Gos. Tret'iakovskaia galereia 1984, p. 159). It is not possible to say which of these two studies was in Koritskii's collection.

90. Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. V, d. 4, fol. 39 (see Note 88 in this biography for document title).
91. Mashkovtsev, K.P. Briullov, p. 229.
92. Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 260.
93. Atsarkina, p. 360. See also Leontieva, Karl Pavlovich Briullov, pp. 76, 189, 193; M.M. Rakova, Russkoe iskusstvo pervoi poloviny XIX veka [Russian Art of the First Half of the XIX Century] (Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1975), p. 154; and M.M. Rakova, Russkaia istoricheskaia zhivopis' serediny deviatnadsatogo veka [Russian History Painting from the Mid-Nineteenth Century] (Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1979), pp. 108-109. Rakova reproduces in both her books a sketch for the painting bearing the title The Sleeping Juno and a Parca with the Infant Hercules (Spiasbchaia Imona i parka s mladentsem Gerkulesom), 1839–1845. The sketch (52.5 x 67.1 cm., inv. no. 220) is in the State Tret'iakov Gallery, whose collection it entered in 1914 (Gos. Tret'iakovskaia Galereia 1984, p. 67). The unfinished painting (oil on canvas, 163 x 239 cm.) is in the State Russian Museum (inv. no. Zh 3356), whose collection it entered in 1937 (G.V. Smirnov, Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei Zhivopis': XVIII – nachalo XX veka: katalog [State Russian Museum Painting: Eighteenth – Beginning of the Twentieth Century: Catalog] [Leningrad: Avrora, 1980], p. 64). It is listed as executed in the period 1839–1845 (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 359; Gos. Tret'iakovskaia Galereia 1984, p. 67).
94. Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 327.
95. Atsarkina, p. 381.
96. Atsarkina, p. 415.
97. Atsarkina, p. 417.
98. Atsarkina, p. 420.
99. Atsarkina, p. 473.
100. Atsarkina, p. 478. This work has also been called Minerva Restraining Art and Driving Pleasure from the Temple (Minerva uderzhivaet iskusstvo i gonit iz kbrama udovol'stvie).

101. At the lower right, scratched into the dry paint, is written “A. Koritskii. In the collection of S.A. Bakhrushin until 1920, when it entered the collection of the Tretiakov Gallery” (inv. no. 4761). In the Gosudarstvennaia Treťiakovskaia Galereia 1984, it is given the title Venus in Vulcan’s Forge (Venera v kuznitse Vulkana), with the explanation that its subject is taken from ancient mythology. Koritskii’s date of death is incorrectly given as 1867 (Gos. Treťiakovskaia Galereia 1984, p. 215).
102. Portrait of Nicholas I. Oil on canvas. 34.5 x 26.7 cm. Signed on the stretcher: “Karitskii. Entered the collection of the Russian Museum in 1912 from Iu. A. Iakovleva” (inv. no. Zh-3465) (Smirnov, Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei, p. 142).
103. Under the drawing there is a very faint signature in Russian. It begins “A. Коп”; the “р” is the Russian equivalent of the English “r.” This is followed by “ицк,” the Russian equivalent of “itsk,” while the last letters (ий) are illegible. Under the signature is a date, also written in Russian, which I read as “1847 Май 17.” Salmina-Haskell, to whom I showed a photograph of the drawing, reads it as “1847 Май 19.” MacDonald says the drawing is “signed illegibly, ‘A [Koritskii] 1847 - March 17.—” (MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 4). She does not, however, explain that the name she gives in brackets is a transliteration of a signature in Russian. Moreover, her interpretation of the month as “March” seems to be based on reading the three-letter Russian word as though it were the English abbreviation “Mar.” In Russian the word “March” is four letters long (Март) while “May” is three. A transliteration would correspondingly be four or three letters long. Since Koritskii wrote his name and the month under the drawing in Russian, it seems likely that he rendered the date in Old Style as well. If so, the New Style equivalent for May 17 would have been May 29, a Saturday; for May 19 it would have been May 31, a Monday. It is recorded in the diaries that Koritskii was in the Whistler home on Saturdays and a Monday.
104. The whereabouts of Briullov’s Annunciation (c. 1849; also given as 1848–1850) are unknown (Atsarkina, p. 367); Koritskii’s copy of this painting was among his possessions when he died (Arkhiv GE: Fond 1, op. V, d. 4, fol. 13 [see Note 88 in this biography for document title]). Koritskii’s copy of Briullov’s self-portrait of 1848 was listed in 1972 as being in the collection of P.I. Kutuzov (Atsarkina, Briullov, p. 364, 51, 52, 329).

105. Atsarkina, p. 339.
106. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, [St. P.] Tuesday morning Dec. 12th [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W372.
107. Entry for “Saturday morning March 1/13” [1847]; entry for Wednesday, March 23 [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II. Wednesday was actually March 24.
108. GRM OR: Koritskii, Zapisi, fol. 22v. See also the entry for January 23 [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
109. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 2, fol. 643.

KRAFT

Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (St. Petersburg 1798 – Warsaw 1857; see Image 248) was the son of the personal physician of Tsar Paul I (1754–1801; reigned 1796–1801; see Image 417).<sup>1</sup> He became a student at the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers, Class of 1820, graduating with the rank of lieutenant. He worked in Odessa, where he was engaged in expanding the commercial port and studying the transport means of this southern area. In 1825–1831, he was in charge of explorations for making a canal with a dividing station for joining the Volga and Don rivers, and made the negative assessment that there was not enough water in the dividing station to make the canal. In 1832–1833, he participated in a project to build a canal to avoid the rapids of the Dniepr River. In 1833, he was on a mission in Prussia, where he inspected the new highway from Tilsit to Berlin and made a study of the cost estimates for its construction. In March 1835, he investigated the condition of the Linz–Budweis Railway built by F.A. Gerstner and made an unfavorable report. In 1836, he was invited to teach at the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers, giving a course on drawing up technological projects and supplying cost estimates for them. In 1836, he joined the staff of the Petersburg Committee for Buildings and Hydraulic Works.

On 1 June 1839, he and his Institute colleague, Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (1804–1880; see Image 247), sent by the Main Administration of Transport, set out for a 15-month stay in the United States to inspect railways and other transportation systems. There, they studied railroads under construction as well as already in operation, steam engine factories, and hydrotechnical installations. They met with many well-known engineers, including Brown, Latrobe, Robinson, Swift, and Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21), who, they ultimately recommended, should be invited to be the consulting engineer for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. On returning to Russia, Mel'nikov drew up their three-volume technical report “emphasizing the successes and beneficial effects of railways in the United States.” In 1841, their recommendations were considered by an interdepartmental commission established to draw up a preliminary project for this railway. Kraft and Mel'nikov were both members of this commission. Kraft drew up a detailed cost estimate. In January 1842, Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) called a special meeting to look at the railway project, which Kraft and Mel'nikov were not invited to attend. On 1 February 1842, a ukase was issued announcing the decision to build the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, and Kraft and Mel'nikov were appointed heads, respectively, of the Southern Administration (the route of which was from the Kolomenets River in the Valdai District of Novgorod Province to Moscow) and the Northern Administration (the route of which was from St. Petersburg to the Kolomenets River in the Valdai District of Novgorod Province), both routes established as of May 1843. Kraft worked out a program for testing all the large railway bridges along the St. Petersburg–Moscow line after they were built.

In August 1851, on the completion of the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway and travel upon it by the Imperial family to Moscow on the 22nd for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coronation of Nicholas I, Major General Kraft was awarded the Order of St. Anne (1st class, with Imperial crown).

He became the second director of the line in 1852, remaining in this position for three years. In 1855, he was made director of the XIII (Warsaw) Division of Transport. He died in Warsaw in 1857. In 1859, during the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the Institute of Railway Transport Engineers, the newspaper, Russkii khudozhestvennyi listok (The Russian Art Newspaper) published his biography and portrait along with those of three other outstanding graduates of the Institute. In 1891, at a special session of the Imperial Russian Technological Society, it was noted that N.O. Kraft, P.P. Mel'nikov, and D.I. Zhuravskii (see Image 249) had “established the Russian school of Engineers.”

An assessment of Kraft by his contemporaries reveals a kind and honorable man who endured extreme physical and mental suffering. The manifestations of his mental suffering caused him to be viewed by all as a great eccentric.

Mel'nikov believed him to be a sensible and honorable man with an unparalleled mistrust of others and stressed the difficulties existing between them. When Mel'nikov proposed to Kraft that the latter accompany him to the United States in 1839–1840, Kraft had misgivings about leaving his family so suddenly and for so long, but his inquiring nature and curiosity won out over that concern. Then a disgruntled subordinate of Mel'nikov's filled Kraft's ears with such a negative assessment of Mel'nikov that, although they embarked on their trip to America, their personal relations ceased to be cordial, and in America they spent very little time together. No effort to reconcile them was successful, and they spent the entire period of the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway avoiding all contact with one another. It was as a result of this impasse that both Mel'nikov and Kraft proposed in 1842 that Major Whistler be invited to be the consulting engineer and intermediary between them, because both of them trusted him. In 1857, Mel'nikov was passing through Warsaw, where his brother was commandant and Kraft was working. He was informed that Kraft was very ill, and, while he was preparing to visit Kraft, news came of the latter's death marked by great suffering and all alone except for his orderly.

A.I. Shtukenberg (see Image 250), Class of 1836 at the Institute of Transport Engineers, knew Kraft as a friend of his father and father-in-law. Kraft personally chose him to work in the Southern Administration. Shtukenberg said that Kraft, along with Major Whistler, had the most influence on him and on his situation. He saw them as his good geniuses.<sup>2</sup> He described how Kraft came to see him in 1842, at the start of their explorations for the railway bed, stayed with him, and was simple and straightforward. However, given his ultra-sensitive character, as soon as they turned to business, Kraft accused Shtukenberg of paying too much to the workers the latter had hired. This dichotomy of attitudes in matters personal and professional persisted, but sometimes the line was crossed. When the explorations were completed in 1842, Kraft gave Shtukenberg assignments that would keep him in Vyshnii Volochek, knowing that Shtukenberg's wife and family were there. When Kraft disrupted Shtukenberg's private life on Easter Sunday of 1843 by requiring him to transfer to Tver' that day, he invited Shtukenberg to live in his home and all of Shtukenberg's staff to take dinners there. Shtukenberg said Kraft's face, which almost always wore a gloomy expression, resembled that of Napoleon I and that Kraft was very aware of it. From Shtukenberg we also know that Kraft spoke English, French, and German fluently.

In staying with Kraft, Shtukenberg found him very well-mannered, kind, and intelligent, as well as a good example of an eccentric, suffering sometimes from spleen or hypochondria. All the windows in Kraft's study were covered over with green wallpaper, so that from the street one could think no one lived there. In the study itself there was a feeble green light, like light passing through sea water at a considerable depth. Shtukenberg could not understand how Kraft could see to work in this light. Perhaps the reason for the shaded light was that Kraft frequently suffered from sometimes-excruciating headaches. They resulted in his either sitting motionless for hours or becoming so antagonistic that he would beat his servants, then immediately try to make up for it by rewarding them. Faced with the necessity of addressing a large gathering of his officers, he usually became flustered, even at times commenting on his personality flaw. This characteristic was construed by people – such as the local governor, who tried to make his acquaintance – not as eccentricity but as overweening pride, which Kraft became noted for. He even lived apart from his wife and family in order to have complete isolation from the wider social contact their presence would have brought. His family eventually stopped visiting him on their journeys from St. Petersburg to Moscow, and he almost never went to visit them. It is interesting, therefore, that when Major Whistler was on his deathbed, Kraft visited him. Anna Whistler's diaries inform us, in addition, in the entry for Monday July 27 [1846], that on 23 July 1846 Kraft sent officers to Major Whistler to persuade him to accept going to Elagin Island in "a government barge with its many oars," where Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna's name day was being celebrated.

When Kraft died, Shtukenberg begged the latter's sister to give him her brother's papers. He found out four years later (in 1861) that she had sold three baskets of them to a wrapping-paper pedlar.

There were among his contemporaries and posterity those who saw him as less prominent and less capable than Mel'nikov. This has been construed by Haywood as due to Mel'nikov's "ability to project a favourable image of himself in his prolific writings and an unfavourable one of Kraft." But Mel'nikov was writing his memoirs some thirty years after the events and swore that because they were only for himself he was telling the honest truth. Haywood also points out that while Kraft “may have been slightly inferior to Mel’nikov in capability, breadth of outlook, experience and training, at least in matters pertaining to railways,” in which he did not have “a pioneering interest,” during the actual building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, progress on Kraft’s Southern Administration was more rapid than on Mel’nikov’s Northern Administration.

NOTES

1. This biography of Nikolai Osipovich Kraft is a composite from the following sources: S.M. Zhitkov, Biografii inzhenerov putei soobshcheniia [Biographies of Transport Engineers] (St. Petersburg: Iu. N. Erlikh, 1889); I.V. Veviorovskii, et al., eds., Leningradskii ordena Lenina Institut inzhenerov zheleznodorozhnogo transporta imeni Akademika V.N. Obraztsova 1809–1959 [Leningrad Order of Lenin Institute of Railway Transport Engineers Named for Academician V.N. Obraztsov 1809–1959] (Moscow: Vsesoiuznoe izdatel'sko – poligraficheskoe ob"edinenie Ministerstva putei soobshcheniia, 1960), p. 48; Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 12, 21–22, 23, 49n38, 50n39, 60–61, 62, 64–69, 73–74, 82n6, 88, 128–130, 152–154, 157n13, 178–179, 190, 216–217, 220–221, 306–307, 320–321, 341, 429, 505; Mel’nikov, Svedeniia, fols. 190v, 191r–199r; Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 1, fols. 442–443, II, fols. 504–513; Shtukenberg, “Iz istorii zheleznodorozhnogo dela v Rossii” 48 (1885), pp. 321–323, and 49 (1886), p. 107; S.I. Vavilov, ed., Bol'shaia Sovetskaia Èntsiklopediia [Big Soviet Encyclopedia], 65 vols. (Moscow: Bol'shaia Sovetskaia Èntsiklopediia, 1926–1947), vol. 23, p. 285; A. Zvorikin, ed., Biograficheskii slovar' deiatelei estestvoznaniia i tekhniki [Biographical Dictionary of Persons in the Natural Sciences and Technology], 2 vols. (Moscow: Bol'shaia Sovetskaia Èntsiklopediia, 1958), vol. 1, p. 456; Brokhaus–Èfron, vol. 32, p. 575; entry for Monday July 27 [1846], NYPL: AWPD, Part II. Of all the abovementioned works, the least reliable concerning Kraft is the 1960 volume published for the 150th anniversary of LIIZhT.
2. Shtukenberg, Memuary, vol. 2, fol. 504. See the biography of George Washington Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” for Shtukenberg’s comments about him as a positive influence.

LAW<sup>1</sup>

Reverend Doctor Edward Law (7 August 1790 – Barnes, Surrey 10 November 1868; see Image 253) was the son of Ewan (d. 24 April 1829) and Henrietta Sarah (Markham) Law (30 May 1764 –15 August 1844). He matriculated at Christ Church College of Oxford University on 27 May 1808, aged seventeen, and was a student from 1808–1816, receiving his BA in 1812 and his MA in 1815. He was ordained as deacon at St. James' Church in Piccadilly on 6 March 1814. He was licensed as curate at Longton on 25 March 1814. He resigned as perpetual curate at Holy Trinity Church in Preston on 15 October 1820, having delivered his farewell sermon on Sunday, 2 April 1820. On 8 April 1820, his appointment at St. Petersburg was announced. Before leaving to take up this appointment he attended on 11 May 1820 the first levee held by George IV, where he was presented to the King by the Lord Bishop of Chester, George Henry Law, his uncle, to whom he was chaplain. Reverend Edward Law was chaplain of the English Church in St. Petersburg (see Images 110–111) from 1820 to 1864.

He was also the nephew of Edward Law, 1st Baron Ellenborough (Great Salkeld, Cumberland 16 November 1750 – London 13 December 1818), and cousin to Edward Law, 1st Earl of Ellenborough (8 September 1790 – 22 December 1871), who was four times president of the Board of Control of the East India Company and also governor-general of India (1842–1844).<sup>2</sup>

While still a university student, he accidentally discharged a fowling-piece during a sporting expedition on 29 March 1816 and mortally wounded a twelve-year-old boy, William Hawarden Gillibrand (1804 – 30 March 1816), the eldest son of Thomas Gillibrand (1780–1820) and Marscella Catharina (Goold) Gillibrand (1781–1857), of Gillibrand Hall, Lancashire. The boy died the next day. The newspapers carrying the notice of his death did not identify the perpetrator. It was not until 1875 that Law (then deceased) was openly named in a Fazakerley obituary as having accidentally shot William Hawarden Gillibrand.<sup>3</sup> It would seem that every effort was made to keep unsullied the life of a young man just starting out on his career.

Reverend Edward Law married on 2 May 1816 at Rolleston, Staffordshire, Mary Elizabeth Mosley (bap. Rolleston, Staffordshire 12 September 1792 – Edinburgh 11 May 1877), the daughter of Rev. John Peploe and Sarah Maria (Paget) Mosley. Their children were: Harriette Maria (b. 13 July 1817; bap. Preston, Lancashire 13 July 1817; d. St. Petersburg 14/26 April 1821), Edward Peploe (b. 27 April 1818; bap. Preston 28 April 1818; d. Chatham, Kent 24 March 1837), Josephine Anne (bap. Preston 23 July 1819 – Ickham, Kent 15 April 1849), Mary Eliza (St. Petersburg 9/21 March 1821 – St. Petersburg 22 February / 6 March 1859; see Image 254), Henrietta Maria (St. Petersburg 25 October / 6 November 1822 – Edinburgh 18 November 1892), Caroline Frances (St. Petersburg 7/19 August 1824 – Kensington 24 November 1897), Emily Mosley (St. Petersburg 7/19 November 1827 – St. Petersburg 2/14 February 1880), Isabella Sarah (St. Petersburg 30 March / 11 April 1830 – Riga 1/13 February 1866), and Alfred Markham (St. Petersburg 7/19 November 1832 – Weston-super-Mare, Somerset 9 November 1870).

Josephine Anne Law married on 10 September 1838, at East Horsted, Sussex, as his second wife, Rev. John Adolphus Wright (b. Mapperley, Nottinghamshire c. 1804; bap. Basford, Nottinghamshire 24 May 1804; d. Tickhill, Yorkshire 16 June 1881). Mary Eliza Law married on 9/21 October 1804 in St. Petersburg James Richard Cattley (b. York 4 January 1806; bap. York 7 January 1806; d. Barnes, Surrey 22 January 1867; buried All Souls' Cemetery, Kensal Green, London; see Image 255). Henrietta Maria Law married Francis Anderson (Inchyra, Perthshire 19 August 1804 – Edinburgh 18 December 1855). Their wedding took place on 17 October 1848 at St. John's Episcopal Chapel in Edinburgh, where Henrietta, before marriage, was a "resident of the parish of South Leith," and again on 24 October 1848, presumably in St. George's Church in Edinburgh, where Francis was a resident of the parish of St. George. The Rev. E.B. Ramsay, minister of St. John's Episcopal Chapel from 1830 to 1872, was the officiating minister at both services. Caroline Frances married in St. Petersburg on 5/17 August 1846 Richard Miller (South Leith, Scotland 27 July 1818 – Leith, Scotland 12 January 1860). Emily Mosley Law married on 8/20 August 1851 in St. Petersburg Axel Daniel Gisiko (c. 1814 – St. Petersburg 9/21

May 1890), who took the surname Law-Gisiko. His family was from Sweden. Isabella Sarah Law married in St. Petersburg on 15/27 April 1852 Henry Robinson (London 16 July 1823 – Merano, Italy 14 January 1902). Alfred Markham seems to have had a daughter, Emily Maud Law, who was baptized on 15 April 1866 in Hammersmith, Middlesex, England. The mother's name is not clearly written in the register, and the name of the father has been crossed out and replaced with Alfred's name.<sup>4</sup>

In April 1844, Law requested from the Russia Company a leave of absence for up to three months. Between 23 May and 5 August 1844, he was replaced by Rev. George Williams, while he took his Doctor of Divinity degree at Christ Church College of the University of Oxford, by request of the British Factory, which presented him with £100 for his expenses. He received his Bachelor of Divinity and his Doctor of Divinity degrees on 21 June 1844.<sup>5</sup>

On retiring in 1864, Law returned to England with his wife. He died on 10 November 1868 in Barnes, Surrey, where his address was Lonsdale Road. He was buried in All Souls' Cemetery, Kensal Green, London.

Edward Law kept a journal, the whereabouts of which are unknown to me.<sup>6</sup>

NOTES

1. This brief biography of the Law family is a composite from the following sources: Foster's Peerage, p. 264; Alumni Oxoniensis, p. 822; Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1860, p. 362; Michael Skinner, What We Did for the Russians and What They Did for (Some of) Us [UK: JDS, 2008], pp. 124, 125; Karttunen, Making a Communal World, pp. 33, 110, 139, 191, 192, 205, 206, 240, 243, 244, 245, 246, 253, 306; The Christian Remembrancer; or, The Churchman's Biblical, Ecclesiastical, and Literary Miscellany. 22 vols. (London: F.C. & J. Rivington, 1819–1840), vol. 17 (1835), p. 374; Simon Dixon, "Allegiance and Betrayal: British Residents in Russia During the Crimean War," Slavonic and East European Review 94, no. 3 (2017): pp. 431–467; Preston Chronicle, November 6, 1875; Lancaster Gazette, April 6, 1816; Norfolk Chronicle April 13, 1816; Public Ledger and Daily Advertiser, April 5, 1816; Hull Packet, April 16, 1816; Edward Law to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Lord Wodehouse, Minister Plenipotentiary etc. etc. etc. of Her Britannic Majesty at St. Petersburg, St. Petersburg, Tuesday July 2/14, 1857, FO 65.496, PRO; “Deaths,” Gentleman’s Magazine 31, new series (1849): pt. 1, p. 667; “Marriages,” Gentleman’s Magazine 10, new series (1838): pt. 2, p. 544; RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 7, no. 16, fol. 18r. A Memoir, regarding the Church Registers of the Chapel of the British Factory, at Mosco and Archangel 1706 to 1732, and at St. Petersburg, from 1723, to the current Year. Compiled and dedicated to the Factory by The Rev<sup>d</sup> Edward Law M.A. 1833. John Kirton, Script, fol. 18r; Julia Mahnke-Devlin, Britische Migration nach Russland im 19. Jahrhundert: Integration – Kultur – Alltagsleben [British Migration to Russia in the Nineteenth Century: Integration, Culture, Everyday Life] (Wiesbaden, Germany: Harrassowitz, 2005), pp. 95, 98, 137, 142, 161, 168, 175, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 202, 206, 208, 211, 222; Alfred Royer, The English Prisoners in Russia: A Personal Narrative of the First Lieutenant of H.M.S. Tiger; Together with an Account of His Journey in Russia, and His Interview with the Emperor Nicholas and the Principal Persons in the Empire, 3rd ed. (London: Chapman and Hall, 1854), pp. 138, 143–144, 146, 148, 178; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1866, 1867, 1868, 1870, 1877, 1880, 1892, 1897; Register of St. Olave Church, York, IGI; Cattley Family Tree, ancestry.co.uk; All Souls’ Cemetery Kensal Green Register No 47,571, Grave no. 21,193, IGI; A History of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet: With a List of the Members of the Society from 1594 to 1890 and an Abstract of the Minutes (Edinburgh: T. & A. Constable, 1890); A.G. Cross, “Chaplains to the British,” pp. 140–141; Evening Mail (London), May 12, 1820; Record IDs 169755 [Edward Law], 3427 [George Henry Law], 131327 [John Adolphus Wright], Clergy of the Church of England database (CCed), theclergydatabase.org.uk; Research Tree: Reformers, Abolitionists, Suffragists, and More, ancestry.co.uk; Preston Chronicle, Saturday, April 29, 1837; and Bristol Mercury, Saturday, November 19, 1870.

As the Rev. Dr. Edward Law was for forty-four years (1820–1864) chaplain of the English Church in St. Petersburg, the court minute books of the Company manuscripts at Guildhall Library abound with information about him for that period. It is, however, beyond the scope of this essay for me to have scoured them, the end product of which would have been a full biography. My chief purpose in presenting a biography of him was to make available the information about the unfortunate shooting accident in which he was involved, which I am assuming is not common knowledge.

2. Encyclopedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Edward Law, earl of Ellenborough,” accessed November 15, 2020, <https://www.britannica.com/biography/Edward-Law-earl-of-Ellenborough>
3. The disclosure that Rev. Dr. Law was responsible for the death of William Harwarden Gillibrand appeared in an obituary for a person with the surname Fazakerley because William’s brother Henry, as heir to the Fazakerley estates in West Derby, Lancashire, took the surname of his cousin, Colonel Fazakerley (Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Advertiser, December 20, 1828; “Funeral of Mrs. Fazackerley [sic] Westby,” Preston Chronicle, November 6, 1875). William Harwarden Gillibrand was the older brother of Henry Harwarden Gillibrand, who in 1814 as “an infant second son of Thomas Gillibrand of Gillibrand Hall,” was granted by Royal Licence the name and arms of Fazakerly, his having been heir to the title and estate of Samuel Harwarden Fazakerley (c. 1753 – 1813) (“Royal Licences Recorded in England,” Heraldry Online, accessed 29 May 2021, <http://heraldry-online.org.uk/royal/royal-licences.htm>; Will of Samuel Harwarden Fazakerley, probated 9 October 1813, Prerogative Court of Canterbury Wills, 1384-1858, IGI).
4. Film no. 1966219, Family History Library (FHL), Salt Lake City, UT.
5. Welch, List of Queen’s Scholars, p. 468.
6. It is known that he kept a journal because, for example, in 1857, when he was involved in a dispute between an Englishwoman and her niece in St. Petersburg, he cited an extract from it to “elucidate” the situation (Edward Law to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Lord Wodehouse, Minister Plenipotentiary etc. etc. etc. of Her Britannic Majesty at St. Petersburg, St. Petersburg, Tuesday July 2/14, 1857, FO 65.496, PRO). Efforts to unearth this journal have so far proven unsuccessful. Again, I am assuming it is not common knowledge that he kept a journal nor where it is, or it would have been cited by other scholars.

LEON

There are four sources for the life of Charlotte Leon (20 April 1764 – 24 January / 5 February 1847): Anna Whistler’s diaries, the BRBC STP 1845,<sup>1</sup> the PREC STP (no. 5690), and a single extant letter written by Mrs. Leon.

It is important to remember that Anna Whistler’s knowledge of Mrs. Leon’s biography was completely second-hand: she says she heard none of it from Mrs. Leon herself. The Gellibrands, who were Mrs. Leon’s “constant friends these many years past,”<sup>2</sup> were probably Anna Whistler’s major source. In addition to the possible mistakes of memory on the part of those narrating Mrs. Leon’s biography to Anna Whistler, she herself demonstrated more than once in the two parts of the diaries that she confused details of the lives of others. What she herself perceived in the personality of her grateful, “cheerful, useful . . . so neat & erect”<sup>3</sup> friend, Mrs. Leon, was “her lively manner and intellectual remarks,” “her high regard for traits of good encountered in her extensive knowledge of the world,” and that “her usual deportment shewed she had been accustomed to the best society.” It was “her humble yet exalted aim to do all the good in her power”; indeed, one of “her favorite texts” was “‘she has done all she could.’”<sup>4</sup> She reminded Anna Whistler of her own mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22).

The single extant personal document illuminating Charlotte Leon’s biography is a personal letter in French that she wrote, when destitute, from St. Petersburg on 20 February 1831 (whether Old or New Style cannot be determined) to the 10th Duke of Hamilton, Alexander Hamilton Douglas (5 October 1767 – 18 August 1852; see Image 328), entreating him to grant her an annual pension.<sup>5</sup>

According to Anna Whistler’s diaries, Charlotte Leon was the niece of Dr. Edward Jenner (Berkeley, Gloucestershire 17 May 1749 – Berkeley, Gloucestershire 26 January 1823; see Image 193), the discoverer of vaccination, “her maiden name having been the same [as his] when a very young girl.” She accompanied him to Paris, where they spent so much time in the circle of Benjamin Franklin, then American Ambassador to France, that “[Franklin] always addressed her as his child.” She married “an officer in the British army” and “lived in the West Indies & at other stations abroad.” The children of this marriage did not survive, and both Mrs. Leon’s husband and father died. Her mother was old and had “a limited income,” while Mrs. Leon had no independent means. It was then that through “a lady of her acquaintance among the English nobility” she received a post in “a very distinguished Polish family” as governess to “their daughter, Olga” (see Images 324–327). After a period at their home in Poland, they moved to St. Petersburg “to complete the education of their children,” living there in a palace that, some forty years later (i.e., by the year 1847, in which Anna Whistler was writing about Mrs. Leon) had been “converted into a charitable institution.” Through the fêtes given by the Countess, “Mrs. Leon [had been] accustomed to meet the court circle of Imperial St. Petersburg for she was usually mistress of ceremonies” and “was familiar with the reigns” of Paul I, Alexander I and Nicholas I, about which she had many anecdotes to relate. Mrs. Leon spoke of the Polish Countess, her employer, as “beautiful, ... charitable, ... generous high-minded noble,” and felt great attachment to and admiration for her charge, Olga.<sup>6</sup>

There came a time when the “family [had to] leave St P to travel,” but Mrs. Leon was prevented from going with them because she suffered a fall that left her temporarily lame and took two years to recover from. She lost whatever savings she had “thro the dishonesty of an agent.” Many of her English countrymen then helped her. When able to work again, she may have taken a post in the Naryshkin family. Eventually she became “house keeper to Mr. Gellibrand” in Moscow for five years before he married his first wife. When he returned to Russia with his bride, Mrs. Leon retired. Aided by the English Factory, she “lived respected in private lodgings” in St. Petersburg, helping the poor, “visiting her few intimate friends,” and “making lint for the hospitals.”<sup>7</sup> In the autumn of 1846, a Mrs. Snow invited the now-ill Mrs. Leon to leave her lodgings in the Galernaia and come to live in her home. It is here that Mrs. Leon died.<sup>8</sup> Her funeral “was very respectably attended,”<sup>9</sup> and Mrs. Gellibrand undertook to carry out her last wishes concerning her estate by selling “her furniture and clothing” for the benefit of the poor or distributing it “to the few of her pensioners.”<sup>10</sup>

In her letter of 20 February 1831, Mrs. Leon explained to the 10th Duke of Hamilton that she was Charlotte Leon, sixty-seven years old and infirm, who had the honor of having been personally known to him in Russia as governess to the countesses Potocki. He had at that time told her to feel free to call on him for help if circumstances should ever require it. She had not taken advantage of his offer, wishing instead to earn her bread independently, engaged in the education of young women. But the weight of years and the misfortune of having lost the small amount of capital she had by giving it to a family that had suffered irreparable losses and had been obliged to declare itself bankrupt had made her decide to take advantage of the Duke of Hamilton's generous promise now and to beg him to make her final years independent and tranquil. Unable to further hold any situation, she wished to retire in St. Petersburg, where she at present was, with her fellow countrymen and live out her days quietly, but, having no means, could not do so. She therefore implored him to grant her an annual pension that would enable her to spend her last days independently, retired from the world. She gave her place of residence as Grande Morskoy Street (Bol'shaia Morskaiia) in the building she said belonged to Rauz [should be Shtraukh] in the home of Madame Crayeffski [Kraevskaia], born Princess Schakoffskoi [Shakhovskaia].<sup>11</sup>

The following is the result of attempts to check the information given in Anna Whistler's diaries and Mrs. Leon's letter.

If we look at Anna Whistler's statement that Charlotte's maiden name was the same as Edward Jenner's when she was a very young girl, a possible implication could be that her surname had changed while she was still a young girl, but well before she married, thus raising the question of whether the wives of any of Dr. Jenner's relations were widowed and then remarried. The discovery of another surname for her might not help clarify her birth date and parents, but it might help us to find the details of her marriage and issue. The amount of research required to determine this surname makes the research prohibitive at this time. She herself signed her letter to the 10th Duke of Hamilton simply "Charlotte Léon," revealing no maiden name. It is interesting that only in the burial register of the English Church was her Jenner connection noted and that because Rev. Law instituted (in 1841) the practice of entering the maiden name of a widow or married female in her burial entry, if it could be ascertained.<sup>12</sup>

Consultation of the IGI has failed to produce a birth date and parents for Charlotte Jenner. My selection of 20 April 1764 as her date of birth is based on the fact that on 15 April 1845, she told the Whistlers that “her 81st Anniversary of her birth day would be next Sunday,”<sup>13</sup> which was 20 April.

As for the statement that Dr. Edward Jenner was her uncle, (the late) Canon J.E. Gethyn-Jones of Berkeley, Gloucestershire, who in 1988 was preparing a biography (unfinished) of Dr. Edward Jenner and was adamant that Charlotte was not Jenner’s niece, suggested that she belonged to a collateral line or may have been a “byblow,” of which there were a few in the family, to his knowledge. Of interest is his further information about the descendants of Edward Jenner’s older brother, Reverend Henry Jenner (1736–1798). The latter’s fourth son was Reverend George Charles Jenner (1767–1846), who was as well a medical doctor (an MD “of Paris”) and “visited Paris” more than once. But this son was born three years after Charlotte Jenner, and thus seems unlikely to be the doctor with whom she travelled to Paris. Reverend George Charles Jenner’s only son, George Charles Jenner, Esquire (1824–1892), had eleven children and named his third daughter Charlotte Jenner Jenner,<sup>14</sup> but I believe she was named for her father’s aunt, Charlotte (Fryer) Jenner.<sup>15</sup>

As for Charlotte’s visits to Paris and her closeness to Benjamin Franklin (17 January 1706 – 17 April 1790), who purportedly always addressed her as “my child,” there is no corroboration.<sup>16</sup> Franklin was in France from late 1776 until 1785. In 1778, he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to the French Court. Charlotte Jenner’s age in those years ranged from twelve to twenty-one. Given Franklin’s advanced age, she could have appropriately been called “my child” by him at any time in that period. Charlotte Jenner does not appear in Claude-Anne Lopez’s book about Franklin and the women he knew in Paris.<sup>17</sup> But as he “kept an open house every Sunday for English and American visitors, . . . a visit may well have taken place,” although there seems to be “no written trace” of it.<sup>18</sup>

Although her surname changed from Jenner at an early age, the IGI, consulted for her marriage, failed to produce a marriage for a Charlotte Jenner to a man with the surname Leon. There are thus no records of the birth of her children, who did not survive. It has not been possible to find information in foreign or army registers about the marriages of men with the surname Leon to women with the first name Charlotte in the appropriate period.

The fact that Mrs. Leon wrote to the 10th Duke of Hamilton and identified herself as governess to the countesses Potocki constitutes strong evidence that the Potocki family by whom she was employed was that of Count Stanisław Szczęsny Potocki (1752 – 16/28 March 1805; see Image 324), who married, as his third wife, his mistress the adventuress and “Greek beauty” of “libertine morals,” Zofia (Glavani) (Witt) (1760 – Berlin 12/24 November 1822; see Image 325).<sup>19</sup> They had two daughters: Zofia (1801 – Paris 2 September 1875; see Image 327) and Olga (1802 – Paris 7 October 1861; see Image 326).<sup>20</sup> The Potockis lived on an estate in Tulczyn in the south of Russia, as well as having a mansion in St. Petersburg.<sup>21</sup> Alexander Hamilton Douglas had been appointed ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg on 26 May 1806 and had been recalled in 1807 (becoming the 10th Duke of Hamilton in February 1819). He had remained in Russia and Poland until October 1808,<sup>22</sup> traveling to Tulczyn in late 1807 with the widowed Countess Potocka, who was his lover.<sup>23</sup> He could, therefore, only have become acquainted with Charlotte Leon in the short period between about mid-July 1806 and October 1808 (when she was forty-two to forty-four years old).

While in the employ of the Potocki family, Mrs. Leon could also have met the Scottish artist, William Allan (see Image 320), who, during his first stay in Russia (July 1805 – August 1814), had lived in St. Petersburg from 1805–1807. Leaving St. Petersburg in late 1807 with Douglas and Countess Potocka, he had then traveled “through the southern parts of the Russian empire.” After “extended stays in the Ukraine, Crimea, Kuban and Caucasus regions,” sketching the local peoples and collecting their arms and armor, Allan spent at least eighteen months with the hospitable Countess and her family in Tulczyn in the period from 1810–1813.<sup>24</sup>

It is almost impossible to say when the trip that Mrs. Leon's accident prevented her from making took place. However, her assessment of the Countess as good and high-minded had to belong to the period after 1810, which has been pinpointed as the year in which a change in the Countess's moral behavior began, continuing until her death. In this period, she is said to have performed much philanthropy. She also devoted much time to a lengthy legal battle with her late husband's sons from his second marriage, attempting to ensure the financial future of her own children by Szczęsny.<sup>25</sup> This litigation required her to travel back and forth to St. Petersburg from Tulczyn. We know, for example, that in the summer of 1811 she received a summons from her own son to come to St. Petersburg without delay, and that she set out for the capital with her entire family.<sup>26</sup> It is perhaps the return from St. Petersburg on this trip or on one like it that Mrs. Leon was prevented from making. The events of the Countess Potocka's life between April 1811 and 1820 cannot be helpful, because her correspondence for this period is not in the Potocki archives.<sup>27</sup> From the letters of people in St. Petersburg to the 10th Duke of Hamilton,<sup>28</sup> we know that she was in St. Petersburg in June 1810 and in December 1810.<sup>29</sup> She left St. Petersburg in the winter of 1811 (?) "on Acct of the Contracts at Kieff."<sup>30</sup> It is said that she was in St. Petersburg during the War of 1812.<sup>31</sup> In July 1813, she was at Tulczyn.<sup>32</sup>

The Naryshkin family in which Mrs. Leon is said to have taken a situation two years after her injury cannot be identified. It is tempting to conjecture, despite the order of the narration by Anna Whistler, that perhaps the Naryshkin family for whom Mrs. Leon worked was that of Lev Aleksandrovich Naryshkin (1785–1846), who married her former charge, Countess Olga Potocka, on 23 March / 4 April 1824.<sup>33</sup> Mrs. Leon would thus have taken up the post after Mr. Gellibrand's first marriage. But the Naryshkins' only daughter, Sophie, was born in 1829,<sup>34</sup> when Mrs. Leon's age would have been an impediment to her taking such a situation.

As her position of Mr. Gellibrand's housekeeper in Moscow, previous to his first marriage, lasted five years, and he married in December 1825 in England, Mrs. Leon would have to have taken up this employment no later than 1820–1821.

She certainly did not abuse Alexander Hamilton Douglas’s offer, waiting some twenty-five years before approaching him for help in 1831. Whether he gave her financial aid so long after meeting her cannot be determined, as there is no extant reply to her, no acknowledgment from her, and the Hamilton family archives do not have any nineteenth-century “account books relating to payments to destitute individuals.”<sup>35</sup>

However her financial situation may have been resolved, Mrs. Leon’s friends and compatriots helped her to varying degrees. When Anna Whistler invited her to dinner, she was living at 54 Galernaia Street,<sup>36</sup> in lodgings where there was a curfew. There were few luxuries she could allow herself, so Anna Whistler sent her back to her lodgings with a bottle of cream.<sup>37</sup> Dr. James Rogers, her physician, personally had her prescriptions filled and paid for them himself.<sup>38</sup> In the autumn of 1846, Mary Snow (born Dillow), widow of Thomas Snow, invited the now-ill Mrs. Leon to move to her home at 20 Karavannaia Street (in the house of Kuprianov, in the First Ward of the Third Admiralty District).<sup>39</sup> It is here that Mrs. Leon died. After a funeral service in the English Church (see Images 110–111), she was buried on 28 January / 8 February 1847, in the Smolensk Cemetery<sup>40</sup>.

NOTES

1. “Leon Mrs No. 54 Galerney,” female, with no occupation listed, is noted as having died in 1847 (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 34).
2. Entry for Tuesday night [February] 9 [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
3. Entry for April 5/17 within entry for Thursday, 10 April [1845], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
4. Entry for Tuesday night [February] 9 [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II. See also Mark 14:8.
5. Early 19th c. Personal correspondence, mainly appeals for help, Duke of Hamilton Papers, SRO (hereafter, SRO: Hamilton), 2177 Bundle 760.
6. Quotations in the last two sentences of this paragraph are taken from the entry for Saturday evening Feb. 27th [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.

7. All quotations in this paragraph up to this point are taken from the entry for Saturday evening, Feb. 27th [1847], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
8. Entries for Saturday, January 30 [1847] and Saturday morning Feb. 6th [1847], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
9. Entry for Tuesday night [February] 9 [1847], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
10. Entry for Saturday evening: Feb. 27th [1847], NYPL: AWP, Part II.
11. SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 760.
12. RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 16, fol. 18r (see Note 1 in Law in this Appendix for document title).
13. Entry for April 5/17 within the entry for Thursday, 10 April [1845], NYPL: AWP, Part II. In her letter of 20 February 1831, Mrs. Leon declared her age to be 67, which implies a birth year of 1763, if she turned 68 on 20 April 1831. The PREC STP for 1847, no. 5690, gives her age at death as eighty-three, which also implies a birth year of 1763, if she would have turned eighty-four on 20 April 1847. Even Anna Whistler, on her last visit to Mrs. Leon, on 20 January / 1 February 1847, a week before the latter's death, said she was eighty-three (entry for Saturday morning Feb. 6th [1847], NYPL: AWP, Part II). But, on the basis of Mrs. Leon's statement in 1845, she was eighty-two when she died.
14. All of the information in this paragraph to this point is from two undated letters in 1988 from Canon J.E. Gethyn-Jones to E. Harden.
15. Information taken from a Jenner genealogy provided by Dr. Malcolm F. Beeson, manager of the Jenner Museum and Conference Centre in Berkeley, Gloucestershire, in his letter of 1 August 2000 to E. Harden.
16. Replies from the staff of the multi-volume Papers of Benjamin Franklin, which are being published by Yale University Press, and examination of the published volumes of The Papers of Benjamin Franklin for 1776–1785 (vols. 21–43; New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1978–2019) indicate that no Charlotte Jenner or a Dr. Jenner have so far appeared in Franklin's papers.
17. Claude-Anne Lopez, Mon Cher Papa Franklin and the Ladies of Paris (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1966).

18. Claude-Anne Lopez, New Haven, CT, to E. Harden, 24 April 1994.
19. Jerzy Łojek, Dzieje pięknej Bitynki Opowieść o życiu Zofii Wittowej Potockiej (1760–1822) [The History of the Beautiful Bithynienne: A Story of the Life of Zofia Witt-Potocka (1760–1822)] (Warsaw: Wydawnictwo Alfa, 1995), pp. 295, 388, 421. There is no mention of Mrs. Leon in this extensive and definitive biography. Łojek is the first scholar writing about the Countess Potocka to consult the latter's letters. Two further valuable works about Potocka that have appeared since Łojek's are Eva Stachniak, Garden of Venus (Toronto: Harper Collins Publishers, 2005), a novel, and Sukie Taylor Amory, "Eros toż Sofia. Sofiyivka: A Garden of Allusion in Ukraine," Hortus 87 (Autumn 2008): pp. 54–81; 88 (Winter 2008): pp. 72–97; 89 (Spring 2009): pp. 77–104; 90 (Summer 2009): pp. 79–102.
20. Their exact dates of birth are not known: Olga's year of birth is given as 1802 or 1803, while Zofia's is always given as 1801. Memoirists speak of them as two years apart in age. Olga's death date of 7 October 1861 and Zofia's death date of 2 September 1875 are given in L.P. Grossman, "U istokov 'Bakchisaraiskogo fontana'" ["At the Sources of 'The Fountain of Bakchisarai'"], in Pushkin Issledovaniia i materialy [Pushkin: Studies and Materials], vol. 3, ed. N.V. Izmailov (Moscow–Leningrad: Izd-stvo AN SSSR, 1960), p. 59. Olga's beauty was captured by an unknown mid-nineteenth-century artist in the late 1830s – early 1840s (see Image 326).
21. Smirnova-Rosset, Dnevnik, pp. 742, 755, 762; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, pp. 3, 39. The Potocki mansion was No. 4 on the English Embankment and the back of it was No. 8 on Galernaia Street. See also Anatolii Ivanov, Doma i liudi Iz istorii peterburgskikh osobniakov [Houses and People: From the History of St. Petersburg Detached Houses] (Moscow– St. Petersburg: Tsentrpoligraph M i M-Del'ta, 2005), pp. 397–405.
22. Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. "Hamilton, Alexander Douglas- ... (1767–1852)."
23. Łojek, Dzieje pięknej Bitynki, p. 304; Howard, William Allan, pp. 45–46. Douglas is said to have given substantial sums of money to Countess Potocka.

Of particular interest in the exhibition catalogue William Allan, in connection with Mrs. Leon's employer, Countess

- Potocka, is the essay by Andrzej Szczerski, “Walking Where Alluring Grass Floats...’ William Allan’s Polish Nest,” pp. 31–41.
24. Howard, William Allan, pp. 45–46; William Allan to Alexander Hamilton Douglas, St. P., 16 January 1812, Letters on Russian affairs to the Duke of Hamilton, 1803–1813, SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 698.
 Allan’s voyage by sea in 1805 had ended in a wreck at Memel. Here, he accumulated “funds by painting portraits of the Dutch Consul and others,” and then traveled by land to St. Petersburg, where he was aided, particularly by the physician to the Imperial family, Sir Alexander Crichton. He learned Russian and “travelled in the interior of the country.” He also lived in the Ukraine for several years, “making excursions to Turkey, Tartary and elsewhere, studying the manners of Cossacks, Circassians, and Tartars, and collecting arms and armour.” The French invasion of Russia prevented him from leaving Russia in 1812; he did not return to Edinburgh until 1814 (Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Allan, Sir William”).
  25. A.J. Rollé, “Sud’ba krasavitsy (Sofiia Gliavone-Vitte-Pototskaia)” [“The Fate of a Beauty (Sofiia Gliavone-Vitte-Pototskaia)”] Kievskaia starina: ezhebemesiachnyi istoricheskii zhurnal [Old Days and Ways of Kiev: A Monthly Journal of History] 17 (1887): p. 132; Grossman, “U istokov,” p. 59.
  26. Łojek, Dzieje pięknej Bitynki, pp. 360, 362.
  27. Łojek, pp. 363–364.
  28. Letter to Monsieur le Marquis, Peters. 1810 le 1 de juin, Letters on Russian affairs to the Duke of Hamilton, 1803–1813, SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 698.
  29. Cte Walicki to Monsieur le Marquis, St. Petersbourg, le 12 Decembre 1810, Letters on Russian affairs to the Duke of Hamilton, 1803–1813, SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 698.
  30. J. Rogerson to My Lord, 41. Charlotte Square Dec<sup>r</sup>. 14, 1811 (?), Letters on Russian affairs to the Duke of Hamilton, 1803–1813, SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 698.
  31. Łojek, Dzieje pięknej Bitynki, p. 363.
  32. Labensky to Monsieur le Marquis 15 Bucklersbury, 24 Juillet 1813, Letters on Russian affairs to the Duke of Hamilton, 1803–1813, SRO: Hamilton, 2177 Bundle 698.

33. Łojek, Dzieje pięknej Bitynki, p. 392. Her sister, Zofia (see Image 327), married on 25 August (OS) 1821 Pavel Dmitrievich Kiselev (8 January 1788 – 14/24 November 1872), minister of state properties from 1837 and Russian ambassador to France from 1856 to 1862. She did not live with him after 1829 (Łojek, p. 374; Grossman, “U istokov,” pp. 62, 72).
34. Elizaveta Renne, “Christina Robertson in Russia,” in Christina Robertson: A Scottish Portraitist at the Russian Court, ed. Amanda Farr, trans. Catherine Phillips (St. Petersburg and Edinburgh: [Edinburgh City Art Centre], 1996), pp. 32, 33, 36.
35. E.A. Bouchard, private secretary to the Duke of Hamilton, Lennoxlove, Haddington, East Lothian, to E. Harden, 29 January 1993.
36. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 35. Nistrem gives 54 Galernaia as the property of Briskorn (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 39).
37. Entry for April 5/17 within the entry for Thursday 10 April [1845], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
38. Entry for April 5/17 within the entry for Thursday 10 April [1845], and the entry for Saturday morning Feb. 6th [1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
39. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 52; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar', vol. 1, p. 62. Mary Dillow was born 18 July 1783 (OS) and baptized 24 August 1783 (OS) in the English Church. It has not been possible to ascertain her death date; nor has it been possible to ascertain a birth, baptism, or death date for Thomas Snow. Thomas Snow and Mary Dillow were married in the English Church on 28 November 1829 (OS) (IGI).
40. PREC STP, no. 5690; BRBC STP 1845, fol. 34.

MAINGAY<sup>1</sup>

William Maingy (St. Peter Port, Guernsey 8 May 1791 – Tunbridge Wells 24 April 1862) was the son of Thomas Maingy (1756–1835) of Havelet, and the eldest of ten children of his marriage to his second wife, Anne le Cocq. In order of birth, he was the middle brother of three male siblings, the others being his half-brother, Thomas (1781–1859), and his biological brother, Bonamy (1795–1861).<sup>2</sup> In appearance and character, he reminded Anna Whistler of John Winstanley and seemed “to appreciate Debo as that kind Uncle did when we were in England” [in 1843].<sup>3</sup> See Images 258–264 of many of the Maingay family members.

“In the 18th century,” the Maingy family’s profits came from the sales of wine and spirits to Cornish smugglers and “from privateering during ... the American War of Independence, and the French Revolution.”<sup>4</sup> As “the wine trade ... had suffered an economic slump after 1815,” William went into “wool trading in partnership with [a] John Thomas.”<sup>5</sup> Their premises in 1823 were given as 17 Basinghall Street in London, where they were “paying $80 a year rent,” which “went to Christ’s Hospital under an endowment by Lady Anne Bacon.”<sup>6</sup>

In 1817, William Maingy married in St. Peter Port Eliza Lamb (Piette House, St. Peter Port, Guernsey 16 January 1801 – London 28 June 1877),<sup>7</sup> daughter of George Lamb (b. 2 March 1766; bap. Rye 10 March 1766; d. Guernsey 19 April 1829) and Catherine Gosselin (Guernsey 15 May 1766 – d. 3 February 1850; buried Guernsey 8 February 1850). While living in England, they had four children: William Bonamy (b. London 14 October 1819; bap. London, St. Pancras Parish Church 17 October 1819; d. Boscombe, Hampshire 26 August 1902)<sup>8</sup>; Eliza Ann (St. Peter Port, Guernsey 12 February 1821 – London 20 November 1899); Emma Elizabeth (St. Peter Port, Guernsey 6 February 1826 – Tewkesbury 27 December 1904); and Charles George (St. Peter Port, Guernsey 21 October 1830 – St. Petersburg 27 January / 8 February 1843).

Sometime in 1827, the family was joined by Amelia Hooper (Sanford, Devon 1810 – Southwick Crescent, Paddington, London 15 January 1876), who became nanny to the children, and whom they affectionately called “Meely.” Her epitaph on the family tomb reads:

“For 49 years a valued friend and nurse in the family of the above ‘Faithful unto death.’”<sup>9</sup>

In 1831, the family, including Amelia Hooper, but leaving William Bonamy in Guernsey to attend Elizabeth College, emigrated to St. Petersburg. There, William Maingy assumedly pursued “his wool factoring business.”<sup>10</sup> They lived on Vasilievskii Island.<sup>11</sup> The three youngest children were born there: Amelia de Jersey (St. Petersburg 20 October / 1 November 1833 – St. Petersburg 23 November / 5 December 1835), Frederick Thomas (St. Petersburg 1/13 May 1834 – London 11 October 1862), and Emily (St. Petersburg 23 January / 4 February 1836 – London 25 December 1890). Amelia de Jersey died there at the age of two years and one month.<sup>12</sup>

As “Britain lifted its embargo on machinery exports around this time, many entrepreneurs were looking for opportunities in Russia. One of the main areas was cotton technology, and the Ochta Cotton Spinning Mill was set up as a pilot project by the Frerichs brothers on the little Ochta River feeding into the Neva. They were partners in the De Jersey merchanting firm which had special interests in cotton and the Baltic trade.”<sup>13</sup>

William Maingy, “who had behind him his experience in the textile trade ... was one of the Ochta Mill founders, (with twenty two of the original eighty seven shares, as detailed in his will dated 29th April 1862).” He later bequeathed “eleven of these shares to William Bonamy noting that the sum of 33,000 silver rubles Russian currency had been advanced for the payment, and he [put] others in a trust for his wife and daughters.” “Ochta ... in 1860 ... was the sixth largest spinning mill in Russia, with 67,000 spindles, and an estimated capital value of £49,000 sterling.”

From St. Petersburg on 1st January 1835, Maingy & Co. sent a circular to the London Merchant Bank, Wm Brandt’s Sons & Co., informing them that they had opened a branch in Archangel, which would be run by Thomas Carew Hunt, whose own branch there would be closed. The circular also stated that “I, William Maingy, have written myself up at the Dooma (council) of this town, trading under the name of Wm. Maingy.” It is not clear in what commodities or services the various companies were trading, but both Brandt and De Jersey were reputable merchant bankers who backed a wide range of ventures and products, particularly sugar and cotton.<sup>14</sup>

On 22 June 1840, William, Thomas, and Bonamy “changed their name by Royal Licence” from Maingy to Maingay, “like most of the Guernsey members of their family.”<sup>15</sup>

William Maingay returned to England in 1843, probably “to prepare for the return of the whole family the following spring,”<sup>16</sup> and “stayed at Wellesley House, a substantial villa on Shooters’ Hill, London.”<sup>17</sup> He was followed by his family, who left Russia on 19/31 May 1844, except for William Bonamy, who stayed in St. Petersburg to look after the family’s business interests. Deborah Whistler (see Images 17–19, 21) visited them in 1846, during the year she spent in Preston with Anna Whistler’s half-sister and brother-in-law, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (see Image 40) and John Winstanley. The Whistlers accompanied Emma Maingay back to Wellesley House in October 1847, after she had been absent for six weeks preparing for and participating in the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden.

By the end of March 1851, the family was living in Tunbridge Wells: William (59), retired merchant; his wife, Eliza (51); their daughters, Eliza (30), Emma (25), and Emily (14); and three servants, including Amelia Hooper (40). Their address was 7 Belvedere Terrace in Church Road, opposite Holy Trinity Church.<sup>18</sup>

In 1861, they were still in Tunbridge Wells, but at 1 Belmont Terrace: William Maingay (69), shareholder; Eliza, his wife (62); their daughters, Eliza Ann (40), Emma (35), both born in Guernsey, and Emily (24), born in St. Petersburg; their son, Frederick (25), born in St. Petersburg; and four servants, including Amelia Hooper (50), born in Sanford, Devon.<sup>19</sup>

In Tunbridge Wells, William Maingay “was a diligent supporter of church and town activities,” such as the foundation of the church of St. John-on-the-Lew, which was consecrated on 5 January 1858. He was in 1859 treasurer of the Victoria Schools, which were run by the church. In 1860, he was a town commissioner.<sup>20</sup>

He died in Tunbridge Wells on 24 April 1862 and was buried in Woodbury Park Cemetery. His monument bears the epitaph: “Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.” His estate amounted to under £4,000.<sup>21</sup>

* * *

Eliza (Lamb) Maingay (see Image 259) was descended from James Lamb (1693–1756), mayor of Rye, who built Lamb House. “The only portrait of her shows a delicately boned almost gaunt woman with dark brown hair. From the style of hair and dress [it] appears to belong to the early 1840s.”<sup>22</sup>

Descriptions of her personality and character are to be found in the St. Petersburg diaries of Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) and in the memoirs of a Woolwich friend of the Maingay family, Jane Connolly (b. 8 June 1841; bap. Woolwich 4 August 1841; d. Preston, Sussex 20 April 1922).<sup>23</sup> The entries in Part I of Anna Whistler’s St. Petersburg diaries are based on direct contact with the family until they left St. Petersburg on 19/31 May 1844. Their imminent departure precipitated frequent meetings. Her comments about Eliza (Lamb) Maingay reveal a spiritual kinship with a “truly pious,” warmhearted woman, together with her husband not fond of parties, and generous in helping Anna Whistler shop because of her fluency in Russian. They conversed at dinner at the Maingays’ about the various churches and pastors in their lives and their departed little ones lost to death.

After their first meeting, Eliza (Lamb) Maingay sometimes sent books, such as Reade’s Christian Meditations, to Anna Whistler courtesy of Emma’s visit to Debo (see Images 17–19, 21), and spent two days introducing Anna Whistler to shops which she herself had found satisfactory for twelve years. Anna Whistler looked forward to sociables where she knew Eliza (Lamb) Maingay would be present. Eliza (Lamb) Maingay and the family visited the Whistlers at their dacha. She frequently begged and persuaded Major and Anna Whistler to allow Debo to spend whole days and nights at her home, especially as their day of departure approached. On that day, she gave a letter of farewell to Debo for Anna Whistler, not to be opened for a week.

After the Maingay family left Russia, Anna Whistler and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay used William Bonamy as a go-between to bring them letters from one another. Unfortunately, none of these letters are extant; the reason for the loss of most letters, including Mrs. Maingay's, is that, as Anna Whistler said, only letters from Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) were among the few she kept. In 1847, they met again, this time at Shooters' Hill, when all the Whistlers were present in England for the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden (see Image 20). Jane Connolly said Mrs. Maingay "was one of the group of Woolwich ladies devoted to good works," and her "friends were the very good and religious people in the Wells." In those "days of clergy worship," "Mrs. Maingay and her family were ardent followers of [Rev. Capel] Molyneux" (1804–1877). She, as well as her daughters, were described as "highly cultured and accomplished. Books abounded in their house, and all the family were more or less musical and artistic."<sup>24</sup>

Some time after the death of her husband in 1862, Eliza (Lamb) Maingay moved from Tunbridge Wells to London with Eliza Anne, Emma, and Emily. By 1871, they were living at 11 Nottingham Place, London: Eliza Maingay, head (72), "Living on Private Property"; her daughters, Eliza (50), Emma (45), Emily (34), also "living on Private Property"; and their servant, Amelia Hooper (60), "Annuitant." By the time of the deaths of Amelia Hooper (1876) and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay (1877), they were living at Southwick Crescent, near Paddington. Eliza (Lamb) Maingay died here on 28 June 1877 and was buried in Woodbury Park Cemetery. Information about her on the tombstone says: "Sacred to the memory ... also of Eliza widow of the above W. Maingay Esq. born January 13, 1799 died June 28 1877." Her estate amounted to under £7,000.<sup>25</sup>

* * *

William Bonamy Maingay (b. London 14 October 1819; bap. 17 October St. Pancras parish church; d. Boscombe, Hampshire 26 August 1904; see Image 260) was the first child of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay. In 1830, he "was enrolled in Elizabeth College," in Guernsey, "rebuilt in 1826" and "educationally transformed," of which his uncle, Bonamy Maingay, was "a director and treasurer." "The curriculum had Latin and Greek studies at its core, but also included mathematics and commercial arithmetic, French and other languages, and surveying." When the rest of the family went to Russia in 1831, he "must have been left behind in Guernsey, at least during school terms until he was 14, as he is recorded as a pupil there in 1830–33 in the Elizabeth College Register.” “There were many close relations with whom he could have lived, including his grandparents at Havelet.”<sup>26</sup>

We know little of his life in St. Petersburg, except from the letters of John Stevenson Maxwell of the U.S. Legation, until Anna Whistler begins to record in her diaries Deborah Whistler’s acquaintance with his sister Emma, and gradually with the entire family. William Bonamy became romantically interested in Deborah Whistler in 1844, but, given Major Whistler’s adamant that his daughter could have his permission to marry only if her suitor was an officer of the United States Army, he had no success (see the biography of Deborah Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s”). We know that he made a stilted translation of the Russian romance “Chornyi tsvet” (“The Color Black”), which Debo sang at an evening event; that his sister Emma and Deborah Whistler were amused at his piano playing; that he had a barge on which he took his friends on excursions dressed in a sailor’s suit; and that, after the Maingay family left Russia in 1844, he was the frequent bearer of his sister’s and mother’s letters to and from Deborah and Anna Whistler on his trips between England and St. Petersburg.

It is not clear when William Bonamy Maingay left St. Petersburg to live permanently in England, but on 8 January 1857 he married Anna Maria Courtney (Dublin, Ireland 17 February 1833 – Boscombe, Hampshire 24 May 1910), “one of seven daughters and two sons of Henry Courtney, ‘gentleman,’ of 24 Fitzwilliam Place, Dublin, and Sydney Gosselin,” a very wealthy family with – on one side – Huguenot roots. They were settled in Tunbridge Wells at 3 Belmont Terrace by 1858, two houses down from the residence of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay. They had nine children, all born in Tunbridge Wells: Sydney Kathleen (March Qtr. 1858 – Norwich 26 July 1936), Courtney Cyril (March Qtr. 1859 – Houston, Texas 1 January 1902), Maude Evelyn (December Qtr. 1860 – Bournemouth 19 April 1936), Edward William (June Qtr. 1862 – Wrexham 21 April 1929), Bonamy Cecil (September Qtr. 1864 – Hampstead 13 August 1895), Annette Adeline (December Qtr. 1865 – Wells 15 April 1944), Henry Bertram (December Qtr. 1867 – Scarborough 17 November 1930), Mabel d’Olier (June Qtr. 1872 – Reepham, Norwich 30 April 1958), Wilfred Gosselin (5 June 1873 – Tunbridge Wells 21 August 1873).<sup>27</sup> All were baptized at Holy Trinity Church. William Bonamy called their house “Strelna,” presumably after the town on the seventeenth verst of the Peterhof Road, where the palace of Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich (see Image 436) stood, suggesting that the dacha the Maingays had rented while living in Russia was located in the vicinity of that palace. It is not clear whether William Bonamy “had any sort of employment” after his marriage, for beginning with the 1861 Census he is listed as “shareholder.”<sup>28</sup>

Like his father, he supported “church and town activities,” engaging together with him in getting the church of St. John-on-the-Lew built. He became “a Town Commissioner, serving on the Police Committee, while continuing to support Holy Trinity as Treasurer of the Parochial Provident and Clothing Club, and as Treasurer of the Church of England Education Society.” When living in London, “he was for many years on the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society.” “He became Hon. Secretary of the 17th Kent Rifles in the Volunteer Corps in 1863.”<sup>29</sup>

By 1868, he and his family were living at Marlborough House on Mount Zion in Tunbridge Wells. In 1873, they moved to London, where they presumably lived at Southwick Crescent, near Paddington. In 1891, William Bonamy and Anna Maria (Courtney) Maingay were living at 14 Kensington Crescent, London, with three of their daughters. The diaries of their daughter Annette Adeline show that during the 1880s her father paid annual visits to St. Petersburg in February or March, usually staying about a fortnight. By 1901, they were living in Boscombe, Hampshire; their house was called “Havelet.” Here, William Bonamy died on 26 August 1902. His estate amounted to about £25257. Anna Maria (Courtney) Maingay died at Boscombe, as well, on 24 May 1910.<sup>30</sup>

* * *

Eliza Anne Maingay<sup>31</sup> (see Image 262) was born at St. Peter Port, Guernsey, on 12 February 1821. She was called “Nina” by the family. In St. Petersburg, Anna Whistler recorded that she found her the most interesting of the three Maingay daughters and hoped that Emma would “become the decided young Christian her sister Eliza is.” Eliza was a close friend of Miss McLean, the governess in the family of Varvara

Alekseevna Olenina (see Image 306). On the family's return to England, while living in Shooters' Hill, they were "ardent followers" of Rev. Capel Molyneux, who preached "at Trinity Church, just outside the Arsenal Gates" from 1842 to 1850. On one occasion, when Rev. Molyneux fell ill and had to take leave, he was replaced by a young man of eloquence and charm, who won Eliza Maingay's heart. Her father, who had been on a trip to Russia, returned two weeks before the wedding. On his way home through London, he was warned by a friend to check the credentials of the bridegroom-to-be. He found that the young man, although he came from "a good family and had a good education," was not a clergyman, "had been convicted of some crime," and was living "under an assumed" name. The "engagement was broken off," and Eliza "had the courage taken out of her life" and retreated from it, never marrying. As Rev. Molyneux was canon of Trinity Church, Woolwich, from 1842 to 1850, and Eliza Maingay did not come to live in Woolwich until about June of 1844, it seems plausible that her encounter with this young man had to have taken place between 1844 and 1850.<sup>32</sup>

When the Whistler family brought Emma Maingay home to Wellesley House, Shooters' Hill, Anna Whistler had another occasion to feel the admiration for Eliza Maingay that she had experienced in St. Petersburg. Eliza had a "district of poor cottagers" whom she visited. Anna Whistler found her attired in Quaker dress, "the picture of neatness and composure, looking so placid and with a heavenly expression on her mild, sweet face." Eliza Anne asked Anna Whistler to take Bonnet's The Family of Bethany to St. Petersburg as a gift to her friend, Mary Touchkoff, and a Bible for the Whistler home for couriers to read while they waited for answers to the messages they delivered. Anna Whistler felt regret that she could not spend several days in Eliza Anne's company. After the death of her father, Eliza Anne moved to London with her mother, sisters, and Amelia Hooper. She died at Dorset Square, Marylebone, London on 20 November 1899. Her estate amounted to about £6,000.

* * *

Emma Elizabeth Maingay (see Image 263) was born in St. Peter Port, Guernsey, on 6 February 1826. It is after the arrival of Deborah Whistler in St. Petersburg at the end of September 1843 that we begin to learn anything of Emma. Although Anna Whistler began to record at the end of November 1843 the Whistler family's journey to St. Petersburg, their loss of Charles Donald, their reaction to the climate and the Neva water, it was not until late December 1843 that she recorded that on Christmas Day, when Debo took James (see Images 24–29) and Willie (see Images 27, 30) to the Ropeses to present some gifts, she stayed on to play duets “with a Miss Mengies.” This had to be Emma, and the entry shows that they met sometime within the first three months after the Whistlers' arrival, but possibly for the first time, as the emphasis is on “a Miss Mengies.”

On 18/30 January 1844, the Whistler family went to dine at the Maingays' home, apparently meeting all the family members for the first time. Anna Whistler recorded that she “admire[d] Emma who is perhaps more talented [than her sister, Eliza] and is very pretty.” Throughout Part I of the diaries, after this meeting of the two families, there are numerous references to Debo's spending the day or overnight at the Maingay home or Emma's spending the day at the Whistlers' home, for example, on 9 March 1844, and 22 March 1844.

Debo and Emma attended as spectators the wedding festivities of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna (see Image 441) and His Serene Highness Duke Adolphe Wilhelm of Nassau (see Image 442) on 19/31 January 1844.

On 1/13 March 1844, Anna Whistler attended a rehearsal of the Imperial choristers with Debo and Emma, where the two young women appreciated the music as musicians, while she wept, thinking of the bliss of all the dead she had known.

Debo is also recorded in the diaries as having attended a performance by Clara Schumann (see Image 199) with the Maingays at the Smol'nyi Convent (see Image 147).

The imminent “departure of the Maingays for England induce[d] [the Whistlers] to meet them as often as possible” in many venues. Debo and Emma went together to a tea party at the Gellibrands on 22 April in honor of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes's birthday and wedding anniversary. Eliza (Lamb) Maingay called on 3 May to beg that Debo could come spend the night with all the family, an adventure that the weather prolonged into a stay of several days. Emma came out to the Whistler dacha on the Peterhof Road for a week, prompting Anna Whistler to record a very favorable assessment of her. She found Emma, who sometimes sat with her and read aloud from Christian works, “a very gifted girl,” whose “voice in reading is sweeter than at the piano.” She was very grateful that while Emma had come to the dacha to spend time with Debo, she also made time for Debo’s mother.

These visits to the dacha were the last Emma and her family made to the Whistlers, although Debo went to their home and spent their last night in St. Petersburg with them. They departed on the steamer on 19/31 May 1844. Debo saw them off and returned home with Emma’s picture, overcome by sadness. It is now that Emma’s brother, William Bonamy, who was remaining in St. Petersburg, began to act as go-between, appearing on 15 June at the Whistler dacha with a note from Emma, the first in a long correspondence.

When Deborah Whistler spent a year in 1845–1846 in Preston for her health’s sake, she visited Emma and her family at Shooters’ Hill. In 1847, the entire Whistler family were in Preston and, in preparing for Deborah’s marriage to Francis Seymour Haden, had Emma with them for six weeks. She was the only bridesmaid. After the Hadens set up housekeeping in London, Debo and Emma saw one another frequently until the latter’s death. Anna Whistler’s letters to James Whistler sometimes recorded that Emma was a guest at the Haden home and that she asked that greetings be conveyed to him.

Jane Connolly, writing of the Tunbridge Wells days, said that, while “all the family were more or less musical and artistic, Emma’s music was especially good. She played in a masterly way. She was very fond of pets, and had the gift of teaching them. Canaries understood almost every word she said, and often, when playing, her canary would be seen fluttering over her hands on the piano. When the movement was slow, it would perch on her hand. Dormice became intelligent with her, and squirrels who are shy of making friends loved her. They came when she called, and ate nuts in her hand.” She also mentioned that Emma arranged Shakespeare readings.

When the sisters moved to London with their mother, Emma helped her sister, Emily, with the orphanage that the latter set up.

Emma Maingay was the last surviving offspring of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay. She died on 27 December 1904 at Tewkesbury. Her estate amounted to about £4,000.<sup>33</sup>

* * *

Charles George Maingay (see Image 261) was born in St. Peter Port Guernsey on 21 October 1830. He was therefore up to a year old when the family moved to St. Petersburg. He died there at the age of twelve years and three months, on 15/27 January 1843, and was buried on 19/31 January 1843, presumably in the Smolensk Cemetery, from the English Church (see Images 110–111), Rev. Edward Law (see Image 253) officiating. He died from a fall on the ice on the Neva, which suggests he may have been sledding down one of the ice hills, a winter feature (see Image 344).<sup>34</sup> Anna Whistler described in her diaries a day spent there, with descriptions of Colonel Charles S. Todd (see Image 278), the American envoy; Richard Risley Carlisle and his sons (see Image 202), all acrobats; and James and Willie engaging in the sport.

* * *

Frederick Thomas Maingay<sup>35</sup> (St. Petersburg 1/13 May 1834 – Hanover Street, Hanover Square, London 11 October 1862) was the third and youngest son of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay. In recording the Whistler family's visit to the Maingay home in St. Petersburg in February 1844, Anna Whistler only mentioned, and that erroneously, that Freddy was between James and Willie in age, whereas he was two months older than James. In October 1847, she recorded that James and Willy went off after lunch with Fred "to the nut trees" at the Maingay home in Shooters' Hill.

In 1851, Frederick had "been one of three private pupils of the Rev. Pelham Maitland incumbent of Fradswell in Staffordshire. He matriculated on 8th March 1854 and was on Wadham College, Oxford, books till 1858, though he did not take his degree. In 1861, he was living again with his parents, with no profession given." He died on 11 October 1862, while in London, from "Delirium Tremens a week certified." He was buried in Woodbury Park Cemetery with his father. They shared the epitaph “Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.” His estate amounted to under £5,000.

At some point beyond his boyhood, Frederick Maingay published a poem entitled “A Picture,” which is a paean to his mother evoked by a photograph of her in his possession.

* * *

Emily Maingay,<sup>36</sup> called “Lille” and “Lily” by family and friends, was the youngest Maingay child (see Image 264). She was born in St. Petersburg on 23 January / 4 February 1836. She is also the daughter through whom many details about the family come to light. This is due to the fact that while living in Tunbridge Wells she became close friends with the abovementioned Jane Connolly, who later published a book of memoirs.

Emily Maingay was eight years old when the Whistler and Maingay families met in St. Petersburg in 1844. Anna Whistler mentions her only by name in recording that they dined on 18/30 January at the Maingay home. In October 1847, after the marriage of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden, the Whistlers accompanied Emma Maingay back to Wellesley House, Shooters’ Hill. Emily was now eleven. Anna Whistler pointed out in her diaries that “little Lillie clung to her sisters.”

Over the years, Emily Maingay and Jane Connolly made visits to Deborah (Whistler) Haden in Sloane Street and especially enjoyed themselves if she played the piano. But they were afraid of “old Mrs. Whistler” and did not go if “[they] knew she was there.” James Whistler also alarmed them, if he was at the Haden home, because one “never knew what he might do or say.” “His rapid movements, the weird white lock of hair, and the intonations of his voice made [them] feel he was scarcely human,” but they were also aware that “he enjoyed [their] foolish fears.”

Jane Connolly pointed out that when Emily grew up “she showed a marked artistic talent.” “She painted sometimes in water-colour, and a little in oils, but in the end she scarcely did anything but etching. Her style was dainty and delicate, the drawing true. She had a strong sense of humour which made her work delightful. One set of sketches on the old-fashioned crinoline she had lithographed. The beauty of her lines was quite lost in the process, but the wit and originality of the story could not be spoiled. Many years later, she etched the story of some Christmas robins, which she sold for the orphanage she had started. But the best of all, her ‘Life of Saint Severity,’ has never been reproduced.”

After the death of her mother in 1877, Emily moved with her two sisters to Dorset Square, “and it was in adjoining New Street that [she] developed her orphanage, eventually occupying two houses there, training girls for domestic service ... in 1898 she was interviewing candidates and acting as secretary to Edward Rudolf, co-founder with his brother of the Church of England Waifs and Strays Society ... Not long before her death [she] donated the orphanage buildings and a substantial endowment to the Society.” “She had heard one or two sad stories of the desolate condition of servants’ children. This awakened [her] interest, and she started a home for these little ones ... where they would have care and training. The parents paid what they could. Often, when out of a place, the mother could pay nothing, but the child remained in the home just the same. [Her] skilful fingers made the garments; one seldom saw her without a little frock or cloak in hand.” Although “for many years before her death she suffered from a cruel internal illness which kept her constantly on the sofa,” Jane Connolly pointed out her accomplishments “as an example of what is possible even for a delicate woman to do.”

Emily Maingay died in London at Dorset Square on 25 December 1890. Her estate amounted to about £3,695.

* * *

Anna Whistler’s opinion of the entire Maingay family was that at their home Debo was “delighting and delighted, such companions will give her a distaste for those [that] are less improved.”<sup>237</sup>

NOTES

1. I am deeply grateful to Rosemary K.F. Clarke of Weybourne, Norfolk, for her generosity in sharing family papers with me and introducing me to further family members: her sister, Annabel Maingay of Stiffkey, Norfolk; her aunt and uncle, Dr. Hugh and Mrs. Hope Maingay of Norwich, Norfolk; and her cousin, James Maingay of Schoten, Belgium, all of whom also supplied information and/or photographs (hereafter, these papers will be collectively referred to as the Maingay Family Papers). Of great interest and help to me has been the booklet William Maingay 1791–1862: A St. Petersburg Merchant and his Family by Russell Maingay, written in 2012 to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the death of his ancestor. The booklet is the fourteenth in a series published by the Friends of Woodbury Park Cemetery in Tunbridge Wells for the purpose of aiding the work of restoring memorials in the cemetery, and appeared at the time of the commemoration of the restored Maingay family vault, which took place on Tuesday, 24 April 2012.

As the family name Maingay was spelled Maingy until 22 June 1840, it will appear in this biography sometimes as Maingy and sometimes as Maingay. In the notes to Anna Whistler's St. Petersburg diaries, which date from after the name change, only Maingay will be used, although she wrote "Mengies" and "Maingy" as well.

2. Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 6–7.
3. Entry for Feb. 14th 1844, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I. Another instance of his appreciation of a young woman is the letter he wrote to Anna Maria Courtney when she became engaged to his son, William Bonamy (William Maingay to Anna Maria Courtney, Guernsey, Tuesday 2 Sept 56, Maingay Family Papers).
4. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 6.
5. Maingay, p. 7.
6. Maingay, p. 7.
7. Maingay, p. 8; Rosemary K.F. Clarke, Willenhall, Coventry, to E. Harden, 7 October 1995 concerning a visit to Rye, Sussex, to research the Lamb family.
8. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 8; PREC STP, no. 5563, p. 330.
9. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 21; Woodbury Park Cemetery, Plot 567, Tomb with kerb End.
10. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 10.
11. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 12.
12. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 12. PREC STP for 1835, p. 203, records that Amelia de Jersey Maingay died on 23 November and was buried on 26 November 1835. These dates are OS; NS would be 5 December and 8 December. Amelia de Jersey was named for a family member of the de Jersey trading house owners, with whom her father was affiliated. Mr. Carey B. de Jersey, like William Maingay, was a native of Guernsey. His trading house “was engaged in the purchase and shipment of cotton twist to Russia.” In 1847, the company went bankrupt (Stuart Thompstone, “Ludwig Knoop, ‘The Arkwright of Russia,’” Textile History 15, no. 1 (1984): pp. 47, 48, 67n11–18).

13. All quotations in this and the following paragraph are from Maingay, William Maingay, p. 13.
14. Maingay, p. 13.
15. Maingay, p. 6.
16. Maingay, p. 13.
17. Maingay, p. 16.
18. Maingay, p. 21; 1851 Census for Tunbridge Wells.
19. Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 22, 23; 1861 Census for Tunbridge Wells.
20. Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 24, 25.
21. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 22; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1862; 1861 Census for Tunbridge Wells. The epitaph is from 1 Thess. 4:13–14.
22. Maingay, William Maingay, p. 8.
23. Register of Baptisms in the Parish of Woolwich; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1922.
24. Information about Eliza (Lamb) Maingay in this paragraph is taken from the following sources: Connolly, Old Days and Ways, pp. 174, 175, 178, 181–182; entries for Feb. 14th, 1844, Feb. 24, 1844, Fri 22nd [March 1844], Wed. morning 23rd April [1844], Thursday [May] 29th [1844], and Sat [May] 31st [1844], NYPL: AWP, Part I; entries for 6/18 June [1845], Tuesday 10th March [1846], and Monday November 2nd [1846], NYPL: AWP, Part II; East Sussex Baptism Index, 1700–1812; Rosemary K.F. Clarke, Willenhall, Coventry, to E. Harden, 7 October 1995 concerning a visit to Rye, Sussex, to research the Lamb family.
25. Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 5, 26; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1877; Woodbury Park Cemetery, Plot 567, Tomb with kerb Top; sheet entitled “The Family of George Lamb and Catherine Lamb (née Gosselin), Maingay Family Papers; 1871 Census for Rectory, Marylebone, London.

26. All information about William Bonamy Maingay and Elizabeth College in this paragraph is taken from Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 6, 9, 12.
27. The births of the children of William Bonamy Maingay and Anna Maria (Courtney) Maingay are taken from the GRO indexes to births. Their places and dates of death are taken from their entries in the National Probate Calendar (UK).
28. Information in this paragraph is taken from Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 22, 23, 24. The pamphlet was consulted for the dates and places of birth and death of the children (pp. 29–34), but this information was taken ultimately from the GRO indexes to births and the National Probate Calendar (UK).
29. Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 24, 25–26.
30. All information in this note is taken from the following sources: Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 26, 34; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1902; 1871 Census for Tunbridge Wells; the diaries of Annette Adeline Maingay (1865–1944), third daughter of William Bonamy and Anna Maria (Courtney) Maingay.
31. This biography of Eliza Anne Maingay is a composite from the following sources: Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 8, 16, 21; Connolly, Old Days and Ways, pp. 174, 175, 176, 177; entries for Feb 14th 1844, Thursday, May 29th [1844], and Wed [August] 28 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I; entry [after New Year's Day 1848, describing the Whistler family's visit to the Maingay family, when they brought Emma home after the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden, c. 20 October 1847], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II; 1851 Census for Tunbridge Wells; 1861 Census for Tunbridge Wells; 1871 Census for 11 Nottingham Place, Rectory, Marylebone, London; 1881 Census for Southwick Crescent, near Paddington, London; 1891 Census for Southwick Crescent, near Paddington, London; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1899.
32. It has not been possible to corroborate the story of Eliza Anne Maingay's unhappy love affair. There are no references in newspapers to an illness and replacement of Rev. Molyneux for any length of time between 1844 and 1850. According to the Kentish Independent [Greenwich, UK], (July 6, 1850), he resigned the pastoral charge of Trinity Chapel, having been appointed chaplain to Lock's Hospital, London. Between Molyneux's departure and the arrival of his successor, Rev. W.D. Long, the ministerial duties of Trinity Chapel were temporarily discharged by

- Rev. V. Stanton, who was highly appreciated by the congregation for his “exemplary zeal” (Kentish Independent [Greenwich, UK], December 28, 1850).
33. This biography of Emma Elizabeth Maingay is a composite from the following sources: 1851 and 1861 censuses for Tunbridge Wells; 1871 Census for 11 Nottingham Place, Rectory, Marleybone, London; 1881 and 1891 censuses for Southwick Crescent, near Paddington, London; 1901 Census for The Vicarage, Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1905; Connolly, Old Days and Ways, pp. 178, 182; Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 8, 14, 21, 23, 26; from NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, the entries for late December 1843, February 14th [1844], Feb. 26 [1844], [12 March 1844], Fri 22nd [March 1844], March 29th Friday evening [1844], Tuesday night April 22nd [1844], Wed. morning 23rd April [1844], Thursday [April] 24th [1844], Friday [April] 25th [1844], Saturday [April] 26th [1844], Friday [May] 3rd [1844], Sat [May] 4th [1844], Monday [May] 6th [1844], Thursday [May] 29th [1844], Friday [May] 30th [1844], Sat [May] 31st [1844], Monday 17th June [1844], Monday July 1st [1844], and August 1st Thursday [1844], and Thursday [August] 22nd [1844]; from NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, the entries for 6/18 June [1845], Preston, September, Saturday 10th [1847], and [after New Year’s Day 1848, describing the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden]; and from the GUL: Whistler Collection: Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, 6 August 1851, W 394; Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, 23 and 24 September 1851, W 397; and Anna Whistler to James Whistler [15 January/February 1855], W 457. The dating of W457 was proposed by Georgia Toutziari (“Anna Matilda Whistler’s Correspondence – An Annotated Edition,” vol. 2, pt. 2, pp. 458, 459).
  34. This biography of Charles George Maingay is a composite from the following sources: Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 8, 12; RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, ed. khr. 3. Register British Factory Chapel S. Petersburg January 1831 – December 1846, no. 5256.
  35. This biography of Frederick Thomas Maingay is a composite from the following sources: Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 5, 12, 22; 1861 Census for Tunbridge Wells; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1862 (resworn March 1891); typewritten copy from an unnamed and undated newspaper cutting signed “By Fred. M.,” assumed by the family to have been written by Frederick Maingay (Maingay Family Papers); entry for February 14th [1844], NYPL:

AWPD, Part I; entry [after New Year's Day 1848, describing Emma Maingay's return to Wellesley House, Shooters' Hill, accompanied by the Whistler family, after the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.

36. This biography of Emily Maingay is a composite from the following sources: Maingay, William Maingay, pp. 12, 26; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1891; 1851 and 1861 censuses for Tunbridge Wells; 1871 Census 11 Nottingham Place, Rectory, Marylebone, London; 1881 Census for Southwick Crescent, near Paddington, London; Connolly, Old Days and Ways, pp. 178–182, 183–184; entry for Feb. 14th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I; entry [after New Year's Day 1848, describing the wedding of Deborah Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II; Guernsey Magazine 19, (February 1891); “Life of St. Severity,” Maingay Family Papers.

It seems appropriate to say a few words about Jane Connolly in the biography of Emily Maingay, as they became such close friends. Jane Connolly was the daughter of “Reverend James Campbell Connolly who was curate of the Woolwich Parish and had a lectureship at Goldsmith Company plus some income from the Admiralty.” She “never married and had a formal education, quite unusual for a woman in the 1850's funding herself and passing a Higher Local Examination and attended University College Cambridge.” She explained paying for her education: “I was a very good needlewoman and earned 15 guineas which made classes possible; I had happy days studying in the British Museum and I loved the Political Economy Class” (Lisa Croft, Activists: Lessons from my Grandparents [self-pub., Lulu, 2015], p. 113).

37. Entry for Thursday [May] 29th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.

MAURAN

Josephine Mauran (14 September 1825 – 16 February 1887) was the seventh of the thirteen children of a wealthy New York merchant, Oroondates Mauran (28 November 1791 – 6 October 1847; see Image 47), and of Martha (Eddy) Mauran (2 September 1793 – 31 October 1855) (married on 14 December 1814).<sup>1</sup> Her father was one of the backers of the Italian Opera House in New York, which was built in 1833 on the corner of Church and Leonard streets.<sup>2</sup> It survived only three seasons, “was sold at auction in 1836” to Mr. Mauran, and became the National Theatre.<sup>3</sup> Together “with Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt he owned the Staten Island Ferry.”<sup>4</sup> “Among the early tugboats of New York Harbor were two well-known side-wheelers, the Bolívar and the Hercules, in which he was interested.”<sup>5</sup>

Oroondates Mauran lived in New York City in winter and, as of 1831, on Staten Island in summer.<sup>6</sup> He “was a bon vivant and very hospitable,” as well as “one of the oldest members of the Union Club in New York.”<sup>7</sup> “He could be seen driving to his office daily in a sulky, with his pet horse ‘Charlie,’” who lived to be forty-six years old.<sup>8</sup> He “travelled a good deal” at one point to Europe and spent “several winters in Havana.”<sup>9</sup>

Josephine Mauran’s paternal grandfather, Joseph Carlo Mauran, was “a native of Villefranche, Italy.”<sup>10</sup> Impressed at the age of twelve, he “had spent two years of virtual captivity on board a British man-of-war, from which he ... escaped when the ship was lying in the harbor of New London.”<sup>11</sup> Her maternal grandfather was Judge Samuel Eddy (Johnston, RI 31 March 1769 – 3 February 1839), who served variously as secretary of state, a representative of Congress, and chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of the State.<sup>12</sup>

Josephine attended the Canda school at 17 Lafayette Place in New York with Deborah Delano Whistler and was described by John Stevenson Maxwell, who knew her brother, James Eddy Mauran (New York 8 June 1817 – Newport, RI 27 November 1888),<sup>13</sup> as Debo’s “intimate friend and correspondent.”<sup>14</sup> She married at Staten Island on 14 September 1853 Oliver Wolcott Gibbs (New York 21 February 1822 – Newport, RI 9 December 1908; see Image 48), BA Columbia University 1841; MA Columbia University 1844; MD College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York 1845; from 1863 to 1877 Rumford Professor and lecturer on the Application of Science to the Useful Arts, Harvard University.<sup>15</sup>

Josephine Mauran was mentioned only briefly in Anna Whistler's diaries.

NOTES

1. Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family, p. 89. Oroondates Mauran's year of death is confirmed as 1847 in the New York Herald, October 7, 1847.
2. Mary C. Henderson, The City and the Theatre (Clifton, NJ: James T. White, 1973), p. 75.
3. Henderson, City and Theatre, p. 75.
4. Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family, p. 92; Charles W. Leng and William T. Davis, Staten Island and Its People: A History, 1609–1929, 5 vols. (New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1930–1933), vol. 1, pp. 239–240, 690.
5. Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family, p. 92
6. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 92; Hine's Annual 1914, pp. 3, 4; Leng and Davis, Staten Island, pp. 252, 892, 927.
7. Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family, p. 92.
8. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 92.
9. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 92.
10. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 94.
11. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 94.
12. Stockbridge and Mauran, p. 93.
13. Stockbridge and Mauran, pp. 89, 92–95.
14. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, March 26, 1844, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 29; John S. Maxwell, St. Petersburg, May 17, 1844, no. 35.
15. Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family, pp. 89, 95–96; Historical Register of Harvard University 1636–1936 (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University, 1937), p. 223; Harvard University Quinquennial File; Evening Post, September 16, 1853; Evening Post, December 10, 1908.

MAXWELL

John Stevenson Maxwell was born on 18 February 1817 in New York, the son of Agnes (Stevenson) Maxwell (5 January 1796 – New York 27 April 1866; see Image 54) and Hugh Maxwell (Paisley, Scotland 15 June 1787 – New York 31 March 1873; see Image 55) (married in New York 16 April 1812).<sup>1</sup> He was one of four surviving children, the other three being Anne Eliza (New York 1816 – New York 4 May 1888), Hugh (New York 1824 – Saddle River, NJ 23 June 1898), and Agnes (New York 1834 – New York 2 July 1917).

He is described in a visa granted in Hamburg on 20 July 1843 as five feet eleven inches tall, with a high forehead, light blue eyes, light brown hair, and having a “common” nose, small mouth, round chin, oval face, and fresh complexion.<sup>2</sup>

Hugh Maxwell’s family emigrated to New York in 1790. He grew up there and graduated from Columbia College in 1810, with an MA in 1816, and became a very successful lawyer. He was district attorney of New York County in 1817–1818 and again from 1821 to 1829. An active member of the Whig Party, in 1849 he was appointed collector of the Port of New York by President Zachary Taylor (1794–1850), a position he held until 1853, throughout the administrations of Taylor (1849–1850) and his successor (1850–1853), Millard Fillmore (1800–1874).<sup>3</sup>

John Stevenson Maxwell’s family lived in New York but also had a country estate, called Roslyn, at Nyack-on-Hudson. Family legend has it that “such distinguished personages from abroad as Thackeray, Victor Jacquemont, the French naturalist, and Dickens were frequently entertained” at Roslyn.<sup>4</sup>

Maxwell attended The Lawrenceville School<sup>5</sup> and graduated from Princeton University in the Class of 1836.<sup>6</sup> He considered himself a Whig.<sup>7</sup> He “pursued the whole term of his professional studies” in law in New York in the office of Elijah Paine (1796–1853).<sup>8</sup> He was a colonel in the militia.<sup>9</sup>

He was secretary of the American Legation in St. Petersburg from July 1842 to November 1844. He lived throughout his tour of duty in the house of Count Aleksei Alekseevich Bobrinskii on the corner of Galernaia Street and the New Admiralty Canal (see Images 86–94).

When Colonel Charles S. Todd (see Image 278) chose to move the Legation from the Bobrinskii house to Tsarskoe Selo in April 1843, Maxwell and Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) remained in the Bobrinskii house, and, when Major Whistler rented the entire house for his family, Maxwell remained as their tenant. His letters to his mother reveal his respect and deep love for both Major and Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5).

While living with them, he became dangerously ill with typhus fever. His life was saved chiefly through the ministrations of Anna Whistler. He became interested in Deborah Whistler (see Images 17–19, 21), although knowing that Major Whistler would only relinquish his daughter easily and gladly to an officer of the United States Army. He wrote both coy and serious letters to his family about his interest in her, but nothing came of it.

Maxwell was intelligent, well-educated, well-traveled, informed, cultivated, lively, witty, discerning, gossipy, at times somewhat of a popinjay, and wrote well, providing outstanding and sometimes offensive descriptions of persons, scenes, and events. While in Russia, he wrote frequent, long, loquacious, detailed letters home, chiefly to his mother, but also to his father; his uncle, Dr. John Stevenson; and a few friends. His intention was to have them published later by Harper's. He was persuaded instead to write a book based on them. In 1848, The Czar, His Court and People: Including a Tour in Norway and Sweden appeared and was well received. He sent a copy to Major Whistler with a great display of modesty.<sup>10</sup> Deborah (Whistler) Haden also read it and considered parts of it to be in bad taste, having known or known of a number of the personages in it. The book is not important in a discussion of Anna Whistler's diaries, while the detail of his letters is.

When Maxwell left Russia, he traveled for some eighteen months in Western Europe and the Mediterranean. During his travels and after his return to America, he corresponded with Major Whistler. He took on the task of seeing that the body of John Bouttatz Whistler was given proper burial in Stonington, Connecticut, in 1847, according to the wishes of Anna and Major Whistler.

Maxwell met Anna Whistler and the boys at the dock in Jersey City in August 1849, when they returned to America after Major Whistler's death.<sup>11</sup> Anna Whistler referred to him in a letter to James as an appropriate role model for her son.<sup>12</sup> Gradually his name ceased to appear in her extant correspondence. There is also some question as to whether she ever met his parents, who both verbally and through the gift of a dress and candy thanked her after she had nursed their son back to health. Maxwell had also proposed while still in Russia that his mother attempt to make the acquaintance of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22), Anna Whistler's mother. Scholarship places stress, rather, on a relationship between Anna Whistler and an Anne (Young) Maxwell (Coldstream, Berwick 1784 – Nyack, NY, 20 October 1867), who was possibly related to Maxwell's father. Anne (Young) Maxwell had known Eliza and Alicia McNeill when they were growing up in Berwick. It is with her that Anna Whistler took the waters at Richfield Springs, New York, in 1857.<sup>13</sup>

In 1846, Maxwell "had an office in the Mortimer Building, 11 Wall Street."<sup>14</sup> In 1846, like his father and male members of his mother's side of the family before him, he became a member (no. 1156) of the philanthropic St. Andrew's Society of the State of New York.<sup>15</sup>

In 1848 or 1849, he decided to request consideration for the post of United States minister resident in the Ottoman Empire and was very favorably endorsed by his former superior, Colonel Charles S. Todd, who praised the "vigorous mind and ... cultivated taste" of his "inestimable friend."<sup>16</sup> Other supporting letters were written by referees such as Elijah Paine, in whose office Maxwell had pursued his training as a lawyer.<sup>17</sup> John S. Hamilton, whom it has not been possible to identify, wrote in his letter of reference that Maxwell wanted to be accredited to Constantinople because "having been there, & his mind having been earnestly directed to the situation of the Ottoman Empire, he proposed to use the facility of access to authentic sources of information in preparing a work on this subject."<sup>18</sup> W. Pinckney Starke (d. 12 October 1886), with whom Maxwell had traveled in the East and spent several months in Paris, wrote from Charleston, South Carolina, in favor of his appointment, saying: "Though a Northern Man he is as sound on the question of Southern rights as any man living."<sup>19</sup> The appointment, however, was given to George Perkins Marsh (1801– 1882), a highly qualified career diplomat.<sup>20</sup> In 1850, Maxwell became “Cashier in the Custom House” in New York.<sup>21</sup>

On 11 June 1853, Maxwell married Caroline Ely Mulligan (May 1823 – Brooklyn 10 November 1889), daughter of the Rev. John Mulligan (d. April 1861), in New York in the Presbyterian Church at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Nineteenth Street.<sup>22</sup> They had one daughter: Caroline Ross Maxwell (New Jersey 2 July 1853 – New York 19 May 1936).<sup>23</sup> In 1874, she married William Conselyea Traphagen (Jersey City, NJ 30 November 1837 – 1894), “son of Sarah (Conselyea) and Henry Mackaness Traphagen, President of the Fifth Ward Savings Bank of New Jersey.”<sup>24</sup>

John Stevenson Maxwell died at Nyack, New York, on 2 March 1870.<sup>25</sup>

The Traphagens’ daughter, Ethel Traphagen (1882–1963) (whose married name was Leigh), founded the Traphagen School of Fashion (1923) in New York.<sup>26</sup> Ethel Traphagen had “won first prize in The New York Times contest for Original American Designs in 1913.” She designed a “blue-green gown with gold accents and modified obi, recalling elements of the ancient Grecian toga and stola and the kimono of the beautiful women of the ukiyo-e. The inspiration for her design was a painting by an artist she admired, James McNeill Whistler ... Nocturne in Blue and Gold: Old Battersea Bridge” (see Images 211–212).<sup>27</sup>

Of Maxwell’s siblings, the most interesting was his younger sister, Agnes, who is mentioned as a child eight to ten years old in his letters to his mother from St. Petersburg. In 1853, in Paris, Agnes met and mutually fell in love with Major Philip Kearny (New York 1 June 1815 – Chantilly, VA 1 September 1862) of the United States Army. A married man, he was unable to obtain a divorce from his Catholic wife, and Agnes Maxwell chose to live with him openly. They had three children: Susan Watts Kearny (b. Paris 1856), Archibald Kennedy Kearny (25 January 1860 – 21 February 1862), and Virginia De Lancey Kearny (b. November 1860). In early 1858, Philip Kearny’s wife finally agreed to a divorce. Agnes Maxwell and Major Philip Kearny were married on 21 April 1858 at St. Matthew’s Church in Jersey City, New Jersey.<sup>28</sup> Kearny died in 1862 on active duty during the Civil War. Agnes (Maxwell) Kearny married, as her second husband, Admiral John Henry Upshur

(Northampton County, VA 5 December 1823 – Washington, DC 30 May 1917). Agnes (Maxwell) (Kearny) Upshur and both her husbands were buried in Arlington National Cemetery.<sup>29</sup>

John Stevenson Maxwell reminded Major Whistler in a letter that he had a pencil portrait of himself executed by James Whistler.<sup>30</sup> The whereabouts of this portrait are unknown to me.

NOTES

1. For birth and death dates, and wills and probate information for the Maxwell, Mulligan, and Stevenson families, see the Maxwell–Mulligan–Stevenson File at the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society. For the birth date of John Stevenson Maxwell, see John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, Upon the Nile. February 18. 1845, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 53. For the death of Hugh Maxwell, see New York Herald, April 1, 1873, and New York Tribune, April 1, 1873. For the marriage of Agnes Stevenson and Hugh Maxwell, see the records of Brick Presbyterian Church, p. 216; New York Commercial Advertiser, April 16, 1812; and an undated marriage notice within the Maxwell–Mulligan–Stevenson File.
2. Visa for “John Maxwell Sectreary of the American Legation St. Petersburg,” issued by the Consulate of the United States of America at Hamburg, signed by “John Cuthbert, Consul USA,” on 20 July 1843.
3. MacBean, Saint Andrew’s Society, vol. 2, pp. 32–34.
4. Ethel Traphagen, “Agnes Maxwell – The General’s Lady,” Fashion Digest (Fall and Winter 1956–57): pp. 41, 84.
5. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, Alexandria, January 2, 1845, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 52.
6. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, March 1, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 7.
7. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, June 1, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 14.
8. Elijah Paine to the Hon. Jacob Collamer, Post Master General, Washington, DC, March 12, 1849, Letters of J.M. Clayton, 1849 [Letters of recommendation to the Secretary of State], N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. Elijah Paine (Williamstown, VT 10 April 1796 – New York 6 October 1853) spent “the whole of his professional life ... in the office of H.D. and R. Sedgwick in New York,”

- which is where Maxwell would have articulated with him (H.D. Paine, ed., Paine Family Records: A Journal of Genealogical and Biographical Information Respecting the American Families of Payne, Paine, Payn, etc., 2 vols. (New York: Joel Munsell, 1880–1883), vol. 2, p. 112).
9. John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. Petersburg, Sept. 15/27 1842, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. Maxwell does not specify the state in which he was a colonel in the militia.
  10. John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, February 11, 1848, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.
  11. Anna Whistler to Joseph Harrison, Jr., Stonington, Monday Aug. 13th [1849], LC: P-W, box 34.
  12. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, thursday, April 11th. [18]50, GUL: Whistler Collection, W391. She was urging James to drop by the Custom House, where Maxwell was working.
  13. Anna Whistler to Mrs. Wann, Richfield Springs, Otsego Co. N York July 15th 1857, GUL: Whistler Collection, W481. Jane (Gamble) Wann (1822–1875) was the sister of Anna Whistler's friend, James Gamble (b. 1820), a clerk. This family lived together on Staten Island, NY.
  14. MacBean, Saint Andrew's Society, vol. 2, p. 223.
  15. MacBean, Saint Andrew's Society, vol. 2, p. 223.
  16. Col. Charles S. Todd to J.M. Clayton, Washington 11th March 1849, Letters to J.M. Clayton, 1849, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. C.S. Todd was envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary in St. Petersburg when Maxwell was secretary of the Legation.
  17. Elijah Paine to the Hon. Jacob Collamer, Post Master General, Washington, DC, March 12, 1849, Letters to J.M. Clayton, 1849], N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. Jacob Collamer (1791–1865) was postmaster general from 8 March 1849 to 22 July 1850.
  18. John C. Hamilton to J.M. Clayton, Hudson Square, N.Y., March 15, 1849, Letters to J.M. Clayton, 1849, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.
  19. W. Pinckney Starke to George W. Crawford, Secretary of War, Charleston, S.C., 5 April 1849, Letters to J.M. Clayton, 1849, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers. George W. Crawford (1798–1872) was secretary of war from 8 March 1849 to 23 July 1850.
  20. Appleton's Cyclopedia, s.v. "George P. Marsh."
  21. MacBean, Saint Andrew's Society, vol. 2, p. 223.

22. New York Herald, November 11, 1889; Gertrude A. Barber, Oak Hill Cemetery at Nyack, Rockland County, New York, ts (1931), Maxwell–Mulligan–Stevenson File, New York Genealogical and Biographical Society; Newspaper Death Notices: New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, etc., vol. 1: 1870–1890 (no publication information). The year of death differs on her tombstone.
23. 1860 Census for New Jersey; 1930 Census for New York. See her portrait in “Inside Story of the Bride with the Bustle,” Fashion Digest (Fall and Winter 1959–1960): p. 29.
24. “Saluting Our Ancestors,” Fashion Digest 15, no. 4 (Fall–Winter 1962–1963): pp. 4, 5.
25. New York Evening Post, March 3, 1870; Barber, Oak Hill Cemetery.
26. “Saluting Our Ancestors,” p. 5.
27. Both quotations in this paragraph about Ethel Traphagen’s design are from “The State of Fashion, 1914,” By Way of Thanks (blog), December 11, 2015, accessed September 28, 2020, <https://bywayofthanks.wordpress.com/2015/12/11/the-state-of-fashion-1914/>
28. New York Evening Post, April 21, 1858. Variant details of Agnes Maxwell’s and Philip Kearny’s love story are to be found in “Agnes Maxwell,” pp. 41, 84, and Elyce Feliz, “Philip Kearny, died September 1, 1862,” The Civil War of the United States (blog), September 2, 2013, accessed September 28, 2020, <http://civilwaref.blogspot.ca/2013/09/philip-kearny-died-september-1-1862.html>
29. Arlington National Cemetery website, accessed 17 December 2020, <https://www.arlingtoncemetery.mil/#!/>
30. John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler, New York, December 13, 1846, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers.

MAYNARD

Edward Maynard (Madison, NY 26 April 1813 – Washington, DC 4 May 1891; see Image 329), the son of Moses Maynard (b. Townsend, MA 10 October 1775; d. Madison, NY 27 May 1853; buried Madison Village Cemetery) and his second wife, Chloe (Butler) Maynard (b. 22 March (?) 1777; d. Madison, NY 19 December 1821; buried Madison Village Cemetery),<sup>2</sup> “was born on a farm in upstate New York” in a town situated between Syracuse and Schenectady. There, he “attended the village school and Hamilton Academy [and] received an appointment to the Military Academy at West Point in 1831.”<sup>3</sup> Because of “ill health and a fragile disposition,” he left the Academy in “his first year and took to studying civil engineering, law, drawing, architecture and anatomy.”<sup>4</sup> In 1835, he undertook a career in dentistry, moving to Washington, DC, in 1836, where he set up private practice. He also invented numerous dental instruments, such as the “hand held drill stock.”<sup>5</sup> “In 1838, he was the first dentist to successfully use gold foil to fill the nerve cavity, including nerve canals in molar and bicuspid teeth.”<sup>6</sup>

On 3 September 1838, Maynard married in Sherburne, New York, Ellen Sophia Doty (b. 15 October 1817; d. 3 October 1863; buried Lakewood Cemetery, Cooperstown, NY), daughter of Moses Doty and Elizabeth (Pike) Doty, and “a direct descendent of Edward Doty, . . . one of the original passengers on the Mayflower that landed at Plymouth Massachusetts in 1620.”<sup>7</sup> They had three sons at the time of Maynard’s trip abroad: Edward Harris (1840 – 27 April 1846), George Willoughby (b. 5 March 1843; d. 5 April 1923; buried Congressional Cemetery, Washington, DC), and John Doty (c. 1845 – after 1880).<sup>8</sup>

Maynard was also interested in guns. “The flintlock [system] of gun ignition which had been in use since the 1630s . . . was found to be awkward and time consuming and was officially replaced by the U.S. Army in 1842 by the adaption of its first percussion musket.”<sup>9</sup> “In March of 1845 Maynard patented a system of priming for firearms, to take the place of the recently adapted percussion cap” (see Image 338).<sup>10</sup>

On 20 March 1845, U.S. Secretary of War William L. Marcy (1786–1857) and Maynard signed a contract worth four thousand dollars selling “the privilege and right to use [the latter’s] improvements under certain expressed conditions” (the discussion of which is beyond the scope of this biographical essay). On 22 March 1845, “a similar agreement” was signed between the chief of the Naval Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, W.M. Crane (1776–1846), and Maynard.<sup>11</sup>

“Encouraged by the ministers of several European countries”<sup>12</sup> but, most especially, assured by the Russian envoy to the United States, Baron Aleksandr Andreevich Bodisco (see his biography in this Appendix and Image 283), and the Russian envoy to Great Britain, Baron Ernst Philipp von Brünnow (1797–1875), of their country’s interest in his invention, Maynard undertook in 1845 a trip to Russia and western Europe. His journey began in Springfield, Massachusetts, on 3 July 1845. He took with him only one thousand dollars, expecting to return to the United States in approximately six months (December 1845).<sup>13</sup> Maynard left the United States having contracted with Major Thomas L. Smith, registrar of the Treasury, and General J. Washington Tyson, commissioner general for Purchasing, to put up the funds for his traveling expenses, which they failed to do, thus causing him many difficulties in the course of his journey.<sup>14</sup> Traveling with Maynard from London to St. Petersburg was George Washington Parmly (b. 22 October 1819; d. London 15 August 1892; buried Brompton Cemetery, London; see Image 339), an American dentist whose practice included New Orleans and Paris before he settled in London.<sup>15</sup>

They arrived in St. Petersburg on Saturday, 20 September 1845.<sup>16</sup> On Sunday morning, 21 September, Maynard called on Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) to deliver some letters to him and was taken by him to the eleven o’clock service at the English Church (see Image 110–111). After lunch, Major Whistler visited Maynard for several hours in the latter’s room at the misses Benson’s boarding house on the English Embankment, where he examined and admired the firearm Maynard had brought to demonstrate to Emperor Nicholas I (see Images 420–423) and other crowned heads of Europe. Whistler told Maynard that the emperor was not in St. Petersburg and would continue to be absent for about a month. Maynard thus realized that he could not return home before spring of 1846 and wrote his wife that he would be unwilling to undertake a second trip, if unable to accomplish his goal on this one, because of the seasickness he had suffered as well as “the inconveniences and disgusts of travelling.” He submitted his invention instead to the committee headed by His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, the emperor’s brother. With time on his hands, he hired a “valet de place” and went sightseeing with Parnly. Out of boredom, frustration, and the necessity of earning money, he introduced his dental operation in St. Petersburg. His patients were not only the foreign colony of the city, but also members of the Imperial family and the aristocracy. He was thus able, from his primary profession, to pay his own expenses in St. Petersburg and to send money home to assuage his anxiety over his family’s financial straits.

Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (see Image 439), on examining Maynard’s firearm, “made some remarks about the difficulty which Russian soldiers would have in managing the new lock, and the difficulty which there might be in repairing it (if damaged) by such workmen as accompany armies.”<sup>17</sup> Maynard’s response, expressed to his wife, was: “If I had known what clumsy guns were used in Europe, I would have ‘got up’ one to match. I have (of course) taken particular notice of the arms of the soldiers wherever I have been and have seen no muskets so well made as the American.”<sup>18</sup> Major Whistler, while having his teeth operated on, agreed, partly on the basis of his own experience, that if Maynard was unable to make headway “pretty soon,” he should leave Russia.<sup>19</sup> Maynard was very agitated as he contemplated his situation, which was that he had very little money in his possession, was receiving news that his wife was finding it necessary to borrow money from friends because he could not send any home, and that his flourishing practice was being abandoned by his patients the longer he stayed away.<sup>20</sup> On Friday, 7/19 December 1845, Maynard received a letter from the Russian committee rejecting his gun invention.<sup>21</sup> On Sunday, 30 December (OS), the emperor returned to St. Petersburg.<sup>22</sup>

After his lack of success with His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, Maynard hoped he might gain access to demonstrate his gun improvement to His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Alexander Nikolaevich (see Image 425), the future Alexander II, through his wife, Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna (see Images 426–427), who wished her teeth to be operated on. She, however, was ill and would have had to postpone her appointments with Maynard for so long that he could not further extend his stay in Russia.<sup>23</sup> In the midst of the peripaties of dental appointments and proposals of conditions to attract Maynard into staying in Russia because of his phenomenal reputation as a dentist, he was stunned by the arrival of a personal gift from Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna (see Image 440), whose teeth he had operated on. Hinted at early in their relationship as a distinct possibility, the gift consisted of seven hundred silver rubles and a ring “consist[ing] of a large red Garnet surrounded by fifty small diamonds, surrounded by sixteen large diamonds”<sup>24</sup> (see Image 337).

Despite his lack of success with the Russian government, Maynard met in St. Petersburg representatives of other European nations. He successfully negotiated an agreement with a merchant named Charles Thomas Grut interested in buying, as he wrote, “my right for Denmark” and willing “before the papers are made out [to] pay me in cash two thousand five hundred dollars and guarantee to give me in addition ten percent of all he receives from the government of Denmark.”<sup>25</sup> Mr. Grut soon after proposed that, together with “his brother-in-law at Copenhagen (who is very rich) ... he will not only [also] take Sweden but a large part, or perhaps all, of Europe ... even ... the world, except for that part sold to the U.S.,” which Maynard encouraged him to do.<sup>26</sup> The arrangement concerning Sweden was successfully concluded in mid-January 1846.<sup>27</sup>

On 20 April 1846, Maynard stopped in at the Whistlers’ to say goodbye.<sup>28</sup> He arrived in Berlin on Tuesday, 21 April, having failed completely to demonstrate his gun improvement to anyone in the Russian government or Imperial family who might help him. On the advice of Henry Wheaton (1785–1849), U.S. minister to Prussia, he decided that he would make no such effort in Berlin but wait until “it has been adopted in France.”<sup>29</sup> He spent a few days in Cologne and then went on to Brussels. Here, his gun was hailed by the King of Belgium, and work was begun to produce the parts for its use as a sporting gun.<sup>30</sup> Again, however, there were many delays.<sup>31</sup> While in Belgium, grief was added to his anxieties, when he received the devastating news of the death on 27 April 1846 of his firstborn son, Edward Harris.<sup>32</sup> He spent all of May, June, and July in Belgium, heading on 31 July for Paris.<sup>33</sup> He arrived in London on Tuesday 11 August, and wrote his last letter home on Monday, 16 August.<sup>34</sup> He left for home on 28 August on the Great Britain from Liverpool,<sup>35</sup> arriving in New York in early September.<sup>36</sup>

In addition to the prestige that accrued to him after his dental operations on the Russian Imperial family “he had successfully sold the rights to his [firearm] invention for Denmark and Sweden,”<sup>37</sup> and had “his Tape Primer Lock patented in France, Belgium, England, Scotland and Ireland.”<sup>38</sup> He had had an offer made to him by Emperor Nicholas I, as he had wished, rather than making an offer to the emperor: “Nicholas I offered him the title of ‘Actual Dentist to the Imperial Family,’ with the rank of Major, if he would agree to remain in Russia for ten years and practice and teach his [method] of practice; Dr. Maynard to be attached to the court with a salary or practice privately, whichever he might choose.” Maynard respectfully declined the offer.<sup>39</sup>

Four more children (all daughters) were born to the Maynards: Marcia Ellen (b. 6 August 1847; d. 6 March 1926; buried Mount Hope Cemetery, Rochester, NY); Josephine Gaudette (b. Washington, DC 1 January 1850; d. Rochester, NY 14 February 1931; buried Mount Hope Cemetery, Rochester, NY); Marie (b. District of Columbia 1852; d. District of Columbia 5 August 1927; buried Congressional Cemetery, Washington, DC); and Virginia Dumont (b. District of Columbia 1854; d. 19 August 1926; buried Congressional Cemetery, Washington, DC).<sup>40</sup> In 1855, the Maynards bought a house in Cooperstown, New York. Ellen (Doty) Maynard died on 3 October 1863 of heart disease.<sup>41</sup> Maynard married in 1869 Caroline Ellen Long, called “Nellie” (b. Savannah, GA; d. Troy, NY 13 March 1923; buried Congressional Cemetery, Washington, DC), with whom he had one daughter, Edna Long (1870–1938).<sup>42</sup>

Maynard continued to invent firearms, his “most notable inventions after the tape primer lock [being] the invention of the first metallic cartridge and the first breech loading rifle famed for its use in the Civil War.”<sup>43</sup> “The metallic cartridge was eventually adopted by the United States Government, by all manufacturers of breach [sic] loading arms and eventually became the standard cartridge for all rifles worldwide.”<sup>44</sup> Having sold his Cooperstown home in late 1855, Maynard bought in 1863 “The Castle,” in Tarrytown, New York. In 1869, he sold it and returned to Washington.<sup>45</sup> He died there on 4 May 1891 of Bright’s disease, a kidney disease called “acute or chronic nephritis.” He was buried in the Maynard family plot of the Congressional Cemetery. His “grave is marked by a granite obelisk [with the inscription] ‘Dr. Edward Maynard – Surgeon – Dentist and Inventor 1813–1891’.”<sup>46</sup>

* * * * *

In terms of temperament, Edward Maynard was restless; impatient; kind; humorous; and generous in the free care he gave to those who could not afford his services. He was supremely intelligent; inquisitive; observant; a man of outstanding talents; could draw quite well; had a reputation for being gentle as a dentist; was a staunch American, but unprejudicial in praising the amenities of Russian life absent in American life; and was unembarrassedly both open and allusive in his sexual remarks to his wife.<sup>47</sup>

He was a restless person, who appreciated his wife’s understanding of his disposition. She constantly urged contentment upon him and, in her letters (not extant), approved of him remaining abroad “long enough to decide [his] affairs in some way,” knowing that he would thus be more contented when he did return home.<sup>48</sup> His letters contain many instances in which he praises contentment and the circumstances of travel and life in general that can promote it.<sup>49</sup> He encouraged his wife to read books from their library he had read and that had contributed to the “interest and enjoyment” he had experienced when actually seeing examples of what he had read about. His particular example of interesting books was of landscape gardening, rural architecture, and villa architecture,<sup>50</sup> which he encountered everywhere in the environs of St. Petersburg. He wanted to be close to his wife in every way, but this desire that she read what he had read was part of his exuberance to impart information that accompanied his own active intellect. He explained in copious and intricate detail to his wife the places he visited, the makeup of objects he saw, and the functioning of equipment he observed, drawing with some talent in his letters (see Images 330–337) members of the Imperial family whom he met or saw (Nicholas I; the Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Nicholas I); his room at the misses Benson’s boarding house; vehicles peculiar to Russian life (a drozhki, a sledge); Persian riding accoutrements at the Tsarskoe Selo Armory; a sphinx in front of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts; the Lapplanders with their reindeer and sleigh; a guest at a masked ball; the ice hills at Catherinehoff; and front and side views of the ring given to him by Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna as his dental patient.

* * *

He did not approach Russian culture and life only with condemnation. He intended to adapt many features from Russian living, especially those having to do with insulation, to make his own house comfortable. “The walls being of such great thickness (2 to 3 feet, solid brick work) and the windows all double and every crack and crevice caulked and pasted up, the most intense cold out is not heeded in-doors nor the fiercest wind heard.”<sup>51</sup> After taking a sledge ride about St. Petersburg, he planned to have a Russian-style sledge made for his family to use at their farm in Cooperstown, New York.<sup>52</sup> He showed in his letters that he was in full understanding of how these various Russian amenities were built and functioned.

In observing the lives of the serfs, however, his opinion was that they were more wretched than the American Negroes: “Poor devils! – Black, sour bread and salt is almost the only food the laboring class gets here. I speak of the serfs, or slaves. Our Negroes are ten thousand times better off – better clad, better, infinitely better fed, more enlightened, more cleanly, more honest, and if not more contented, they seem to be far more happy.”<sup>53</sup> At the same time, he disapproved of imitations of the Negroes by Parnly, his traveling companion to St. Petersburg, because they reflected badly on him and Maynard as Americans: “he was too fond of telling and acting Negro stories, dances, etc. and Yankee stories etc. etc. all of which, though he did them very well, were always out of place and gave a character to us which I did not choose to share with him.”<sup>54</sup>

As for the English, he derided their ignorance about America, probably based on conversations at the boarding house or at dinners he was invited to:

Will you believe me when I tell you that an Englishman in a respectable official position under the British government – a man looked upon as a gentleman – asked me the other day if “that Oregon territory was a continuation of the American Continent?” – fact. It is really amazing to see how little of us and ours is known by Englishmen and how what little they do know is measured and shaped and colored by English pride, English prejudice and English bias. They are compelled to do us justice occasionally however. They have learned some things about us that are not easily forgotten and will never be forgiven.<sup>55</sup>

The last two sentences are almost certainly a reference to the American Revolution and the War of 1812.

* * *

Some of the descriptions he gave and the ploys he used were quite humorous, even comical. He summed up his landladies, the misses Benson, on first meeting them, as “fat enough to be what they seem – very good people.”<sup>56</sup> In explaining his appearance in a “shuba,” or furlined-pelisse, he said:

Mr. [Joseph] Harrison [Jr.] ... says it is as warm as a feather bed and so thick and soft that it is a great protection against the raps and bruises of traveling. Besides this “schube” I must have a pair of fur boots – things that look as if made for an elephant lined with some cheap fur and reaching about the knees – and a cap, also a fur. Altogether I think I shall make quite a “sizable man” – only picture me at least twice as thick, legs and all, as now – with only the tip of my delicate nose visible – nothing else to tell you whether it is a man or a young elephant standing on his legs!<sup>57</sup>

Because the sudden windfall from Mr. Grut enabled him to buy Russian gifts for his family, he became as crafty as any traveler and amusingly described to his wife one of his attempts to avoid duties on and confiscation of his purchases: he bought her a gray Russian squirrel fur and had it sewn “into a morning gown for [his own] use.”<sup>58</sup>

* * *

Maynard's letters record frequent instances of dreams. One very poignant dream concerned his son George crying and Maynard's anguished inability to assuage the child's pitiful state and himself crying as a result.<sup>59</sup> His letters also frequently refer with sexual innuendo to dreams that he had had or looked forward to having of his wife ("the Lady"), sometimes containing open expressions of sexual desire. One of the more explicit passages, not about a dream, was written from Berlin some nine months after last having seen his wife: "[I] hope to see you before the year is passed, which it will be on the 3rd of July ... I anticipate great happiness when we do meet – it will be like a re-marriage, we have been so long without – ahem! Without seeing each other. 'We shall see what we shall see' – and feel it too."<sup>60</sup>

* * * * *

During his four-month wait while the committee headed by His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich inspected his firearms invention, Maynard supported himself by practicing dentistry in his room at the misses Benson's. He charged his countrymen what he charged his patients in America. His first St. Petersburg patient was charged "5 rubles for plugging (about $3.75) and other charges in proportion."<sup>61</sup> As his fame spread, he raised his fee to ten rubles.<sup>62</sup> One busy day, he earned twenty-five dollars.<sup>63</sup>

His patients from the American community included Colonel Charles Stewart Todd (see Image 278), United States envoy to Russia; Major George Washington Whistler, Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5), and Willie Whistler (see Images 27, 30); Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226), of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, and his wife, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison (see Image 227), whom Maynard described as "one of our pretty and sensible women";<sup>64</sup> and John Randolph Clay (see Image 281), U.S. chargé d'affaires to Russia. From among the English, Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, the Whistlers' neighbor across the hall, was a patient. Among the others he operated on was a cousin of the misses Benson, Lucy Sherrard Finley (1817–1893; see Image 340), who worked as a governess to Sofia (1833–1880), only daughter of Count Mikhail Nikolaevich Muraviev-Vilenskii (1796–1866; see Image 342), and paid visits to her Benson cousins. Maynard operated on her teeth without payment, because she was “dependent entirely upon her own exertions for her support and unable to pay.”<sup>65</sup> He generously devoted considerable time to her. Among the Russians he operated on was a young man, “said to be immensely wealthy and of a very influential family,” whom he called “SopozhnaKoff” (probably “Sapozhnikov”),<sup>66</sup> with extremely serious dental problems.

His most illustrious patient, however, was Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna, wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, and sister-in-law of Emperor Nicholas I. His meeting with her had come about in the following way. With the rejection of his gun invention, he was preparing to leave St. Petersburg, when on Sunday morning, 27 January 1846, Colonel Todd informed him that at noon or one o’clock Dr. Arndt [sic: Arendt] (see Image 343), the emperor’s physician, would call on him. Arendt’s arrival coincided with the visit of a patient, so that Maynard was able to explain the tooth-plugging procedure to him, which highly delighted Arendt. As a result, Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna requested Maynard’s services. Although he was planning to leave St. Petersburg in a few days along with Colonel Todd, who had been recalled, Maynard decided to stay on. Maynard informed his wife that “[Major Whistler] advised me to stay if the Court wishes to employ me, as it will be a compliment to me and to the Profession in America” and Colonel Todd agreed to remain in St. Petersburg a week longer.<sup>67</sup> Not least among Maynard’s inducements was the fact that Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna was the wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, “who condemned my gun, and who may be induced, perhaps, to change his mind,” if Maynard could discuss the gun improvement with him directly.<sup>68</sup>

Maynard was persuaded, however, to remain for a month or two and Todd left without him. Everyone urged Maynard to keep in mind the prestige of having been invited to perform his operations on the Imperial family. Major Whistler told him “‘it will pay’ – that is to say I shall be compensated.”<sup>69</sup> The Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna’s spokeswoman informed him that in naming a satisfactory compensation for his services “I was not to take into account what the Grand Duchess might be disposed to do afterward – by which I suppose she meant some present in addition.” As well, as a princess of Württemberg, she could endorse his gun invention to that state.<sup>70</sup>

In their relationship, Maynard and Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna were each themselves. He found her “extremely amiable – no nonsense – not being offended at being addressed as ‘you’ instead of ‘Your Imperial Highness’ – she has too much sense not to perceive that my manner of speech is the result of a republican education and she seems too kind not to make all due allowance for it.”<sup>71</sup> Etiquette, however, required that he perform his operations in a dress coat.<sup>72</sup> If required by most patients, he insisted that they come to his office in his room at the misses Benson’s boarding house; if required to attend members of the Imperial family, he traveled to their palaces to operate.<sup>73</sup> He charged the Imperial family fifty rubles ($37.50) per day.<sup>74</sup>

Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna informed Maynard that she had “never had a Dentist operate for her who was so delicate and easy in his operations,” a statement made frequently to and about him.<sup>75</sup> She said “she would talk with [Dr. Arendt] about the way, if any, in which a school of Dentistry can be established here, under my direction.” They discussed an appointment as “Dentist to the Court,” the only appointment Maynard would consider, as he could not leave a full practice at home unless he “step[ped] into a full practice” in St. Petersburg, not only because of the financial considerations, but because he would “forfeit a high rank in a respectable and useful Profession at home to be classed with charlatans here.” Dr. Arendt had explained to Maynard the choice of conditions if he came to Russia to practice. He could “be attached to the Court at a fixed salary, and so, be compelled to go with the court wherever it might be traveling for pleasure or health or other purposes – or ... have a private practice and still be Dentist to the Court, but without the fixed salary – the Court paying according to the service they receive. [Arendt] recommended the latter – having tried both ways as physician.”<sup>76</sup> Maynard did not agree to choose one of the possibilities on the spot, as requested; instead, he asked that a proposal be made to him by the emperor that he would then consider. Major Whistler, speaking from experience, expressed the opinion that if Maynard “stay[ed] now, and had an office etc. etc. the fame

[he] had already acquired would lead to a capital business for a time at least.”<sup>77</sup> He explained to Maynard that “it would be better to send for [his wife] than to go for [her], as the fever might abate during [his] absence,” noting how much more expensive life in St. Petersburg was than in Washington, DC, and the difficulties of “not yet speaking French [or] Russian.” Maynard also described for his wife what was better in Russian life than in American, including the structure of the houses, the cheapness and beauty of the furniture, and the compensating warmth of the houses in winter despite the outside cold. Amusingly, even the Benson sisters were drawn into the effort to sound out Maynard as to the conditions under which he would remain in St. Petersburg and practice dentistry.<sup>78</sup>

Through the endorsement of Maynard by Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna, Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel’ (see Image 243), Major Whistler’s superior, chose to have Maynard operate on him and on one of his daughters.<sup>79</sup> Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna, wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich, Heir to the Throne, also wished to engage his services,<sup>80</sup> while Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna herself wished to have her children operated on.<sup>81</sup> The Countess Kleinmikhel’, wife of Major Whistler’s superior, decided not to have her teeth operated on because she was frightened by Maynard’s fees.<sup>82</sup> Within the court circle, he possibly also operated on a daughter of “General Alderberg,” describing the child’s father as “said to be only second to one ... in the favor of the Emperor.”<sup>83</sup>

Although Maynard had been told by Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna’s spokeswoman that he might receive a personal gift, he was nevertheless overwhelmed when the secretary of his patient brought him seven hundred silver rubles and a ring consisting of “a large red Garnet surrounded by fifty small diamonds, surrounded by sixteen large diamonds”<sup>84</sup> (see Image 337). Because of the generous gesture of Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna, Maynard, who had not drawn her likeness in any of his letters, bought a small plaster bust of her, “taken several years ago, but still very much like her,” so that his wife might “form a pretty correct idea of her.”<sup>85</sup>

* * * * *

Maynard frequently saw the Whistlers. He went to dinner at their home on Saturday, 27 September 1845, and reported to his wife that he “found Mrs. Whistler like most of our women, very sensible and well informed and very amiable.”<sup>86</sup> Major Whistler took him on several occasions to the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225).<sup>87</sup> On Tuesday, 30 September 1845, while at Alexandrofsky, he promised some of the Americans that he would operate on them if he had the time; he felt, however, that “Major Whistler is so kind and Mrs. Whistler and their children so amiable that I must do so for them at all events.”<sup>88</sup> On Monday, 27 October 1845, he was able to operate on the teeth of Willie Whistler, “a fine boy of 8 or so years.”<sup>89</sup> On New Year’s Day 1846, Anna Whistler had two teeth filled.<sup>90</sup> As the emperor was away, and Maynard was asked to demonstrate his firearm invention to Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, Major Whistler advised Maynard “to state in the fewest possible words what brought me here and what I wish to do,” which pleased Maynard, as it coincided with his own idea of the appropriate approach.<sup>91</sup> Whistler often came to see Maynard at the boarding house, bringing information he hoped might be helpful in presenting the firearm invention.<sup>92</sup> He told Maynard adamantly and humorously “that if a gun was presented here for adoption that was – no matter how perfect – even if it would load itself and go off itself when you wished and required nothing to have nothing done for it – still the Russians would hesitate and delay and put off its adoption perhaps for years.”<sup>93</sup>

He also told Maynard that “so much of what he [himself] has heard about what Americans have done in Europe is false that he looks with suspicion upon all such big stories.” For example, although an American newspaper had reported that Nicholas I “had conferred the Order of the Black Eagle upon ‘Professor Risley’ the gymnast” (see Image 202), Whistler assured Maynard that this was not true and that “Risley attracted no notice whatever here – could only get an engagement in [sic: one] night in a week to perform, etc. and that he was an exceedingly vulgar, illiterate fellow.”<sup>94</sup>

* * *

Maynard's sightseeing jaunts included the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts (see Images 154–157); St. Isaac's Cathedral (see Images 119–120); the Alexander column (see Images 116, 132); the Winter Palace (see Images 114–117); the masked ball in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility (see Images 145–146, 333, 373); the reopening of navigation after the ceremony of the Blessing of the Waters (see Image 349); the ice hills at Catherinehoff; the Lapplander reindeer sleigh rides (see Image 347); the Hermitage, with its art collection (see Image 113); and the temporary amusements set up at Carnival time (see Image 345). The highlight of his visit to the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts was Briullov's The Last Day of Pompeii (Poslednii den' Pompei) (see Image 204), which he felt he would "never forget ... while I remember pictures. It is a modern production."<sup>95</sup> He thought St. Isaac's surpassed St. Paul's in London "in the design as well as execution" to such an extent that he felt English pride in their cathedral was misplaced.<sup>96</sup> He seemed to enjoy being seized at the Assembly Hall of the Nobility by two masked women whom he was unable to identify because "they pretend[ed] not to understand English very well and [spoke] it brokenly and so mixed with French and with voices so disguised."<sup>97</sup> During Carnival, although he saw some very good pantomime playing [he found] most of the amusements ... such as American children 10 years old would be ashamed of; yet here men and women as well as children eagerly crowding to see such contemptible trash. – Riding round a ring, cider-mill fashion, behind or on a little wooden horse – or ditto in a boat – or shocking imitation of a railroad car – or ditto in a sort of swinging box. Of course these are not the Gentlemen and Ladies of Russia; but still they are of a class that we should not expect to see in such places.<sup>98</sup>

* * *

Beyond sightseeing, Maynard spent a good part of his time with Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, the envoy extraordinary of the United States. He met at dinner at Todd's quarters in Tsarskoe Selo John Randolph Clay (see Image 281), the chargé d'affaires, and the latter's wife, Janet (Crawfurd) Clay. Todd expressed his readiness "to do all in his power to serve [Maynard],” attending with him social and cultural events to which the American envoy had little difficulty in obtaining access.<sup>99</sup> Maynard attended the races in Tsarskoe Selo, with Colonel Todd explaining to him who all the Imperial and aristocratic personages were. He was taken by Todd to a ball at Pavlovsk<sup>100</sup> and to the Alexandrinskii Theatre, where Maynard reported they “saw some very capital acting.”<sup>101</sup> They attended the French theater as well as the Italian opera; Maynard was ecstatic over the ceiling of the Bolshoi Theatre, where he heard the Italian opera.<sup>102</sup> They also attended the circus, which he found “such, very nearly, as were common in America ten or fifteen years ago – except the horses which were not so good as ours.”<sup>103</sup> He was supposed to leave Russia when the recalled Colonel Todd did, but delays caused by operating on the teeth of Imperial and court personages resulted in Todd’s leaving without him.<sup>104</sup>

* * *

Maynard also received invitations to dine from others than the Whistlers and Colonel Todd. He met through Parmly, his traveling companion, “Mr. Thompson,” also a dentist, and the latter’s two brothers.<sup>105</sup> Dining with them on 29 September 1845, he found them “very civil and seem[ing] very glad to have the opportunity of learning something of American modes of practice which the Mr. Thompson complimented very highly.” They had never heard of the American “operation of destroying the nerve and plugging the nerve cavity as well as the decay cavity ... until I told of it.”<sup>106</sup>

He also dined at the home of Mr. Gellibrand (see Image 265) on 21 March 1846, where most of the American colony was assembled, and four people expressed a wish for his dental services.<sup>107</sup> Maynard apparently had a much better time here than he had had at the home of Willam Hooper Ropes, Mr. Gellibrand’s brother-in-law.

On Monday, 25 February 1846, he had dined at the home of “Mr. W.H. Ropes,” where he had never felt at such a time so much at a loss what to say or do in order not to appear stupid. The fact is the only things they talked of were such as were only known to themselves and of no earthly interest to me. There was one Englishman present and Mr. Rope's brother and Mrs. Rope's sister. Mrs. Ropes and sister (Englishwoman) play and sing delightfully. Mr. Joseph Ropes (the brother) sails from Liverpool for Boston on the 19th of April – to return in autumn.<sup>108</sup>

* * *

Maynard also left substantial charming and informative comments in his letters about the misses Benson and their boarding house, its inhabitants and daily and social life, thus filling a gap in the general knowledge about their establishment (see Benson in this Appendix).

NOTES

1. I am deeply grateful to Rodney S. Hatch III of North Salem, New York, great-great-great grandson of Dr. Edward Maynard, for permission to quote from his forebear's copies of nineteen letters written by Maynard to his wife in 1845 and 1846 from Russia and Europe, all published by Hatch in Dr. Edward Maynard "Letters from the Land of the Tsar 1845–1846": America's Pioneering Dental Surgeon Turned Civil War Gun Inventor. When fortuitously found by Hatch in 1997, these typescripts of the letters lay in "an old metal filing cabinet ... stored [by Hatch's father] in a garage in upstate New York since 1969" (Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, pp. iv, vii, viii). Since Hatch published his book, the original letters have come to light; they are in the possession of his cousin, Cynthia McGrath. She has graciously given me photocopies of important drawings made by Maynard within the letters (for example of Nicholas I and his brother Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich), and of his room in the boarding house of the misses Benson in St. Petersburg. Hatch's book contains drawings, but because he was publishing typewritten copies of Maynard's letters, without drawings, he used a professional artist to recreate them based on Maynard's verbal descriptions. I have therefore chosen not to use them, as at least one drawing is of the wrong person, and Maynard's original drawings are now available.
2. Memorial IDs 67089911 and 67090007, findagrave.com.
3. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 1
4. Hatch, p. 1.
5. Hatch, p. 1

6. Hatch, p. 1.
7. Hatch, p. 1.
8. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 2; Memorial IDs 132959479 and 160982538 findagrave.com; 1850 Census for Washington, DC; 1880 U.S. Federal Census
9. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 19.
10. Hatch, p. 4.
11. Hatch, p. 19.
12. Hatch, p. 25.
13. Hatch, p. 28.
14. Hatch, pp. 25, 29.
15. Memorial ID 207541926, findagrave.com.
16. The information and quotations in this paragraph are taken from Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia, Sunday September 21, 1845, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 32–33.
17. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 1, St. Petersburg, Wednesday night, October 22, 1845, in Hatch, p. 54.
18. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Friday night, October 24, 1845, in Hatch, p. 57.
19. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Wednesday P.M. October 29, 1845, in Hatch, p. 59.
20. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Wednesday night, October 22, 1845, in Hatch, p. 56; letter no. 3, p. 5, Tuesday night October 28, in Hatch, p. 58; and letter no 3, p. 6, Wednesday P.M. October 29, 1845, in Hatch, p. 59.
21. Maynard, letter no. 6, p. 1, St. Petersburg, Friday, December 7/19, 1845, in Hatch, p. 78; and St. Petersburg, To Colonel Solovzoff of the Artillery [rejection of Maynard's percussion gun], 6/18 December 1845, no. 4711, enclosure in letter no. 6, p. 2, in Hatch, p. 79.
22. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Monday, December 31, 1845, in Hatch, p. 84.
23. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Friday, March 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 114.
24. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 4–5, St. Petersburg, Sunday morning, March 10, 1846, in Hatch, p. 115–116.

25. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Saturday night, January 5, 1846, in Hatch p. 87; and letter no. 8, p. 1, St. Petersburg, Friday 11, January 1846 / 23, January 1846, in Hatch, p. 88.
26. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 5, St. Petersburg, Saturday evening, January 12, 1846, in Hatch, p. 92.
27. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Monday P.M. January 14, 1846, in Hatch, p. 94.
28. Maynard, letter no. 12, p. 1, [Berlin], Tuesday 21st April 1846, in Hatch, p. 123.
29. Maynard, letter no. 12, p. 2, [Berlin], Wednesday P.M., April 22, 1846, in Hatch, p. 124.
30. Maynard, letter no. 17, pp. 1–5, Brussels, Monday June 29, 1846, with entries through Sunday night, July 12, 1846, in Hatch, p. 149–153.
 The king of Belgium was Léopold I (Léopold-George-Christien-Frédéric) (Coburg, Saxe-Coburg-Saalfeld [Germany] 16 December 1790 – Laeken, Belgium 10 December 1865), first king of the Belgians (1813–1865). His first wife, whom he married in 1816, was “Charlotte, the only child of the future King George of Great Britain. Although the princess died in 1817, [he] continued to live in England until 1831 ... In 1840 he helped to arrange the marriage of his niece, Victoria, Queen of England, to his nephew Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha” (Maynard, letter no. 17, p. 1, Brussels, Monday June 29, 1846, in Hatch, p. 149; Encyclopedia Britannica Online, s.v. “Leopold I, King of Belgium,” accessed July 1, 2021, <https://www.britannica.com/biography/Leopold-I-king-of-Belgium>).
31. Maynard, letter no. 18, pp. 1–7, Brussels, 14 July 1846 – Tuesday night, with entries through Wednesday night, July 29, 1846, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 154–160.
32. Maynard, letter no. 16, pp. 1–3, Brussels, 18 June 1846, with entries through Friday, June 26, 1846, in Hatch, p. 146–148.
33. Maynard, letter no. 19, pp. 1–8, Valenciennes, France July 31, 1846, with entries through Monday night. – August 16, 1846, in Hatch, p. 161–168.
34. Maynard, letter no. 19, p. 5, Golden Cross Hotel, London Tuesday night, August 11, 1846, in Hatch, p. 165.
35. Maynard, letter no. 19, p. 4, [Paris] Saturday night, August 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 164.

36. Hatch, p. 169. Maynard had written in his final letter that he expected to arrive in New York about 8 September (Maynard, letter no. 19, p. 4, [Paris] Saturday night, August 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 164).
37. Hatch, p. 169.
38. Hatch, p. 170.
39. Hatch, p. 170.
40. Hatch, p. 171; Memorial IDs 205236212, 204680799, 160983383, and 160983218, findagrave.com; IGI.
41. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 171; Burton Lee Thorpe, Biographies of Pioneer American Dentists and Their Successors, vol. 3 of History of Dental Surgery, 3 vols. (Fort Wayne, IN: National Art Publishing, 1910), p. 223.
42. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 175; Memorial ID 133056033, findagrave.com; IGI.
43. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 177.
44. Hatch, p. 181.
45. Information in this and the previous sentence is from Hatch, p. 172.
46. Hatch, p. 198; Thorpe, Pioneer American Dentists, p. 223; “Dr. Edward Maynard,” The Dental Cosmos: A Monthly Record of Dental Science 33 (1891): p. 493, obituary; Memorial ID 41804589, findagrave.com.
47. H.W.S. Cleveland in his obituary of Maynard (“Dr. Edward Maynard,” Forest and Stream (May 7, 1891): pp. 1–3), extols him as “a man of rare qualities and of rare acquirements [with] winning and always gentlemanly and courteous manners ... rare intelligence [and possessing a] wide scope of ... information” (p. 1). It is, however, with the details of the abovementioned generalities that Maynard’s engaging and complicated personality is revealed.
48. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 19, St. Petersburg, Russia, Sunday morning, October 12, 1845, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 50.
49. For one example, see Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Russia, Sunday, September 21, 1845, in Hatch, p. 34.
50. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Friday night, October 14, 1845, in Hatch, p. 57.

51. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 13, St. Petersburg, Sunday night, November 16, 1845, in Hatch, p. 66; letter no. 3, p. 14, St. Petersburg, Monday P.M., November 17, 1845, in Hatch, p. 67; and letter no. 5, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Russia, Wednesday P.M., December 17, 1845, in Hatch, p. 77.
52. Maynard, letter no. 4, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia, November 22nd. (December 4th) 1845, in Hatch, p. 69.
53. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 20, St. Petersburg, Russia, Thursday night, October 16, 1845, in Hatch, p. 51.
54. Ellen Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Wednesday night, October 22, 1845, in Hatch, p. 55.
55. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 9, St. Petersburg, Monday night, March 18, 1846, in Hatch, p. 120.
56. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Russia Sunday September 21, 1845, in Hatch, p. 33.
57. Maynard, letter no. 5, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Russia, Tuesday P.M. [December 16, 1845], in Hatch p. 76. See also Image 13, George William Whistler in a shuba.
58. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 9, St. Petersburg, Sunday, P.M. January 27, 1846, in Hatch, p. 96.
59. Maynard, letter no. 15, p. 2, [Brussels] Wednesday night, June 10, 1846, in Hatch, p. 144.
60. Maynard, letter no. 12, p. 4, [Berlin] Thursday, April 23, 1846, in Hatch, p. 126.
 Among all the papers that I have consulted of the myriad families appearing in the Notes and Appendices to Anna Whistler's diaries, Maynard's letters stand alone in containing sexual references.
61. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 21, St. Petersburg, Russia, Monday night, October 20, 1845, in Hatch, p. 52; and letter no. 7, p. 1, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 82.
62. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 1, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 82.
63. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 5, St. Petersburg, Thursday night, January 3, 1846, in Hatch, p. 86.
64. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 1, St. Petersburg, December 26, 1845 / January 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 82.

65. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 8, St. Petersburg, Monday night, March 18, 1846, in Hatch, p. 119.

Lucy Sherrard Finley (Sunderland, Durham 15 April 1817 – London 13 November 1893; see Image 340) was the fourth child and eldest daughter of the ten children of Mary Anne (York) Finley (b. Southwark, London 1793; bap. St. Saviour's, Southwark, May 1793; d. New South Wales 1877; buried Dubbo Cemetery, New South Wales) and Matthew Smith Finley (Monkwearmouth, County Durham 12 December 1778 – Tower Hamlets, London 24 February 1847), an East London school teacher. Her parents were married on 25 April 1810 at St. Dunstan's near London Bridge. Lucy's maternal grandparents were William York (b. Whatcote, Warwick 8 September 1770), a perfumer, and Elizabeth (Sherrard) York (b. c. 1770). Lucy's mother had a childless uncle, Joseph Sherrard (b. 20 February 1773; bap. St. George the Martyr, Southwark 20 February 1773; d. Deal, Kent 17 April 1835), a ship's purser in the Royal Navy, to whom she was very close. Lucy received her middle name from this family and her first name from Joseph Sherrard's wife, Lucy (Rowlett) Sherrard (b. 5 July 1774; bap. St. Sepulchre, Holborn, London 1 August 1774; d. Deal, Kent 7 October 1832). This great-uncle of Lucy's, who had spent several years in His Majesty's Service in Australia, retired in England. The principal beneficiaries in his will were his niece, Mary Anne (York) Finley and her first daughter, Lucy, and first son, Matthew Smith Finley Jr. To Lucy, Joseph Sherrard bequeathed £500 sterling, which she was to receive when she attained the age of twenty-one years; as she was only seventeen, the interest was, in the meantime, to be paid to her annually.

With this inheritance, Lucy set up a toy business registered in her name at her parents' address: 4 Waterloo Terrace. "Toy" in this period meant "a knick-knack or ornament" as well as "a child's plaything." When Lucy went to Russia, the business continued to appear under her name until 1846, but in 1848, her mother, upon Lucy's marriage in Russia, transferred it to her own name, either because Lucy had married abroad or because Lucy's father's death in 1847 had made it imperative that her mother seriously earn a livelihood.

Two possibilities for why Lucy went to Russia have been suggested: (1) she came from seafaring stock – her paternal grandfather had traveled to St. Petersburg at least once with a cargo of hemp, and her great-uncle Joseph Sherrard had made a career in the Royal Navy – whom she heard narrate their adventures; and (2) the legacy made it possible for her to undertake her need to work by going as far away as she wished and engaging in the respectable profession of governess – an alternative to being in trade – and being able to do so in a country where that profession – for a foreigner – had greater advantages and rewards than in England.

The fact that she worked for Count Muraviev-Vilenskii (see Image 342) for eight years suggests that she went to Russia no earlier than June 1839, according to the date of an insurance policy (Nick Fielding, “Before She Went to Russia – Lucy’s Early Life,” Siberian Steppes (blog), accessed July 2, 2021 <https://siberiansteppes.com/2016/07/15/before-she-went-to-Russia-lucys-early-life/>; Burials in the Year 1847 in the City of London and Tower Hamlets Cemetery; Baptisms in St. George the Martyr, Southwark, Surrey, 1758–1812; Baptisms in St. Sepulchre, Holborn, 1766–1787; IGI FHL Film 1786328, item 1, p. 236; Marriages in St. Benet Fink, London; Dover Telegraph and Cinque Ports General Advertiser, May 2, 1835; Maidstone Journal and Kentish Advertiser, October 16, 1832; Baptisms in Southwark, St. Saviour, 1781–1808; Dubbo New South Wales Deaths, 1788–1945, registration no. 4986. See also Fielding, South to the Great Steppe).

The financial situation of Lucy’s mother in England may explain why Edward Maynard did not charge Lucy for his services or even perhaps that she chose not to disclose that she had received an inheritance. The revealed characters of both Lucy Finley and Edward Maynard suggest that neither would have lied. See also Benson in this Appendix.

66. Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 30; Maynard, letter no. 6, p. 3, St Petersburg, Monday morning, December 22, 1845, in Hatch, p. 80; and letter no. 6, p. 4, Monday P.M., in Hatch, p. 81. It has not been possible to identify Sapozhnikov.
67. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 9, St Petersburg, Sunday P.M. January 27, 1846, in Hatch, p. 96. The physician who visited Maynard was Nikolai Fyodorovich Arendt (1785–1859), personal physician from 1829 to 1839 to Nicholas I.
68. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 10, St. Petersburg, Friday night, February 1, 1846, in Hatch, p. 97.
69. This and the following quotation are from Maynard, letter no. 9, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Monday night, February 4, 1846, in Hatch, p. 100.

70. Maynard, letter no. 9, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Monday night, February 4, 1846, in Hatch, p. 99.
71. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Friday P.M., February 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 104.
72. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Friday P.M., February 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 107.
73. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Saturday night, March 16, 1846, in Hatch, p. 118.
74. Maynard, letter no. 9, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Monday night, February 4, 1846, in Hatch, p. 100.
75. This and the following two quotations are from Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 1, St. Petersburg, 7/19 February 1846, in Hatch, p. 102.
76. This and the following quotation are from Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Sunday morning, February 10, 1846, in Hatch, p. 105.
77. This and the following two sentences are from Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 2, St. Petersburg, 7/19 February 1846, in Hatch, p. 103.
78. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Friday P.M., February 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 104.
79. Maynard, St. Petersburg, 7/19 February 1846, in letter no. 10, p. 1–2, Hatch, p. 102–103; and letter no. 10, p. 3, Thursday Midnight, February 7, 1846, in Hatch, p. 104.
80. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Thursday Midnight, February 7, 1846.
81. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 3, St. Petersburg, Friday P.M., February 8, 1846, in Hatch, p. 104; and letter no. 10, p. 5, Tuesday night, February 12, 1846, in Hatch, p. 106.
82. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Saturday P.M., February 16, 1846, in Hatch, p. 107.
83. Maynard, letter no. 4, p. 1, St. Petersburg, Russia, November 22nd. (December 4th) 1845, in Hatch, p. 68. The man Maynard called “Alderberg” was probably General Aleksandr Vladimirovich Adlerberg (1818–1888; see Image 313); he had been raised along with Nicholas I since childhood. It has not been possible to determine which of Adlerberg’s daughters had her teeth operated on by Maynard.
84. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 5, St. Petersburg, Sunday morning, March 10, 1846, in Hatch, p. 116. Others also made gifts, but

- much more modest ones. One patient gave Maynard a bottle of homemade mead and a large pear, the latter a great luxury in winter in Russia to ordinary people, both of which he greatly appreciated (Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Saturday night, March 16, 1846, in Hatch, p. 118). Miss Lucy Finley, cousin of the Benson sisters, who could not pay at all, worked “a white satin pocket, or bag,” with “Ellen” embroidered on it for his wife (Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 8, St. Petersburg, Monday night, March 18, 1846, in Hatch, p. 119).
85. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 9, St. Petersburg, Tuesday night, March 19, 1846, in Hatch, p. 120.
  86. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 11, St. Petersburg, Russia, 11 o'clock P.M., Saturday, September 27, 1845, in Hatch, p. 42.
  87. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Russia, Thursday night, September 25, 1845, in Hatch, p. 38.
  88. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 12, St. Petersburg, Russia, Tuesday night, September 30, 1845, in Hatch, p. 43.
  89. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Tuesday night October 28, 1845, in Hatch, p. 57.
  90. Maynard, letter no. 7, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Tuesday, January 1, 1846, in Hatch, p. 85.
  91. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 18, St. Petersburg, Russia, Sunday morning, October 12, 1845, in Hatch, p. 49.
  92. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Thursday night October 23, 1845, in Hatch, p. 57.
  93. Maynard, letter no. 5, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Russia, Wednesday 11 P.M., December 17, 1845, in Hatch, p. 77.
  94. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Thursday night October 23, 1845, in Hatch, p. 57. “Risley” is Richard Risley Carlisle (1814 – 25 May 1874), generally known as Professor Risley, an American acrobat who performed aerial ballets with his two sons, John and Henry. See Note 18, NYPL: AWP, Part II.
  95. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 12, St. Petersburg, Russia, Tuesday night, September 30, 1845, in Hatch, p. 43. By “modern production,” Maynard may have had in mind other historical paintings such as The Raft of the “Medusa” (see Image 205) by Théodore Géricault (1791–1824) and Massacre at Chios by Eugène Delacroix (1798–1863).

96. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 13, St. Petersburg, Russia, Thursday night, October 2, 1845, in Hatch, p. 44.
97. Maynard, letter no. 8, p. 2, St. Petersburg, Saturday evening, January 12, 1846, in Hatch, p. 89.
98. Maynard, letter no. 9, p. 5, St. Petersburg, Thursday night, February 14, 1846, in Hatch, p. 106.
99. This quotation and the following sentence are from Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 6, St. Petersburg, Russia, Wednesday night, September 24, 1845, in Hatch, p. 37.
100. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 9, St. Petersburg, Russia, Saturday morning, September 27, 1845, in Hatch, p. 40.
101. Maynard, letter no. 3, p. 7, St. Petersburg, Thursday, Midnight October 30, 1845, in Hatch, p. 60.
102. Maynard, letter no. 4, p. 1–2, St. Petersburg, Russia, November 22nd. (December 4th) 1845, in Hatch, p. 68–69.
103. Maynard, letter no. 5, p. 1, St. Petersburg, Russia, December 1/12 [sic: 1/13] 1845, in Hatch, p. 71.
104. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 4, St. Petersburg, Sunday Morning, February 10, 1846, in Hatch, p. 105.
105. Maynard is referring to Dr. Thomas Thomson, a dentist residing at 3 Gorokhovaia Street. In 1845, two of his brothers were residing with him. His brother Adam was also a dentist; his brother William an engineer. Both brothers moved out later in 1845: Adam returned to Scotland, while William moved to Baird's (BRBC STP 1845, fol. 57).
106. Maynard, letter no. 1, p. 12, St. Petersburg, Russia, Monday night, September 29, 1845, in Hatch, Dr. Edward Maynard, p. 43. All quotations in this paragraph are from this entry.
107. Maynard, letter no. 11, p. 10, St. Petersburg, Thursday night, March 21, 1846, in Hatch, p. 121.
108. Maynard, letter no. 10, p. 8, St. Petersburg, Tuesday P.M. February 26, 1846, in Hatch, p. 109. William Hooper Ropes ran William Ropes and Company, the only American mercantile establishment in St. Petersburg. He and his family lived across the hall from the Whistlers in Ritter's house on the English Embankment. The Englishman at Mr. Ropes's house cannot be identified with certainty, but he could have been William Clarke Gellibrand, Mr. Ropes's brother-in-law. "Mrs. Ropes" was Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes; her sister was Emily Hall, who was visiting them from England and died in St. Petersburg in April. For their biographies, which might help illuminate Maynard's comments, see Ropes, Gellibrand, Hall, Prince in this Appendix.

MEL'NIKOV

Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov's date of birth, place of birth, and parentage is complex (see Image 247). His date of birth is usually given as 22 July (OS) 1804. His place of birth is considered to be Moscow. His father is considered to have been Collegiate Assessor (8th grade) Petr Petrovich Mel'nikov. Pavel Petrovich stated in his service records that he was born in 1804, but nowhere indicated his place of birth nor said anything about his parents, limiting himself to the statement that he “was from the gentry class and owned no peasants.”

Baron Anton Ivanovich Del'vig (1813–1887; see Image 251), a colleague engaged in building the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, maintained that both Pavel Petrovich and his brother, Aleksei Petrovich, were the illegitimate sons of Beklemishev, Equerry of the Royal Stables. He said Beklemishev married their mother off to a member of the gentry nobility named Petr Petrovich Mel'nikov in order to give his sons gentry rights. Petr Petrovich Mel'nikov was a widower (died before end of December 1820) and had one son from his first marriage, Aleksandr Petrovich Mel'nikov (c. 1798 – 10/22 May 1873). His second wife, according to Del'vig, met her husband-to-be for the first time at their wedding ceremony. Del'vig said nothing else about her.<sup>1</sup>

Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov's brother, Aleksei Petrovich (1809? – 25 April 1879), became a general in the commissary department of the army, was later commandant in Warsaw, a member of the Council of the Ministry of Transport and in his retirement a full general. He was married to Varvara Petrovna Lokhtina (d. 23 September 1878).<sup>2</sup> Their daughter, Varvara Alekseevna, married in 1883 Grigorii Aleksandrovich Pushkin (1835–1905), son of Aleksandr Sergeevich Pushkin (1799–1837), Russia's greatest poet.

Their mother's husband's son, Aleksandr Petrovich, administered the construction section in the Second Department and the section of the Imperial Carriage Establishment in the Office of the Imperial Stables.<sup>3</sup> He was married to Nadezhda Filipovna Viktorova, whose father, F.A. Viktorov, was head of the Imperial Carriage Establishment. Beklemishev was the superior of F.A. Viktorov and Aleksandr Petrovich Mel'nikov and a difficult one until Nadezhda Filipovna Viktorova and Aleksandr Petrovich Mel'nikov married.<sup>4</sup> They had five children: Olga (b. 14 July 1830), Aleksandra (b. 11 March 1837), Kleopatra (b. 22 September 1840), Pavel (b. 19 April 1852), and Maria (b. 22 May 1855).<sup>5</sup>

Mel'nikov entered the Moscow Gentry Pension of Vasilii Krazhev in 1818 and graduated in 1820. Early in 1821, he entered the Military-Construction School of Transport at the Petersburg Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers, and, upon graduating in October 1822 as an ensign and first in his class (on the basis of his final examination grades), was accepted into the third year of the Institute of the Corps of Transport Engineers. In July 1825, he graduated first in his class again, with the rank of lieutenant. His name was engraved on the marble tablet in the conference hall of the Institute. He was retained by the Institute to teach applied mechanics. He also conducted annual surveying projects, which resulted in the publication of his first paper in 1832. In 1833, he was a member of the Petersburg Committee on Buildings and Hydraulic Works. The start of Mel'nikov's teaching career coincided with the building of railroads outside of Russia. He transformed his course in applied mechanics into mechanics of railway transport and wrote an article "On Railroads," which was published as a separate book in 1835 and for which he was awarded a diamond ring. He also served on the commission set up in order to consider F.A. Gerstner's proposal to build a network of railways in Russia, which resulted in the building of the Petersburg–Tsarskoe Selo–Pavlovsk Railway in 1837. On 5 June 1837, Mel'nikov, who knew French, English, and German, and his student, S.V. Kerbedz (1810–1899), class of 1831, Institute of Railway Engineers, left Russia for Western Europe, where they were sent by the Institute. They spent fifteen months in France, England, Belgium, Germany, and Austria, inspecting railways, factories that built steam machines and steam engines, and large-scale engineering installations. They met with important people in the field, such as George Stephenson, and heard lectures on building and applied mechanics. On their return to Russia, Mel'nikov drew up a three-volume technical report.

On 1 June 1839, Mel'nikov and his Institute colleague, Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (1798–1857; see Image 248), sent by the Main Administration of Transport, set out for a fifteen-month stay in the United States to inspect railways and other systems of transport. In the United States, they studied railroads under construction as well as already in operation, steam engine factories, and hydrotechnical installations. They met with many well-known engineers, including Brown, Latrobe, Robinson, Swift, and Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21), who, they ultimately recommended, should be invited to be the consulting engineer for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. On returning to Russia, Mel'nikov drew up a three-volume technical report from this trip as well. In 1841, Mel'nikov's recommendations for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway were considered by an interdepartmental commission established to draw up a preliminary project for this railway. Mel'nikov and Kraft were both on the commission. In January 1842, Nicholas I called a special meeting to look at the railway project, which Mel'nikov and Kraft were not invited to attend. On 1 February 1842, a ukase was issued announcing the decision to build the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, and Mel'nikov and Kraft were appointed heads of the Northern Administration and the Southern Administration, respectively.

In 1854, Mel'nikov was chosen to head the expedition to survey for the building of new railways: Moscow–Kharkov–Feodosia (with a branch to Sevastopol and lines to the Donbass and to Rostov-on-the-Don), and Kharkov–Odessa. In early 1857, he presented the preliminary project for the building of railway lines south of Moscow, for which he was awarded the Order of St. Vladimir (2nd class). On 24 January 1855, he was appointed chief inspector of private railways and made a member of the Council of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings. As a result of the opposition of private railway entrepreneurs to his attempts to establish control over surveying and planning of new railways, he refused, at the end of 1858, to continue as chief inspector. On 29 December 1858, he was elected an honorary member of the St. Petersburg Academy of Sciences. In 1863, he was appointed head of Transport and Public Buildings. When this department was changed in 1865 to the Ministry of Transport, he became minister. The sale of the Nikolai Railway, which took place, despite his objections, in October 1868; subsequent attacks in the newspapers about his inability to direct the building of railways; and an official examination in 1869 of the Ministry's report for 1867, resulting in the accusation that he had done bad work, led to his removal as minister in April 1869, at his own request, on the grounds of ill health. In the 1870s, he worked in the Department of State Economy of the State Council and was chairman of the Commission for Examining the Reports of the Ministry of Transport for 1870–1875. In 1872, the Institute of Transport Engineers celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his work in the field of transport.

Mel'nikov spent his final years at Liuban' Station of the Nikolai Railway, where he used his savings to carry out philanthropic works, such as building a home for elderly women, a school for the children of low-paid workers on the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway (by then called the Nikolai Railway), and a boarding school for orphans of employees of that railway.

He died on 22 July 1880 and was buried near Liuban' Station. In 1955, a monument was erected to him in the square of the station for the 150th anniversary in 1954 of his birth and his remains were transferred to this spot.

He was the author of forty-two works, both published and in manuscript form. Of his memoirs, only the first part, covering the period 1830–1842, has been preserved; a portion was published in 1938 and 1940.<sup>6</sup>

During the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, in order to be in the midst of the work being carried out in the Northern Administration, Mel'nikov took up residence in the countryside, where he lived very simply in bachelor fashion. Baron Del'vig said he was stingy and lacked even the most elementary fastidiousness. In late autumn of 1842, when he visited Mel'nikov on an assignment, the latter was living in a two-room peasant hut; in one room there was a plain wooden table for his plans, a few very simple chairs, a couch, and a bed. Mel'nikov's voice, Del'vig said, always dripped irony when he spoke. Mel'nikov informed Del'vig that he was not expecting such a Moscow guest and, therefore, Del'vig would have to make do with whatever the landlady was making, which was kasha and cabbage soup with beef and cockroaches, meaning by the latter the black cabbage in the soup. Mel'nikov ate with a wooden spoon but gave Del'vig a set of silver utensils, a gift from Mel'nikov's sister-in-law. In the evening, they were given tallow candles in dirty bottles, and, as Del'vig had come without a servant, Mel'nikov laughed at the Moscow gentleman who was going to have to undress himself for bed. When Mel'nikov moved to Chudovo, Del'vig says, he occupied the upper floor of a rather large peasant hut that was decently furnished and ate fairly well, but he continued to be as stingy as before.<sup>7</sup>

Anton Shtukenberg (see Image 250), first cousin of James Whistler's private drawing teacher, Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii (see Images 167–170), and one of the transport engineers also engaged in building the railway, described Mel'nikov as a worldly bachelor; sociable; a fascinating talker, who, however, talked fast and monotonously; well-read; fluent in English and French. He was friendly with the young engineers and frequently gave them direct orders over the heads of the railway section chiefs, thus creating an awkward situation for the latter. The work in the Northern Administration moved along more slowly than in the Southern Administration, directed by Kraft.<sup>8</sup> The personal stinginess Del'vig spoke of extended to Mel'nikov's work as well: he delayed payment to contractors and at one point, along with his superior, Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (see Image 243), who was of like mind, incurred the displeasure of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423).<sup>9</sup>

Major Whistler had an excellent relationship with Mel'nikov, who not only frequented the Whistler home in St. Petersburg but brought his brother, Aleksandr Petrovich, on a visit to the Whistlers' dacha on the Peterhof Road. They both were enchanted by a musical evening, and Debo (see Images 17–19, 21) could speak French with Aleksandr Petrovich, who did not know English. Aleksandr Petrovich's wife, Nadezhda Filipovna (Viktorova) Mel'nikova, and a daughter (probably their eldest) visited Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) in St. Petersburg, but unfortunately they had no language in common, as Anna Whistler was reluctant to speak French. When Anna Whistler and Willie (see Images 27, 30) joined the Gellibrand party visiting the estate and farm of Count Kushelev (see Image 302) on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844, Major Whistler and James (see Images 24–29) did not go because they were spending the day with Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov. When Major Whistler was dying, he instructed Anna Whistler to give Mel'nikov his portrait and his Bible, in which he had written notes.<sup>10</sup>

NOTES

1. This essay is a composite chiefly from two printed works: Del'vig, Vospominaniia and M.I. Voronin and M.M. Voronina, Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov 1804–1880 (Leningrad: Nauka–Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1977). The information for Note 1 comes from Del'vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 1, p. 40, and Voronin and Voronina, Mel'nikov, pp. 11–12, 16.
2. They lived in Mikhailovskoe, an estate near Pskov inherited by Grigorii Aleksandrovich Pushkin. In 1899, the 100th anniversary of his father's birth, Grigorii Aleksandrovich sold Mikhailovskoe to the nobility of Pskov, thereby establishing the Pushkin Museum–Preserve. He and his wife spent the remainder of their lives on her estate, Markuchai, near Vil'no (Vadim Stark, Zhizn' s poetom Natal'ia Nikolaevna Pushkina [Life with the Poet Natal'ia Nikolaevna Pushkina], 2 vols. [St. Petersburg: Vita Nova, 2006], vol. 2, p. 150).
3. RGIA: Fond 472, op. 32 (323/1125), d. 925. Formulirnyi spisok A.P. Mel'nikova Mart 1847g. [Service record of A.P. Mel'nikov March 1847].
4. Del'vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 1, p. 40.
5. RGIA: Fond 472, op. 257/1273, d. 56. O naznachenii pensii vdove byvshego Sovetnika Pridvornoii Koniusheanoi Kontory, Deist. St. Sov. Mel'nikova, ne razdel'no s det'mi, po osoboi Monarshei milosti. Nachalos' 27 iuniii 1873 g. Na 22 listakh. Koncheno 10 Avgusta 1873 g. [Concerning the awarding of a pension to the widow of former councilor of the Imperial Carriage Establishment in the Office of the Imperial Stables, Actual State Councilor Mel'nikov, together with her children, by Imperial favor. Begun: 27 June 1873. Consisting of 22 folios. Concluded 10 August 1873.] This petition contains the final service record for Aleksandr Petrovich Mel'nikov. The pension was awarded to his widow and younger children, Pavel and Maria.
6. All of the foregoing biography of Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov is taken from Voronin and Voronina, Mel'nikov, pp. 12, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 26, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 37, 59, 61, 62, 63, 65, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 80, 143–148. Portions of his memoirs, covering 1830 through 1842, appear in Krasnyi arkhiv 90 (1938): pp. 309–335, and Krasnyi arkhiv 99 (1940): pp. 134–177.
7. Del'vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, p. 23. Examples of Mel'nikov's stinging are given on pages 23–24.

8. Shtukenberg, "Iz istorii zheleznodorozhnogo dela v Rossii," pp. 321–322.
9. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 308–310, 343–344; Del'vig, Vospominaniia, vol. 2, pp. 245–246.
10. Mel'nikov, Svedeniia, fol. 198v.

MELVILLE

John Melville (bap. Errol, Perthshire, Scotland 15 August 1802 – Dundee, Scotland 19 August 1886) was a Scottish colporteur and evangelist, and an unofficial agent in charge of the British and Foreign Bible Society's work in the south of Russia, based in Odessa, between 1837 and about 1875.<sup>1</sup> His parents were William Melvil, "a [illegible] labourer" and Margaret (Cooper/Cowper) Melvil.<sup>2</sup>

His father was married twice, first to Margaret (Cooper/Cowper) in Errol, Perthshire, on 25 February 1799<sup>3</sup> and, secondly, to Janet Martin in Errol, Perthshire, on 26 October 1806.<sup>4</sup> In addition to John Melville, his parents, Margaret (Cooper/Cowper) Melville and William Melville, were also the parents of William (bap. Errol 1 December 1799) and Robert (bap. Errol 20 December 1803).<sup>5</sup> In the marriage of William Melville and Janet (Martin) Melville, the children were Thomas (b. 1809), Cecilia (b. 1810), Jane (b. 1817), and David (b. 1821).<sup>6</sup> The importance of his father's marrying twice will be made clear when the death of John Melville is discussed at the end of this biography.

"Nothing is known concerning John Melville's youth, his education or other aspects of his life in Britain. He was most likely a Presbyterian ... and may have been raised in or have come into contact with the evangelical movement current in early nineteenth century Britain. In 1837 [he] moved to southern Russia and settled in Odessa. Why he moved is unknown, but apparently he supported himself by teaching, probably teaching English."<sup>7</sup>

There are two surviving descriptions of John Melville. The Mennonite, Peter Jensen, described him as "a bachelor" and "a Presbyterian of the old school, who still believed in predestination and eternal damnation, a typical Scotchman [sic], tall spare and seemingly austere, but withal a most lovable character."<sup>8</sup> An English trader named George Hume described him as "a very remarkable Scot, tall and gaunt in his appearance and truly British in thought and feeling."<sup>9</sup>

"In Odessa Melville would have known not only Russians but also Tartars, Jews, foreign colonists and merchants of many nationalities who often held diplomatic posts. The foreign colonists included 'Germans' from the neighboring Bessarabian colonies and others from more distant settlements in New Russia, including those Mennonites from Chortitza and Molochnaya who came to Odessa to sell their products.”<sup>10</sup> “Though Jansen reported that Melville spoke little German and ‘horrible Russian’, Melville taught Hume Russian. Hume stated that Melville was a person in whom ‘in all his actions, precision was the keynote’, and there is nothing in the surviving material to suggest he was not competent in either Russian or German.”<sup>11</sup>

“Shortly after his arrival in Odessa, Melville began his lifetime’s work by distributing Bibles and tracts to people in the city.”<sup>12</sup> There were at this time “no active BFBS [British and Foreign Bible Society] agents in southern Russia.”<sup>13</sup> Until 1841, he received Bibles from Smyrna and the Levant, as “most of the sea trade of Odessa was with Mediterranean countries through the Bosphorus, and many of the ships came from Ottoman controlled ports.”<sup>14</sup> “In 1841, in order to secure a better supply of Bibles, Melville wrote to A. Mirrielees, the St. Petersburg BFBS agent.” Mirrielees sent Melville’s “letter to the BFBS Committee in London, ... pointing out that Melville was ideally qualified ... because he held a ‘favourable position’ in the eyes of local Russian authorities” and suggesting that “the Society appoint [him] as an official agent with a salary and travelling expenses.”<sup>15</sup> But Melville wanted only “to procure a better supply of Bibles from the main Russian depot.”<sup>16</sup> “[H]e could not become an employee of the BFBS [because] he desired to continue distributing tracts” as well.<sup>17</sup> The BFBS, nevertheless, while not appointing him “as an ‘official’ agent, gave him all the recognition and help afforded to a normal agent,” and he “set about developing a network of colporteurs across southern Russia.”<sup>18</sup>

Melville’s important work of distributing “religious literature, particularly Bibles” is now thought, however, to “have been used as a means of disguising his real” intention,<sup>19</sup> “clandestine evangelical work”<sup>20</sup> “among the indigenous population in southern Russia.”<sup>21</sup> A description of him at this work, published in 1896, shows the “indefatigable and pious,” “selfless, good and religious” Melville, “travell[ing] through southern Russia, the Crimea, the Caucasus, and Armenia to the borders of Persia,” preaching “‘the Word of God’ in their mother tongue” to “the Little Russians [Ukrainian peasants] of the south, the German colonists, numerous Mennonites ... and the Karaim Jews,” known and loved by all of them.<sup>22</sup> “Wherever he went,” he would gather them “into a backroom where he preached . . . to them in his own simple manner,” making a tremendous impression on “Christians of different denominations, Jews, and Mohammedans, all numerous small, pious people, who attended to hear Melville read in Russian in his deep voice. The pietistic idea which had developed among small isolated groups during the time of Alexander I were [sic] now renewed and expanded by the work of this pious man . . . with the help of dedicated people.”<sup>23</sup> But “the archives of the British [and Foreign] Bible Society contain no reports from Melville, not even confidential ones,” about these meetings, and the Russian police seem not to have noticed them.<sup>24</sup> The latter is surprising because, “while evangelical work by non-Orthodox religious groups among peoples not of the Orthodox faith was not forbidden by the authorities at this time, it was certainly not encouraged. Work among Russian peasants of the Orthodox faith was strictly prohibited.”<sup>25</sup> Still, “during the Crimean War (1854–56) Melville remained in Odessa ‘during the whole of which time he . . . devoted himself entirely to the work of distributing the Scriptures among Russian soldiers’.”<sup>26</sup> It is felt that his “clandestine activities among Russians escaped the notice of the authorities as a result of their inefficiency or because [he] disguised his work through appearing to work with acceptable groups.”<sup>27</sup> A further explanation proffered is that those Russian-government officials in southern Russia who were from Baltic States and of the Lutheran faith “may have encouraged evangelical efforts.”<sup>28</sup>

“In 1866 Melville fell ill and returned to England, but in 1867 he was back in Odessa with a young Scot, James Watt, whom he set up as his successor. The BFBS officially established an Odessa Agency under Watt in 1868.”<sup>29</sup> A certain animosity developed between the two men, caused by the opposition of “Melville’s personal touch” and Watt’s “shrewd business sense.” Watt’s letters to the BFBS hinted at “Melville’s amateurish methods.”<sup>30</sup> Watt probably also became aware of Melville’s clandestine evangelical work, which could not be condoned by the BFBS.<sup>31</sup>

Melville is said to have returned to Scotland in the 1870s,<sup>32</sup> but the fact that the last will and testament of John Melville of No 12 Richmond

Terrace, Thorne Road, South Lambeth, in the County of Surrey, was drawn up on 8 July 1870 suggests that he came back before or in July 1870.<sup>33</sup> How he spent the remaining years of his life is unknown.<sup>34</sup>

He died at the age of eighty-four at the home of his half-sister, Janet (Melville) Guild, 16 Elizabeth Street, in Maxwelltown, Dundee, on 19 August 1886 of “congestion of lungs (3 days) and senile decay.”<sup>35</sup> Janet (Melville) Guild provided the wrong name for John’s mother in her half-brother’s death certificate, giving her own mother’s name instead. Possibly she did not know his mother’s name, as there was a gap of nineteen years between Janet’s and John’s ages.

John Melville’s estate at his death amounted to £4700. He left legacies of £50 or £100 to his brothers and sisters, the widow of a brother, and two nieces. He also left bequests to churches in Errol, Perthshire, and to the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

NOTES

1. Urry, “John Melville,” p. 305.
2. IGI.
3. IGI.
4. IGI.
5. IGI.
6. IGI.
7. Urry, “John Melville,” p. 306.
8. Quoted in Urry, p. 306.
9. Quoted in Urry, p. 306.
10. Urry, p. 306.
11. Urry, p. 306.
12. Urry, p. 306.
13. Urry, p. 307.
14. Urry, p. 307.

15. Urry, p. 307.
16. Urry, p. 308.
17. Urry, p. 308.
18. Urry, p. 308.
19. Urry, p. 313.
20. Urry, p. 318
21. Urry, p. 316.
22. Urry, p. 316.
23. Urry, p. 317.
24. Urry, p. 317.
25. Urry, p. 317.
26. Urry, pp. 317–318.
27. Urry, p. 318.
28. Urry, p. 318.
29. Urry, p. 321.
30. Urry, p. 321.
31. Urry, p. 321.
32. Urry, p. 321.
33. 1886 Melville, John [Reference SC45/31/37, Dundee Sheriff Court], NAUK.
34. Urry, “John Melville,” p. 321.
35. 1886 Melville, John [Statutory Deaths 282/04/654], 1886 Deaths in the District of St. Andrew in the Borough of Dundee, Statuary Registry of Deaths, NAUK. See also “The Late Mr. John Melville, of Odessa,” Bible Society Monthly Reporter (October 1886): pp. 174–176.

MORGAN AND PARLAND

Edward John Morgan (Cheltenham 1812 – Kensington, Middlesex 14 May 1876) was “for some time ... the senior partner” in the firm of Egerton Hubbard and Company in St. Petersburg.<sup>1</sup> He had been an officer in the Madras Artillery in India.<sup>2</sup> He married on 12/24 November 1837<sup>3</sup> Mary Anne Parland (b. Denmark c. 1813; bap. London 20 January 1814; d. South Kensington, Middlesex 8 January 1882). His wife was the sister of Alexander Parland, who had been tutor to Grand Duke Aleksandr Pavlovich, the future Alexander I.<sup>4</sup> Mary Anne Parland’s sister Frances Percy Parland (10 January 1811 – 6 December 1887) married on 17 May 1852, as his second wife, Charles John Baird (3 July 1829 – 29 November 1866), the grandson of Charles Baird (20 December 1766 – 10 December 1843; see Image 274), of the Baird Iron Works.<sup>5</sup>

The Morgans had one son, Edward Delmar (Stratford, Essex 19 April 1840 – London 18 May 1909), and two daughters, Maria Frances (Arkhangelsk 15/27 September 1838 – Totteridge, Hertfordshire 24 September 1907) and Fanny Elizabeth (St. Petersburg 9/21 July 1841 – Delgaty Castle, Turiff, Aberdeenshire 17 March 1933).<sup>6</sup> The Morgans lived at 31 Galernaia Street, in the building belonging to Kensovskii in the First Admiralty District, Fourth Ward.<sup>7</sup> They had in their employ in 1845 Jane Morris, nurse, and Fanny Alcock, governess.<sup>8</sup> In 1849, Edward John Morgan was seriously wounded in a hunting accident in which a “bear charged and knocked him down, clawing his face and seriously injuring his sight.”<sup>9</sup> At his death, he left effects under £4,000 in England and extensive effects in Russia.<sup>10</sup> At her death, Mary Anne (Parland) Morgan left effects amounting to about £6500.<sup>11</sup>

Edward Delmar was educated at Eton and became a linguist and traveler.<sup>12</sup> He traveled in Persia and Central Asia, beginning in 1872. In 1876, he translated from Russian the accounts of the Russian geographer, Nikolai Przhevalsky (1839–1888), entitled Mongolia, the Tangut Country, and the Solitudes of North Tibet,<sup>13</sup> and in 1879, with Sir Thomas Douglas Forsyth, Przhevalsky’s From Kulja Across the Tian-Shan to Lobnor.<sup>14</sup> He also made expeditions to Little Russia and later “to the lower part of the Congo (1883).” He “was a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society for forty years,” and “honorary secretary of the Hakluyt Society (1886–1892).” He married on 25 September 1873 Bertha Jardine Thomas (Hollingbourne, Kent March Qtr. 1845 – South Kensington, Middlesex 16 July 1932), daughter of Louisa (de Visme) and Richard Thomas. They had four sons and three daughters:<sup>15</sup> Edward Louis (1875–1900), Bertha Woodbyne (1876–1960), John Godfrey Yule (1878–1948), Ella Mary (1879–1948), Vera Caroline (1880–1970), Gerald Stewart (1883–1946), and Stephen Basil (1886–1939). At his death, Edward Delmar Morgan left an estate of some £87,000.<sup>16</sup>

Maria Frances Morgan married on 10 April 1866 in London Thomas William Snagge (later Sir T.M. Snagge, KCMG) (Merion, Dublin c. 1837 – 1 February 1914), barrister-at-law.<sup>17</sup> They had three sons and five daughters: Dorothy Mary (1871–1934), Harold Edward (1872–1949), Leonard William (1874–1901), Eleanor Nina (1875–1947), Ethel Fanny (1877–1928), Arthur Lionel (1878–1955), Evelyn Louisa (1880–1914), and Violet Monica (1882–1953).<sup>18</sup>

Fanny Elizabeth Morgan married on 5/17 December 1863 in St. Petersburg Ainslie Grant Duff (6–9 July 1838 – Delgaty Castle, Turiff, Aberdeenshire 15 December 1929).<sup>19</sup> He later changed his name to Ainslie Douglas Ainslie, on succeeding to the property of his maternal granduncle’s estate.<sup>20</sup> He was a barrister-at-law and had also served in the diplomatic service from 1859 to 1866.<sup>21</sup> They had four sons and one daughter: Douglas (1865–1948), Percival (1867–1894), Julian (1870–1937), Edward (1876–1879), and Rachel Edith Fanny (1871–1934).<sup>22</sup>

Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) records visits to the Morgans: James (see Images 24–29) and Willie (see Images 27, 30) went to an OS Christmas party in 1846 and 1847, and Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) and Debo (see Images 17–19, 21) went to an OS New Year’s Eve party in 1847 at their home. On the Isle of Wight in the summer of 1848, Mary Ann (Parland) Morgan and her daughter Fanny visited Anna Whistler, James, and Willie. They exchanged accounts from their husbands’ letters about the cholera, and Mrs. Morgan related the gossip from St. Petersburg.

When contacted by the Pennells for information for their biography of James Whistler, Edward Delmar Morgan and his sisters were unable to contribute any recollections of young James.<sup>23</sup>

NOTES

1. Hubbard, “Our Grandmother’s Family – the Morgans,” Some Account of the Hubbard Family; Pall Mall Gazette, May 15, 1876.
2. Alan Bird, Halsall, Ormskirk, Lancashire, to E. Harden, 24 August 1993 (hereafter, Alan Bird and date of letter); see also IGI.
3. PREC STP for 1837, p. 226; The Observer (London), December 31, 1837.
4. Hubbard, “Our Grandmother’s Family – the Morgans,” Some Account of the Hubbard Family
5. IGI.
6. Alan Bird, 24 August 1993 and 27 January 1994; PREC Archangel: Baptisms 1838; PREC STP for 1841, p. 279; National Probate Calendar (Scotland), 1933; IGI; Memorial ID 143952842, findagrave.com.
7. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 39. Nistrem says that No. 31 belonged to Garder (Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 1, p. 39).
8. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 39.
9. W.E. Hubbard, “The Egerton Hubbards,” Some Account of the Hubbard Family; Anna Whistler to James Whistler, St. P., March 16, 1849, GUL Whistler Collection, W385.
10. Will of Edward John Morgan, PRO.
11. Will of Edward John Morgan, PRO; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1882.
12. All details of Edward Delmar Morgan’s career are from the Dictionary of National Biography.
13. Nikolai M. Przhevalsky, Mongolia, The Tangut Country, and the Solitudes of Northern Tibet, Being a Narrative of Three Years’ Travel in Eastern High Asia, ed. Henry Yule, trans. E. Delmar Morgan, 2 vols. (London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1876).
14. Nikolai M. Przhevalsky, From Kulja across the Tian-Shan to Lobnor, trans. E. Delmar Morgan, introduction by Sir Thomas Douglas Forsyth (London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1879).
15. Alan Bird, 24 August 1993; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1900, 1939, 1948, and 1960; Memorial IDs 131394906, 136450221, 131394783, and 131395170; IGI.

16. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1909.
17. Alan Bird, 24 August 1993 and 29 July 1994; Dublin Morning Register, January 6, 1837; Pall Mall Gazette, April 12, 1866.
18. Alan Bird, 24 August 1993 and 30 August 1994; Joseph Foster, Oxford Men, 1880–1892, with a Record of Their Schools, Honours, and Degrees (Oxford: J. Parker, 1893), s.v. “Snagge, Harold”; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1901, 1914, 1928, 1934, 1947, and 1953; IGI.
19. Alan Bird, 29 July 1994, 30 August 1994; Sir John Bernard Burke, Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry, 15th ed. (London: Shaw, 1937 [1936]), p. 15; IGI.
20. Alan Bird, 29 July 1994; Burke's Landed Gentry (1937), p. 15.
21. Alan Bird, 29 July 1994; Burke's Landed Gentry (1937), p. 15.
22. Alan Bird, 29 July 1994; Burke's Landed Gentry (1937), p. 15; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1894 and 1948; Memorial IDs 143952842 and 143953289, findagrave.com; IGI.
23. List of people consulted for The Life of James McNeill Whistler, folder and pages not numbered, LC: P-W, box 335; and three letters to Delmar Morgan, dated 1 September, 5 September, and 25 September; he answered the 1 September and 5 September letters.

POIZAT

In 1594, Joseph Justus Scaliger (1540–1609), son of Julius Caesar Scaliger (1484–1558), published Epistola de Vetustate et Splendore Gentis Scaligeræ et J.C. Scaligeri Vita [Letter Concerning the Venerable Character and Splendor of the Scaliger People/Clan and the Life of J.C. Scaliger], a work “in which he put forward the claims of his family to be descended from the Della Scalas, Princes of Verona.”<sup>1</sup> This descent was disputed.<sup>2</sup> In the nineteenth century, the Poizats also became involved in the dispute, but for the purpose of proving that they too had just claims to the name of “de Lescale de Vérone.”<sup>3</sup>

The background is as follows. Jules César III de Lescales de Vérone (d. 1792 or 1793) had married in March 1775 a Creole woman named Louise Bousquet, whose parents were from St. Domingo. At some point, he went to St. Domingo to look after his wife’s property, leaving her with their two young daughters, Victoire (b. 15 January 1776) and Julie (b. 1777). He remained in St. Domingo a long time and entered into a second marriage, with Marie Joseph Poupart, from which were born at least six children, four of whom died young. The two surviving children were Marie Anne Cezarine de Lescalle (b. c. 1783) and Marie Jeanne Medarine de Lescalle (c. 1785 – 30 January 1867).<sup>4</sup> After the death of Jules César III de Lescales de Vérone (massacred in St. Domingo in 1792 or 1793), this second wife married a Mr. Marchon and died soon after on St. Thomas, where she had moved to with her daughters. Marie Anne married Mr. Antoine Poizat, by whom she had a son, Jean Robert Poizat, born in Port-au-Prince, St. Domingo, on 7 June 1803 (d. 16 July 1868). Marie Jeanne married Mr. Givoy. They had no children. The husbands of both sisters died. In 1815, the two widowed sisters left for the United States, where both married again. Mrs. Poizat became the wife of Mr. Roudolphe Dietz, Mrs. Givoy the wife of Mr. A. Flour (or Flourer). Mr. and Mrs. Flour had a daughter, Louise Cecilia (14 May 1820 – 16 September 1888). The second husbands of both sisters died. In 1826, Mrs. Flour settled in Marseilles for reasons of health, remaining there until 1834. Mrs. Dietz was in France in 1833–34. In 1834, Mrs. Flour left Marseilles for Paris to marry her daughter, Louise Cecilia, to Mrs. Dietz’s son, Jean Robert Poizat (see Image 78). Mrs. Dietz returned to the United States in 1834 after the wedding. In 1837, Mr. and Mrs. J.R. Poizat and Mrs. Flour went to live in Marseilles.<sup>5</sup> It was to their home in Marseilles that the Poizats were returning on the Acadia with Anna Whistler in the fall of 1843, via London, apparently having visited their relatives in Philadelphia.<sup>6</sup>

In 1843, the Poizats were the parents of two children, Charles André (c. 1841 – 12 April 1882)<sup>7</sup> and Mary. In July 1844, Mr. Poizat announced in a letter to Anna Whistler the birth of another daughter, on 10 May 1844.<sup>8</sup> Charles seems to have been the only surviving child and later became a manufacturing chemist.<sup>9</sup>

Of the two legitimate daughters of Jules César III de Lescale de Vérone, only Mlle. Victoire (about sixty-nine years old) was still alive in 1843 and was living in the family chateau of Vivés at Agen. Sometime after his return to France in 1843, Mr. Poizat initiated an inquiry at the Collège Héraldique de France.<sup>10</sup> From the resulting correspondence with the general secretary, he received the information that his branch of the family was illegitimate but that, as Mlle. Victoire was living in great poverty, he might be able to add “Lescale de Vérone” to his name and obtain the coat-of-arms and all the privileges of nobility if he were to make a financial settlement on her. Mlle. Victoire herself made it clear in her letters, both before and after meeting the Poizats, that she was overjoyed at having found them and at having in Mr. Poizat an heir to the title. She also wished the matter settled before she died. Some time in the summer of 1847, after they had actually met and after extended haggling, Mr. Poizat and Mlle. Victoire settled on 6000 francs outright and a pension of 1200 francs per annum, but from that moment until 1853, when her correspondence ceases, Mr. Poizat failed to honor his side of the agreement, sending Mlle. Victoire sums far smaller than those promised and in general behaving in a manner less than honorable.<sup>11</sup> Mlle. Victoire gave him a box of family portraits<sup>12</sup> and one of family papers. In March 1848, Mr. Poizat’s petition to the Collège Héraldique was turned down. Sometime after 16 May 1848, the Poizat family left France for New York. In August 1849, Mlle. Victoire suggested that Mr. Poizat might want to try again to change his name, and in 1850 his lawyer wrote from Paris also enquiring whether he wished to pursue the matter.<sup>13</sup> In August 1849, the Poizats were in Philadelphia, but the 1850

Census lists them as living in West Chester, Chester County, Pennsylvania, where they stayed for some five years: John Robert (45); Louisa C. (30); Charles A. (9).<sup>14</sup> In 1857, they were again in Philadelphia,<sup>15</sup> where they remained until they died: John Robert Poizat on 16 July 1868, Charles A. on 12 April 1882, and Louise Cecilia on 16 September 1888.<sup>16</sup> The entry for John Robert Poizat in the PAHRC Death Register clearly states that he added (despite the decision of the Collège Héraldique) “de l’Escale de Vérone” [sic] to his name.<sup>17</sup> A few years before her death, Cecilia Poizat gave the Scaliger family portraits and papers to the American Philosophical Society.<sup>18</sup>

NOTES

1. Vernon Hall Jr., “The Scaliger Family Papers,” Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 92, no. 2 (1948): p. 121.
2. Hall, “Scaliger Family Papers,” p. 121.
3. APS: Scaliger. There are seven boxes of documents and correspondence from Mlle. Victoire de Lescale de Vérone, the last direct, legitimate descendant of Jules César III de Lescale de Vérone, chiefly to the Poizat family, and a group of parchments, which give the history of the Scaliger family. The papers record the attempt by Jean Robert Poizat to obtain the title, coat-of-arms, and privileges of nobility from his aunt with her consent and help.
4. In the document of February 1848 requesting permission for Jean Robert Poizat to be called “Poizat de Lescale de Vérone,” it is stated that she was born in St. Domingo in April 1785 (APS: Scaliger, box 1). However, in her application for an American passport in 1844, she gives her age as sixty-one (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 30, no. 2450).
5. Most of the abovementioned background information is taken from two documents dated 15 Décembre 1843 and signed by Michel Seillard, a merchant at Marseilles, who claimed to have known the family for some forty-five years. The documents were drawn up during the time of Mr. Poizat’s correspondence with the Collège Héraldique de France concerning the addition of “Lescale de Vérone” to his name and seem to constitute an attempt to legitimize this branch of the family (APS: Scaliger, box 2). Information can also be found at the City Archives, Philadelphia, and the PAHRC).

6. While in Philadelphia, they had their silhouettes cut by Auguste Edouard on 24 July 1843 (see Image 78).
7. The 1850 Census for West Chester, Chester County, PA, lists Charles A. Poizat, nine years old, born in France.
8. Entry for Wed. [July] 24th [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I. Although the baby's name is not given in this entry, she is most certainly Amata Poissat, legitimate daughter of Johannes, born in France, who died on 27 April 1850, age six, of brain fever in West Chester, Pennsylvania (Death Register of Holy Trinity Church, 1810–1828 and 1849–1871, p. 3, PAHRC).
9. The correspondence of Mlle. Victoire refers after a time only to Charles, and the 1850 Census for West Chester, Chester County, PA, lists him as the only child in the household (see Note 7 in this biography). For his occupation, see, for example, Philadelphia directories for 1862, 1864, 1869, and 1872.
10. APS: Scaliger, box 2. The correspondence from the Collège covers a period of two years, from 27 October 1843 to 13 October 1845. Hall is wrong in saying that the Poizats arrived in France in 1847 to pursue this matter and that Mlle. Victoire knew nothing of them (Hall, "Scaliger Family Papers," pp. 121, 122). She had an idea that her father had had other children in St. Domingo. See the letter to Mlle. Victoire from Mr. Magny dated 27 June 1844.
11. Mlle. Victoire's correspondence (APS: Scaliger, box 2) amounts to some forty letters, many of them piteous pleas for the money promised her. What she received was far less than promised and was delivered irregularly. After the Poizats moved to the United States in 1848, Mr. Poizat sometimes greeted her letters with silence. In 1853, she dictated a letter to a friend of Mr. Poizat in Paris, who handled this financial matter, asking that the information be passed on to Mr. Poizat, and through this intermediary proudly closed the door on their relationship.
12. List of portraits of the Scaliger de Vérone family, APS: Scaliger, box 2. These portraits were given by the American Philosophical Society to the Museo Civico in Verona, Italy (Hall, "Scaliger Family Papers," p. 120).
13. Letter of 14 August 1849, APS: Scaliger, box 2; letter from Alexander Froyez, 18 July 1850, APS: Scaliger, box 3. Mr. Poizat seems not to have pursued the matter a second time, but when the Count of Paris visited Philadelphia in January 1862, Mr. Poizat wrote him a note expressing his desire to meet with him

- to pay him homage and received an answer granting his request (letter of J.R. Poizat 25 January 1842, and note of Captain Morhaine, 28 January 186[2], APS Scaliger, box 2).
14. APS: Scaliger, box 2; 1850 Census for West Chester, Chester County, PA. See also an advertisement for the sale of personal property by John R. Poizat, American Republic, July 24, 1855.
  15. A. M'Elroy's Philadelphia Directory for 1857, p. 540. Mrs. Poizat appears in directories and census returns as Louisa C., Cecilia L., Cecilia, and L.C.
  16. Death certificate for John Robert Poizet [sic], no. 17066, City Archives, Philadelphia; death certificate for Louisa C. Poizat, no. 16579; death certificate for Charles A. Poizat. The son of Charles A. and Annie E. Poizat was still alive in 1900 and working as an upholsterer in Philadelphia (Gopsill's Philadelphia Business Directory for 1900 (Philadelphia: James Gopsill's Sons, 1900), p. 1827).
  17. Death Register of Holy Trinity Church, 1810–1828 and 1849–1871, p. 1, PAHRC.
  18. Louise Cecilia Poizat offered the Scaliger Papers to the American Philosophical Society through Dr. Daniel G. Brinton prior to 6 April 1883; they were accepted on 18 May 1883; the trunk of documents was reported on 21 March 1884 as having been received from Brinton (Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 20 (1882–1883): p. 647; 21 (1883–1884): pp. 210, 448). It was opened in 1900 (Hall, “Scaliger Family Papers,” p. 123). Hall incorrectly believed that (Louise) Cecilia Poizat was the daughter of the Poizats (Hall, “Scaliger Family Papers,” p. 122).

ROBERTSON

William Robertson (2 April 1819 – 17 February 1890) was born in Blount County, Tennessee, and appointed from that state to the United States Military Academy, which he attended from 1 July 1835 to 1 July 1840, when he graduated and was promoted in the Army to brevet second lieutenant, Second Dragoons. He served at the Cavalry School for Practice in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1840 – July 1841. He became a second lieutenant, Second Dragoons, on 1 February 1841. He served in the Florida War against the Seminole Indians from July 1841 – October 1842, and in garrison at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, from October 1842 – July 1843, when he resigned from the Army (10 July 1843).<sup>1</sup> “Since which time,” he wrote to Cullum, “I have been living at this place [New Iberia, LA] and engaged mostly in agricultural pursuits.”<sup>2</sup> On 16 May 1844, he married Eliza Ann Marsh (Petit Anse Island, LA 20 September 1825 – New Iberia, LA 9 October 1878).<sup>3</sup>

In London, England, on 15 July 1844, Robertson was issued a passport by the American Embassy with New York indicated as his place of residence, “Diploma West Point” as the voucher for his identity, and Russia as his destination.<sup>4</sup> Anna Whistler’s diary entry for Tuesday, 20 August 1844, indicates that Robertson visited them once, on the Peterhof Road, early in the morning “last week,” i.e., between Monday, 12 August and Friday, 16 August, and had breakfast with them. He left Russia on Saturday, 5/17 August, for England and the United States. However, on 31 August 1844, at the American Embassy in London, he was issued Passport 1269 for travel to Egypt through Prussia and Austria.<sup>5</sup> I have not been able to ascertain why Robertson was in Europe and Russia. From Eliza Robertson’s diary/scrapbook (1849–1856), however, it appears that her husband “travelled often, leaving [her] at home with the servants and children.”<sup>6</sup> In fact, he took a trip two months after his marriage. He may have been a special agent working for the U.S. government.

After their marriage in 1844, the Robertsons lived for two years in Bolivar, Tennessee, and then moved permanently to New Iberia.<sup>7</sup> They had four children, born between 1845 and 1864, the last of whom died in 1943.<sup>8</sup>

For more than forty years, Robertson ran the Robertson Insurance Agency.<sup>9</sup> He was mayor of New Iberia in 1860<sup>10</sup> and a prominent citizen.<sup>11</sup> Little information can be found in Eliza Robertson’s diary about her husband’s business interests, but “entries in 1855 indicate that William Robertson was a member of the ‘know-nothings,’ and attended meetings of this secret society.”<sup>12</sup>

NOTES

1. Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, p. 52; William Robertson to Capt. G.W. Cullum, 30 Aug. 1860, New Iberia, LA, and William Robertson to Gen. G.W. Cullum, 16 Dec. 1878, Cullum File of William Robertson, Special Collections, USMA Library; Register of Graduates and Former Cadets of the United States Military Academy, Cullum Memorial ed. (West Point, NY: USMA, 1980).
2. William Robertson to Gen. G.W. Cullum, 30 Aug. 1860, New Iberia, LA, Cullum File of William Robertson, Special Collections, USMA Library.
3. Eliza Anne Marsh Robertson Papers, Southern Historical Collection, #1181-z, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Chapel Hill, NC (hereafter, Robertson Papers), Inventory, p. 2; see also Glenn R. Conrad, ed., New Iberia: Essays on the Town and Its People (Lafayette, LA: Center for Louisiana Studies, University of South-Western Louisiana, 1979), p. 27. For information about Eliza Robertson’s family and Petit Anse Island, see Conrad, p. 44. For the ambience of the area in which the Robertsons lived and their life, see the diary in the Robertson Papers; James H. Dorman, “Aspects of Acadiana Plantation Life in the Mid-Nineteenth Century: A Microcosmic View,” Louisiana History 16, no. 4 (1975): pp. 361–370; Charles Dudley Warner, “The Acadian Land,” Harper’s New Monthly Magazine 74 (February 1887): pp. 334–354; and an edited version of Warner’s essay by James H. Dorman in the Attakapas Gazette 7 (December 1972): pp. 157–169.
4. NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2.
5. NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2, passport no. 1269.
6. Inventory, Description, p. 4, Robertson Papers.
7. William Robertson to Gen. G.W. Cullum, 16 Dec. 1878, New Iberia, LA, Cullum File of William Robertson, Special Collections, USMA Library.

8. Inventory, pp. 1, 2, Robertson Papers.
9. Conrad, New Iberia, p. 27; Dorman, “Acadiana Plantation Life,” p. 365.
10. Conrad, New Iberia, p. 27.
11. Conrad, pp. 110, 124, 143.
12. Inventory, Description, p. 4, Robertson Papers.

ROGERS<sup>1</sup>

Dr. James Rogers (1819 – 11 July 1890), physician to the British Legation in St. Petersburg, was also the Whistler family’s physician. Born in Scotland, he received his MD from Glasgow University in 1833 and went to Russia, where he was licensed by the Imperial Medical Chirurgical Academy of St. Petersburg in 1834. He engaged in private practice, but at some point became attached to the Obukhov Hospital in that city.<sup>2</sup> When the position of physician to the British Legation was relinquished by Sir George William Lefevre (1798–1846) in 1842, Rogers succeeded him.<sup>3</sup> We know, mainly from Anna Whistler’s St. Petersburg diaries, that he attended the grave illness of John Stevenson Maxwell (1844) and the death (October 1846) of the Whistlers’ last child, John Bouttatz Whistler. He was also the physician for Charlotte Leon, whom he supplied with free medications and attended at her final illness (1847). He attended Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) in his final illness and was present on the night of 7 April 1849, when Major Whistler died. He also attended baby George Whistler Eastwick in his final illness (1849) and was considered by the child’s parents to be “very attentive and appears to study his case more than Dr. C [Collier, their own physician at Alexandrofsky] did.”<sup>4</sup> He lived at 247 Galernaia Street in the building belonging to Potocki, in the First Admiralty District, Fourth Ward (see “Maps”).<sup>5</sup>

It is not clear exactly when he returned to England permanently, but he settled in Port View, Saltash, Cornwall,<sup>6</sup> where his brother, Dr. William Rogers (1817 – 7 April 1904), Surgeon RN (retired as of early 1863), was living with his wife and children.<sup>7</sup> It appears that James Rogers registered for practice there in 1873 and retired in 1877.<sup>8</sup> He was the author of On the Present State of Therapeutics, with Some Suggestions for Placing It upon a More Scientific Basis (London and Edinburgh: John Churchill & Sons, 1870).<sup>9</sup>

He settled in the Port View Estate.<sup>10</sup> The home of “Dr. James Rogers, unmarried, retired Surgeon or Physician, not practicing,” is listed in the 1881 Census for Saltash as “No Name Villa,” “probably a nickname bestowed by the local people because the house was the only one on the estate without a name.”<sup>11</sup> His brother, William, living at 2

Lynwood Villa, with his wife, Emily, had, according to the 1871 Census, three daughters and one son: Florence (14), William J. (12), Emily Chalmers (10), and Dora (9). By the 1881 Census, Dora (19) unmarried, was living with her Uncle James. By 1890, she had gone back to her father's home and Emily C. Rogers, her sister, was living with Uncle James.<sup>12</sup> Florence Rogers (Edinburgh 1857 – Exeter, Devon 11 October 1922) had married at Stoke Damerel in July 1886 Cecil Clement Longridge (Tynemouth 6 September 1852 – Naples, Italy 23 November 1939), bachelor, of St. Bede's College, Manchester.<sup>13</sup>

In his will, drawn up on 7 March 1890, with a codicil dated 9 April 1890,<sup>14</sup> James Rogers showed both his philanthropy and his affection for his brother, nephew, and nieces. He left money to the Royal National Life Boat Institution for the purchase of a lifeboat, named, for his nephew, the "Willie Rogers,"<sup>15</sup> and to the East End Juvenile Mission (Dr. Barnardo's Homes). He left an annual lifetime trust of £450 for his brother. The most interesting bequest, however, was that to his nieces, to whom he left an extensive collection of works of art. Of some thirty-five oil paintings, engravings, oleographs, and a watercolor, three are of chief interest in the context of Anna Whistler's diaries: a sea piece (untitled in the will) by the Russian marine painter, Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (1817–1901; see Image 178) and an oil portrait and a watercolor portrait of James Rogers.<sup>16</sup> The other artists and works represented in the bequest were: Upper Kaeruthen, Landscape near Berne, Scene near Gosau in Austria, and The Innthal Tyrol by Pál Böhm (1839–1905); Bavarian Mountain by either Jakob Gauer mann (1773–1843) or Friedrich Gauer mann (1807–1862); Chiemssee Bavaria by George Mader (1824–1881); Berchtesgaden by Julius Lange (1817–1878); Winter Scene and Deer in Winter by Joseph Wolfram (b. 1860); The Inspruck in Tyrol and (after Rosa Bonheur) Cattle and Morning in the Highlands by Muller; Winter Scene in Russia by Linder; Mount Dachstein by Hermanstadter; A Winter Night by Wager;<sup>17</sup> two paintings by Antonio Canaletto (1697–1768); two scenes in Holland by François Antoine Léon Fleury (1804–1858); works with no artist's name supplied: the engravings Scottish Raid, Siege of Sebastopol, Relief of Lucknow, and Covenanters, and the painting The Lord's Supper, four oleographs; and family portraits.<sup>18</sup> The gross value of his personal estate amounted to some £24,000.<sup>19</sup>

James Rogers died on 11 July 1890. Funeral services were held at St. Stephen's Church, Saltash, on 14 July, and he was buried in St. Stephen's Churchyard. His grave monument is a grey granite pillar, rectangular in cross-section, with the top "weathered" four ways and a plinth at the bottom. The inscription reads: "In memory of James Rogers, M.D., formerly physician to the British Legation and Abouchoff Hospital at St. Petersburg, died at Saltash, 11 July 1890, aged eighty years."<sup>20</sup>

Dr. William Rogers died on 7 April 1904, aged eighty-seven, and was buried with his brother.<sup>21</sup> His widow, Emily, died on 24 October 1913, aged seventy-seven, and was buried with her daughter Emily, also in St. Stephen's Churchyard.<sup>22</sup>

In the will of William Rogers, drawn up on 13 September 1899, we learn that Dora (Boathyde, Northam, Devon 1862 – Hurst Farm, Milford, Surrey 7 January 1916) had married Tudor Phillips Moreton (Labuan, Borneo 5 January 1865 – The Windmill, Sellindge, Ashford, Kent 10 April 1944), clerk in Holy Orders.<sup>23</sup> The marriage took place on 2 June 1891.<sup>24</sup> It seems likely that William J. Rogers, his son, who is not mentioned in the 1881 Census for Saltash, nor in either will, and for whom the lifeboat was named, predeceased his father and uncle.

NOTES

1. I owe the deepest gratitude to Margaret P. McGrew (Roderick E. McGrew with the collaboration of Margaret P. McGrew, Encyclopedia of Medical History (New York: McGraw–Hill, 1984) and Colin Squires (of the Saltash Heritage), without whose help much of Dr. James Rogers's biography could not have been written. Margaret McGrew, working with only his last name, established a firm identity for him from "The Provincial Medical Directory and General Medical Register," in The [Annual] Medical Directory and General Medical Register for 1874 (London: J. and A. Churchill, 1874), p. 584 (hereafter, Medical Directory). Colin Squires then provided national census returns, description of and inscriptions on Dr. James Rogers's monument, copies of wills, etc., accompanied by letters of perspicacious commentary.
2. Medical Directory, p. 584. The Obukhov Hospital, the oldest and largest in St. Petersburg, is located on the left bank of the Fontanka, near the Obukhov Bridge, from which it received its name. Catherine the Great entrusted the layout of the hospital to

- the Imperial Doctor Johann Heinrich Kelchen (1722–1800), who modeled it after the Vienna Hospital. Giacomo Quarenghi was its architect. The hospital was officially opened on 14 October 1784 (OS) (Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, vol. 2, pp. 221–222; T.A. Schrader, “Der Beitrag Deutscher Ärzte zur Entwicklung der Krankenhäuser in St. Petersburg in 19. Jahrhundert” [“The Contribution of German Doctors to the Development of Hospitals in St. Petersburg in the 19th Century”], in Medizin und Pharmazie im 18. und 19. Jahrhundert [Medicine and Pharmacology in the 18th and 19th Centuries], ed. Ingrid Käster and Regine Pfrepper (Aachen, Germany: Shaker, 2000), pp. 129, 135).
3. Entry dated Dec. 17 in John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, St. P., Dec. 15, 1843, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 26; Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Lefevre, Sir George William.”
  4. L.A. Eastwick to A.M. Eastwick [sealed but not addressed or postmarked], Alexandroffsky March 14/26 1849 Monday, Eastwick Letters.
  5. Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti (1848), issue number not recorded by me.
  6. Medical Directory, p. 584.
  7. Information for the household of William Rogers, 1871 Census for Saltash; Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 27 August 1991.
  8. Medical Directory, p. 584.
  9. Margaret and Roderick McGrew, London, to E. Harden, 1 February 1989.
  10. Colin Squires to E. Harden, Saltash, Cornwall, 17 March 1989; information for the households of James Rogers and William Rogers, 1881 Census for Saltash.
  11. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 17 March 1989.
  12. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 12 November 1991; will of James Rogers, dated 7 March 1890 with codicil of 9 April 1890 (PRO).
  13. IGI for Plymouth; Register of Marriage Banns published in the Parish Church of S.S. Nicholas and Faith, Saltash, 1881–1907, p. 13, Ref. DDP.203/1/15, Cornwall Record Office, Truro.

14. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 8 September 1991; will of James Rogers dated 7 March 1890 with codicil dated 9 April 1890.
15. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 12 November 1991, with references to Cyril Noall and Grahame Farr, Wreck and Rescue Round the Cornish Coast, vol. 1, The Story of the North Coast Lifeboats (Truro, UK: D. Bradford Barton, 1964), and Grahame Farr, Wreck and Rescue on the Coast of Devon: The Story of the South Devon Lifeboats (Truro, UK: D. Bradford Barton, 1968); The Royal Cornwall Gazette, December 1, 1892, p. 7.
16. By this time, as indicated in the will of James Rogers, Florence (Rogers) Longridge and Cecil Clement Longridge were residing in Conway, North Wales. Dora Rogers and Emily Chalmers Rogers were unmarried.
 The sea piece by Aivazovskii and the watercolor portrait of James Rogers were bequeathed to Emily Chalmers Rogers, then residing with him. Emily Chalmers Rogers died intestate in 1893 (6 November, aged thirty-three) and her father administered her estate. The oil portrait of James Rogers was bequeathed to Florence (Rogers) Longridge. The Aivazovskii piece would be of interest, as Anna Whistler saw an exhibit of several of his works in 1847 at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts; the watercolor portrait if it were by Thomas Wright (1792–1849; see Image 208), who executed the 1845 watercolor of Anna Whistler; and the oil portrait simply because we would then have James Rogers’s likeness.
17. The artist “after whom” Muller, who has not been identified, executed a painting was Rosa Bonheur (born Marie Rosalie Bonheur, 1822–1899). It has not been possible to identify Linder, Hermanstadter, or Wager.
18. Will of Dr. James Rogers, dated 7 March 1890, with a codicil dated 9 April 1890. He was a meticulous man. Which pictures were bequeathed to each niece is explained in the will, along with a statement about which rooms of his house the pictures were to be found in.

My brief article requesting information, entitled by the editor “Whistler, His Mother and the Doctor,” was kindly published in The West Briton and Royal Cornwall Gazette on 15 August 1991, but received no responses. An attempt to publish a notice about the Longridge family and the oil portrait of Dr. James Rogers in the Welsh edition of The Liverpool Daily Post and Echo in 1993 was acknowledged as received with no follow-up.

19. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1890.
20. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 17 March 1989, with description of grave monument of James Rogers and William Rogers; Western Daily Mercury (Plymouth), July 12, 1890; Burials Register, St. Stephens by Saltash, 1857–1893, p. 274, Ref. DDP.214/1/35, Cornwall Record Office, Truro.
21. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 17 March 1989, with inscriptions on the grave monument of James and William Rogers; Western Morning News (Plymouth), April 8, 1904.
22. Colin Squires, Saltash, Cornwall, to E. Harden, 17 March 1989.
23. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1944.
24. Marriage Register of the Church of S.S. Nicholas and Faith, Saltash, 1881–1913, p. 35, Ref. DDP.203/1/6, Cornwall Record Office, Truro; Royal Cornwall Gazette, June 4, 1891.

ROPES, GELLIBRAND, PRINCE, HALL

William Ropes (19 November 1784 – 10 March 1869),<sup>1</sup> founder of William Ropes and Company, was married on 15 August 1811 to Martha Reed (12 August 1787 – 27 April 1830). Their surviving children, five of whom appear in Anna Whistler's St. Petersburg diaries, were Mary Tyler (13 October 1812 – 16 April 1894; see Images 266– 267), William Hooper (10 March 1814 – 16 November 1891), Joseph Samuel (6 February 1818 – 14 March 1903), Sarah Louisa (19 July 1819 – 5 October 1910), Elizabeth Hannah (14 May 1825 – 25 November 1921; see Image 267), and Martha Reed (13 June 1826 – 21 August 1888).<sup>2</sup> The first letter William Ropes opened on arriving in St. Petersburg on 16 June 1830 for the purpose of entering into business with Russia informed him of his wife's death.<sup>3</sup> He remained in Russia, while his children were placed in the homes of family and friends.<sup>4</sup> On a trip back to Boston, he remarried, taking as his second wife, on 1 April 1832, Mary Anne Codman (12 July 1802 – 1 September 1873).<sup>5</sup> On 20 April 1832, they sailed from New York for St. Petersburg, taking with them William Ropes's four oldest children: Mary Tyler, William Hooper, Joseph Samuel, and Sarah Louisa.<sup>6</sup> In August 1837, William Ropes departed St. Petersburg permanently with his wife and his daughters, Sarah Louisa and Martha Reed, leaving his House in the hands of William Hooper Ropes and a friend, Archibald Mirrielees (7 September 1797 – 11 February 1877; see Image 268).<sup>7</sup> It is William Ropes's older children from his first marriage, primarily Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and William Hooper Ropes, and the wife and children of William Hooper Ropes, whom the Whistlers were close to in St. Petersburg. They were well acquainted while there with Joseph Samuel, Elizabeth Hannah, and Martha Reed Ropes. All of these Ropes family members appear in the diaries, but no mention is made there of Sarah Louisa.

* * *

Early in his stay in St. Petersburg, William Ropes spoke of William Clarke Gellibrand (31 March 1791 – 20 April 1884; see Image 265), "Egerton Hubbard's partner."<sup>8</sup> Mr. Gellibrand, son of Reverend William (28 May 1763 – 27 September 1840) and Sophia (Hinde) Gellibrand (12

January 1759 – 20 November 1793),<sup>9</sup> was “a native of Hampshire, England.” He “had a good education at a high school” and “learned the elements of Latin and Greek, with which languages he later became familiar.” “At a proper age he went to reside as a clerk to Mr. Morgan, one of the principal Merchants in Archangel.” In 1813, he went to St. Petersburg to work for the House of Morgan there, acting as manager under Mr. Morgan and handling the business for him. In 1822, he started a business in partnership with a Mr. Holliday. Mr. Holliday handled the business in St. Petersburg, while Mr. Gellibrand handled the Moscow end. In 1828, however, Mr. Gellibrand was led to suspect that there were irregularities in the St. Petersburg end of the business and eventually discovered that his partner had been defrauding their firm. Mr. Gellibrand’s name was cleared in the matter by Mr. Holliday. Of the offers of employment now made to him, Mr. Gellibrand accepted that of Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Morgan’s brother-in-law, to join their House. He spoke French, German, and Russian. He was “the most active of [their] little church.”<sup>10</sup> On 27 December 1825, Mr. Gellibrand married in England Elizabeth Parkinson (20 June 1794 – 5 February 1833) and brought her out to Russia. On William Ropes’s return to St. Petersburg with his second wife and four of his children in 1832, his family too became part of this circle that belonged to the dissenting chapel, gave room and board to ministers traveling to and through St. Petersburg, distributed tracts, participated in the work of the Dorcas Society and was collecting money to build its own building, the eventual British and American Congregational Church (see Image 125).<sup>11</sup> On 24 January / 5 February 1833, Mrs. Gellibrand died. On 27 January / 8 February, she was buried from the Sarepta Chapel,<sup>12</sup> the meeting house of the German Moravian Brethren, which the dissenters used until they had their own church.<sup>13</sup> In February of 1834, William Clarke Gellibrand and Mary Tyler Ropes became engaged, despite the fact that he was almost twice her age. They were married on 1/13 May 1834<sup>14</sup> in the English Church (see Images 110–111), Rev. Edward Law (see Image 253) officiating.<sup>15</sup> The Gellibrands wanted Elizabeth Hannah Ropes to come out to St. Petersburg from Boston to live with them as their own child.<sup>16</sup> She arrived in October 1834, along with her sister, Martha Reed Ropes, who came to live with their father and step-mother.<sup>17</sup> It was for the purpose of being “useful to Elizabeth” that Ellen Harriet Hall (23 April 1822 – 11 December 1903),<sup>18</sup> the niece of Mr. Gellibrand’s first wife, was invited from Leeds to St. Petersburg in 1837.<sup>19</sup> With no family and few friends in England and after having lived more than thirty-five years in Russia, Mr. Gellibrand contemplated with regret in 1849 having to leave a country where he felt at home, but the climate of Russia did not agree with his wife.<sup>20</sup> They did not, however, leave Russia until at least 1854,<sup>21</sup> when they went to England, where they were joined by Sarah Louisa Ropes. Mr. Gellibrand “rented Brammerton Hall in Norfolk from his old friend, Captain Haggard ... the father of Rider Haggard, the novelist.”<sup>22</sup> They spent only a year at Brammerton Hall, because the climate of Norfolk was also too severe, and then moved to Albyns in Stapleford Abbots, Essex.<sup>23</sup> It is here that Mr. Gellibrand died.<sup>24</sup> Judging from the number of members of the clergy present at his funeral, he had been very generous to various churches.<sup>25</sup>

He left a personal estate of almost £72,000. Mrs. Gellibrand was his sole executrix and heir.<sup>26</sup> She gave up Albyns, bought the Manor House in Chigwell, Essex, and lived there, with Sarah Louisa Ropes, until her death on 16 April 1894.<sup>27</sup> The gross value of her personal estate was almost £59,000, and her will was twenty-eight pages long.<sup>28</sup> She spread her money about, giving most of it to relatives, some to employees, some to friends, including former ministers of the dissenting church in St. Petersburg, Rev. John Croumbie Brown and Rev. Thomas Scales Ellerby, and some to the British and Foreign Bible Society and to its Benevolent Fund.

Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) maintained close ties with the Gellibrands, particularly after she settled in England. She made an annual visit to them at Albyns, sometimes meeting other St. Petersburg friends there, and at Easter, Thanksgiving, and Christmas received a large hamper of food from them.<sup>29</sup> Mrs. Gellibrand, in turn, visited Anna Whistler in London.<sup>30</sup>

* * *

Very little is known about Elizabeth Hannah’s life. She is listed in the Gellibrand household in the 1871 Census but not in the censuses for 1861, 1881, or 1891. She is listed in the 1881 Census as a boarder in Eastbourne, Sussex, in the house of Heber D. Ellis, a physician; her condition is registered as “lunatic.”<sup>31</sup> Financial provision was made in Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand’s will for her care. The last surviving child of William and Martha (Reed) Ropes, she died on 25 November 1921 at The Priory, a hospital or nursing home in London.<sup>32</sup>

* * *

Somewhat more is known of Sarah Louisa Ropes. She was born in Dorchester, Massachusetts,<sup>33</sup> and came to St. Petersburg with the family in 1832. In February 1836, she was being attended by “Dr. Arendt, an eminent German physician ... once a week” in consultation with the family physician,<sup>34</sup> and in August of the same year was in England because of lung trouble.<sup>35</sup> She left Russia with her father and step-family and became “quite an English girl”<sup>36</sup> but felt “that her home [was] with her brothers and sisters” and in September 1838 was back in Russia with the Gellibrands.<sup>37</sup> She most likely divided her time between them and her father and step-family. When the Gellibrands moved to England, she joined them and is listed in their household in the 1861, 1871, 1881 censuses and with the widowed Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand in the 1891 Census. She too received a large inheritance from Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand. Sarah Louisa Ropes died on 5 October 1910 in London, leaving effects of about £5,000.<sup>38</sup> She made charitable bequests and left a small sum to her sister, Elizabeth Hannah, but the bulk of her estate went to her nieces and nephews, the children of William Hooper Ropes and of Martha Reed (Ropes) Trask.

* * *

Martha Reed Ropes was not yet six years old when her father, step-mother, brothers, and sisters left for St. Petersburg in 1832. She came to Russia when Elizabeth Hannah did and seems to have left with her father and step-family in 1837.<sup>39</sup> Anna Whistler’s diaries record Martha’s visit to William Hooper Ropes, Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, and Elizabeth Hannah Ropes in 1844, when she was eighteen. Between 1 March 1840 and 19 October 1845, Martha Reed appeared to be living alternately in East Brighton, Massachusetts, and near Islington, London. In that same timespan, she compiled four volumes of abstracts of sermons and one of poetry.<sup>40</sup> On 9 October 1849, she married Charles Hooper Trask (4 September 1824 – 11 December 1905).<sup>41</sup> Trask attended Amherst College in 1841–1843 and graduated from Yale in 1846. He later became a New York partner of William Ropes and Company.<sup>42</sup> They had seven children: Mary Gellibrand (4 April 1851 – 10 December 1937), Anna Hooper (10 March 1853 – 10 August 1937), Elizabeth Ropes (25 March 1857 – 15 October 1896), Ellen Louisa (29 January 1858 – 26 September 1859), Charles Hooper (13 May 1860 – 16 May 1891), William Ropes (9 January 1862 – 1933), and Henry Ropes (12 February 1864 – 5 August 1926).<sup>43</sup>

* * *

Joseph Samuel Ropes “studied in Boston in the school of Gideon F. Mayer, the founder of the Chauncey Place School, and attended a private school in Medford, Massachusetts.”<sup>44</sup> He was the scholar of the family.<sup>45</sup> He undertook the study of Russian, along with the rest of his family, when they arrived in St. Petersburg in 1832.<sup>46</sup> His mastery of the language enabled him to attend the Third St. Petersburg Gymnasium.<sup>47</sup> After graduating from this institution, he petitioned the rector of St. Petersburg University, Ivan Petrovich Shul’gin (see Image 316), for permission to enter the First Division of the Faculty of Philosophy as a paying student, and presented the required proof of residence, baptismal certificate, and high school diploma.<sup>48</sup> He began attending St. Petersburg University in August 1837 and at the end of his first year had “passed No. 1 in his class.”<sup>49</sup> He completed his studies on 11 June 1841 (OS) and received a certificate dated 25 October 1841 (OS).<sup>50</sup> While still a student at the university, he had taken on “a large share of Tract business.”<sup>51</sup> He filled the office of secretary of the Tract Committee,<sup>52</sup> superintended the publication of all translated tracts,<sup>53</sup> and himself translated tracts into Russian.<sup>54</sup> It is possible that in undertaking the course of study he chose at university, Joseph Samuel intended to prepare himself for the ministry and “become a missionary in Siberia.”<sup>55</sup> In 1840, however, he wrote that he had felt for a long time that he was “not fit for a missionary” and that he could do far more good by translating tracts.<sup>56</sup> After graduation from university, he joined William Ropes and Company, to the eventual distress of Archibald Mirrielees, who, together with William Hooper Ropes, ran the firm, and who did not find Joseph Samuel sufficiently modest or respectful.<sup>57</sup> Archibald Mirrielees left the firm; Joseph Samuel remained, and in 1846 was made “general partner for four years,” receiving in “lieu of profits ... 2000 silver roubles of the currency of the Empire of Russia.”<sup>58</sup> Joseph Samuel also translated and wrote secular pieces. He made a translation of an article on the 1837 fire in the Winter Palace.<sup>59</sup> Commencing 13 October 1842 and continuing through 27 April 1843, he wrote a series of eleven letter-essays entitled “Men and Things in Russia” and published them under the pseudonym “H.L.S.” in the United States.<sup>60</sup> In 1847, Joseph Samuel returned to Boston permanently<sup>61</sup> and worked for William Ropes and Company there. On 16 November 1848, he married Anna Rumsey Perit (5 December 1819 – 22 December 1879), daughter of John W. and Margaretta (Dunlap) Perit. They had no children.<sup>62</sup> He received an honorary MA from Yale College in 1853<sup>63</sup> and served several times on examining and visiting committees at Harvard University, for example, the Special Committee for Examination in the Greek Language.<sup>64</sup> He wrote financial articles and delivered an address on “The Value of Libraries.” “He was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, 1875 and 1876, and of the Senate, 1878 and 1879; ... a member, from 1870, of the board of managers of the Boston Seaman’s Friend Society, of which his father was first president; president of the Massachusetts Colonization Society for years; a member of the board of trustees of Phillips Academy and Andover Theological Seminary.”<sup>65</sup> In 1894, he moved to Norwich, Connecticut, to live with his wife’s nieces, the Misses Huntington.<sup>66</sup> Totally blind, his “days and hours [were] brightened by the pleasure of listening to a company of intelligent women who ... alternately enabled him to ‘read by deputy’.”<sup>67</sup> He died on 14 March 1903.<sup>68</sup> His funeral took place on 19 March in the Immanuel Congregational Church in Roxbury, Massachusetts.<sup>69</sup>

* * *

William Hooper Ropes, eldest son of William Ropes, was attending Mount Pleasant Institution in Amherst, Massachusetts, in 1829.<sup>70</sup> On 1 January 1830, when William Ropes set out on the Courier for Havana and

St. Petersburg, he took William Hooper with him. Once in Russia, William Ropes decided to send his son home again on the return voyage of the Courier, intending him to start as a clerk in some relative's office.<sup>71</sup> But, on taking a second wife in Boston in 1832 and setting off for St. Petersburg again, William Ropes took his four eldest children with him. In March 1833, a printed circular formally announced the "establishment in St. Petersburg [of] the firm of William Ropes and Company."<sup>72</sup> William Ropes became a merchant of the first guild, but as "his being written up as Foreign Guest [did] not give him the privilege of trading in the interior," it was decided that William Hooper should become a Finnish subject and a merchant of the second guild.<sup>73</sup> As William Ropes began making plans for his eventual return to the United States, with an interval in London in order to be closer to Russia in case the firm should encounter difficulties, he engaged William Hooper as a partner.<sup>74</sup> In 1837, he hired Archibald Mirrielees, a close friend of his and of William Clarke Gellibrand, "to take charge of the internal department ... but not to be a partner,"<sup>75</sup> while William Hooper, who now spoke fluent Russian and was "a capital hand to bargain with the Russians, with whom he [was] a great favorite,"<sup>76</sup> was to handle "the outdoor business," which was "his forte."<sup>77</sup> William Hooper and Archibald Mirrielees got on very well, but in 1841 the very self-assured Joseph Samuel Ropes joined the firm and Archibald Mirrielees, unable to cope with him, left it in 1842.<sup>78</sup> William Hooper now managed William Ropes and Company with the help of his brother-in-law, William Clarke Gellibrand.<sup>79</sup>

The arrival in St. Petersburg of Ellen Harriet Hall in 1837 to live with the Gellibrands was a turning point in William Hooper's personal life. He became very interested in this companion of his younger sister,<sup>80</sup> and they became engaged in the summer of 1838, when she was sixteen.<sup>81</sup> Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand found her future sister-in-law "amiable, affectionate ... pious, [and] an excellent musician, with a beautiful voice and fine execution."<sup>82</sup> On 23 April 1840, her eighteenth birthday, William Hooper Ropes and Ellen Harriet Hall were married in the dissenting chapel in Leeds,<sup>83</sup> where her parents lived. They returned to St. Petersburg, where they lived for some fifteen years more. Seven of their nine children were born there: Ellen Gellibrand (15 March 1841 – Concord, MA 1924), Mary Emily (10 August 1842 – September Qrt. 1932), Louisa Harriet (18 November 1843 – 1 June 1903), William Hall (20 August 1845 – 27 April 1905; buried Providence, RI), Ailie Elizabeth (28 May 1848 – 16 July 1931), Charles Joseph Hardy (7 December 1851 – Bangor, ME 5 January 1915), and Ernest Edward (12 February 1854 – 1914).<sup>84</sup> In the autumn of 1844, after almost a year of being acquainted, William Hooper Ropes's family and the Whistlers rented apartments opposite one another on the third floor of Ritter's house, No. 237 on the English Embankment (see Images 101–104).<sup>85</sup> They remained neighbors until the death of Major Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) in April 1849. In 1850, William Hooper took up duties as U.S. consul for St. Petersburg, a post he held until spring 1854.<sup>86</sup> Sometime after the late spring of 1854, the William Hooper Ropes family moved to England. Sometime between 1855 and 1858, they moved into Lewisham House (their half was called Brockley House) in Lewisham. Their last two children were born in Lewisham: Anna Josephine (c. 1858 – 4 February 1931) and Arthur Reed (23 December 1859 – 11 September 1933).<sup>87</sup> Arthur Reed Ropes, a Cambridge University don from 1884 to 1890, achieved fame as Adrian Ross, described in the year of his death as a writer of "lyrics for some of the most famous musical comedies of the last 40 years."<sup>88</sup> He married Ethel Wood, youngest daughter of Charles John Wood; her grandparents had been friends of the Whistlers in St. Petersburg (see Wood in this appendix). The Post Office Directory for 1861 lists "William Hooper Ropes, Lewisham House, Lewisham S.E. and 3 Crown Court, Old Broad St. E.C." The latter address was probably that of the London office of William Ropes and Company. By 1864, the family had gone from the Lewisham address.<sup>89</sup> They were said to be living in 1868 in Upper Clapton.<sup>90</sup> The 1871 Census confirms that they were living in the Upper Clapton area of Hackney with five of their children present, at West Spring Field House.<sup>91</sup> On 6 May 1876, Ailie Elizabeth Ropes married at Avranches, Normandy, Rev. Charles Edward Baines Reed (c. 1846 – Pontresina, Switzerland 29 July 1884), secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society.<sup>92</sup> In July 1876, Ellen Harriet (Hall) and William Hooper Ropes were reported to have "brok[en] up housekeeping at Clapton last winter & [to be] trying the climate of France" for the health of the invalided Mrs. Ropes.<sup>93</sup> In 1888, William Hooper's address, again probably his office, was 5 Jeffreys Square, St. Mary Axe in London.<sup>94</sup> On 15 July 1890, in Christiana, Copenhagen, Denmark, Ellen Gellibrand Ropes married Charles Hooper Trask (1824–1905).<sup>95</sup> William Hooper Ropes died suddenly on 16 November 1891, in Tenby, Pembroke, southwest Wales, at the home, it would seem, of his daughter, Louisa Harriet (Ropes) Cattley,<sup>96</sup> who had married on 18 March 1869 in Upper Clapton, London, Edward Abbs Cattley. Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes died at the Tenby address on 11 December 1903.<sup>97</sup> It has not been possible to locate the will of William Hooper Ropes. Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes left effects of about £13,000.<sup>98</sup>

* * *

Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes was the daughter of John Drinkrow Hall (Hull, Yorkshire 1 February 1796 – Falsgrave, Scarborough, Lincolnshire 30 July 1865) and Harriet (Parkinson) Hall (Brigg, Lincolnshire 10 February 1796 – Falsgrave, Scarborough, Yorkshire 18 October 1870) of Leeds.<sup>99</sup> They were married on 26 June 1821.<sup>100</sup> Harriet (Parkinson) Hall's sister, Elizabeth, was the first wife of William Clarke Gellibrand. John D. Hall worked for the Aire and Calder Navigation Company in Leeds; the family resided at Dock Street.<sup>101</sup> He is listed in the 1841 Census as "clerk," and in the 1851 Census as "agent," to the Aire and Calder Navigation Company.<sup>102</sup> On his retirement, he and his wife moved to Falsgrave, Scarborough, where he is listed in the 1861 Census as "living from independent interest money."<sup>103</sup> They both died in Falsgrave.<sup>104</sup> John D. Hall's occupation appears on his wife's death certificate as "cashier."<sup>105</sup> Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, who visited the Halls in 1841, said of the family: "Mrs. Hall, a very kind and pleasing woman, who calls me sister, and whom I dearly love. Her husband is a most kind and intelligent man, and the girls are amiable and agreeable."<sup>106</sup>

The Halls had two other daughters besides Ellen, whose lives were also to be bound up with St. Petersburg. Their youngest daughter, Emily Hall (c. 1827 – 31 March / 12 April 1846), listed in the 1841 Census as fourteen years old, died in St. Petersburg while visiting the William Hooper Ropes family, and was buried there. Several pages of Anna Whistler's diaries are devoted to her death. Their other daughter, Marian Amelia Hall (25 December 1823 – 2/14 April 1886)<sup>107</sup> married in Leeds on 6 June 1850<sup>108</sup> George Henry Prince, first cousin of William Hooper Ropes.

* * *

George Henry Prince (16 October 1821 – 25 April 1900)<sup>109</sup> was the son of William Ropes's sister, Ruth Hardy (Ropes) Prince (24 June 1791 – 28 July 1837), and of Henry Prince (4 September 1789 – 5 March 1854) of Salem, Massachusetts. He was one of five surviving children, the other four being Benjamin Ropes (14 November 1822 – December 1902; see Image 270), James Cheever (8 January 1825 – 10 March 1853), Sarah (16 December 1826 – 4 January 1901), Samuel Ropes (25 April 1833 – 6 September 1899).<sup>110</sup> Shortly after the death of his mother, when he was almost sixteen, it was proposed by William Ropes that he come out to Russia and join the company, probably as a “shipping clerk with specific internal duties.”<sup>111</sup> It was stressed that he had to be “a good boy,” “determined to qualify himself fully for business by learning the languages” “as without them one might almost as well be dumb – as regards active business,” and that he must “be wholly under the control and subject to the heads of the House.”<sup>112</sup> He arrived in St. Petersburg in early September of 1838<sup>113</sup> and proved to be a good risk. By October, he was “getting on pretty well in German” and would that winter “have a capital opportunity of becoming acquainted with the Russian.”<sup>114</sup> “His American feelings [were] strong, and [did] not seem likely to evaporate very soon.”<sup>115</sup> Although the others in the family seemed to be “getting less American,” “George was the only staunch one among [them], unchanging and unchanged.”<sup>116</sup> When Archibald Mirrielees left the firm and his duties shifted to William Hooper, George Henry took over William Hooper's duties in the interior. By November 1847, George Prince and Mr. Fairbanks, the London agent for Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, had announced that they were “going into the Ice business – exporting it to London.”<sup>117</sup> After Major Whistler's death, when Anna Whistler, James (see Images 24–29), and Willie (see Images 27, 30) were living in Pomfret, Connecticut, George Henry, on a visit to Boston, made a special trip to spend Christmas of 1849 and New Year's Eve of 1850 with her.<sup>118</sup>

On 6 June 1850, George Henry Prince married in Leeds Marian Amelia Hall, sister of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes. Their five known surviving children were Emily Hall (Russia 22 January 1851 – Bridgwater, Somerset 19 September 1933), Annie Ropes (St. Petersburg 1854 – Bridgwater, Somerset 15 August 1942), Sarah Marion (Scarborough, Yorkshire 10 November 1855 – Bridgwater, Somerset 13 September 1946), Ruth Harriet (b. St. Petersburg 20 Nov. 1856), John Henry (St. Petersburg 8 December 1862 – 21 May 1921).<sup>119</sup> They were possibly also the parents of George Osgood (St. Petersburg 1858 – Kiev 1894 or 1895). On 14 September 1876 (OS), Annie Ropes Prince married in St. Petersburg Sydney Charles Scott (c. 1850 – 18 September 1936), bachelor, solicitor, of London.<sup>120</sup> On 12 July 1879 (OS), Sarah Marian Prince (called Minnie) married in St. Petersburg Thomas Foster Barham (c. 1851 – Bridgwater, Somerset 5 October 1927), bachelor, solicitor, of London.<sup>121</sup> George Henry Prince died on 25 April 1900 in Wyberg (Vyborg in Russian), Finland, in the house of his son-in-law, Edward Engestrom,<sup>122</sup> husband of Ruth Harriet (Prince) Engestrom. Both he and Marian (Hall) Prince were buried in the Smolensk Cemetery.<sup>123</sup> George Henry Prince kept a journal while living in St. Petersburg. Several fragments about the Whistlers were published by a descendant in 1974, but unfortunately the present location of the journal is unknown to me.<sup>124</sup>

Mention is made as well in Anna Whistler's diaries of George Henry Prince's brother, Benjamin Ropes Prince (see Image 270), second mate on the Zephyr (Capt. Leach),<sup>125</sup> who arrived in St. Petersburg in May 1846 with George Henry Prince. He seems to have gone to work for Harrison, Winans and Eastwick.<sup>126</sup> On 1 December 1850, he married in St. Petersburg Mary Alexandrine Van der Vliet (1830 – 3 May 1854), called "Sashy." Both were recorded as residing in St. Petersburg.<sup>127</sup> They left Russia at an unknown date and settled in Hamilton, Massachusetts, where Mary Alexandrine (Van der Vliet) Prince died on 3 May 1854. In January 1856, Benjamin Ropes Prince was living and farming with his brother, Samuel.<sup>128</sup>

* * *

Among other cousins from the United States who visited William Hooper Ropes and are recorded in Anna Whistler's diaries is Franklin Henry Hooper (bap. 7 July 1822 – Boston 10 October 1847),<sup>129</sup> who traveled to St. Petersburg in the summer of 1844. He had traveled to St. Petersburg on at least one previous occasion.<sup>130</sup> He was the orphaned son of William (bap. 1 December 1795 – 9 March 1828) and Rebecca (Hooper) Hooper (d. 27 November 1830). William Hooper, a sea captain, died at sea. All three children of this union (their parents were married on 17 November 1818) died young.<sup>131</sup>

NOTES

1. For obituaries of William Ropes, see newspaper clippings in a book donated by Mrs. John J. Trask to the PEM (PEM: Ms E R 785.3 18692).
2. List of marriages and issue, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Mary T. Gellibrand to Mrs. Hardy Ropes, St. P., July 7/19, [18]34; Mary T. and William Gellibrand, St. P., July 4/16 and July 19, 1834; Essex Times, April 30, 1884, and April 18, 1894. Death Index, vol. 393, p. 289, Massachusetts Archives at Columbia Point, Boston. See also a certified copy of an Entry of Death for William H. Ropes, Registration District of Pembroke, Sub-District of Tenby, County of Pembroke, GRO.
3. William Ropes to his parents, St. P., 29 June 1830, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
4. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. 19 July 1830, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
5. There were children from the second marriage, but they do not figure in Anna Whistler's diaries.
6. William and Mary Anne (Codman) Ropes to his parents, St. P. 2 May 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers; list of marriages and issue.
7. He is incorrectly identified as Alexander Mirrielees in Harriet Ropes Cabot, "The Early Years of William Ropes and Company in St. Petersburg," The American Neptune 23, no. 2 (1963): p. 138.
8. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. 12 April 1831, and Cronstadt 22 June 1831, HUBL: Ropes Papers.

9. Gellibrand family tree. I wish to thank Jane D’Arcy of Curtin, ACT, Australia, a descendent of William Clarke Gellibrand’s brother, Joseph Tice Gellibrand, for providing a photocopy of her family tree; a copy is also available in the Gellibrand Family Papers, LRA/MS 1110, LRA (hereafter, LRA: Gellibrand Papers). See also Joanna Livingston, “Merchants 1815–1884,” in Gellibrands (self-pub., Belvedere, 2005), p. 53, which deals primarily with William Clarke Gellibrand and Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, in LRA:Gellibrand Papers.
10. All the foregoing information is taken from the letter of Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. Feb. 10/22, 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
11. Information about the British and American Congregational Church (often called simply the British and American Chapel) is difficult to find and contradictory. Two excellent contemporary sources on the houses of worship of St. Petersburg substantially dissipate this confusion, when compared to one another.

Antonov and Kobak, in Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, explain that a congregation was formed on 6 December 1833 including the Congregationalists, which seven years later separated from the Anglicans. The congregation bought a building, to which, in 1839–1840, the architect Karl-Wilhelm Winkler (1813–1861) added from the courtyard side a double-lighted hall holding 250 persons, although there were far fewer Congregationalists in St. Petersburg at that time. In 1890, for the fiftieth anniversary of the Chapel, the front building was expanded into a two-story structure according to the plans of civil engineer F.V. [sic: F.N.] Sobolevskii (1831–1892) and redecorated (Antonov and Kobak, Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga, pp. 269, 383, 388).

Shul’ts’s explanation is as follows. The building of the Methodist British–American Church and the prayer hall of Christ the Savior of the Hutterites and the prayer hall of the Sarepta Brotherhood was built on New-Isaac Street in 1820 [sic: 1840] according to the plan of the civil engineer F.N. Sobolevskii (1831–1892). When it was being built, the foundation and walls of the house previously standing on that spot in the 1780s and 1790s and the entire adjacent plot, all belonging to Count A.A. Bezborodko, were included (Shul’ts, Kbramy Sankt-Peterburga, p. 261).

A valuable source about the Church are the letters from St. Petersburg of the Ropes family members to their relatives in Massachusetts in the 1830s cited in these Notes. They show that the congregation was in existence in 1832, when William Ropes arrived in Russia for the second time; that they were collecting money to build their own church; and that in the meantime they met in the meeting house of the German Moravian Brethren (Mary T. Ropes to Uncle Hardy Ropes, St. P. 19 June 1832, St. P. June 30/July 12, 1833, and St. P. 3 July N.S., and St. P. Cronstadt June 1/14 [sic], 1833, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. 4 Dec. N.S. 1832).

When Anna Whistler came to Russia, the British and American Congregational Church was well-established in its building on New-Isaac Street, and she sometimes attended services there.

12. Transcripts of Non-Conformist Registers, RG 4/405 St. Petersburg, PRO.
13. Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, p. 82.
14. Louisa Ropes to her grandparents, St. P. 21 Feb. 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers; typed extracts; Wm. Ropes to his parents, St. P. 10/22 Feb. 1834.
15. Wm. Ropes to his parents, St. P. 2 May N.S. 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers. Wm. C. Gellibrand and Mary Tyler Ropes were members of the dissenting church, but “from 1754 to 1837, marriages had to be performed by a beneficed Anglican clergyman in order to be legal, except in the case of Quakers and Jews. . . . Other nonconformists, in order to insure the legitimacy of their children, married in the Anglican church, and the event was recorded in the parish register; nonconformist registers between 1754 and 1837 record details of births/baptisms and deaths/burials only” (Amanda Bevan and Andrea Duncan, Tracing your Ancestors in the Public Record Office, 4th ed. [London: HMSO, 1990], p. 28).
16. Wm. and Mary Anne (Codman) Ropes to his parents, St. P. 2 May N.S. 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers. For a description of their apartment, in which the Whistlers were guests, see the letter of Mary T. Gellibrand to Mrs. Hardy Ropes, St. P. July 7/19, [18]34.
17. Wm. Ropes to his parents, St. P. 10/22 Feb. 1834, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta, Sept. 1/13, 1838. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 137.
18. Registers of the Fish Street Congregational Church, Hull, Central Library, Hull, Yorkshire. See also a certified copy of an Entry of Death for Ellen Harriet Ropes. Registration District: Pembroke, Sub-district: Tenby, in the County of Pembroke, GRO.

19. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, St. P. May 11/23, 1837, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
20. Wm. C. Gellibrand to Joseph G. Jennings, St. P. 31 Jan. 1849, LRA: Gellibrand Papers. J.G. Jennings of Launceston, Van Dieman's Land, was the eldest son of Wm. C. Gellibrand's Aunt Hannah, who married William Jennings. Mr. Gellibrand had actually been just in St. Petersburg for thirty-five years, although he says "in Russia."
21. A Quaker delegation hoping to avert war between Russia and England came to petition Nicholas I in 1854 and enjoyed the hospitality of the Gellibrands. See Griselda Fox Mason, Sleigh Ride to Russia (York, UK: William Sessions, 1985), pp. 43, 46, 47, 50–53, 56–57, 76, 80, 81, 85.
22. From an unpublished history of the Gellibrand family by her grandmother, Lady Elizabeth Gellibrand, a copy of which is in the possession of Jane D'Arcy (hereafter, LRA: Lady Gellibrand).
23. LRA: Lady Gellibrand. For a description of Albyns, see Livingston, Gellibrands, pp. 60–61.
24. Obituary in Essex Times, April 30, 1884.
25. Obituary in Essex Times, April 30, 1884.
26. Will of Wm. Clarke Gellibrand, 28 March 1877; probated, 28 June 1884, PRO.
27. LRA: Lady Gellibrand; obituary in Essex Times, April 18, 1894.
28. Will of Mary Tyler Gellibrand, 8 Sept. 1888; codicil, 9 Sept. 1891; second codicil, 24 Jan. 1894; probated, 4 June 1894, PRO.
29. Anna Whistler to Mary Emma Eastwick, Albyns, Essex. Sept. 8th 1874, letters of Anna Mathilda McNeill mother of James McNeill Whistler 1830–1876, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 65–68; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble 2 Lindsay Houses Chelsea London Sept. 7–10 1870, GUL: Whistler Collection W539; Anna Whistler to Catherine (McNeill) Palmer, London, 3–4 November 1871, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 67–68 and 75–76; Anna Whistler to Mr. Gamble, Feldheim, Wimbledon Common Wednesday Nov<sup>r</sup> 29th 1871, GUL: Whistler Collection, W541; Anna Whistler to my beloved Friend, 2 Lindsay Houses Chelsea London Tuesday evening Nov. 5th 1872, W546; Anna Whistler to [Mr. Gamble?] 2 Lindsay Houses Chelsea Wednesday Sept. 30th [18]74, W457.
30. Anna Whistler to James and William Whistler, Coblenz, 22 January 1866, GUL: Whistler Collection, W521.

31. Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand paid two visits to Anna Whistler while visiting Elizabeth in Eastbourne in 1876 and brought Elizabeth with her on one of these visits (Anna Whistler to Mary Emma Eastwick Hastings, 19, 26 & 28 July 1876, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 79–82).
32. Certified copy of an Entry of Death for Elizabeth Hannah Ropes, Registration District of Wordsworth, Sub-district of Putney, County of London, GRO.
33. 1881 Census for Stapleford Abbots, Essex, for the Gellibrand household.
34. Mary T. Gellibrand to Mrs. Hardy Ropes, St. P. Feb. 6/18, 1836, HUBL: Ropes Papers. Dr. Nikolai Fyodorovich Arendt (Kazan' 1785 – St. Petersburg 14 October 1859), who was instrumental in establishing the Children's Hospital in St. Petersburg, was Imperial physician to Emperor Nicholas I from 1828 to 1839 (Karev, Nemtsy Rossii, pp. 71–72). The family physician was Dr. James Ronaldson Handyside.
35. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, St. P. Aug. 12 N.S. [18]36, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
36. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta, Sept. 1/13, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
37. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta, Sept. 1/13, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
38. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1910.
39. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, St. P., May 4/16, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
40. Martha Reed Ropes, Religious Meditations (1840), PEM. The two residences are noted down on the inside cover of vols. 1, 3, 4, and 5. She seems to be paraphrasing sermons she had attended. I have not ascertained whether the ministers referred to were all from Boston churches. It is difficult to say what is original in the volume of poetry. The authors of some poems are, however, clearly indicated.
41. Amherst College Biographical Record of the Graduates and Non-Graduates: Centennial Edition, 1821–1921 (Amherst, MA: Trustees of Amherst College, 1939). Charles Hooper Trask was the son of Captain Richard Trask (Salem, MA 13 July 1788 – Manchester, MA 5 August 1846), who had been engaged in the Russia trade (see Captain Trask's obituary by Wm. H. Tappan in Rev. D.F. Lawson, History of the Town of Manchester Essex County, Massachusetts,

- 1645–1895 (Manchester, MA: published by the Town, [1895]), pp. 1294–1295).
42. Marriage Index, vol. 38, p. 266, Massachusetts Archives at Columbia Point, Boston; Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 139.
  43. E.S.W., ed., “Materials for a History of the Ropes Family,” Historical Collections of the Essex Institute 8, no. 1 (1868), p. 55; genealogy of the Trask family supplied by Margaret Coleman of The Russian American Cultural Center at Russia Wharf, Boston, Massachusetts (now closed). According to Coleman’s note in the margin of Cabot’s article in the American Neptune, Cabot was wrong in stating that Charles Hooper Trask captained some of the ships of William Ropes and Company. It was his father, Captain Richard Trask, who did (Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 139).
  44. Andover Theological Seminary, Necrology, 1902–1903 (Boston: Everett, 1903), p. 71.
  45. John Codman Ropes (St. Petersburg 28 April 1836 – Boston, MA 28 October 1899) was the scholar in William Ropes’s second family (Joseph May, John Codman Ropes, LL.D. A Memoir, by His Friend and Classmate Joseph May, reprinted from the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society (June 1900): pp. 3–28; Archives Biography Files (HUG 300); Harvard College class reports; Quinquennial Catalog of Harvard University, 1636–1936 (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1937); Tolman Index).
  46. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. 11 August 1832; Joseph S. Ropes to grandparents, St. P. May 13/25, 1833, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  47. According to a paper read by Professor Norman E. Saul of the University of Kansas at the 1990 Convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies (AAASS) in Washington, DC, Joseph Samuel Ropes was called upon to demonstrate his ability at languages before Nicholas I at the graduation ceremonies of the Third St. Petersburg Gymnasium (“American Merchants in Russia, 1815–1845,” p. 10). I wish to thank Professor Saul for providing me with a copy of his paper. For a discussion of the Third Gymnasium, see V.V. Smirnov, Peterburgskie shkoly i shkol’nye zdaniia Istoria shkol’nogo stroitel’stva v Sankt-Peterburge–Petrograde–Leningrade 1703–2003 gg. [Petersburg Schools and School Buildings: A History of Schoolbuilding in St. Petersburg–

- Petrograd–Leningrad, 1703–2003*] (St. Petersburg: Russko-Baltiiskii informatsionnyi tsentr, BLITS, 2003), 69–70.
48. TsGIA SPb: Fond 14, opis' 3, delo 6231. Delo Pravleniia imp. S.P. Universiteta o vydache Attestatov i Diplomov konchivshim kurs nauk v SP-skom Universitete. Iiun' 1841g.-dek. 1841g., l. 229 [File concerning the issuing of Certificates and Diplomas by the administration of the Imperial University of Saint Petersburg to those finishing the course of studies at St. Petersburg University. June 1841 – Dec. 1841, fol. 229]. See also Wm. Ropes Trask to Wm. Ladd Ropes, Boston, 9 May 1903, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  49. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta, Sept. 1/13, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers. Concerning his junior year, see Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P. Sept. 19/Oct. 1, 1840.
  50. For a copy of his certificate, see TsGIA SPb: Fond 14, op. 3, delo 6231, fols. 227v–228 (see Note 48 for document title). In a book about the school containing an alphabetical list of day students and paying boarding students for the period 1823–1872, Joseph Ropes is no. 2244 (N. Anichkov, comp., Istoricheskaia zapiska piatidesiatiletiaa tret'ei sanktpeterburgskoi gimnazii [A Historical Note for the Fiftyeth Anniversary of the Third St. Petersburg Gimnazium] [St. Petersburg: V. Arngol'd, 1873], p. 185).
  51. Joseph S. Ropes to his aunt, Louisa Green, St. P. Aug. 30/Sept. 11, 1839, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  52. Joseph S. Ropes to Louisa Green, St. P., Sept. 26/Oct. 8, 1840, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  53. Joseph S. Ropes to Louisa Green, St. P., Sept. 26/Oct. 8, 1840, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  54. Joseph S. Ropes to Louisa Green, St. P. Aug. 30/Sept. 11, 1839, HUBL: Ropes Papers. In this letter, he reported having translated into Russian Joseph Sutcliffe's Memoir of Emily Rowland (1836). He was thinking of translating at his leisure suitable portions of Practical Thoughts. By 1839, their Tract Committee had published seventy-six tracts. In the 1840 letter to Louisa Green, he reported having “94 tracts in regular series.”
  55. TsGIA SPb: Fond 14, op. 3, d. 6231 (see Note 48 for document title), fols. 227v, 228. He took the following subjects: Metaphysics; Moral Philosophy; Russian History; Political Economy; Statistics; Rights of Nations and Diplomacy; Russian Civil Law; Russian Criminal Law; Greek; Latin; German; English, in which he received the grade of Excellent (5); Anthropology

- and Logic; Russian Literature; and General History and Slavic Antiquities, in which he received the grade of good (4). He received the grade of Excellent (5) in deportment as well (TsGIA SPb: Fond. 14, op. 3, d. 6231 (see Note 48 for document title), fols. 1, 1v, 2, 227v, 228); Andover, Necrology, p. 71; NEHGR, supplement (April 1904): p. lxxxviii.
56. Joseph S. Ropes to Louisa Green, St. P., Sept. 26/Oct. 8, 1840, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  57. Archibald Mirrielees to William Ropes, St. P., 12/24 June 1842, MHS: Ropes Papers. Harriet Ropes Cabot (d. 12 January 2002) graciously permitted me to consult family letters at her home, when they were still in her possession. She later deposited them with the Massachusetts Historical Society.
  58. Letters 1845 [sic]: Agreement ... 6 August 1846, typed extracts, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 139.
  59. “Destruction of the Palace,” HUBL: Ropes Papers. Joseph Samuel had also written a very good description of St. Petersburg and Butter Week soon after his arrival in that city (Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P., May 13/25, 1833, HUBL: Ropes Papers).
  60. H.L.S., “Men and Things in Russia,” pts. 1–11, New-York Evangelist 1, no. 41 (October 13, 1842): pp. 325–326; 8, no. 43 (October 27, 1842): p. 170; 8, no. 45 (November 10, 1842): p. 178; 8, no. 51 (December 22, 1842): p. 202; 9, no. 1 (January 5, 1843): pp. 2–3; 9, no. 4 (January 26, 1843): p. 14; 9, no. 9 (March 2, 1843): p. 34; 9, 11 (March 16, 1843) p. 42; 9, no. 13 (March 30, 1843): p. 50; 9, no. 15 (April 13, 1843): p. 58; 9, no. 17 (April 27, 1843): p. 66. The titles of the letter-essays are “Peterhoff, Its Gardens and Fountains – The Imperial Family – Magnificent Festival of the Tsarina’s Silver Wedding-Day – A Russian Fete” (13 October 1842), “Sketch of the Imperial Family” (27 October 1842), “The Emperor Nicholas” (10 November 1842), “The Russian Nobility” (22 December 1842), “The Russian People” (5 January, 26 January, 2 March 1843), “Russian Character” (16 March 1843), “The Russian Winter” (30 March 1843), and “Bad Roads – The Russian Villages” (27 April 1843). One essay (13 April 1843) was untitled. He asked a cousin in the United States not to disclose his identity (Joseph S. Ropes to William Ladd Ropes, St. P., Sept. 17/29, 1842, MHS: Ropes Papers). Cabot also provided me with photocopies of a typewritten version of these eleven letter-essays.

61. RG84: Records of Foreign Service Posts of the Department of State, Diplomatic Posts, USSR, vol. 003, Despatches Sent, Cambrelling, Ingersoll, 1840–1848, Ralph I. Ingersoll to Nesselrode, St. Petersburg, 15/27 September 1847, fol. 34, NAUS.
62. W.C.G., “Joseph S. Ropes,” Norwich Evening Record, March 14, 1903.
63. Catalogue of the Officers and Graduates of Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut, 1701–1924 (New Haven, CT: The University, 1924), p. 587.
64. In 1867 and 1868, he served on the Special Committee for Examination in the Greek Language, in 1874 and 1878 on the Committee to Visit the Academic Departments, in 1875 and 1876 on the Committee to Visit the College.
65. Andover, Necrology, p. 72; NEHGR, supplement (April 1904), p. lxxxix.
66. Andover, Necrology, pp. 71–72; NEHGR, supplement (April 1904), pp. lxxxviii–ix. See the tribute to him in the PEM by the Boston Seaman’s Friend Society. The tribute appeared in the Boston Transcript, but the clipping is not dated.
67. NEHGR, supplement (April 1904), p. lxxxviii.
68. The Herald, March 17, 1903, p. 12; Boston Sunday Globe, March 15, 1903, p. 9.
69. In addition to the abovementioned obituaries, see the obituary by W.H.R. in response to the death notice in the Boston Evening Transcript, Monday, March 16, 1903, p. 16. It has not been possible to ascertain in which issue the obituary by W.H.R. appeared. W.H.R. may be William Hall Ropes (1845–1905), son of William Hooper and Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes.
70. William H. Ropes to his grandparents, Amherst, 8 August 1829, MHS: Ropes Papers.
71. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 133; William Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P., 19 July 1830, MHS: Ropes Papers. In the foregoing letter, he stressed William Hooper’s need to study hard, and his difficulty with spelling and other subjects.
72. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 136.

73. Wm. H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. Sept. 23/Oct. 5, 1833, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
74. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 137.
75. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. July 9/21, 1837, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Wm. Ropes to his parents, St. P. March 27/April 8, 1837, MHS: Ropes Papers; Archibald Mirrielees to Wm. Ropes, St. P. 12/24 June 1842; Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 138.
76. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London, 27 July 1836, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
77. Wm. Ropes to his parents, St. P. March 27/April 8, 1837, MHS: Ropes Papers; Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 137.
78. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 139; Wm. C. Gellibrand to Wm. Ropes, St. P. 21 Aug./2 Sept. 1842, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Archibald Mirrielees to Wm. Ropes, St. P., 12/24 June 1842, MHS: Ropes Papers.
79. Cabot, “William Ropes and Company,” p. 139.
80. Mary T. Gellibrand to Hardy Ropes, Okhta, near Petersburg, June 6/18, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers. For further family assessments of Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes, see also Mary T. Gellibrand to grandparents, St. P., Sept. 1/13, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Joseph Samuel Ropes to his grandparents, St. P., September 19/October 1, 1840; and in typed extracts: June 24/July 6, 1840.
81. William Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London, 30 July 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
82. Mary T. Gellibrand to Hardy Ropes, Okhta, near Petersburg, June 6/18, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
83. Wm. H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, New York, 9 March 1840, HUBL: Ropes Papers; William Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London, 30 April 1840.
84. E.S.W., “Materials for a History of the Ropes Family,” p. 61; IGI.
85. Mary T. Gellibrand to Wm. Ladd Ropes, Peterhoff road Sept. 7/19 [1844], MHS: Ropes Papers.
86. William H. Ropes to The Honorable Mr. L. Marcy, Secretary of State, St. P, RG59: M81, Despatches from US Consuls in St. Petersburg, 1803–1906, roll 5, vols. 7–9, 31 December 1847 – 30 December 1857, NAUS. See the letter of 4/16 December 1850, in which he states that he has “entered upon the duties of [his] office as Consul of the United States for this place,” and his letter of 4/16 May 1854 concerning the termination of his duties

- as consul. Both of the letters were to Mr. Marcy. William H. Ropes was succeeded by William Lewis Winans of Harrison and Winans.
87. List of marriages and issue, HUBL: Ropes Papers. See also 1861 Census for Lewisham; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1931 and 1933.
  88. “Obituary. Mr. Adrian Ross,” The Times (London), September 12, 1933; see also The Times (London), September 13, 14, 15, 1933; The Literary Who’s Who for the Year 1920 (London: George Routledge and Sons; New York: E.P. Dutton, 1920), p. 233.
  89. All of the foregoing information about residences is from John Coulter, Local History Centre of the Libraries Division of Lewisham Leisure, to E. Harden, 31 August 1991.
  90. E.S.W., “Materials for a History of the Ropes Family,” p. 55.
  91. 1871 Census for Civil Parish of Hackney, Municipal Ward of Stanford Hill, City of Hackney, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. Matthew, RG 10/312, fol. 6, p. 7.
  92. The Times (London), no. 28624, c. May 10, 1876; The Times (London), August 1, 1884; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1884.
  93. Anna Whistler to Mary Emma Eastwick, Hastings, Wednesday, July 19, 1876, Letters of Anna Mathilda McNeill, mother of James McNeill Whistler, 1830–1876, LC: P–W, box 34, fols. 81–84.
  94. Will of Mary Tyler Gellibrand, 8 Sept. 1888; codicil, 9 Sept. 1891; second codicil, 24 Jan. 1894; probated, 4 June 1894, PRO.
  95. The widowed Charles Hooper Trask was the husband of Ellen Gellibrand Ropes’s aunt, Martha Reed (Ropes) Trask. She had died in 1888. See her biography earlier in this essay.
  96. The Times (London), no. 33485, November 1891. As Louisa Harriet (Ropes) Cattley was in attendance, he may have died at her home (certified copy of an Entry of Death for William Hooper Ropes, GRO). See also Pall Mall Gazette, March 19, 1869.
  97. Certified copy of an Entry of Death for Ellen Harriet Ropes, GRO.
  98. Will of Ellen Harriet Ropes, PRO.
  99. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Leeds, 9 March 1841, HUBL: Ropes Papers; list of marriages and issue; IGI for Yorkshire; “Deaths” and obituary, Scarborough Gazette, August 3, 1865; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Harriet Hall,

- Registration District: Scarborough, Sub-District: Scarborough, County of York, GRO.
100. The Register of Marriages in the Parish of St. Hybald, Scawby in the County of Lincoln for the Years 1813–1837, p. 14, no. 42, microfilm no. 1609, SoG.
  101. Leeds directories for 1839 and 1853.
  102. Census entries for 1841 and 1851. See also Charles Hadfield, The Canals of Yorkshire and North East England, 2 vols. (Newton Abbot, UK: David and Charles, 1973), vol. 2, p. 362.
  103. 1861 Census entry for 5 Victoria Place, Falsgrave, Scarborough.
  104. 1861 Census entry for 5 Victoria Place, Falsgrave, Scarborough; “Births, Marriage and Deaths” as well as obituary, Scarborough Gazette, August 13, 1865; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Harriet Hall, GRO.
  105. Certified copy of an Entry of Death for Harriet Hall, GRO.
  106. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Leeds, March 9, 1841, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  107. List of marriages and issue, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Registers of the Fish Street Congregational Church, Hull, Central Library, Hull, Yorkshire; Returns of Births and Baptisms Deaths and Marriages from Brit. & Amer. Congl. Church St. Petersburg, with an Index 1840–1895, RG 33/144, PRO.
  108. Certified copy of an Entry of Marriage for George Henry Prince and Marian Amelia Hall, GRO. They were married in the Belgrave Chapel, Leeds, “according to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Independent Denomination.” The groom was twenty-eight years old; the bride was twenty-six.
  109. List of marriages and issue, HUBL: Ropes Papers; typed extracts: envelope containing a description of the death of George Henry Prince.
  110. I wish to thank Mr. S. Hardy Prince of Beverly, Massachusetts, for this information.
  111. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London, 24 Feb. 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
  112. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London, 3 April 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Wm. H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. July 4/16, 1838. George Henry Prince did not like Mr. Mirrielees any more than Joseph Samuel Ropes did.

113. Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta, Sept. 1/13, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers. George Henry Prince is described at length in this letter.
114. Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London 14 Oct. 1837, HUBL: Ropes Papers; London 3 April 1838; London 7 Sept. 1838; Mary T. Gellibrand to her grandparents, Okta Sept. 1/13, 1838; Wm. H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P. Sept. 22/Oct. 4, 1838; St. P. Oct. 19/31, 1838; Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P. Aug. 29/Sept. 10, 1839; Wm. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, London 14 Nov. 1839.
115. Joseph S. Ropes to his grandparents, St. P. Aug. 29/Sept. 10, 1839, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
116. Joseph S. Ropes to his aunt, St. P. June 24/July 6, 1841, MHS: Ropes Papers.
117. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fol. 50. See also the reference to this joint undertaking in the diary of Henry K. Fettyplace, who visited St. Petersburg briefly in July 1848, and met his “old friend and schoolmate, George Prince,” while calling on Major Whistler (entry of Monday, 24th July [1848], PEM: Fettyplace Journal). Fettyplace mistakenly called Mr. Fairbanks an Englishman.
118. Hardy Ropes to his son, Wm. Ladd Ropes, Boston 22 Dec. 1849, HUBL: Ropes Papers; diaries of Hardy Ropes: No. 32, Year 1849; no. 33, Year 1850.
119. I wish to thank Mr. S. Hardy Prince of Beverly, Massachusetts, for this information. See also The Times (London), September 20, 1933; August 18, 1942; September 14, 1946; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1933 and 1942.
120. Attestation of Marriages in the British & American Congregational Church St. Petersburg Russia from June 22 1844 to 11th November 1886 numbered 1/84, no. 68, RG 33/145, NAUK; 1901 Census for London.
121. RG 33/145, NAUK, no. 73; 1901 Census for London.
122. Envelope containing a description of the death of G.H. Prince, typed extracts, HUBL: Ropes Papers.
123. [Transcript of the] Register of Births and Baptisms [1895–1903], Deaths and Burials [1896–1903], and Marriages [1896–1903], from the British and American Church, at St. Petersburg, RG 33/149, PRO.

124. Raymond and Prince, “Whistler,” pp. 3–14.
125. Captain Thomas Leach (6 September 1807 – 5 December 1886) was born and died in Manchester, MA (Manchester Vital Records 1850, p. 76).
126. Anna Whistler to James Whistler St Petersburg Feb. 19th Monday eve [1849], GUL: Whistler Collection, W383, with additional entries on 20, 22, and 24 February.
127. [Transcript of the] Attestation of marriages in the British & American Congregational Church, St. Petersburg, Russia from June 22 1844 to 11 November 1886 numbered 1–84, no. 16, RG 33/145, PRO.
128. The information about Benjamin and Mary Alexandrine (Van der Vliet) Prince is taken from a letter written by Benjamin Prince in Hamilton, MA, on 13 January 1856 to his sister, Sarah. In it, he speaks of living better now, as his brother, Samuel, has just married. He speaks also of Mrs. Revillon, who was at that time in the United States. It becomes clear in this letter that he has customers to whom he supplies milk. Notes written on the letter clarify that “Sashy” Prince is dead. I am grateful to Mr. S. Hardy Prince of Beverley, MA, for supplying a copy of this annotated letter.
129. See his application of March 26, 1844, for a passport (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 16, passport no. 1902). See also, Pope and Hooper, Hooper Genealogy, p. 149.
130. William H. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. Petersburg, September 22/October 4, 1838, HUBL: Ropes Papers; Joseph S. Ropes to Hardy Ropes, St. P., August 30/ Sept. 11, 1839.
131. Pope and Hooper, Hooper Genealogy, pp. 125, 148–149.

SANDLAND

Betsy Hewitt Dorlin (bap. 3 July 1792<sup>1</sup> – Liverpool 9 January 1859) married John Sandland (c. 1785 – Savannah, GA 27 April 1820) in Liverpool, St. Nicholas, on 29 August 1816. While still in England, they had a son, John Dorlin Sandland (c. 1817 – Ashton le Willows 19 June 1880). The Sandlands and young John traveled to America, where a second child, Eliza Sandland (Brooklyn, New York c. 1820 – Manchester 2 November 1885)<sup>2</sup> was born. In 1819, they became acquainted in Brooklyn Heights (see Image 42) with Dr. Daniel McNeill, Anna Whistler’s father (see Image 23). They visited the McNeills at “their country residence at Jamaica, Long Island,” where the teen-aged Anna McNeill (see Images 1–5) took the “toddling child” for walks in “the green fields.”<sup>3</sup> John Sandland was a commission merchant. Announcements in various issues of the local Savannah, Georgia, newspaper from 1818 until his death show his arrivals there as well as the arrival of cargo for him (whiskey, flour, and sundries). They also indicate that he sold bills of exchange and post notes.<sup>4</sup> During one such trip to Savannah, John Sandland died of spasms in Washington Hall on 27 or 28 April 1820, at the age of thirty-five.<sup>5</sup> His family returned to Liverpool.<sup>6</sup> When Lt. George Washington Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21) was sent to England in 1828 by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad along with Ross Winans (see Image 228) and William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31), they took young John Dorlin Sandland, then a schoolboy, to breakfast at the Waterloo Hotel in Liverpool.<sup>7</sup> In the fall of 1829, when Anna McNeill reached Liverpool for an extended visit with the Winstanleys in Preston, she went to stay at the home of Mrs. Sandland until Alicia McNeill (see Image 39) could come to Liverpool to get her.<sup>8</sup> In 1843, now married and a mother, she visited the Sandlands again, on her way to Russia, and continued to do so each time she came from Russia to England, except in 1848. During her 1843 visit, John Dorlin Sandland was absent. On Sunday, 2 August 1840, he had left England, not intending “to return for years” (an affair of the heart seems to have been the cause) and spent “more than four years” in the Brazils.<sup>9</sup> It eventually became necessary for him to take a sea voyage for his health, so he set out from where he had been living in the Brazils for Para, arriving there in early March 1842.<sup>10</sup> In 1845, he published a volume entitled The Wanderer and Other Poems, which he had written during that four-year sojourn in South America.<sup>11</sup> The preface to the volume was written in Blakeney, Gloucestershire, in August 1845.<sup>12</sup> In the notes, John Dorlin Sandland explained that he had “a Prose Work, now in hand, upon the Brazils and the Brazilians,” in which he intended to write on the subject of slavery, having lived in a “slave-owning community.”<sup>13</sup> He seemed to have problems finding employment.<sup>14</sup> In 1847, Anna Whistler was in Preston again and visited the Sandlands in Liverpool. She was met at Edge Hill Station (which is on the main railroad line out of Liverpool; see Image 61) by Eliza and John Dorlin Sandland. She went with them to their home at 10 Cambridge Street and saw their mother, Betsy Hewitt (Dorlin) Sandland, who was in mourning for her nephew and niece, John Dorlin Grayson (bap. Liverpool, St. Peter, 31 March 1807 – Roby 1 September 1847) and his sister, Elizabeth (Bessie) Grayson (bap. Liverpool, St. Peter, 26 April 1821 – Roby 8 September 1847), who had died at Roby within a week of one another, of unrelated illnesses.<sup>15</sup> They were the children of Charles Grayson and Betsy H.D. Sandland’s sister, Hannah (Dorlin) Grayson. In 1849, after the death of Major Whistler, Anna Whistler and Willie (see Images 27, 30) stopped in England on their way home to the United States and visited the Sandlands again. Betsy H.D. Sandland died on 9 January 1859. The witnesses to her last will and testament were Eliza (see Image 40) and John Winstanley. In June 1874, John Dorlin Sandland wrote a letter to the Pall Mall Gazette in response to an article reviewing an exhibit of James Whistler’s paintings and drawings that had appeared in its June 13 issue.<sup>16</sup> In his response, he spoke of how he had come to know the McNeill family, of Major Whistler, and of James Whistler (see Images 24–29) as an artist whose genius had now been recognized by the public.<sup>17</sup> As a source for his own personal biography, the article makes clear only that he still made Liverpool his home. He said in it, too, that he had received from James Whistler photographs of paintings by James, executed when, after his Paris years of study, he had taken a trip around the world “with a party of friends in a yacht.”<sup>18</sup> John Dorlin Sandland worked as a bookkeeper. He never married. He died intestate in Ashton le Willows, Lancashire, on 19 June 1880. Eliza Sandland married Thomas Boyd the Younger (c. 1821 – Stockport Etchells, Cheshire 28 April 1874), iron merchant, on 21 June 1849 in Liverpool, St. Bride’s.<sup>19</sup> They had five surviving children: Thomas Albert (Windsor, Liverpool 9 November 1853 – Antigua, West Indies 1 December 1879), John Sandland (bap. Windsor, Liverpool 10 June 1855 – Salford District, June Qtr. 1873), James Charles (bap. Windsor, Liverpool 31 May 1857 – Salford District, June Qtr. 1890), Eliza Mary (bap. Windsor, Liverpool 9 October 1859 – Ryde, IOW, 10 September 1936), and George Herbert (bap. Salford 1 March 1863 – Broadstairs, Kent 26 March 1932).<sup>20</sup> Anna Whistler referred in her correspondence to the poverty in which the Boyds were living in the 1870s.<sup>21</sup>

NOTES

1. IGI for Lancashire.
2. The 1881 Census for Broughton, Municipal Borough of Salford, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. John, gives Eliza (Sandland) Boyd’s birthplace as Brooklyn New York US (RG 11/3956, fol. 34, p. 18, PRO). Her place and date of death are given in her will (York Probate Sub-Registry).
3. J.D.S., “James A. Whistler, the Artist,” Pall Mall Gazette, June 1874. It has not been possible to locate the June issue in which this article was said to have appeared.
4. Columbian Museum and Savannah Daily Gazette, March 10, 1818; April 6, 1818; January 7, 1819; January 28, 1819; April 8, 1819; February 21, 1820; February 24, 1820; March 23, 1820; and March 24, 1820. The Entry of Marriage for Thomas Boyd and Eliza Sandland, John Sandland’s daughter, shows that her (deceased) father’s occupation was “merchant” (certified copy of an Entry of Marriage for Thomas Boyd and Eliza Sandland, June 21, 1849, St. Bride’s Church in the Parish of Liverpool, GRO).
5. J.D.S., “Whistler, the Artist”; R.J. Taylor Jr., ed., Register of Deaths in Savannah, Georgia, vol. 4, September 1818–1832 (Savannah, GA: Georgia Historical Society Genealogical Committee, 1989), p. 50. J.D.S. says his father died on 27 April 1820; the Register says his death occurred on 28 April 1820. Presumably he was buried in Savannah. “The primary cemetery in Savannah from the mid 18th century until 1853 was the Colonial Cemetery, and unless Mr. Sandland was buried in a private cemetery that is almost certainly

- where he was interred ... there is no complete list of burials for Colonial Cemetery” (Jan Flores, archivist, Georgia Historical Society Library to E. Harden, n.d.).
6. In Edward Baines, History, Directory, and Gazetteer of the County Palatine of Lancaster, vol. 1 (Liverpool: Wm. Wales, 1824), Elizabeth Sandland, gentlewoman, is listed at 22 Clarence St., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool (p. 321).
  7. J.D.S., “Whistler, the Artist.” The Waterloo Hotel was a “first class establishment in Ranelagh Street” (James Stonehouse, The Liverpool Guide: Its Highways, Byeways, and Thoroughfares, by Land and Water [Liverpool: William Lea, 1879], p. 37).
  8. Anna McNeill to Catherine Jane McNeill, Liverpool, Nov. 22, 1829, GUL: Whistler Collection, W344; Anna McNeill to Margaret Hill, Manchester, Jan. 14, 1830, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 3–4; McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, pp. 17, 18, 19–21.
  9. Sandland, Wanderer, pp. 193, 205.
  10. Sandland, p. 201.
  11. Sandland, p. 5. He had originally sent the manuscript to a “friend in England” without the intention of publishing it but had been persuaded to do so (pp. 202–203). Some of the other poems in the volume were written in boyhood. A reference to John Dorlin Sandland and his book can be found in Kirk, Supplement to Allibone’s Critical Dictionary.
  12. Sandland, Wanderer, p. 6. However, the 1851 Census for Blakeney has been searched without success for his name, and he is not listed in the index to the 1851 Census for Gloucestershire.
  13. Sandland, Wanderer, p. 199.
  14. Eliza Winstanley to Kate Palmer, Preston, 2 Jan<sup>ry</sup> 1849 (GUL: Whistler Collection, W1080) implies that his sister was unable to marry partly because he had no work. Eliza Winstanley strongly doubted that he would find any.
  15. Certified copy of an Entry of Death, Registration District: Prescott, Sub-District: Huyton in the County of Lancashire for John Dorlin Grayson, GRO; certified copy of an Entry of Death, Registration District: Prescott, Sub-District: Huyton in the County of Lancashire for Elizabeth Grayson, GRO. John D. Grayson, a shipbuilder, aged forty, died of disease of the heart; his sister, who died of disease of the pylorus, is described as “daughter of Charles Grayson, deceased ship builder,” aged twenty-seven.

16. J.D.S., “Whistler, the Artist.”
17. He also incorrectly stated that Eliza Winstanley was the wife of William Winstanley.
18. J.D.S., “Whistler, the Artist”; Nigel Thorp, “Studies in Black and White: Whistler’s Photographs in Glasgow University Library,” in James McNeill Whistler: A Reexamination, ed. Ruth E. Fine (Hanover, NH: University Press of New England, 1984), pp. 91–92.
19. Certified copy of an Entry of Marriage for Thomas Boyd and Eliza Sandland, June 21, 1849, St. Bride’s Church in the Parish of Liverpool, GRO; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1874.
20. Will of Eliza Boyd, York Probate Sub-Registry; Baptismal Register of the District of Windsor, Liverpool, GRO; Liverpool Mercury, November 18, 1853; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1880, 1932, and 1936; Index of Deaths, GRO; Baptismal Register of Christ Church, Salford.
21. Anna Whistler to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, 2 Lindsey Houses Chelsea London, entry of Friday 4 November in letter of 29 October 1870, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 71–76; Anna Whistler to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, 2 Lindsey Houses Chelsea London, entry of Monday 3rd [June] in letter of May 21st [1872], PUL 65, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections, Princeton University Library; Toutziari, “Anna Matilda Whistler’s Correspondence,” vol. 3, pt. 2, p. 791n1.

SHAW AND WARDROP

While the guest of Eliza (see Image 40) and John Winstanley in 1829–1830, young Anna McNeill was introduced by their friend, Frances (Morton) Stevenson, to Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw (bap. Edinburgh 22 July 1792 – Clapham, Surrey 7 March 1875; see Image 486),<sup>1</sup> the widowed daughter of William (b. Edinburgh 17 March 1769; bap. South Leith, Edinburgh 31 March 1769; d. Edinburgh 24 November 1802) and Catherine (Fraser) Wardrop (1768 – Clapham 4 March 1850; see Image 488).<sup>2</sup> Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw’s father had been secretary to the Bank of Scotland between 1791 and 1802,<sup>3</sup> and it is likely that he thus became acquainted with Frances (Morton) Stevenson’s husband, Walter (see Stevenson and Smith in this Appendix). The Wardrop family in general were private bankers. On 23 August 1814, Georgina Wardrop married John Shaw (1792 – buried 16 October 1823; see Image 487),<sup>4</sup> a gentleman of the parish of Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire. They lived in Great Marlow and became the parents of five children, all of whom survived into adulthood: John Shaw (bap. 14 August 1815), William Wardrop Shaw (bap. 13 July 1820 – 9 September 1895), Catherine Maccallum Shaw (bap. 13 July 1820 – Clapham Park 18 March 1888), Georgina Shaw (bap. 25 October 1821 – Clapham Park 10 May 1902), and Alexander Wardrop Shaw (bap. 19 June 1823 – 1 August 1858).<sup>5</sup> Four months after the christening of his fifth child, John Shaw, surgeon and apothecary, thirty-one years of age, died. His will, drawn up on 8 August 1823, indicates only that he bequeathed all his “Estates and Effects” to his wife.<sup>6</sup> The entry for him in the registers of death duties contains a space where his death should have been entered but was not, and the “Sworn Under” figure in the entry is £1,500.<sup>7</sup>

A widow with five children, the eldest eight years old, Georgina Shaw set about opening a school to support her family. Her brother, Alexander Wardrop (b. Falkirk 5 December 1794; bap. Edinburgh, St. Cuthberts 14 November 1795; d. Calcutta 6 June 1832), helped her to get pupils from among the children of his colleagues.<sup>8</sup> Although directory information about her career as a schoolmistress is sporadic and confusing, Pigot’s London Directory 1832-3-4<sup>9</sup> lists a preparatory boarding and day school for boys under her name at Cadogan Terrace, Sloane Street. Pigot's London Directory 1839 lists under “Academies – Gent.’s” an “E. Shaw at 2 Francis Street, Nemington butts” and under “Academies – Ladies” a “Mrs. & Miss Shaw at 17 Gloucester Place, Kentish Town.” Pigot's Directory of Kent 1839 lists a “Mr G.H. Shaw on High Street.” This latter school is also listed in the 1841 Census, with eleven males pupils between the ages of nine and fifteen recorded.<sup>10</sup> The Post Office London Directories list a Miss Catherine Shaw as having a seminary at 43 Bedford Place, Kensington, from 1846 to 1848. The 1851 Census for Georgina Shaw’s household in Loats Road, Clapham, shows that it was a school for girls, of which she was “school mistress,” while her two unmarried daughters were teachers. Twenty pupils were recorded.<sup>11</sup> Her mother, Catherine (Fraser) Wardrop, who lived with her, died at her home.<sup>12</sup> She left five-eighths of her property to her daughter.<sup>13</sup> The 1871 Census indicates that Georgina Shaw was a “surgeon’s widow,” still living together with her unmarried daughters; there is no reference to a school.<sup>14</sup>

Her son, William Wardrop Shaw, was an East India merchant and spent some time in Singapore. There he married Emily Caroline Crane (bap. 20 July 1832 – Holbrook, Ipswich 10 November 1919), spinster, aged twenty, daughter of Thomas Owen, on 8 October 1852.<sup>15</sup> They are listed in the 1861 through 1891 censuses: in 1861 in the Parish of Mother of St. Margaret, Lee, Kent, at which time five children are recorded (Charles, Henry, Emily, Alice, and William); and in 1871, 1881, and 1891 at Blackheath Park, Civil Parish of Charlton, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. Luke’s, and at Blackheath Park, “The Hall,” Civil Parish of Charlton, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. Michael.<sup>16</sup> In 1871, four children were recorded, in 1891 two. William Wardrop Shaw’s personal estate at his death amounted to about £182,000.

As William Wardrop Shaw was not married until 1852, he is not the widowed son referred to in Anna Whistler’s diaries as returning home with his two motherless babes. Nor can it be John Shaw, whose second wife, Elizabeth (1815–1868), whom he married in 1841, was still alive. It was Alexander Wardrop Shaw who was the widower coming home to his mother with his two orphaned babies.<sup>17</sup> It has not been possible to find further information about him.

Catherine Maccallum Shaw and her sister, Georgina Shaw, are listed in the 1881 Census as having an adopted child, six years old, born at Islington, Middlesex, named Alice Chapman.<sup>18</sup> This is curious, because of the child's possible connection with Dr. Edward Chapman (see Chapman in this Appendix), whose address in the Medical Register in 1872 was given as the Islington Workhouse, where presumably he was the medical officer. At her death, Catherine Maccallum Shaw's personal estate was about £1,100; that of her sister, Georgina Shaw, was about £4,000. In her trips to England in the years 1843 to 1848, Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) recorded seeing Georgina Shaw only in 1848.

NOTES

1. OPRS; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Georgina Shaw, Registration District of Wordsworth, Sub-district of Clapham in the County of Surrey, GRO.
2. Hersey family tree, ancestry.co.uk; Carlisle Journal, November 27, 1802; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Catharine Wardrop, Registration District of Wordsworth and Clapham, Sub-district of Clapham in the County of Surrey, GRO; Edinburgh Weekly Journal, November 24, 1802.
3. I wish to thank Alan Cameron, archivist, Bank of Scotland, Edinburgh, and Hania Smerecka, archivist, Group Archive and Museum, Lloyds Banking Group, for supplying information about William Wardrop's career at that bank and about his family (details from Salary Sheets, 1/275/1).
4. Register of Marriages for Jan. 1813 – Dec. 1818, Parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, Middlesex, marriage entry no. 231, p. 77, GLRO; Vicar General Marriage Allegations and Bonds 1814, Lambeth Palace Library; entry from Bishop's Transcripts for Great Marlow 1823, D/A/T/129, Buckinghamshire Record Office, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire; Gentleman's Magazine 93 (1823): pt. 2, p. 571.
5. Index to the registers of the parish church of Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire; wills of Catherine Maccallum Shaw, Georgina Shaw, and William Wardrop Shaw.
6. Wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Prob 11/1677, 1823 Nov. 6, PRO; Morning Post (London), October 15, 1858.

7. According to a leaflet on how to interpret death duty registers, the “Sworn Under” figure in the entry is the approximate value of the total estate.
8. India Index, SoG; OPRS. Alexander Wardrop became an assistant surgeon in the Indian Medical Service on 16 October 1816, and a surgeon on 3 July 1828. He served in the third Maratha or Pindari War (1817–1818), and at the Siege of Bharatpur (1825–1826). He married on 6 September 1824 Jassie, daughter of the late R. Burn, Esq., Edinburgh (Gentleman’s Magazine 94 [1824]: pt. 2, p. 272). He died on 6 July 1832 and was buried on 7 July 1832 in the South Park Street Burial Ground, Calcutta, Bengal. His memorial inscription read “Sacred to the Memory of Alexander Wardrop Esq. Surgeon Honourable Company Service, died 6th July 1832, aged 37 years” (Certificate of Age (an Oath) 1 April 1817, London, L/MIL/9/369, fol. 147, India Office Library, London; Burial Register for Bengal, Calcutta, N/1/34, fol. 231; Bengal Obituary, p. 136; D.G. Crawford, comp., Roll of the Indian Medical Service, 1615–1930 [London: W. Thacker, 1930]).
9. Pigot’s London Directory 1832-3-4.
10. 1841 Census for Clapham.
11. 1851 Census return for Clapham, HO 107/1576, fol. 347/8, p. 1–2.
12. Gentleman’s Magazine 33 (1850): p. 448.
13. Wills found in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Prob. 11/2111, p. 27, PRO.
14. 1871 Census for Clapham, St. James, RG 10/698, fol. 134, p. 44, PRO.
15. Marriages solemnized at St. Andrews Church Singapore in the Archdeaconary and Diocese of Calcutta, vol. 82, 1852, India Office Library, London.
16. 1861 Census, RG 9/414, fol. 140, p. 11; 1871 Census, RG 10/775, fol. 28, p. 29; 1881 Census, RG 11/741, fol. 49, p. 28; 1891 Census, RG 12/528, fol. 43, p. 11–12.
17. Hersey family tree, ancestry.co.uk; Morning Post (London), October 15, 1858.
18. 1881 Census for Clapham, Ecclesiastical Parish of St. James, RG 11/636, fol. 48, p. 8.

ELIJAH SMITH

Elijah Smith<sup>1</sup> (b. Manchester 11 March 1800; bap. St. James Church, Manchester 6 April 1800; d. Penrith, New South Wales 8 October 1870) was the second son of Reverend Thomas Smith (1778 – 24 July 1834) of Gordon House Academy, Kentish Town, Middlesex. He attended Charterhouse (London) but ran away after two months and was thereafter educated privately by his father. He attended in 1817–1818 three Cambridge colleges in quick succession (St. John’s, Trinity, Sidney Sussex). He married on 30 October 1821 in St. Anne’s, Soho, Martha Lucas (b. 19 August 1799; bap. St. Anne’s Soho 22 August 1799; d. Balham 16 November 1885).

He was ordained deacon on 11 March 1827 (London, for the Colonies), described as “literate,” and ordained a priest on 10 June 1828. In 1827, he was appointed chaplain in the colony of New South Wales and stationed in Windsor, at St. Matthew’s Church, where he remained until 1829. In 1829, he returned to England to the curacy of Beckenham, Kent, where he remained until 1832.

He was appointed chaplain to the Russia Company’s factory at Archangel from 1 July 1833, succeeding Rev. J. W. Ellaby, and remained for six years. In addition to his chaplaincy, he taught English at the Russian Gymnasium and the German School in Archangel, but there was some dispute about the relationship of the British Community at Archangel with the Russia Company and thus about whether the former had any claims on the chaplain’s services. On 14 July 1837, he requested permission to visit England because of the “extreme old age of his father-in-law.” In a letter from him dated 8/20 December 1838, presented at the Russia Company’s meeting of 15 January 1839, he resigned his appointment at Archangel, partly on account of his wife’s ill health. He wished to leave Archangel in July 1839, but actually left in mid-June 1839.

He returned to England and was appointed chaplain to the King’s College Hospital in 1840. He was appointed librarian of Archbishop Tenison’s Grammar School at St. Martin-in-the-Fields and headmaster, following the death of his predecessor there in December 1841. No record of his actual appointment is extant, but he was in the post by March 1842. He was also appointed librarian of Tenison's endowed library in the same building.

On Friday, 27 August 1847, Martha (Lucas) Smith was on board the Cricquet, a Thames steamboat that was shattered when its boiler exploded, an accident from which she "miraculously escaped unhurt."

Through the efforts of Lord Bloomfield, British ambassador at St. Petersburg (see Image 291), Imperial permission was granted to establish an English school in that city under his patronage, exclusively for the young children, both male and female, of English citizens there. A house belonging to Pets on the Fifth Line on Vasilievskii Island was rented for this purpose. Elijah Smith was appointed the first director of the British School in St. Petersburg (also called the St. Petersburg School), which was under the direction of the Russia Company. He resigned from Archbishop Tenison's Grammar School and left London for Russia on 22 October 1847. At his departure for Russia, there were problems at the Tenison School about missing books and papers, including the Trustees' minute book.

On 27 November 1847 (OS), the inspector of Private Schools and Pensions, Iosif Somov, wrote to Privy Councilor Mikhail Nikolaevich Musin-Pushkin, head of the St. Petersburg Educational District, that the British School had opened on 6/18 November 1847. It was intended only for young children, both male and female, of English parents, and was under the governance of the director, Rev. Elijah Smith, and the supervision of Rev. Dr. Edward Law (see Image 253). The subjects being taught were religion (zakon bozhi); reading, writing, and grammar of the English, German, and Russian languages; arithmetic; geography; history; penmanship; with private lessons in Latin, French, music, and needlework. The teachers were Rev. E. Smith, Mr. Breitfuss, Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Knirsh. At the time the report was written, the children in the school, all of whom were boarders, numbered forty-six, of which fifteen were girls. The annual fee was 131 silver rubles. If two or more children came from the same family, their fee was reduced. A list of the children's names and their fathers' occupations was attached. Four were orphans. Five were the children of Rev. Elijah and Martha (Lucas) Smith, listed as Dora, Henry, Charles, Adam, and Edward. The parents of the remaining children were mechanics, artisans, engineers, a footman, a courier, and a merchant.

In April 1848, Rev. Dr. Edward Law and James Cattley (see Image 255), secretary of the British School, informed Musin-Pushkin that Rev. Smith, in a letter dated 6 February 1848 (OS), after only some three months as director of the school, had asked the Committee of the British School to release him and his wife from their duties. Their request had been granted with the stipulation that they continue their duties until 26 June 1848 (OS). Their request had actually masked a dismissal for incompetence. The Committee, in the meantime, had invited from England a male and female teacher competent in their profession and with excellent certification. The number of pupils had grown to 80. On 27 September 1848 (OS), Rev. Dr. Law informed Musin-Pushkin that the replacements were a teacher named Mr. Watkins and his wife. The school had moved to the corner of Torgovaia Street and the English Prospekt, where it was located in the house of Essen. According to a report by Inspector Somov on 9 October 1848 (OS), Essen's house was located in the Narva District.

In the meantime, the Smiths had returned to England. Elijah Smith set out again for Russia in late summer of 1849. Rev. Dr. Law, who was in England that summer and had recruited a Miss Handcock for the British School, made very clear to the Rev. David Laing, honorary secretary of the Governesses' Benevolent Institution in London, the circumstances of the Smiths' dismissal in a letter dated 27 August 1849: "I was glad to find that Miss Handcock has started per Camilla, & trust that she may have a prosperous voyage. It was not without reason that you cautioned her against her Rev<sup>d</sup> Compagnon de Voyage, the first appointed Master of our School at St P, but whom, as well as his wife (par nobile) our Committee was obliged to dismiss at the end of 3 months! They caused us serious inconvenience & expence. Mr. M to whose care I confided Miss H. will probably have given her some insight into his character."

These unflattering comments notwithstanding, in 1850 Smith stood in for Rev. Camidge, the chaplain at Cronstadt, who had been ill and had returned to England. He performed his duties "zealously and conscientiously,” and the Cronstadt residents expressed their wish in May 1850 that he be appointed if there should be a vacancy.

In 1851, he came out to New South Wales again and for two years officiated at St. Leonard’s, North Shore, during the absence of the Rev. W.B. Clarke. Martha (Lucas) Smith came out to New South Wales with six children, on the Euphrates (Capt. Munro), from Plymouth, arriving on 25 May 1852.

Elijah Smith became rector of St. Stephen the Martyr, Penrith, conjoined with St. Mary’s, South Creek, in 1853, remaining in that office until September 1868.

On 5 July 1854, an advertisement appeared in the Sydney newspaper, Empire, announcing that “The Wife of a Clergyman of the Church of England, assisted by her Husband and Eldest Daughter, educates Five Young Ladies, together with her own Family. There are at present Vacancies for Two. Young Ladies under Twelve Years of Age, per annum, 60 Guineas. Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Reverend ELIJAH SMITH, Parsonage, Penrith.”

In March 1857, his parishioners presented him with a gold watch “as a mark of [their] affection.”

In 1854, when Smith visited England, the then vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Rev. Henry MacKenzie, attempted in vain to contact him, and a reference in the Trustees’ minutes for 1861 to “a particular party” involved in the disappearance of various books may also refer to Smith. The person concerned is also spoken of as having “by a long course of subsequent misconduct rendered himself utterly irresponsible.”

Elijah Smith died on 8 October 1870 in Penrith and was buried in Balmain Cemetery. His funeral was “attended by many of the clergy and by his late churchwardens.” He is described in his obituary “as having been a diligent student” since he was young, “being well acquainted with the Hebrew, Greek, Chaldaic, and Syric languages [and] familiar with many of the languages of Northern Europe,” and as having “translated some works from the Swedish, for which he gained great commendation and reward.” An obelisk to him is to be found in the grounds of St. Stephen the Martyr.

Martha (Lucas) Smith returned to England after her husband’s death. She is to be found in the 1881 Census for Balham in South London. She died in Balham on 16 November 1885, aged eighty-six. Her estate amounted to about £614.

* * *

Martha (Lucas) and Elijah Smith had thirteen children. Five did not survive. Their eight surviving children were Cornelius (twin) (b. London 28 January 1830; bap. St. James Clerkenwell 15 April 1830; d. Fiji 9 April 1876); Stephen (twin) (b. London 28 February 1830; bap. St. James Clerkenwell 15 April 1830; d. Fiji 9 July 1877); Ellen Dora Basil (b. 31 October 1833; bap. Archangel 15 February 1833; d. Hove 30 October 1928); Henry (b. Archangel 9 April 1836; bap. Archangel 29 April 1836; d. Hong Kong 25 June 1882); Charles Basil (b. Archangel 8 April 1837; bap. Archangel 17 May 1837; d. Sydney 11 April 1913); Ada[h] Cornelia Ann (b. Archangel 27 December 1838; bap. Archangel 8 January 1839; d. Balham 27 February 1889); Edward Lucas (b. London 16 August 1841; bap. St. Martin-in-the-Fields 13 September 1841; d. Moree, NSW 3 April 1911); Matilda (b. St. Martins, Middlesex 25 April 1844; bap. St. Martin-in-the-Fields 22 May 1844; d. Fiji 9 October 1866).

The twin sons, Stephen and Cornelius, the eldest surviving children, became blacksmiths and engineers. They went to Fiji with the first steam engine taken there. They had a blacksmith shop in Levuka. Stephen is said to have married a Fijian in Levuka. He died diving off a cliff into the ocean. Cornelius was reported as unmarried.

Ellen Dora, the Smiths' eldest surviving daughter, married in 1835 William Gaskell of Hong Kong.

Charles Basil Smith, Esq., married on 26 January 1859 at Penrith, New South Wales, Jane Duncan, eldest daughter of the late David Malcolm, Esq., of Edinburgh, N.B. His father officiated at the ceremony. Charles Basil was at that time employed by H.M. Customs.

Matilda Smith, their sixth and youngest surviving daughter, became a missionary in Fiji. She died at Ovalau, Fiji Islands, on 9 October 1866 of acute dysentery, at the residence of her brothers, Stephen and Cornelius.

There is very little information about Adah Cornelia Ann Smith. The Adam Smith mentioned in Russian documents as being among the five children of Elijah Smith enrolled at the St. Petersburg School for the Children of English Persons may actually be Adah. Her married name was Masefield. Her husband predeceased her. She left an estate of about £250.

No information has been discovered about Edward Smith.

NOTES

1. I am particularly indebted to Peter A. Hoare, former university librarian at the University of Nottingham, for sharing his notes on Elijah Smith with me. He consulted the Russia Company's Court Minutes extensively.

This biography of Elijah Smith and his family is a composite from the following sources: Peter A. Hoare to Harvey Pitcher, Nottingham, 3 November 1980; Peter A. Hoare, Nottingham, to E. Harden, 14 March 1988; Harvey Pitcher, When Miss Emmie Was in Russia (London: John Murray, 1977), pp. 9, 11–12; Alumni Cantabrigienses, vol. 5, p. 548; Amburger Datenbank, ID 921751; TsGIA SPb: Fond 139, op. 1, d. 5109. Ob otkrytii v SPburge shkoly dlia detei Anglichan, 11 Noiabria 1847g. – 19 dek. 1851 g. [About the opening of a school in St. Petersburg for the children of English persons, 11 November 1847 – 19 Dec. 1851], fols. 1r and v, 2r and v, 3r and v, 4r and v, 6r, 7r, 9r, 10r; “Explosion of a Thames Steam-boat,” Daily News (London), August 28, 1847; Rev. Dr. Edward Law to Rev. David Laing, [London], 27 August 1849, Archive of the Governesses' Benevolent Institution, London; Bell's Life in Sydney and Sporting Reviewer, May 29, 1852, p. 3; Empire (Sydney), July 5, 1854, p. 8; “Family Notices,” Sydney Morning Herald, February 11, 1859, p. 6; Sydney Morning Herald, November 28, 1866, p. 1; Sydney Mail, October 15, 1870; Sydney Morning Herald, December 2, 1870, p. 7; “Family Notices,” Sydney Morning Herald, August 24, 1882, p. 1; England, Middlesex, Westminster, Parish Registers, 1538–1912, GS film no. 0918598, digital folder 005109297, image no. 00018; “Sydney News,” Maitland Mercury and Hunter River General Advertiser (NSW), August 30, 1851, p. 4; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1885; Sydney Gazette and New South Wales Advertiser, December 7, 1827.

STEVENSON AND SMITH

Walter Stevenson (bap. Edinburgh 8 September 1788 – London 10 May 1860),<sup>1</sup> was the son of George and Elizabeth (Sharp) Stevenson. He joined the Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh in 1803 and by 1807 was third teller at the Head Office with an annual salary of £120. On 29 May 1807, Walter Stevenson married in Edinburgh<sup>2</sup> Frances Morton (bap. Edinburgh 27 April 1783 – London 16 October 1845).<sup>3</sup> Frances (Morton) Stevenson was the daughter of Walter and Rebecca (Finlay) Morton.<sup>4</sup> The Stevensons had at least five children, all born in Scotland: Rebecca (bap. Edinburgh, St. Cuthberts 16 March 1810), Walter Morton (bap. Edinburgh St. Cuthberts 17 December 1812), George (b. c. 1816), Eliza Isabella Wellwood (Edinburgh c. 1821<sup>5</sup> – London 11 February 1889),<sup>6</sup> and Francis (c. 1828 – 1 February 1902).<sup>7</sup> The Stevensons were evidently friends of the recently widowed (1820) Eliza Isabella (McNeill) Wellwood (the future Mrs. John Winstanley; see Image 40), as their daughter, Eliza Isabella Wellwood Stevenson, was her namesake.

Walter Stevenson continued to work his way up at the Bank of Scotland and on 20 August 1837 was appointed chief teller at an annual salary of £350.<sup>8</sup> On 22 January 1840, his career there ended. A Minute of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Scotland for that date announces: “Declaration of Walter Stevenson teller in the Bank’s Head Office being read, in which he admits the deficiency in the cash under his charge to a large amount. The Directors dismiss Mr. Stevenson from his situation as teller.”<sup>9</sup> Probably thirty-seven years of service and extenuating circumstances saved him from being charged with fraud. The 1841 Census shows the Stevenson family already living in London, at 3 Ferdinand Terrace, St. Pancras, except for Rebecca and Walter Morton, who may have chosen to remain in Scotland.<sup>10</sup> Walter Stevenson was described as a person of “Independent Means,” George as a surgeon, and Francis as an apprentice.<sup>11</sup> On 24 September 1844, Eliza Isabella Wellwood Stevenson married at St. Pancras Church<sup>12</sup> Thomas Macdougall Smith (Newcastle-upon-Tyne 1 November 1816 – London 24 January 1886).<sup>13</sup> Both resided in St. Pancras Parish, and they were married by license.<sup>14</sup> The witnesses were Francis Stevenson, the bride’s brother, and Catherine Shaw, daughter of Georgina and John

Shaw<sup>15</sup> (see Shaw and Wardrop in this Appendix and Images 486–487). The Smiths had no children. At the time of the marriage of his daughter, Walter Stevenson was described in the Marriage Register as “gent.”<sup>16</sup> In the Post Office Directories for 1844 and 1845, he was listed as “Surgeon.” Frances (Morton) Stevenson, described in her death certificate as the “Wife of Walter Stevenson Gentleman,” died on 16 October 1845.<sup>17</sup> Francis Stevenson, unmarried, an engineer, was recorded as being in his father’s home at 6 Albert Street in the 1851 Census.<sup>18</sup> Walter Stevenson and his daughter, Eliza, were each left £100 by John Winstanley in his will of 1859. Walter Stevenson died on 10 May 1860. His occupation was described in his death certificate as “formerly a Bank Cashier.”<sup>19</sup>

Thomas Macdougall Smith, called “Tom Smith” by his close friends, was a distinguished civil engineer.<sup>20</sup> In 1835, he had joined the office of Walker and Burges, then considered the “great nursery of civil engineers in England.”<sup>21</sup> Here he became a first-class draftsman and surveyor, noted for the painstaking detail of his work.<sup>22</sup> On leaving the firm, he received an appointment to the engineering staff of the London and Birmingham Railway, becoming in 1844 resident engineer of the Leamington branch line.<sup>23</sup> He later went into mining work.<sup>24</sup> He was elected a graduate of the Institution of Civil Engineering on 24 March 1840 and on 17 February 1846 made a member.<sup>25</sup> It is not clear when Smith and Major Whistler met, but it was Smith, at Major Whistler’s request, who approached William Boxall to paint the portrait of James Whistler in 1848 (see Images 209, 28).<sup>26</sup> A copy of his Memoir of Pont-y-tu-Prydd over the River Tâfe in the County of Glamorgan (1838) was part of the library of James Whistler.<sup>27</sup> In 1851, Thomas and Eliza (Stevenson) Smith were living at 1 Chapel (or Duke) Place, Westminster.<sup>28</sup> London directories and censuses list him as living at the same address from 1851 to 1886.<sup>29</sup> Thomas M. Smith died on 21 January 1886. His personal estate amounted to some £2000.<sup>30</sup> His will was proved on 4 March 1886 by his goddaughter, Alice Jeannette Taylor, of 1 Chapel Place, one of the executrixes.<sup>31</sup> He was described in his obituary as having a “purity of character and gentleness of manner” that “endeared him to all with whom he was long in contact.”<sup>32</sup>

Eliza (Stevenson) Smith was listed as living at 1 Chapel Place for the further years of 1887 to 1889 and died there on 11 February 1889.<sup>33</sup> Her personal estate amounted to about £102.<sup>34</sup> Administration of her personal estate was granted on 22 August 1889 at the Principal Registry to Francis Stevenson of 104 Regents Park Road in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, the Brother and only next of kin.<sup>35</sup>

The Smith home was one of the places where Anna Whistler and Deborah (Whistler) Haden would meet after James Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden quarreled.

NOTES

1. OPRS; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Walter Stevenson, Registration District: St. Pancras, Sub-district: Camden Town, County of Middlesex, GRO. His age at death is given as eighty years.
2. IGI for Midlothian, Scotland.
3. OPRS; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Frances Stevenson, Registration District: St. Pancras, Sub-district: Kentish Town, County of Middlesex, GRO. Her age at death is given as sixty years.
4. OPRS.
5. 1851 Census, HO/107/1480, fol. 156. Edinburgh is specified as the birthplace of Eliza Isabella Wellwood Stevenson. The gravestone for her and her husband contains no inscription for her, so that her date of birth cannot be ascertained from it (F.T. Weyell, Brompton Cemetery, London, to E. Harden, 15 September 1993).
6. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1889.
7. Index of Deaths, St. Catherine's House, GRO. His age at death is given as seventy-four years.
8. In 1835–1836, Walter Stevenson was living at a fashionable address in Edinburgh's Georgian New Town: 41 Great King Street. It is specified that he is employed by the Bank of Scotland (Edinburgh and Leith Post Office Directory).
9. Minute Book 15, fol. 152, Bank of Scotland, Edinburgh.
10. 1841 Census, HO/107/683, bk. 3, fol. 17.
11. 1841 Census.
12. Marriage Register of St. Pancras Church, film X30/38, GLRO.

13. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” Proceedings of the Institution of Civil Engineers 84 (1886): pp. 446, 449. Although his year of birth is incorrectly given, it is possible to establish from other evidence in the obituary that it was 1816.
14. Marriage Register of St. Pancras Church, film X30/38, GLRO.
15. Marriage Register of St. Pancras Church, film X30/38, GLRO.
16. Marriage Register of St. Pancras Church, film X30/38, GLRO.
17. OPRJ; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Frances Stevenson, Registration District: St. Pancras, Sub-district: Kentish Town, County of Middlesex, GRO. Her age at death is given as sixty years.
18. 1851 Census, HO/107/1480, fol. 156.
19. OPRJ; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Walter Stevenson, Registration District: St. Pancras, Sub-district: Camden Town, County of Middlesex, GRO. His age at death is given as eighty years.
20. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” p. 446. All biographical information cited about his career as an engineer is taken from this obituary.
21. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” p. 446.
22. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” pp. 446–447.
23. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” p. 447.
24. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” pp. 447–448.
25. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” p. 448.
26. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, [St.P.], Dec. 12 [1848], GUL: Whistler Collection, W372. In a letter of 1852, she identified T. Smith to James as “he introduced you to Boxall” (Anna Whistler to George, William and James, [London] 18-19 Nov. 1852, GUL: Whistler Collection, W417).
27. Memoir of Pont-y-tu-Prydd over the River Tâfe in the County of Glamorgan, by T.M. Smith, M. Inst. C.E.-F.G.S. 1838, GUL: Whistler Collection, W122. This paper was presented in 1838, but published in 1846 for private circulation by permission of the Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers.
28. 1851 Census, HO/107/1480, fol. 156.

29. Post Office London Directories, PRO and GLRO; 1861 Census, RG 9/52, fol. 89, p. 47; 1871 Census, RG 10/126, fol. 54, p. 25; 1881 Census, RG 11/117, fol. 42, p. 6.
30. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1886.
31. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1886.
32. “Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith,” p. 447.
33. Post Office London Directories, PRO and GLRO; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1889.
34. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1889.
35. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1889.

STOECKL, HOWARD, SWIFT, IRONSIDE

Baron Eduard Andreevich de Stoeckl (Constantinople 1804 – Paris 26 January 1892; see Image 286) was in the Russian diplomatic corps and serving in Washington when the Whistlers were living in Russia.<sup>1</sup> According to his service record, he was a foreigner of the Roman Catholic faith.<sup>2</sup> His father, Andreas, was an Austrian diplomat in Constantinople.<sup>3</sup> His mother, Marie-Anne Pisani, was the daughter of Nicolas Pisani (1743–1819), first dragoman for Russia in Constantinople.<sup>4</sup> He graduated from the Richelieu Lyceum in Odessa in 1821 with the right to the civil service rank of county secretary (12th grade).<sup>5</sup> He was appointed junior secretary to the Russian Mission in Washington on 13 April (OS) 1839, with promotion to collegiate assessor (8th grade) with seniority.<sup>6</sup> On 18 December (OS) 1844, he was appointed senior secretary.<sup>7</sup> At the death of the envoy to the Russian Mission in the United States, Baron Alexander Andreevich Bodisco (see Image 283), in 1854, de Stoeckl acted as chargé d'affaires in Washington from 12/24 March 1854 through 1/13 January 1857.<sup>8</sup> On that day, he was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America.<sup>9</sup> In 1864, he was promoted to privy councilor (3rd grade).<sup>10</sup> In his capacity as envoy, he negotiated the sale of Alaska to the United States in 1867.<sup>11</sup> On 20 April (OS) 1869, at his request, he was retired.<sup>12</sup> He had also held diplomatic posts in Moldavia and Wallachia, Constantinople, and the Sandwich Islands before and between his American appointments.<sup>13</sup>

After de Stoeckl's retirement, he and his wife lived in Paris.<sup>14</sup> He died there on 26 January 1892 and was buried in the family vault in St. Germain Cemetery in Paris.<sup>15</sup> Eliza (Howard) de Stoeckl died in Paris in 1913.<sup>16</sup> It has not been possible to ascertain whether she is also buried in the de Stoeckl family vault.<sup>17</sup>

As a member of the Russian Mission in Washington, DC, in 1842, de Stoeckl would have met Major Whistler during the negotiations to hire the latter as consulting engineer for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway.<sup>18</sup>

In Washington, de Stoeckl was acquainted as well with Major Whistler's brother-in-law, Captain William Henry Swift (Taunton, MA 6 November 1800 – New York City 7 April 1879), brother of Major Whistler's first wife.<sup>19</sup> Captain Swift married in Springfield, Massachusetts, on 18 April 1844, as his second wife, Hannah Worthington Howard (12 August 1821 – New York City 6 January 1884), daughter of a Springfield, Massachusetts, banker, John Howard (17 April 1791 – 23 October 1849), and Mary Stoddard (Dwight) Howard (26 January 1792 – 20 July 1836).<sup>20</sup> At the home of the Swifts in Washington, where Mrs. Swift's three sisters were often guests, de Stoeckl could have made the acquaintance of Eliza Wetmore Howard (3 May 1826 – 1913), his future wife.<sup>21</sup> They were married in Springfield, Massachusetts, on 2 January 1856.<sup>22</sup>

The de Stoeckls' only child, Alexander, was born in Washington in 1862.<sup>23</sup> He was later educated in Paris by Jesuits at the College in rue des Postes.<sup>24</sup> He, too, eventually entered the Russian foreign service<sup>25</sup> and “[a]bout 1880 ... was appointed Gentilhomme de la Chambre,” to Alexander II.<sup>26</sup> In 1887, Alexander de Stoeckl, then attached to the Russian embassy in London, met Agnes Barron (Paris 21 January 1874 – 30 January 1968), daughter of William Joseph (1829–1903) and Frances (Lonergan) Barron (b. 1842).<sup>27</sup> Her father had inherited from his grandfather, Eustace Barron, “large estates and many business interests” in Mexico City.<sup>28</sup> Agnes had two sisters: Fanita (c. 1862–1895), who married in 1885 Count Charles de Fitzjames (c. 1840–1896); and Constance (1863–1948), who married Thomas Baring (1839–1923) of Baring Brothers.<sup>29</sup> Agnes Barron and Alexander de Stoeckl were married on 30 June 1892 at St. Mary's in Cadogan Place, London.<sup>30</sup>

In the summer of 1897, Alexander accepted the position of equerry to Grand Duke Mikhail Mikhailovich (Peterhof 4 October [OS] 1861 – London 26 April 1929), second son of Grand Duke Mikhail Nikolaevich and grandson of Nicholas I (see Images 420–423). He served as equerry until 1908.<sup>31</sup> In this same year, he was named by Nicholas II (Tsarskoe Selo 6 May [OS] 1868 – Ekaterinburg 17 July [OS] 1918) chamberlain to Grand Duchess Maria Georgievna (20 February 1876 – Athens 24 December 1940), daughter of King George I of Greece and wife of Grand Duke Georgii Mikhailovich (Belye Kliuchi, Tiflis Province 11

August 1863 – Petrograd 29 January 1919).<sup>32</sup> Her husband was also the son of Grand Duke Mikhail Nikolaevich.<sup>33</sup>

Alexander de Stoeckl died in London on 23 July 1926 at the age of sixty-four.<sup>34</sup> His funeral was held at the Church of Notre-Dame de France in Leicester Place.<sup>35</sup> The body was then taken to Paris and placed in the family vault at St. Germain Cemetery.<sup>36</sup> In 1950, Agnes (Barron) de Stoeckl published her memoirs of their life, Not All Vanity.<sup>37</sup> In writing the book, she consulted the journals of Eliza (Howard) de Stoeckl, the present whereabouts of which are unknown to me.<sup>38</sup> Agnes (Barron) de Stoeckl is purported to have said “that she often saw Whistler the artist while at her mother-in-law’s house” and, not knowing the Swift connection, “somehow felt that there was a relationship between the Whistlers and the Howards.”<sup>39</sup> In addition to Not All Vanity, Agnes (Barron) de Stoeckl published five more books between 1952 and 1966, one a further memoir, the other four biographies of French royalty and aristocrats.<sup>40</sup> She died at Iver, Buckinghamshire, on 30 January 1968.<sup>41</sup>

Agnes and Alexander de Stoeckl had one child, Zoia (1893–1974).<sup>42</sup> At eighteen, she was named a maid of honor to the empress of Russia.<sup>43</sup> Zoia de Stoeckl married on 2 July 1919, at St. James Church in Spanish Place, London, Captain Alfonse Poklewski-Koziell (1891–1962).<sup>44</sup> Their son Roman was born on 22 December 1920.<sup>45</sup> He died a year and three months later.<sup>46</sup> Another son, Alexander, was born in 1924 (d. 1966); a third, Vincent, on 30 June 1929 (d. 1 September 2017).<sup>47</sup> For most of the 1930s, the Poklewski-Koziells lived in Katowice, Poland, where Zoia’s husband “had been appointed director of a large mining company.”<sup>48</sup> Zoia Poklewski-Koziell and their sons returned to London in August 1939 and Alfonse Poklewski-Koziell in October 1939.<sup>49</sup> Alfonse Poklewski-Koziell died on 9 November 1962 in Iver, Buckinghamshire.<sup>50</sup> Zoia (de Stoeckl) Poklewski-Koziell died there on 7 July 1974.<sup>51</sup>

Of the remaining Swift sisters, Frances Ames Howard (20 April 1825 – 1915) did not marry and seems to have lived with or near the de Stoeckls. She died in Paris.<sup>52</sup>

Margaret Howard (12 May 1823 – 22 April 1893) married on 4 or 5 May 1854 in New York, Charles William Swift (July 1828 – 18 January 1906), son of her brother-in-law, Captain William Henry Swift.<sup>53</sup> A business address is listed for Charles W. Swift in New York from 1860–1861 through 1864–1865.<sup>54</sup> Charles W. Swift predeceased his wife; Margaret (Howard) Swift died in London.<sup>55</sup> They had two daughters, both born in the United States: Mary (b. c. 1860) and Louisa Josephine (b. c. 1864).<sup>56</sup> Mary Swift married Alfred St. Johnston (b. 1858), an English journalist, and lived in London.<sup>57</sup> It was at her home that her mother died. Alfred St. Johnston died on 19 February 1891.<sup>58</sup> Mary (Swift) St. Johnston died on 11 December 1942.<sup>59</sup> Louisa J. Swift died on 1 July 1944 in Surrey.<sup>60</sup>

* * *

Captain William Henry Swift also had a daughter, Mary E. (1825–1911) by his first wife, Mary (Stewart) Swift (24 November 1801 – 18 November 1837), daughter of James and Elizabeth Stewart, whom he married in New London, Connecticut, on 2 February 1825. James Stewart was appointed British consul at New London, Connecticut, at the beginning of 1811. After the death of her mother,<sup>61</sup> Mary E. Swift was essentially brought up in the home of George and Mary Bliss in Springfield, Massachusetts.<sup>62</sup> She is mentioned in Anna Whistler's diaries as the bride of George Ironside (1817–1897), son of a British merchant, whom she married on 24 March 1846.<sup>63</sup>

* * *

George Bromley Ironside was the son of Charles (d. 28 Nov. 1864) and Mary Ironside. He was one of five children, the others being Charlotte Augusta, Caroline Letitia (d. Italy 27 June 1879), Charles Calvert (c. 1816—2 September 1869), and Edmund William (c. 1819 – 30 October 1876).<sup>64</sup> He is listed in New York city directories from 1840 well into the 1870s as part of the firm of Siffken and Ironside, merchants.<sup>65</sup> He is listed in London directories for 1861 and 1862 as a commission merchant.<sup>66</sup> He was still or again living in London in 1865.<sup>67</sup> In 1879, his residence was New London, Connecticut.<sup>68</sup> Mary (Swift) and George Ironside are buried in Cedar Grove Cemetery in New London, Connecticut, along with her mother.<sup>69</sup>

* * *

Anna Whistler, who made no judgmental comments about Mr. Stoeckl in her diaries in 1844, reacted with “melancholy” when she heard in December 1855 of the forthcoming marriage of Eliza Howard and the Count de Stoeckl. She considered the “elegant ... pleasing [and] intellectual” Eliza’s consent “unaccountable.” But Eliza was also “always worldly” – a stigma in Anna Whistler’s eyes. It was this worldliness, she felt, that caused Eliza to be “dazzled by the prospect of shining in Court circles as a young Countess” and to allow herself “to be doomed to such a companion for life!”<sup>70</sup>

NOTES

1. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl’; Marie de Testa and Antoine Gautier, “Le diplomate russe Eduard de Stoeckl (ca 1804–1892) et la cession de l’Alaska aux États-Unis” [“The Russian Diplomat Eduard de Stoeckl (c. 1804–1892) and the Ceding of Alaska to the United States”], in Drogomans et diplomates européens auprès de la Porte ottomane [Dragomans and European Diplomats in the Service of the Ottoman Empire] (Istanbul: ISIS, 2003), pp. 463–469; H.J. Stoeckel, “Springfield Yankee Baroness Popular with Czar, and Also Esteemed by Pres. Lincoln,” Springfield Republican, February 11, 1951, p. 17A; Springfield Daily Union, January 28, 1892. Herbert J. Stoeckel (1896–1967), newspaperman, author, and historian, would seem to be related to Baron Edouard de Stoeckl, but I have not been able to determine how. His articles in the Springfield Republican make clear that he personally interviewed Baroness Agnes (Barron) de Stoeckl in preparing them. His obituary may be found in the Hartford Times, August 1, 1967.
2. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl’.
3. Stoeckel, “Springfield Yankee Baroness Popular with Czar”; Testa and Gautier, “Eduard de Stoeckl,” p. 463.
4. Baroness de Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, ed. George Kinnaird (London: John Murray, [1951]), p. 30; Testa and Gautier, “Eduard de Stoeckl,” p. 463.
5. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl’ (see Note 1 above for document title).
6. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl’.

7. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl'.
8. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl'.
9. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl'.
10. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127 Stekl'.
11. H.J. Stoeckel, "Springfield Yankee Baroness Lives Again in Memoirs as Related by Daughter-in-Law," Springfield Republican, January 28, 1951, p. 8L; Stoeckel, Not All Vanity, p. 39.
12. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127, Stekl' (see Note 1 above for document title); Stoeckel, Not All Vanity, p. 40.
13. AVPRI: Fond DIS i KhD, op. 464, d. 3127, Stekl'.
14. Stoeckel, Not All Vanity, p. 40.
15. Stoeckel, "Springfield Yankee Baroness Popular with Czar."
16. Stoeckel, "Springfield Yankee Baroness Popular with Czar"; Testa and Gautier, "Eduard de Stoeckl," pp. 488–469.
17. In October 2003, I wrote to Vincent Poklewski-Koziell, a son of Zoia and Alphonse Poklewski-Koziell. The questions I raised concerned whether Eliza (Howard) de Stoeckl's journals have been preserved, where she is buried, and complete birth and death dates (month, day, year) for the family members discussed in this biography. Mr. Poklewski-Koziell responded that his grandmother's papers were in his possession and that he would be happy to look among them for her journals (V. Poklewski-Koziell, London, to E. Harden, 28 January 2004); however, he did not contact me again. He died in 2017.
18. Harden, "Whistler," p. 150.
19. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 30; The Evening Post (New York), April 7 and April 8, 1879.
20. Springfield Republican, April 20, 1844, p. 3; Stoeckel, "Springfield Yankee Baroness Lives Again"; Joel Andrew Delano, comp., The Genealogy History and Alliances of the American House of Delano 1621 to 1899 (New York: s.n., 1899), p. 492; The Evening Post, January 7, 1884; Wm. H. Swift to General J.G. Swift, Washington, 23 April 1844, NYPL: Swift Papers.
21. Not All Vanity, p. 30. From about 1864, William Henry and Hannah (Worthington) Swift lived in New York at 11 West 16th Street, where they both died (New York City directories; The Evening Post, April 7 and 8, 1879, and January 7, 1884).
22. Springfield Republican, January 5, 1856.

23. IGI.
24. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 38.
25. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 40.
26. Baroness de Stoeckl, My Dear Marquis (London: John Murray, 1952), p. 49.
27. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, pp. 9, 12, 40; The Times (London), January 1874; The Times (London), January 31, 1968; Harry Barron, Genealogy of the Family of Barron Alias Fitzgerald, Barons of Burnchurch in the Co. of Kilkenny (printed by the author, [1993?]), p. 2; Stoeckl, My Dear Marquis, pp. 42–43; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1969.
28. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 12.
29. Stoeckl, pp. 21, 27, 45, 50, 52.
30. Stoeckl, p. 41; Stoeckl, My Dear Marquis, p. 86.
31. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, pp. 53, 59; Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, p. 226.
32. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, pp. 74, 140–142; Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, pp. 133, 205, 250.
33. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 79; Kuz'min, Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia, p. 133.
34. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 186; The Times (London), July 26, 1926, p. 15; Gloucestershire Echo, July 24, 1926.
35. The Times (London), July 26, 1926, p. 15; The Times (London), July 28, 1926, p. 15.
36. The Times (London), July 28, 1926, p. 15.
37. Stoeckel, “Springfield Yankee Baroness Lives Again”; H.J. Stoeckel, Springfield Republican, January 31, 1951; H.J. Stoeckel, “Old Europe Brought Back in New Book of Memories,” Springfield Republican, February 22, 1953.
38. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 28.
39. Stoeckel, “Springfield Yankee Baroness Lives Again.”
40. The Times (London), January 31, 1968.
41. The Times (London), January 31, 1968, and February 5, 1968.
42. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 46.
43. Stoeckl, p. 121.
44. Stoeckl, pp. 176–177, 180; The Times (London), July 3, 1919.

45. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, p. 185.
46. Stoeckl, p. 185.
47. Stoeckl, pp. 185, 193; The Scotsman (Edinburgh), October 3, 2017; The Times (London), September 14, 2017.
48. Stoeckl, My Dear Marquis, p. 211.
49. Stoeckl, Not All Vanity, pp. 225, 237.
50. The Times (London), November 15, 1962; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1963, for Alfonse Poklewski-Koziell.
51. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1977, for Zoia Poklewski-Koziell.
52. Thomas D. Howard, Sophia W. Howard, and Sally B. Hayward, Charles Howard Family Domestic History, ed. Elizabeth A. Andrews (Cambridge, MA: s.n., 1956), p. 252 and genealogical table (hereafter, Howard Family Domestic History); M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 22 January 2002.
53. Undated clipping [after 22 April 1893] from Springfield Republican about death of Margaret (Howard) Swift; M. Humberston, Springfield, MA, to E. Harden, 22 January 2002; New York Evening Post, September 28, 1854; New York Herald, September 28, 1854; The Times (London), April 1893; Mariam Touba, N-YHS, to E. Harden, New York, 1 March 2002. The New York City Municipal Archives were unable to find a marriage certificate for Margaret Howard and Charles Swift in their records.
54. Mariam Touba, N-YHS, to E. Harden, 1 March 2002.
55. Undated clipping from Springfield Republican from an issue after 22 April 1893, announcing the death of Margaret (Howard) Swift. It mentions that her husband “has been dead for many years.”
56. Howard Family Domestic History, genealogical table; London directories for 1892; 1891 Census for London (Kensington); National Probate Calendar (UK), 1945, for Louisa J. Swift.
57. 1891 Census for London (Kensington); National Probate Calendar (UK), 1891, for Alfred St. Johnston; Birmingham Daily Post, February 20, 1891.
58. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1891, for Alfred St. Johnston; Birmingham Daily Post, February 20, 1891.
59. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1942, for Mary (Swift) St. Johnston.
60. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1945, for Louisa J. Swift.

61. Wm. H. Swift to General J.G. Swift, New London, 27 January 1835, NYPL: Swift Papers; George W. Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, New York 27 June 1837; George W. Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, Springfield, 4 September 1837; Connecticut Gazette, February 2, 1825; Barbour Vital Records for New London, vol. 3, p. 237, and vol. 4, p. 21; “Mary Stewart Swift,” Memorial ID 129828842, findagrave.com; Hale Collection of Connecticut Cemetery Inscriptions, Connecticut State Library, Hartford, CT.
62. Barnes, Egotistigraphy, pp. 51–52.
63. Daily National Intelligencer (Washington, DC), March 26, 1846, p. 3, col. 5; entry of May 9 [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II; IGI for Surrey, England; Swift, William Henry (1800–1879), W.H. Swift to Gen. J.G. Swift, Washington, 24 October 1845 and 26 March 1846, USMAL: W.H. Swift Papers.
64. James Sanderson, comp., An Ironside Family History: A One-Name Study (1990), SoG; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1865, 1869, 1876, and 1879; 1871 Census for St. Briavels, Gloucestershire.
65. “2 Broadway Siffken & Ironside, merchants: F.E. Siffken and G.B. Ironside,” Street Directory for 1851, p. 66, N-YHS; New York City street directories from 1839–1840 through 1879–1880.
66. M. Welch, London, to E. Harden, 11 March 2002.
67. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1865, for his father, Charles Ironside, Esq.
68. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1879, for his sister, Caroline Letitia Ironside.
69. “Mary Stewart Swift,” Memorial ID 129828842, findagrave.com.
70. Anna Whistler to Deborah Haden, Scarsdale 10 December 1855, GUL: Whistler Collection, W465. She was contrasting their marriage to the marriage she had just witnessed of “a youthful couple,” and one of the things that troubled her in the Howard–de Stoeckl marriage was the age difference. As other materials indicate, Eliza became a baroness, not a countess.

STROGANOV, VASIL'CHIKOV, KUSHELEV

Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (7 December 1818 – 26 July 1864; see Image 299) was one of the four sons of Senator General-of-Cavalry Adjutant-General Count Sergei Grigorievich Stroganov (1794–1882) and Countess Natalia Pavlovna (Stroganova) Stroganova (8 March 1796 – 7 October 1872 OS). He is said to have been educated first in Dresden at the Kreuzschule.<sup>1</sup> He graduated from Moscow University in 1839 as a graduate student in jurisprudence. He was deeply interested in numismatics and collected medieval and modern European coins, on which he spent millions and of which he had a magnificent collection of more than 60,000 at his death.

Nicholas I (see Images 420–423), seeing Aleksandr Sergeevich on 8 March 1845 at the funeral of Countess Sofia Vladimirovna (Golitsyna) Stroganova (see Image 300), grandmother of the latter, appointed him an aide-de-camp. At the time of this appointment, he was an ensign in the Preobrazhenskii Guards Regiment and adjutant to the commander of the Field Army. Sometime after 5 September 1846, he married Countess Tat'iana Dmitrievna Vasil'chikova (19 March 1823 – 16 October 1880 OS; see Image 301), the younger sister of Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Kusheleva (6/18 December 1811 – 1874; see Image 303), wife of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (1802 – 17/29 February 1855; see Image 302), to whose estate the Gellibrands took Anna Whistler and Willie in September 1846 to experience a fête given by Count Kushelev for his peasants.<sup>2</sup> The two sisters were the daughters of General-of-Cavalry Dmitri Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (1788 – 5 December 1859; see Image 304) and Countess Adelaida Petrovna (Apraksina) Vasil'chikova (1751 – 8 March 1851).<sup>3</sup> Of their four daughters, Ekaterina Dmitrievna was the third daughter and Tat'iana Dmitrievna the youngest daughter. The surviving children of Aleksandr Sergeevich and Tat'iana Dmitrievna were Maria (1850–1914), Sergei (1852–1923), Elena (1855–1876), and Olga (1857–1944).

Aleksandr Sergeevich took part in the campaigns of 1849 (Hungary) and 1854 (the Crimea). He next commanded the First Rifle Guards Battalion. On 9 June 1857, he retired because of ill health, at the rank of colonel and “with uniform,” i.e., the right to continue wearing his uniform. On recovering, he was invited to return to service and was appointed both a colonel and an aide-de-camp to Emperor Alexander II, but continuing poor health prevented him from engaging in military service. In January 1864, he was promoted to actual state councilor (4th grade) and made master of the hunt to the emperor. He traveled to Wiesbaden for the cure and after successfully completing it journeyed back to Russia. On 25 July 1864, he returned home from the hunt to his estate in the village of Volyshovo in Pskov Province in seeming good health, but died suddenly during the night of 26 July, at the age of forty-five. He was a founder and member of the Imperial Archaeological Society, which was started in 1846, and from 1856 an acting member of the Odessa Society of History and Antiquities.<sup>4</sup>

* * *

Sofia Vladimirovna (Golitsyna) Stroganova<sup>5</sup> (11 November 1775 – 3 March 1845 OS; see Image 300) was the maternal grandmother of young Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov. She was the daughter of Prince Vladimir Borisovich Golitsyn (1731–1798) and Princess Natalia Petrovna Golitsyna (born Countess Chernysheva) (1741–1837). Like her siblings, she received her education primarily abroad as they accompanied their mother on the latter's trips around Europe. This peripatetic life and education affected their fluency in Russian, a not uncommon phenomenon among the upper circles of Russian society. Sofia Vladimirovna, upon her return home, set about correcting this flaw, which included making herself translate into Russian Dante's Inferno.

Memoirists record that in her youth she amazed all who knew her not only by her striking physical beauty but by her unusual qualities of mind and heart and her moral rectitude. In the last years of her life, now a bowed little old woman, she retained her forceful character, mental clarity, religious beliefs, and true understanding of what the welfare of one's native land means. She was considered the ideal of the true Russian woman. These qualities inspired the poet Gavrila Derzhavin (1743–1816) to dedicate to her a poem containing the lines: "Oh Sofia, how pleasant you are in your innocent beauty, like limpid water sparkling in the roseate dawn."

In 1793, she married Count Pavel Aleksandrovich Stroganov (1774–1817). After the birth of their only son, Aleksandr Pavlovich (1794–1814), the couple settled in St. Petersburg, where through her husband's friendship with Grand Duke Aleksandr Pavlovich (the future Alexander I; see Image 418), they moved in Court circles. She became very close to Grand Duke Aleksandr Pavlovich's wife, Grand Duchess Elizaveta Alekseevna (later Empress Maria Fyodorovna; see Images 415–416).

In the 1810s, tragedy struck her family. Her husband took their nineteen-year-old son into the active army as an ensign. On 23 February 1814, at the Battle of Craonne, the young man was decapitated by a bomb. In 1817, her husband died of tuberculosis. As lifetime heir to the Stroganov estate, she spent the rest of her life either at Marino, an estate in Novgorod Province, or at the Stroganov Palace in St. Petersburg, where she entertained St. Petersburg, Court, literary, and artistic society.

After the death of her husband, for some twenty-seven years she almost exclusively devoted herself to bringing order to the rundown state of the family's properties, especially those in the Perm area. She strove particularly to better the lives of her serfs. Soon after her husband's death, she conveyed to the serf, Volegov, whom she had put in charge of her lands, that he should first and foremost concern himself with the welfare of her serfs and only secondarily with the question of income from the estates. Persons participating in the administration of her estates were local inhabitants, former serfs, and their descendants. Those who needed specialized knowledge were educated first in schools set up by her in St. Petersburg, Moscow, and the village of Marino in Novgorod Province. They were even sent at her expense to institutions of higher learning in Western Europe. Many of them, even if they did not acquire an education beyond the schools set up by her, later left valuable academic works in the fields of local archaeology, history, ethnography, agriculture, and forestry. The abovementioned Volegov, for example, became a famous historian of the Stroganov family.

In addition to their son, Sofia Vladimirovna and Pavel Aleksandrovich had four daughters: Natalia (7 March 1796 – 7 October 1872), Aglaida (31 December 1799 – 12 February 1882), Adelaida (16 November 1802 – 11 June 1863), and Olga (1 June 1808 – 13 April 1837). Natalia, who married Count Sergei Grigorievich Stroganov (1794–1882), of another branch of the family, became the mother of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (1818–1864; see Image 299), whom Anna Whistler and her children met on the ship to St. Petersburg.

Upon the death of Sofia Vladimirovna, the St. Petersburg News carried the following announcement: “She will never be forgotten! She loved everything that was elegant, was a patron of literature and the fine arts, and was truly the mother of the poor. Sister and wife of two illustrious men of Russia, she upheld with dignity their lofty name and the glory that went with it.” Her funeral service was held in the Kazan Cathedral (see Image 126). She was buried in the Lazarus Church of the Alexander Nevsky Monastery. All of her estates, together with the title of Count, passed at her death to Sergei Grigorievich Stroganov, the husband of her eldest daughter, Natalia Pavlovna.

* * * * *

Prince Illarion Vasilievich Vasil'chikov<sup>6</sup> (21 February 1776 – 21 February 1847; see Image 310) was the son of Brigadier Vasilii Alekseevich Vasil'chikov and Ekaterina Illarionovna (Ovtsyna) Vasil'chikova (d. 1832). Registered in early childhood in the Izmailov regiment, he began his service as a non-commissioned officer in the Horse Guard in 1792 and on 1 January 1793 received the rank of cornet. His rise began in the reign of Paul I, who in 1799 appointed him a “gentleman of the bedchamber” (kamenger). His service at the Court and in the Guard brought him close to the heir to the throne, Grand Duke Aleksandr Pavlovich. When the latter became Alexander I (see Image 418), Vasil'chikov was made a major general and adjutant-general. Appointed in 1803 commander-in-chief of the Akhtyr Hussar Regiment, he participated with Alexander I in the campaign of 1807. The campaigns of 1812–1814 gave him the opportunity to demonstrate even further his military capability. For his participation at the battle of Borodino, where he was wounded, he was promoted to lieutenant general. At Kaiserswald, where he was wounded a second time, he beat the French, while at Katzbach, commanding the entire cavalry of the Silesian Army, he was again victorious. After Leipzig, he pursued the enemy to the Rhine. For his actions at Lapotière he was awarded the Order of St. George (2nd class). Upon the conclusion of the Paris Peace, he was sent to Moscow to deliver the news. In France, he formed the Life Guard Horse Grenadier Regiment and was appointed its commander-in-chief. In 1814, he was assigned the Guards Light Cavalry Division and in 1817 the Guard Corps. His position as corps commander-in-chief was difficult, because he had to battle both the machinations of the enemy and the over-anxiety and mistrust of Alexander I. The well-known Semenov Revolt (1820) (see events leading up to the Decembrist Rebellion) took place while he was in the army, for which he was subjected to much criticism. In 1821, he asked to be released from his duties and was appointed a member of the State Senate. He played a prominent role in the suppression of the Decembrist Rebellion, convincing Nicholas I of the necessity of taking decisive measures. When his proposal that the rebels must be met by gunfire was greeted by Nicholas with the reply that “Vasil’chikov was proposing he begin his reign by spilling the blood of his loyal citizens,” Vasil’chikov replied: “Yes, to save your Empire.” On Coronation Day, Vasil’chikov received the Order of St. Andrew the First-Called. In 1831, he was appointed to command the troops in St. Petersburg and its environs, and on 6 December of that year he received the title of count. In 1833, he was appointed inspector general of Cavalry and commander-in-chief of the Akhtyr Hussar Regiment. In 1838, he took on the role of president of the State Council and the Committee of Ministers. On 1 January 1839, he was awarded the title of prince. He died on 21 February 1847 after severe suffering. His funeral was held in the Preobrazhenskii Cathedral, and he was buried at his estate in Novgorod Province.

His first wife was Vera Petrovna (Protasova) Vasil’chikova (1780 – 2 October 1814), whom he married in 1801. His second wife was Tat’iana Vasilievna (Pashkova) (1793–1875). He was the uncle of Tat’iana Dmitrievna Vasil’chikova (see Image 301), fiancée of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov, Anna Whistler’s “young Count Strauganauf,” and of Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Vasil’chikova) Kusheleva (see Image 303).

The comments of Vasil’chikov’s contemporaries show him to have been the most attractive of all those who served Nicholas I. He was considered reasonable, truth-loving, unselfish, independent in his thinking, and a true knight of honor, and felt to have deservedly earned the trust of Alexander I and Nicholas I. He was one of the few who did not kowtow to the all-powerful Aleksei Andreevich Arakcheev (1769–1834; see Image 244), famous for the establishment of military colonies of Draconian discipline. When Nicholas I, while still Grand Duke, insulted the Guards officer, Norov, on parade, Vasil'chikov convinced him to apologize. Nicholas I, recalling his youthful hot temper, thanked Vasil'chikov for having insisted on the apology. Modest Korf (1800–1876) said Vasil'chikov was the only person who at all times and in all matters had free access to and free speech with the emperor. He was a person whom Nicholas I not only loved but esteemed as he did no one else. He was the one in whom his Monarch never suspected hidden motive, whom he trusted completely and unreservedly as a straightforward and loyal advisor, almost a mentor, and someone he considered and called a friend. On Vasil'chikov's death, Nicholas I said: "Monarchs should thank heaven for such people."

Anna Whistler and Willie witnessed the funeral procession on Tuesday, 25 February / 9 March 1847.

* * *

Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (1778–1859; see Image 304)<sup>7</sup> was also the son of Brigadier Vasilii Alekseevich Vasil'chikov and Ekaterina Illarionovna (Ovtsyna) Vasil'chikova. He was the younger brother of Illarion Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (1776–1847). At the age of seven, he was registered as a sergeant in the Preobrazhenskii Regiment. He entered active duty in 1794 in the Horse Guard and in 1796 was promoted to cornet. Like his brother, he moved ahead in his career during the reign of Paul I. In 1799, he was made an actual gentleman of the bedchamber (kamerger). At a time when most of his contemporaries remembered the final years of the reign of Paul I (see Image 417) with horror, Dmitrii Vasilievich retained the most pleasant memories of it as an unprecedented time of fun. In old age, he used to tell the story of a daring action on his part that could have brought the monarch's anger down upon him. Paul I had forbidden dancing the waltz. A lady whom Dmitrii Vasilievich was interested in told him at a ball that she wanted to waltz. He, in the name of Paul I, ordered the orchestra to play a waltz and danced with her. Paul I found that the couple danced the waltz beautifully, and from then on the ban was lifted.

In 1800, he was appointed a counselor to the State Expedition for Inspecting Accounts. In 1801 (now the reign of Alexander I), he was made captain in the Horse Guards Regiment, in 1802 promoted to colonel, and in 1804 again appointed actual gentleman of the bedchamber (kamerger). In 1808, he was transferred to the Akhtyr Hussar Regiment and participated in the campaign in Galicia in 1808 and in the Fatherland War in 1809, for which he received the Order of St. Vladimir (3rd class), and the Order of St. George (4th class), and the rank of major-general. In 1812 and in subsequent years, he displayed outstanding bravery, for which he received further orders: the Order of St. Anne (1st class) (Katzbach), the Order of St. George (3rd class) (Leipzig), the Order of St. Vladimir (2nd class) (Lapotiére), and a gold weapon. In 1814, he was put in command of a brigade in the Second Hussar Division, with which he entered Paris. In 1816, he was put in command of the First Ulan Division. Retired in 1822 because of illness, he again entered service in 1830, but this time attached to the Imperial Court as vice-president of the Imperial Commisary Office, and held the title of head of the Imperial Household Economy and Imperial Court Staff. In 1832, he was appointed master of the hunt in charge of organizing the Imperial Hunt. He was also put in charge of the household economy and staff of the court of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich (see Image 439). As of 1838, he was in charge of the Imperial Hunt and as of 1846 became a member of the State Council. He devoted a part of his time to social philanthropic institutions, first as member and from 1853 as president of the Council of Institutions of Social Welfare and trustee of several hospitals. He not only achieved the highest ranks, but also was the recipient of the highest orders of Russia, including the Order of St. Andrew the First-Called with diamonds. He died in 1859 and was buried at his estate in Novgorod Province.

Dmitrii Vasilievich was handsome and in character mild, merry, and lively. Because of his kindness, he was much loved by his subordinates. Ardent and brave, he was one of the outstanding cavalrists of his time. For the intrepid attack of his brigade against the French flank, Field Marshall Gebhard Leberecht von Blücher (1742–1819) kissed him with gusto on the battlefield in the presence of all the troops. A negative assessment of him does exist: the Decembrist, I.D. Iakushkin (1793–1857), called him a bad person.

From his marriage to Adelaida Petrovna Apraksina, he had four daughters: Elizaveta (1805–1890); Sofia (1809–1887); Ekaterina (6/18 December 1811 – 1874), the wife of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (see his biography in this essay); and Tat'iana (1823–1880), the fiancée of Count Alexandr Sergeevich Stroganov (1818–1864), the young man Anna Whistler and her family met on board their ship bound for St. Petersburg (see his biography in this essay).

* * * * *

Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev<sup>8</sup> (9/12 March 1802 – 17/29 February 1855; see Image 302) was the younger of the two sons of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (1754–1833) and Countess Liubov' Ilinichna (Bezborodko) Kusheleva (1783–1809). He began his service in 1819 in the Guards Horse Artillery. In 1827, he participated in the Russo–Persian War of 1826–1828 and was present at the taking of Echmiadzin. In 1828, he participated in the Russo–Turkish War of 1828–1829 and was promoted to captain for excellence at the Battle for Shumla. Sent from the environs of Silistria to St. Petersburg with dispatches, he was made aide-de-camp to Nicholas I. In 1831, he was promoted to colonel. As of 1838, he was vice-director of the Artillery Department of the Ministry of War. In 1839, he was promoted to major-general and appointed to the emperor's suite. As of 1840, he became director of the Artillery Department of the Ministry of War. Starting in 1846, he was a member of the War Council.

He was married to Ekaterina Dmitrievna Vasil'chikova (6/18 December 1811 – 1874; see Image 303), third daughter of General-of-Calvary Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (1788–1859) and Countess Adelaida Petrovna (Apraksina) Vasil'chikova (1785–1851). The Kushelevs were childless, but had an adopted daughter, Maria Grigorievna Bogdanova (c. 1840 – Florence, Italy 23 July 1901), called “Mania” for short, who, when Anna Whistler attended their fête for their peasants in September 1846, was about five years and seven months old.

At the fête, Anna Whistler learned brief details of the history of the fortunate child.

The official history of the child is as follows. According to a certificate issued on 17 January 1845 by the St. Petersburg Temporary Board of Decorum, Major General Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev expressed the wish to take it upon himself to bring up a baby of the female sex that had been abandoned to his care on 6 January 1841 by a person or persons unknown and christened Maria, having as his intention that when this foundling should reach maturity she could on the basis of articles 932 and 1082 of Vol. 9 concerning estates, be registered according to his choice for some kind of life in the taxpaying class. In his last will and testament, dated 6 April (OS) 1853, Count Kushelev, stating that he was childless, asked his nephews, who were his heirs, to honor his wish that Maria receive forty thousand silver rubles, which were to be given to his wife for safekeeping. His heirs agreed to carry out his wishes. In the event that his wife should die at the same time as he, he willed to Maria, “our ward, and my godchild,” property that he was otherwise leaving to his wife: two houses with all effects and the farm Ligovo. Ligovo could be sold and the money deposited in the bank for safekeeping until Maria’s marriage. She was also to receive all the capital and monies that were in the form of securities, except for a portion that was to go to the Kushelev’s steward, Zakhar Zakharovich Maklotin. On 14 November 1856 (OS), the Ministry of Justice sent a proposal to the governing Senate to the effect that Emperor Aleksandr Nikolaevich had granted the petition of Count Kushelev’s widow that her ward, Maria Grigorievna Bogdanova, be permitted to take the name of Kushelev, with the right to possess those inhabited estates which might be willed to her by the Countess Kusheleva. Maria Bogdanova was permitted to take the name Kushelev with full noble privileges but without noble title. This royal permission granted her was not, however, to serve as a precedent.

Maria Grigorievna Kusheleva was not beautiful, but was considered to possess great charm and was famous for her sharp tongue. She married first on 1/13 August 1858 in St. Petersburg Prince Boris Nikolaevich Golitsyn (1833–1888). She divorced him in 1870 and married the Italian, Marquis Incontri, and lived in Florence, where she died. From her first marriage she had a son, Boris Borisovich Golitsyn (1862–1916), who became a famous physicist and mathematician and a specialist in seismology.<sup>9</sup>

Kushelev was one of numerous aristocrats who engaged in experimental agriculture. His estate, Ligovo, was located on the Peterhof Road at the thirteenth verst, at the turnoff for Krasnoe Selo. He had acquired it in 1840 and enlarged it in 1844 through his purchase of the bordering dachas of the English merchant N.A. Blando and of Privy Councilor M.P. Pozin. In 1845, the estate amounted to 2700 desiatinas of land (1 d. = 2.7 acres), consisting of farmland, meadows, woods, marshes, buildings, gardens, conservatories, and a lake. The main focus in planting on his model farm was oats, hay, and potatoes. The dairy was new and in 1845 had not yet been completed. Surplus milk was sold in the city. The buildings were constructed of bricks made at Ligovo's own factory, which was famous in the surrounding countryside. The roofs covering the majority of the farm buildings were made of a paper that was cheaper and lighter than iron and very strong. The raising of horses was considered to be at such a level of perfection that horse connoisseurs came there to observe the procedures used. A Scotsman, Richard Watson McLothlin (c. 1794 – 14/26 May 1861), was the expert in charge of horsebreeding, as well as overseer of the entire estate. The Ligovo peasants numbered more than three hundred. Everyone connected with the estate was very well treated, as the wills of both Grigorii Grigorievich and his wife show.

The Kushelevs also had a mansion on the corner of Palace Square (or Quay) in St. Petersburg. Two governesses, Fanny Swan and Mrs. Willis, widow, were residing there in 1845. In 1846, Andrei Ivanovich Shtakensneider (1802–1865), who was considered at the time one of the best architects and was the personal favorite of Nicholas I, designed and built for the Kushelevs a mansion in the early Florentine Renaissance style on the Fontanka Embankment. The artist Luigi Premazzi (1814–1891) executed exquisite watercolors of this building and its interiors in the second half of the 1840s (see Image 151).

NOTES

1. The archives of the Dresden Kreuzschule do not show that young Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov was a student there (Tilo Bönicke, Stadtarchiv, Landeshauptstadt Dresden, to E. Harden, 9 August 1994).
2. Olenina, Dnevnik, p. 199n170. Some of the details of the life of the childless Kushelevs and their adopted daughter have already been explained in Notes 505–511, accompanying the entry for Saturday Sept. 12th [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II.
3. RGIA: Fond 1162, op. 6, d. 72. O sluzhbe D.V. Vasil'chikova [About the Service Record of D.V. Vasil'chikov].
4. This biography of Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (all dates OS) is a composite from the following sources: Nicolas Ikonnikov, La Noblesse de Russie, vol. P2: Stcherbinine –Sviatopolk-Mirsky (Paris: printed by the author, 1961), p. 437; V.V. Kvadri and D.A. Shenk, Stoletie Voennogo Ministerstva 1802–1902. Imperatorskaia glavnaia kvartira. Istorii gosudarevoi svity [The One Hundredth Anniversary of the War Ministry 1802-1902. Imperial Headquarters. A History of the Emperor's Suite], vol. 2, pt. 3, of Tsarstvovanie imperatora Nikolaia I [The Reign of Emperor Nicholas I] (St. Petersburg, 1908), pp. 561, 580, “Appendix 81,” pp. 310, 342; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 19, pp. 474, 488; N.M. Kol'manov, “Dom i familiia grafov Stroganovykh” [“The House and Family of the Counts Stroganov”], Russkaia starina 54 (April 1887): pp. 82–84; B. Kene, “Nekrolog” [“Obituary”], Zapiski Odesskogo Obshchestva istorii i drevnostei [Notes of the Odessa Society of History and Antiquities] 6 (1867): pp. 487–490; Bon B. de Koehne, “Nécrologie” [“Obituary”], Revue Belge de Numismatique et de Sigillographie [Belgian Review of Numismatics and Sigillography] 3, 4th series (1865): pp. 271–275; A.N. Onuchin, comp., Rod Stroganovykh: Prakticheskoe posobie dlia istorikov, kraevedov i genealogov [The Stroganov Family: Practical Handbook for Historians, Local Historians and Genealogists] (Perm', Russia: Permskaia oblastnaia organizatsiia ob-va Znanie, 1990), pp. 20, 21–22, 23, 24, 25–26; S.O. Kuznetsov, “‘Ia poterial veru v zemnoe shchastie.' Zhizn' grafa S.A. Stroganova v Rossii (1852–1907)” [“I Have Lost Faith in Earthly Happiness: The Life of Count S.A. Stroganov in Russia (1852–1907)”], in Kraevedcheskie chteniia Porkhov-Kholomki Materialy nauchnoi konferentsii 21–22 sentiabria 2001 g. [Local History Readings: Porkhov-Kholomki Materials from an Academic Conference held 21–23 September 2001], ed. L.T. Vasil'eva (Pskov, Russia: Pskovskii oblastnoi Institut povysheniia kvalifikatsii rabotnikov obrazovaniia, 2001), pp. 46–72; S.O. Kuznetsov, Dvortsy

Stroganovykh [Palaces of the Stroganovs] (St. Petersburg: Almaz, 1998), pp. 127–128; P.N. Petrov, Istoriia rodov russkogo dvorianstva [A Genealogical History of the Russian Aristocracy], 2 bks. (St. Petersburg: Knigoizdatel'stvo German Goppe, 1886; reprint, Moscow: Sovremennik, 1991), bk. 2, vol. 2, pp. 151–154). Those interested in a description of his coin collection should read the obituaries by Koehne. Those interested in the lives of his children should read Kuznetsov's essay. For a description of his mother, see the article by Kol'manov.

5. This biography of Sofia Vladimirovna Stroganova (all dates OS) is a composite from the following sources: Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 53, Thursday, March 8 [March 20 NS], 1845, p. 233; O. Bazankur, “Zabytye khudozhnitsy” [“Forgotten Women Artists”], Stolitsa i usad'ba [The Capital and the Country Estate] 70 (15 November 1916): pp. 15–17; Prince Paul Dolgorouky, A Handbook of the Principal Families in Russia, translated from the French by F.Z. (London: James Ridgway, 1858), p. 121; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 19, pp. 477–480; N.I. Grech, Zapiski o moei zhizni [Notes about My Life] (St. Petersburg: A.S. Suvorin, 1866; reprint, Moscow: Kniga, 1990), pp. 123, 128, 196, 204, 220, 290, 308, 323–335, 350; E.I. Egorova, “500 let roda Stroganovykh, metsenatov iskusstv” [“500 Years of the Family Stroganov, Philanthropists of the Fine Arts”], in Stroganovy i Permskii kraï: Materialy nauchnoi konferentsii, 4-6 fevralia 1992 g. [The Stroganovs and the Perm' Area: Materials from an Academic Conference, February 4–6, 1992] (Perm: P.F. Kamenskii, 1992), pp. 33–34; Lotman, Makarenko, and Pavlova, Litsa Pushkinskoi èpokhi v risunkakh i akvareliakh, pp. 299–300. For portraits of Sofia Vladimirovna Stroganova see Rovinskii, Podrobnyi slovar' russkikh gravyorov, vol. 1, pp. 54, 255, 964, 976 and vol. 2, pp. 40, 176, 634, 640.
6. This biography of Prince Illarion Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (all dates OS) is a composite from the following sources: Russkie portrety XVIII i XIX stoletii [Russian Portraits of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries], 5 vols. (St. Petersburg: Izdanie velikogo kniazia Nikolaia Mikhailovicha, 1905–1909), vol. 3, pp. 701–703; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar'; Olenina, Dnevnik, p. 179n58; Sanktpeterburgskie vedomosti 44, Tuesday, February 25 [March 9 NS], 1847, p. 203; Karabanov, “Stats-damy i freiliny,” p. 458; Bloomfield, Reminiscences, vol. 1, pp. 236–237. Lady Bloomfield described his corpse and funeral ceremony. Dates given by her are New Style.

7. This biography of Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov (all dates OS) is drawn from Russkii portrety, vol. 3, pp. 703–705.
8. This biography of Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (all dates OS) is a composite from the following sources: V. Fedorchenko, Dvorianskie rody, proslavivshie otechestvo. Èntsiklopediia dvorianskikh rodov [Noble Families That Brought Glory to the Fatherland: An Encyclopedia of Noble Families], Chronicles, Portraits, Biographies (Krasnoiarsk: BONUS; Moscow: OLMA, 2004), pp. 227–229; “Vzgliad na myzu Ligovo,” pp. 58–67; Gorbatenko, Petergofskaiia doroga, pp. 151–152, 156–170; RGIA: Fond 1162, op. 6, d. 72. O sluzhbe D.V. Vasil'chikova [Service Record of D.V. Vasil'chikov]; RGIA: Fond 1343, op. 23, d. 11265. O vnesenii gerba grafa Kusheleva [Concerning the entering of the coat-of-arms of Count Kuselev], fols. 39r and v; RGIA: Fond 971, op. 1, d. 155. Dokumenty po razdelu imenii posle smerti gr. Gr. Gr. Kusheleva mezhdū ego plemiannikami gr. Kushelevymi–Bezborodko i ego zhenoi gr. Ek. Dm. Kushelevoi: ... 1816–26 fev. 1856. Kopii i podlinniki [Documents concerning the division of Count Gr. Gr. Kushelev's estates, after his death, among his nephews, the counts Kushelev-Bezborodko, and his wife, Countess Ek. Dm. Kusheleva: ... 1816–26 Feb. 1856 (OS). Copies and originals], fols. 8r and v, 10 r and v, 11r, 18r, 50r; BRBC STP 1845, fols. 55, 63; Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn' Peterburga, p. 49; Polovtsov, Russkii biograficheskii slovar', vol. 9, pp. 700–701.
9. This biography of Maria Grigorievna (first surname: Bogdanova) Kusheleva (all dates OS) is a composite from the following sources: Ivanov, Doma i liudi, pp. 423–424, 425–426; RGIA: Fond 1343, op. 23, d. 11265. O vnesenii gerba grafa Kusheleva, fols. 38r, 39r and v; Fond 971, op. 1, d. 155. Dokumenty po razdelu, fols. 8r and v, 10 r and v, 11r and v, 18r, 50r; BRBC STP 1845, fols. 55, 63; PREC STP, no 6921; Petrovskaia, Kontsertnaia zhizn' Peterburga, p. 49; entry for Saturday September 12th [1846], NYPL: AWPDP, Part II, and accompanying Notes 505–511. A detailed account of the lifestyle and character of Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Kusheleva and her husband, Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev, and the fate of their house on the Fontanka can be found in the abovementioned Doma i liudi as well (pp. 420–425).

THAYER AND PARKER

Sylvanus Thayer (Braintree, MA 9 June 1785 – Braintree, MA 7 September 1872; see Image 318) “received a classical education at Dartmouth College, N.H.,” graduating in 1807;<sup>1</sup> was a “Cadet of the Military Academy, Mar. 20, 1807, to Feb. 23, 1808, when he was graduated and promoted in the Army to Second Lieut., Corps of Engineers, Feb. 23, 1808”;<sup>2</sup> “served on various engineer and ordnance duties, 1808–12; was engaged in the War of 1812–15 against Great Britain, receiving for his ‘distinguished and meritorious services’ the brevet of Major, Feb. 20, 1815 ... and July 28, 1817, at the age of thirty-two, assumed the responsible trust of Superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy, which he found in a deplorably chaotic condition.”<sup>3</sup> His “military experience in the field, his foreign travel and associations, his familiarity with the polite usages of society, his dignified bearing and refined mode of life, and, above all, his scientific acquirements, enlarged professional reading, and familiarity with the French and dead languages, gave him immense vantage ground for success.”<sup>4</sup> In his sixteen years as superintendent, “he built up the Military Academy from an elementary school to a model seminary of science and soldiership.”<sup>5</sup> On 3 March 1823, Thayer was made a brevet lieutenant-colonel “for distinguished and meritorious services” during his superintendency and “in 1826 ... recommended by General [Winfield] Scott [see Image 52] to be brevetted a Colonel” for this achievement.<sup>6</sup> But “when, in 1829, General Andrew Jackson ... became President of the United States,” he and Thayer clashed, which eventually resulted in Thayer’s request “to be placed upon other duty”; he was relieved of his superintendency on 1 July 1833.<sup>7</sup> He “was made a member of the Board of Engineers, and was also charged with the planning and building of the fortifications and other public works in and about Boston Harbor.”<sup>8</sup> He served as “Superintending Engineer of the construction of Fts. Warren and Independence, Boston Harbor ... 1833–43, continuing the direction of those works while on professional duty in Europe, till 1846.”<sup>9</sup>

Charles Collins Parker (1823–1848; see Image 319) was the son of General Daniel (1782–1846) and Ann (Collins) Parker. The elder Parker was born in Shirley, Massachusetts, and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1801. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced in Charlestown, Massachusetts. In 1810, he became chief clerk in the War Department and served in this position until 1814, when he was commissioned adjutant and inspector general with the rank of brigadier general. He was paymaster general in 1821–1822 and in 1822 was superseded and dropped from the army. He returned to his law practice from 1822 to 1841, when he again became chief clerk of the War Department, a position he held until his death.<sup>10</sup>

Charles Collins Parker was born on 3 August 1823 in Washington, DC. He received his BA from Yale University in 1842. Recommended by General Winfield Scott, he entered the United States Military Academy on 1 July 1842, but resigned on 8 September 1842 and entered the University of Pennsylvania Medical Department in October 1842.<sup>11</sup> In 1843, he was presented with the opportunity to travel through Europe as companion to Colonel Sylvanus Thayer.

Colonel Thayer had had a terrible illness at Norfolk and had “been ever since a miserable, ailing body with legs bandaged from feet to knees.” He was in his thirty-seventh year of service, during which he had “not asked or recd a furlough or leave of absence for a single day.” He now wanted two years off.<sup>12</sup> He intended to “keep in constant motion during the mild weather and purpose[d] visiting the most interesting places in the British Isles, Germany, France, Italy and probably Spain” and wintering in Naples unless he decided “to make a short trip to Egypt.”<sup>13</sup> He was delighted to have Charles Parker as his traveling companion and expressed his willingness to confer with him about the itinerary, sensing it might “be too wide a range to suit [the young man’s] views.”<sup>14</sup>

As the months passed, the departure was postponed several times. In response to Charles’s impatience at Thayer’s insistence that he could only depart when his professional duties and personal affairs were in order, Thayer urged that Charles apply himself to the study of German and French to be “better qualified ... to profit by his travels.”<sup>15</sup> Finally, around 10 December 1843, Thayer and Charles Parker met in New York. Thayer was “charmed with his personal appearance and deportment and anticipate[d] much satisfaction and happiness in his companionship.”<sup>16</sup> In answer to an anxious letter from Daniel Parker, who feared that

Thayer felt “too much the responsibility of having Charles with [him] on his travels,” Thayer wrote a touching response: “Far, far from it on my honor. Without the prospect of having him with me I doubt whether I could have mustered courage enough to go to Europe at all. I could not endure the thought of being in foreign countries at my age and present state of health without a friend near me. Altho’ my personal acquaintance with him is but slight I think that I know him well and feel sure that he is all I could wish. I am truly gratified that you think it will be best for him to accompany me every where. Permit me to add that I have a due sense of all that you have done for me. My heart is full to overflowing.”<sup>17</sup> They sailed on the Packet Ship Liverpool on 22 December 1843.<sup>18</sup>

Thayer was accorded special treatment. United States consuls in Europe were informed that Colonel Thayer would be traveling “for a year or two in Europe for the benefit of his health” and would wish “to see whatever may be most interesting without encountering any great fatigue.” He would “be accompanied in all his travels by Charles Collins Parker.”<sup>19</sup> Commanders of U.S. Navy vessels in the Mediterranean were informed that if they could offer accommodation to the two “from one port to another, without deviating from ... course,” this would be desirable.<sup>20</sup>

Although Thayer “was going to Europe primarily for his health,” his intention was “also to visit points of greatest interest to the military.”<sup>21</sup> He was supplied by the Ordnance Office with a list of “objects requiring [his] attention,”<sup>22</sup> but it was suggested that “he might have a ‘Carte Blanche’ in relation to all Military information.”<sup>23</sup> Thayer and Parker arrived in Paris on 25 January 1844. On 15 March, Thayer announced that he would set out in the middle of March “for St. Petersburg passing through Belgium, Holland & thence to Hamburgh, Copenhagen, Stockholm,” and that his “health continue[d] to be about the same as it ha[d] been during the last year.”<sup>24</sup> Anna Whistler’s diary entries for 17, 19, and 22 July 1844 show that the two were then in St. Petersburg.

A note of 7/19 July 1844 from Col. Charles S. Todd (see Image 278), envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia, to Sir James Wylie (see Image 298), Baronet, Inspector General of Hospitals, St. Petersburg, indicated that “they may wish to visit the interesting Military Hospitals.”<sup>25</sup> On 12/24 July, Todd expressed the hope that they might “find time to visit [him] again” and suggested they see the “public Lawns, the Ancient Armoury & the Observatory at Pulkova.”<sup>26</sup>

Parker wished to leave Thayer in Italy in November 1844 and to go on his own to Paris to hear medical lectures, rejoining Thayer in March 1845. Although advised by his father and others that he should “keep with the Col. wherever he goes and see all he can under his direction and when he can no longer have that advantage he can return and study anatomy etc. and then go again to Paris by himself,” Parker continued to press the issue, so that in the end his father left the matter to him under Thayer’s advice.<sup>27</sup> They traveled through parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland.<sup>28</sup> Thayer wrote a friend that Parker “accompanied me everywhere except to Greece & Egypt & a part of Italy.”<sup>29</sup>

Thayer, improved in health, arrived back in New York on 2 June 1846.<sup>30</sup> No mention is made of whether Parker accompanied him back. Thayer had expressed to the U.S. Legation when last in Berlin “a wish to procure certain information from the Russian government, upon the subject of its military administration.”<sup>31</sup> Consul Theodore S. Fay applied to the Russian War Department through the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and a number of manuscripts on the subject were received and forwarded to Thayer in Boston through the American War Department.<sup>32</sup> Thayer returned to his work in Massachusetts constructing forts and coast defenses. He was made a colonel in the Corps of Engineers on 3 March 1863 and brevet brigadier general in the U.S. Army on 31 May 1863 “for long and faithful service.”<sup>33</sup> He was on sick leave from 1858 to 1863 and “retired from active service, July 1, 1863, under the law of June 17, 1862, having been borne on the Army Register more than 45 years.”<sup>34</sup> He returned to a secluded life in Braintree, Massachusetts, where he died at the age of eighty-seven.<sup>35</sup>

No mention is made of whether Charles Collins Parker accompanied Thayer back to the United States in 1846. He received the MD degree from the University of Pennsylvania on 3 April 1846 and practiced in Philadelphia. The subject of his thesis was diseases of the heart. He married on 30 September 1847 Anna Coleman, daughter of James Coleman, ironmaster at Elizabeth Furnace near Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He died in Philadelphia at the age of twenty-five on 28 December 1848 and is buried in the Churchyard of the Redeemer in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. Their daughter, Charlotte Collins Parker (Mrs. James Rawle after marriage), was born after his death.<sup>36</sup>

NOTES

1. Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, p. 83.
2. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 81.
3. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 83.
4. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 83.
5. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 84.
6. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 86.
7. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 86.
8. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 86.
9. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 82.
10. Index, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
11. This biography of Charles C. Parker is a composite from the following sources: CV of Charles C. Parker, prepared by his son-in-law, Wm. Rawle, University of Pennsylvania Archives; Yale Records of the Class of 1842 for 45 years, Yale University Alumni Archives, New Haven, CT; USMA Alumni Archives; Joel T. Loeb, HSP, to E. Harden, 7 June 1989; Thomas A Horrocks, Library of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, Historical Collection, to E. Harden, 5 September 1989.
12. Sylvanus Thayer to General Daniel Parker, Fort Warren, 22 Oct. 1843, Daniel Parker Papers, HSP.
13. Sylvanus Thayer to Daniel Parker, Boston, 29 April 1843, Daniel Parker Papers, HSP.
14. Sylvanus Thayer to Daniel Parker, Boston, 29 April 1843.
15. Sylvanus Thayer to Daniel Parker, Fort Warren, 29 July 1843, 2 Sept. 1843, 8 Oct. 1843, Daniel Parker Papers, HSP.
16. Sylvanus Thayer to Daniel Parker, American Hotel, NY, 11 Dec. 1843, Daniel Parker Papers, HSP. The application for a passport submitted for Charles Collins Parker by his father states that he was 5'10" tall, had blue eyes, light brown hair, a light complexion, round face, high forehead, short nose and chin, and small mouth (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 10).

17. Sylvanus Thayer to Daniel Parker, New York, Wednesday evening (10 oclock) 20 Dec. [18]43, Daniel Parker Papers, HSP.
18. New York Herald, December 22, 1843.
19. Letter from Hugh S. Legaré, Secretary ad interim, Department of State, Washington, 9 June 1843, vol. 6, USMAL: Thayer Papers
20. A. John Smith, Acting Secretary of the Navy, Navy Dept., 13 June 1843, vol. 6, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
21. Hülsemann to Prince Metternich-Winnebourg, New York, 14 July 1843 vol. 6, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
22. Lt. Col. George Talcott to Hon. J.M. Porter, Sec’y of War, 1 Nov. 1843, vol. 6, Ordnance Office, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
23. Lt. Col. George Talcott to Hon. J.M. Porter, Sec’y of War, 1 Nov. 1843, vol. 6, Ordnance Office, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
24. S. Thayer to Col. J.G. Totten, Chief Engineer, 15 March 1844, vol. 7, Paris, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
25. Col. C.S. Todd to Sir James Wylie, Baronet, Inspector Genl. of Hospitals, 7/19 July 1844, vol. 7, Tsarskoe Selo, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
26. C.S. Todd [to S. Thayer], 12/24 July 1844, vol. 7, Tsarskoe Selo, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
27. Daniel Parker to [S. Thayer], 1 Sept. 1844, vol. 7, Washington, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
28. S. Thayer to J.G. Totten, 27 July 1845, London, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
29. S. Thayer to Dr. George C. Shattuck, London, October 7, 1845, Shattuck Family Papers (1720–1972), MHS.
30. S. Thayer to Col. Ichabod R. Chadbourne, 28 June 1846, vol. 8, New York, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
31. Theodore S. Fay to S. Thayer, Berlin, 26 March 1846, vol. 8, USMAL: Thayer Papers.
32. Theodore S. Fay to S. Thayer, Berlin, 26 March 1846.
33. Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, p. 82.
34. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 82.
35. Cullum, vol. 1, p. 87.
36. See Note 11 in this biography regarding the sources for the biography of Charles Collins Parker.

*WHISTLER, SWIFT, KINGSLEY, MCNEILL, CAMMANN, RODEWALD, FLAGG, BOARDMAN,
GIBBS, CHEW, PALMER, EASTERBROOK,
LORILLARD, DUNSCOMBE, VALLANCE, BOHLEN, HALBACH, FAIRFAX*

George Washington Whistler (19 May 1800 – 7 April 1849; see Images 7–8, 21) was born at Fort Wayne, Northwest Territory (now Indiana). He was one of the fifteen children and youngest son of Major John Whistler (Ulster County, Ireland 1758 – Bellefontaine, MO 2 September 1829), commandant of Fort Wayne, and Anne (Bishop) Whistler (Ireland 1760 – Newport, Campbell, KY 5 April 1814).<sup>1</sup> His fourteen siblings were Edward (Pennsylvania c. 1780 – Ohio 1834), William (Hagerstown, MD c. 1782 – Newport, Campbell County, KY 4 December 1863), Sarah (Hagerstown, MD 26 September 1786 – Detroit, MI 4 October 1874), John (Hagerstown, MD c. 1787 – Detroit, MI, home of James and Sarah (Whistler) Abbott 1 December 1813); Samuel and an unnamed twin (Hagerstown, MD b. and d. c. 1788), Catherine (Hagerstown, MD 1788 – Detroit, MI 14 October 1874), Rebecca (c. 1790–1826), Eliza (c. 1791 – Fort Howard, Michigan Territory [now Green Bay, WI] – 4 June 1823), Ann (Fort Washington [near Cincinnati], OH 1 September 1794 – Litchfield, CT 29 March 1829), James A. (c. 1796 – Baton Rouge, LA 11 October 1843), Harriet (Fort Wayne, Northwest Territory [now Indiana] 1798 – Chicago, IL 14 January 1873), Charles (c. 1799 – Louisville, KY 15 January 1831), and Caroline Frances Abbott (Detroit, MI 25 December 1802 – Sandwich [now Windsor], ON, Canada 31 December 1842).<sup>2</sup> Only two are mentioned in the diaries: his eldest brother, William (see Image 34), and his brother James.

George Washington Whistler was appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point in July 1814 and graduated in July 1819 with the rank of second lieutenant in the Artillery Corps. He served as a topographer in 1819 and again in 1820–1821. In 1821–1822, he was assistant professor of drawing at West Point. From 1822 to 1828, he was attached to the commission tracing the international boundary between Lake Superior and Lake of the Woods. In August 1829, he was promoted to first lieutenant. In 1830, together with his future brother-in-law William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31), he surveyed the route and supervised the initial construction of the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad. In 1831–1832, they supervised construction of the Paterson and Hudson River Railroad in New Jersey. In 1832–1833, they surveyed the route and began the construction of the Stonington Railroad from Providence, Rhode Island, to Stonington, Connecticut. From 1834 to 1837, Whistler was superintendent of the machine shops of the Proprietors of Locks and Canals of Lowell, Massachusetts, where he was chiefly involved in designing, building, and selecting locomotives for the Boston and Lowell Railroad, which was completed in May 1835. In 1837, in addition to his completing the construction of the Stonington Railroad, he and McNeill surveyed the Nashua–Concord (New Hampshire) portion of the Concord Railroad. Whistler’s involvement, from sometime in the 1830s to 1842, in the building of the Western Railroad (Boston–Worcester–Springfield–Greenbush, NY) lay chiefly in planning and supervising the construction of the section over the Berkshire Hills. He worked on this project with his two brothers-in-law, Captain William Henry Swift and Major William Gibbs McNeill. By early 1840, because of Swift’s resignation and the expiration of McNeill’s contract, only Whistler was left to supervise the completion of the Western Railroad, which formally opened on 4 January 1842.

On 11 May 1842, Whistler signed a contract with the Russian government to be the consulting engineer for the building of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. The St. Petersburg diaries (1843–1848) of his wife, Anna (McNeill) Whistler (1804–1881; see Images 1–5), relate in great detail both his professional and personal life in Russia. Gradually, Whistler’s health became undermined by the worsening of his heart condition, exacerbated by cholera, and in April 1849 he died with his work unfinished.<sup>3</sup>

Whistler married twice. His first wife, with whom he eloped in 1821, was Mary Roberdeau Swift (8 August 1804 – 9 December 1827; see Image 10). They had three children: George William (1822–1869; see Images 12–13), Joseph Swift (1824–1840), and Deborah Delano (1825–1908; see Images 17–19, 21). The biographies of George William and Deborah Delano in the 1840s are taken up in extensive detail in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and, for George William, in the Winans biography as well, and will not be discussed in this essay. Anna Whistler did remark, however, that January first of each year, the day Joseph Swift Whistler died in 1840, had become for her “a consecrated day.”

Whistler married secondly in 1831 Anna Matilda McNeill (27 September 1804 – 1 January 1881). They had five sons: James Abbott (1834–1903; see Images 24–29), William McNeill (1836–1900; see Images 27, 30), Kirk Boott (1838–1842), Charles Donald (1841–1843), and John Bouttatz (1845–1846). The biographies of James Abbott and William McNeill in the 1840s are taken up in extensive detail in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and will not be discussed in this essay. The biographies of their three siblings, who died young, will also not be discussed in this essay, as Anna Whistler recorded the deaths of Charles Donald and John Bouttatz in detail in the diaries, referred to all three of them on the anniversaries of their deaths, and delighted in remarking on their baby ways even after their deaths.

* * *

William Whistler (Hagerstown, MD c. 1782 – Newport, Kentucky 4 December 1863; see Image 34)<sup>4</sup> was an officer in the U.S. Army. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the First Infantry in 1801. He participated as a first lieutenant in the Battle of Maguaga, Michigan, 9 August 1812, where the Americans gained a complete victory. On 16 August 1812, he was taken prisoner, and on the last day of 1812 he became a captain. He was stationed at Green Bay, Wisconsin, from 1817 to 1819, and in 1820 was temporarily in command. He was brevetted major 31 December 1822, for ten years’ faithful service in one grade. He was again at Green Bay in 1826, where he remained for two years as commandant. He was then sent to Fort Niagara. In 1832, he was sent to regarrison Fort Dearborn. In July 1834, at Mackinac, he was promoted to lieutenant colonel and assigned to the Seventh Infantry. From August 1835 to 10 September 1835, he was commandant of Fort Gibson, again from 20 April to 5 May 1836, and again from 29 January to 6 February 1839. On 7 March 1839, the Seventh Infantry, which had been stationed at Fort Gibson for almost twenty years, received orders to proceed to Fort Smith, from where they traveled by keel boats to Little Rock and from there to Tampa Bay, Florida, to take part in the wretched campaign to drive out the few remaining Seminoles. Lt. Colonel Whistler was on several occasions a member of a court martial of mutinous soldiers. He became a full colonel in July 1845 and was put in command of the Fourth Infantry. He participated in the Mexican War. In 1846, at Metamoros, Mexico, he was found guilty of charges of disobedience of orders, drunkenness on duty and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline. He was sentenced to be cashiered. President James K. Polk (see Image 50) disapproved the sentence and, on 6 October 1846, ordered him on duty. From the close of the War with Mexico to his retirement in 1861, he was stationed at Detroit, Michigan, and Madison Barracks, New York. He married on 30 May 1802 in Detroit, Michigan, Mary Julia Fearson (1787–1878). They were they were the parents of six surviving children: John Harrison (1807–1873), Caroline Frances (Whistler) Bloodgood (1810–1893), Mary Ann (Whistler) Paul (1815–1871), Gwinthlean Harriet (Whistler) Kinzie (1818–1894), Joseph Nelson Garland (1822–1899; see Image 35), and Louise Ann (Whistler) Helm (1828–1883).

* * *

The daughter of William Whistler and Mary Julia (Fearson) Whistler, Caroline Frances (Fort Wayne, IN 12 March 1810 – Milwaukee, WI 26 November 1893), her husband, and two of her children are mentioned in the diaries.<sup>5</sup> She married in about 1826 Lt. William Bloodgood (Albany, NY 1801 – Nashotah, WI 1 August 1874), USMA Class of 1824. He had served in Sackett's Harbor, New York; on frontier duty at Fort Howard, Wisconsin; in Bangor, Maine; and at Fort Niagara, New York; with two years' tour of duty on recruiting service. He had resigned on 31 December 1836, at the rank of first lieutenant, Second Infantry. In civilian life, he became a farmer and practiced his profession at Pine Grove, New York, near Albany, from 1837 to 1854, and then at Nashotah, Wisconsin, from 1859 until his death. It is at Pine Grove that Anna Whistler left Charles Donald, her fourth child, for at least a week, when she traveled to Geneva, New York, for the wedding of Louisa Josephine Swift on 22 June 1843.

Caroline (Whistler) Bloodgood, called “Cousin Carri” in the diaries, appears there in Anna Whistler’s reminiscences of those days in Pine Grove and of hurrying back to Stonington, where James was seriously ill. Cousin Carri later apparently suffered an accident of some kind that required the use of crutches, and gladdening news of her recovery and that of “her restored husband and snug home” suggest a series of family misfortunes. All of this information was conveyed to Deborah Whistler by her first cousin, Eliza Van Vechten, in two separate letters.

The two Bloodgood children also mentioned are George (Maine 1830 – Jackson, MI January 1909), who in 1843 was about thirteen years old, and Wilkins (1841–1862), who was about two years old. George later became an Episcopalian minister. Wilkins served during the Civil War in the First Michigan Infantry, enlisting on 1 May 1861 at Detroit. He died (at the rank of captain) on 23 September 1862 at Cliffbourne Hospital in Washington, DC, from wounds received in action at Bull Run, Virginia, on 30 August 1862.

* * *

The son of William Whistler and Mary Julia (Fearson) Whistler, Joseph Nelson Garland Whistler (Fort Howard, Michigan Territory [now Green Bay, WI] 19 October 1822 – Fort Wadsworth, Staten Island, NY 20 April 1899; see Image 35)<sup>6</sup> was a member of the Class of 1846 of the United States Military Academy at West Point. On graduation, he was promoted in the Army to brevet second lieutenant in the Eighth Infantry. On retirement in 1886, he held the rank of colonel in the Fifteenth Infantry (promoted 1883). He served from 1846 to 1848 in the War with Mexico, being engaged in the Siege of Vera Cruz in March 1847, the Battle of Cerro Gordo in April 1847, the Battle of Contreras in August 1847, the Battle of Churubusco in August 1847, the Battle of Chapultepec in September 1847, and the Assault and Capture of the City of Mexico, 13–17 September 1847. He served also from 1861 to 1866 in the Civil War. He was transferred to the First Infantry in September 1866. For the remainder of his career, he served in Dakota, Kentucky, Kansas, Montana, and Minnesota. He retired from active service in October 1886. He is buried in Vale Cemetery in Schenectady, New York.

He married on 16 August 1846 in Albany, New York, Eliza Cobham Hall (New York State 16 April 1819 – Waukesha, WI 14 August 1887), daughter of Margaret Eliza (Bloodgood) and Major N.N. Hall, formerly assistant inspector general U.S. Eighth Army and one of the heroes of Fort Erie. She was also the granddaughter of Francis Bloodgood of Albany, New York, whose mother, Caroline (Whistler) Bloodgood, was Major George Washington Whistler's niece. They had four surviving children. She is buried in Vale Cemetery in Schenectady, New York.

They are both mentioned in the diaries in 1846, he in a letter from George William Whistler, announcing that J.N.G Whistler had to participate in the War with Mexico. Anna Whistler remarks that his wife, whom he had just married, would at this point begin to understand the trials of being a soldier's wife.

* * *

Little is known of James (c. 1796 – Baton Rouge, LA 11 October 1843). The notice of his death reads: "We notice the death, at Baton Rouge, on Wednesday last, of James A. Whistler Esq., brother of Colonel Whistler, in command at that station." Colonel Whistler is James's brother, William. James was said to have "no family," and he was not in the military forces. His death was announced to Major Whistler by Anna Whistler, who recorded in her diaries on 12 March 1844 that she had learned of it from a letter Deborah Delano Whistler had received from her first cousin, Eliza (Hamilton) Van Vechten.<sup>7</sup>

* * *

Sarah Whistler (Hagerstown, MD 26 September 1786 – Detroit, MI 4 October 1874) was the oldest daughter and third child of Major John Whistler and Anne (Bishop) Whistler. She married James Abbott (1775–1858) of Detroit on 1 November 1804 at Fort Dearborn, Rev. John Kinzie officiating. Theirs is said to have been Chicago's first wedding. "James Abbott, the first president of the Michigan Insurance Company, was a very prominent and successful merchant and fur trader ... physically, a strong man, inclining to corpulency in his later years. As a businessman, ... very methodical, precise and economical ... As a banker ... conscientious, firm and vigilant ... Though at times a little abrupt in manner, he possessed a social and kindly disposition.”<sup>8</sup> He was called Judge Abbott because he was a Justice of the Peace.<sup>9</sup> They do not appear in the diaries but are mentioned here because George Washington and Anna (McNeill) Whistler named their first child, James Abbott, for Sarah (Whistler) Abbott’s husband.

* * *

Major George Washington Whistler’s sister, Catherine Ann (Whistler) Hamilton (1788 – 14 October 1874)<sup>10</sup> is not mentioned in the diaries. The second daughter of Major John and Ann (Bishop) Whistler, she married in Chicago on 14 May 1806 Major Thomas Hamilton (New York City 1781 – St. Louis, MO 30 July 1833) of the U.S. Army. Their daughter, Eliza M. (Hamilton) Van Vechten (Fort Snelling [now St. Paul, MN] 9 July 1824 – Albany, NY 30 December 1898), and some of Eliza’s children are mentioned.

Eliza M. Hamilton married at Springfield, Massachusetts, on 22 September 1842 Abraham Van Vechten (Albany, NY 12 December 1819 – West Point, NY 7 May 1894), an attorney. Their first child, whose name we do not know, died. Eliza was again pregnant when Anna Whistler recorded that she had written to Deborah Delano Whistler, her first cousin. A second child, Hamilton Van Vechten, was born 3 October 1844 (d. 19 May 1894). Eliza (sometimes called Eliza Van Vee) is also the correspondent who announced to Deborah Delano Whistler the death of Major Whistler’s brother James (c. 1796 – Baton Rouge, LA 11 October 1843).

* * * * *

Mary Roberdeau (Swift) Whistler (see Image 10) was the daughter of Deborah (Delano) (Nantucket Island, MA September 1762 – New York City 3 June 1824) and Dr. Foster Swift (Boston 20 January 1760 – New London, CT 18 August 1835) (married 18 February 1783).

The Swifts had six children. Jonathan (b. 1785) died young, as did Deborah Ann (1790 – December 1805). The three who survived into adulthood, besides Mary Roberdeau, were Joseph Gardner (31 December 1783 – 23 July 1865; see Image 11), Sarah Delano (24 February 1788 – 11 May 1839), and William Henry (6 November 1800 – 7 April 1879).

* * *

Sarah Delano (Swift) Adams, who had married Eli Adams (14 March 1770 – 18 July 1822) and was widowed, had helped with the care of her sister Mary's children, who, at their mother's death, were about five years and five months, about three years and four months, and about two years and two months of age. They had remained in New London and seem to have lived in the home of their grandfather, the widowed Dr. Foster Swift, until George Washington Whistler married Anna McNeill in 1831. It is from the correspondence of members of the Swift family that we learn the little we know about George William, Joseph Swift, and Deborah Delano as children: "Deborah is a wonderful scholar for her age – reads well in any book, and is now commencing a little system of geography and arithmetic. she was at one time rather petulant – but now much changed – George does not love his Book. Joe is a good scholar."<sup>11</sup>

Sarah had died by the time of the St. Petersburg diaries, but her daughter, Sarah Adams (29 December 1821 – 1876), appears in them as a correspondent of Anna Whistler's, who recorded writing to Sarah Adams in April 1844. Sarah Adams's second letter especially assuaged the neglect Anna Whistler was feeling from her other family correspondents.

* * *

Joseph Gardner Swift (Nantucket Island, MA 31 December 1783 – Geneva, NY 21 July 1865; see Image 11)<sup>12</sup> was one of two cadets and graduates of the Class of 1802, the first class at the United States Military Academy at West Point. He graduated with the rank of second lieutenant and served at the Military Academy (1802–1804); as superintending engineer of the construction of Fort Johnston, NC (1804–1807); again at the Military Academy (1807); as superintending engineer in the erection of Governor's Island Batteries, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, and in general supervision of the defenses of the Northeastern Coast (1808–1809); and as superintending engineer of the fortifications of the Carolina and Georgia harbors (1809–1812 and 1812–1813). Between 11 June 1805 and 19 February 1814, he was promoted from first lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, to brevet brigadier-general for meritorious services. In 1812, he was chief engineer and aide-de-camp to Major-General Pinckney. In the War of 1812 with Great Britain, he served chiefly in the Dept. of New York, Staten Island, St. Lawrence River, city of New York (including Brooklyn and Harlem Heights; see Image 42). After the War of 1812, he was superintending engineer of the construction of the fortifications of New York Harbor (1815–1817); member of the Board for rebuilding the Capitol at Washington (1817); (ex-officio) superintendent of the Military Academy (July 1812 – July 1817) and its inspector (April – November 1818); and member of the Board of Engineers for the Atlantic Coast of the United States (April – November 1818). He resigned from the U.S. Army on 12 November 1818. In civilian life, the posts he held included: surveyor of U.S. revenue for the port of New York (1818–1826); cotton planter, Haywood County, Tennessee (1828); chief engineer of the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad (1828–1829); chief engineer of the New Orleans and Lake Pontchartrain Railroad (1830–1831); chief engineer of the New York and Harlem Railroad (1832–1833); and civil engineer in the service of the United States, superintending harbor improvements on the Lakes (1829–1845). He aided in suppressing Canada border disturbances in 1839, and in 1841 was appointed by the president to be a member of a mission to the British Provinces, with reference to a treaty with Great Britain. He was offered the post of U.S. commissioner of patents but declined. He was a member of several scientific and historical societies and received the degree of LLD from Kenyon College in Gambier, Ohio, in 1843.

Joseph Gardner Swift appears in the diaries as a correspondent with Major Whistler and as guardian connected with the welfare of his nephew, George William Whistler. Anna Whistler records that they received a letter from “the General” announcing that George William Whistler had left New York an hour earlier on the sea trip he was taking for his health in late 1843.

Joseph Gardner Swift married on 6 June 1805 in North Carolina Louisa Margaret Walker (Wilmington, NC 14 October 1788 – Geneva, NY 15 November 1855).<sup>13</sup> Two of their children are mentioned in the diaries: Louisa Josephine (called Josée) (30 April 1821 – 16 January 1859) and McRee (New York City 15 April 1819 – New Brunswick, NJ 5 April 1896).

* * *

Louisa Josephine married on 22 June 1843 Peter Richards Jr. (New London, CT 28 October 1811 – Geneva, NY 30 August 1893). After the death of Louisa Josephine, he married her first cousin, Sarah Adams (29 December 1821 – 1876). He is buried in Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn. Anna Whistler records in her diaries that she attended the wedding of Louisa Josephine on 22 June 1843 in Geneva, New York, about two months prior to leaving for St. Petersburg.

* * *

McRee Swift became a civil engineer. He spent almost a year at Hobart College and in 1836 was appointed a junior assistant on the surveys of the Long Island Railroad, under General William Gibbs McNeill, Anna Whistler's brother. Later in 1836, he went to Fort Caswell, North Carolina, and continued his professional studies under the direction of his brother, Alexander J. Swift (1810–1847) of the United States Army Corps of Engineers. He spent the next six years engaged in railway engineering in New England: the Boston and Albany (Western) Railroad; the Pittsfield and North Adams Railroad; and the extension of the New Haven and Hartford Railroad to Springfield, Massachusetts. In 1843, he was appointed superintending engineer of the Wilmington and Raleigh Railroad in North Carolina. From 1846 to 1850, he was superintending engineer of various branches of the New York and Erie Railroad and the Rochester and Genesee Valley Railroad. In 1851, he went to Europe with his father for a year of travel. On his return, he worked until 1856 as chief engineer of the Rochester and Genesee Valley and the Avon, Genesee, and Mount Morris Railroads. In 1856, he became engineer and superintendent of a manufacturing and construction company and eventually its president. In 1874, he was elected a member of the Commission on Streets and Sewers of New Brunswick, New Jersey, resigning after eight years as president. He was at the time of his death a senior warden of Christ Church. He was buried in Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn. He was considered one of the wealthiest men of New Brunswick, New Jersey. He was the twenty-third member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, active from 1852 to 1888. He bequeathed to the Society the sum of one thousand dollars in memory of his father, the income of which was to be used for the purchase of rare books and maps for its library and models for its museum.

McRee Swift married on 15 September 1842 Abby Hortense Chew (1821 – New Brunswick, NJ 10 April 1898). Anna Whistler's parents had been close friends of Thomas John Chew and Abby Hortense (Hallam) Chew, the parents of Abby Hortense (Chew) Swift. Thomas John Chew (New Haven, CT 28 January 1777 – Brooklyn 21 July 1846) served in the U.S. Navy from 1790 to 1832. In 1809, he returned from furlough back to the Navy and was appointed purser on the John Adams. On 25 April 1812, he was commissioned purser on the USS Chesapeake. In May 1812, he became purser on the Constitution. On 1 June 1813, he supported in his arms the dying captain of the Chesapeake, James Lawrence, whose immortal last words, "Don't give up the ship," became the motto of the U.S. Navy. He was captured on board that ship by HMS Shannon on that day and released on 17 June 1813, going back to Boston. After the war, he served as purser on the Washington, sailing to the Mediterranean in May 1815 and returning in July 1818. He served at the Brooklyn Navy Yard until he resigned from the Navy in March 1832. In civilian life, he served for a time as president of the Protection Fire Insurance Company, assumedly in New York, and as treasurer of St. Ann's Church in Brooklyn from April 1833 to March 1837. He married in September 1813 Abby Hortense Hallam (New London, CT 13 September 1791 – New Brunswick, NJ 21 March 1874). They were both buried in Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn. While the Whistlers were in Russia, Anna Whistler recorded that on 17 July 1844 they received news of the Chews through a letter Abby Hortense (Chew) Swift wrote them. The letter was delivered by a young man brought out to their dacha by Colonel Charles Stewart Todd (see Image 278). The young man was Charles Collins Parker (see Image 319), a medical student traveling through Europe with Colonel Sylvanus Thayer (see Image 318), who had been superintendent of West Point when George Washington Whistler was a cadet there.

* * *

Captain William Henry Swift<sup>14</sup> (Taunton, MA 6 November 1800 – New York City 7 April 1879), was a classmate of Major George Washington Whistler in the Class of 1819 at the United States Military Academy. Between 1 July 1819 and 7 July 1838, he rose from the rank of second lieutenant, Corps of Artillery, to captain, Corps of Topographical Engineers. In 1821–1832, he served on Topographical Duty. From 1833 to 1843, he was an assistant in the Geodetic Survey of the Atlantic Coast of the United States. From 1833 to 1835, he was assistant on the survey of the Norwich (CT) and Worcester (MA) Railroad. In 1836, he was assistant on the survey of the entrance to the Connecticut River, and, in 1837, of Saybrook Harbor. In 1838–1839, he was in charge of improvement of rivers and harbors on Long Island Sound and from 1839 to 1844 on the New England Coast. In 1844 to 1849, the years when Major Whistler was in Russia, Captain William Henry Swift was principal assistant to Colonel Abert, chief of the Topographical Bureau in Washington, DC. In those same years, he worked on piers, lighthouses, and seawalls.

He resigned his commission in the U.S. Army on 31 July 1849. Before his resignation and in civilian life he was associated with the building of railroads. He was resident superintending engineer of the Western Railroad, from Worcester, Massachusetts, to Albany, New York, from 1836 to 1840. He was president of the Board of Trustees of the Illinois and Michigan Canal from 1845 to 1871, of the Hannibal and St. Joseph's Railroad, Missouri, from 1856 to 1877, of the Philadelphia and Baltimore Railroad from 1849 to 1851, and of the Western Railroad from Worcester, Massachusetts, to Albany, New York, from 1851 to 1854. In 1853, Harvard University conferred on him an honorary MA.

He is not referred to at all in Anna Whistler's diaries, although in the 1840s he was, like his brother, Joseph Gardner Swift, guardian of George William Whistler, their nephew; handled Major Whistler's financial affairs; was involved during the negotiations to persuade Major Whistler to accept the position as consulting engineer for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway; received a diamond ring from the Russian government for his efforts; and married for the second time.<sup>15</sup> His correspondence with Joseph Gardner Swift makes it clear that he was corresponding with Major Whistler.

His daughter, Mary (1826–1884) – by his first wife, Mary (Stewart) Swift (24 November 1801 – 18 November 1837) (married New London, CT 26 January 1825), daughter of the British consul, James Stewart, at New London, Connecticut – is mentioned in the diaries. Anna Whistler refers to this niece’s marriage to George Bromley Ironside (bap. 1828) on 26 March 1846, followed by a European honeymoon. During their honeymoon trip, Mary expected to see Deborah Delano Whistler, her first cousin, who was spending a year with the Winstanleys in Preston, Lancashire.

The Ironsides traveled “[part] of the way through great Britain” with the Bliss family of Springfield, Massachusetts, who had been the Whistlers’ neighbors and were making an eighteen-month tour of Europe. After the death of her mother in 1837, Mary (Swift) Ironside “had been substantially brought up” in the home of George Bliss (16 November 1793 – 19 April 1873) and Mary Shepherd (Dwight) Bliss (24 February 1801 – 12 April 1870).

There seemed to be some reservations on Captain Swift’s part about his daughter’s hasty marriage, perhaps because of the couple’s personalities. He wrote his brother, Gen. J.G. Swift: “[Mary] was a very jolly person. Her husband was a good deal of a stick.”

Captain William Henry Swift also had a son, Charles William (1828–1906), who is not mentioned in the diaries, but whose biography appears in Stoeckl, Howard, Swift, Ironside in this Appendix.

* * * * *

Anna (McNeill) Whistler was the daughter of Dr. Daniel (North Carolina c. 1756 – Oak Forest, Bladen County, North Carolina 7 December 1828; see Image 23) and Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (see Image 22), his second wife. Her father is said to also have been known as Charles Donald McNeill “native of Bladen County, North Carolina

[and] identified with Wilmington, North Carolina.” During the Revolution, his sympathies were with the British. In 1782, he appears in “the Army List as Supernumerary Surgeon’s Mate.” In the North Carolina State Reports, it is recorded that when the British arrived he “joined them and behaved himself ... in unsupportable insolence.” He was consequently “tried and found guilty of [an unstated] charge, fined ... and ... required to depart the State within sixty days.” He refused to do this “until ultimately it was decided that the action of the judges was illegal.” It is not known whether these events were the cause of his decision to go north, where he continued practicing in Brooklyn as a doctor. He became a member (no. 746) of the St. Andrew’s Society in 1807. He moved permanently to New York with his family in 1815. He died in North Carolina while on a visit there.<sup>16</sup>

He is mentioned only once in the diaries: in June 1845. Anna Whistler, extolling the virtues of her half-sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, says “How often this warm hearted sister brings my dear departed father before my minds eye!”

* * *

Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill (New Jersey 10 August 1775 – 7 April 1852; see Image 22),<sup>17</sup> second wife of Dr. Daniel McNeill, was the daughter of Zephaniah Kingsley Sr. (Leake, Lancashire 11 April 1734 – Wilmington, NC c. 1792), a “third-generation Quaker,” and Isabella (Johnston) Kingsley (Fireside, Scotland c. 1737 – New York 14 December 1814) (buried in the Quakers’ Houston Street Cemetery in New York City). They were married by license at Bow Church, London, on 29 September 1763. The family moved to Charlestown, South Carolina, in December 1770. In 1791, they moved to Wilmington, North Carolina.

Martha (Kingsley) McNeill figures prominently in the diaries, chiefly in connection with her winter visits (1843–1847) to her son, Charles Johnston McNeill, in East Florida (see Images 58–60), from where she wrote to Anna (McNeill) Whistler.

* * *

In addition to Anna (McNeill) Whistler, Dr. Daniel and Martha (Kingsley) McNeill had five other surviving children: Mary Charlotte (d. 27 October 1821), Isabella Kingsley (c. 1798 – c. 1850), William Gibbs (3 October 1801 – 16 February 1853; see Image 31), Charles Johnston (6 March 1802 – 2 March 1869), and Catherine Jane (c. 1812 – 20 May 1877).

William Gibbs McNeill, Charles Johnston McNeill, and Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer are referred to in the diaries as correspondents or mentioned in the letters of other family members. Mary Charlotte (McNeill) Easterbrook and Isabella Kingsley (McNeill) Fairfax do not appear in the diaries, but Isabella Kingsley (McNeill) Fairfax's son, Donald McNeill Fairfax (10 March 1821 – 10 January 1894), does.

* * *

Isabella Kingsley McNeill (c. 1798 – c. 1850)<sup>18</sup> was married on 1 June 1816 at St. Ann's Church in Brooklyn to George William Fairfax (Shannon Hill, Jefferson County, VA 5 November 1797 – June 1853) in a double-wedding ceremony with her sister, Mary Charlotte McNeill. George William Fairfax was the son of Ferdinando Fairfax (bap. 1 June 1769 – 24 September 1820) (whose godfather was George Washington) and Elizabeth Blair Cary. The Fairfaxes had four surviving children: Martha (b. Shannon Hill, Jefferson County, VA c. 1820), called "Matty," who married Isaiah Davenport; Donald McNeill (Mount Eagle, Fairfax County, VA 10 March 1821 – Hagerstown MD 10 January 1894); Isabella Kingsley (born Shannon Hill, Jefferson County, VA c. 1822); and Edwina Cary.

Of this family, only Donald McNeill Fairfax (see Image 38) is mentioned in the diaries. He entered the Navy as midshipman from North Carolina 12 August 1837. He cruised around the world on the flagship Columbia in 1838–1840. He was attached to the Fairfield and the Brandywine in the Mediterranean in 1841–1842. In 1844, when Anna Whistler mentions him, he was a "passed" midshipman (1843). He had escaped death when the Missouri was destroyed by fire in Gibraltar Harbor on 26 August 1843, while Anna Whistler was on her way to St. Petersburg. The accident on the man-of-war SS Princeton on 28 February 1844 is referred to by Anna Whistler, who presumed correctly that this nephew, for whom she had great affection, was a member of the crew. He took part in the capture of Lower California during the Mexican War. He was commandant of midshipmen at Annapolis in 1864–1865. He was promoted to Commodore in 1873. He was for five years after that commandant of the naval station at New London, Connecticut. He was promoted in 1880 to rear-admiral and retired, at his own request, in September 1881. His first wife was Virginia Cary Ragland (d. 1878), whom he married on 5 June 1854. Anna Whistler lived with them for a time, and she and Virginia (Ragland) Fairfax came to detest one another. His second wife was a widow, Josephine (Foote) Reese (28 June 1837 – 25 May 1918), daughter of Rear-Admiral Andrew Hull Foote (1806–1863), whom he married in 1879.

* * *

Mary Charlotte McNeill (drowned at sea 27 October 1821), married on 1 June 1816 at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, Lt. Joseph Easterbrook (Bristol bap. 6 November 1794 – drowned at sea 27 October 1821) of the British Navy.<sup>19</sup> It was a double-wedding ceremony with her sister, Isabella Kingsley McNeill (c. 1798 – c. 1850).

Lt. Joseph Easterbrook was the eldest of the four children of Joseph Easterbrook (30 June 1767 – 10 January 1810), a tobacconist, and Mary (Nott) Easterbrook (b. c. 1765). His parents were married on 18 July 1788 in Tiverton. His siblings were Mary (21 December 1790 – Wadebridge, Cornwall 17 December 1862), who did not marry; Elizabeth (bap. 6 November 1794 – Bristol 18 August 1832), who married Joseph Smith, undertaker, on 9 January 1813 in Bristol and had seven children; and William (12 July 1795 – Tiverton 8 February 1876), ironmonger, who did not marry.

Lt. Joseph Easterbrook's parents had an unusual marital situation for that time: they were divorced in 1797 with Joseph obtaining custody of the children. In his will, dated 9 July 1796, Joseph Easterbrook Sr. described his wife as "late Mary Nott, Spinster and who has lately eloped from me with another man." As a consequence of the affair that Mary (Nott) Easterbrook engaged in in 1795, a divorce case was brought before the Episcopal Consistory Court of Bristol in 1797. The deponents unequivocally supported Joseph Easterbrook Sr., who was eventually granted a divorce with custody of his children.

Lt. Joseph Easterbrook and Mary Charlotte (McNeill) Easterbrook had two children. They were under five years of age when they died. It has not been possible to ascertain their names, birth places, or dates of birth.

While sailing on the ship Sea Fox (Capt. Wyer), from New York on Saturday, 27 October 1821, bound for Port-au-Prince, all four family members met their death by drowning when the ship “was capsized that same night, about 63 miles north-east of Sandy-hook” “by a sudden squall [and] the dead lights not being in, the water rushed with great violence into the cabin windows, which filled it instantly.” Mary (McNeill) Easterbrook’s father, Dr. Daniel McNeill, wrote to the Easterbrook family in Bristol, informing them of the tragedy.

Although the Easterbrooks do not figure in the diaries, their biography is included in this essay because very little was heretofore known of them.

* * * * *

William Gibbs McNeill (Wilmington, NC 3 October 1801 – Brooklyn 16 February 1853; see Image 31)<sup>20</sup> was intended for the clergy and had actually begun his education for that profession, when he indicated his interest in a military career. Through the influence of his friend, General Joseph Gardner Swift (see Image 11), he was appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point, which he entered in July 1814. Here, he met George Washington Whistler and William H. Swift, who became his lifelong friends. He graduated on 28 July 1817, on the day Major Sylvanus Thayer (see Image 318) became superintendent of the Military Academy. Between his graduation in 1817 and his resignation from the United States Army in 1837, he advanced from the rank of third lieutenant, Corps of Artillery, to brevet major, Staff-Topographical Engineers in 1834.

In 1824–1826, he served on the survey of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal; in 1827 on the survey of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad (B&O), and in 1827–1830 as a member of the Board of Civil Engineers for the construction of the Road. In November 1828, he was sent, along with

George Washington Whistler, Ross Winans (see Image 228), and Jonathan Knight (chief engineer of the B&O, 1829–1842), by the B&O Company, to study the railroad system in Great Britain. In about 1839, he served on the survey of the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad, of which he was the chief engineer from 1830 to 1836; in 1831, on the survey of the Paterson and Hudson River Railroad, New Jersey, of which he was the chief engineer from 1831 to 1834; in 1832–1833, on the survey of the Boston and Providence Railroad, of which he was chief engineer in 1832–1835; in 1836–1837, as chief engineer of the Western Railroad in Massachusetts; and was involved in the examination of the coasts of North and South Carolina in 1837.

As a civil engineer, he was chief engineer of the Western Railroad in Massachusetts from Worcester to Albany from 1836 to 1840; chief engineer of the State of Georgia in 1837; chief engineer of the Charleston, South Carolina, Louisville, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio, projected railroad from 1837 to 1840; president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company in 1842–1843; and consulting engineer of various railroads and other public works in the United States and Cuba in 1850–1853.

In 1842, when the “Dorr Rebellion” in Rhode Island broke out, he was commissioned major-general in the State Militia and made leader of the “law and order party.” This appointment had lasting effects for his subsequent career. The rebellion was bloodless and over in three days. In 1844, he was appointed chief engineer of the Dry Docks at the Brooklyn Naval Yard by President Tyler, but removed from office in 1845 by President Polk (see Image 50) because of the hostility of Dorr adherents to him. When the Mexican War broke out in 1846, the continuing Dorr influence successfully impeded McNeill’s attempt to be appointed a brigadier-general in the U.S. Army. It was his militia rank that caused him to be referred to as “General McNeill.”

In 1851, he visited Europe and in London in May 1852 was elected the first American member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. In February 1853, he died in Brooklyn.

William Gibbs McNeill, like his sister Anna (McNeill) Whistler, had the McNeill temper. He was an alcoholic and an extremely difficult person, as the biography of his nephew George William Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” shows. It is recorded in the diaries that he wrote Major Whistler a letter in early 1844 that pleased Anna Whistler, because it revealed the cheerful, confiding, and affectionate side of him.

He married on 7 June 1821 in Newark, New Jersey, Maria Matilda Cammann (bap. New York 1799 – 29 December 1850).<sup>21</sup> She was the daughter of Charles Louis Cammann (Loxdedt, Kingdom of Hanover 25 September 1759 – 5 December 1805), who emigrated “to America in 1787” and “became a leading merchant in New York.” Her mother was Maria Margareta (Oswald) Cammann (New York 13 January 1774 – Brooklyn 15 April 1862), daughter of Philip Jacob Oswald and Catherine (Hahn, later changed to Hone) Oswald. They were married in 1791 and lived in Greenwich Village. At the death of her husband, Maria Margareta (Oswald) Cammann was left with seven children. In 1813, the family moved to Newark, New Jersey. In 1826, they came back to live in New York.

Of Maria Matilda Cammann’s six siblings, the families of two are mentioned in the diaries: her brothers, George P. Cammann and Henry J. Cammann. George P. Cammann<sup>22</sup> (Greenwich Village 1 September 1804 – Fordham, NY 14 February 1863; see Image 41) entered Columbia College in 1821 at the age of seventeen and graduated in 1825. He then proceeded to train as a physician in Newark and New York. In 1828, he went to Paris for further study, returning to New York in 1830. In 1833, he married Anna Catherine Lorillard (23 October 1809 – 22 December 1896), daughter of Jacob Lorillard (22 May 1774 – 20 September 1838) and Margareta (Kunze) Lorillard (16 August 1791 – 23 November 1846; see Image 53). It is the death of Margareta (Kunze) Lorillard that is communicated to Anna Whistler in St. Petersburg by her sister-in-law, Maria Matilda (Cammann) McNeill, and is recorded in her diary for 1846. Maria’s source for this information was probably her brother, George, and/or her sister-in-law, Anna Catherine (Lorillard) Cammann.

The biography of Maria (Cammann) McNeill’s brother, Henry J. Cammann, is taken up in the section on Dunscombe and Vallance in this essay.

Anna Whistler was very close to Maria (Cammann) McNeill and corresponded with her regularly while in St. Petersburg. This sister-in-law, who suffered poor health, supplied Anna Whistler with information about her own family and about the Palmers in Stonington, where the William Gibbs McNeill family frequently visited.

* * *

William Gibbs McNeill and Maria Matilda (Cammann) McNeill had five children who survived beyond the 1840s: Mary Isabella (19 August 1823 – 24 October 1867; see Image 32), Catherine Julia (26 December 1825 – 20 October 1897; see Image 33), Eliza Winstanley (1830–1855), William Wyatt (October 1833 – 4 June 1853), and Patrick Tracy Jackson (3 October 1835 – 22 April 1898). All of them are mentioned in the diaries. Also mentioned there are Louisa (1832 – Ash Wednesday 1840) and Henry Cammann (1 March 1828 – 7 August 1840), who died as children, she of an illness and he by drowning. As the anniversary of each of their deaths approached or occurred, Anna Whistler focused her thoughts on them. Such remembrance of them, for example, is recorded in the diaries in the entry for Thursday [Sept.] 26th, 1844, on the eve of the first anniversary of two-year-old Charles Donald's death, when Anna Whistler and her half-sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, discussed all the departed children.

* * *

Mary Isabella McNeill (19 August 1823 – 24 October 1867; see Image 32)<sup>23</sup> was being courted in the late 1840s by Johann Friedrich Rodewald (Bremen 21 July 1808 – Rettershof 4 October 1886), called Frederick outside his parents' family. They married on 2 April 1850 and had seven children.

Frederick was the oldest of seven sons of Johann Friedrich Arnold Rodewald, and inherited his father's business acumen. After leaving Bremen, he spent a brief time in London and then established himself in New Orleans, where he became very wealthy in a short time. In New Orleans, he was also consul for Bremen. He later established himself in London, mainly in banking. He was totally autocratic in nature and even into old age brooked no opposition to his word and opinion. He was small in stature and thickset; his facial features were sharp, and his eyes piercing. On the whole, while he had much personal grace, he presented a harsh figure. His wife predeceased him. He often spent the summer months in his last years in Taunus, at Rettershof, an estate he had given to his daughter, Alice (Rodewald) von Diskau. He died there and was buried in Norwood near London.

Mary Isabella is mentioned in the diaries as being present during the interment of two-year-old Charles Donald Whistler in Stonington; as resembling Miss Maude, whose portrait hung in the Winstanley home; and as a correspondent of Anna Whistler in 1844.

* * *

Catherine Julia McNeill (Newark, NJ 26 December 1825 – Staten Island, NY 20 October 1897; see Image 33)<sup>24</sup> was being courted in the late 1840s by Adolf Rodewald (Bremen 24 November 1818 – Staten Island, New York 27 March 1869). They married on 6 December 1849 in New York and had four sons and four daughters. Known by various forms of the name Julia, she was a faithful correspondent of her first cousin, Deborah Delano Whistler, whose receipt of letters from her was often recorded by Anna Whistler in the diaries. Anna Whistler was frequently also permitted to read Julia's letters. The two girls were called "twins" because both were born in the same year: 1825. A businessman, Adolf Rodewald established himself in New York with the help of his oldest brother, Frederick. In comparison to his brothers, he was prone to speculation to the extent that when he died his brothers thought they would have to support his wife and children. But a few months later his investments paid off, leaving his family with a considerable fortune. He was musical and extremely well read, especially in history and chemistry.

* * *

Little is known also of Eliza Winstanley McNeill (1830 – Brooklyn 22 May 1855).<sup>25</sup> She was thirteen years old when Anna Whistler went to St. Petersburg and eighteen when the diaries were brought to a close. She married on 24 September 1851 in Grace Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Edward Octavius Flagg (Georgetown, SC 13 December 1824 – New Haven, CT 23 August 1911), who was then rector of Trinity Church, Norwich, Connecticut. Her husband was a poet and lecturer as well as a clergyman. They had a son named William McNeill Flagg (1852–1856), who died a year after his mother. Anna Whistler mentions in her diaries receiving a letter from Eliza Winstanley McNeill in May 1846, when the latter was sixteen, describing the McNeills' new home in Irving Place, New York City, and asking Anna Whistler to come to New York for the summer to meet her Aunt Eliza Cammann from Newfoundland. Anna Whistler recorded that she, in turn, wrote a note to Eliza, including it in a letter to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer.

* * *

William Wyatt McNeill<sup>26</sup> (October 1833 – 4 June 1853) was named for the Rev. William Edward Wyatt (1789–1864) of Baltimore, Maryland. He was ten years old when Anna Whistler commenced her diary in November 1843. By the time of her abrupt abandoning of it in September 1848, he was almost fourteen years old. His appearances in the diaries are limited to information about his health. Thus, in the entry of Saturday [May] 3rd [1845], Anna Whistler records that exactly a week before (April 27) she received a letter from Martha (Kingsley) McNeill saying that Willie Wyatt had been extremely ill and was now convalescent. She also records that James and Willie Whistler missed him greatly. With the marriage on 2 April 1850 of his sister, Mary Isabella, to Frederick Rodewald (Bremen 21 July 1808 – Rettershof 4 October 1886), William Wyatt received employment in his brother-in-law's firm in New Orleans. He died in that city on 4 June 1853 as a result of being struck by the shaft of a streetcar.

* * *

Patrick Tracy Jackson McNeill (3 October 1835 – 22 April 1898)<sup>27</sup> was named for Patrick Tracy Jackson (14 August 1780 – 12 September 1847), a Boston merchant, who dealt in goods from the East and West Indies. He was about eight years old when Anna Whistler and her children went to St. Petersburg in 1843 and almost thirteen when the diaries came to a halt. He was called “Jacks” and “Jacky,” and is mentioned in the diaries as a playmate whom James and Willie missed greatly. In 1855, he was working for the Winanses in Baltimore. By 1867, he was working in Glasgow, Missouri. He married Sara Lewis, with whom he had six children. By 1878, they were living in San Francisco.

* * *

Charles Johnston McNeill (Wilmington, NC 6 March 1802 – Florida 2 March 1869) was named for his maternal grandmother's brother, Charles Johnston (1732–1804), a South Carolina merchant who had paid to set up his brother-in-law, Zephaniah Kingsley Sr., as a merchant in Charleston. Charles Johnston McNeill lived at Reddys Point in East Florida, where he was employed by Zephaniah Kingsley, his mother's brother.<sup>28</sup> He was a hunchback, having been dropped by a servant when he was a baby.<sup>29</sup> In late 1838, when Zephaniah Kingsley began, from "his old residence at Fort George Island" (see Images 58–60), "to organize a large-scale emigration of free persons of color to Haiti," he hired this nephew to be "overseer at Fort George."<sup>30</sup> In his will, filed on 20 July 1843, Zephaniah Kingsley left Charles Johnston McNeill "62½ acres at Beauclerc Bluff in Duval County, 300 acres 'at the head of six mile creek (Saw Mill Creek)' in St. Johns County, a 'negro woman Betsey[,] Peggy the daughter of Nancy and all their children and issue', and a horse and saddle."<sup>31</sup>

After the death of Zephaniah Kingsley (1843), Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, as predicted by her brother a relative would do, challenged his will and its designated heirs (October 1844). The grounds she gave for her challenge was that Zephaniah's wife, Anna Kingsley, was "a negress," and his children with her and other black women, not his wives, were "mulattoes and each a slave of Zephaniah Kingsley" and "legally classified as 'coloured' and were therefore barred from inheriting property."<sup>32</sup>

In her court petition, Anna Kingsley insisted that Charles Johnston McNeill, who was now overseer at his first cousin, George Kingsley's, San Jose plantation, be dismissed. He was replaced, but it is not known whether he was dismissed or resigned.<sup>33</sup> On 2 March 1846, the court "upheld the validity of Kingsley's 1843 will."<sup>34</sup> Martha McNeill's further "appeals to Florida's higher courts ... also failed."<sup>35</sup>

Charles Johnston McNeill was living at Reddys Point, which was “a small farm [350 acres] in Arlington that [he had] purchased from the Kingsley estate for $200.”<sup>36</sup> It had been Zephaniah “Kingsley’s well-known policy” not to separate slave families, and Charles Johnston McNeill violated that policy with regard to Reddys Point, but in 1848 reunited the family he had separated. He was said to have “had trouble with the Negroes after Mr. Kingsley’s death,”<sup>37</sup> but, like other relatives of Zephaniah Kingsley, honored the latter’s “commitments to self-purchase of freedom, liberal emancipation policies, and the sanctity of slave families.”<sup>38</sup> It is interesting that, like his brother, William Gibbs McNeill, and sister, Anna (McNeill) Whistler, Charles had the very excitable McNeill temperament, which sometimes flared up in relationships with his slaves. By 1860, Charles Johnston McNeill’s slaves no longer numbered sixteen, as they had in the 1840s. He “owned one slave, a sixty-year-old woman.”<sup>39</sup> It is pointed out by Zephaniah Kingsley’s biographer that his “heirs and legatees who lived in Duval County in the 1850s” were together responsible for the creation of a free colored community in their rural enclave east of the St. Johns River; were, like him, “proslavery and believed in the need for financial security to protect against the uncertainty of life in turbulent times”; given “a decade of intense race hysteria and discrimination toward free persons of color, and with their eyes fixed on the possibility of a war between the free and slave states,” they “traded human property for money.”<sup>40</sup> However, he had financial problems, and in April 1850 Anna Whistler tried to negotiate a loan for him from Joseph Harrison Jr., but Andrew McCalla Eastwick, whom she asked to act as go-between, himself made the loan.<sup>41</sup>

Charles Johnston McNeill married a mulatto woman named Elizabeth Coffee (St. Augustine, FL c. 1828 – Jacksonville FL 23 August 1898).<sup>42</sup> They had nine children: Donald C. (Florida c. 1845–1876); Josiah S. (b. Florida c. 1847); Charles W. (Jacksonville, FL 27 October 1847 – Port Washington, Nassau County, New York 16 June 1933; buried Green-Wood Cemetery, Brooklyn, Kings County [Brooklyn] NY), who married Fanny Stevenson; Albert/Alvan Clifton (Jacksonville, FL 1853 – Jacksonville, FL 1933), who married Anne Louise Christopher (1853 – Jacksonville, FL 1918); Ellen M. (b. Florida c. 1855), called “Tante”; William Palmer (Florida 15 April 1857 – Bronx, NY 27 September 1947), who married Nealie McNeal; Anna Alicia (Florida c. 1859 – Pinellas, FL 1950), who married on 19 June 1876 Alvan van Buskirk (1847–1916); Pearl Eliza (Florida 28 January 1860 – c. 1878); and James Bolton (1864 – Boston, MA 1 November 1899).<sup>43</sup> He came north for visits, sometimes with his sons, but his wife did not accompany him. Long after his death, Donald Palmer Stanton, the son of his niece, Anna Whistler (Palmer) Stanton, informed Kate McDiarmid, the biographer of Anna (McNeill) Whistler, that Uncle Charlie’s sons were very dark, and that Anna Whistler (Palmer) Stanton “suspected ‘dark’ blood.”<sup>44</sup>

It is not until March and May 1858 that we learn details of Charles Johnston McNeill’s life, when Anna Whistler spent a month at his home. As early as 1829 and up until her death in 1852, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill spent winters (some extending into summer) in Florida with Charles Johnston McNeill. In the autumn of 1846, when she was considering going to live with the Whistlers until they left Russia permanently, her son traveled north and successfully persuaded her instead to accompany him when he returned to Florida. She admirably tutored Eliza (Coffee) McNeill in social behaviour and engaged in the religious and moral training of this daughter-in-law and of the grandchildren.

Six years after their mother’s death, Anna Whistler visited her brother for the first time and was impressed by what their mother had achieved in her years of spending winters with him and his family: “I really must commend the mother of his promising sons for training them so gently & firmly to do right. I have been chaplain as regularly as teacher & trust she will never omit family worship. My mothers lessons are impressed upon Uncle Charlies wife she was a poor girl and motherless, my mother taught her & now she acquits herself really as a lady.” While this visit “awakened individual interest in his family,” and she concentrated on tutoring his three eldest sons, she did not plan to come again, although he asked her “to repeat her visit every winter.” She took no leisure hours for herself while with him, and was rewarded after her departure by letters from him that were “the outpouring of grateful affection for what my interest in the improvement of his boys accomplished.”<sup>45</sup> She did not, however, wish to live in the South for reasons she did not give.<sup>46</sup>

She described her brother’s log house as “neatly kept tho so – barely furnished” with “Oleanders 20 feet high” surrounding the house’s enclosure, Cape Jasmines, ripening orange trees, berries, and peaches. The house had a piazza from which she preferred “inhaling the sea breezes ... looking down upon the St. Johns two miles wide” rather than sailing. They occasionally had “oysters and fine fresh fish,” but as it was planting season, he and “the small band of field hands [were] in requisition.” When he reappeared after work in the fields, “he always appear[ed] the gentleman.”<sup>47</sup>

He was one of the beneficiaries of his half-sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill’s, will in 1863, receiving £200.<sup>48</sup>

In 1867, he, his wife, and six children were able to move out of the “negro house [they] had been obliged to live in when the one they were in was burned!” and to resettle “in their own at Readys Point ... from which they had been banished.”<sup>49</sup>

Anna Whistler pointed out that “he is so true hearted; his only boast being that his father was an honest man! And so my brothers popularity does not ensnare him, his taste for literature leads him to keeping up with the times & their changes, agriculture is his pursuit and he informs himself of the improvements.”<sup>50</sup>

Charles Johnston McNeill is mentioned only once in the diaries, when he is recorded as having traveled to New York and Stonington with his Florida cousins in the summer of 1844. Otherwise, he is referred to only obliquely through Martha (Kingsley) McNeill’s letters to Anna Whistler, and even then it is his plantation, or, rather, the blooming of the flowers there, that is the subject of Anna Whistler’s comments. She tended generally not to divulge whatever their mother might have revealed of his situation. On 29 May 1844, she received a letter from Martha (Kingsley) McNeill and said of its contents only that her mother’s voice was always a true comfort to her.

He died suddenly on 2 March 1869 at his home. Writing to James H. Gamble and his wife, Harriet, on 6 May 1869, Anna Whistler continued to praise him: “A fortnight since came to me from Florida tidings of my brothers sudden death, for which however I am thankful in feeling assured he was prepared. his was a life of cheerful resignation to our heavenly Fathers will, diligent in his labors for the maintenance of his wife & many children, he was fervent in spirit. I may truly say he walked with God & is not for God has taken him!"<sup>51</sup> Two of his sons, Donald and Charles, attended a service in Stonington, Connecticut, for their father. An interesting account of the service was made to Anna Whistler by her sister, Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer,<sup>52</sup> but, unfortunately, that letter is not extant.

* * *

Anna (McNeill) Whistler's youngest sister, Catherine Jane ("Kate") McNeill (1812 – Stonington, CT 20 May 1877), married on 23 March 1840 at St. Mark's Church in New York City, as his second wife, George Edwin Palmer, MD<sup>53</sup> (Stonington, CT 15 April 1803 – Stonington, CT 8 May 1868; see Image 36). Dr. Palmer already had three surviving children from his first marriage to Emma Ann (Woodbridge) Palmer (Stonington, CT 28 February 1802 – Stonington, CT 16 February 1839): Amos (Stonington, CT 18 February 1827 – Providence, RI 4 June 1861), William Rhodes (Stonington, CT 9 September 1828 – Manhattan, NY 8 April 1893), and Emma Woodbridge (Stonington, CT 24 November 1835 – Stonington, CT 28 July 1912). There seems to have also been a second daughter, Julia Palmer, born in 1839, the year of her mother's death. Of these children, only Emma Woodbridge Palmer is mentioned in the diaries. She wrote Anna Whistler a letter in May or June 1844. Amos Palmer became a physician. Their mother was buried in Evergreen Cemetery, Stonington, Connecticut. Dr. George Edwin Palmer's funeral in 1868 was observed with full Masonic rites and attended by five hundred people.

George Edwin Palmer, MD, had four children with Catherine Ann ("Kate") (McNeill) Palmer: Julia McNeill (Stonington, CT 25 March 1841 – New York City 22 February 1902), George Edwin Jr. (Stonington, CT 8 May 1843 – Cincinnati, OH 24 May 1909), Donald McNeill (Stonington, CT 7 November 1845 – San Jose, CA 9 May 1928), and Anna Whistler (Stonington, CT 7 April 1848 – Stonington, CT 28 May 1928).

Anna Whistler was very close to her sister. They corresponded on a regular basis while the Whistlers were in Russia and Anna Whistler wrote frequently in her diaries of the receipt of letters from Catherine Jane with news of the birth of the latter's children, of life in Stonington, and the burial of two-year-old Charles Donald Whistler. Anna Whistler also recorded that her brother-in-law, Dr. George Edwin Palmer, who sometimes added a PS to his wife's letters, supplied her with medications for the journey to St. Petersburg and spoke of him with great affection.

The Palmer Home, called "The Old Corner House" (see Image 37), was located at 24 Main Street in Stonington.

* * *

Julia McNeill Palmer (Stonington, CT 25 March 1841 – New York 22 February 1902) was the first child and first daughter of Catherine Jane (McNeill) and Dr. George Edwin Palmer.<sup>54</sup> She married on 27 December 1870, in Calvary Church, Stonington, Connecticut, the Rev. William Slosson Boardman (New York City 17 June 1838 – Sienna, Italy 27 January 1923). They traveled extensively in Europe for the ten years before her death and always made their home at the Park Avenue Hotel in New York City (between 32nd and 33rd Streets) because it was thought to be fireproof. On Saturday, 22 February 1902, a fire broke out in the hotel. Julia McNeill (Palmer) Boardman perished in the fire, dying a horrible death. She could not at first be found in any hospital, but eventually some remains from the hotel were identified by a niece, who recognized a piece of jewelry she was wearing. Her funeral was held in New York, and her remains buried in Stonington, Connecticut. Her husband was badly burned but recovered. He remarried the following year.

She was about two and a half years old when Anna Whistler and her family went to St. Petersburg in 1843 and about seven and a half when the diaries came to a halt. In March 1844, Anna Whistler recorded buying a Russian "nurse" doll for her, made by a Russian lady in reduced circumstances.

* * *

George Edwin Palmer Jr. (Stonington, CT 8 May 1843 – Cincinnati, OH 24 May 1909)<sup>55</sup> was about three months old when Anna Whistler and her children departed for St. Petersburg in September 1843 and about five years old when the diaries ended. The diaries show that his mother gratified Anna Whistler when she wrote her in the winter of 1845 that everyone who saw her little Georgie was reminded of the deceased two-year-old Charles Donald Whistler. The thrilling details of an illness suffered by him are recorded in the diaries related to Anna Whistler in a letter from her sister-in-law Maria (Cammann) McNeill, who frequently visited Stonington with her family. George Edwin Palmer Jr. married Susan Euphemia Sears.

* * *

Donald McNeill Palmer (Stonington, CT 7 November 1845 – San Jose, CA 9 May 1928)<sup>56</sup> was born in November 1845. He is not mentioned in the diaries. Although the diary for 1845 includes November, Anna Whistler expressed in December 1845 or the early months of 1846 her irritation at being unable to record events except sporadically. He married Ann Elizabeth Feazel of Glasgow, Maine (b. c. 1847). They had a daughter, Lillian McNeill Palmer (6 July 1871 – Los Gatos, CA 1961), who became an artist in the Arts and Crafts Movement (1890–1920).

* * *

Anna Whistler Palmer (Stonington, CT 7 April 1848 – Stonington, CT 28 May 1928)<sup>57</sup> was five months old when the diaries came to a halt in September 1848. She came to dislike her Aunt Anna Whistler because of recollections of confiscated toy episodes when she was a young child and of Anna Whistler's humiliation of her as a teenager. She married on 17 November 1875 Dr. George Dallas Stanton, MD, of Stonington, Connecticut, and had one child, Donald Palmer Stanton (7 October 1876 – 27 November 1932), who remained a bachelor. Her dislike of her aunt was disclosed when her son communicated it in 1928 and 1930 to Kate McDiarmid, who was collecting information for her biography of Anna Whistler. Her birth is mentioned in the diaries in 1848. The 1848 diary is not resumed until April 25, two weeks after her birth, and on 22 May Anna Whistler records the receipt of an affectionate letter written by her sister, Kate, just before the latter's confinement, with a PS from her husband, Dr. George Edwin Palmer, for whom Anna Whistler had great affection.

* * * * *

Also among Anna Whistler's Florida relatives<sup>58</sup> mentioned in the diaries are the children of her mother's sister, Isabella (Kingsley) Gibbs (13 January 1774 – 21 January 1838), who were visiting in New York and Stonington, Connecticut, in the autumn of 1844 along with her brother, Charles Johnston McNeill. They are Kingsley Beatty Gibbs (25 July 1810 – 16 October 1859) and Sophia Hermes (Gibbs) Couper (7 November 1812 – 20 March 1903). The second wife of Kingsley Beatty Gibbs, Laura (Williams) Gibbs (1820–1892; married 14 January 1841), was also present.

Kingsley Beatty Gibbs, like his first cousin, Charles Johnston McNeill, worked for their uncle, Zephaniah Kingsley (1765–1843), in East Florida. At the latter's death, he and Charles Johnston McNeill both received bequests. "Kingsley Beatty Gibbs received the schooner North Carolina and 1,000 acres of land at Twelve Mile Swamp in St. John's County."

Sophia Hermes (Gibbs) Couper, who had married John Couper (St. Simons Island, Glynn County, GA 12 April 1799 – West Bay [near Mobile], AL 24 January 1837) in Chatham, Georgia, on 21 November 1832, was a widow. On 5 February 1846, Sophia Hermes (Gibbs) Couper of Wilmington, North Carolina, married at Fort George Island, Florida, as her second husband, General Duncan Lamont Clinch (Edgecombe County, NC 6 April 1787 – Macon, Bibb County, GA 27 November 1849).

* * * * *

South Carolina cousins<sup>59</sup> are also mentioned briefly in the diaries. Anna Whistler refers to Miss Anna Johnstone, and Miss Johnstone's niece, Mrs. Corbett, as well as Mrs. Corbett's daughter, Lizzie. Anna

Johnstone (1787–1870), first cousin of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, was the daughter of Charles Johnston and Mary (Mackenzie) Johnston, brother and sister-in-law of Isabella (Johnston) Kingsley. Anna Johnstone lived at South Bay, Charleston, South Carolina, where Anna Whistler visited her in 1858, after a twenty-nine-year hiatus. Of Anna Johnstone's six siblings, Marion, who married Peter Porcher Jr., was the mother of Margaret (Porcher) Corbett (b. 1804). The latter, "widowed at age twenty-five," was the mother of one child, Elizabeth, who married Polydore P. Duclos, a broker, and lived in New York. In the 1860s, their address was 106 East 41st Street. When Anna Whistler came to the United States from England for a visit in the summer of 1867, she frequently saw these relatives in New York, even living with Anna Johnstone in the home of the vacationing Elizabeth (Corbett) Duclos and providing care for her.

In the diaries, Anna Whistler says that the manner of her guest, Miss Krehmer, reminds her of her Charleston cousins.

* * * * *

Also appearing in the diaries are members of the Dunscombe and Vallance<sup>60</sup> families, whose tie to Anna Whistler is through Maria (Cammann) McNeill, her sister-in-law. They were the children of John Dunscombe (Bermuda 1777 – Liverpool 28 November 1848) and Elizabeth (McGill or Magill) Dunscombe (Middletown, CT 18 July 1779 – 28 February 1830): Eliza Dunscombe (Bermuda 1801 – Brooklyn 11 July 1861), Margaret Magill Dunscombe (St. John's, NL c. 1807 – buried West Derby, Liverpool, Lancashire 18 July 1851), and George Hoyles Dunscombe (St. John's, NL 30 August 1817 – Florida 21 March 1871). Their father was a merchant in Bermuda and came to Newfoundland in 1808 as an agent for a group of Bermuda businessmen. He eventually became a very prominent citizen there. St. John's, Newfoundland, is named for his Bermuda home, St. John's Hill. His business was destroyed in the Great Fire of 1846 (June).

* * *

Eliza M. Dunscombe married at Albany, New York, on 23 September 1831 Henry J. Cammann (d. 1833), a lawyer and the brother of Maria (Cammann) McNeill. He died about eighteen months later, and Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann spent most of the rest of her widowed life in England.

On 1 May 1846, Anna Whistler recorded in the diaries that she had received a letter from her niece, Eliza McNeill, saying that Aunt Eliza was coming from Newfoundland that summer to New York. Eliza McNeill wished Anna Whistler to come from Russia to the United States to meet her.

* * *

Margaret Magill Dunscombe married on 24 July 1830 at St. John's, Newfoundland, William Vallance (Newton Abbot, Devon c. 1797 – Liverpool 23 April 1863). The Vallance family were merchants and ship owners of London, Liverpool, and (in Devon) Dartmouth, Torquay, and Teignmouth. The William Vallance family lived at 1 or 2 West Derby Street, Liverpool. William Vallance is listed in Liverpool directories at 2 West Derby Street as merchant and agent to the Medical, Legal, and General Life Assurance Company.

The Vallances had at least ten children: Mary Eliza (St. John's, NL 16 May 1831 – d. possibly in New Zealand), probably the eldest daughter "Minnie" referred to by Anna Whistler in her diaries; John Dunscombe (b. Shaldon, Devon c. 1833; bap. 3 September 1833); William (b. c. 1835); George Dunscombe (b. Newton Abbot, Devon July 1838); Margaret Ellen (b. c. 1840; bap. St. Mary, Edge Hill, Lancashire 24 August 1840; probably died, as there is a second Margaret later); Christopher Bridge (b. Liverpool, 23 July 1841; bap. St. Mary, Edge Hill, Lancashire 25 January 1842); Margaret Jane (b. Liverpool c. 1842; bap. St. Bartholomew's, Liverpool, Lancashire 18 December 1842); Frederick Julian (b. Liverpool c. 1844; bap. St. Bartholomew's, Liverpool, Lancashire 23 September 1844); Miriam Lois (b. Liverpool 16 April 1848; bap. St. Jude's, West Derby, Lancashire 12 November 1848 – Greenland, New Zealand 24 June 1933); Rhoda Ellen (b. Liverpool c. 1850).

In 1847, when Anna Whistler, James, and Willie were in England, six or seven of the Vallance children could have been with their parents. Rhoda Ellen was not yet born. Possibly William had died, as also may have Margaret Ellen, since there was now a Margaret Jane.

Mary Eliza (“Minnie”) Dunscombe became a nurse and married James O’Shea on 25 February 1868 in Wellington, New Zealand. Of the younger children referred to in the diaries whom Anna Whistler could have seen in Liverpool, John joined the British Army either in the East Indies or in India, and Miriam Lois married on 18 April 1876 in Wellington, New Zealand, Charles Joseph Barker, who worked variously as banker, collector, and government insurance agent in Carterton and Christchurch, New Zealand.

* * *

Eliza (Dunscombe) Cammann and Margaret McGill (Dunscombe) Vallance’s brother, George Hoyles, was a banker in Coburg, Ontario, Canada. He eventually moved to New York, while his partner, Eugenius Harvey of Bermuda, took over their company, Dunscombe and Harvey, in St. John’s, Newfoundland. He married when he was over fifty and died in 1871 in Florida. He was buried in Hibernia Cemetery in Orange Park, Clay County, Florida. His wife’s name is not known. After his death, his wife returned to Canada. They had two surviving children: George Hoyles Dunscombe Jr. (c. 1867 – after 1906) and Catherine (Dunscombe) Colt, born after her father’s death. As his sister, Eliza, was Maria (Cammann) McNeill’s sister-in-law, he would have been able to bring Anna Whistler news, directly or indirectly, of her brother, William Gibbs McNeill’s, family, when he came to Liverpool in the summer of 1847.

A nephew, Cyprian Bridge, remembers his aunts Eliza and Margaret as strikingly beautiful women and his uncle George as the handsomest man he ever saw and an extraordinary fisherman.

* * * * *

Anna Whistler also mentions in her diaries a “Henriet Halback,”<sup>61</sup> whose tie to Anna Whistler is also through Maria (Cammann) McNeill, and who wrote her a letter from Frankfort am Main that was received in St. Petersburg on 22 April 1848. An old friend of Anna Whistler's, Henriette Wilhelmine (Bohlen) Halbach (Philadelphia 15 September 1803 – Baden-Baden 14 March 1870) was the daughter of Bohl Bohlen (Schiffdorf [near Bremerhaven] 26 September 1754 – Philadelphia 11 September 1836) and Johanna Magdalena Oswald (New York 1 August 1770 – Amsterdam 13 February 1805). Her father was a gin merchant and the Dutch consul in Philadelphia.

Henriette Wilhelmine Bohlen married on 18 March 1826 in Philadelphia George Halbach (Müngsten bei Remscheid 4 October 1798 – Baden-Baden 27 August 1855). They had five children: Oswald (Philadelphia 27 February 1827 – Philadelphia 29 April 1930); Alwine Henriette (Philadelphia 6 March 1829 – Madrid 16 April 1890); Emilie Georgiana (Philadelphia 20 March 1831 – Philadelphia 17 August 1834); Juliet Amanda Victoria (Philadelphia 27 April 1835 – Baden-Baden 11 February 1919); and George (Philadelphia 10 November 1836 – Dusseldorf 14 August 1905). Henriette Wilhelmine (Bohlen) Halbach's mother, Johanna Magdalena Oswald, was the daughter of Philip Jakob Oswald and Catherine (Hahn) Oswald, and the sister of Maria Margareta Oswald, who married Charles Louis Cammann. Henriette Wilhelmine (Bohlen) Halbach was aunt, therefore, to Maria Matilda Cammann, who married Anna Whistler's brother, William Gibbs McNeill. This probably explains why Anna Whistler knew Henriette Halbach and her daughter, Alwine. George Halbach submitted a passport application in 1840, supported by the Bavarian consul at Philadelphia in a letter dated 19 May 1840, to visit Europe with his wife and three of their children. They may have remained there permanently. Anna Whistler quoted in her diaries Henriette Wilhelmine (Bohlen) Halbach's comments on the revolutions of 1848.

NOTES

1. For the biography of Major John Whistler see John Whistler, Burton Historical Collection Leaflet, vol. 5, no. 1, September 1926, Detroit Public Library, Detroit, MI; "Maj John Whistler," Memorial ID 65938795, findagrave.com.

2. Cheryl Whistler Garrison, “Descendants of Major John Whistler,” ancestry.com; CHS: Whistler, pp. 3, 4, 5.
3. Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1; Harden, “Whistler,” pp. 146–160; Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, pp. 32–38, 52–54; 52n84–54n113; National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, vol. 9, pp. 48–49; George L. Vose, A Sketch of the Life and Works of George Washington Whistler, Civil Engineer (Boston: Lee and Shepard; New York: Charles L. Dillingham, 1887).
4. This biography of William Whistler is a composite from the following sources: Heitman, Historical Register, vol. 1, p. 1026; “Col William Whistler,” Memorial ID 65937938, findagrave.com; Carolyn Thomas Foreman, “Colonel William Whistler,” The Chronicles of Oklaboma 18, no. 4 (1940): p. 314–327; “William Whistler (1780 [sic: 1782]–1863,” Whistler Genealogy, Wikitree, last modified June 14, 2018, accessed September 28, 2020, <https://www.wikitree.com/wiki/Whistler-169>
5. This biography of the Bloodgood family is a composite from the following sources: Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, p. 333; Twelfth Annual Reunion of the Association of the Graduates of the United States Military Academy, June 9, 1881 (East Saginaw, MI: E.W. Lyon, 1881); Deborah B. Martin, “The Story of an Old Letter,” Green Bay Historical Bulletin 3, no. 1 (1927): pp. 1–8; Arthur H. Frazier, “William, Brother of George Washington Whistler,” paper dated April 1969, in the collection of the SHS, p. 7; CHS: Whistler; Wyandotte Herald, January 8, 1909; Record of Service of Michigan Volunteers in the Civil War, 1861–1865, published by authority of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Michigan Legislature under the direction of Brig. Gen. Geo. H. Brown, Adjutant General (Kalamazoo, MI: Ihling Bros. and Everard, n.d.), p. 16; Barber and Howe, Historical Collections, p. 532; Alexander J. Swift to his father, West Point July 1st 1843, USMAL: A.J. Swift Papers, CU 587; entry for January 1844 and entry for March 12 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I.
6. This biography of Joseph Nelson Garland Whistler and his wife is a composite from the following sources: Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 2, pp. 296–298, and supplement, vol. 4, 1890–1900; “Col Joseph Nelson Garland Whistler,” Memorial ID 32345937, findagrave.com; Army and Navy Journal and Gazette of the Regular and Volunteer Forces 25 (27 August 1887): p. 80; U.S., Newspaper Extractions from the Northeast, 1704–1930, IGI.
7. This biography of James Whistler is a composite from the following sources: entry for March 12 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP,

- Part I; CHS: Whistler, p. 3; Cheryl Whistler Garrison, “Descendants of Major John Whistler,” ancestry.com; Times-Picayune (New Orleans), October 17, 1843.
8. T.H. Hinchman, Banks and Banking in Michigan (New York: Arno, 1980), p. 108; Defiance Express, March 26, 1906.
  9. Detroit Free Press, March 14, 1858 and October 6, 1874. A portrait of each of the Abbott spouses by Conrad Highwood can be found in the Burton Historical Collection of the Detroit Public Library.
  10. This biography of the Hamilton and Van Vechten families is a composite from the following sources: Van Vechten, Genealogical Records of the Van Vechten's, p. 44; Van Vechten and Shattuck, Van Vechten Genealogy, p. 116; entry for January 1844 and entry for March 12 [1844], NYPL: AWPDP, Part I; CHS: Whistler; Albany Rural Cemetery (Gravestone and Cemetery Burial Cards), ancestry.co.uk; War of 1812 Widows and Pension Files; Michigan Death Records for 1874.
  11. Sarah Delano (Swift) Adams to her brother, General Joseph G. Swift, New London, 12 April 1830, Letters to Alexander J. Swift, son of Joseph G. Swift, USMAL: A.J. Swift Papers; Foster Swift to his daughter-in-law, Louisa (Walker) Swift, wife of General Joseph G. Swift, New London, 16 January 1831.
  12. This biography of Joseph Gardner Swift is a composite from the following sources: Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, p. 51–56; Ellery, Memoirs of Gen. J.G. Swift.
  13. This biography of the families of Joseph Gardner Swift and Thomas John Chew is a composite from the following sources: Ellery, Memoirs of Gen. J.G. Swift, pp. 42, 247; Daily Times (New Brunswick, NJ), April 6, 1896; Rev. Canon Lawrence D. Fish, archivist/historian, Diocese of New Jersey, Trenton, NJ, to E. Harden, no month or day, 2005; Christ Church Records (New Brunswick, NJ), Rutgers University Special Collections; David Kuzma, Archibald S. Alexander Library, Special Collections and University Archives, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, NJ, to E. Harden, 28 February 2006; Thomas J. Chew Family Papers, William L. Clements Library, Manuscripts Division, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI; Lawrence Buckley Thomas, Pedigrees of Thomas, Chew, and Lawrence: A West River Register and Genealogical Notes (New York: Thomas Whittaker, 1883), p. 33; Geneva Courier, July 4, 1843, p. 3, col. 2; and the entry for S<sup>t</sup> Petersburg. November 28th 1843, NYPL: AWPDP, Part I, and accompanying Note 16; “McRee Swift, F. Am. Soc. C. E.,” Proceedings of the American Society of Civil Engineers 22 (January–December 1896): pp. 565–566; “Peter Richards,” Memorial ID 58229529, findagrave.com; “Thomas John Chew,” Memorial ID 123167648; “Abby Hortense Chew,” Memorial ID 90486595; “Louisa Margaret Walker Swift,” Memorial ID 30460168.

14. This biography of Captain William Henry Swift and of his family is a composite from the following sources: Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, pp. 236–237; Daily National Intelligencer, March 26, 1846, p. 3, col. 5; USMAL: W.H. Swift Papers; Autobiography of George Bliss [the son], vol. 1, fol. 24, N-YHS: Bliss Papers; Genealogy of the Bliss Family in America, vol. 1, pp. 404–405, NYPL: Swift Papers; Wm. H. Swift to General J. G. Swift, New London, 27 January 1835; George W. Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, New York 27 June 1837; George W. Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, Springfield, 4 September 1837; RGIA: Fond 446, 1844, op. 13, d. 4. Vsepoddaneishie doklady GUPSiPZ 9/21 Maia 1844 g., 510 [Most Devoted Reports of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings 9/21 May 1844, no. 510]. This item is a letter from Nesterov to Kleinmikhel’ proposing that Captain William Henry Swift be awarded a diamond ring for his services. Approved by Nicholas I at Tsarskoe Selo on 9/21 May 1844.

A silhouette was made by Auguste Edouart of Captain William Henry Swift at Saratoga Springs, New York, on 14 July 1842, of which it has not been possible to locate an image (Jackson, Ancestors in Silhouette, p. 225).

15. For an explanation of Captain William H. Swift’s connections through his second marriage, see Stoeckl, Howard, Swift, Ironside in this Appendix.
16. This biography of Dr. Daniel McNeill, MD, is a composite from the following sources: MacBean, Saint Andrew’s Society, vol. 2, pp. 1–2, and North Carolina State Records, 1786, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, NC. His biography is difficult and unsatisfactory to reconstruct. For example, although he and his family left North Carolina permanently for New York in 1815, he was already living in New York in 1807, when he became a member of the Saint Andrew’s Society and is listed in New York directories. It is hard to account for the years in between.
17. This brief biography of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill and the Kingsley family is a composite from the following sources: Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, pp. 2, 9, 18, 246n29, 259n3, 259–260n7, 300; “‘Whistler’s Mother’ Exhibit Creates Historical Interest, Family Settled in S.C.,” “The World of Women,” Aiken Standard and Review (Aiken, SC), April 26, 1963; “Zephaniah Kingsley Sr.,” Wikipedia, December 7, 2018, accessed September 28, 2020, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Zephaniah\_Kingsley\_Sr.; the essay on Anna (McNeill) Whistler as she was in the 1840s in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s”; Watt, Gibbs Family; Marriage license for Zephaniah Kingsley [sic] and Isabella Johnston, 28 September 1763, Lambeth Palace Library, London, UK.

Family legend has it that Isabella Johnston was the daughter of “Sir William Johnstone (1663–1720), ... Marquis of Annandale, Earl of Hartfell and Chief of his clan,” and Lady Katherine (Melville) Johnstone, “descendant of Henry Dundas, the first Marquis of Melville and the Lord Advocate of Scotland.” Isabella Johnston is listed as twenty-four years old, spinster, and Zephaniah Kingsley [sic] as twenty-seven years old, a “linnen draper.” I accept Schafer’s proposal that Isabella Johnston “was more likely the daughter of Robert Johnston and Catherine Melville, born in 1737 at Fireside, Scotland, immediately north of Annan in the Dumfries and Galloway region of southwest Scotland” and that “her mother was the daughter or niece of John Melville, a steward or factor at one of the estates owned by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleugh” (Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, pp. 259–260).

18. This biography of the Fairfax family, and of Donald McNeill Fairfax in particular, is a composite from the following sources: Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Fairfax, Donald McNeill”; ZB file for Donald McNeill Fairfax, information sheet dated 22 March 1917, Naval Historical Center, Washington, DC; Beach, United States Navy, pp. 196–222; The National Intelligencer (Washington, DC), February 29, 1844; New York Herald, March 1, 1844; Major G.W. Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift, St. Petersburg, April 4, 1844, NYPL: Swift Papers; F.L. Brockett, comp., The Lodge of Washington: A History of the Alexandria Washington Lodge, No. 22. A.F. and A.M. of Alexandria, Va., 1783–1876 (Alexandria, VA: George D. French, 1876), pp. 118, 119; Abraham W. Foote, Foote Family: Comprising the Genealogy and History of Nathaniel Foote of Wethersfield, Conn. And His Descendants, 2 vols. (Baltimore: Gateway, 1984), vol. 1, pp. 322–323; 1850 US Census for Fairfax County; National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, vol. 4, pp. 459–460; George N. McKenzie, ed., Colonial Families of the United States of America, 7 vols. (Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1966), vol. 2, p. 279; Kenton Kilmer and Donald

- Sweig, The Fairfax Family in Fairfax County: A Brief History, ed. Nan Netherton (Fairfax, VA: Fairfax County Office of Comprehensive Planning–Fairfax County Historical Commission, 1975), p. 110; Edward D. Neill, “Descendants of Hon. William Fairfax of Belvoir, Virginia, United States of America” (genealogical table), in The Fairfaxes of England and America in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Albany, NY: Joel Munsell, 1868), following p. 208; “RADM Donald MacNeil Fairfax,” Memorial ID 82374838.
19. This biography of the family of Joseph and Mary Charlotte (McNeill) Easterbrook is a composite from the following sources: Index of Marriages and Deaths in New York Weekly Museum, 1788–1817; The Commissioned Sea Officers of the Royal Navy 1660–1815 ([Greenwich, UK: Royal Naval College – National Maritime Museum, 1954]); Baptismal registers of Temple Church, Bristol; Gentleman's Magazine (1810); National Probate Calendar (UK), 1810; Will of Joseph Easterbrook dated 9 July 1796, Prerogative Court of Canterbury Wills 1810; Baptismal registers of the Church of St. Phillip and St. Jacob, Bristol; Sarah Richards, Eighteenth-Century Ceramics Products for a Civilised Society (Manchester, UK: Manchester University Press, 1999), pp. 146–147, 173n61; Trenman's Exeter Flying Post or Plymouth and Cornish Advertiser, December 20, 1821; The Glasgow Herald, December 10, 1821; New-York Evening Post, November 2, 5, 8, 9, 10, 14, 1821; Bristol Mercury, August 25, 1832 and December 27, 1862; James Brimble, descendant of Joseph Easterbrook Sr. (1767–1810).
  20. This biography of William Gibbs McNeill is a composite from the following sources: National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, vol. 9, pp. 47–48; Cullum, Biographical Register, vol. 1, pp. 161–166; New York Evening Post, Friday, June 8, 1821; and the essay on George William Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s.”
  21. This biographical information about Charles Louis Cammann is a composite from the following sources: James R. Leaming, Memoir of George P. Cammann, M.D., Read Before the New York Academy of Medicine, October 21st, 1863 (Boston: E.P. Dutton, 1864), pp. 3, 4, 5; Mrs. S. Dillon Ripley, Washington, DC, to E. Harden, 11 May 1994; Franklin–Rogers family tree, ancestry.com; New York Genealogical and Biographical Record 62 (1931): p. 153; Brooklyn City Directory, 1861, p. 59.
  22. This biography of Dr. George P. Cammann and his family is a composite from the following sources: Leaming, Memoir of G.P.

- Cammann*, pp. 8, 9, 18, 33, 34; Saint Nicholas Society of the City of New York, Organized February 28, 1835, Incorporated April 17, 1841 (New York: The Society, 1923), p. 27; “Anna Catharine Lorillard Cammann,” Memorial ID 7489364, findagrave.com.
23. This biography of Mary Isabella McNeill is a composite from the following sources: Wolfgang Rohdewald, “The Genealogy of the Rodewald/Rohdewald Families,” <http://www.mysunrise.ch/users/WRohdewald/indexe.html> (2001), pp. 79–80, 108, 210 (Rohdewald’s document is based on information in Eduard Rohdewald, Der Rodewalde Geschlecht familiengeschichtliche Blätter [Rohdewald Family Genealogical Notes], trans. Jutta Kitching [Leipzig, Germany: G. Reichardt, 1929]); Gertrude A. Barber, comp., Marriages Taken from the New York Evening Post, vol. 13, From September 21, 1849 to July 7, 1852, ts (1936), p. 21.
  24. This biography of Catherine Julia McNeill is a composite from the following sources: Rohdewald, “Genealogy,” pp. 79–80, 108, 210; Barber, Marriages Taken from the New York Evening Post, p. 9.
  25. This biography of Eliza Winstanley McNeill is a composite from the following sources: Norman Gershom Flagg and Lucius C.S. Flagg, Family Records of the Descendants of Gershom Flagg (Born 1730) of Lancaster, Massachusetts, with Other Genealogical Records of the Flagg Family Descended from Thomas Flegg of Watertown, Mass. And Including the Flegg Lineage in England (Quincy, IL: printed by the authors, 1907), p. 127, item 1019; “Rev Edward Octavius Flagg,” Memorial ID 132650183, findagrave.com; New-York Evening Post, September 26, 1851; Brooklyn Daily Eagle, May 23, 1855.
  26. This biography of William Wyatt McNeill is a composite from the following sources: New-York Evening Post, April 3, 1850; Daily Delta (New Orleans, LA), Saturday, June 4, 1853, p. 2; Rohdewald, “Genealogy,” pp. 79–80; Anna Whistler to Meg Hill, Pomfret Wed. P.M. Oct. 8, 1851, LC: P-W, box 34; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191.
  27. This biography of Patrick Tracy Jackson McNeill is a composite from the following sources: T.B. Lawson, “Lowell and Newburyport,” Contributions of the Old Residents’ Historical Association 16 (read May 2, 1876): pp. 216, 223, 224; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191; Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Jackson, Patrick Tracy.”

28. Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, pp. 7, 259nn1, 2; New York Herald, June 11, 1853.
29. Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid 20 February [1929], GUL: Whistler Collection, S193.
30. Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, pp. 218–219.
31. Schafer, pp. 226.
32. Schafer, pp. 231.
33. Schafer, pp. 232.
34. Schafer, pp. 233.
35. Schafer, pp. 242.
36. Schafer, pp. 234.
37. Schafer, pp. 236.
38. Schafer, pp. 242.
39. Schafer, pp. 244.
40. All quotations in this sentence are from Schafer, p. 245.
41. Entry for March 27: March 25, AMW 1850 Diary; entry for April 22: April 20; entry for May 4: May 2; entry for May 11: May 9; entry for May 16: May 14; entry for May 22: May 20; entry for June 8: June 6.
42. Obituary for Mrs. E. McNeill, Florida Times-Union and Citizen (Jacksonville, FL), August 25, 1898, p. 5, col. 5.
43. 1850 Census for Jacksonville District, Duval County, FL; 1860 Census for Duval County, FL; 1870 Census for Mandarin, Duval County, FL; “Charles W [sic] MacNeill,” Memorial ID 121155309, findagrave.com.
44. Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid 29 January [1930], GUL: Whistler Collection, S195.
45. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 23 March 1858 [St. John’s River, East Florida], GUL: Whistler Collection, W490.
46. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, South Bay [Charleston] Friday afternoon May 7th 1858, GUL: Whistler Collection, W491.
47. All quotations in this paragraph are from Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 23 March 1858 [St. John’s River, East Florida], GUL: Whistler Collection, W490.
48. See the biography of Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill in Winstanley ... Cragg in this Appendix.

49. Anna Whistler to dear M London Saturday 19th [June 1869], LC: P-W, box 34, A.
50. Anna Whistler to James Whistler, 23 March 1858 [St. John's River, East Florida], GUL: Whistler Collection, W490.
51. New York Herald, April 12, 1869; Anna Whistler to Harriet and James Gamble, 2 Lindsey Row Chelsea London Thursday May 6th [18]69, GUL: Whistler Collection, W536.
52. Anna Whistler to Harriet and James Gamble, 2 Lindsay Row Chelsea London May 6th [18]69, GUL: Whistler Collection, W536; SHS Archives. As the Stonington Cemetery records contain no information about a burial service for Charles Johnston McNeill, perhaps a memorial service was held.
53. This biography of Dr. George Edwin Palmer, MD, is a composite from the following sources: Narragansett Weekly, May 14, 1868; The Mystic Pioneer, May 23, 1868; SHS Archives; Anna P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, 9 April [1928], GUL: Whistler Collection, S178; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, S191; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 26 May 1930, S202; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 19 October [1930], S208.
54. This biography of Julia (McNeill) Palmer is a composite from the following sources: New-York Tribune, February 22, 1902, February 23, 1902, and February 24, 1902; Stonington Mirror, February 25 and February 28, 1902; New York Times, August 17, 1903; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191; SHS Archives; "Report of the Death of an American Citizen," American consular service report, ancestry.com; "Passport Application in 1869 for William S. Boardman," ancestry.com.
55. This biography of George Edwin Palmer Jr. is a composite from the following sources: Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191; SHS Archives.
56. This biography of Donald McNeill Palmer is a composite from the following sources: Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191; SHS Archives.
57. This biography of Anna Whistler Palmer is a composite form the following sources: Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, Stonington, 25 November 1928, GUL: Whistler Collection, S191;

- Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, 28 April [1930], S200; Donald P. Stanton to Kate McDiarmid, [26 May 1930], S201; “The early years and boyhood of James McNeill Whistler,” by Miss Emma W. Palmer, GUL: Whistler Collection, P44; SHS Archives.
58. These biographies of Anna Whistler’s Florida relatives are a composite from the following sources: T. Reed Ferguson, The John Couper Family at Cannon’s Point (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1995); “Marriage and Death Notices,” Raleigh Register and North Carolina State Gazette, 1846–1867; “Kingsley Beatty ‘King’ Gibbs,” Memorial ID 53969684, findagrave.com; “Sophie Hermes Gibbs Clinch,” Memorial ID 122242296; “Laura Malcolm Williams Gibbs,” Memorial ID 110317450; “John Couper Jr,” Memorial ID 69092908; “Duncan Lamont Clinch,” Memorial ID 7440995; Fretwell, “Kingsley Beatty Gibbs”; Watt, Gibbs Family; Zephaniah Kingsley, p. 226.
59. These biographies of Anna Whistler’s Charleston cousins are a composite from the following sources: Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, pp. 7, 259–260n2; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Charleston, S.C. 23 January [1858], GUL: Whistler Collection, W488; Anna Whistler to James Whistler South Bay Friday afternoon May 7th 1858, W491; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, entry for 189 Henry Street Brooklyn Tuesday 27th [August] in letter begun at Homeland [Staten Island] on Saturday Augt 3rd 1867, W526; Anna Whistler to my dear friends [Jane and Samuel Wann, New York] 6 August [1867], W527; Anna Whistler to Jane Wann 189 Henry Street Brooklyn Friday Augt 23rd [1867], W528; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble entry for 189 Henry Street Brooklyn Oct. 29th [1867] in letter from Homeland, W. Baltimore Sept. 16th 1867, W530; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, 2 Lindsey Houses Chelsea London entry of Sat. 10th [September 1870] in letter of 7 September 1870, W539; Anna Whistler to Margaret Getfield Hill, 2 Lindsey Row, Old Chelsea London October 22nd 1865, LC: P-W, box 34; Anna Whistler to Maggie [New York August 1867]; Toutziari, “Anna Matilda Whistler’s Correspondence,” vol. 3, pt. 1, p. 700nn1, 10, 11, p. 705nn6, 7, p. 706nn5, 6, p. 709n18, p. 713n16.
60. These biographies of the Dunscombe, Vallance, and Cammann families are a composite from the following sources: 1841, 1851, and 1861 censuses for West Derby, Liverpool, Lancashire, England; 1861 Census for Edgbaston, Birmingham, England; Marriage Records of Anglican Church of St. John the Baptist, St.

John's, NL; Gertrude Crosbie, ed., Births, Deaths, Marriages in Newfoundland Newspapers, 1810–1890, Births, Deaths, Marriages in Newfoundland Newspapers, 1825–1850, and Births, Deaths, Marriages in Newfoundland Newspapers, 1860–1865, Maritime History Archives, Memorial University of Newfoundland; descendent Edward Dunscombe of Endicott, New York; Robert H. Cuff, Dictionary of Newfoundland and Labrador Biography (St. John's, NL: printed by the author, 1990); New York Times, July 13, 1861, p. 5; Burials in the Parish of West Derby, Church of St. Mary Edge Hill, 1851; Burials in the Parish of West Derby, Church of St. Mary Edge Hill, 1863; Paul O'Neill, A Seaport Legacy: The Story of St. John's Newfoundland (Don Mills, ON: Musson, 1976), p. 778; The Times (London), July 1, 1846, taken from the Morning Courier Extra (St. John's NL), June 12, [1846]; "George Hoyles Dunscombe," Memorial ID 79245233, findagrave.com; Ed Dunscombe, comp., Dunscombe and Allied Families: Forty Years of Flustering (webpage), accessed September 28, 2020, <http://dunscombe.info>.

61. This biography of the Halbach family is a composite from the following sources: IGI individual records for Philadelphia, PA; Passenger List of Dutch Ship "Alexander," which arrived at Philadelphia from Amsterdam 28 June 1824, Passenger Lists of Vessels Arriving at Philadelphia 1800–1882, microfilm no. 34, series 423, NAUS; M1372: Record Group 59, Passport Applications 1795–1905, NAUS; 1830 Federal Census, Locust Ward, Philadelphia, PA; William P. Filby, Philadelphia Naturalization Records: An Index to Records of Aliens' Declarations of Intention and/or Oaths of Allegiance, 1789–1880 (Detroit, MI: Gale Research, 1982).

WINANS<sup>1</sup>

Ross Winans (Sussex County, NJ 14 October 1796 – Baltimore, MD 11 April 1877; see Image 228), the future Baltimore locomotive builder, married on 22 January 1820 in New Jersey Julia DeKay (10 August 1800 – 21 May 1850).<sup>2</sup> They had five surviving sons and one daughter: Thomas DeKay (1820–1878; see Image 229), William Lewis (5 April 1823 – 22 June 1897; see Image 232), Julia DeKay (1825–1875; see Image 16), Ross Jr. (August 1831 – Paterson, NJ 25 June 1863), DeWitt Clinton (1838 – 27 November 1892), and Walter Scott (1840–1928).<sup>3</sup>

Ross Winans had come to Baltimore in 1827, when the work of building the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad (B&O), the first railroad in the United States, began. He had become interested in this mode of transportation and had “devised a model ‘rail wagon’, having the ‘friction wheel’ with outside bearings,” that became “for at least a century the distinctive pattern for railroad wheels.”<sup>4</sup> In 1828, the B&O sent George Washington Whistler (see Images 7–8, 21), Ross Winans, William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31), and Jonathan Knight to England, where they remained from November of that year to May 1829 “to study the railroad system.” When Ross Winans returned home, he became an engineer (1829–1830) for the B&O.<sup>5</sup> “In 1835 he and his partner, George Gillingham, took over the company shops at Mount Clare.”<sup>6</sup> “About 1840 Winans began a career as an independent locomotive builder, setting up his own shops adjacent to the Mt. Clare Station.”

When the Russian government expressed its wish to have the rolling stock for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway built in Russia by a company that would be willing to relocate, Major Whistler proposed Ross Winans. When the model locomotive that Winans built to compete with an “English firm also building a locomotive for Russia” was “shipped ... in the spring of 1843, Ross Winans did not wish to leave his factory in Baltimore but sent instead his son Thomas, also a gifted mechanic, to put it into operation.”<sup>7</sup>

Thomas DeKay Winans (Vernon, Sussex County, NJ 6 December 1820 – Newport, RI 10 June 1878; see Image 229) is the only member of the Winans family who appears in Anna Whistler’s St. Petersburg diaries. He was ten years old when his family moved to Baltimore. He received “a common-school education” and was then “apprenticed ... to a machinist, under whom he displayed such skill that before he attained his majority he was entrusted with the headship of a department in his father’s establishment.”<sup>78</sup> He became acquainted with Major Whistler when, “scarcely eighteen years old, he [was] charged with the delivery of some engines for the Boston and Albany Railroad.” It is, therefore, not surprising that his father also entrusted him with the delivery and setting up of the model locomotive in Russia, and that Major Whistler had no objection.

On route to Russia, Thomas DeKay Winans met Joseph Harrison Jr. (see Image 226), of the firm of Eastwick and Harrison, who had been invited by the Russian government “to come to Russia to bid for the locomotive contract.”<sup>79</sup> Harrison invited Winans “to participate with him in the negotiations.”<sup>80</sup> They were awarded the contract, for some three million dollars, which they “signed on December 27, 1843/January 8, 1844.”<sup>81</sup> The contract was for six years.<sup>82</sup> The partnership was now called Harrison, Winans and Eastwick.

Thomas DeKay Winans was a bachelor, who, like the Harrison and Eastwick families, lived in the “village on the grounds” of the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works (see Images 223–225), as did “the government workers with their families.”<sup>83</sup> Anna Whistler (see Images 1–5) records in her diaries that he could not leave the Works during the day and came only at night to consult with Major Whistler. Unlike the Harrisons and Eastwicks, he is never mentioned as attending any of the festivities at the Whistler home, nor does Anna Whistler ever record that he was present when they visited the Harrisons and Eastwicks. She mentions seeing him on only one occasion, when they took Aunt Alicia (see Image 39) to visit the Harrisons and showed her the foundry where the locomotives were being built. As a bachelor, he seems to have moved in completely different circles and thus to have met Celeste Louise Revillon (c. 1828 – Baltimore, MD 19 March 1861; see Images 230–231), then eighteen years old, who, until 1847, had been away “at school in Paris for the last four years.”<sup>84</sup> She was the daughter of George Revillon (1802 – 24 March 1859) and Marguerite Louise (Bonjour) Revillon.<sup>85</sup> “Her father [was] at the head of a large type foundry” in St. Petersburg and had resided there from about 1837.<sup>86</sup> She did “not speak English and Mr. Wynans knowledge of French [was] limited, but they both [had] some knowledge of the Russian language.”<sup>17</sup> They were married on 11/23 August 1847 “in [both] the British and American Chapel [see Image 125] and the Catholic Church.”<sup>18</sup> Probably because Anna Whistler was in England with James and Willie at the time of the Revillon–Winans wedding, she does not record this event. The Winanses’ first child, George, was born on 30 March 1849 at Alexandrofsky.<sup>19</sup> Their second son, Ross Revillon (1850–1912), was also born in Russia.<sup>20</sup>

It is said that Ross Winans’s second son, William Lewis (Vernon, Sussex County, NJ 3 April 1823 – London 22 June 1897; see Image 232),<sup>21</sup> went to Russia at the same time as Thomas DeKay, but he himself stated that he “resided 16 years in the state of Maryland, from whence [he] removed in the year 1845, to St. Petersburg in Russia.”<sup>22</sup> “In Russia he seems to have played a very minor role in the activities of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, not being a formal member of the firm.”<sup>23</sup> “Although the firm ... remained legally in existence until October, 1850,” Eastwick left Russia in May 1849, after a quarrel with Harrison and Thomas Winans.<sup>24</sup> It was then that William Lewis Winans came to play a major role in the firm. On 21 October (OS) 1849, they “formed a formal partnership with [him]” called Winans, Harrison and Winans, and on 25 August (OS) 1850 signed a six-year contract with the Russian government “for the remount (repair and maintenance) of the moving machinery of the St. Petersburg and Moscow Railway.”<sup>25</sup>

The articles of their agreement put William Lewis Winans completely in control. He was to manage “all matters connected with the carrying out of the contract, having sole power to make decisions” and had “to remain in Russia for the full term of the contract,” while his brother and Harrison “could leave Russia if they wished,” never to return.<sup>26</sup> Nor was he obliged to act upon advice from either of them, unless that partner returned to live in Russia.<sup>27</sup>

Thomas DeKay Winans left Russia for the United States in September 1850. Eastwick, who had returned to Russia in 1850, left permanently for the United States in October of that year, after being bought out. Harrison returned to the United States in December 1852, after spending “1851–52, in England and travelling on the Continent.”

William Lewis Winans remained in Russia, “manag[ing] the Alexandrovsk Factory until 1862.”<sup>28</sup> All became very rich.<sup>29</sup>

Thomas DeKay Winans returned to Baltimore. He built two lavish houses, one in Baltimore, called “Alexandroffsky,” after the place in Russia where he had lived; the other, a country house outside Baltimore, called “Crimea.”<sup>30</sup> He also built a villa at Newport, which he called “Bleak House.”<sup>31</sup> Two more children were born: William (2 March 1852 – 9 December 1871) and Celeste Marguerite (1855 – February 1925). George died in August 1851.<sup>32</sup> When their mother died in 1861, the three remaining children were eleven, nine, and six years old, but there is no indication that Thomas DeKay Winans married again. William predeceased him.

Thomas DeKay Winans devoted much of the rest of his life to inventions: “the cigar-shaped hull which he and his father devised in 1859, designed for high-speed steamers in trans-Atlantic service”; “a device which made the organ as easy of touch as the piano”; “a mode of increasing the strength and volume of sound on the piano”; “an improvement in ventilation which he applied at ‘Alexandroffsky’”; “glass feeding vessels for fish, adopted by the Maryland Fish Commission”; “an ingenious use of the undulation of the waves to pump the water of a spring to the reservoir at the top of his villa at Newport, R.I.”<sup>33</sup> He also “had a natural skill in clay-modelling.”

He is said to have come out of retirement twice: once to “serve as a director” of the B&O when it was completed, and once to establish “a soup station opposite his home” in 1861, when the Civil War broke out.

William Lewis Winans married on 30 November / 12 December 1851 at the British and American Congregational Church in St. Petersburg, Rev. T.S. Ellerby (see Image 256) officiating, Maria Ann Delarue (1825 – Hove, Sussex 18 December 1904).<sup>34</sup> They had two sons: Walter (Alexandroffsky, Russia 5 April 1852 – Parsloes Park, Barking, Essex 12 August 1920) and Louis William (Russia 1857 – Hove, Sussex 31 October 1927).<sup>35</sup> Apart from running the Alexandroffsky Head Mechanical Works, he succeeded William Hooper Ropes as American consul in St. Petersburg in 1854; he resigned that post on 15/27 March 1856.<sup>36</sup>

In 1862, “a consortium of French capitalists won the ‘remount’ contract through a lower bid,”<sup>37</sup> and William Lewis Winans settled permanently in England. “In 1865, the Russian government, dissatisfied with [the French],” invited the Winanses “to resubmit their bid.”<sup>38</sup> In 1866, Thomas DeKay and William Lewis Winans traveled to Russia once more, this time to sign an eight-year contract. “With them was associated Major George Washington Whistler’s son, George William Whistler, in the firm of Winans, Whistler and Winans.”<sup>39</sup> In 1868, the Russian government bought them out, “reimburs[ing] them for their outlay [and] paying them a bonus of several million dollars.”<sup>40</sup>

The 1881 Census for London shows that the home of William Lewis Winans was next to Kensington Palace, and that he had a staff of eighteen servants to care for a household of four.<sup>41</sup> At his death, he left an estate of over £20 million.<sup>42</sup>

Of the remaining siblings of Thomas DeKay Winans, mention should be made only of his sister, Julia DeKay (New Jersey 24 October 1825 – Newport, RI 26 September 1875; see Image 16), who married on 18 June 1854, as his second wife, George William Whistler (New London, CT 9 July 1822 – Brighton, Sussex 24 December 1869; see Images 12–13), James Whistler’s half-brother.<sup>43</sup>

* * *

The biography of George William Whistler in the 1850s and 1860s<sup>44</sup> is thus closely associated with that of the Winans family as well as with the Ducatel family. In the first half of the 1850s, he was superintendent of the Erie, and New York and New Haven railroads and lived in New York.<sup>45</sup> He frequently visited James (see Images 24–29) at West Point and, like all the other family members, was worried about whether James, because of his continuing demerits, would be allowed to complete the course of study at the USMA. On 18 June 1851, George and Mary (Ducatel) Whistler became the parents of a son, George Worthen Whistler (d. 28 March 1908). Mary became very ill and both she and the baby were sent to Baltimore to be taken care of by her family.<sup>46</sup> In addition to Mary Ann, Julius Timoleon Ducatel (Baltimore, MD 6 June 1796 – Baltimore, MD 23 April 1849; see Image 14) and Joanne Barry (Baltimore, MD 1800 – Baltimore, MD 16 November 1873) had four other daughters. Eliza Ducatel (bap. 6 March 1827 – 1852), who had married on 29 February 1851 Alonzo V. Jones, died, like Mary Ann, in 1852.<sup>47</sup> Louisa Ann Emilie Ducatel (bap. 6 November 1836) married on 14 January 1863 Henry R. McNally.<sup>48</sup> The third Ducatel daughter, who did not marry, was Josephine (Maryland 1842 – Baltimore, MD 13 April 1867).<sup>49</sup> Their fourth daughter, who also did not marry, was Rose Polymnia (bap. 14 May 1831 – Baltimore, MD 17 January 1875. According to the 1870 U.S. Federal Census, she continued to live with her mother, Joanna Ducatel. The name Belinda in the 1860 Census is obviously a mistake and should read Polymnia.<sup>50</sup> Mary died on 25 February 1852, and Eliza died, too, some six weeks later.<sup>51</sup> There were doubts as to whether the baby would survive, but he did.<sup>52</sup>

George William Whistler, who had earlier been employed by Ross Winans and had resigned in a huff before marrying Mary Ducatel, moved to Baltimore and reestablished contact with the Winans family. On 20 April 1854, he and Julia DeKay Winans were married in Trinity Church, New York (see Image 49).<sup>53</sup> They had five surviving children: Julia DeKay (c. 1855 – West Byfleet, Surrey, England 30 November 1930); Thomas Delano (St. Petersburg 19 January 1856 – Nagold, Württemberg, Germany 21 November 1921); Ross Winans (b. St. Petersburg 12/24 July 1858; bap. 30 August / 11 September 1858; d. Nassau, Bahamas 12 February 1927); Neva (b. St. Petersburg 24 March / 5 April 1860; bap. 6/18 July 1860; d. Paris, France 29 April 1907; buried Green Mount Cemetery, Baltimore, MD); and Joseph Swift (Frankfort, Germany 25 August 1865 – Lennox, MA 28 November 1905).<sup>54</sup>

George Worthen Whistler, born in New Haven, Connecticut, on 18 June 1851 and taken to Baltimore with his ailing mother to be cared for by his maternal grandmother, Joanna (Barry) Ducatel, and her other daughters, was not a healthy child. As late as 1854, his possible death alarmed the family.<sup>55</sup> When he was six, Anna Whistler, who was visiting the Winanses, announced that “two years of blight have crippled and deformed the once so beautiful first borne of George.”<sup>56</sup> Anna Whistler may have meant that his growth had been stunted, for, when applying for a passport in 1873, at the age of twenty-one, his “stature” was recorded as four feet nine inches.<sup>57</sup>

All family members took an interest in the new baby and remained in contact with him all his life, writing to him and of him, and visiting him when they could.<sup>58</sup> Anna Whistler had him stay with her in refreshing landscapes such as Stonington, Connecticut, and Scarsdale, New York, to get him away from urban and stifling-hot Baltimore.<sup>59</sup> The Haden children doted on a daguerreotype of him that Anna Whistler brought them when she visited Debo in England in 1852.<sup>60</sup> She and Debo's family hoped George William would come to England for Christmas 1852 and bring Georgie with him.<sup>61</sup> In 1858, George Worthen was having his portrait painted by Giuseppe Fagnani (1819–1873), who was also painting one of Mary (Ducatel) Whistler.<sup>62</sup> The death of George William Whistler in 1869 brought, in Anna Whistler's mind, "a cloud over the orphans future,"<sup>63</sup> but George William Whistler had provided for George Worthen in his will equally with the children of his second marriage.<sup>64</sup> He remained in Baltimore with his grandmother and aunts and on the death of his last aunt, Polymnia, in January 1875, was alone. He married on 23 June 1875, at a relative's house in Washington City, his cousin, Esther Ann Barry (Baltimore 28 July 1849 – Lausanne, Switzerland 25 November 1921) called "Hetty."<sup>65</sup> Kate Livermore, Anna Whistler's close friend from Lowell, Massachusetts days, wrote her: "I hope you have been well enough to see your Grandson and his bride dear Mrs. Whistler! I am glad to know that George has the comfort of a good little wife now that he has no longer the tender care of his Aunt."<sup>66</sup>

George and Esther had a daughter, Esther Marion (March 1876 – 14 December 1889), who is recorded in the 1880 U.S. Federal Census as four years old. Her father's occupation is recorded as "Not in any business." She died in 1889 at the age of 13.<sup>67</sup> They also had a son, George Delano Whistler (Baltimore 9 January 1880 – Zürich, Switzerland 26/27 September 1937).

Eventually George Worthen Whistler was committed to Mount Hope Retreat, a mental institution in Baltimore, where he was treated for many years and died on 28 March 1908. The 1900 U.S. Federal Census for the institution declares him to be an "Insane Patient." His date of birth is given as "Not known," his age as "49," and "Yes" is given as the answer to the queries about whether he can read, write, and speak English. His obituary indicates that at the time of his death his wife and son were living abroad; passport applications and their death certificates show that they had been doing so for a long period for their health.<sup>68</sup> His middle name, “Worthen,” is incorrectly incised on his grave monument as “Warthen” and his date of death as July 1908.<sup>69</sup>

After 1850, Winans, Harrison and Winans carried out remount (repair and maintenance) work on the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. In 1865, the Russian government, dissatisfied with the consortium of French capitalists to whom they had given the remount contract in 1862, invited the Winanses to rebid. In 1866, Thomas DeKay and Willam Lewis signed an eight-year contract. The firm by now was called Winans, Whistler and Winans. George William Whistler had been living in St. Petersburg since at least 1856, as his second child, Thomas Delano, was born there in 1856.<sup>70</sup> This had not pleased Anna Whistler. Correspondence of the 1860s shows that she wanted him to live in the United States, where she perhaps hoped to live near or with him.<sup>71</sup> But, as his father-in-law, Ross Winans, was planning to move to England, George did not wish to live in the United States.<sup>72</sup>

On 24 March / 5 April 1867, George William Whistler drew up a will in St. Petersburg, revoking all others.<sup>73</sup> In 1868, the Russian government, compensating them handsomely for breaking the contract, bought out Winans, Whistler and Winans. On 24 February / 8 March 1869, in St. Petersburg, George William Whistler added a codicil to his will. In both his will and the codicil, where he changed the size of their shares, he divided his estate among his wife, Julia DeKay; the children of their marriage; and the child of his first marriage, George Worthen.<sup>74</sup> In 1869, the family moved to Brighton, England. There, on 24 December 1869, George died of heart failure, as his father had. Joseph Harrison Jr. wrote Anna Whistler a letter of condolence, which she sent to Julia DeKay Winans. In Anna Whistler’s response to Harrison, she described George’s last months:

altho dear Julia had the strength given her (not her own she said) to support her thro the unexpected trial of the death of dear George, she realizes more every day the sadness of her bereavement, his health was failing, but he had always needed her good nursing & she hoped her care of him & the quiet release from business secured, he might be spared to carry thro his parental guidance & accomplish the educating his sons religiously as good Citizens, for tho he was physically so feeble, his mental energy increased thro this noble ambition, that the standard for manly character his Father had left for him so bright an example to attain, he might train his boys for George's career resembled his dear Fathers & opinions were the same, he remarked in the weeks & illness, to an intimate friend from Russia that he had sometimes a mysterious impression as he was so nearly the age of his father at his death, he might not have his mortal term extended beyond his 49th year! but it was not in a serious tone he said this, he was able to leave his bed each day & gladden the family circle by the cheerfulness of his loving tones at the head of his table at dinner, until on the evening of the 22nd of Decr a sudden sensation very oppressive hastened dear Julia's getting her beloved Patient to bed. The next day a Consulting Physician was sent for to London, his opinion was that recurrence of the hemorage must be fatal, but otherwise he might be raised up from that attack & live to suffer many years, but the disease of the liver of so long standing was incurable! We in this home that very day had received dear George's invitation for us to join his family at Christmas dinner, you may judge of the dreadful shock the Telegram brought us early on the 24th telling us George died at midnight the hemorage returned with fatal violence & he suffered only a few hours, his last remark upon realizing the prospect of the end was "Man proposes, but God disposes."<sup>75</sup>

In 1870, Julia DeKay took their five children to Dresden to live until the boys had been educated and hiring a governess, Miss Willis, for the girls.<sup>76</sup> Some two years later, she gave up the house in Dresden and went to live in Baltimore, because her father, Ross Winans, wanted her and his grandchildren near him. They arrived in New York on 13 August 1872. Thomas DeKay Winans bought a house in Baltimore for her as a present.<sup>77</sup>

Julia DeKay Winans died in Baltimore on 29 September 1875 of cancer.

NOTES

1. I wish to express my deep gratitude to Dr. Beatriz B. Hardy, then library director at the MdHS, for the superlative research she carried out in the Winans Papers on my behalf and for transcribing letters which could not be photocopied.
2. Friends of Orianda House, accessed 17 December 2020, <https://friendsoforiandahouse.com/>
3. Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers. Thomas DeKay and William Lewis will be discussed at length in this essay. Julia DeKay, their sister, will also be discussed at length, as the second wife of George William Whistler in the 1850s and 1860s. Information on DeWitt Clinton (d. London November 27, 1892) and Walter Scott can be found in the following sources: an obituary of 30 November 1892 (the Baltimore newspaper from which the clipping is taken is not identified); Baltimore News Post, June 7, 1942; The Times (London), December 1, 1892; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1893; John E. Semmes, John H.B. Latrobe and His Times, 1803–1891 (Baltimore, MD: Norman Remington, [1917]), pp. 390–391. Ross Winans Jr. was in St. Petersburg in November 1858 when his wife, Margaret (Wentz) Winans, died there: 19 November / 1 December 1858 (Wm. L. Winans to Thomas Winans, St. P., Nov. 17/29, 1858, and Nov. 27/Dec. 9, 1858, MdHS: Winans Papers, MS 916, box 22). He died in Paterson, NJ, on 21 June 1863 (The Sun [Baltimore, MD], Friday, June 26, 1863).
4. This and the following quotation are from Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Winans, Ross.”
5. Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Winans, Ross.”
6. This and the following quotation are from Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 121n42.
7. Haywood, p. 98. In 1860, Ross “Winans retired from locomotive building.” “During the Civil War his sympathies were with the Confederacy,” and “he was twice arrested [... and] released.” With his sons, he developed the “cigar-steamer.” He also “published numerous pamphlets on problems of local hygiene and water supply” for the city of Baltimore and “wrote ... on religious subjects.” His philanthropy consisted of building modest-rental houses for working people (“Winans Row”), but this project ultimately failed. He married in 1854, as his second wife, Elizabeth K. West (1807 – March 1889) of Baltimore (all quotations are from the Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Winans, Ross”).

8. This and the following quotation are from Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Winans, Ross.”
9. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 97.
10. Haywood, p. 98.
11. Haywood, p. 104.
12. Haywood, p. 364.
13. Haywood, p. 106.
14. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 96; The Sun (Baltimore, MD), Wednesday, March 20, 1861. Her birth date is given in the Winans genealogy as 1823, but as Colin Ingersoll says she was eighteen years old in 1847, and her obituary in 1861 says she was in her thirty-third year, she must have been born in 1828 or 1829. On a travel manifest of 5 December 1850, she is listed as 22, further suggesting her birth year as 1828 (IGI).
15. Calendar of Letterbook of William L. Winans to Thomas Winans: 5 April 1859, St. P. W.L. W. has “received letter from Betsy Revillion [sic] telling of Mr. Revillion’s death (March 24, 1859),” MdHS: Winans Papers, MS 916, box 22, item 59. Betsy (van der Vliet) Revillon was George Revillon’s second wife (MdHS: Winans Papers, box 4, fol. 107, Revillon Genealogy).
16. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 96; G. Iu. Sternin, U istokov novoi knizhnoi grafiki [At the Sources of New Book Graphics], in the appendix to the facsimile of the first edition of A.P. Bashutskii, Nashi, spisannye s natyry russkimi [Our People, Drawn from Life by Russians], 1841 (Moscow: Kniga, 1986), p. 61n1.
17. BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 1, fol. 96. Extant letters from Celeste Winans to Thomas Winans reflect her imperfect English and poor spelling as well as a certain playfulness (Celeste Winans to You ugly fellow, Wednesday morning [Nov. 1851], and My dear Tommy, Thursday morning, 9 o'clock [no date], MdHS: Winans Papers, MS 916, box 26, fol. 32).

18. The Sun (Baltimore, MD), Tuesday, October 26, 1847; Amburger Datenbank, IDs 93547, 88854; BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal, pt. 2, fols. 5, 6; invitation to Revillon–Winans wedding, Ralph McAllister Ingersoll Collection, box 35, BUHG. Ross Winans had hoped that Thomas DeKay, who had expressed his general interest in marriage in 1846 (there are no extant letters from Thomas in this file), would wait until he permanently returned to the United States before seeking a wife (Ross Winans, Sr. to Thomas Winans, Balt, July 12 1846, MdHS: Winans Papers, MS 916, box 2, fol. 23; Beatriz Hardy, director of MdHS, Baltimore, MD, to E. Harden, 15 November 2004).
19. “First child born at 11 o’clock at night [written in: at Alexandroffsky, near St. Petersburg],” entry of March 30, 1849, Calendar of Thomas Winans’s Journal, 1845–1854, MdHS: Winans Papers, MS 916. This information is taken from a typewritten calendar, in which significant events from the journal are summarized very briefly. The MdHS does not have the actual journal, nor do they know whether it is in another institution nor indeed survives at all (Beatriz Hardy, MdHS, Baltimore, MD, to E. Harden, 22 June 2005).
20. Ross Revillon Winans married, as his second wife, his first cousin, Neva Whistler (1860–1907), daughter of George William and Julia DeKay (Winans) Whistler, Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers.
21. Friends of Orianda House, accessed 17 December 2020, <https://friendsoforiandahouse.com/>
22. William L. Winans [to the Honourable Mr. L. Marcy, Secretary of State], Consulate of the United States, St. Petersburg, June 29/July 11, 1854, M81 Despatches from US Consuls in St. P., 1803–1906, roll 5, vols. 7–9, Dec. 31, 1847 – Dec. 30, 1857, NAUS. He was issued a passport (no. 267) in the United States on 16 May 1845 and a second one (no. 1685) in Great Britain by the American Embassy on 17 June 1845, destination Hamburg and St. Petersburg (NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2, p. 7, passport no. 267; and RG84, C18.2, passport no. 1685; Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 418n89). In addition, Capt. William Henry Swift, in a letter to his brother in May 1843, had announced that not four but “three good men” – Fairbanks, Harrison, and “a son of Winan’s” – had left for Russia (Capt. W.H. Swift to Gen. J.G. Swift, Washington, 13 May 1843, NYPL: Swift Papers).

23. Haywood, Russia Enters the Railway Age, p. 418n89.
24. Haywood, pp. 404, 405. See Eastwick in this Appendix for details of the quarrel.
25. Haywood, pp. 371, 405, 407.
26. Haywood, pp. 405–406.
27. Haywood, p. 406.
28. Haywood, pp. 371, 406, 411–412.
29. Haywood, pp. 408–410 gives an explanation of how the remount contract made them so wealthy.
30. The contents of “Alexandroffsky” were sold by his granddaughters, Elsie C. Hutton (1884? – November 1966) and Lucette M. (Hutton) Prichard (1882 – 3 August 1957), the children of his daughter, Celeste (Winans) Hutton (1855 – February 1925), who had married Gaun Hutton (1848 – September 1916). “Hutton had operated the Alta foundry and sawmill in San Francisco during the height of the gold rush ... went to Russia, ... worked for [William Lewis Winans], succeeded him as acting vice-consul in 1856, and later established a large hardware business in Moscow, which he ran for many years” (Norman E. Saul, Distant Friends: The United States and Russia, 1763–1867 (Lawrence: University of Kansas Press, 1991), pp. 226, 244, 260, 261, 262, 264, 265, 267). The auction took place in the mansion, starting on 5 November 1925, and continued for five days. The auctioneers were the E.T. Newell Company of Howard Street, Baltimore. A catalogue was issued, and viewing began on November 3. The property, which the city had found too expensive to buy, was bought by a syndicate. Everything on it was razed in the spring of 1926 and replaced by commercial buildings. “Crimea” became “part of the city parks system” and “still stands in Leakin Park.” All of the foregoing information is taken from an article by Margaret McCampbell and Lance Gifford, “Grand Estate on Baltimore’s West Side: Alexandroffsky,” Maryland (Winter 1979): pp. 26–31. “Crimea” even had a “servants burying ground,” now vanished, where “the mostly Irish servants of the family” were interred (Jane Bromley Wilson, The Very Quiet Baltimoreans: A Guide to the Historic Cemeteries and Burial Sites of Baltimore [Shippensburg, PA: White Mane, 1991], p. 102). It has not been possible to locate a copy of the abovementioned auction catalogue.
31. For information about the Newport villa, see Bertram Lippincott III, “The Hutton Family of ‘Shamrock Cliff,’” in Newport History:

- Bulletin of the Newport History Society* 64, pt. 4, no. 221 (1991): pp. 165–166.
32. Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers; List of Family Members Interred in the Winans Vault in Green-Mount Cemetery in Baltimore (courtesy of staff member, Mary Murray). The Genealogy gives 1852 as the year of George’s death, while the List records that he was buried in August 1851.
  33. This and the following three quotations are from Dictionary of American Biography, s.v. “Winans, Thomas De Kay.”
  34. Transcript of Marriages in the British and American Congregational Church, St. Petersburg, Russia, 22 June 1844 – 1 November 1886, RG 33/145, fol. 23, PRO; The Times (London), December 21, 1904; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1905; IGI.
  35. The Times (London), August 13, 1920 and November 1, 1927; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1921 and 1927; IGI. Walter Winans became an outstanding sportsman. He was an excellent shot and a talented sculptor, especially of the horse. In 1912, at the Olympic Games in London, he was awarded both the gold medal for hunting-rifle shooting and the gold medal for sports sculpture. For ten years he was world-champion pistol shot. He frequently traveled to Russia to hunt. He was a great lover of horses and had a racing stable containing several horses of the Orlov breed and a stud farm in Austria. “He ... executed a beautiful statue of Joan of Arc, copies of which were ... sold for the benefit of the French Red Cross Fund.” He was “the owner of Surrender Park, in Kent.” He inherited real estate at Ferry Bar, Maryland, from his father. He did not visit the United States until he was fifty-seven years old (The Times (London), August 13, 1920; The Sun (Baltimore, MD), Friday, June 25, 1897; Baltimore News, April 12, 1911; “Walter Winans (1852–1920),” AskART, accessed September 28, 2020, https://www.askart.com/artist/Walter\_W\_Winans/88881/Walter\_W\_Winans.aspx; Semmes, John H.B. Latrobe, pp. 394–395; “Russkaia troika v Anglii” [A Russian Troika in England], Stolitsa i Usad’ba [The Capitol City and the Country Estate] 6 (15 March 1914): 18–20; Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers). Photographs of his castle in England and of him in a troika can be seen in the abovementioned Russian article. Walter Winans did not marry.
  36. M81 Despatches from US Consuls in St. P., 1803–1906, roll 5, vols. 7–9, Dec. 31, 1847 – Dec. 30, 1857, NAUS.

37. Saul, Distant Friends, p. 357.
38. Saul, p. 357.
39. B. Latrobe Weston, “Whistler, The Winans Brothers and the Russian Contract,” Baltimore Evening Sun, August 14, 1940.
40. Biographical Cyclopaedia of Representative Men of Maryland and The District of Columbia (Baltimore, MD: National Biographical Publishing, 1879), p. 365.
41. 1881 Census for 15 Palace Gdns Hos, Knightsbridge, London, Middlesex.
42. Semmes, John H.B. Latrobe, p. 394.
43. New York Evening Post (June 1, 1854); IGI.
44. Some of the information in this biography of George William Whistler is compiled from the following sources: Appleton’s Cyclopaedia, s.v. “Ducatel, Julius Timoleon” and “Whistler, George William”; Thomas William Herringshaw, Herringshaw’s National Library of American Biography, 5 vols. (Chicago, IL: American Publishers’ Association, 1914), vol. 5, p. 661; Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers; Mary Murray, Green-Mount Cemetery, Baltimore, MD, to E. Harden, October 2004; and Foreman, “Colonel William Whistler,” p. 325; see also the biography of George William Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and Whistler ... Fairfax in this Appendix.
45. Anna Whistler to my beloved Jemie Stonington Wednesday Aug 27th [18]51, GUL: Whistler Collection, W395.
46. The Ducatel family members taking care of her and the baby were his grandmother, Joanna (Barry) Ducatel, and his aunts Polymnia, Louisa, and Josephine. Their married sister Eliza (Ducatel) Jones was ill.
47. Alonzo V. Jones’s will, written in 1857, shows that his wife Eliza was deceased, and Anna Whistler confirms that Eliza died some six weeks after Mary Ann Ducatel (Anna Whistler to my dear James Stonington Thursday April 22nd, GUL: Whistler Collection, W408; IGI; Ducatel Family Bible Marriages; Basilica of the Assumption [Baltimore, MD] Baptismal Records; 1850 U.S. Federal Census. Alonzo V. Jones and Eliza Ducatel were married in Baltimore on 29 February 1851 (New York Evening Post, Tuesday, February 18, 1851). It is impossible to determine further information about her husband given the number of Alonzo Joneses living in New York at the time, but it is most likely that - he was Alonzo Vermilyon Jones (New York, NY 26 October 1822 – Sing Sing, NY 23 August 1864), son of John S. and Sarah V. Jones (IGI).

48. IGI; Ducatel Family Bible Marriages; 1850 and 1860 U.S. federal censuses; Basilica of the Assumption [Baltimore, MD] Baptismal Records.
  49. 1850 and 1860 U.S. federal censuses; Basilica of the Assumption [Baltimore, MD] Baptismal Records; The Sun (Baltimore), Monday, April 15, 1867), p. 2.
  50. Basilica of the Assumption [Baltimore, MD] Baptismal Records; 1850, 1860, and 1870 U.S. federal censuses. In the 1860 Census Joanna Ducatel’s occupation is given as “Boarding House” and her personal estate as one thousand dollars. In the 1870 Census, her occupation is given as “Keeping House,” and no personal estate is given.
  51. Anna Whistler to My dear friend Pomfret Wednesday p-m Oct 8th [18]51, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 33–34; Anna Whistler to Well darling Jemie Pomfret Thursday p-m Nov. 13th [18]51, GUL: Whistler Collection, W402; Anna Whistler to My own dear Jemie Pomfret tuesday night Feb. 10th, W406; Anna Whistler to My own dear James Pomfret March 3rd 1852, W407. “My dear friend” is Margaret Getfield Hill, a lifelong friend of Anna Whistler’s who lived in Scarsdale, New York.
  52. Anna Whistler to My dear Margaret, Pomfret Sunday night Aug 3rd [1851], Call no. “Carl A. Kroch Library, 1629,” Department of Manuscripts and University Archives, Cornell University Library; Anna Whistler to my own precious Jemie Pomfret Aug 6th 1851 Wednesday morning, W394; Anna Whistler to My beloved Jemie Stonington Wednesday Aug 27th [18]51, W395; Anna Whistler to dearest Jemie Pomfret Dec 17th 1851 Wednesday, W404. “My dear Margaret” is Margaret Getfield Hill, a lifelong friend of Anna Whistler’s who lived in Scarsdale, New York.
  53. New York Evening Post, Thursday, June 1, 1854. Once married to Julia DeKay, George still had to resolve the dilemma of where to be confirmed. “Willie ... reported their resolve to take a pew in some church.” George was constrained by the idea that it would disturb his first wife, Mary (Ducatel) Whistler, a Catholic, if he should be confirmed in the Episcopalian Church (Anna Whistler to You know my own dear Jemie 176 Preston Street Bolton Terrace Nov 26th [1854], GUL: Whistler Collection, W441).

54. Anna Whistler to my own dear Debo Scarsdale Dec. 10th 1855, GUL: Whistler Collection, W465; The Tennessean (Nashville, TN), Thursday, June 12, 1879, p. 2; M1490: Passport Applications, 1906 – March 31, 1925, roll 749, application no. 75883 for Thomas Delano Whistler, NAUS; Emergency Passport Applications (Passports Issued Abroad), 1877–1907, vol. 81 (England), passport no. 661 for Joseph Swift Whistler, NAUS; IGI; Genealogy of the Winans Family, MdHS: Winans Papers; see also the biography of George William Whistler in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s” and Whistler ... Fairfax in this Appendix..
55. “...[George’s] summons to Balt to watch the sinking strength of his invalid, the doctor had small hope of the cherub boy lingering much longer! & George thought him rapidly going” (Anna Whistler to My own dear Jemie Scarsdale April 3rd 1854, GUL: Whistler Collection, W432).
56. Anna Whistler to my dear Jemie Alexandroffsky Villa April 27. [18]57, GUL: Whistler Collection, W478.
57. M1372: Passport Applications, 1795–1905, roll 194, application no. 31498 for George Worthen Whistler, NAUS. George Worthen’s stature was actually recorded in the “feet” column as “4.9 feet nine inches.” The “9” was then erased but still visible, and “4 feet” recorded in the “feet” column, while “9 inches” was recorded in the “inches” column.
58. Anna Whistler describes him as follows:

I think your little nephew GWW looks much as you did at his age, for you had the same unfair play, not enough to eat which he has & you know the old rule Jemie “pretty babies grow up plain” so lament not over your thin visage now, you were a pretty baby when you plump’d up & so will your nephew be. He is a darling now! I don’t wonder that Mary sheds tears when they roll from his full blue eyes, or that she is delighted when he smiles, his fingers are long & tapered & his nails like pink shells, his hair is brown & inclined to curl like Uncle Jems! (Anna Whistler to My beloved Jemie Stonington Wednesday Aug 27th 51 GUL: Whistler Collection, W395)

In 1852, Anna Whistler expressed her hope that George William was coming to England and would bring George Worthen, as everyone wanted to see him and were fond of the baby in a recent daguerreotype (location unknown) (Anna Whistler to my dearest Jemie 62 Sloane St Wed. Nov. 24th 1852, GUL: Whistler Collection, W418; Anna Whistler to my own dear precious Willie 62 Sloane St Feb 27th 1853 The Lords day evening, W420). Although George Worthen was being raised by his grandmother and aunts, he spent Christmas in 1852 with his father in Baltimore (Anna Whistler to dear Jemie 62 Sloane St the old years Eve 31 December 1853, 4 and 7 January 1853, GUL: Whistler Collection, W419). Willie Whistler wrote to the teenaged George Worthen (Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble 7 Lindsey Row Old Battersea Bridge Chelsea, London Feb 10th 1864, GUL: Whistler Collection, W516), and Anna Whistler visited him in Baltimore at Perine’s house in September 1867 along with Joanna (Barry) Ducatel and her daughters (Anna Whistler to My dear Mr Gamble Homeland [residence of David M. Perine Sr.] W. Baltimore Sept. 16th 1867).

59. Anna Whistler to my dear Jemie Scarsdale Thursday p-m July 29th [1852], GUL: Whistler Collection, W411; Anna Whistler to My own loved Jemie Scarsdale Scarsdale Sunday night Sept. 12th 1852, W414.

In June 1853, the Ducatels brought George Worthen from Baltimore to Scarsdale to visit for a fortnight; Anna Whistler wrote of the visit in September (Anna Whistler to Jemie my son Stonington tues 13 [September 1853], GUL: Whistler Collection, W410)

I wish you could have seen his cherub expression, as clasping his tiny tapered hands he would say as he gazed with delight on the beautiful harbor of Stonington “big waters! How nice!” but whether such a fragile bud is to bloom in our world of blighted promise, seems to me improbable, Little Georgie’s mother was early taken to the home of the blessed, yet gladdens the sorrow stricken Grandmamma & fond young Aunts now in their Baltimore home. (Anna Whistler to My dear and esteemed friend [James H. Gamble] Scarsdale Wednesday Sept. 28th [1853], GUL: Whistler Collection, W423)

60. Anna Whistler to George William, William McNeill and James Whistler 62 Sloane St Nov 18th 1852 Thursday night, GUL: Whistler Collection, W417.

61. Anna Whistler to my dearest Jemie 62 Sloane St Wed. Nov. 24th 1852, GUL: Whistler Collection, W418; Anna Whistler to my own dear precious Willie 62 Sloane St Feb 27th 1853 The Lords day evening, W420.
62. Anna Whistler to my beloved Jemie Richfield Springs Augt 1st 1858. Sunday, GUL: Whistler Collection, W493.
63. Anna Whistler to my dear Mr Gamble 2 Lindsey Houses Chelsea London Sept 7th 1870, entry for Sat 10th, GUL: Whistler Collection, W539.
64. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1870.
65. Anna Whistler to My dear friends [James H. and Harriet Gamble], Talbot House. 43 St Marys Terrace Hastings entry of Saturday 18th in the letter of Sept. 9th 1857 GUL: Whistler Collection, W548.
66. Kate Livermore to my ever beloved friend Northland Terrace Londonderry July 27th 1875 Tuesday, GUL: Whistler Collection, L157.
67. The Sun (Baltimore, MD), Monday, December 16, 1882, p. 2.
68. M1490: Passport Applications, 1906 – March 31, 1925, roll 321, application no. 33106 for George Delano Whistler, and roll 472, application no. 6191 for Esther Ann Whistler, NAUS; Death Reports of U.S. Citizens Abroad, box 4240: 1910–1929 and box 1529: 1930–1939, NAUS.
69. “George Warthen Whistler,” Find A Grave, accessed 5 February 2022, <https://www.findagrave.com/memorial/184564854/george-warthen-whistler>
70. A letter from Anna Whistler to her son James implies that George saw James Whistler in Paris in 1856 (Anna Whistler to dear Jemie Stonington Sept 23rd [18]56, GUL: Whistler Collection, W471), and Anna Whistler wrote in 1857: “I hear ... of the arrival of George Whistler wife and child at St. Petersburg” (Anna Whistler to my dear Mr Gamble Scarsdale Tues Jan 13th [18]57, GUL: Whistler Collection, W474).
71. Anna Whistler to My Dearest friend & Sister Margaret 2 Lindsey Row Chelsea London Monday night Dec<sup>r</sup> 14th 1868, entry for Saturday Dec 19th, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 49–50. The addressee is Margaret Getfield Hill, Anna Whistler’s lifelong friend, who lived in Scarsdale, New York.

72. Anna Whistler to Jamie darling Saturday Nov 25th [1865], GUL: Whistler Collection, W520; Anna Whistler to my dearest Debo 34 Schloss Strass Coblentz Wednesday Jan 24th 1866, W522; Anna Whistler to Mr Dear Mr Gamble 189 Henry St Brooklyn [New York 27 August 1867], GUL: Whistler Collection, W529; Anna Whistler to My dear M<sup>r</sup> Harrison 2 Lindsey Row, Chelsea, London, S.W. May 14th 1868, LC: P-W, box 34, fols. 47–48.
73. Massachusetts Probate Records, 1871, no. 51862, pp. 216–219.
74. Massachusetts Probate Records, 1871, no. 51862, p. 220.
75. Anna Whistler to My dear M<sup>r</sup> Harrison SW 2 Lindsey Row Chelsea London Feb<sup>ry</sup> 5th 1870, LC: P-C, box 34, fols. 53–54.
76. Anna Whistler to My dear Mr Gamble 2 Lindsey House Chelsea London Sept 7th 1870, entry for Sat 10th, GUL: Whistler Collection, W539.
77. All information in this paragraph and the next is taken from Anna Whistler to My beloved Friend [James H. Gamble] 2 Lindsey Houses Chelsea London Tuesday evening Nov 5th 1872, GUL: Whistler Collection, W456.

WINSTANLEY, MCNEILL, WELLWOOD, PICARD, WARE, HULL, SIMPSON, CLUNIE, WILKIN, BIGGS, CRAGG

Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (North America [possibly Bahama Islands]<sup>1</sup>) 27 September 1788 – Preston, Lancashire 20 August 1857; see Image 40)<sup>2</sup> was Anna (McNeill) Whistler's half-sister. Eliza's parents were Dr. Daniel McNeill (North Carolina c. 1756 – "Oak Forest," Bladen County, NC 7 December 1828; see Image 23)<sup>3</sup> and Alice (Clunie)<sup>4</sup> McNeill (Scotland 14 July 1757<sup>5</sup> – Wilmington, NC 12 November 1791),<sup>6</sup> who were married on 29 August 1784 at Whitekirk, East Lothian.<sup>7</sup> After the death of their mother, Eliza and her younger<sup>8</sup> and only sister, Alicia (see Image 39), lived in Scotland with their maternal grandmother, Isabel (Finlay) Clunie, daughter of Thomas Finlay, minister of Prestonkirk, and widow of Rev. John Clunie (1708 – 19 June 1784).<sup>9</sup> Eliza married on 25 May 1812 at Midlothian/Edinburgh, Edinburgh Parish, as his second wife, a widower, Colonel Robert Wellwood (7 February 1747 – 7 July 1820),<sup>10</sup> of Garvock and Pitliver, Fife. A second date of 1 June 1812, Dunfermline, Fife, is also given for their marriage.<sup>11</sup> They had no children. A portrait (present whereabouts unknown) of the beautiful Eliza (McNeill) Wellwood was painted by Sir Henry Raeburn (1756–1823) (see Image 40).<sup>12</sup> Eliza married secondly, on 1 June 1825 at Edinburgh, St. Cuthberts,<sup>13</sup> as his second wife, a widower, John Winstanley of Preston, Lancashire (Higher Walton 27 December 1776 – Preston 22 May 1859), solicitor, of the firm of Winstanley and Charnley, solicitors, of Preston. In this marriage there also were no children. It was to Eliza and John Winstanley's home at 65 Fishergate, Preston,<sup>14</sup> that Anna Whistler came in 1829, meeting them for the first time and staying about eighteen months.<sup>15</sup> They introduced her to their friends (the Stevensons, Ormerods, Smiths of Chaddock Hall [see Image 467], Maudes) and relatives (other Winstanleys, the Picards, Wares, Ainsworths), all of whom figure in her diaries. It was to this same home that she came on her way to Russia in 1843, now a married woman, bringing her sons James (see Images 24–29), Willie (see Images 27, 30), and Charles Donald, and her step-daughter, Deborah Delano (see Images 17–19, 21) (George William, her step-son, is not mentioned as being in Preston), and renewing her acquaintance with the Winstanleys' friends and relatives after a fourteen-year absence. It was just before Anna Whistler's arrival that Eliza recorded in August 1843 a trip of her own to see her aunt in Scotland in June of 1843 to serve as a model for the diary she encouraged Anna Whistler to keep while in Russia (see Appendix D). Another trip by Anna Whistler, James, and Willie to Preston from St. Petersburg took place in the summer of 1847 (see Images 461–477), culminating in the marriage in Preston of Deborah Delano Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden (see Image 20) on 16 October of that year. In 1848, although Anna Whistler could not travel to Preston while in England, the Winstanleys visited her on the Isle of Wight (see Images 489–496). And finally, in June–July 1849, after the death of Major Whistler, Anna Whistler and Willie, joined by James, who was then living in England, visited Preston before returning home to America. Eliza, paralyzed in her last years, died in 1857.<sup>16</sup> Her personal estate at her death amounted to under £450, but as her husband died in 1859 “without taking upon himself Letters of administration of the personal Estate and Effects of the deceased,”<sup>17</sup> they were granted to her sister, Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, of Preston, on the consent of the executors of John Winstanley's estate.<sup>18</sup> It has not been possible to ascertain where she was buried.

* * *

John Winstanley was the sixth son of William Winstanley (10 August 1742 – 11 November 1791), Esq., of Cuerden, afterwards of Woodcock Hall, and Alice (Woodcock) Winstanley, second daughter and co-heiress of Thomas Woodcock, Esq., of Woodcock Hall. He married twice: first on 22 October 1804 at Eccleston by Chorley, Lancashire, Margaret, daughter of Richard Hatton, Esq., of Parbold, Lancashire; and secondly, on 1 June 1825 at Edinburgh, St. Cuthberts, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) Wellwood, widow of Colonel Robert Wellwood of Garvock and Pitliver, Fife.<sup>19</sup> John Winstanley was “first listed practicing on his own as an attorney at 93 Fishergate, Preston, in 1818; and in 1821 as John Winstanley and Peter Catterall, Lune Street; the partnership moved to Fox Street in 1821. He subsequently formed the practice of Winstanley and Charnley at 2 Fox Street, Preston.”<sup>20</sup> In later years, they were listed as “Winstanley and Charnley, Solicitors, and Masters Extraordinary in Chancery ... Agents to the ‘Imperial Fire and Life Assurance,’ London Agents, F. G. Gregory and Co.”<sup>21</sup> and “Winstanley and Charnley, solicitors, (agents to the Imperial Fire and Life Office) and clerks to Layton-with-Warbrick local board of health, and perpetual commissioners.”<sup>22</sup> At his death in 1859 at the age of eighty-two,<sup>23</sup> John Winstanley had outlived all his brothers and his sister. He left an estate of £20,000, which was bequeathed to both Eliza Winstanley’s and his own relatives.<sup>24</sup> Alicia McNeill was bequeathed the sum of £2,000. Anna (McNeill) Whistler, Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer, Charles Johnston McNeill, and John Winstanley’s nephew, William Winstanley, each received the sum of £800; an equal sum was put in trust for the children of the late General William Gibbs McNeill. Nor did John Winstanley forget his wife’s cousins – Isabella Wilkin, Priscilla Cragg, Jessie Finlay, Wilhelmina Finlay, Ann Clunie, and Wilhelmina Clunie – although he left them lesser sums. He also left a bequest to “Walter Stevenson the Elder formerly of Edinburgh and now of London,” to his daughter, Eliza Isabella (Stevenson) Smith, and to his own nephews and nieces and their children. In the case of his own relatives, he left a bequest for the maintenance of the children of his late nephew, Robert Winstanley, son of his late brother, Thomas.<sup>25</sup> He excluded Robert’s daughter, Alice, because she had been adopted by John Winstanley’s brother, William. He remembered also his nieces Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard and Margaret (Winstanley) Ware, and the children of his late niece Sarah (Winstanley) Wray. These three women were sisters, the daughters of the late Woodcock Winstanley. He remembered as well his nephew, Rev. John Hull, of Poulton-le-Fylde, son of his late sister, Sarah (Winstanley) Hull. It has not been possible to ascertain John Winstanley’s place of burial. A portrait of John Winstanley was in the family in 1930. Its present whereabouts are unknown to me.

* * *

Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (Wilmington, NC (before 12) November 1791 – Linlithgow 20 September 1863)<sup>26</sup> was Anna Whistler’s other half-sister and the natural sister of Eliza Isabella (McNeill)

(Wellwood) Winstanley. It is not clear where she lived. She frequently stayed with the Winstanleys in Preston, but the 1851 Census for Preston (when the Winstanleys were still alive) shows that she was a visitor in the home of John Richards, an attorney's general clerk, and his wife, Betty,<sup>27</sup> while the 1861 Census for Preston (after the Winstanleys were deceased) shows that she was a lodger in the household of Esther Thompson at 8 Stanley Place. She was seventy years old in 1861, unmarried, and an annuitant.<sup>28</sup> Her Letters of Administration and will say she is "of Preston." It was she who came to Liverpool in November 1829 to meet for the first time and take to Preston the newly arrived Anna McNeill.<sup>29</sup> Unmarried, Alicia was freer to travel both outside Great Britain and for extended periods of time. It would appear that she was in Lowell with the Whistlers in July 1834 when James was born.<sup>30</sup> Whether she then went back to England is not clear, but further references to a sojourn in the United States show that she was in America no later than 10 July 1836, in time for the birth of William Whistler.<sup>31</sup> She included North Carolina in her travels. She set out for a visit to North Carolina via New York on 27 September 1836.<sup>32</sup> She may have spent the winter of 1836 or 1837 in the warm climate of Wilmington, North Carolina, accompanying General J.G. Swift's daughter, Louisa Josephine, there and home again because of the latter's delicate health.<sup>33</sup> She had returned to England before 19 June 1838.<sup>34</sup> In July 1844, she came to St. Petersburg, was present at the birth of the Whistlers' last child in August 1845, and remained with them until September 1845. In July 1849, while the widowed Anna Whistler was visiting in England on her way home to America, Alicia took James and Willie on a trip to Scotland.<sup>35</sup> She frequently traveled to Scotland, and it was there in Linlithgow on 20 September 1863 that she died "after a very short illness – On her way to Church she was suddenly seized with faintness – and shortly afterwards expired – At the time of her decease she was visiting her friend, Mrs. John Rodger, of Linlithgow on her route from Culross (where she had been staying the summer) for Preston. On the Thursday following she was interred in the Linlithgow Church Yard."<sup>36</sup> She was buried from the house of Mrs. Rodger, whom she had known in Russia, when the latter was Miss Sophia Morgan of Edinburgh.<sup>37</sup> Her likeness, drawn by James Whistler in 1844, shows a plain, stout woman with eyeglasses (see Image 39).<sup>38</sup> The diaries attest to her generosity, as does her will. Her effects were under £2000. The chief portion of her estate went to her American relatives: half-sisters, half-brother, and their children. To Anna Whistler she bequeathed £250, her pearl brooch set with hair, her wardrobe “for her own use,” and “for her life the Portrait of our justly valued Sister the late Eliza Isabella Winstanley.”<sup>39</sup> She also entrusted to Anna Whistler all her remaining jewelry for distribution at her discretion among the junior members of the family. To Catherine Jane Palmer she bequeathed £250, a gold watch, gold spectacles, and a hair bracelet. At Anna Whistler’s death, the portrait of Eliza Winstanley was to go to Catherine Jane Palmer “to be kept in the family.”<sup>40</sup> Outright gifts of money were bequeathed to her half-brother, Charles Johnston McNeill (£200); the surviving children of her late half-brother, General William Gibbs McNeill: Mary Isabella Rodewald (£150) (see Image 32), Catherine Julia Rodewald (£150) (see Image 33), and Patrick Tracy Jackson McNeill (£200); her nephews, James and William Whistler (£100 each); and her niece, Deborah Whistler Haden (£100). She left the residue of all her “other estate and effects after payment of ... debts and testamentary expenses” to Frederick Rodewald, whom she mistakenly identified as the husband of her niece, Catherine Julia (McNeill) Rodewald, in trust for her nephew, Lt. Donald McNeill Fairfax, of the U.S. Navy (see Image 38). (The husband of Catherine Julia was Adolph Rodewald.) Reference is made to “Aunt Alicia” even in James Whistler’s late correspondence.<sup>41</sup>

* * *

Other relatives of John Winstanley are also mentioned in the diaries: his sister Sarah; her husband, Dr. John Hull, MD; their son, Rev. John Hull (see Image 73); and some of the children of John Winstanley’s brothers, William, Thomas, and Woodcock.

John Winstanley’s sister Sarah Winstanley (bap. 24 June 1765 – Poulton 9 March 1842),<sup>42</sup> married in 1792 Dr. John Hull, MD (Poulton, Lancashire 30 September 1761 – London 17 March 1843; buried Poulton, Lancashire 22 March 1843), whose medical practice was carried on chiefly in Manchester after 1796. He was also a botanist of note.<sup>43</sup> Their son, Rev. Canon John Hull (1803 – Eaglescliffe, County Durham

8 March 1887), graduated from “Brasenose College, Oxford, B.A. 21 October 1823, M.A. 23 February 1826. After being ordained he held curacies in Croston and Lancaster.”<sup>44</sup> He was vicar of St. Chad’s Church in Poulton-le-Fylde from 1835 to 1864, honorary canon of Manchester and rural dean and examining chaplain to the First Bishop of Manchester.<sup>45</sup> “In 1863 he resigned the vicarage of Poulton on his appointment to the rectory of Eaglesfield, Durham.”<sup>46</sup> He married on 1 July 1833 at Rousham, Suffolk, Lucy Brooke (1812 or 1813 – Southport, Lancashire 6 September 1899), daughter of R. Bevan, Esq.<sup>47</sup> When Anna Whistler, James, and Willie were at Blackpool, South Shore, in the summer of 1847, they dined at the rectory of St. Chad’s with Rev. John Hull and his wife, and visited in the churchyard the monument to his father, Dr. John Hull. Anna Whistler had met Sarah (Winstanley) Hull and Dr. John Hull in 1829, on her first visit to the Winstanleys.<sup>48</sup>

John Winstanley’s brother William Winstanley (6 December 1772 – 15 May 1852; see Image 473), MD and JP, lived in the period of the diaries variously at Woolton Hall, Liverpool; Chaigely Manor, Clitheroe; and West Cliff, Preston.<sup>49</sup> He married on 26 May 1808 Elizabeth (bap. Unitarian Church-NC, Manchester 25 October 1772 – 31 December 1845), eldest daughter and co-heiress of Samuel Hardman, Esq., a Manchester merchant, and his wife, Urith.<sup>50</sup> Their son, William Winstanley (10 March 1810 – 22 February 1873), JP, of Chaigely Manor, Clitheroe, and of 2 West Cliff, Preston, married on 14 September 1844 Charlotte Lavinia (bap. High Pavement Presbyterian, Nottingham 21 July 1816 – 14 March 1899), elder daughter of Charlotte Octavia and Alfred Lowe, Esq., of Highfield, Nottinghamshire.<sup>51</sup> Dr. William Winstanley lived in the house at West Cliffe, which he had built after his wife’s death, “with his unmarried sister-in-law, Anna Hardman, who adopted Alice, daughter of one of Winstanley’s nephews, Robert, whose mother had died when she was young.”<sup>52</sup> Some of the family, not referred to by individual name, came from “the Cliffe” to John Winstanley’s home to pay their respects to Francis Seymour and Deborah (Whistler) Haden on the day of their wedding in Preston, 16 October 1847.

Another brother of John Winstanley, Thomas Winstanley (27 May 1774 – 8 June 1822), married on 10 February 1800 Elizabeth (17 May 1774 – 14 August 1816), daughter of Richard Hatton, Esq., of Parbold, Lancashire.<sup>53</sup> The death of one of their two surviving sons, Thomas Woodcock Winstanley (9 February 1805 – 19 July 1844), a bachelor, is announced in the diaries.

John Winstanley's brother Woodcock Winstanley (30 August 1768 – 10 October 1823),<sup>54</sup> of Aysgarth, Yorkshire, married Betty (27 November 1770 – 28 March 1843), daughter and heiress of John Ryder, Esq., of Gammersgill, Yorkshire. Two of their daughters, Elizabeth and Margaret, appear in the diaries.

Elizabeth Winstanley (19 March 1800 – 4 June 1875)<sup>55</sup> married Richard Stuart Picard, Esq. (bap. 16 January 1807 – 26 November 1887)<sup>56</sup> of Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland, on 16 May 1835, at Bolton Castle cum Redmire.<sup>57</sup> In the 1841 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, Richard S. Picard's occupation is given as "Chemist and Druggist."<sup>58</sup> In 1851, the Picards and their son were visiting John and Eliza Winstanley in Preston; Richard S. Picard is listed in the 1851 Census for Preston as "landed proprietor."<sup>59</sup> In the 1861 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, he is also listed as "landed proprietor."<sup>60</sup> In the 1871 Census, he is listed as "land owner."<sup>61</sup> In the 1881 Census, he is a "widower" and his occupation is "land and dividends."<sup>62</sup> He was one of the executors of John Winstanley's will.<sup>63</sup> The gross value of his own estate was about £3,000. The son of Elizabeth (Winstanley) and Richard Stuart Picard, John Richard Picard (bap. 10 December 1842 – 7 October 1933), is listed in the 1861 Census as a "solicitors articled clerk."<sup>64</sup> In the 1881 Census, he is listed as "solicitor" and "unmarried."<sup>65</sup> His effects, when he died, amounted to almost £57,000.<sup>66</sup>

Margaret Winstanley (b. 12 April 1801; bap. 17 April 1801; d. Leyburn, York 16 April 1877) married William Ware Esq. (c. 1793 – before 15 June 1843), a banker, on 7 April 1828, at Bolton Castle cum Redmire.<sup>67</sup> They had a son, William Ryder (31 March 1830 – buried 1 October 1834), baptized at Wensley, Yorkshire.<sup>68</sup> Mrs. Ware does not appear in the 1841 Census for the Picards of Kirkby Lonsdale. In the 1851 Census for Beck Head, Kirkby Lonsdale, she was the head of household in the absence of the Picards, listed as "widow" and "landed proprietor," aged forty-nine. In 1861, she is listed as "sister-in-law," "widow," "landed proprietor," aged sixty. In the 1871 Census for Picard on Main Street, Kirkby Lonsdale, she is listed as “sister-in-law,” “widow,” “landowner,” aged sixty-nine. The three members of the Picard family and the widowed Mrs. Ware appear in the diaries.

Other Picard relatives and some lodgers are referred to as well. The two little cousins of young John Richard Picard, Mary and Meggie, were the daughters of Richard Stuart Picard’s brother, Thomas Picard (bap. 18 April 1808 – 17 September 1846), who married on 1 August 1836 at South Leith Mary McDonald (c. 1812 – 21 August 1850).<sup>69</sup> The children were Mary Jane Picard (bap. St. Andrew Presbyterian, Liverpool 15 May 1838 – Gateacre, near Liverpool 8 September 1892)<sup>70</sup> and Margaret Stuart Picard (bap. South Leith 27 April 1841 – 10 May 1883).<sup>71</sup> This family also lived in Kirkby Lonsdale, on New Road. Mary Jane Picard married on 7 January 1863 at Kirkby Lonsdale Eustace Carey (1836 – Liverpool 3 March 1915), an alkali manufacturer.<sup>72</sup> Margaret Stuart Picard married on 8 January 1879 at Farnworth-in-Widnes James Wray (19 March 1826 – 28 December 1894), major and staff paymaster, Her Majesty’s Army Pay Department (at his death, lieutenant-colonel, retired).<sup>73</sup> “According to the Army List of January 1883, [he] ... was appointed staff paymaster for the Nova Scotia district on 1 April 1878. Margaret Wray died in childbirth on 10 May 1883 and was buried in Camp Hill Cemetery, Halifax.”<sup>74</sup>

* * *

Living with the family of Richard and Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard were two Scotswomen, Jane (or Jean) Simpson (b. Bothkennar, Stirlingshire, 1790; bap. 27 August 1797; d. 4 January 1852) and her sister, Isabella Simpson (bap. Bothkennar, Stirlingshire 14 August 1814 – Stoke Newington 12 August 1889), the daughters of James and Jean (Neilson) Simpson.<sup>75</sup> The 1841 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale lists Jane Simpson as residing in the household of Richard Picard in Wilsons Yard. She was forty-five years old, “unmarried,” and “of independent means.” In the 1851 Census, she is listed as “lodger,” “unmarried,” and “annuitant,” fifty-five years old, residing at Beck Head, head of household Margaret Ware. Isabella Simpson is also listed in the 1841 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale as residing in the household of Richard Picard in Wilsons yard. She was twenty-four years old and of independent means. She was listed, like her sister, in the 1851 Census as a “lodger” residing at Beck Head, “unmarried,” and an “annuitant.” Her age was given as thirty-five. In the 1861 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, Main Street, Isabella Simpson is described as “ward,” “unmarried,” and “annuitant,” forty-five years old. In the 1871 and 1881 censuses for Kirkby Lonsdale, she continued to reside on Main Street, but was living with Jane Picard, sister of Richard Stuart Picard. Her personal estate at her death was £155 and her sole executor was John Richard Picard, son of Eliza (Winstanley) and Richard Stuart Picard.

* * * * *

Relatives of Eliza Winstanley and Alicia McNeill also appear in Anna Whistler’s diaries. Aunt Marion Anne (Clunie) Wilkin(s) (b. 9 August 1771; bap. 20 August 1771),<sup>76</sup> their mother’s sister, is mentioned. She was the widow of William Wilkin(s) (bap. Bolton on Swale, Yorkshire 4 October 1806), whom she had married on 19 April 1805.<sup>77</sup> Also mentioned is one of their daughters, Priscilla Eliza (Wilkin[s]) Cragg (b. 1817 or 1818; bap. Leyland, Lancashire 6 February 1824; d. Blackpool 17 September 1861),<sup>78</sup> who married on 25 August 1844 William Cragg (c. 1812 – 13 July 1898).<sup>79</sup> After his wife’s death, he remarried.<sup>80</sup> William Cragg’s occupation is listed as carrier and lodging house keeper in the 1851 Census for Blackpool, landed proprietor in the 1861 Census, Yeoman in the 1871 Census, farmer and lodging house keeper in the 1881 Census, and retired farmer in the 1891 Census.<sup>81</sup> Marion Anne (Clunie) Wilkin is the center of a legal debate in Eliza Winstanley’s 1843 Edinburgh diary (see Appendix D).

Eliza Winstanley and Alicia McNeill’s aunt, their mother’s sister, Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs (Whitekirk, East Lothian 24 July 1762 – Portobello, Edinburgh 26 November 1844),<sup>82</sup> also appears in Eliza Winstanley’s August 1843 diary. She is the aunt with whom Eliza Winstanley stayed during that trip. Aunt Charlotte’s husband, the late James Biggs, Esq. (d. Memel 24 March 1806), had been a British “wood merchant at Memel, East Prussia.”<sup>83</sup>

Cousin Anne Clunie (Berwick on Tweed 10 June 1793 – Edinburgh 18 May 1882)<sup>84</sup> is recorded on several occasions in Anna Whistler’s diaries as a visitor in the home of Eliza and John Winstanley.<sup>85</sup> She was the daughter of John (b. 30 September 1755) and Wilhelmina (Rutherford) Clunie (b. Jedburgh 1761).<sup>86</sup> John Clunie was the brother of Eliza Winstanley and Alicia McNeill's mother.<sup>87</sup> John and Wilhelmina (Rutherford) Clunie of Berwick on Tweed had five other surviving children besides Anne: Rutherford Ainslie (b. 27 June 1791), James (b. 6 April 1796), George (bap. 17 March 1799), Williamina (bap. 17 Sept. 1800), and David Baird (bap. 9 April 1805).<sup>88</sup> Rutherford Ainslie Clunie, a corn merchant, married Frances Mein at Berwick on 12 August 1816.<sup>89</sup> Their son, Thomas Mein Clunie (1827 – 1 April 1898),<sup>90</sup> Anne Clunie's nephew, is mentioned in the diaries as helping in Liverpool during the wedding preparations for the Whistler–Haden marriage in 1847.<sup>91</sup> He was then twenty years old. Like his father, he became a corn merchant.<sup>92</sup> He married on 28 October 1854 Charlotte Ann Bowen.<sup>93</sup>

NOTES

1. The 1851 Census for Preston records that Eliza (McNeill) Winstanley was born in "North America B.S." (the standard census indicator for "British Subject"). Robin Spencer, however, reads "B.S." as "B.I." for "Bahama Islands" ("Whistler's Early Relations with Britain," pp. 215–216). Although "B.S." indicates "British Subject," some remarks on the Bahama Islands are warranted, as they were an important locale in the life of the McNeills. Two of Dr. Daniel McNeill's sisters had married two Loyalist brothers and had settled in the Bahamas. His sister, Eliza, had married (on 24 October 1789) Archibald Taylor (d. Long Island, Bahamas 14 February 1816), a former major in the Royal Militia of North Carolina ([Obituary of Archibald Taylor], Royal Gazette and Bahama Advertiser, February 7, 1816); his sister, Margaret, had married (in 1793) Duncan Taylor. When Dr. McNeill was banished from North Carolina for similar sympathies (North Carolina State Records, 1786, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, NC), he may have fled to the Bahamas. It is therefore plausible that the Bahama Islands are the place of birth of his daughter, Eliza, on 27 September 1788. See William McNeill, "The McNeill Family of Bladen County," in Bladen County Heritage, North Carolina (Waynesville, NC: Bladen County Heritage Book Committee and County Heritage, 1999), vol. 1, p. 210, entry 595, "McNeil–Taylor."

2. Letters of Administration of Eliza Isabella Winstanley, Lancashire Record Office, Preston, Lancashire (hereafter, LRO).
3. Brooklyn Star, January 1, 1829, Brooklyn Historical Society. For the ancestry of Dr. Daniel McNeill, see Douglas F. Kelly with Caroline Switzer Kelly, Carolina Scots: An Historical and Genealogical Study of Over 100 Years of Emigration (Dillon, SC: 1739 Publications, 1998), pp. 162–163 and McNeill, “McNeill Family of Bladen County.”
4. The information that Dr. McNeill’s first wife was a Mary McLean is incorrect (McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, pp. 5–6; Mumford, Whistler’s Mother, p. 6). See Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanæ, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423.
5. McDiarmid, Whistler’s Mother, pp. 5–6; Mumford, Whistler’s Mother, p. 6; Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanæ, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423.
6. Alicia Clunie McNeill died after “a short, but painful illness.” Her obituary appeared in a newspaper in Charleston, South Carolina. So little is known about Dr. Daniel McNeill’s first wife that I quote her entire obituary here:

DIED.] At Wilmington, North Carolina, on the 12th instant, Mrs. Alicia Mac Neile, the amiable consort of Dr. Daniel MacNeile of that place. She supported a short, but painful illness, with all the pious resignation which mark the christian at the approach of the awful, but to them, the most welcome messenger. To enumerate the many virtues of this lady would only renew the poignant grief of the disconsolate husband, whose loss upon this trying occasion is irreparable but, as a tribute to her memory, it is but just to say, if sweetness of disposition, sensibility of heart, and affability in manners, are engaging traits in the female character, she was allowed by those who knew her, to possess these and many other social accomplishments in a degree which renders her early fate regretted by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, as well as sincerely lamented by those now nearly concerned under, the ties of conjugal affection.

“Peaceful sleep out, the Sabbath of the tomb,
 “And wake in rapture in a life to come?
 POPE.”

(City Gazette (Charleston, SC), November 25, 1791, p. 3)

See also David Dobson, Directory of Scots in the Carolinas, 1680–1830, 2 vols. (Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1986), vol. 1, pp. 47, 208. Dobson cites the Edinburgh Evening Courant as his source. Unfortunately, the wrong date is given in Mabel L. Webber, comp., “Marriage and Death Notices from the City Gazette,” South Carolina Historical and Genealogical Magazine 21 (1920): p. 68. According to the Services of Heirs (see Appendix H), on 6 July 1824 in New York (where her father, Dr. Daniel McNeill, was living), Alicia McNeill was registered as heir to her mother, Alicia Clunie or McNeill, daughter of John Clunie in Whitekirk (Service of Heirs, C22/121, pp. 226–227, SRO; see Appendix H). See also David Dobson, Directory of Scottish Settlers in North America, 1625–1825, 7 vols. [Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1984–1993], vol. 4, p. 98; and David Dobson, Scottish-American Heirs, 1683–1883 [Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1990], p. 84).

7. IGI for East Lothian.
8. Anna Whistler stated that Eliza was their eldest sister (Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, London, 10 February 1864, GUL: Whistler Collection, W516). A comparison of the 1851 Census for two Preston households supports her statement; it shows that while Eliza gave her age as sixty-three, Alicia gave hers as sixty. As Alicia seems, therefore, to have been born the year her mother died (1791), it is possible her mother died of complications resulting from childbirth. For this reason I have given Alicia’s birth date as possibly before 12 November 1791.
9. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanæ, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423.
10. Anderson, Scottish Nation, vol. 3, pp. 633–634.
11. IGI.
12. The portrait is said to have been sold in 1917 by the Ehrich Galleries in London to an American collector.

Louis Rinaldo Ehrich (Albany, New York 23 January 1849 – London 23 October 1911), Yale University, Class of 1869, “was a collector and dealer in old paintings.” He was “president of the Ehrich Galleries in New York” and “made an annual tour to Europe in search of masterpieces of all schools. Many of those he gathered were of great value, and he had imported an especially large number of the works of the early Spanish masters” (Obituary Record of Graduates of Yale University Deceased from June, 1910, to July, 1915 [New Haven, CT: Yale University, 1915], pp. 230–232). His son, Walter Louis Ehrich (New York 9 July 1878 – New York 2 February 1936), Yale University, Class of 1899, was vice-president of the Ehrich Galleries from 1908 to 1932 and president from 1932 to 1934. In 1934, he became president of the Ehrich-Newhouse Galleries (Bulletin of Yale University Obituary Record of Graduates Deceased During the Year Ending July 1, 1936, series 33, no. 3 [15 October 1936]: p. 158). Attempts by me to ascertain the location of the records of the Ehrich Galleries and of the Ehrich-Newhouse Galleries have not been successful, and the identity of the purchaser of the portrait remains unknown.

13. OPRS.
14. Mannex, Preston.
15. Anna McNeill to Catherine Jane McNeill, Liverpool, 22 November 1829, GUL: Whistler Collection, W344, records her first meeting with the Winstanleys.
16. “On the 20th inst., Eliza Isabella, wife of John Winstanley, Esq., Fishergate, aged 69” (Preston Chronicle and Lancashire Advertiser, August 29, 1857). See also Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Scarsdale, 13 January 1857, GUL: Whistler Collection, W474; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Pomfret, 17 September 1857, W483 (in this letter, Anna Whistler says Eliza Winstanley died on August 19); Deborah (Whistler) Haden to Gen. J.G. Swift, August 26th/[18]57; USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers, folder marked “Miscellaneous.”
17. Letters of Administration of Eliza Isabella Winstanley, LRO.
18. Letters of Administration of Eliza Isabella Winstanley, LRO.
19. Burke’s Landed Gentry (1937), p. 2474.
20. Spencer, “Whistler’s Early Relations with Britain,” p. 216. See also Williams’ South Lancashire Directory, 1845.
21. Oakley’s Directory of Preston, 1853.
22. Preston and Fylde Directory, 1857.
23. “On Sunday last, at his residence, Fishergate, John Winstanley Esq., in the 82nd year of his age” (Preston Chronicle and Lancashire Advertiser, May 28, 1859).
24. His executors were his nephews, William Winstanley of Chaigeley Manor, in the County of Lancaster, Esquire; and Thomas Ainsworth of Cleator in the County of Cumberland, flax spinner; and Richard Stuart Picard, the husband of his niece, Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard, of Kirkby Lonsdale in the County of

- Westmorland, gentleman (Will of John Winstanley of Preston, LRO).
25. He later changed the terms and sum of this part of the bequest in a codicil dated 11 May 1859, several days before his death. The original will was dated 1 April 1859.
  26. 1851 Census for Preston, Ecclesiastical District: St. John's, 79 Frenchwood Street, HO107/2265, fol. 527/8, p. 19–20. Alicia McNeill's age is given as sixty, her marriage condition as "unmarried," her place of birth as "North Carolina N-A." For her place of residence see also the entry for Saturday December 2: December 1st [sic: 29 November], AMW 1850 Diary. For her place and date of death, see Letters of Administration for Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill, LRO, and Note 36 in this biography.
  27. 1851 Census for Preston, HO 107/2265, fol. 527/8, p. 19–20.
  28. 1861 Census for Preston, Ecclesiastical District of Christchurch, RG 9/3129, fol. 109, p. 41. Her place of birth is given as "N: Carolina U. States of A." Her landlady was Esther (Proddow) Thompson (b. 7 September 1807 and bap. 1 October 1807 at Crosthwaite, Cumberland).
  29. Anna McNeill recorded how overcome she was at their first meeting (Anna McNeill to Catherine Jane McNeill, Liverpool, 22 November 1829, GUL: Whistler Collection, W344).
  30. James McNeill Whistler to his Father [St. Petersburg 10 or 11 July 1844], roll 4601, LB13, no. 1, AAA: JMcNW.
  31. Young Charlotte Swift, daughter of Gen. Joseph Gardner Swift and Louisa (Walker) Swift, wrote her brother from Newport, Rhode Island: "Miss Alicia McNeill arrived here last evening, with George Whistler, they went away this morning, ... but they will come back in a few days" (Charlotte F. Swift, to Brother, Newport, Thursday, July 11, 1836, USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers, box 12).
  32. Martha McNeil to Sarah, Dedham, 27 September 1836, NYPL: Swift Papers. In September 1836, Charlotte Swift wrote her mother in Brooklyn, Long Island, from a Mrs. Lomax's in Newport, Rhode Island: "Sister mentions in her letter that I thought Grand-ma McNeill [Anna Whistler's mother] was the cause of my not going home but I did not I thought it was Miss Alicia McNeill" (C.F. Swift to her mother, Newport, entry of Sept. 20 in letter of 18 Sept. 1836, USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers, box 12).

33. Anna Whistler to Gen. J.G. Swift New York. friday [September] 29th [1837], NYPL: Swift Papers. The dating of this letter is based on the fact that Anna Whistler was enclosing it along with a letter written by her husband to Gen. J.G. Swift the day before and dated New York, Sept. 28, 1837.
34. A correspondent complained to Mrs. General Swift: "Alicia surely might have wrote to us before she returned to England" (Elizabeth Walker to Louisa (Walker) Swift, Cane Patch, 19 June 1838, USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers, box 12).
35. Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 19th 1849, LC: P-W, box 34; Anna Whistler to Mrs. Harrison, 62 Sloane St. June 20th [1849]; Anna Whistler to Mr. Harrison, Saturday evening. Preston. July 7th 1849; Anna Whistler to Mr. & Mrs. Harrison, Fleetwood. Monday. July 15th 1849.
36. William Charnley to "Madam," Preston 23rd October 1863, GUL: Whistler Collection, C76. William Charnley, Aunt Alicia's executor, was writing to one of her female heirs to announce her death and the particulars of her will. On the outside of his letter is written: "A Copy of 'Aunt Alicia's' Will please return to 'Aunt Kate'." Charnley's letter may therefore have been addressed to Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer. See also GUL: Whistler Collection, F21, McDiarmid, p. 329; McDiarmid, Whistler's Mother, p. 145.

The newspaper notice of her death further clarifies that she "left the house of Mr. Rodger with him to attend church in the forenoon, in the Town Hall, where the Free Church congregation were temporarily meeting during repairs on their church. When deceased reached the Cross she was taken ill and had to be assisted into the nearest house, where she gradually became worse, and in less than an hour expired. Dr. Baird, who had been called in, was of opinion that the death was caused by congestion of the lungs, accompanied by disease of the heart" (The Scotsman (Edinburgh), September 22, 1863, p. 2; The Airdrie and Coatbridge Advertiser, September 26, 1863; Daily Review (Edinburgh), September 22, 1863).

The Local Collection librarian of the Linlithgow Library has informed me that they "have been unable to trace [Alicia McNeill's grave], either on the ground in St. Michael's Parish Churchyard, or through West Lothian Council Cemeteries Records" (M.S. Cavanagh, Linlithgow, to E. Harden, 14 February 2005). Monumental Inscriptions (Pre-1855) in West Lothian

- ([Edinburgh]: Scottish Genealogical Society, 1961) contains no record of an inscription for her in Linlithgow Churchyard, not even in the entry for Rodger. However, the Index does not say whether all the inscriptions in the churchyard were legible nor how many unmarked graves there may be.
37. Alicia McNeill and Sophia Morgan became friends in St. Petersburg in 1844, when Alicia came to visit the Whistlers (Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, London, 10 and 11 February 1864, GUL: Whistler Collection, W516). Sophia Morgan (Greenock 1808 – Merchiston, Edinburgh 13 April 1872), daughter of Francis and Isabella Margery (Carmichael) Morgan of Greenock, married John Rodger (bap. Greenock 4 September 1796 – before 1871 Census) on 30 October 1856, Edinburgh Parish, Edinburgh, Midlothian (IGI for Midlothian; 1871 Census for Linlithgow; entry of death for Sophia Morgan Rodgers on Scotlands People website; OPRS for Renfrewshire; London Evening Standard, April 6, 1872). The 1861 Census for Linlithgow gives the further information that they lived in a house called Friar Bank; that John Rodger, a retired banker, was sixty-four years old; and that Sophia was fifty-three.
  38. Pennell and Pennell, Life of Whistler, vol. 1, p. 25, where it is incorrectly called “Aunt Kate” [Palmer]. This bust-length portrait is in the collection of the Cooper-Hewitt National Design Museum in New York (1953-186-17). James Whistler drew on both sides of the sheet. “... (in the middle of the up-turned sheet about the same level as the stain on the left) there is a very light sketch in graphite of the eye, nose and mouth of a profile figure. It would appear that Whistler started his sketch on the verso side of the sheet and then turned it over and re-drew the finished portrait on what is now the recto side” (Gail Davidson, New York, to E. Harden, 25 October 1999).
  39. The will does not specify whether this is the Raeburn portrait or another.
  40. Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer predeceased her sister.
  41. James McNeill Whistler to Deborah Haden (from a copy), Paris [January 1898], roll 4601, LB13, AAA: JMcNW.
  42. IGI; Fishwick, History of Poulton-le-Fylde, p. 55, and J. Scott Ashton, The History of St. Chad's Church Poulton-le-Fylde (Fleetwood, 1949), p. 59; Manchester Courier and Lancashire General Inquirer, March 19, 1842.
  43. Fishwick, History of Poulton-le-Fylde, pp. 56–57, 85.

44. Fishwick, p. 86. Ashton, History of St. Chad's Church, pp. 38, 40, 57.
45. Ashton, p. 57.
46. Fishwick, History of Poulton-le-Fylde, p. 86.
47. Gentleman's Magazine 103 (1833), pt. 2, p. 77; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1899.
48. Anna Whistler to Margaret Hill, Manchester, January 14th, 1830, LC: P-W, box 34.
49. Spencer, "Whistler's Early Relations with Britain," p. 217; 1851 Census for Preston, HO 107/2265, fol. 598, p. 14–15; Eliza Winstanley to Kate Palmer, Preston, 2 Jan<sup>y</sup> 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W1080; C.W. Winstanley, comp. Pedigrees from Winstanley: Wills and Administrations with Additional Details from Various Parish Registers and Family Records (printed by the author, May 1952), vol. 2, p. 239. Eliza Winstanley explained that the house was "on a line with Stanley Terrace, on the other side of Fishergate, fronting the river."
50. Burke's Landed Gentry (1937), p. 2474. See also Edward Mansfield Brockbank, Sketches of the Lives and Work of the Honorary Medical Staff of the Manchester Infirmary From its Foundation in 1752 to 1830, When It Became the Royal Infirmary (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1904), pp. 241–245; The Palatine Note-book, 5 vols. (Manchester, UK: J.E. Cornish, 1881–1885), vol. 4, pp. 167–168; Anand Chitnis, The Scottish Enlightenment and Early Victorian English Society (London: Croom Helm, 1986), pp. 152–153; Thomas Baker, Memorials of a Dissenting Chapel, Its Foundations and Worthies (London: Simkin, Marshall, 1884), p. 94; Hewitson, History of Preston, pp. 515–517; Spencer, "Whistler's Early Relations with Britain," pp. 216–217.
51. Burke's Landed Gentry (1937), p. 2474; Hewitson, History of Preston, p. 517.
52. Spencer, "Whistler's Early Relations with Britain," p. 217. John Winstanley's will says William Winstanley adopted Alice, but Eliza Winstanley makes clear that the child's aunt, Anna Hardman, did (Eliza Winstanley to Kate Palmer, Preston, 2 Jan<sup>y</sup> 1849, GUL: Whistler Collection, W1080).
53. Sir John Bernard Burke, Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry, 17th ed. (London: Burke's Peerage, 1952), p. 2765; Winstanley, Pedigrees from Winstanley, vol. 2, p. 239. John and Thomas Winstanley were married to two Hatton sisters.

54. Winstanley, Pedigrees from Winstanley, vol. 2, p. 239.
55. Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes, p. 104.
56. Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes, p. 104. IGI for Yorkshire gives his baptismal date as 16 January 1807.
57. IGI for Yorkshire.
58. 1841 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmorland. HO 107/1161, ED 14, fol. 21.
59. 1851 Census for Preston.
60. 1861 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale.
61. 1871 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, RG 10, 5284, fol. 16, p. 26.
62. 1881 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, RG 11/5210, fol. 92, p. 1.
63. See Note 24 in this biography.
64. 1861 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale.
65. 1881 Census for Kirkby Lonsdale, RG 11/5210, fol. 92, p. 1.
66. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1933.
67. IGI for Yorkshire.
68. Hartley Thwaite, ed., The Parish Register of Wensley, vol. 2, 1701–1837 (privately printed for the Yorkshire Archaeological Society, Parish Register Section, 1967), p. 195; Hartley Thwaite, ed., York: Parish Registers of Aysgarth, 1709–1840, “from a transcript made for the society by Hartley Thwaite, typed and indexed by Miss Pole-Stuart, 1943/4” (privately printed for the Yorkshire Archaeological Society), p. 226.
69. OPRS; Bellasis, Westmorland Church Notes, p. 104.
70. IGI for Lancashire; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1892.
71. OPRS; National Probate Calendar (UK), 2 August [1883].
72. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1915.
73. The Times (London), no. 29,461, January 1879; 1881 Census for Scotland, vol. 387, ED 3, p. 3; The Times (London), January 1, 1895; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1895.
74. Rosemary Barbour, Royal Nova Scotia Historical Society, Halifax, NS, to E. Harden, 29 September 2004; William Cleary, Camp Hill Cemetery, Halifax, NS, to E. Harden, [October 2004].
75. IGI for Stirlingshire; will of Isabella Simpson, York Probate Sub-Registry; certified copy of an Entry of Death for Jane Simpson, Sub-district: Kirby Lonsdale, counties of Westmorland and

- Lancaster, GRO; Anna Whistler to James Whistler, Pomfret, tuesday night Feb 10th [1852], GUL: Whistler Collection, W406.
76. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423; IGI.
  77. IGI; Will of Mrs. Charlotte Clunie or Biggs, dated 26 November 1844.
  78. IGI; 1851 Census for Blackpool, HO 107/2269, fol. 457, p. 4–5.
  79. National Probate Calendar (UK), 1898.
  80. The 1871 Census for Blackpool, RG 10/4223, fol. 21, p. 36, shows that he was married to Rebecca Cragg.
  81. 1851 Census for Blackpool, HO 107/ 2269, fol. 457, p. 4/5; 1861 Census for Blackpool, RG 9/3148, fol. 77, p. 6; 1871 Census for Blackpool, RG 10/4223, fol. 21, p. 36; 1881 Census for Blackpool, RG 11, 4254, fol. 10, p. 15; 1891 Census for Blackpool, RG 12/3454, fol. 53, p. 32.
  82. IGI; Appendix D.
  83. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423; Will of Mrs. Charlotte Clunie or Biggs, dated 26 November 1844.
  84. 1881 Census for Scotland; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1882.
  85. She is also mentioned in a number of Anna Whistler's and family letters (Eliza Winstanley to Kate Palmer, 20 Jan. 1854, GUL: Whistler Collection, W1082; Anna Whistler to [James H. Gamble] Thursday eve 9th [Dec. 1858], W498; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, London, 7–10 Sept. 1870, W539; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Hastings, 9 and 18 Sept. 1875, W548; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Hastings, Monday Sept 20th [1875], W551; Anna Whistler to James H. Gamble, Hastings, 8 Sept. 1876, W553.
  86. IGI.
  87. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae, vol. 1, Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, p. 423.
  88. IGI.
  89. IGI; Pigot's Directory of Chester ... Yorkshire (1822).
  90. 1861, 1871, 1881, and 1901 censuses for Liverpool; National Probate Calendar (UK), 1898.

91. Entry for Preston. September, Saturday 10th, but written in late autumn 1847 after the Whistlers' return to St. Petersburg, NYPL: AWPD, Part II.
92. Gore's Directory of Liverpool 1859.
93. Index of Marriages, GRO; Liverpool Mail, November 4, 1854.

WOOD

Charles Wood (Manchester, Lancashire 15 July 1804 – Street, Somerset 8 February 1859; see Image 271)<sup>1</sup> was the son of Richard Wood (Manchester, Lancashire 21 December 1778 – Putney, Middlesex 19 March 1856), a cotton mill owner from Lower Beach and Westbrook, Macclesfield.<sup>2</sup> His mother was Helen (Nicholson) Wood (Didcot, Berkshire 17 April 1780 – Macclesfield 2 March 1833).<sup>3</sup> Charles attended Hipperholm School near Halifax.<sup>4</sup> “He was a good classical scholar and could speak five modern languages.”<sup>5</sup> On 3 September 1834, he married at Prestbury Lydia Procter (Cranage 26 November 1810 – Clevedon 22 April 1880; see Image 272).<sup>6</sup> Lydia (Procter) Wood “was the granddaughter of the Rev. James Crabtree, Curate of an absentee Rector at Gawsorth from 1788–1818, so he lived in the Old Rectory, built in 1480, and Lydia’s mother, Alice, grew up there. Lydia’s father, John Procter, came from Lancaster and was the son of a West Indian Planter. He died as the result of a fall from his horse while hunting outside his home, Cranage Grange, Holmes Chapel.”<sup>7</sup> It was said by a family member that “his widow, Alice, was devoted to her elder children but could not bear Lydia, who was born six months after her Father’s death. Consequently [Lydia] had an unhappy childhood.”<sup>8</sup> Charles and Lydia (Procter) Wood had six children born in England, in Macclesfield: Helen (19 October 1835 – 27 February 1919), Catherine Elizabeth (20 January 1837 – 30 October 1920), William Nicholson (20 August 1838 – Beckenham 27 July 1919), John Edward (2 February 1840 – Macclesfield 17 April 1840), Frances Harriot (23 June 1841 – Clevedon 20 February 1930), and Margaret Jane (23 November 1842 – May 1914).<sup>9</sup> John Edward died in infancy. Of the remaining five children, only Helen, Catherine, and William are referred to by name in Anna Whistler’s diaries, but there are several references to the three and the seven Wood children. Frances Harriot Wood says: “The whole family, excepting myself, migrated. I was a very delicate child, and was left in charge of an aunt and my grandfather, who took my father’s house off his hands. I remained with them for four years and then rejoined my family.”<sup>10</sup> She would therefore have gone to St. Petersburg in 1847. Whether both Helen and Margaret Jane went to St. Petersburg with their parents, or only one of them did, is not clear. Five more children were born in St. Petersburg, of whom three survived into adulthood: Charles John (29 September / 11 October 1844 – 28 June 1905), Lydia (13/25 December 1845 – Clevedon 17 January 1922), Anna Caroline (31 August / 12 September 1847 – St. Petersburg 3 June 1850), Richard Gellibrand (7/19 April 1849 – Horsham, Sussex 31 January 1916), and Mary Gertrude (9/21 July 1850 – St. Petersburg 5/17 December 1852).<sup>11</sup> Only the births of Charles John and Lydia are mentioned in the diaries. The Whistlers were in Preston preparing for Deborah's wedding when Anna Caroline was born. The diaries break off in autumn of 1848.

Charles Wood was a Manchester cotton spinner.<sup>12</sup> The failure of Ryle's Bank in Macclesfield in June 1841 caused the Wood family to be ruined as well, because the loan to finance making Wood's Pool, the source of power for the mill, was called in.<sup>13</sup> A very wealthy friend of the family offered to save the firm if the uncle of Charles Wood considered responsible for the misfortune would retire from the firm, but the uncle refused.<sup>14</sup> The works therefore had to be sold to settle their debts, and Charles Wood was penniless with a wife and three or four children. His wife's marriage settlement was small.<sup>15</sup> In 1842, when England began to permit for the first time the exportation of machinery used in textile manufacturing, Egerton Hubbard and William Clarke Gellibrand, who had successfully obtained improved machinery for General Alexander Wilson, the head of the Imperial Linen Factory near St. Petersburg, decided to import some of this machinery for themselves and enter the textile trade. Hubbard's grandfather in England was reluctant to approve the undertaking; however, Hubbard's uncle John had not long before met Charles Wood on the Continent and become good friends with him. Hubbard's grandfather yielded to their persuasion and consented to have a trial made on the condition that Charles Wood join in and advise the undertaking.<sup>16</sup> The same wealthy friend from Cheshire then offered to lend Charles Wood £2000 so that he could participate in this venture.<sup>17</sup> In 1842, they bought land from the Russian merchant Chursinov and built the Petrovsky Spinning Mill of about 40,000 spindles in the Alexandrovsky suburbs of St. Petersburg on the bank of the Neva River, next to another mill being built by a Mr. Wright.<sup>18</sup> Their enterprise prospered, and in 1851 weaving was added to the business and a shed for 12,000 looms built. Of the two Englishmen, Thornton and Maxwell, who were working for General Wilson, Maxwell was appointed the first manager of “Hubbard’s Mill.”<sup>19</sup> The correspondence concerning the establishment of the Nevsky [sic: Petrovsky] Cotton Spinning Mill on 15 August 1842 near St. Petersburg on the road to Alexandrofsky (the sixth verst along the Schlüsselberg Road), and the roles of Mr. Egerton Hubbard and Mr. David Maxwell, includes a Memorandum of Agreement which says: “The Foundations of the Mill to be laid forthwith and the Machinery to be selected in England during the ensuing winter by Mr. Maxwell in conjunction with and with the approval of Mr. Charles Wood as the representative of Mr. Egerton Hubbard.” Egerton Hubbard is named as a merchant of the First Guild of Vyborg and temporarily of St. Petersburg, Charles Wood as a British subject, and William Gellibrand (see Image 265) as a Vyborg first-class merchant.<sup>20</sup>

Charles Wood and his family went to St. Petersburg in the autumn of 1843.<sup>21</sup> They are listed in 1845 as living at 30 Angliiskii Prospekt (English Prospect),<sup>22</sup> which was in the Second Ward of the Fourth Admiralty District.<sup>23</sup> Living with them was a governess named Miss McMaster, whose given names were probably Anne Caroline.<sup>24</sup>

The Woods remained in Russia “for ten years and [Charles Wood] made a tolerable fortune with which he retired.”<sup>25</sup> The year of his retirement would have been 1853. After wandering for a year, he bought a property about a mile and a half from Glastonbury, then called Street House and later Abbey Grange. He wanted to be near his only brother, Rev. Richard Nicholson Wood (16 March 1816 – Weston-Super-Mare 21 February 1898), curate-in-charge of Street, Somerset.<sup>26</sup> In 1858, Charles Wood was asked by his friend, Mr. Hubbard, to come out of retirement and “help the firm” by superintending the salvage of “some most valuable machinery” from a ship that had sunk in the Baltic Sea. He spent the autumn of 1858 in Russia and successfully accomplished the salvage, but it took its toll. He died suddenly on 8 February 1859.<sup>27</sup> Lydia (Procter) Wood survived him by some twenty years; she died on 22 April 1880 at Clevedon.<sup>28</sup>

Charles John Wood married Henrietta Cattley (St. Petersburg 5 October 1848 – 15 May 1905). Their daughter, Ethel, married Arthur Reed Ropes, William Hooper Ropes's son (see Ropes, Gellibrand, Hall, Prince in this Appendix).

NOTES

1. Dates from "A Wood Family Tree." I am deeply grateful to Reverend Eric Wood of Bruton, Somerset, great-grandson of Charles Wood, for providing me with "A Wood Family Tree"; p. 4 of his family history Our Woods (Eric Wood, Our Woods, ts, [printed by the author, n.d.]); the preface of his great-aunt, Frances Hariott Wood's book Somerset Memories and Traditions (London: Robert Scott, 1924); photographs of Charles and Lydia Wood; and for his own helpful correspondence.
2. "A Wood Family Tree."
3. "A Wood Family Tree"; The Papers of the Nicholson Family (c 17/2/23) (hereafter, Nicholson Papers) at the Manchester Central Library include letters, chiefly from Charles Wood's father, Richard Wood, to his wife Helen's sister-in-law, Mrs. Hannah (Shaw) Nicholson, of Arrowe Park, Birkenhead (later Lady McDougall); letters from Rev. Eric Wood, Bruton, Somerset, to E. Harden 23 August 1993; 19 September 1993.
4. "A Wood Family Tree"; Our Woods.
5. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 7; Our Woods.
6. Our Woods. Charles Wood's simple note to Lydia Procter with his proposal of marriage is delightful and touching to read (Westbrook 20th Jan'y 1834 Cha<sup>s</sup> Wood to my dear Miss Procter, photocopy supplied by Rev. Eric Wood, Bruton, Somerset, in his letter of 19 September 1993).
7. Our Woods.
8. Our Woods.
9. Our Woods. See also 1841 Census for Borough of Macclesfield, Township of Sutton, HO 107/107, bk. 7, fol. 22.
10. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 7.
11. Richard Wood to Lady McDougall, Macclesfield, 9 August [18]44, Nicholson Papers; Our Woods; and PREC STP, pp. 315, 326, 332 (no. 5581), 353, 385 (no. 5944), and nos. 5761, 6068, 6104, and 6327.
12. Somerset Memories and Traditions, pp. 5–6.

13. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 5. See also L.H. Grindon, Manchester Banks and Bankers: Historical, Biographical, and Anecdotal (Manchester, UK: Palmer and Howe; London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1877), pp. 111–117; Rev. Eric Wood, Bruton, Somerset, to E. Harden, 19 September 1993.
14. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 6.
15. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 6.
16. W.E. Hubbard, “Mills and Print Works,” in Some Account of the Hubbard Family.
17. Somerset Memories and Traditions, pp. 6–7.
18. TsGIA SPb: Fond 1413, op. 1, d. 2: Peregiska ob uchrezhdenii aktsionnogo obshchestva pod firmoiu “Kompaniia Petrovskoi bumagopriadil’noi i tkatskoi fabriki” [Correspondence concerning the establishment of a joint-stock company for the firm “The Petrovsky Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mill”], fols. 1r, 3r, 13.
19. Hubbard, “Mills and Print Works.”
20. TsGIA SPb: Fond 1413, op. 1, d. 2, fols. 1r, 3r, 13 (see Note 19 above for document title). Through a possible copying error in this document, “Petrovsky Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mill” is called the “Nevsky Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mill.”
21. Letter of Richard Wood to Mrs. Nicholson, Macclesfield, 18 September [18]43, Nicholson Papers. Other letters in this collection, in which Charles Wood is mentioned during his Russian sojourn, are Richard Wood to Lady McDougall, Macclesfield, 7 December 1848 and 30 October 1850; and Lady McDougall to Richard Wood, Cheltenham, postmark: 6 December 1848.
22. BRBC STP 1845, fol. 62.
23. Grech, Ves’ Peterburg v karmane 1851, p. 18; Nistrem, Adres-Kalendar’, vol. 1, p. 53.
24. In BRBC STP 1845, fol. 39, she is listed as living at Mr. Charles Wood’s. Only her last name is given. However, the registers for the English Church give as a sponsor for the receiving into the Church of Charles John Wood in 1845 an “Anne Caroline McMaster” (PREC STP for 1845, p. 326). It is probably in honor of her that they called one of their daughters Anna Caroline.

25. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 7. His effects, when his will was probated on 28 March 1859, amounted to under £16,000 (G29/93 10 0284, York Probate Sub-Registry).
26. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 7.
27. Somerset Memories and Traditions, p. 8.
28. Our Woods.

APPENDIX F

“CHORNYI TSVET” (ROMANS)<sup>1</sup>

When Debo sang a popular romance of the period, “The Color Black,” at Col. Todd’s birthday dinner party on 22 January 1844, “she surprised M<sup>r</sup>. Law by her correct pronunciation” (entry of January 1844, NYPL: AWPD, Part I).

·ЧЕРНЫЙ ЦВѢТЬ·

Allegretto moderato.

CHANT
Чер- ный цвѣтъ мрачнѣй цвѣтъ, ты мнѣ милъ на все- гда, и цѣлюсь, въ дру- гой цвѣтъ не влюблюсь ни ко- гда. Не принудятъ мѣ, не оставятъ ме, ни разлюбить чернѣй цвѣтъ, свидѣтъ въ сѣнѣхъ и нѣтъ! Отъ че-го! спростъ свѣтъ я влюблю въ дѣвчѣтѣхъ, я скажу чер- ный

PIANO

The image shows a page from a music manuscript. At the top, the title "·ЧЕРНЫЙ ЦВѢТЬ·" is centered. Below it, the tempo marking "Allegretto moderato." is written. The score is divided into two parts: "CHANT" (vocal line) and "PIANO" (piano accompaniment). The vocal line consists of four staves of music with Russian lyrics written below the notes. The piano accompaniment consists of two staves (treble and bass clef) with chords and melodic lines. The paper is aged and shows some staining.

цвѣтъ, цвѣтъ по дру- ги мо- ся и ска- жу чер- вым цвѣтъ, цвѣтъ по дру- ги мо- ся.

2<sup>й</sup> КУПЛ.:
 И пусть други, милый другъ Но за- бу- деть мо- ня, Черный цвѣтъ мрачный цвѣтъ Все лю- бить бу- ду я. У мо- ня мысл о- дна Черный цвѣтъ и о- на Съ ней на вѣкъ я со- лю Мрачу ду- шу сво- ю. Растама- несь ле- жай, О. бле- кушъ въ- черный цвѣтъ, А по- ка въ- чашъ свѣтъ, И влюбись въ- черный цвѣтъ, А по- ка въ- чашъ свѣтъ, И влюбись въ- черный цвѣтъ...

2378

NOTE

1. “Chornyi tsvet” (Romans) [“The Color Black” (Love Song)], Liubimye russkie romansy i pesni dlia odnogo golosa [Favorite Russian Romances and Songs for Solo Voice]. St. Petersburg: M. Bernadaki.

APPENDIX G

PERMISSION FOR SERFS TO LIVE IN THE CITY

I.N. Bozherianov, Nenskii Prospekt, 1703–1903. Kult'urno-istoricheskii ocherk zhizni S.-Peterburga za dva veka-XVIII i XIX [Nenskii Prospekt, 1703–1903: A Cultural-Historical Essay on the Life of St. Petersburg for Two Centuries – 18th and 19th]. Jubilee ed. 2 vols. (St. Petersburg: A.I. Vil'borg, 1901–1903), vol. 2, p. 445.

TRANSLATION

The bearer of this, my married female serf, Ustin'ia Mikhailovna, daughter of Shevchenko, registered as mine, according to the most recent census of Kursk Province Staropol'sk Region in the hamlet of Peski, is released by me to earn a living by working in the city of St. Petersburg as of the date cited below for one year, i.e., the coming year one thousand eight hundred fifty-four second November, for which period anyone who wishes to have her, Shevchenko, in service, may do so. Her distinguishing features are: height 2 arshiny 2 vershki,<sup>1</sup> eyes light blue, hair on her head blonde, age 62. In confirmation of which I have given her this permission with my signature and the affixing of my seal.

Privy Councilor Petr son of Grigorii Butkov

On the stamp is written: "For written permissions for serfs in the capital cities Price 1 ruble 45 kopeks silver."

NOTE

1. An arshin = 28 inches; a vershok = 1¾ inches. The female serf was thus just short of five feet tall.

APPENDIX H

SERVICES OF HEIRS FOR FINLAYS MATRI AND MCNEILLS MATRI<sup>1</sup>

The Service of Heirs is a Scottish law that confirms the legitimacy of the children of a deceased parent, thus making them eligible to be that parent's heir.<sup>2</sup>

NOTES

1. Service of Heirs, C22/121, pp. 226–227, SRO; English translation by Laura Moncion, Centre for Medieval Studies, University of Toronto.
2. “By the law of Scotland, before an heir can regularly acquire a right to the estate of the ancestor, he ought to be served heir: which is one of the old forms of the law of Scotland proceeding upon a writ, and including in it the decision of a jury fixing the right and character of the heir to the estate of the ancestor” (Sir Thomas Edlyne Tomlins, The Law-Dictionary, Explaining the Rise, Progress, and Present State of the British Law, 2 vols. [Edinburgh: John Anderson; London: Saunders and Benning, 1835], vol. 2, s.v. “service of an heir”). See also William Bell, Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland (Edinburgh: John Anderson; London: Saunders and Benning, 1838), pp. 903–907.

N. 10
 Haec Inquisitio facta fuit in Curia
 Ballivorum Burgi de Edinburgh septi-die mensis Julij Anno MDCCLXV
 -Cingentesimo vigesimo quarto, coram honorabili viro Gulielmo Blackwood Armigero uno Ballivorum dicti Burgi per hos probos et fideles homines patres subscriptos Viz: Robertum Brown Jam-
 -nem Keaton et Josephum Grant sorsum
 Signetis Regis, Johannem Gibson, Jacobum
 Laurie, Henricum Horne Greiv, Joan-
 -nem Hatcherison, Jacobum Malcolm
 Eberhardum Wallace, Georgium Mitchel
 Thomam Fortep et Adamum Eden sor-
 -bes in Edinburgh, Gulielmum Brunton
 Mercatorem ibid et Majorem Jacobum
 Laing et Gulielmum Pull Armigerum ambo residentes ibid. Illi jurati dicunt Magno Sacramento interveniente quod quondam Rebecca Edence vidua Finlay quae

Finlay
 Matri

LATIN TRANSCRIPTION

No. 16	Hæc Inquisitio facta fuit in Curia          Ballivorum Burgi de Edinburgh sexto          die mensis Julij anno millesimo oc-          -tingentesimo vigesimo quarto, coram          honorabili viro Gulielmo Blackwood          Armigero uno Ballivorum dicti Burgi          per nos probos et fideles homines patriæ          subscriptos viz<sup>1</sup> Robertum Brown, Joan-          -nem Renton et Josephum Grant scribas          Signeto Regio, Joannem Gibson, Jacobum          Laurie, Henricum Horne Greive, Joan-          nem Hutchinson,<sup>2</sup> Jacobum Malcolm,          Ebenezerum Wallace, Georgium Ritchie,          Thomam Fortye et Adamum Paton scri-          -bas in Edinburgh, Gulielmum Brunton          Mercatorem ibid<sup>3</sup> et Majorem Jacobum          Laing et Gulielmum Bell armigerum          ambos residen<sup>4</sup> ibid<sup>5</sup>. Qui jurati dicunt          magno sacramento interveniente quod          quondam Rebecca Clunie alias Finlay
Finlays Matri	quæ

---

<sup>1</sup> Abbreviation for: videlicet

<sup>2</sup> Written as “Hutchinson” with the “n” then crossed out.

<sup>3</sup> Abbreviation for: ibid[em]

<sup>4</sup> Abbreviation for: residen[tes]

<sup>5</sup> Abbreviation for : ibid[em]

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No. 16 – Finlay Mother

This inquiry was made in the court of the bailiffs of the burgh<sup>6</sup> of Edinburgh, on the sixth day of the month of July eighteen-twenty-four, before the honourable man William Blackwood esquire,<sup>7</sup> one of the bailiffs of the said burgh, by us, the undersigned honest men, faithful to the nation, namely, the clerks<sup>8</sup> Robert Brown, John Renton, and Joseph Grant;
by the royal seal the clerks John Gibson, Jacob Laurie, Henry Horne Greive, John
Hutchison, Jacob Malcolm,
Ebenezer Wallace, George Ritchie,
Thomas Fortye, and Adam Patron in Edinburgh; William Brunton a merchant in the same place; and Major Jacob Laing and William Bell esquire, both residing in the same place, who, called to witness, declare under oath<sup>9</sup> that the late Rebecca Clunie, also known as Finlay,

---

<sup>6</sup> burgh: this word literally means “castle”, “fort”; it can also mean “city” or “borough.”

<sup>7</sup> armiger: this word can also mean “soldier” or “squire” (literally “arms-bearer”).

<sup>8</sup> scribas: this word can also mean “scribe.”

<sup>9</sup> Literally, “with a great oath taking place”. The word for “oath” used here is sacramentum: this word can also mean “sacrament”, “civil suit or process”, “secret or something to be kept secret.”

226 qua filia fuit nuperi Reverendi Joannis Etonie nonnunquam Evangelij Mi-nistri apud Whitehirk. Mater Sancta

 Rebecca Fenlay et Gulielmone Fenlay
<sup>intererat</sup> seu <sup>intererat</sup> nuptiis inter demortuum Georgium Fenlay nonnunquam Commander of the Prince Augustus Frede-rich Custom House Butler et dicta Rebecam Etonie alias Fenlay Brit ad fi-dem et pacem S. D. N. Regis. Et QUOD dicta Sancta Rebecca Fenlay et Gulielmina Fenlay sunt legitima et propinquiores heredes portionaria in generali dicta quondam Rebecca Etonie alias Fenlay earum Matris. Et QUOD sunt legitima aetatis. IN CUIUS rei TESTI-monium sigilla quorundam eorum qui dicunt Inquisitioni intererant, cum brevi Regio debite, excuto incluso, ac sigillum dicti Ballivi, presentibus scriptis appensa loco, die, mense et Anno praesscriptis. Extrac<sup>t</sup> de Libris Actonum Curiae dicti Burghi per me (sic) Subscribitur
 Carlisle Bell Cony<sup>s</sup> Sck. 9<sup>to</sup> Julij 1824

Haec Inquisitio facta fuit iisdem loco et tempore, coram eodem iudice, et per easdem Inquisitionis personas ut in Protocollo immediate praecedente, Illi jurati dicunt magno Sacramento interveniente QUOD quondam Magis-tra Alicia Etonie alias McNeill qua McNeill filia fuit nuperi Reverendi Joannes Mulri Etonie nonnunquam Evangelij Ministri apud Whitehirk. (Mater Magistra Elizabetha McNeill alias Melwood vidua de--cessa

LATIN TRANSCRIPTION

quæ filia fuit nuperi Reverendi Joannis Clunie nonnunquam Evangelij Mi-nistri apud Whitekirk Mater Janetæ Rebeccæ Finlay et Gulielminæ Finlay filiarum procreat<sup>10</sup> ex nuptiis inter demortuum Georgium Finlay nonnunquam lie<sup>11</sup> Commander of the Prince Augustus Frederick Custom House Cutter et dict<sup>12</sup> Rebec-
 -cam Clunie alias Finlay obiit ad fi-
 -dem et pacem S. D. N. <sup>13</sup> Regis. Et quod dictæ Janetta Rebecca Finlay et Gulielmina Finlay sunt legitimæ et propinquiores hæredes portionariæ in generali dictæ quond<sup>14</sup> Rebeccæ Clunie alias Finlay earum matris. Et quod sunt legitimæ ætatis. In cuius rei testi-monium sigilla quorundam eorum qui dict<sup>15</sup> Inquisitioni intererant, cum brevi Regio debite executo incluso, ac sigil-
 -lum dicti Ballivi, præsentibus sunt appensa loco, die, mense et anno præ-

<sup>10</sup> procreat written in the line above and inserted into the text in this place.

<sup>11</sup> I can't make this out completely from the handwriting, but I'm guessing it is some kind of abbreviation relating to this person's rank as Commander of what seems to be a ship (?), perhaps an abbreviation for "lieutenant" (if this fits with your knowledge of other comparable documents, e.g. it is also customary for "lieutenant" to be shortened and written beginning with a lower-case letter, as this is, in English-language documents of this kind and period).

<sup>12</sup> Abbreviation for: dict[am]

<sup>13</sup> Abbreviation for: S[ancti] D[ominum] N[ostri]

<sup>14</sup> Abbreviation for: quond[am]

<sup>15</sup> Abbreviation for: dict[ae]

scriptis. Extract<sup>16</sup> de Libris actorum Curia dicti Burgi per me (sic subscribitur)

Carlyle Bell Conjt<sup>17</sup> Clk(?).<sup>18</sup>

9<sup>no</sup> Julij 1824

Haec Inquisitio facta fuit iisdem loco et tempore, coram eodem iudice, et per easdem Inquisitionis personas ut in Retornatu immediate praecedente, qui jurati dicunt magno sacramento interveniente, quod quondam Magistra Alicia Clunie alias McNiell quae filia fuit nuperi Reverendi Joannis Clunie nonnunquam Evangelij Ministri apud Whitekirk (mater Magistræ Elizæ Isabellæ McNiell alias Welwood, viduae de -cessi

No. 17

McNiells

Matri

---

<sup>16</sup> Abbreviation for: Extract[um]

<sup>17</sup> conjt: this might be an abbreviation of conicit (i.e. “Carlyle Bell concludes/assigns/classifies”) but since I suspect it is part of this formula (which I am not familiar with) I can’t say with any certainty.

<sup>18</sup> I can’t make this out either, but I would guess that it has something to do either with this person’s rank or position, or is part of the formula of this kind of nineteenth-century record. This might be short for “clerk.”

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

who was the daughter of the late<sup>19</sup> Reverend John Clunie, sometime minister of the Gospel at Whitekirk, and the mother of Janet Rebecca Finlay and Wilhelmina Finlay, daughters whom she begot from the marriage between the late George Finlay, sometime lieutenant Commander of the Prince Augustus Frederick Custom House Cutter, and the said Rebecca Clunie a.k.a. Finlay, died in the faith and peace of the Holy Lord Our King. And that the said Janet Rebecca Finlay and Wilhelmina Finlay are the legitimate and closest heirs, beneficiaries in general of the said late Rebecca Clunie a.k.a. Finlay, their mother, and that they are legitimate forever. In testimony of which matter the seals of those who were present for the said inquiry, with the king's letter, duly executed, included, and the seal of the said bailiff, by those present are attached at the place and on the day, month, and year as written above. Extracted from the Books of the acts of the Court of the said burgh by me (thus signed) Carlyle Bell Conjt Clk(?).

---

<sup>19</sup> nuper: this word can also mean "recent".

No. 17 – McNeill Mother

This inquiry was made in the same place and at the same time, before the same judge, and by the same people of the inquiry as above,<sup>20</sup> who, called to witness, declare under oath that the late Mistress<sup>21</sup> Alice Clunie also known as McNiell, who was the daughter of the late Reverend John Clunie, sometime minister of the Gospel at Whitekirk (the mother of Mistress Eliza Isabella McNiell also known as Wellwood, the widow of the

---

<sup>20</sup> literally something like “in returning to the directly preceding”, i.e. the same witnesses as the previous document.

<sup>21</sup> magistra: this word can also mean a female “instructor”, “teacher”, “master”.

227

-cesu Roberto Willwood Armigeri de Gar-
 -voch. et Alicie Margarete Caroline M<sup>o</sup>
 -Niell filiam procreat e nuptiis inter
 Doctorem Danielem M<sup>o</sup> Niell nonna-
 -quam Medicum apud Wilmington in Carolina Boreali nunc residentem in New -York et quondam Magistram Aliciam (Eli-
 -sie alias M<sup>o</sup> Niell ejus sponsam) sicut ad fidem et pacem S. D. N. Regis: Et quod dicta Magistra Eliza Isabella M<sup>o</sup> Niell et Alicia Margareta Caroline M<sup>o</sup> Niell sunt legitime et propinquiores heredes forti-
 -onarie in generali decem quondam Ma-
 -gistra Alicie Elisee alias M<sup>o</sup> Niell ea-
 -rum Matris: Et quod sunt legitime etatis: Immo recte memorum he ut in Protocollo preedem (sic sub-
 -scribitur) Carlisle Bell Com<sup>o</sup> Clk.

9<sup>no</sup> July 1821

LATIN TRANSCRIPTION

	-cessi Roberti Wellwood armigeri de Gar-
	-vock et Aliciæ Margaretæ Carolinæ Mc-
	-Niell filiarum procreat e <sup>22</sup> nuptiis inter
	Doctorem Danielem McNiell nonnun-
	-quam Medicum apud Wilmington in Carolina Boreæli nunc residen <sup>23</sup> in New--York et quond <sup>24</sup> Magistram Aliciam Clu-
	-nie alias McNiell ejus sponsam) obiit ad fidem et pacem S. D. N. <sup>25</sup> Regis. Et quod dictæ Magistra Eliza Isabella McNiell et Alicia Margareta Carolina McNiell sunt legitimæ et propinquiores hæredes porti-
	-onariæ in generali dictæ quond <sup>26</sup> Ma-
	-gistræ Aliciæ Clunie alias McNiell ea-
	-rum matris; Et quod sunt legitimæ ætatis. In cujus rei testimonium
	7 <sup>27</sup> ut in Retornatu præceden <sup>28</sup> (sic sub-
9 <sup>no</sup> Julij 1824	-scribitur) Carlyle Bell Conjunct Clk [?].

---

<sup>22</sup> Abbreviation for: e[x]

<sup>23</sup> Abbreviation for: residen[tem]

<sup>24</sup> Abbreviation for: quond[am]

<sup>25</sup> Abbreviation for: S[ancti] D[omini] N[ostri]

<sup>26</sup> Abbreviation for: quond[am]

<sup>27</sup> What is written in the original text here looks like an abbreviation known as the “Tironian et” (I found this symbol online; feel free to change it to another one if that is more appropriate for your purposes). It is not technically a letter or a set of letters. It expands simply to et (“and”).

<sup>28</sup> Abbreviation for: præceden[te] late Robert Wellwood esquire of Garvock; and of Alice Margaret Caroline McNiell, daughters whom she begot from the marriage between Doctor Daniel McNiell, sometime medic in Wilmington in North Carolina, now living in New York, and the late Mistress Alice Clunie aka McNiell his wife) died in the faith and peace of the Holy Lord Our King. And that the said Mistress Eliza Isabella McNiell and Alice Margaret Caroline McNiell are the legitimate and closest heirs, beneficiaries in general of the said late Mistress Alice Clunie aka McNiell their mother, and that they are legitimate forever. In testimony of which matter also as above (thus signed) Carlyle Bell Conjunct Clk[?].

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

APPENDIX I

A LETTER FROM MARTHA (KINGSLEY) MCNEILL AND ANNA (MCNEILL) WHISTLER TO CATHERINE (MCNEILL) PALMER

The following letter was written jointly by Martha (Kingsley) McNeill and Anna (McNeill) Whistler to their daughter and sister, Catherine (McNeill) Palmer, on 12 January 1852, some three months before the death (on 7 April) of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill. The opportunity to thus juxtapose the similar styles of their expressions shows clearly how great the moral and religious influence of mother on daughter was.

This photocopy of portions of the letter and transcription of the complete letter were provided (26 March 1976) by Josephine Caldwell (d. March 1986), great-granddaughter of Charles Johnston and Eliza (Coffee) McNeill. All attempts to locate the originals have been unsuccessful.

THE TWO SHEETS OF THE HANDWRITTEN LETTER

Comfort, Jan 31st 1852

①

Another year has passed, and thus allowed so many days of the year to intervene without and hind expression of my heart's desire for every happy return to your abode and dear presence. Altho' mind I could not say would be cheered by it only and I am saying "as well will" but I will not complain so gravely after a long absence. I am amply compensated by one of your highly prized satisfactory accounts of savings and things of all your precious ones at home my own health and who knows what happy things this day has may be the bearer of - The parcel sent by John Brinkman we have not long since had been received as these forwarded from Boston towards the city of hope, some to know of the comforts its contents have afforded our darling to all of whom say much of your many kisses, and good wishes for sweet stands, and grand mother - We and will be the extreme cold, and slippery walking, confine us not only to the house as both back and foot are impossible, and impossible for us to walk from the door to the gate had I an offer of riding and yesterday paid many lonely hours, although I continued from my bed from half past ten until three when you returned with the returned from having one good Boston & bought two of his 3 volume (for my good) which this morning read with other portions of scripture & prayers which ends one day or which I hope in some way from which to be able to be with the comfort in our retirement to sleep we need which brings much to pass, I am here before our great month, each night I find it with other varieties more considerable health - Margaret Hill is her last fellow says, the weather has promised Anna's cottage to be finished by April by which time I suppose it will be in readiness so that to be out of the way in March, not in yours, my child I trust as in various ways I can find, and shall try by the society of my own, & the people of dear old Amherst. We are enjoying the good weather although it is very cold, & windy, but health, cheer, and we feel good and as for the school for innumerable blessings - I must not forget to mention every unexpected arrival the other day from Mr. Flegg, & those who arrived just after our dinner when the dinner was barely cooked in the kitchen (they do not know what a world of pains it was with my feet in winter thinking to ourselves what all this was worth - they have so quiet comfortable afterwards. I had some in light spirit of so was like they enjoyed themselves and took a great afternoon on the way to Denmark Hill where he was engaged to deliver a lecture at Boston & promised themselves much happiness and with it Brooklyn. This is a beautiful sermon his church where he is quite an essential character - so took a lot of much interest by his congregation and a most favorable of the Camp who says he has had the best of the time - your wife about double when I say what a fullness of addition - her pleasure which in Madam Brinkman who's just better than I have just announced - her pleasure which perhaps had to say so small joy been realized by your last letter - my good child for which occurred my own than Helen's brought it from the office just as a woman's case to our dear which I enjoyed with admirable appetite which is always good.

TRANSCRIPTION OF THE COMPLETE LETTER

The following is the transcription of the complete letter provided by Josephine Caldwell. I have indicated, based both on Josephine Caldwell's comments and on textual content, which parts of the letter were written by Anna Whistler, and which by Marth (Kingsley) McNeill.

This part of the letter was written by Martha (Kingsley) McNeill to her daughter, Kate:

Pomfret, Jan 12, 1852

Another year has passed and I have allowed as many days of the new to intervene without one line expressive of my heart's desire for very happy returns to you all, my own dear precious children. Mine, I need not say, would be cheered by, if only one line saying "we are all well" but I will not complain as generally after a long silence, I am amply compensated by one of your highly prized satisfactory accounts of sayings and doings of all your precious ones at home, my own Kate, and who knows what happy tidings this day's mail will be the bearer of. The parcel sent by John Brookman<sup>1</sup> we know must long since have been received as it was forwarded from Boston immediately, & we hope soon to know of the comforts its contents have afforded our darlings to all of whom say much and give many kisses and good wishes from Aunt Anna and Grandmother.

We are well but the extreme cold and slippery walking confines me entirely to the house as both back and front are impossible and impossible for me to walk from the door to the gate, had I an offer of riding, and yesterday passed many lonely hours – although comforted with my books from half past ten until three when your sister and Willie<sup>2</sup> returned from hearing our good pastor<sup>3</sup> and brought two of his sermons (for my good) which the former read with other portions of scripture and prayers which end our days & which pass in sameness from week to week, but we have the comfort in our retirement to ply our needle which brings much to pass & we hope before our great move to effect much and give place to other varieties more conducive to health. Margaret Hill<sup>4</sup> in her last letter says the workmen have promised Anna's Cottage to be finished by April by which time I suppose all will be in readiness as I hope to be out of the way in March, not in yours, my child I trust, as in various ways I can assist and shall enjoy the society of your pets and the prattle of darling Anna.<sup>5</sup> We are enjoying the fine sunshine although very cold and windy but health cheers, and we feel great cause for thankfulness and innumerable blessings.

I must not forget to mention a very unexpected visit the other day from Mr. Flagg & Eliza<sup>6</sup> who arrived just after our dinner when your sister was busily engaged in the kitchen (Mary B.<sup>7</sup> not having returned), I upstairs with my feet in water thinking to ourselves when all is done we will have a quiet comfortable afternoon. Eliza was in high spirits and so was he. They enjoyed themselves until the next afternoon on their way to Danielson Falls<sup>8</sup> where he was engaged to deliver a lecture and promised themselves much happiness in a visit to Brooklyn. Eliza is a bright star in his church where she is quite an intellectual character, is looked up to, and much beloved by his congregation, and a vast favourite of Mrs. Camp<sup>9</sup> who says he loves her best of the two. You will almost doubt when I say what a flattering addition I have to my correspondents in Madam Vinton<sup>10</sup> whose last letter I have just answered. My pleasing anticipations have, to my no small joy, been realized by your last letter, my good child, for which receive my warm thanks.

Willie brought it from the office just as we were going to our dinner which I enjoyed with a double appetite which is always good, and as you sister wishes to add to this, I will resign my pen to her's more able with the blessing of your affectionate Mother – M. McN.

This part of the letter was written by Anna (McNeill) Whistler to her sister Kate.

Our hominey<sup>11</sup> has arrived in time as our rice is just out. Our dear Charles<sup>12</sup> was well a short time since and begged love to you and the Doctor<sup>13</sup> who will again receive my dear love. I take it for granted my dear George<sup>14</sup> rec'd the pen wiper from Mary B. Mother sent one to Don.<sup>15</sup> The bag was from Mary B. to darling Annie, the cherry color and white ear warmer from Nellie to Annie and the two white ones from me to Julie and Emma.<sup>16</sup> Nellie's new blue corded silk quilted hood is so becoming to her. I trust God will ward off contagion. The only disease I dread is small pox.

Mother, our beloved, has left me to tell you, my dearest Kate, of my children, judging of your interest by my own for yours. Oh, my Sister I unite my earnest thanksgiving with yours to our Father in Heaven that the illness which has increased your winter cares has not lessened your sources of home joys, for while I am but a sojourner, you have the substantial comfort of a settled home; long may it be thus your lot, with a husband to sustain you in the path of duty. Debo's<sup>17</sup> letter will be more satisfying than aught I can extract. Mrs. Park<sup>18</sup> has ere this the due for taste and neatness in dressing the doll. Tell Emma with my love I hope she will reward you for all your care of her as my precious daughter<sup>19</sup> has ever done, how sacred is the bond between us! She is so kind in the fondest of my memories, of home scenes passed away from me. George<sup>20</sup> is equally dutiful and affectionate, poor fellow! I tenderly sympathize in his anxiety now because of our gentle Mary's<sup>21</sup> feeble frame of body. He fears she must suffer much, tho he clings to hope that the tender care of her mama may prop her so that she may long be spared to us. Her cough is of the most severe kind, her lungs diseased, and she is thin as a shadow. Her doctor does not speak encouragingly of her ever being stronger. She is confined to warm rooms and cannot make the least exertion without suffering; baby<sup>22</sup> has quite outgrown her care of him. He has his first tooth and is sprightly and firm in health, the joy of Mrs. Ducatel's<sup>23</sup> whole house. George managed to get to West Point to spend half a day with Jemie<sup>24</sup> on the 3rd. Our Cadet had passed the rigid examination creditably so Proff. Bartlett<sup>25</sup> told George. I am expecting Jemie's expression of thanks for the boxes of ginger snaps (& mince puffs, 3 doz) which I sent him via New Haven. Tho George judges by the bleakness of the plain & Jemie's having had no overcoat that the soft, warm under-garments received from Aunt Alicia,<sup>26</sup> my commission, would be most seasonable It seems until the "plebes" pass their Jan. exam, they are not provided with military great coats, and of course allowed to wear no other. Ero [Ere] this I doubt not Jemie is rewarded but "Uncle Palmer" will be satisfied that his rheumatic patient has borne the cold without injury to health or limb. Thus far how favored we have been in our share of health. Willie<sup>27</sup> is as tall as I am now, and as fat again! Tho he studies till a later hour than formerly since joining an evening class at the Rectory for the chief benefit of those who are preparing for visiting Germany. Willie is the pronouncing dictionary. I am glad on his account for the walk and to refresh his Deutch. As the present school term will be so brief I hope as he does that Uncle Palmers lecture will be deferred till March when Willie looks forward to escorting Grandmother to Stonington. We hope not to be disappointed in dear Georgie's<sup>28</sup> visit. Cannot he persuade his mother to bring him? O I will hope so, dearest Kate. Your girls will, I am sure, neglect nothing in the home to spare you to the Pomfret circle a week or a fortnight. Mary B. was absent 3 weeks in the coldest weather experienced in 70 years here. Yet I managed nicely. Eliza<sup>29</sup> attends the District school half days and Sunday school She is still a great tax to patience and is subject to the evil spirit but she wishes to overcome her enemy and has improved tho slowly, so I am not discouraged as Mother and Mary are.

How I should refresh my spirit among your plants (and especially those whom you nurture for a celestial garden! My associations with flowers are sacred. "Charlie<sup>30</sup> remembered Aunt Kate" when he reveled in the parterre of Preston. Kirkie<sup>31</sup> cherished every bright leaf to show Grandmother in his last earthly home! Oh, my sister how precious is the promise that tho they cannot come bodily to my embraces, I shall have "little ones" forever thru the perfect work of a Redeemer. I must patiently abide all my appointed time, for I need the refining of the furnace under the daily cross. It seems to me I never knew the evil of my own heart till now, or adored sufficiently the forbearance of our heavenly father. I am one of a bible class of ladies in this church; their expressions of regret at the prospect of my soon being parted from them when we were together yesterday made me feel the value of christian sympathy more than ever. I have been thankful every day in Pomfret and should regret going from it under the prospect of going only among strangers. Tell Julie I wish she would get 4 of her little friends out of the family to unite with her in subscribing for the Child's Paper.<sup>32</sup> It will only be 10 cents each, for a year 12 papers. I have received the first number. I distribute 5. I should recommend it to Capt. Palmer's children<sup>33</sup> Katy Bennett's, those agents of the American Messenger<sup>34</sup> will take the subscription for the Child's Paper. There is no time to lose. I hope

Amos<sup>35</sup> will determine to try for city practice. I don't think he could endure the fate of a village doctor. My love to him.

When I began on the other page I intended to preserve this for my scribbling is such a disgrace in contrast (to her mother's) but I find this space necessary to tell you of again having heard from Preston;<sup>36</sup> so much love was enclosed for the Corner House.<sup>37</sup> I am glad you will soon write our sister Winnie. She and Mr. W. had just returned from Kirby L.<sup>38</sup> in time to go to Hope Farm<sup>39</sup> to spend Christmas. Only to think of Mr. Ware<sup>40</sup> now being the sustainer of the drooping fireside circle. Jane Simpson<sup>41</sup> so wasted away by disease that we could not recognize her. Jane Picard<sup>42</sup> in consumption, little Johnie Picard feeble from effects of scarlet fever & his mother bowed down in anxiety for them all. What an angel that most devoted of all our sisters in Christ, Margaret Ware<sup>43</sup> must be!

Tuesday morning 13th: Mother forgot to tell you dearest Kate of the frost at Charlie's place<sup>44</sup> after a 48 hours storm – trees & shrubs were broken by ice. Your sunny parlor so admirably regulated is a favorable enclosure for your plants. It will delight Mrs. Park<sup>45</sup> when I tell her this evening (for I've promised Willie to go with him for an hour's chat with her when he presents a frame he made for her in the holidays) the flourishing state of your jessamine. There is to be a sleighing party tonight & the two German scholars<sup>46</sup> will not be at the Rectory so our pastor and lady will both be free. It is good to be with them I find. I am hurried this morning to get this ready for the mail. Will your dear children take less interest in their contract for the little boys grave stones if their cousins Jemie & Willie contribute a mite? Do as your excellent judgement approves, dear Kate. I enclose a dollar, devote it all or half as you think right; if you do not require all, then change in 3 cent stamps will be useful as here we cannot get them but this is "No chi vo".<sup>47</sup> The inscription ought to be simply "little Willie West",<sup>48</sup> don't you think so? How delightful the privilege to your little flock to have visited the little one who loved Jesus so supremely & their walks to his grave in summer with dear Mother I hope I may sometimes join.<sup>49</sup> Oh, Kate, how your best beloved<sup>50</sup> must love the mother of such children! May your union become more and more cemented thru love to this bountiful Giver. Poor Mattio [Mattie]<sup>51</sup> hoped if she were so lucky as to have a son live to win back her husband from disapation. I am rendered very uneasy by her silence, having never had any acknowledgement of the articles sent her thru the kindness of Fred & Mary.<sup>52</sup> I shall write to her this week & to Donald<sup>53</sup> too. I will get from the Bowers<sup>54</sup> the rules for crochet pen wiper for dear Emma.<sup>55</sup> Anna presented my ? with one for my Christmas & Nellie had embroidered me a beautiful toilette cushion.<sup>56</sup> Mother rejoices that you had the family gathering at the Corner House on New Years day. I don't know when we have been so glad as to hear of Aunty Swan's<sup>57</sup> breaking the ice. Our love to all Winterley<sup>58</sup> branches, remembrances to Mr. & Mrs. Willey<sup>59</sup> also. When you have a chance, dear Kate, remind Aunt Swan that I shall want my flower stand when I move to where I hope she will see it. Ask Russel Donivan<sup>60</sup> what he would charge to repair the old rocking chair. Write soon to your loving sister

Anna M. Whistler

Embrace your husband and children for me.

NOTES

1. It has not been possible to identify John Brookman.
2. This is William McNeill Whistler (1836–1900), Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s second son. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s,” Whistler . . . Fairfax in Appendix E, and Images 27, 30.
3. Their pastor was Rev. Dr. Roswell Park (1807–1869), who graduated from the USMA in 1831, serving as a military engineer from 1831 until 1836, then as a professor of natural philosophy and geometry at the University of Pennsylvania, until again changing careers. “In 1843, he was ordained a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church and became Rector of Christ Church, Pomfret, Conn. Three years later (1846), he also took charge of Christ Church Hall, a high school, connected with his parish. Here he remained until 1852” (Edwin F. Hatfield, The Poets of the Church: A Series of Biographical Sketches of Hymn-Writers with Notes on Their Hymns [New York: Anson D.F. Randolph, 1884], p. 490).
4. Margaret Getfield Hill (1802–1881), Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s friend from girlhood days, lived in Scarsdale, New York. She had contracted for a cottage for Anna Whistler to be built on her property.
5. “Darling Anna” is Anna Whistler Palmer (b. 7 April 1848), daughter of Catherine (McNeill) and Dr. George E. Palmer (see Image 36) and namesake of Anna (McNeill) Whistler.
6. This is Rev. Edward Octavius Flagg (1824–1911), husband of Eliza Winstanley (McNeill) Flagg (1830–1855), daughter of Maria (Cammann) and William Gibbs McNeill and niece of Anna (McNeill) Whistler. The young couple had been married on 24 September 1851. Rev. Flagg, rector of Trinity Church, Norwich, Connecticut, was a poet and lecturer as well. See Whistler . . . Fairfax in Appendix E. The description here of Eliza Winstanley (McNeill) Flagg is one of the few pieces of information we have about her personality.
7. This is Mary Brennan (1828–1895), servant in the Whistler family, who had gone to Russia with them as nursemaid to Charles Donald Whistler. See Brennan, Bergen, Keefe in Appendix E.
8. “Danielson Falls” are possibly the falls in present day Old Furnace State Park in Danielson, a borough in the town of Killingly in Windham County, Connecticut (“Old Furnace State Park,” Connecticut’s Official State Website, <https://portal.ct.gov/DEEP/State-Parks/Parks/Old-Furnace-State-Park/Overview>).

9. It has not been possible to identify Mrs. Camp.
10. This is possibly Elizabeth Mason (Perry) Vinton (1819–1878), wife of Francis Vinton (1809–1872), a prominent clergyman in the Episcopal Church (1839–1872). He was professor of ecclesiastical polity and canon law and in 1855 became a minister at Trinity Church in New York (see Image 49), where he remained until his retirement in 1871.
It could also be Mary (Atwell) Vinton (1773–1854), the grandmother of Francis Laurens Vinton (1835–1879), who was James’s roommate at the USMA and eventually became professor of mining and engineering there.
11. “Hominy” is “coarsely ground corn (maize) used to make grits” (Oxford English Dictionary, s.v. “hominy”), a popular dish in the southern United States. “Hominy (from Virginia Algonkian rockahominy meaning “boiled corn”) grits (from Old English grot, “crush”) is now a mush made [sic: from] fine-ground corn meal ... There is a fairly clear line from Native American sofkey ... and Cherokee/ Appalachian whole-grain hominy ... through African American “hog and hominy” dishes, to today’s grits. A northern dish of whole-grain lye hominy and beans persisted regionally as Plymouth succotash” (Smith, Oxford Encyclopedia of Food and Drink, s.v. “hominy grits”). Anna Whistler was most likely speaking of a form of Appalachian whole-grain hominy.
12. This is Charles Johnston McNeill (1802–1869), son of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill and brother of Anna (McNeill) Whistler, who lived in Florida. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
13. This is Dr. George E. Palmer, MD (see Image 32), husband of Catherine (McNeill) Palmer.
14. This is George William Whistler (1822–1869), step-son of Anna (McNeill) Whistler. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s,” Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E, and Images 12–13.
15. This is Donald McNeill Fairfax (1824–1894; see Image 38) of the United States Navy, Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s nephew, son of her sister Isabella Kingsley (McNeill) (c. 1798 – c. 1850) and

- George William Fairfax (1797–1853). See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
16. Mary B. is Mary Brennan, Anna Whistler's servant; Annie is Anna Whistler Palmer; Julie is Julia Palmer; Emma is Emma Woodbridge Palmer. Annie and Julie were the daughters of Catherine (McNeill) Palmer and Dr. George Palmer, MD, while Emma Woodbridge Palmer was Dr. Palmer's daughter by his first marriage. It has not been possible to identify Nellie.
  17. Debo is Deborah (Whistler) Haden (1825–1908 see Images 17–19, 21), step-daughter of Anna (McNeill) Whistler and wife of Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910; see Image 20), English physician and etcher, whose marriage on 16 October 1847 on Preston, Lancashire, is recorded in detail in AWPDP, Part II.
  18. Mary (Brewster) Park was the wife of Rev. Dr. Roswell Park (1807–1869), Episcopalian minister and principal of Christ Church School in Pomfret.
  19. Anna (McNeill) Whistler is referring to Deborah (Whistler) Haden (1825–1908; see Images 17–19, 21), her step-daughter, and hoping that Emma Woodbridge Palmer, Catherine (McNeill) Palmer's step-daughter, will be as wonderful to her step-mother as Deborah has been to Anna Whistler.
  20. This is George William Whistler (1822–1869), Anna (McNeill) Whistler's step-son. See his biography in "The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s," Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E, and Images 12–13.
  21. This is Mary (Ducatel) Whistler (1825–1852), George William Whistler's wife, who died of consumption in February 1852. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  22. This is George Worthen Whistler (1851–1908), son of George William and Mary (Ducatel) Whistler. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  23. This is Joanna (Barry) Ducatel (1800–1873), grandmother of George Worthen Whistler, in whose home he was being raised by her and her daughters. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  24. James Abbott Whistler (1834–1903; see Images 24–29) was attempting to pass the entrance examinations for admittance to the USMA.
  25. This is Professor William Holmes Chambers Bartlett (1804–1893), "professor of natural and experimental philosophy" who - taught science and engineering at the USMA (William R. Livermore, “Biographical Notices: William Holmes Chambers Bartlett,” Proceedings of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, new series, vol. 22; whole series, vol. 30 [Boston: John Wilson and Son for the University Press, 1895], p. 570).

26. This is Alicia Margaret Caroline McNeill (1791–1863), Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s half-sister from her father’s first marriage, to Alice Clunie (1758–1791). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
  27. This is William McNeill Whistler (1836–1900), second son of Anna (McNeill) Whistler, who was an assiduous student. See his biography in “The Whistlers as They Were in the 1840s,” Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E, and Images 27, 30.
  28. This is George E. Palmer Jr. (1843–1909), Anna (McNeill) Whistler’s nephew and son of Catherine (McNeill) and Dr. George E. Palmer, MD. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  29. Eliza was a black servant girl in the employ of Arthur and Kate (Prince) Livermore whom Martha (Kingsley) McNeill and Mary Brennan were attempting, with apparent frustration, to train, so that she could then go back to the Livermores’ home in New Hampshire able to carry out her duties. In describing how she delivered Eliza to Arthur Livermore (Anna Whistler to James Whistler Scarsdale Wednes– evening Nov 16th [18]53, GUL: Whistler Collection, W425), Anna Whistler makes clear that Eliza is black by calling her “our Topsy,” a reference to the orphan slave girl in Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin (1852).
  30. This is Charles Donald Whistler (1841–1843), who died on the Acadia en route to St. Petersburg in August 1843.
  31. This is Kirk Boott Whistler (1838–1842), who died while his father, Major George Washington Whistler, was en route to St. Petersburg.
  32. The first issue of The Child’s Paper, published by the American Tract Society, appeared in January 1852. “It was thought that a cheap, beautiful, and excellent paper for children, introduced into the several neighborhoods they visit, aside from the spontaneous circulation it might receive, would aid in supplying means of instruction and salvation for multitudes who otherwise would remain in comparative ignorance of religious truth” (American Messenger 10, no. 1 [January 1852]: p. 2).

- Anna Whistler raised the issue of subscribing to The Child's Paper in a February letter as well (Anna Whistler to My own dear Jemie Pomfret tuesday night Feb. 10th [1852], with continuation on Wednesday morning 11th, GUL: Whistler Collection, W406).
33. Captain Palmer is a relative of Dr. George E. Palmer, MD, whom it has not been possible to identify further.
  34. Katy Bennett's, according to Anna (McNeill) Whistler, was the agent through which one could subscribe to the American Messenger and other religious newspapers.
  35. This is Dr. Amos Palmer, MD (1827–1861), son of Dr. George E. Palmer and his first wife, Emma (Woodbridge) Palmer (1802–1839).
  36. Anna (McNeill) Whistler's half-sister, Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley (1788–1857; see Image 40) lived in Preston, Lancashire, with her second husband, John Winstanley (1776–1859). See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E. She is called "sister Winny" in this letter.
  37. The Old Corner House (see Image 37) was the home in Stonington, Connecticut, of Dr. George E. Palmer, MD, Catherine (McNeill) Palmer, and the children from both of Dr. Palmer's marriages.
  38. The Winstanleys had just been on a visit to the family of Richard Stuart (1807–1877) Picard of Kirkby Lonsdale. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E and Image 70.
  39. On 11 April 1850, Anna (McNeill) Whistler also wrote to her son James asking that Mary Isabella (McNeill) Rodewald (1823–1867; see Image 32), who was traveling to England, carry a parcel of books to "Mary Smith" of Hope Farm (Anna Whistler to My dearest Jemie Pomfret Thursday. April 11th. 50, GUL: Whistler Collection, W319), but it has not been possible to identify the location or owners of Hope Farm.
  40. It is not possible to say who Mr. Ware is. Margaret (Winstanley) Ware's husband and son had both died in 1843. A photocopy of this part of the letter was not supplied by Josephine Caldwell, only a transcription.
  41. This is Jane Simpson (1790–1852), who lived in the home of Richard Stuart Picard (1807–1877) in Kirkby Lonsdale. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.

42. This is Jane Picard, sister of Richard Stuart Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
43. This is Margaret (Winstanley) Ware (1801–1877), widow of William Ware (1793–1843) and sister of Elizabeth (Winstanley) Picard. See Winstanley ... Cragg in Appendix E.
44. Charles Johnston McNeill (1802–1869), Anna (McNeill) Whistler's brother, lived in Florida on a plantation with his mulatto wife, Eliza (Coffee) McNeill (c. 1828–1898), and their children. His mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, visited them almost annually and supervised the moral, spiritual, and social training of both her daughter-in-law and their children. The explanatory correspondence of Josephine Caldwell, great-granddaughter of Charles Johnston and Eliza (Coffee) McNeill, associated with this joint-letter corroborates Martha (Kingsley) McNeill's success in her efforts, which Anna (McNeill) Whistler, years later, saw living proof of and approved. Josephine Caldwell describes her mother's corroborating description of Martha (Kingsley) McNeill's influence on Caldwell's great-grandmother: "After [Charles Johnston McNeill] died, his wife who was a Coffee ... of St. Augustine, was left to bring up all the children ... My mother does remember her grandmother whom they called 'Nana.' She was very stern and very strict – mother remembering mostly how particular she was about table manners" (Josephine Caldwell to Frederick Coburn, Lowell, MA, 9 January 1950).
45. Mary (Brewster) Park was the wife of Rev. Dr. Roswell Park (1807–1869), Episcopalian minister and principal of Christ Church School in Pomfret.
46. It has not been possible to identify the two German scholars.
47. This is a Russian expression, spelled "Nichego" and pronounced "nyeecheevaw'," meaning "never mind," "it's all right."
48. Aside from the fact that a little child named Willie West had died, I am unable to understand what Anna Whistler was talking about.
49. This may be a reference to Kirk Boott Whistler's grave in Stonington, Connecticut.
50. This is a reference to Dr. George E. Palmer, MD, the husband of Catherine (McNeill) Palmer.
51. This seems to be a reference to Anna Whistler's niece, Martha Fairfax (b. c. 1820), daughter of her sister, Isabella Kingsley

- (McNeill) Fairfax (c. 1798 –1853) and George William Fairfax (1798–1853), and wife of Isaiah Davenport. She was called “Matty.” See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
52. Fred and Mary may be Frederick and Mary (McNeill) Rodewald, son-in-law and daughter of General William Gibbs McNeill (see Image 31) and Maria (Cammann) McNeill, married on 2 April 1850.
  53. This is Donald McNeill Fairfax, a favorite nephew of Anna (McNeill) Whistler, son of her sister, Isabella Kingsley (McNeill) Fairfax and George William Fairfax. See Whistler ... Fairfax in Appendix E.
  54. The Bowers were Ellen Augusta Bowers (1834–1900), Lloyd Henry Bowers (1836–1866), and their father, Captain Perry Bowers Sr. (1794–1870) of Pomfret, Connecticut (GUL: Whistler Collection, W390 and LC: P-W: box 34, fol. 19–20, cited in Toutziari, “Anna Matilda Whistler’s Correspondence,” vol. 2, pt. 1, pp. 266, 272, 273).
  55. This is Emma Woodbridge Palmer (1835–1912), step-daughter of Catherine (McNeill) Palmer.
  56. It has not been possible to identify Nellie.
  57. It has not been possible to identify Aunt Swan.
  58. It has not been possible to identify the Winterley family.
  59. It has not been possible to identify Mr. and Mrs. Willey.
  60. “Russel Donivan” is most likely Russell A. Denison, who “had a cabinet shop and kept a limited stock of furniture” in Stonington in the 1850s (Henry Robinson Palmer, Stonington By the Sea [Stonington, CT: Palmer Press, 1913], p. 67).

APPENDIX J

POSSIBLE SKETCH OF JOHN STEVENSON MAXWELL

I strongly believe that the image on page 52 of James Whistler's St. Petersburg Sketchbook in MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 9, is John Stevenson Maxwell. After Maxwell left Russia permanently in November 1844, he traveled extensively. In Greece, he spent Christmas Day 1844 in the home of Rev. John Henry Hill, who, together with his wife, Frances (Mulligan) Hill, ran a school in Athens for Greek boys and a second one for Greek girls. Reverend Hill asked him whether he was related to his friend of college days, Hugh Maxwell, because his resemblance to the latter was so great (John S. Maxwell to Mrs. Hugh Maxwell, Trieste, Monday, December 16, 1844; entry for Thursday, December 26, N-YHS: Maxwell Papers, no. 49). Comparing the drawing in the Catalogue Raisonné to Image 55 in this volume, a portrait of Hugh Maxwell painted in 1844, I think that he and the man wearing a hat (as well as the profile image beside it) in the Catalogue Raisonné, greatly resemble one another.

James had actually also drawn a pencil portrait of Maxwell, who reminded Major Whistler that he, Maxwell, had it in his possession, and that James would have to make an oil portrait of him some day (John S. Maxwell to George W. Whistler New York. Monday. December 13. 1846 – N-YHS: Maxwell Papers). The whereabouts of this pencil drawing or of an oil portrait of Maxwell are unknown to me.

IMAGES

Most of the images contained herein are in the public domain. For those which are not, every effort has been made to identify and receive permission from copyright holders. Some images, while in the public domain, have been reproduced from published works; these have been identified in the bibliographic details that follow the image captions.

Images have been chosen on the following basis: persons, places, events, and objects actually recorded in the diaries as having been met, visited, attended, owned, or seen by Anna Whistler; recorded in the diary of a journey made to Edinburgh by Anna Whistler's half-sister, Eliza Winstanley (see Appendix D); referred to in the introductory material; and referred to in the biographies of friends, family, and acquaintances contained in Appendix E.

Every effort has been made to locate images of individuals presented in this volume, but I was unable to find images of a number of Anna Whistler's acquaintances that I would have liked to include, for example John Stevenson Maxwell.<sup>1</sup> At times, the images are of poorer quality than I would have liked, but I have chosen to include them nonetheless, as they are often the only known – or the best available – image of these individuals.

In selecting images, research was focused firstly on images of the 1840s, secondly on images of the 1830s and 1850s, and then for images beyond the 1850s. My preference was first for photographs; then for artists' original depictions held by museums; then for illustrations of artists' works recorded in printed sources. Dates for images are recorded in the bibliographic details below each image.

The images presented are grouped according to the following categories: Anna McNeill Whistler's extended family; the Whistlers' lives in the United States; images associated with Eliza Winstanley's diary, which Anna Whistler read; Anna Whistler's journey to St. Petersburg with her family in 1843; the city of St. Petersburg, including the Bobrinskii House, in which the Whistlers lived, and the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts and James Whistler's experiences there; other artists, musicians, scientists, and literary figures; Major Whistler's work colleagues on the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway and at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works; friends and associates of the Whistlers in St. Petersburg; other significant persons and personages – many of them St. Petersburg residents who were part of the Whistlers' world – including members of the military, diplomats, nobility, and other foreign visitors to St. Petersburg, such as dentist Dr. Edward Maynard, who fixed Whistler family members' teeth; daily Russian life, ranging from peasant games to religious festivals; the environs of St. Petersburg; the Imperial family; places and images associated with Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, whose death had a strong impact on both the Russian and the foreign communities in St. Petersburg; Anna Whistler and her children's trip to Germany and England in the summer of 1847, which culminated in Debo's wedding; and Anna Whistler and her children's trip to Copenhagen, England, and the Isle of Wight in the summer of 1848.

By including these images, I hope to further increase my readers' understanding of St. Petersburg in the 1840s, in which Anna Whistler lived and wrote her diaries. Once again, I wish to express my gratitude for the gracious permissions given by those who were approached as contributors.

NOTE

1. Possible sketches of John Stevenson Maxwell can be found in MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 9. For more information, see Appendix J.

ANNA MCNEILL WHISTLER'S EXTENDED FAMILY

IMAGE 1

Anna Whistler in St. Petersburg in 1845

Thomas Wright (1792–1849). Anna Whistler. 1845. Pencil and watercolor.  $6\frac{5}{8} \times 4\frac{1}{2}$  in. (16.9 x 10.6 cm). Signed “Tho<sup>s</sup>. Wright,” and in Russian characters “Райт” (“Rait”), 1845. Hunterian Art Gallery, University of Glasgow (GLAHA:54135); bequeathed by Rosalind Birnie Philip, 1958.

IMAGE 2

In September 1865, Anna Whistler, accompanied by James and Willie, traveled to Coblenz, Germany, to see an eye specialist.

Photograph of Anna Whistler. 1860s. Albumen print. 9 x 5.6 cm; mounted on card, 10.4 x 6 cm. Imprint on mount: "F. Weisbrod, Photograph, Bleichstrasse 70, Frankfurt a. M. Between summer 1864 and autumn 1865"; inscribed on verso: "Anna M. Whistler." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH 1/56.

IMAGE 3

James Whistler created this etching of Anna Whistler standing in 1871.

James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903). Whistler's Mother. 1871. Drypoint on paper. 25.2 x 15.3 cm. Freer Gallery of Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (F1903.252).

IMAGE 4

This portrait of Anna Whistler, seated, was executed by James Whistler, also in 1871.

James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903). Arrangement en gris et noir no. 1 [Arrangement in Grey and Black No. 1, also called Portrait of the Artist's Mother], 1871. Oil on canvas. 56.8 x 63.9 in. (144.3 x 162.4 cm). Musée d'Orsay, Paris (RF 699).

IMAGE 5

Brouet seems to be imagining Anna Whistler in the 1830s–1840s in private, with her hair falling loosely.

Auguste Brouet (1872–1941). La Mère de Whistler [Whistler's Mother]. 1900–1910. Etching and drypoint. Artist's proof, signed. 9¼ x 7 in. David Barnett Gallery, Milwaukee, WI (G.261).

IMAGE 6

Anna Whistler's handwriting from the diaries

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord" they rest from their labours & their works do follow them" etc.
 "Blessed are they who do the commandments: that they may have right to the tree of life" etc.
 My friend Mr. Barnes also writes much of the happy death of another little daughter of his, Puffy, & promises to send her memoirs written by our dear pastor Mr. Lee of Springfield. He was child of only eight years had the remaining influences of the holy spirit (blessed) and when he was in his infancy the impression of his example was sanctified to be distant the his just left her home as the brides of as each man of the world: & may the example of this believing young wife be sanctified to him: many will regret to be as far from the elevation of her station in this world without considering the temptations it will draw her into to profane pleasures of the world & god pain.
 January 1847
 Status of 23rd of our style being 11th of Russian style. It is three weeks this afternoon since our dear boy came home from school to spend this Russian Christmas & New Year holidays, & now it seems not probable they shall return again to those fondness this winter James was dropping from slow confinement at school & for two days was confined to his bed with slow throat. I came to him to nurse him at night as by day in our hospital the bed chamber & his father took Willie to our room as his bed fellow, but our dear Mr. Willie also was taken ill the second night & that a palmarium communicating with the drawing room improper for an invalid he also was brought to share this & for the benefit of the open fire place our boys were permitted sufficiently well by Christmas eve Russian style (being 5th of our style) to avoid of the invitation they had received from Mr. Morgan to partake of the festivities of the season prepared for her children & their playmates, but the only time was the strongest argument with us to consent, going at five, and returning at eight or nine, gave them as much frolic as they could derive enjoyment from for it was smothered by after suffering. They gradually recovered from their attack & shewed with visible benefit almost daily upon the head, but James (our dear) was on the eve to the bleeding of his ears to spend an hour or two of the early part of the day in the study of his drawing master. Upon the Russian New Year eve Sets & her father January 1847 / Saturday 23rd of our style being 11th of Russian style, AWPDP: Part II.

IMAGE 7

Major George Washington Whistler, before July 1842, and his departure for Russia

W.G. Jackman. Portrait of George W. Whistler. Mid 19th century. Steel engraving on paper.  $6\frac{1}{16} \times 4\frac{7}{16}$  in. (15.4 x 11.2 cm). Freer Gallery of Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (F1907.632).

IMAGE 8

Major George Washington Whistler, before July 1842, and his departure for Russia

Chester Harding (1792–1866). George Washington Whistler. c. 1840–1842. Oil on canvas. 76.2 x 63.5 cm. Hunterian Art Gallery, University of Glasgow (GLAHA:54134); bequest of Joseph Whistler Revillon, 1955.

IMAGE 9

Colin Ingersoll's invitation to Major Whistler's funeral.

Photocopy kindly supplied to E. Harden by Special Collections, Mugar Library, Boston University, in the late 1980s.

IMAGE 10

Mary Roberdeau Swift in about 1820, before she became the wife of Lieutenant George Washington Whistler

Photograph of a miniature of Mary Whistler [Mary Roberdeau Swift Whistler]. 1890s. Platinum print; photograph mounted on card. Inscribed on verso: "To Seymour Haden Esq from Lady Haden" and, in another hand: "Mary Whistler (1804-1827) 1st wife of Geo Washington Whistler, from a portrait." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH 1/141.

IMAGE 11

General Joseph Gardner Swift, brother of Major Whistler's first wife, Mary Roberdeau (Swift) Whistler

Genl. Joseph Gardner Swift, L. L. D. (Ellery, Memoirs of Gen. J.G. Swift, frontispiece)

IMAGE 12

George William Whistler, several years after his marriage to his second wife, Julia DeKay (Winans) Whistler

Andrei ["H."] Denier (1820–1892). Photograph of George William Whistler. c. 1860. Albumen print. 8.7x5.3 cm; mounted on card, 10.4x6 cm. Imprint on mount in Cyrillic: "H. Denier, S. Peterburg"; inscription on verso: "Geo Wm Whistler." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH1/75.

IMAGE 13

George William Whistler wearing a shuba, when a partner in Winans, Whistler and Winans, and living in St. Petersburg

Jean Hoch. Photograph of George William Whistler, in Fur Hat and Coat. Between 1856 and 1869. Silver gelatin print mounted on card. 8.7 x 5.7 cm; card, 9.1 x 5.9 cm. Imprint on mount: "Photographie Jean Hoch, Grande Morskaia, maison Zolotoff no 26, [St Petersburg]. GUL: Whistler Collection, PH1/74.

IMAGE 14

Julius Timoleon Ducatel, father of George William Whistler's first wife, Mary Ducatel

Bulletin of the University of Maryland School of Medicine 1932-1933, vol. 17, no. 4 (April 1933), p. 163

IMAGE 15

Captain James Barry, of whose family Mary Ducatel's mother, Joanna (Barry) Ducatel, was a member

Gilbert Stuart (1755–1828). James Barry. Oil on canvas. 28 $\frac{3}{4}$  x 24 in. (73 x 61 cm). Princeton University Art Museum (y1979-52; artmuseum.princeton.edu).

IMAGE 16

Julia DeKay Winans, sister of Thomas DeKay Winans, before she became the second wife of George William Whistler

Thomas Winans. Photograph of a painting of Julia Whistler by Alfred Jacob Millar, 1847. 1943. Silver gelatin print. Inscription in pencil on verso: "Julia Winans daughter of Ross Winans married Geo. Wm Whistler, eldest son of Geo Washington Whistler. On 28 Dec 1847 Ross Winans paid Alfred J. Miller (portrait painter) $100 each, on a/c, for two portraits one of Miss Julia Winans the other of Madame Celeste Winans (eldest daughter of George Revillon). These photographs were taken in 1943 by Thomas Winans at Shamrock cliff Newport R.I. from the two portraits now owned by Mrs H.A. Prichard (née Lucette Hutton) a grand daughter of Thomas Winans & Celeste Revillon & great grand daughter of Ross Winans. The photographs were taken at the request of Dr J. Hall Pleasants who was anxious to locate the portraits. Alfred Jacob Miller (1810-74) active in Baltimore. Pupil of Thomas Sully." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH 1/133.

IMAGE 17

Deborah Delano (Whistler), Lady Haden, Major George Washington Whistler's only daughter Maingay Family Papers.

IMAGE 18

Deborah at the piano with her daughter Annie, who was born while James Whistler was living in England in 1848

James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903). At the Piano. 1858–1859. Oil on canvas. 26<sup>5</sup>/<sub>8</sub> x 36<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub> in. (67.63 x 93.35 cm). Taft Museum of Art, Cincinnati, OH (acc. no. 1962.7).

IMAGE 19

Deborah reading, with her daughter Annie in the shadows

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). A Lady Reading. 1858. Etching and drypoint. 11.8 x 16.1 cm. (Schneiderman, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 50, plate 10.VI)

IMAGE 20

Francis Seymour Haden, medical doctor and etcher, husband of Deborah (Whistler) Haden

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Portrait of Francis Seymour Haden, no. 2. (while etching). 1862. Etching and drypoint. 19.5 x 26. 7 cm. On bottom right: "F. Seymour Haden Ad Vivam Delineavit.1862." British Museum, London (1910,0421.226).

IMAGE 21

This silhouette by Auguste Edouart bears the inscription: “George W. Whistler, Civil Engineer of Western Railroad, Boston 12th 1842 January and Daughter Miss D. Whistler August 11th 1842.”

Auguste Edouart (1789–1861). George Washington Whistler and Lady Whistler Haden. 1842. Ink, chalk, and cut paper on board. National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC; gift of Robert L. McNeill Jr.

IMAGE 22

Martha (Kingsley) McNeill, Anna Whistler's mother

Samuel Lovett Waldo (1783–1861) and William Jewett (1792–1874). Mrs. Charles (Martha Kingsley) MacNeill. 1834. Oil on wood. 24<sup>1</sup>/<sub>8</sub> x 19<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> in. (61.3 x 49.6 cm). Wadsworth Atheneum Museum of Art, Hartford, CT; bequest of Clara Hinton Gould, 1948.

IMAGE 23

Dr. Daniel McNeill, Anna Whistler's father

Dr. Daniel McNeill. Miniature.

IMAGE 24

James Whistler at the age of nine or ten in St. Petersburg

C.A.F. Fiessler. J. A. M. Whistler. 1844. Watercolor, ink, and pencil on board. 28.1 x 23.3 cm. Inscribed: "v. Natur gemalt v. C.A.F. Fiessler 1844." National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (NPG.95.35).

IMAGE 25

James Abbott Whistler in St. Petersburg at the age of ten

Photograph of James McNeill Whistler. c. 1844. Albumen print. 12 x 8.8 cm. Inscription on verso: "J. McN. Whistler aged abt 10." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH1/93.

IMAGE 26

James Abbott Whistler at about eleven years of age. The artist of this sketch might be James Whistler, but Thomas Wright and Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii have also been proposed.

Portrait of Whistler. 1845 or 1846. Pencil and watercolor on wove paper.  $4\frac{5}{8} \times 3\frac{1}{16}$  in. (11.8 x 7.8 cm). Freer Gallery of Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (F1898.144).

IMAGE 27

James Abbott Whistler and William McNeill Whistler wearing the uniform of Monsieur Jourdan's school

Émile François Dessain (1808–1882). Portrait of J. McNeill Whistler and His Brother William (Dr. William Whistler). 1847. Pastel on paper. 20 $\frac{3}{4}$  x 16 $\frac{1}{4}$  in. (52.7 x 41.3 cm). Freer Gallery of Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (F1904.412a-b).

IMAGE 28

James Abbott Whistler in London, at the age of fourteen

William Boxall (1800–1879). James McNeill Whistler, aged 14. 1848. Oil on canvas. 29½ x 24 in. 75 x 61 cm. Hunterian Art Gallery, Glasgow University; gift from Rosalind Birnie Philip, 1935.

IMAGE 29

Daguerreotype of James Abbott Whistler taken in 1849 in London at the request of Joseph Harrison Jr.

William Edward Kilburn (1818–1891). James Abbott McNeill Whistler (1834–1903).
Daguerreotype. 1847–1849. 7 cm x 4 cm x 1.2 sight. Fogg Museum, Harvard University Art Museums, Cambridge, MA (P1978.93); gift of Dr. John H. Kennard.

IMAGE 30

Daguerreotype of William McNeill Whistler taken in 1849 in London at the request of Joseph Harrison Jr.

William Edward Kilburn (1818–1891). William Whistler (Brother of James Abbott McNeill Whistler). Daguerreotype. 1847–1849. 7 cm x 4 cm x 1.2 sight. Fogg Museum, Harvard University Art Museums, Cambridge, MA (P1978.94); gift of Dr. John H. Kennard.

IMAGE 31

William Gibbs McNeill, Anna Whistler's brother

Photograph of William Gibbs McNeill. 1820s. Silver gelatin print. 14.5 x 9.8 cm; mounted on card, 16.5 x 10.8 cm. Imprint on mount: "Flaglor, instantaneous photographs, S.E. cor. Market and Ninth Sts, San Francisco." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH1/20.

IMAGE 32

Mary Isabella (McNeill) Rodewald, niece of Anna (McNeill) Whistler and daughter of William Gibbs McNeill Mary Isabella (McNeill) Rodewald. Photograph. Wolfgang Rohdewald family archive.

IMAGE 33

Catherine Julia (McNeill) Rodewald, niece of Anna Whistler, daughter of William Gibbs McNeill, and “twin” of Deborah Delano Whistler

Catherine Julia (McNeill) Rodewald. Wolfgang Rohdewald family archive.

IMAGE 34

William Whistler, Major Whistler's brother, in the early 1830s. "[The] portrait was most likely done when Whistler was stationed at Fort Niagara, New York. [The] painting would have come with him when he returned to Fort Mackinac in 1833 and was fort commandant." (Brian S. Jaeschke, registrar of collections and archives, Mackinac State Historic Parks, 5 October 2021)

Grove Shelden Gilbert (1805–1885). Portrait of Major William Whistler. c. 1831. Oil on canvas. 30 x 35 in. Fort Mackinac Soldier Barracks, Mackinac Island, MI; part of the Mackinac State Historic Parks Collection.

IMAGE 35

Joseph Nelson Garland Whistler, son of William Whistler and nephew of Major George Washington Whistler

Joseph N.G. Whistler, 1822–1899. The Artillery Reserve website, accessed 4 October 2021, <http://www.artilleryreserve.org/commanders.html>

IMAGE 36

Dr. George E. Palmer, MD, brother-in-law of Anna (McNeill) Whistler and husband of her sister Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer of Stonington, Connecticut

Dr. George Edwin Palmer, M.D. Courtesy of the Stonington Historical Society, Stonington, CT.

IMAGE 37

The Old Corner House, home of Catherine Jane (McNeill) Palmer and Dr. George E. Palmer, MD, Anna Whistler's sister and brother-in-law, in Stonington, Connecticut

Photograph of Old Corner House, Stonington, Connecticut, home of Palmer family. Silver gelatin print. 9.3 x 11.3 cm; mounted on gilt-edged card, 10.7 x 13.3 cm. GUL: Whistler Collection, PH 1/183; bequeathed by Joseph Whistler Revillon, 30 July 1955.

IMAGE 38

Donald McNeill Fairfax, a favorite nephew of Anna Whistler, and son of her sister Mary Isabella (McNeill) Fairfax

Photograph of Admiral Donald [McNeill] Fairfax. 1858. Albumen print. 9.1 x 5.9 cm; mounted on card, 10.5 x 6.3 cm. Printed at foot of mount: "Entered ... in the year 1861 by J.E. Tilton & Co. in ... District Court of ... Massachusetts"; written on verso: "Sent to Kate R. McDiarmid by the late Mrs Anna Whistler Palmer (Stanton), Stonington, Conn." GUL: Whistler Collection, PH 1/5.

IMAGE 39

Alicia Caroline Margaret McNeill, half-sister of Anna (McNeill) Whistler

James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903). Drawing, Portrait of Aunt Alicia McNeill. 1844. Pencil on cream wove paper.  $4\frac{5}{8} \times 3\frac{11}{16}$  in. (11.7 x 9.3 cm). Inscribed “James to Aunt Kate” and, possibly in another hand, “1844.” inscribed on back of frame, in graphite: “James Mc N. Whistler’s pencil sketch of his Aunt Kate made in Petersburg, Russia at the age of [sic: age missing] and sent to his aunt in Stonington, whose daughter Emma Palmer gave it to me, Katherine S. Dreier.” Cooper-Hewitt Museum, New York (18397263); gift of Mary E. Dreier from the estate of Katherine S. Dreier.

IMAGE 40

Eliza Isabella (McNeill) (Wellwood) Winstanley, half-sister of Anna (McNeill) Whistler

Sir Henry Raeburn (1756–1823). Lady Wellwood. Damaged photograph of portrait. Sold by the Ehrlich Galleries to an American collector.

IMAGE 41

George Philip Cammann, brother of Catherine (Cammann) McNeill, wife of William Gibbs McNeill

Matthew B. Brady & Studio, New York. Dr. Cammann. c. 1860. Carte-de-visite; albumen print photograph.

THE WHISTLERS' LIVES IN THE UNITED STATES

IMAGE 42

View of New York from Brooklyn Heights, where Anna Whistler lived from the age of ten John William Hill (1812–1879), and Lewis Peter Clover (b. 1770). New York from Brooklyn Heights. 1837. Mezzotint. J. Clarence Davies Collection, Museum of the City of New York (MNY15659).

IMAGE 43

Kirk Boott, who was responsible for bringing Major Whistler to Lowell, Massachusetts, to be superintendent of the locks and canals that brought power to the city's cotton-spinning mills

Chester Harding (1792–1866). Kirk Boott (detail). c. 1835. Oil on canvas. 97 x 60 in. (247 x 152.4 cm). City of Lowell, MA.

IMAGE 44

Henry Washington Lee, the Whistler family's pastor when they lived in Springfield, Massachusetts, from 1838 to 1842

J. Gurney & Son, photographers. Henry Washington Lee, Bishop of Iowa. 1863. (The House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States; Photographed from Life during the Triennial Convention by J. Gurney & Son [New York: T. Porter Shaw, 1863], no pagination)

IMAGE 45

Lydia Mason (Morton) Lee, wife of Rev. Henry Washington Lee and close friend of Anna Whistler

Lydia Mason (Morton) Lee in about 1880; courtesy of Susan Alland, great-great-granddaughter of Henry Washington and Lydia (Morton) Lee.

IMAGE 46

The destruction of the Lexington in 1840

Nathaniel Currier (1813–1888). Anful Conflagration of the Steam Boat Lexington in Long Island Sound on Monday Eve, Jan'y 13th, 1840, by which melancholy occurrence, over 100 Persons Perished. 1840. Hand-colored lithograph after a drawing by William Keesey Hewitt (1817–1893). Published in The New York Sun. 8<sup>7</sup>/<sub>16</sub> × 12 in. (21.4 × 30.5 cm). Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, DC (LC-DIG-pga-06100).

IMAGE 47

Oroondates Mauran, father of Josephine Mauran, Deborah Whistler's classmate in New York in 1843

Stockbridge and Mauran, Mauran Family.

IMAGE 48

Oliver Wolcott Gibbs, husband of Josephine (Mauran) Gibbs

“The Progress of Science,” Popular Science Monthly 82, no. 42 (1913), p. 617.

IMAGE 49

Trinity Church in New York, which held its reopening in 1846

John Forsyth and E.W. Mimeo. Trinity Church. 1846. Lithograph. 15½ x 22 in. J. Clarence Davies Collection, Museum of the City of New York (MNY12751).

IMAGE 50

James K. Polk, president of the United States from 4 March 1845 to 4 March 1849

George Peter Alexander Healy (1813–1894). James Knox Polk. 1846. Oil on canvas. 30½ x 25½ in. (77.5 × 64.8 cm). National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (NPG.2019.14); gift of the Trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

IMAGE 51

General Zachary Taylor, commanding general of the U.S. Army in the War with Mexico

James Reid Lambdin (1807–1889). Zachary Taylor. 1848. Oil on canvas.  $30\frac{1}{4} \times 25\frac{1}{8}$  in. (76.8 × 63.8 cm). National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC (NPG.76.7); gift of Barry Bingham, Sr.

IMAGE 52

General-in-chief of the Army, Winfield Scott, whom Nicholas I reminded Major Whistler of in appearance

Robert Walter Weir (1803–1889). General Winfield Scott. c. 1855. Oil on canvas.  $33\frac{3}{4} \times 26\frac{7}{8}$  in. (85.7 x 68.3 cm). Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (acc. no. 10.54; <https://www.metmuseum.org/art/collection/search/13187>); gift of the heirs of William B. Isham, 1910.

IMAGE 53

Anna Margareta (Kunze) Lorillard's death in New York in November 1846 was reported to Anna Whistler.

Anna Margareta Kunze. Photograph (1910) of a portrait in the possession of Hermann H. Cammann. (Henrietta Meier Oakley and J.C. Schwab, Muhlenberg Album [New Haven, CT: Tuttle Press, 1910], no pagination)

IMAGE 54

Agnes (Stevenson) Maxwell, mother of John Stevenson Maxwell

Solomon Nunes Carvalho (1815–1897). Mrs. Hugh Maxwell (c 1790–1866). 1867. Oil on canvas.  $30\frac{1}{4} \times 24\frac{7}{8}$  in. (76.8 x 63.2 cm). New-York Historical Society (ID 1969.53); bequest of Virginia Livingston Hunt.

IMAGE 55

Hugh Maxwell, father of John Stevenson Maxwell

Anton H. Wenzler. Hugh Maxwell (1787–1873). 1844. Oil on canvas. 30 ½ x 25 in. (77.5 x 63.5 cm). New-York Historical Society (ID 1964.35); gift of Wellwood Hugh Maxwell.

IMAGE 56

James Bicheno Francis, a friend and work associate of Major Whistler from Lowell, Massachusetts, who did not appreciate James Whistler as an artist

Richard B. Staigg (1817–1881). Portrait of James Bicheno Francis. 1878. Whistler House Museum of Art, Lowell, MA.

IMAGE 57

Parthenia Pardoe (Babcock) Babcock, Anna Whistler's friend in Stonington, Connecticut, whose baby daughter died in 1846

Photocopy of a photograph provided to E. Harden.

IMAGE 58

The house in Florida belonging to Zephaniah Kingsley, the brother of Anna Whistler's mother, Martha (Kingsley) McNeill Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, p. 159.

IMAGE 59

The house in Florida belonging to Anna Jai Kingsley, the mother of some of the children of Zephaniah Kingsley

Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, p. 160.

IMAGE 60

Map of Zephaniah Kingsley's lands in Florida

Schafer, Zephaniah Kingsley, p. 157.

ELIZA WINSTANLEY'S DIARY

IMAGE 61

Eliza Winstanley was met at Edge Hill Station, Liverpool, in June 1843 by her sister, Alicia, and Isa Johnstone.

Arthur Fitzwilliam Tait (1819–1905). Edge Hill Station. 1848. Lithograph. Printed and published by Bradshaw and Blacklock, London and Manchester.

IMAGE 62

The boat on which Eliza Winstanley was traveling in June 1843 from Liverpool delivered two little girls to their father at Douglas, the main harbor on the Isle of Man.

Douglas, Isle of Man (Brown's Guide to the Isle of Man, 13th ed. [London: Geo. Philip and Son; Liverpool: W.H. Smith and Son, 1897], p. 24)

IMAGE 63

Eliza Winstanley disembarked at Greenock, intending to catch a train to Glasgow.

The Glasgow, Paisley, and Greenock Railway Station, 1841. Lithograph from a painting by T. Carsell. (A. Williamson, Views & Reminiscences of Old Greenock [Greenock, Scotland: J. McKeivie and Sons, 1891]. Courtesy of the British Library (digital record no. 10370.i.3)

IMAGE 64

As the steamer approached Greenock, Eliza Winstanley was struck by the magnificence of Ben Lomond.

John Cousen (1804–1880). Ben Lomond from Inveruglas (Dunbartonshire). 1839. Etching after Thomas Allom (1804–1872). 21.7 x 28.3 cm (trimmed). British Museum, London (1936,0425.4)

IMAGE 65

Eliza Winstanley was equally awestruck by the sight of Ben Nevis.

Ben Nevis. 1873. (The Illustrated London News [Saturday, September 20, 1873], p. 268)

IMAGE 66

In Glasgow, Eliza Winstanley left the steamer, traveling by train to Edinburgh.

William Henry Bartlett (1809–1854). Port Glasgow [Scotland]. c. 1840. Lithograph engraved by J.W. Appleton.  $4\frac{11}{16} \times 7\frac{1}{16}$  in.

IMAGE 67

At the railway station in Edinburgh, Eliza Winstanley transferred to a coach that drove along Princes Street, heading for Portobello.

Joseph Woodfall Ebsworth (1824–1908). Princes Street, Edinburgh Looking West, 10.15 am August, 1847, showing Parade, West of the Institution. 1847.

IMAGE 68

Eliza Winstanley traveled to Portobello, a suburb of Edinburgh, to visit her aunt, Charlotte (Clunie) Biggs, in June 1843.

The Village of Portobello near Edinburgh. c. 1850. Watercolor. 18.2 x 29.1 cm. Museums and Galleries Edinburgh, accessed 20 October 2021, <https://www.edinburghmuseums.org.uk/stories/making-waves-portobello-bathing-pool>

IMAGE 69

Eliza Winstanley was met by her husband John and members of his extended family at Kendal.

Thomas Allom (1804–1872) and W. Le Petit. Kendal, from the Castle. 1833. Engraving. (Thomas Allom, George Pickering et al., Westmorland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland, Illustrated from Original Drawings by Thomas Allom, George Pickering &c., ed. Thomas Rose, 3 vols. [London: H. Fisher, R. Fisher, and P. Jackson, 1832–1835], vol. 2, facing p. 140)

IMAGE 70

Eliza and John Winstanley and members of his extended family traveled together to Kirkby Lonsdale.

Thomas Allom (1804–1872) and S. Lacey. Kirkby Lonsdale Bridge. 1833. Engraving. (Allom, Westmorland, vol. 2, facing p. 82)

IMAGE 71

Meg Merrilies, whom Catherine Peterkin (Aunt Biggs's servant) resembled, is the old gypsy woman in Sir Walter Scott's novel Guy Mannering (1815).

James Thomson (Thompson). Sarah Egerton (née Fisher) as Meg Merrilies in Terry's "Guy Mannering." 1817. Hand-colored stipple engraving; published 1 April 1817 by Clement Chapple after Samuel De Wilde (1751–1832). 11½ x 7½ in. (29.1 x 19 cm) paper size. National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG D10966).

IMAGE 72

Robert Scott Moncrieff was Eliza Winstanley's nephew from her first marriage, to Colonel Robert Wellwood.

Photograph courtesy of Brenda Beech, Robert Scott Moncrieff's great-granddaughter; in ink on verso: "Grandpapa R. Scott Moncrieff"

IMAGE 73

Elizabeth Angel was traveling to London on the Carlisle stage coach; Eliza Winstanley departed the same coach in Kendal.

James Pollard (1792–1867) and S. Rosenberg. The Edinburgh Express. c. 1840. Hand-colored aquatint on card. Printed in England.

IMAGE 74

The coach from Edinburgh to Carlisle stopped at Galashiels.

Galashiels in 1845. (Robert Hall, The History of Galashiels [Galashiels, Scotland: Alexander Walker and Son, 1898], frontispiece)

IMAGE 75

The coach from Edinburgh to Carlisle passed by Netherby Hall.

Thomas Allom (1804–1872) and Joseph Clayton Bently (1809–1851). Netherby, Cumberland. Seat of Sir James Gram, Bart. First Lord of the Admiralty. 1835. Etching.

IMAGE 76

Miss Elizabeth Angel, traveling in the coach from Edinburgh to Carlisle with Eliza Winstanley, was the protégée of the London actor Edward William Elton.

T.C. Wilson. Edward William Elton. c. 1831. Lithograph. National Portrait Gallery, London (D36176).

THE JOURNEY TO ST. PETERSBURG

IMAGE 77

The Acadia, the steamship on which Anna Whistler, George, James, Willie, Debo, Charlie, and Mary Brennan traveled to England in August 1843, on their way to join Major Whistler in St. Petersburg

“The ‘Acadia,’ North American Steamer.” Illustrated London News, March 24, 1849.

IMAGE 78

Jean Robert and Louise Cecilia Poizat, whom Anna Whistler met on the Acadia in 1843

Auguste Edouart (1789–1861). Mr. and Mrs. Poizat, of Philadelphia. 24 July 1843. Silhouette. Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (50.602.884); bequest of Glenn Tilley Morse, 1950.

IMAGE 79

It is possible that members of the Whistler family visited an exhibit of George Catlin's portraits of North American Indians in the Egyptian Hall, Picadilly, when they were in London in 1842 and 1843. Anna Whistler showed a book of Indian portraits to Miss Khremmer in St. Petersburg.

A. McClatchy. Egyptian Hall, Picadilly, London. 1828. Engraving from a drawing by Thomas Hosmer Shepherd (1793–1864). Westminster City Archives, London (D137 021).

IMAGE 80

At least twice during her visits to England (en route to St. Petersburg in 1843 and again in the summer of 1847), Anna Whistler visited with the family of Francis Boott, brother of Kirk Boott.

Eden Upton Eddis (1812–1901). Francis Boott (1792–1863). 1840. Oil on canvas. 29.8 x 24.8 in. (75.7 x 63 cm). Royal College of Physicians, London (X298); gift from the Linnean Society, 1874.

IMAGE 81

The port at Hamburg, to which Anna Whistler and her family sailed from London in September 1843 en route to St. Petersburg

André Durand (1807–1867). Porte de Hamburg. 1839. Lithograph. (Prince Anatole de D emidoff, ed., Album du Voyage Pittoresque et Arch ologique en Russie: Par le Havre, Hambourg, Lubeck, Saint-Petersbourg, Moscou, Nijni-Nowgorod, Yaroslaw et Kasan [Album of a Picturesque and Archeological Journey in Russia, Via Le Havre, Hamburg, Lubeck, Saint-Petersburg, Moscow, Nizhnii Novgorod, Yaroslavl and Kazan], illst. Andr e Durand [Paris: Ernest Bourdin, 1839])

IMAGE 82

Streit's Hotel, where the Whistler family stayed when in Hamburg

Streit's Hotel in Hamburg. Staatsarchiv, Hamburg. (Hering, 150 Jahre Streit's)

IMAGE 83

Lübeck, which Anna Whistler and her family passed through by coach en route from Hamburg to Travemünde on their voyage to St. Petersburg in September 1843

André Durand (1807–1867). Porte d'Holstein. Lübeck. 1839. Lithograph. (de Démidoff, Voyage Pittoresque)

IMAGE 84

The entrance to the port at Cronstadt. The steamer from Travemünde dropped its passengers off at Cronstadt, where they took a “lighter” (a smaller boat, with a lighter draught) to St. Petersburg. The drawing depicts a Baird steamship and what appears to be a bilander or clipper, but no lighter.

André Durand (1807–1867). Entrée de la Rade. Kronstadt. 1839. Lithograph. (de Démidoff, Voyage Pittoresque)

IMAGE 85

The English Church at Cronstadt (adjacent to the British Seamen's Hospital, also shown in this image), where Charles Donald Whistler's corpse was kept in September 1843 until a steamship could take it back to Stonington, Connecticut, for burial

“The British Seamen’s Hospital at Cronstadt,” The Illustrated London News, Supplement, December 29, 1866, p. 645.

THE BOBRINSKII MANSION

IMAGE 86

Count Aleksei Alekseevich Bobrinskii, who owned the mansion on Galernaia Street in which the Whistler family lived from September 1843 to May 1844

Franz Xaver Winterhalter (1806–1873). Portrait of Count Aleksei Bobrinskii. 1844. Oil on canvas. 123 x 93 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-9621).

IMAGE 87

Count Aleksei Alekseevich Bobrinskii's father, Aleksei Grigorievich Bobrinskii, son of Catherine the Great and Prince Grigorii Grigorievich Orlov

Carl Ludwig Christineck (c. 1732 – c. 1793). Portrait of Count Alexey Bobrinsky (1762–1813) as a Child. 1769. Oil on canvas. 74 x 90 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1407).

IMAGE 88

The front gates of the Bobrinskii Mansion on Galernaia Street, in which the Whistler family lived from September 1843 to May 1844

The photographs in Images 88 through 92 were all taken by G.K. Lukomskii c. 1917 and published in G.K. Lukomskii, Staryi Peterburg Progulki po starinnyim kvartalam [Old Petersburg: Walks through the Old Quarters] [Petrograd: Svobodnoe iskusstvo, 1917] as well as in subsequent editions.

IMAGE 89

View of the front of the Bobrinskii Mansion

IMAGE 90

The Bobrinskii Mansion had a walled garden at the side and front with a pavillion.

IMAGE 91

Detail of fencing that was part of the garden wall of the Bobrinskii Mansion as seen from the New Admiralty Canal

IMAGE 92

Back of the Bobrinskii Mansion

IMAGE 93

Garden at the back of the Bobrinskii Mansion

The Garden Façade of the Bobrinský Palace. Courtesy of Stern youth, CC BY-SA 4.0, via Wikimedia Commons, accessed 4 November 2021.

IMAGE 94

The Whistlers lived on the second floor (shown here) of the Bobrinskii Mansion. The reception rooms were on the first (street) floor.

Floorplan of the second floor at the beginning of the 19th century. (Pamiatniki arkhitektury Leningrada 1958, p. 228).

ST PETERSBURG

IMAGES 95, 96

The Customs House, which most travelers found unpleasant

Institute of Russian Literature of the Russian Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House). Photograph. (Saint Petersburg Encyclopedia, accessed 5 November 2021, <http://www.encyspb.ru/object/2804011054?lc=en>)

Customs House interior

Petersburg. Customs House. Mid-1800s. Xylograph. (Lotman and Pogosian, Velikosvetskije obedy, p. 238)

IMAGE 97

Workers clearing the Nevskii Prospekt of snow at night

Louis Julien Jacottet (1806–1880) and Charles Claude Bachelier. Nevskii Prospekt by Moonlight. 1855–1859. Lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). 45 x 63 cm. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 98

The return of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna from Palermo in 1846 was celebrated by a full illumination of the Nevskii Prospekt and adjacent streets.

“A holiday on the Nevskii” (Éleonora Fradkina, Zal Dvorianskogo sobraniia Zametki o koncertnoi zhizni Sankt-Peterburga [The Assembly Hall of the Nobility: Notes on the Concert Life of St. Petersburg] [St. Petersburg: Kompozitor, 1994], no page number)

IMAGE 99

View of the Isaac floating bridge from St. Peter's Square (Senate Square) to Vasilevskii Island, showing St. Isaac's Cathedral, the statue of Peter the Great, and the Synod and the Senate, with the arch leading into Galernaia Street between them Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). View of the Isaac Floating Bridge Senate Square and Isaac Square in Winter. 1830s. Lithograph. Private collection.

IMAGE 100

Equestrian statue of Peter the Great, with a writhing snake being trampled by the horse's hind hooves, and Peter, dressed in a toga, pointing with his right hand

Senate Square. 1850s. Lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). (Lotman and Pogosian, Velikosvetskie obedы, p. 38)

IMAGE 101

View of the English Embankment from Peter's Square, showing the Laval' house on the corner, before construction of the Senate and Synod was begun. Boats on the Neva River: on the right a Baird steamship; center and left, painted gondolas.

View of the English Embankment from Peter's Square. 1826. Lithograph. 34.5 x 49.5 cm. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 102

View of the English Embankment with the English Church visible through the rigging of one of Baird's steamships

Karl Petrovich Beggrov (1799–1875). The English Quay. A Steamship on the Neva River. 1830s. From the cycle of lithographs “Views of Petersburg.” State Tret’iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 103

View showing the middle section of the English Embankment

Ludwig Bohnstedt (1822–1885). View of The English Embankment. Watercolor. 21.7 x 33.4 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-5527).

IMAGE 104

The other end of the English Embankment: on the right, a covered slip; on the left, one of Baird's steamships

Joseph Charlemagne (1782–1861). The English Embankment on the Neva, St. Petersburg. 1858. Pencil and gouache. 30.5 x 42.5 cm. (12 x 16.7 in.). Private collection.

IMAGE 105

View of the St. Petersburg islands and the Neva showing the gaily painted gondolas in the foreground and one of Baird's steamships Timofei Alekseevich Vasiliev (1783–1838). View of Islands in St. Petersburg, Russia. 1820. Oil on canvas. 83 x 114 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1680).

IMAGE 106

Anna Whistler was invited by Timothy Abraham Curtis to see a ship-launching.

E. Anert and I. Carbonier. Covered Slip at the New Admiralty. 1837. (Shtiglits, Promyshlennaiia arkhitektura Peterburga, no page number)

IMAGE 107

Anna Whistler mentioned a mild episode of flooding Neva water appearing in their street.

Flood in St. Petersburg, Russia, on 19 November 1824 (K.E. Rainold, ed., Erinnerungen an merkwürdige Gegenstände und Begebenheiten [Memories of Noteworthy Objects and Occurrences] [Vienna, 1825], facing p. 40)

IMAGE 108

The English Magazine on the left corner of the Nevskii Prospekt and Bol'shaia Morskaia Street

L. Tiunling, English Magazine on the Left Corner of Nevskii Prospekt and Bol'shaia Morskaia. 1830s. Engraving. (A.M. Gordin and M.A. Gordin, Byloi Peterburg Panorama stolichnoi zhizni [Bygone Petersburg: A Panorama of Life in the Capital City][St. Petersburg: Pushkinskii fond, 1995], p. 145)

IMAGE 109

Anna Whistler frequently walked or shopped on elegant animated Bol'shaia Morskaia Street

Bol'shaia Morskaia Street. 1850s. Lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). State Pushkin Museum, Moscow.

IMAGE 110

The English Church on the English Embankment as it would have looked when the Whistlers were communicants there. On the left is the main façade of the building of the church built by Giacomo Quarenghi; on the right is the façade of the building on the Galernaia Street side (architectural plan by F.K. Boltengagan, 1876)

Feodor Karlovich Boltenhagen. Anglican Church (№ 56). 1876. Drawings of the architectural design by Giacomo Quarenghi (1744–1817). (Solovieva, K prichalam, p. 238)

IMAGE 111

A photograph of the English Church on the English Embankment in the early 2000s, with the statues of the lions missing

Anglican Church of Jesus Christ (along the English Embankment). Photograph. Citywalls.ru website, accessed 4 November 2021, <https://www.citywalls.ru/photo7238.html?s=dk570fk659m1av6geneg3hsn47>

IMAGE 112

Rubens's Deposition from the Cross, which hung above the altar of the English Church at the time that the Whistlers were communicants there

Peter Paul Rubens (1577–1640). Deposition from the Cross. 1617–1618. Oil on canvas. 297 x 200 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-471).

IMAGE 113

Like all visitors, Anna Whistler and her party, guests of Colonel Todd, the envoy of the United States, were limited in what they could see of the Winter Palace, because the New Hermitage was being built from 1842 to 1852.

Luigi Premazzi (1814–1891). View of the New Hermitage from Millionnaya Street. 1861. Watercolor. 32.2 x 43.8 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (OP-42894).

IMAGE 114

The Winter Palace, with the entrance to the Jordan Staircase, which Todd's party ascended, visible on the side of the building

Imperial Winter Palace. Mid-19th century. Lithograph. (Perepiska Imperatora Aleksandra II s Velikim Kniazem Konstantinom Nikolaevichem. Dnevnik Velikogo Knaizja Konstantina Nikolaevicha [Correspondence of Emperor Alexander II and Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich. Diary of Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich] [Moscow: Terra, 1994], pp. 24–25)

IMAGE 115

The Jordan Staircase in the Winter Palace

Konstantin Ukhtomsky (c. 1818 – c. 1880). Jordan Staircase. 1866. (A.N. Voronikhina, Vidy zalov Ermitazha i Zimnego Dvortsa [Views of the Salons of the Hermitage and the Winter Palace] [Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1983])

IMAGE 116

View of Alexander (Palace) Square, showing the front of the Winter Palace, with the monument to Alexander I Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). View of Palace Square and the Winter Palace, St. Petersburg. c. 1847. Watercolor. 23.8 x 39.2 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-5515).

IMAGE 117

The Winter Palace during the White Nights of summer

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). Winter Palace by Night. 1857. Watercolor on paper; included in the series of drawings (13 sheets) “Court life in Gatchina in 1859.” 27.6 x 38.9 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (OR-38952).

IMAGE 118

The Admiralty, on Admiralty Square, where the Shrovetide fair was constructed

André Durand (1807–1867). The Admiralty. 1839. Lithograph. (de Démidoff, Voyage Pittoresque)

IMAGE 119

St. Isaac's Cathedral was being built while the Whistlers were in Russia.

Jean Victor Adam (1801–1867). View of St. Isaac's Cathedral in Scaffolding. 1845. Tinted lithograph from a drawing by Auguste de Montferrand (1786–1858). 30.5 x 43.2 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-33095).

IMAGE 120

View of the north façade of St. Isaac's Cathedral from Admiralty Boulevard

Philippe Benois. St. Isaac's Cathedral from Admiralty Boulevard. 1845. Lithograph from a drawing by Auguste Montferrand (1786–1858). 48.5 x 63.5 cm. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 121

Alexander Koritskii told Anna Whistler that he was assisting K.P. Briullov while the latter was painting the cupola frescos and ceiling in St. Isaac's Cathedral in 1843–1847.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Christ in Majesty. 1843–1847. Sketch for a ceiling painting in St. Isaac's Cathedral. Oil on canvas. Tondo, dia. 65 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 122

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Mother of God in Glory Surrounded by Saints. 1843–1847. Initial composition for the plafond of the central cupola of St. Isaac's Cathedral in St. Petersburg. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 123

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). The Evangelist Mark. Sketch for a pendentive painting in St. Isaac's Cathedral. Oil on canvas. 35 x 48 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 124

Karl Briullov. St. John the Divine. 1843–1847. Study for a ceiling painting in the central dome of St. Isaac's Cathedral. Oil on canvas. 53 x 42 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 125

Anna Whistler sometimes attended the evening service at the British and American Congregational Church (British and American Chapel), of which the Gellibrands and Ropeses were communicants.

British and American Congregational Church of St. Petersburg, c. 1890. Photograph. Courtesy of David Whitford, Social Media Manager, Anglican Church in St Petersburg.

IMAGE 126

Kazan Cathedral on the Nevskii Prospekt, to which Deborah Whistler was invited in 1844 to hear the Russian all-night Easter service

Karl Beggrov (1799–1875). Kazan Cathedral, with the Statues of Barclay de Tolly and Koutouzoff. Bibliothèques de Nancy, France (Collection Victor Poiré, Rés. 4276).

IMAGE 127

St. Catherine of Alexandria Roman Catholic Church on the Nevskii Prospekt, where Anna Whistler heard a service on Easter Sunday 1844

P.S. Ivanov. St. Catherine's Roman Catholic Church (detail from Panorama of Nensky Prospekt). 1835. Lithograph from the original drawing by Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). (Saint Petersburg Encyclopedia, accessed 8 November 2021, <http://www.encspb.ru/object/2855696190?lc=en>)

IMAGE 128

The Dutch Reformed Church on the Nevskii Prospekt, in which Anna Whistler attended a funeral service for Wilhelmina Elizabeth (Funck) Grooten in December 1846

The Building of the Dutch Church on Nensky Prospekt. 1850s. Lithograph tinted with watercolor. 32 x 51.5 cm.

IMAGE 129

St. Peter's Lutheran Church (sometimes called St. Peter and Paul Lutheran Church) on the Nevskii Prospekt, in which Major Whistler and Debo may have heard the testing of a new organ

Alfred Lorenz. Lutheran Church of St. Peter and Paul in St Petersburg, c. 1860–1879. Photograph on card. (Travel Cultura, accessed 8 November 2021, <https://travelcultura.com/petrikirche-mystery-hidden-behind-the-facades/>)

IMAGE 130

Peter and Paul Fortress Church, where the Imperial dead are interred, which Anna Whistler took Mary Brennan, Willie, and John Bouttatz to visit in July 1846

André Durand (1807–1867). Sts. Peter and Paul Church in the Fortress. 1839. Lithograph. (de Démidoff, Voyage Pittoresque)

IMAGE 131

The Church in Honor of the Celebration of the Annunciation to the Most Holy Mother of God was being built not far from the Bobrinskii mansion.

Jean-Louis Jacotet (1806–1880) and Charles Claude Bachelier (fl. c. 1832–1885). View of Blagoveshchenskaya (Annunciation) Square. c. 1850. Colored lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). 44.5 x 61 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-7522).

IMAGE 132

Alexander (Palace) Square with the arch of the General Staff Headquarters building, showing the ceremonial entry of Princess Alexandra of Sachsen-Altenburg into St. Petersburg to be betrothed to His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich in 1847

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). The Ceremonial Ride in Palace Square. 1840s. Watercolor. 20.5 x 29.5 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-6418).

IMAGES 133, 134

Anichkov Palace, to which the Imperial family retreated during Lent

Joseph Andreas Weiss. (1814–1887). View of the Anichkov (Nikolai) Palace in St Petersburg. 1843. Watercolor. 22.6 x 22.3 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (OR-24064).

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). View of the Anichkov Palace from the Fontanka River. 1838. Watercolor on paper. 23.2 x 38.2 cm. State Pushkin Museum, Moscow.

IMAGE 135

The Michael (Mikhailovskii) Palace, the home of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Nicholas I, in St. Petersburg

Palace of G<sup>d</sup> Duke Michael. 1850s. Lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). State Pushkin Museum, Moscow.

IMAGE 136

Maria (Mariinskii) Palace, the home of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna, eldest daughter of Nicholas I, and of her husband, His Imperial Highness Duke Maximilian-Eugene-Jozef-August-Napoleon Leuchtenberg

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). View of the Mariinskii Palace from the Blue Bridge. 1840s. Watercolor. 24.9 x 37.3 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-5512).

IMAGE 137

The Horse Guards Manege, the Imperial indoor riding range

Gaubert. The Horse Guards Manege, 1834. From a drawing by Alexey Gornostaev (1808–1862). State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg. (Manege Central Exhibition Hall, accessed 30 October 2021, <https://manege.spb.ru/en/about/>)

IMAGE 138

One of the many reviews of the Horse Guard that Anna Whistler, James, and Willie saw during their time in St. Petersburg Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). Parade of the Horse-Guard Regiment near the Manege. 1840s. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-5569). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 139

The Corps of Pages, in which Nicholas I is said to have offered to educate James and Willie after Major Whistler's death, was housed in this building.

Agafon Avnatomov (1816–1893) and Nikolai Broese. His Imperial Majesty's Page Corps. 1858. Lithograph with watercolor; from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). 43.3 x 61.2 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-6124).

IMAGES 140, 141, 142

The Whistlers left Russia in May 1849 after the death of Major Whistler and did not see the completed Annunciation Bridge.

Jean-Louis Jacottet (1806–1880) and Regeme. Annunciation (Nicholas) Bridge. c. 1850. Lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). (A.L. Punin, Arkhitektura Peterburga serediny XIX veka [St. Petersburg Architecture of the Mid-Nineteenth Century] [Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1990], p. 291)

Jean-Louis Jacottet (1806–1880) and Regeme. Annunciation (Nicholas) Bridge from the English Embankment. c. 1850. Tinted lithograph from a drawing by Joseph Charlemagne (1824–1870). (Saint Petersburg Encyclopedia, accessed 20 January 2022, <http://www.encyspb.ru/object/2855715447?lc=en>)

Detail of the railing of the Annunciation Bridge cast by the Baird Iron Works (Bowles, "From the Banks of the Neva," p. 75)

IMAGE 143

The interior of the Baird Iron Works that cast railings and statues and built steamships for Neva traffic. Anna Whistler did not like the kind of subsequent wealthy and extravagant social life its profits afforded Mrs. Baird, and tried to avoid accepting her invitations.

An interior view of the Baird works (Bowles, "From the Banks of the Neva," p. 71)

IMAGE 144

The Whistlers left Russia in May 1849 after the death of Major Whistler and did not see the completed St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway Passenger Station.

A. Pettsol't. St. Petersburg Passenger Station of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. 1851. Watercolor.

IMAGE 145

In 1845, Anna Whistler, Major Whistler, and Debo attended a charity concert for orphans under the patronage of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna held in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility

Building of the Assembly Hall of the Nobility on Novo-Mikhailovskaia Street. (Bozherianov, Nenskiĭ Prospekt, vol. 2, p. 424)

IMAGE 146

Anna Whistler, Major Whistler, and Debo attended an annual charity event for invalids of the Napoleonic Wars held in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility

Ball in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility. (Fradkina, Zal Dvorianskogo sobraniia)

IMAGE 147

Smol'nyi Institute for the Education of Young Noblewomen, where Deborah Whistler heard Clara Schumann play

Ferdinand-Victor Perrot (1808 –1841). View of the Smolny Convent. 1841. Watercolored lithograph on paper. 41.5 x 57.5 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-20120).

IMAGE 148

The Summer Palace was located in the Summer Garden, where James and Willie, when pupils of Monsieur Jourdan's school, played.

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). View of the Palace of Peter I [the Great]. 1833. Lithograph. Russian National Library, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 149

Anna Whistler took her half-sister Alicia McNeill to the residence of Count Benkendorf near the Summer Garden to get a ticket of residence.

K.K. Schultz. Café in the Summer Garden. c. 1845. Lithograph from an original by Johann Jacob Meyer (1787–1858). (Johann Jacob Meyer, Vues pittoresque des palais et jardins impériaux aux environs de St. Petersburg; Dessinés d'après nature par J. Meyer et lithographiés par Schultz [St. Petersburg: Velten, 1845–1855])

IMAGE 150

A ticket of residence was required for all visitors to St. Petersburg.

A ticket-of-residence (printed in Russian, English, French, and German). (Bozherianov, Nevskaia Prospekt, vol. 2, p. 423.

IMAGE 151

Mansion of Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev, from a window of which, not facing the Neva river, Ellen Harriet (Hall) Ropes saw a review Luigi Premazzi (1814–1891). House of G.G. Kushelev. 1840s. Watercolor on paper.

IMAGES 152, 153

The Exchange, to which merchants such as William Hooper Ropes went daily to conduct their firms' business, was situated on the Spit of Vasilievskii Island.

Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (1817–1900). Evening on the Neva. The Spit of Vasilievskii Island. 1847. Oil on canvas. 81 x 116 cm. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

The Spit of Vasilievskii Island, Petersburg Port. Lithograph after a drawing by F. Perrot. (Lotman and Pogosian, Velikosvetskie obedы, p. 76).

THE IMPERIAL ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS

IMAGE 154

View of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts from the Neva River in the 1830s, after the installation of the two sphinxes

Pyotr Ivanov. View of the Academy of Arts, Two Sphinxes Decorating the New Landing Place on the Neva Embankment. 1830s. Lithograph from a drawing by Vasily Sadovnikov (1800–1879). 28 x 35 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-30526).

IMAGE 155

Landing dock at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, which James attended in irregular fashion

Ferdinand Victor Perrot (1808–1841). Landing Stage at the Academy of Fine Arts. 1841. Lithograph tinted with watercolor. 26.5 x 44.5 cm. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 156

The staircase in the entrance hall of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts

Ivan Alekseevich Ivanov (1779–1848). Main Staircase of the Academy of Fine Arts. 1830. 106 x 88 cm. Oil on canvas. Museum of the Russian Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 157

A student copying in the Second Antique Gallery of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts

Grigory Karpovich Mikhailov (1814–1867). Second Antique Gallery in the Academy of Fine Arts. 1836. Oil on canvas. 138 x 170.5 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 158

Professor Karl Pavlovich Briullov, mentor to Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, James Whistler's private drawing teacher, in the life class at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in 1844

Aleksei Filippovich Chernyshev (1824–1863). K. Briullov in the Life Class at the Academy of Fine Arts. 1844. (Kornilova, Karl Briullov, unnumbered pages between pp. 128 and 129)

IMAGE 159

A page from the registry book showing that Ticket no. 355 was issued “to James Whistler, son of an American” (“Iakovu Uisleru synu Amerikantsa”) to attend drawing classes at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, and that nine rubles were paid for the ticket on 26 March [7 April] 1845 received by Koritskii (James’s private drawing teacher) that day (“26 Mart. 9. Poluchil Koritskii”).

Имя и фамилия	Вид билетов	Класс	Классификация
354 Георгий Уислеров сын американец	—	26 Март 9.	получил Уислеров
355 Яков Уислеров сын американец	—	26 Март 9.	получил Коритский
Учредитель Императорской Академии Художеств 1784 Михаил Акимович			Данная сумма в размере 9 руб. получена от Уислера 26 Март 1845 г.
356 Александр Акимович Уислеров сын	—	9. Апр. 9.	получил Уислеров

RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 734, fol. 18v. Kniga o vydache biletov raznym litsam poseshchajushchim Risoval'nye klassy IAKh za 1845 g. i 1846 g. [Book concerning the issuing of tickets to various persons attending drawing classes at the IAFA in 1845 and 1846]. Entry for James Whistler.

IMAGE 160

A page from the registry book showing that the holder of ticket no. 355 was James Whistler, who lived in Ritter's house on the English Embankment ("Uisler (Iakov) v dome rittera na Angliiskoi naberezhnoi")

102	Хитровъ Детская школа Старый мостъ Кол.	—	въ Петербургѣ на набережной Князя Александра
174	Училище Губернское	—	на набережной въ Петербургѣ у Мухоморова
957	Училище де сиротъ	—	въ Петербургѣ на набережной
355	Училище (школа)	—	въ доме г-на Уислера на набережной

RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 733, fol. 31r. Kniga dlia zapisi biletov, vydavaemykh uchashchimsia na poseshchenie risoval'nykh klassov na 1845 g. [Book for registering tickets issued to pupils to attend drawing classes in 1845]. Entry for James Whistler.

IMAGE 161

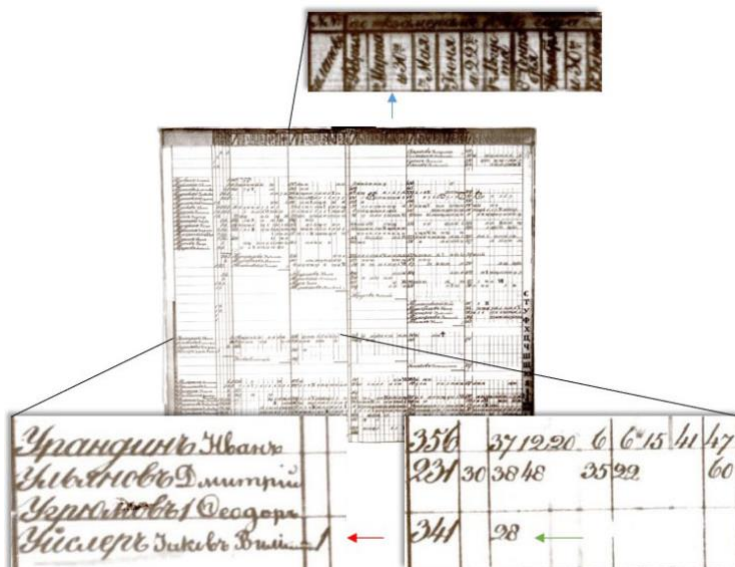

A page from the registry book showing that the holder of ticket no. 341 was William Whistler, son of a Major in American service 18 Feb. 9 r [rubles] received by A. Koritskii ("Villiamu Uisleru synu Amerikanskoi sluzh. Maiora 18 Fevr. 9r. Poluchil A. Koritskii")

340.	Евгению Бобринскому затем - на имя сына 1 рубл.	18 февр.	9.	Коритский Бобринский
341.	Вильямусу Уилеру сыну Американской службы Майора	18 февр.	9.	Коритский А. Коритский
342.	Николаю Георгиевичу сыну офицера, сына подполковника Московского полка	18 февр.	9.	Коритский И. Коритский
343.	Ивану Ивановичу Кареевичу Горбачеву.	18 февр.	9.	И. Кареевич
344.	Ивану Ивановичу Горбачеву затем - на имя сына	18 февр.	9.	Коритский И. Коритский
345.	Владимиру Григорьевичу Горбачеву затем - на имя сына	18 февр.	9.
346.	Петру Ивановичу Волкову затем - на имя сына	18 февр.	9.	Коритский И. Коритский
347.	Константину Ивановичу Горбачеву	18 февр.	9.	Анна де Латвицкая
348.	Александрю Кернелю сыну подполковника	18 февр.	9.	Коритский И. Коритский
349.	Николаю Ивановичу Горбачеву затем - на имя сына	18 февр.	9.	Коритский

RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 734. Kniga o vydache biletov raznym litsam poseshchaiushchim Risoval'nye klassy IAKh za 1845 g. i 1846 g. [Book concerning the issuing of tickets to various persons attending drawing classes at the IAFA in 1845 and 1846], fol. 40r. Entry for William Whistler.

IMAGE 162

This list of Academy pupils consists of six columns. In the first column, the last name in the list of four beginning with the letter “Y” says “Uisler Jakov Vil[iam?] (identified by the red arrow), which is in English “Whistler James William.” In the third column, Willie’s ticket number (341) and his grade on the examination (28) are shown (identified by the green arrow). At the top of the page, the date of the examination (3 March) is shown (identified by the blue arrow).

RGIA: Fond 789, op. 19, d. 735, fol. 140v. Spisok uchenikov Akademii Koim vydany bilety dlia poseshcheniia klassov s pokazaniem poluchennykh imi na èkzamenakh medalei. S 1845 po 1849 g. [List of Academy pupils to whom tickets were issued to attend classes, showing the medals received by them on examinations. From 1845 through 1849].

IMAGE 163

Neoclassical drawing made by James while attending the lowest level drawing course (taught by Vistelius) at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts. Written on the top right in Russian is “Vistelius””; on the bottom right “Visler”; below that, someone has written in English “James Whistler.” This drawing was once owned by the Winans family.

James Abbott Whistler (1834–1903). Woman's head. Pencil on beige wove paper. 44.3 x 30.4 cm (17<sup>7</sup>/<sub>16</sub> x 11<sup>15</sup>/<sub>16</sub> in.). (MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 11)

IMAGE 164

Pencil and watercolor drawing on page 39 of James Whistler's St. Petersburg Sketchbook, 1844–1848, inscribed "Render Unto Ceasar the Things that are Ceasar's [sic]"

James Abbott Whistler (1834–1903). Render Unto Ceasar the Things that are Ceasar's. Pencil and watercolor. St. Petersburg Sketchbook, 1844–1848, p. 39. Hunterian Art Gallery, University of Glasgow, Scotland. (MacDonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 7)

IMAGE 165

Pencil drawing on page 11 of James Whistler's St. Petersburg Sketchbook, 1844–1848 of two Russian men in working garb

James Abbott Whistler (1834–1903). Two Russians in Working Dress. St. Petersburg Sketchbook, p. 11. Hunterian Art Gallery, University of Glasgow, Scotland. (Macdonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 5)

IMAGE 166

James's sketch inside a book cover

James Abbott Whistler (1834–1903). Drawings in a French Grammar: Head of a Man with Curly Hair. 1843–1845. Signed “J.A.W.” Glasgow University Library, Glasgow, Scotland. (Macdonald, Catalogue Raisonné, p. 2)

IMAGE 167

Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, James Whistler's private drawing teacher in St. Petersburg, as he appeared in 1846

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of Koritskii, Pupil of K.P. Briullov. 1846. Graphite pencil on paper; on a sheet with other drawings. 22.8 x 28.7 cm. Signed on bottom center in ink: Karl Briullov 1846; inscribed top center in ink: "Portrait of K.P. Briullov's pupil Koritskii." State Tre't'iakov Gallery, Moscow (inv. no. 9967).

IMAGE 168

Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, James Whistler's private drawing teacher, as he appeared in October 1860

Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, Junior Assistant to the Curator, Court Councilor (7th grade). 1860. Photograph. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ORDF-OP-1-20). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGES 169, 170

Cartoons of James Whistler's private drawing teacher, Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, by Karl Briullov, 1843–1847

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of Alexander Koritsky. 1843–1844. Cartoon. Italian pencil on paper. 19.8 x 29.5 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (P–2217).

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Alexander Koritsky Sitting at a Table. 1843–1847. Cartoon. Italian pencil on paper. 19.8 x 30 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (P–97).

IMAGE 171

Koritskii's Napoleon, drawn in James's sketchbook in 1847

Alexander Osipovich Koritskii (1818–1866). Napoleon Bonaparte. In James McNeill Whistler, St. Petersburg Sketchbook, p. 23. Hunterian Art Gallery, University of Glasgow, Scotland. "Signed illegibly, 'A [Koritskii] 1847- March 17. -'" (Macdonald, Catalogue Raisonné, pp. 4, 5)

IMAGE 172

In March–April 1845, Koritskii presented his oil study on the subject of Vulcan Forging the Arms of Achilles in the Presence of Thetis (Vulkan kuet oruzhie Akhillesu v prisutstvii Fetidy) assigned to him by the Academy Council in the program set for the small gold medal in the category of history painting

Alexander Osipovich Koritskii (1818–1866). Vulcan Forging the Arms of Achilles in the Presence of Thetis. 1845. Oil on canvas. 27.4 x 32.2 cm. Inscribed lower right: “A. Koritskii. In the collection of S.A. Bakhrushin until 1920, when it entered the collection of the Tretyakov Gallery.” State Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow (inv. no. 4761).

IMAGE 173

Karl Briullov's self-portrait in oil, painted in 1848

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Self-Portrait. 1848. Oil on cardboard. 64.1 x 54 cm (25.2 x 21.2 in.). State Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow (inv. no. 5051).

IMAGES 174, 175

In late 1848, Koritskii told Anna and Major Whistler that he was now going daily to the Hermitage and copying works painted by K.P. Briullov hanging in the study of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Italian Morning, 1823. Oil on canvas. Kunsthalle, Kiel, Germany.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Italian Noontday. 1827. Oil on canvas. 21.6 x 25.1 in. (55 x 64 cm). State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (Zh-5079).

IMAGE 176

In late 1848, Anna Whistler wrote James that Koritskii had told her and Major Whistler that Briullov was “at present painting a beautiful group, three nuns at the organ, one playing, the others singing in deep devotion!”

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). The Nuns of the Monastery of the Sacred Heart in Rome Singing at the Organ. 1849. Oil on canvas. 53.4 x 76.3 cm. State Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow (Zh-722). On the reverse side of the canvas in the lower left corner is inscribed: “This picture was painted by Karl Briullov in 1849 and presented by him as a gift to Countess Sofiia Osipovna Shuvalova. Flowers were brought to him by Countess Shuvalova and he painted them” (see Èsfir Atsarkina, “Maloizvestnye proizvedeniia K. Briullova” [“Little-Known Works by K. Briullov”], Iskusstvo 3 [1950], pp. 64–71).

IMAGE 177

A number of unfinished versions of Sleeping Juno (the Origin of the Milky Way) by Karl Briullov exist.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Sleeping Juno. 1840s. Oil on canvas. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Sleeping Juno and a Parca with the Infant Hercules (the Origin of the Milky Way). 1840s. Oil on canvas. 52.5 × 67.1 cm. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 178

James was too ill to attend the exhibition of marine paintings by Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii in February–March 1847 at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts that Anna Whistler described.

Alexey Vasilevich Tyranov (1808–1859). Portrait of Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii. 1841. State Treŭiakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 179

Peter I at Krasnaia Gorka Lighting a Bonfire on the Shore as a Beacon to His Foundering Ships, lent from the Imperial collection, was included in the Aivazovskii exhibition at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in February–March 1847.

Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (1817–1900). Peter I at Krasnaia Gorka Lighting a Bonfire on the Shore as a Beacon to His Foundering Ships. 1846. Oil on canvas. 223 x 235 cm. State Tre'tiakov Gallery, Moscow (Zh-5879).

IMAGES 180, 181, 182

Anna Whistler described having seen, in the Aivazovskii exhibit, delightful smaller views of Odessa, Constantinople, and other seaports

View of Odessa [Odessa in Moonlight]. 1846. (48 x 78.4 in. (122 x 190 cm). Oil on canvas. Signature and date bottom right. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (F-2201).

Constantinople by Evening Light. 1846. Oil on canvas. 47.2 x 74.4 in. (120 x 189 cm). Cottage Palace, Peterhof.

View of Constantinople by Moonlight. 1846. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 183

From June 1853 until his death, Koritskii served as junior assistant to Fyodor Antonovich Bruni, director of the Second Department of the Hermitage. The Second Department encompassed paintings, drawings, sculpture, porcelain, and bronze and bone objects.

Fyodor Moller (1812–1874). Portrait of Fyodor Bruni. 1840. Oil on canvas. 73 × 59 cm. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 184

Anna Whistler was impressed by the faces that she thought she saw beaming with faith in Bruni's painting The Brass Serpent in the permanent collection of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts in March-April 1847.

Fyodor Antonovich Bruni (1799–1875). The Bronze Serpent. 1841. Oil on canvas. 565 x 852 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (Z-5070).

IMAGE 185

Faddei Antonovich Goretskii, along with their mentor K.P. Briullov, was present in December 1846 / January 1847 when Koritskii was drawing the portrait of “the American,” and therefore was aware of the latter’s identity.

Faddeus Antonovich Goretsky (1825–1868). Photograph. Russian Academy of Arts, accessed 22 February 2022, https://rah.ru/the\_academy\_today/the\_members\_of\_the\_academie/member.php?ID=52703

LITERATURE, MUSIC, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS

IMAGE 186

Ivan Andreevich Krylov, fabulist, who died in St. Petersburg in November 1844

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of Ivan Krylov. 1839. Oil on canvas. 102.3 x 86.2 cm. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 187

Fyodor Mikhailovich Dostoevskii, whose first novel, Poor People, appeared in 1846

Konstantin Trutovskii (1826–1893). Portrait of Fyodor Michailovich Dostoevskii. 1847. Pencil drawing on paper. 9.8 x 7 in. (25.1 cm x 18 cm). State Literature Museum, Moscow (KP-35716/436).

IMAGE 188

Vissarion Grigorievich Belinskii, literary critic, who died in St. Petersburg in June 1848

N. Noskov. (V.G. Belinskii 1811–1911 s risunkami i portretami russkikh pisatelei [V.G. Belinskii 1811–1911, With Drawings and Portraits of Russian Writers] [St. Petersburg, 1911], frontispiece)

IMAGE 189

Reverend Legh Richmond, whose edifying tales of English village life James and Willie Whistler read William Finden (1787–1852). Legh Richmond. 1833. Stipple engraving after Joseph Slater published 1 May 1833 by R.B. Seeley & W. Burnside. National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG D8354).

IMAGE 190

Elizabeth Rigby, Lady Eastlake, whose book Letters from the Shores of the Baltic, which included a record of her sojourn in St. Petersburg, Anna Whistler had read before coming to Russia Lady Elizabeth Rigby Eastlake, Journals and Correspondence of Lady Eastlake; Edited by her Nephew, Charles Eastlake Smith; with Facsim. of Her Drawings and a Portrait, 2 vols. [London: John Murray, 1895], vol. 1, frontispiece).

IMAGE 191

Anna Whistler read and quoted from Dr. John Wilson's memoir of his wife Margaret (Baine) Wilson, both missionaries in India.

D. Macnee and J. Horsburgh. Margaret Wilson. 1827. Etching. (Wilson, Memoir of Margaret Wilson, frontispiece)

IMAGE 192

Sir Roderick Impey Murchison, English geologist, who personally delivered a copy of his book on Russian geology to Nicholas I just after the death of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna

W. Walker. Sir Roderick Impey Murchison. 1851. Mezzotint from an 1849 portrait by Henry Willam Pickersgill (1782–1875). Wellcome Collection. Wellcome Library no. 7095i.

IMAGE 193

Dr. Edward Jenner, discoverer of the process of vaccination, to whom Charlotte Leon was purported to be related James Henry Lynch. Edward Jenner. c. 1827 (c. 1809). Lithograph published by Charles Heald Thomas, after Sir Thomas Lawrence (1769–1830); printed by Kell Brothers. National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG D21545).

IMAGE 194

Andrei Ivanovich Shtakenshneider, favorite architect of Nicholas I from the 1840s until the latter's death

N.Terebenev. Andrei Shtakenshneider. 1854. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 195

Aleksei Fyodorovich L'vov, director of the Imperial Chapel Choir, which moved Anna Whistler to tears

Alexey Vassilievich Tyranov. Aleksei Fyodorovich Lvov, Composer. Oil on canvas. 46 x 38 cm (18.1 x 14.9 in.). Samara Art Museum, Russia.

IMAGE 196

Antonio Tamburini, baritone soloist of the Italian Opera in St. Petersburg, whom the Whistlers heard sing in 1845 at the annual performance celebrating the defeat of Napoleon

Antonio Tamburini, Baritone of the Italian Opera in St. Petersburg. Institute of Russian Literature of the Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House), St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 197

Giovanni Battista Rubini, tenor soloist of the Italian Opera in St. Petersburg, whom the Whistlers heard sing with Tamburini in 1845

Guillet. 1840. Giovanni Battista Rubini. Lithograph. Bibliothèque nationale de France, Paris.

IMAGE 198

Polina Viardot-Garcia, soprano soloist of the Italian Opera in St. Petersburg, whom the Whistlers heard sing with Tamburini and Rubini in 1845, shown here in 1844 in the role of Amina in La Sonambula by Vincenzo Bellini Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of the Singer Polina Viardot-Garcia. 1844. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 199

Clara Schumann, pianist, whom Debo heard play two concerts in 1845

Andreas Johann Staub (1806–1839). Clara Wieck. c. 1839. Lithograph. Private collection.

IMAGE 200

Robert Schumann, composer, who accompanied his wife to St. Petersburg

Joseph Kriehuber (1800–1876). Robert Schumann. 1839. 26 x 21 cm (print). Bibliothèque nationale de France, Paris.

IMAGE 201

The Whistlers heard Herman's orchestra play in the Pleasure Garden in Pavlovsk, the terminus of the St. Petersburg–Tsarskoe Selo–Pavlovsk Railway, in May 1844.

Conductor Josef German (Jozef Herman), Master of Ballroom Music. 1830s. Engraving.
(Bukharkin, Deviatnadsatyi vek, p. 115)

IMAGE 202

Professor Richard Risley and his sons, John and Henry, American aerialists, performed in St. Petersburg.

Two drawings of Professor Risley and his sons in the “Ballet Aérien”: by Alexandre Lacauchie in 1844 and J. Petit in 1845 respectively (Winter, Theatre of Marvels, p. 143)

IMAGE 203

The communicants of the English Church and of the British and American Congregational Church contributed generously in February 1847 to aid the Irish and Scottish famine sufferers.

Daniel MacDonald (1821–1853). An Irish Peasant Family Discovering the Blight of Their Store. 1847. 33 x 40 in. National Folklore Collection, University College, Dublin, Ireland.

IMAGE 204

Karl Briullov's Last Day of Pompeii, like Théodore Géricault's Raft of the Medusa, represented the current mainstream of historical painting.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). The Last Day of Pompeii. 1830–1833. Oil on canvas. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 205

Théodore Géricault's Raft of the Medusa

Théodore Géricault (1791–1824). Raft of the Medusa. 1819. Oil on canvas. 16.1 x 23.4 ft. (491 x 716 cm). Louvre Museum, Paris (INV 4884).

IMAGE 206

This painting is an example of Briullov's striving for "effect" through deliberate exaggeration of colors.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852) Portrait of Countess Julia Samoilova with Foster Daughter Giovannina and Black Servant. c. 1832–1834. Oil on canvas. 105.5 x 78.7 in. (268.1 x 200 cm). Inscribed in lower left in black Latin characters: Brulloff. Hillwood Museum, Washington, DC (51.73); bequest of of Marjorie Merriweather Post, 1973.

IMAGE 207

Johann Heinrich Füssli's The Lazar House, which Francis Seymour Haden bought a print of for James in 1849, thus starting him as a collector

Johann Heinrich Füssli (1741–1825). Vision of the Lazar House. 1791–1793. Oil on canvas. Kunsthaus, Zürich, Switzerland.

IMAGE 208

Thomas Wright, who made a watercolor drawing of Anna Whistler in 1845 in St. Petersburg Vasilii Aleksandrovich Golike (1802–1848). Portrait of Thomas Wright. 1834. Detail from larger collage. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 209

William Boxall, who painted the portrait of the fourteen-year-old James Whistler in London

Michel Angelo Pittatore (1825–1903). Sir William Boxall. 1870. Oil on canvas. 69.2 x 60 cm (27.2 x 23.6 in). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG 937).

IMAGE 210

Charles Robert Leslie, whose art lectures in London in 1849 James Whistler attended

Alfred Edward Chalon (1780–1860). Portrait of C.R. Leslie, R.A. 1848. Watercolour on wove paper. 38.0 x 30.5 cm. Royal Academy of Arts, London.

IMAGE 211

“Blue Gown,” by Ethel Traphagen, descendant of John Stevenson Maxwell, was inspired by James Whistler’s Nocturne: Blue and Gold - Old Battersea Bridge.

Blue Gown, 1913. Photograph. The Miriam and Ira D. Wallach Division of Art, Prints and Photographs: Picture Collection, The New York Public Library (ID 816801).

IMAGE 212

Nocturne: Blue and Gold - Old Battersea Bridge by James Whistler, the inspiration for Ethel Traphagen's "Blue Gown" design

James McNeill Whistler (1834–1903). Nocturne: Blue and Gold – Old Battersea Bridge. c.1872–5. Oil on canvas. 68.3 × 51.2 cm. Tate Gallery, London (N01959).

IMAGES 213

While the Hadens were on their honeymoon in October 1847, Anna Whistler visited their home at 62 Sloane Street, where she saw, adorning the walls of Deborah's boudoir, watercolors made by Seymour during his travels in Italy in 1843 and 1844. While she does not describe those watercolors, images 213–222 include most of the extant images from those trips.

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Portrait of the Marquise de Belluno sketching at Velletri. 1844. Pen and brown ink, with graphite and watercolor. 13.8 x 20.5 cm. Inscribed with title and dated: “13th ? [?] June/44.” British Museum, London (1935,1214.9).

IMAGE 214

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Rome from near the Ponte Molle. 1844. Graphite, with pen and black ink; on two conjoined leaves. 9.9 x 31.9 cm. Inscribed with title and dated “15th. May.1844.”; inscribed on verso of one leaf: “sketch of the Castello S. Angelo etc.” British Museum, London (1935,1214.11).

IMAGE 215

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Baths of Caracalla, Rome. 1844. Watercolor. 7.4 x 17.6 cm. Inscribed on verso (according to register, by the artist): “Baths of Caracalla.” British Museum, London (1935,1214.12).

IMAGE 216

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). View at Tivoli. 1844. Graphite with watercolor. 23.7 x 15.7 cm. Inscribed and dated: “Tivoli 17 April 1844.” British Museum, London (1935,1214.10).

IMAGE 217

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Portrait of Duval le Camus. 1844. Pen and brown ink, with graphite and wtercolor. 12.8 x 18.9 cm. Inscribed and dated: “Roma 9. April 1844 Duval le Camus painting.” British Museum, London (1935,1214.18).

IMAGE 218

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Maecenas' Villa at Tivoli. 1844. Graphite, heightened with white, on brown paper. 28 x 41.6 cm. Inscribed with title and dated: “April 17th 1844.” British Museum, London (1937,0612.7).

IMAGE 219

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Houses on the Tiber. Graphite.  $4\frac{3}{16} \times 6\frac{1}{2}$  in. (10.6 x 16.5 cm). Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (17.3.2418).

IMAGE 220

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Pisa. 1843–1844. Watercolor over graphite.  $2\frac{1}{16} \times 4\frac{3}{16}$  in. (5.2 x 12.2 cm). Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (17.3.2418).

IMAGE 221

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). The Colosseum. 1843–1844. Pencil and watercolor on paper. 6 $\frac{1}{8}$  x 12 $\frac{1}{4}$  in. (15.56 x 31.11 cm). Albright-Knox Art Gallery, Buffalo, New York (1891:3.36); gift of Dr. Frederick H. James, 1891.

IMAGE 222

Francis Seymour Haden (1818–1910). Castle of Savelli. From the Inn at Albano. 1844. Pencil and watercolor on paper. Inscribed with title and dated: "8th June 1844." Victoria and Albert Museum, London (E.3216-1911).

THE ALEXANDROFSKY HEAD MECHANICAL WORKS AND MAJOR WHISTLER'S WORK ASSOCIATES

IMAGE 223

Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works in about 1840

Alexandrofsky, c. 1840. Photograph. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 224

This bird's-eye view of the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works was drawn for Andrew McCalla Eastwick by a draftsman in 1844. It is here that the locomotives and rolling stock for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway were being made by the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, and the three partners and their families lived.

Bird's-eye Drawing of the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works. Watercolor. 60 x 90 cm.
Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 225

Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works in about 1845

Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works. c. 1845. Reproduction of a drawing. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 226

Joseph Harrison Jr., partner in the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick, who were building the locomotives and rolling stock for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works

Thomas Buchanan Read (1822–1872). Joseph Harrison, Jr. 1860. Oil. 51 x 41¼ in. Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, Philadelphia, PA; gift of Leland Harrison.

IMAGE 227

Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison, wife of Joseph Harrison Jr.

Sarah Poulterer Harrison. c. 1850. Oil.  $50\frac{1}{8} \times 40\frac{1}{8}$  in. Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, Philadelphia, PA; gift of Leland Harrison. Formerly attributed to Thomas Buchanan Read (1822–1872).

IMAGE 228

Ross Winans Sr., whom his son Thomas DeKay represented as a partner in the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick

A.A. Turner (c. 1831–1866). Photograph ... of Ross Winans, Sr. Photograph mounted on card. 9.2 x 5.6 cm; mount: 10.4 x 6.5 cm. Imprint on mount: D. Appleton & Co., 443 & 445 Broadway, N.Y. A.A. Turner, photographer. GUL: Whistler Collection, PH1/155.

IMAGE 229

Thomas DeKay Winans, partner in the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick

Thomas DeKay Winans. Photograph. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 230

Celeste Louise Revillon, wife of Thomas DeKay Winans

Bencann. Celeste (Revillon) Winans. c. 1860. Carte de visite. (MdHS; photograph courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp)

IMAGE 231

Celeste Louise Revillon, at the time of her marriage to Thomas DeKay Winans

Alfred Jacob Miller. Mrs. Thomas Winans (Celeste Revillon). 1847. Oil. Frick Art Reference Library, accessed 31 March 2022, <https://digitalcollections.frick.org/digico/#/details/bibRecordNumber/b13309900/Photoarchive>

IMAGE 232

William Louis Winans, brother of Thomas DeKay Winans, in Russia

William Louis Winans in a Troika Outside his St. Petersburg Home. Lot 232: The Agra Diamond, Christie's auction house catalogue, 20 June 1990, p. 20. Courtesy of David Knapp.

IMAGE 233

Andrew McCalla Eastwick of the firm of Harrison, Winans and Eastwick

Portrait of Andrew McCalla Eastwick. 1846. Oil on canvas. 66 x 84 cm. Probably painted in Philadelphia, PA, by Robert Street of Germantown. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 234

Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick, wife of Andrew McCalla Eastwick

Portrait of Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick. 1846. Oil on canvas. 66 x 84 cm. In the private collection of Maria Edna Eastwick, Greenwich, CT; photograph courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 235

Edward Peers Eastwick, eldest son of Andrew McCalla and Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick, came to Russia with his father before the other family members.

Portrait of Edward Peers Eastwick. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 236

Phillip and Charles Eastwick, sons of Andrew McCalla and Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick, were playmates of James and Willie Whistler.

Portrait of Phillip and Charles Eastwick. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 237

Maria and Margaret Eastwick, the two elder daughters of Andrew McCalla and Lydia Ann (James) Eastwick

Portrait of Maria and Margaret Eastwick. c. 1846. Miniature. In the private collection of Marjorie S. Eastwick, Lively, VA; photograph courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 238

Lydia Eastwick with her two sons – William on the left and George on the right – in St. Petersburg in about 1849

Lydia Ann Eastwick and Sons in Russia. c. 1849. Oil on canvas. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 239

The house in which the Eastwicks and Harrison lived at the Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works

Eastwick and Harrison home at Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works. Photograph. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 240

Floor plan of Eastwick and Harrison home: the Eastwicks lived on the first floor; the Harrison on the second floor; and the schoolroom, where Rev. Thomas S. Ellerby preached on Sundays, was in the garrett.

Floor Plan of Eastwick and Harrison Home at Alexandrofsky Head Mechanical Works. Courtesy of Estelle and David Knapp.

IMAGE 241

Engineer-General Alexander Wilson was in charge of the orphanage in which linens and playing cards were made.

Engineer-General Alexander Wilson (Bowles, “From the Banks of the Neva,” p. 68)

IMAGE 242

Playing cards and linens of superb quality were made at the Aleksandrovskaia Manufactory (also called General Wilson’s), located on the Schlüsselberg Road, which Aunt Alicia visited in the summer of 1844.

The Imperial Aleksandrovskaia Manufactory. (Shūglits, Promyshlennaia arkhitektura Peterburga, facing p. 64)

IMAGE 243

Count Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' was head of the Main Administration of Transport and Public Buildings, and Major Whistler's superior.

Franz Krüger (1797–1857). Portrait of Count Peter von Kleinmichel (1793-1869). 1851. Oil on canvas. 53.9 x 40.9 in. (137 x 104 cm). Inscribed below right: “Krüger px. 1851.” State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-211).

IMAGE 244

Count Aleksei Andreevich Arakcheev, mentor to young Pyotr Andreevich Kleinmikhel', in whom he instilled his Draconian philosophy

George Dawe (1781–1829). Portrait of Alexey A. Arakcheyev (1769–1834). 1824. Oil. 70 x 62.5 cm. The Military Gallery of the Winter Palace, State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-7813).

IMAGE 245

Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin was chief of staff of the Corps of Mining Engineers and a member of the Construction Commission for the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He and Major Whistler had discussions about education systems.

Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin. 1857–1861. The State Government in Russia in Portraits from the Ninth through the Twenty-First Century, accessed 4 November 2021, deduhova.ru/statesman/konstantin-vladimirovich-chevkin/

IMAGE 246

Engineer-General Jean-Antoine Maurice Destrem was a transport engineer, poet, and translator of the Russian fabulist Ivan Krylov

Destrem Moritz Ivanovich (Jean-Antoine-Maurice Destrem) (1788-1855). (Napoleon and Revolution, accessed 22 September 2021, <http://impereur.blogspot.com/2017/05/jean-antoine-maurice-destrem-1788-1855.html>)

IMAGE 247

Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov, transport engineer, head of the Northern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway, became one of Major Whistler's closest Russian friends.

Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov (Ot konki do trampaia Iz istorii peterburgskogo transporta [From the Horse Car to the Street Car: From the History of Petersburg Transportation])[St. Petersburg: Liki Rossii; Moscow: Dzhuliia, 1994], p. 13)

IMAGE 248

Nikolai Osipovich Kraft, transport engineer, head of the Southern Administration of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway

Nikolai Osipovich Kraft (Neviorovskii, LIIZbT 1809–1959, p. 48)

IMAGE 249

Dmitrii Ivanovich Zhuravskii, transport engineer, was in charge, along with Major Whistler, of building the bridge across the Vereb'ia River along the route of the St. Petersburg–Moscow Railway. He presented tickets for the opera to Deborah Whistler.

D.I. Zhuravskii (Veviorovskii, LIIZbT 1809–1959, p. 69)

IMAGE 250

Anton Ivanovich Shtukenberg, transport engineer, was first cousin to A.O. Koritskii, James's private drawing teacher, and a great admirer of Major Whistler.

A.I. Shtukenberg (Neviorovskii, LIIZhT 1809–1959, p. 67)

IMAGE 251

Baron Anton Ivanovich Del'vig, transport engineer, on special assignment to Count P.A. Kleinmikhel', considered Major Whistler "remarkable."

Ilya Repin (1844–1931). Portrait of Military Engineer A.I. Delvig. 1882. 108 × 86 cm. State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 252

Order of St. Anne, 2nd Class, Civil Division, was awarded to Major Whistler in 1847.

Imperial Russian Order of St. Anne, 2nd Class, Civil Division. 1850. 18k gold and enamel; 14kt gold ribbon wire. 4.4 x 4.4 cm. Stamped with 1850 date. Sold at auction by Jackson's International Auctioneers, 19 November 2020.

FRIENDS AND ACQUAINTANCES IN ST. PETERSBURG

IMAGE 253

Reverend Edward Law was chaplain of the English Church in St. Petersburg from 1820 to 1864. He became Reverend Doctor Law in June 1844.

Timoleon Neff (1805–1876) (attributed). Portrait of Rev. Edward Law (1791–1868). Leeds Russian Archive, University of Leeds, UK (LRA/MS 1117).

IMAGE 254

Mary Eliza (Law) Cattley, daughter of Rev. Edward Law

Mary (Law) Cattley. Photograph of a portrait. Leeds Russian Archive, University of Leeds, UK (LRA/MS 1406).

IMAGE 255

James Richard Cattley, who married Mary Eliza Law in October 1840

James Richard Cattley. Photograph of a portrait. Leeds Russian Archive, University of Leeds, UK (LRA/MS 1406).

IMAGE 256

Reverend Thomas Scales Ellerby, pastor of the British and American Congregational Church in St. Petersburg from 1840 to 1853

Rev. T.S. Ellerby (Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, following p. 82)

IMAGE 257

Sarah Bealey Schofield, niece of Rev. T.S. Ellerby's wife, who, before her marriage to Charles Bell, was nursemaid to the Ellerby children

Sarah Bell (Romanes, Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk, following p. 86)

IMAGE 258

William Maingay, British merchant in St. Petersburg from the 1830s until May 1844, husband of Eliza (Lamb) Maingay

William Maingay. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 259

Eliza (Lamb) Maingay and Anna Whistler became friends in St. Petersburg in 1844.

Eliza (Lamb) Maingay. 1840s. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 260

William Bonamy Maingay, eldest son of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, was romantically interested in Deborah Whistler for a time.

William Bonamy Maingay. c. 1859. Photograph. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 261

Charles George Maingay, second son of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, died in St. Petersburg in 1843, from a fall on the ice, at the age of 13.

Charles George Maingay. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 262

Eliza Anne Maingay (“Nina”), eldest daughter of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, whose piety Anna Whistler deeply admired

Eliza Anne Maingay. Photograph. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 263

Emma Elizabeth Maingay, second daughter of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay, was the lifelong friend of Deborah Delano (Whistler) Haden, whom she met in St. Petersburg.

Emma Elizabeth Maingay. September 1859. Photograph. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 264

Emily Maingay (“Lille” or “Lily”), youngest daughter of William and Eliza (Lamb) Maingay

Emily Maingay. Photograph. Maingay Family Archive.

IMAGE 265

William Clarke Gellibrand, an English merchant, became a close friend of the Whistlers in St. Petersburg.

William Clarke Gellibrand. Photograph taken in Norwich, England, provided by Jane D'Arcy, a descendent of William Clarke Gellibrand's brother, Joseph Tice Gellibrand

IMAGE 266

Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand, the American wife of William Clarke Gellibrand, became a close friend of Anna Whistler's.

Mary Tyler Gellibrand. Photograph taken in Norwich, England, provided by Jane D'Arcy, a descendent of William Clarke Gellibrand's brother, Joseph Tice Gellibrand

IMAGE 267

Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and her biological sister, Elizabeth Hannah Ropes, whom she and her husband, William Clarke Gellibrand, adopted, frequently visited her brother, William Hooper Ropes, who lived across the hall from the Whistlers.

Jean Daniel Huber (1754–1845). Mary Tyler (Ropes) Gellibrand and her sister Elizabeth Hannah Ropes. Photograph of an 1840 portrait painted in the Tyrol. Leeds Russian Archive, University of Leeds, UK (IRA/MS 1406).

IMAGE 268

The Whistler family frequently visited with Archibald Mirrielees, Scottish merchant, a friend of the Ropeses and Gellibrands.

Archibald Mirrielees with his children Maggie and Fred. Photograph from daguerrotype of 1857. (Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, p. 42).

IMAGE 269

The Whistler family frequently visited with Jane (Muir) Mirrielees in St. Petersburg, after she became the third wife of Archibald Mirrielees in 1844.

Jane (Muir) Mirrielees, third wife of Archibald Mirrielees, with three of their children: Maida, Archy, and Augusta. Photograph from daguerrotype of 1857. (Pitcher, Muir and Mirrielees, p. 42)

IMAGE 270

Benjamin Ropes Prince, brother of George Henry Prince and first cousin of William Hooper Ropes

Benjamin Ropes Prince. 1863. Photograph taken at Whitney's Gallery, St. Paul, MN.
Courtesy of S. Hardy Prince, of Beverley, MA.

IMAGE 271

Charles Wood was in the cotton-spinning business in St. Petersburg.

Charles Wood. Photograph. Courtesy of Rev. Eric Wood of Bruton, Somerset, England.

IMAGE 272

Lydia (Procter) Wood, wife of Charles Wood and a close friend of Anna Whistler's in St. Petersburg

Lydia (Procter) Wood. Photograph. Courtesy of Rev. Eric Wood of Bruton, Somerset, England.

IMAGE 273

Harriet (Henley) Wishaw, a close friend of Deborah Whistler's, whose wedding the latter could not attend in 1846 because she was in England

Harriet Wishaw, née Henley (Whishaw, History, between pp. 164–165)

IMAGE 274

Charles Baird, owner of the Baird Iron Works, that made metal furnishings for many of the buildings of St. Petersburg, died in late 1843. “Old Mrs. Baird” was his widow.

W. Hall. Charles Baird. 1867. Engraving. (T. Tower, Memoir of the Late Charles Baird, Esq., of St. Petersburg, and of His Son, the Late Francis Baird, Esq., of St. Petersburg, and 4, Queen's Gate, London [London: Harrison and Sons, 1867], frontispiece)

IMAGE 275

Francis Baird, son of Charles Baird, who succeeded his father as head of the Baird Iron Works

W. Hall. Portrait of Francis Baird, son of Charles Baird. 1867. Engraving. (Tower, Memoir of Charles Baird, frontispiece)

IMAGES 276, 277

The Elizaveta, the first Russian steamship, produced at the Baird Iron Works in 1815

Elizaveta. c. 1820. Colored lithograph. (The First Steamboat on the Neva, 15 November 2015, http://bianki.mypage.ru/nauka-i-tehnika/perviy\_parohod\_na\_neve\_1\_1.html)

[Elizaveta] Longitudinal Façade. (Tower, Memoir of Charles Baird, unnumbered plate)

OTHER IMPORTANT PEOPLE

IMAGE 278

Colonel Charles Stewart Todd, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States in St. Petersburg from 1841 to 1846

Charles S. Todd. Inspector General and Aide de Camp to General Harrison during the late war. Representative of the U.S. in S. America. Minister to Russia. Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, DC (LC-DIG-pga-11696).

IMAGE 279

Abraham Priest Gibson, consul general of the American Legation in St. Petersburg from 1819 to 1850

F.H. Bischoff. Portrait of A.B. [sic] Gibson Esq, Consul of the United States of North America at St. Petersburg.  $4\frac{1}{10} \times 5\frac{1}{8}$  in. (10.7 x 13.0 cm). Private collection; exhibited at the Royal Academy, London 1841, no. 911; sold at auction 8 April 2020.

IMAGE 280

Colin McCrae Ingersoll, secretary ad interim to the American Legation in St. Petersburg from May 1847 to May 1848

Photograph of Colin McCrae Ingersoll. Box 7, fol. 14, BUHG.

IMAGE 281

John Randolph Clay, who served as secretary of the American Legation in St. Petersburg from July 1845 until April 1847

John Randolph Clay, American diplomat to Peru (John Livingston, Portraits of Eminent Americans Now Living, with Biographical and Historical Memoirs of Their Lives and Actions, 2 vols. [New York: Cornish, Lampert; London: Sampson, Low and Son, 1853], vol. 1, opposite p. 133)

IMAGE 282

John Randolph of Roanoke was described by Anna Whistler as generally being called “our queer Randolph.”

Chester Harding (1792–1866). John Randolph of Roanoke. 1829. Oil on canvas. 29½ x 24½ in. (74.9 x 62.2 cm). National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institute, Washington, DC (NPG.2019.9).

IMAGE 283

Baron Alexander Andreevich Bodisco, Russian envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States from 1833 to 1854, whom Anna Whistler met in St. Petersburg in January 1844 at Colonel Todd's birthday party

Count Alexander de Bodisco, Russian envoy, at the time of his marriage to Harriet Beall Williams, April 9, 1840.
—Edmonston Studio Photo.

John Clagett Proctor, "Count Bodisco, Russian Envoy and Young Bride Made Social History Here," Sunday Star (Washington, DC), September 8, 1940, p. 2)

IMAGE 284

Harriet Beall (Williams) Bodisco, wife of Baron Alexander Andreevich Bodisco, whom Anna Whistler met at Colonel Todd's birthday party in January 1844

John Clagett Proctor, "Count Bodisco, Russian Envoy and Young Bride Made Social History Here," Sunday Star (Washington, DC), September 8, 1940, p. 2)

IMAGE 285

Harriet Bodisco, called “the beautiful American” by the Russians

Johann Conrad Dorner (1809–1866). Harriet Bodisco. 1844. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 286

When on leave in 1844, Eduard de Stoeckl, junior secretary of the Russian Legation in Washington, visited the Whistlers at their dacha on the Peterhof Road.

Baron de Stoeckl. c. 1860. Photograph. Brady-Handy Photograph Collection, Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division (LC-BH82-5273B).

IMAGE 287

Queen Victoria, the British monarch from 1838 to 1901

Franz Xaver Winterhalter (1805–1873). Queen Victoria (1819–1901). 1843. Oil on canvas. 107.5 x 63.6 in. (273.1 x 161.6 cm). Garter Throne Room, Royal Collection, Windsor Castle, England.

IMAGE 288

Sir Robert Ker Porter, diplomat, who, Colonel Todd told Anna Whistler, died unexpectedly while on a visit to St. Petersburg in 1842

William Oakley Burgess (1818–1844). Sir Robert Ker Porter. 1843. Mezzotint from an oil painting (1808) by George Henry Harlow (1787–1819). Plate: 18½ x 12<sup>7</sup>/<sub>8</sub> in. (47.1 x 32.7 cm); paper: 19<sup>1</sup>/<sub>8</sub> in. x 14¼ in. (48.5 x 36.1 cm). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG D14453); bequeathed by (Frederick) Leverton Harris, 1927.

IMAGE 289

Jane Porter, sister of Sir Robert Ker Porter and author of historical novels, who was with her brother in Russia when he died

Samuel Freeman (c. 1773–1857). Jane Porter. Engraving from a pencil drawing by George Henry Harlow (1787–1819). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG D9126).

IMAGE 290

Anna Maria Porter, sister of Sir Robert Ker Porter, also mentioned by Anna Whistler when she was speaking of Sir Robert Ker Porter's death

Thomas Woolnoth (1785–1857). Anna Maria Porter. Engraving from a pencil drawing by George Henry Harlow (1787–1819). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG 1109).

IMAGE 291

John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Great Britain to the Russian Court as of April 1844, whom Anna Whistler used to see as a communicant of the English Church in St. Petersburg

Thomas Lawrence (1769–1830). John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield, 2nd Baron Bloomfield. 1819. Oil on canvas. 9  $\frac{3}{4}$  x 25  $\frac{1}{8}$  in. (75.6 x 63.8 cm). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG 1408); bequeathed by Georgiana Bloomfield, 1905).

IMAGE 292

Anna Whistler used also to see Georgiana (Liddell) Bloomfield, wife of John Arthur Douglas Bloomfield and previously lady-in-waiting to Queen Victoria, as a communicant of the English Church in St. Petersburg

Portrait of Lady Georgiana Bloomfield and Miss Matilda Paget (detail). c. 1843. Hand-colored lithograph; illustration to Planché's "Souvenir of the Bal Costumé" (1843). 28 x 37.8 cm. British Museum, London (1943,0410.1455).

IMAGE 293

Queen Pomare of Tahiti, who asked Queen Victoria for help when exiled

Reine Pomaré (Taïti) (Eugène Delessert, Voyages dans les deux océans, Atlantique et Pacifique, 1844 à 1847 [Paris: A. Franck, 1848], p. 129)

IMAGE 294

In the autumn of 1847, the Whistlers entertained Dr. Adair Crawford, who had been invited to Russia to consider being moral tutor to a son of Prince Pyotr Georgievich Ol'denburgskii, nephew of Nicholas I, and his wife, Princess Teresia Vil'gel'mina Ol'denburgskaia.

Joseph-Désiré Court (1797–1865). Portrait of Prince Peter of Oldenburg (1812-1881). 1842. Oil on canvas. 90 x 71.5 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-5178).

IMAGE 295

Princess Teresia Vil'gel'mina Ol'denburgskaia, wife of Prince Pyotr Georgievich Ol'denburgskii

Joseph-Désiré Court (1797–1865). Portrait of the Princess of Oldenburg. 1847. Oil on canvas. 89 x 71 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-5170).

IMAGE 296

The children of Prince Pyotr Georgievich Ol'denburgskii and Princess Teresia Vil'gel'mina Ol'denburgskaia in 1853. One of the two oldest boys in this portrait is the son to whom Dr. Adair Crawford was asked to consider being moral tutor.

Vital Jean de Gronckel (1820–1890). Portrait of the Children of Duke Constantine Frederick Peter of Oldenburg and Princess Therese Wilhelmine Friederike Isabelle Charlotte of Nassau-Weilburg, 1853. Oil on canvas. 71 x 90.5 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1501).

IMAGE 297

Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig of the Russian Navy, who died in January 1845

Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig. Lithograph. (Aslanbegov, Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig, frontispiece)

IMAGE 298

Sir James Wylie, MD, 1st Baronet, was the chief inspector of military hospitals. The back of his house on Galernaia Street faced the front of the Bobrinskii house.

Mihály Zichy (1827–1906). Sir James Wylie, MD. 1st Baronet. Oil on canvas. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 299

Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov was a passenger on the lighter carrying the Whistlers to St. Petersburg in September 1843.

O. Tishina. Portrait of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (1818–1864). Second half of the 19th century. Miniature. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 300

Colonel Todd told Anna Whistler about attending the funeral of Sofia Vladimirovna (Golitsyna) Stroganovna, the grandmother of the young Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov, whom Anna Whistler and her family met on the lighter to St. Petersburg in September 1843.

Jean-Laurent Mosnier (1743–1808). Portrait of Countess Sofia Stroganovna. 1808. Oil on canvas. 24<sup>7</sup>/<sub>8</sub> x 21<sup>7</sup>/<sub>8</sub> in. Stroganov Palace, State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 301

Countess Tat'iana Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Stroganova was the fiancée of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov when Anna Whistler saw her at the fête given by Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev for his peasants.

Pietro Tenerani (1789–1869). Countess Tat'iana Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Stroganova. 1853. Marble bust. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (N.sk-2345). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 302

Count Grigorii Grigorievich Kushelev (1802–1855), at whose estate on the Peterhof Road Anna Whistler and friends attended a fête he gave in 1844 for his peasants

Julius Klünder (1802–1875). Count Grigory Grigoryevich Kushelev (1802–1855) the Younger. 1833.

IMAGE 303

Countess Ekaterina Dmitrievna (Vasil'chikova) Kusheleva, the wife of Count G.G. Kushelev, was present at the fête for his peasants that Anna Whistler attended.

Pyotr Fyodorovich Sokolov (1791–1848)(attributed). Ekaterina Dmitrievna Kusheleva née Vasil'chikova. 1830s.

IMAGE 304

Dmitrii Vasilievich Vasil'chikov, brother of Prince Illarion Vasilievich Vasil'chikov and father of Ekaterina (Vasil'chikova) Kusheleva and Tat'iana Dmitrievna Vasil'chikova

George Dawe (1781–1829). Portrait of Dmitry V. Vasilchikov (1778-1859) (2nd). Before 1825. Oil on canvas. 70 cm (27.5 x 24.6 in. 70 x 62.5 cm). State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-8009).

IMAGE 305

From 1832 to 1853, the retired Buturlin squandered a huge fortune, thereby requiring him to return to active duty in the civil service. Anna Whistler was told about how he had gambled away one of his estates.

Mikhail Dmitrievich Buturlin (1807–1876). 1820s. Miniature.

IMAGE 306

While visiting the Olenin daughter's governess, Miss McLean, in Tsarskoe Selo, Anna Whistler met the pupil's mother, the widowed Varvara Alekseevna Olenina.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of Grigorii Nikanorovich Olenin and Varvara Alekseevna Olenina in Rome. 1828. Watercolor on paper. 42.5 x 33.5 cm. State Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 307

Aleksei Nikolaevich Olenin, who died in 1843, was the father of Varvara Alekseevna Olenina, whom Anna Whistler met when she went to visit Miss McLean, the governess Alexandr Grigorievich Varnek (d. 1843). Portrait of the President of the Academy of Arts Alexei Nikolaevich Olenin. 1824. Oil on canvas. Scientific Research Museum of the Russian Academy of Arts, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 308

Count Aleksandr Khristoforovich Benkendorf, head of the Third Department of His Imperial Majesty's Own Chancery and chief of the Gendarmerie, to whose office Anna Whistler accompanied her half-sister Alicia McNeill to obtain a ticket of residence

Yegor Botman (1821–1891). Portrait of Count Alexander Benkendorff (Konstantin Alexander Karl Wilhelm Christoph Graf von Benckendorff) (1782–1844). 1859. From a portrait by Franz Krüger (1797–1857). Oil on canvas. 140 x 102 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-209).

IMAGE 309

Count Karl Vasilievich Nesselrode, foreign minister and chancellor of the Russian Empire, who attended services at the English Church once a year

Yegor Botman (1821–1891). Portrait of Count Karl Nesselrode (Karl Robert Reichsgraf von Nesselrode-Ebreshoven) (1780–1862). 1860s–1870s. From a portrait by Franz Krüger (1797–1857). Oil on canvas. 139.3 x 102.5 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1523).

IMAGE 310

Prince Illarion Vasilievich Vasil'chikov, close friend of Nicholas I, is shown in the uniform of the Life-Guard Dragoon Regiment, whose chief he was from 1814 to 1847. Anna Whistler watched his funeral cortege in 1847.

Yegor Botman (1821–1891). Portrait of General, Prince Illarion V. Vasilchikov (1775–1847). 1859. From a portrait by Franz Krüger (1797–1857). Oil on canvas. 140 x 102 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-204).

IMAGE 311

Leontii Vasilievich Dubel't, to whom Colonel Charles Stewart Todd applied to get Martha Reed Ropes released from Cronstadt to enter St. Petersburg

Aleksei Vasilievich Tyranov (1808–1859). Portrait of Leontii Dubelt. 1842–1844. Oil on canvas. 46 x 39.5 cm. State Literary Museum, Moscow.

IMAGE 312

Count Aleksei Fyodorovich Orlov, with whom Sir William Allan, when in St. Petersburg in the summer of 1844, corresponded concerning his painting Peter the Great Teaching the Peasants to Make Ships

M.D. Filin, Imperator Nikolai Pervyi [Emperor Nicholas I], in Russkii mir v litsakh [The Russian World Through Its Personages] (Moscow: Russkii Mir, 2002).

IMAGE 313

Count Aleksandr Vladimirovich Adlerberg, childhood companion of the future Alexander II and aide-de-camp of Nicholas I, for whose expected child Anna Whistler said the seamstress Franciska was making baby clothes

Andrey (Heinrich) Ivanovich Denyer. Portrait of Count Alexander Adlerberg. 1858–1861. Photograph. Multimedia Art Museum, Moscow. Retrieved 24 July 2022 from the History of Russia in Photographs project, developed with the support of Yandex and the Ministry of Culture of the Russian Federation, https://russiainphoto.ru/search/photo/years-1858-1861/?page=1&paginate\_page=1&index=1

IMAGE 314

Adjutant General and General of Infantry Aleksandr Aleksandrovich Kavelin, the military governor general of St. Petersburg in 1844, to whom Nicholas I sent a moving rescript after the body of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna was transferred from Tsarskoe Selo to the Imperial mausoleum at the Peter and Paul Fortress

Frish and Vysotskii, S-Peterburgskaia stolichnaia politisia, facing page 136

IMAGE 315

Adjutant General and General of Infantry Matvei Evgrafovich Khrapovitskii, the military governor general of St. Petersburg from April 1846 to March–April 1847, about whose attention to exorbitant pricing of food products Charlotte Leon told Anna Whistler

Frish and Vysotskii, S-Peterburgskaia stolichnaia politsiia, facing page 138

IMAGE 316

Adjutant General and General of Infantry Dmitrii Ivanovich Shul'gin, military governor general of St. Petersburg from April–May 1847 to December 1854 / January 1855

Frish and Vysotskii, S-Peterburgskaia stolichnaia politsiia, facing page 142

IMAGE 317

Imam Shamil', leader of Caucasian resistance (1834–1859) to Russia's war of annexation, at prayer

Mihály Zichy (1829–1906). Imam Shamil' at Prayer. Mid-19th century. Lithograph. (R. Ia. Shterengarts, Istoriia Rossii XIX veka v zerkale graficheskogo iskusstva [The History of 19th-Century Russia in the Mirror of Graphic Art] [Moscow: Progress-Traditsiia, [2002]], p. 111)

IMAGE 318

Sylvanus Thayer, superintendant of the United States Military Academy when Major Whistler was a cadet there, visited the Whistlers on the Peterhof Road in July 1844.

Robert W. Weir (1803–1889). Brevet Brigadier General Sylvanus Thayer. 1845. West Point Museum Collection, United States Military Academy, West Point, NY.

IMAGE 319

Charles Collins Parker, a medical student and traveling companion to Colonel Sylvanus Thayer, accompanied him on a visit to the Whistlers on the Peterhof Road in July 1844.

C.C. Parker, Son of Gen<sup>l</sup> Philadelphia 25th Oct 1842, 1842. Silhouette. Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (50.602.1158); bequest of Glenn Tilley Morse, 1950.

IMAGE 320

The Scottish artist Sir William Allan visited the Whistlers on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844 and praised James's artwork.

David Octavius Hill (1802–1870) and Robert Adamson (1821–1848). Sir William Allan. 1844. Calotype. 8 x 5<sup>5</sup>/<sub>8</sub> in. (20.3 x 14.3 cm). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG P6(9)).

IMAGE 321

David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre was a fabulously wealthy Anglo-Indian member of the British Parliament, whose jealousy towards his wife caused her family to have him committed as insane. His escape from restraint caused him to wander all over Europe, which was a probable reason for his being in St. Petersburg, where John Stevenson Maxwell met him at the misses Benson's boarding house in 1844.

Charles Brocky (1807–1855). David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre (1808–1851). Oil on canvas. The Potteries Museum & Art Gallery, Stoke-on-Trent, UK. (Oxford Dictionary of National Biography, s.v. “Sombre, David Ochterlony Dyce,” accessed 28 September 2021)

IMAGE 322

Prince Oscar of Sweden attended the wedding of Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna and the Crown Prince of Württemberg in 1846.

Huillot de Saignez (attributed). Prince Oscar II of Sweden. 1847. Photograph. Bernadotte Library Archive, Stockholm, Sweden.

IMAGE 323

Vasilii Grigorievich Zhukov was the owner of a tobacco factory famous for its workers' choir and a philanthropist. His choir sang at Ekateringof in summer.

City Head V. Zhukov. (Bozherianov, Nevskii Prospekt, vol. 2, p. 426)

IMAGE 324

Count Stanisław Szczęśny Potocki, father of Olga Potocka, to whom Charlotte Leon had been governess Domenico Cunego (c. 1724–1803). Stanisław Szczęśny Potocki. c. 1783. Copperplate etching. National Library of Poland, Warsaw.

IMAGE 325

Countess Zofia (Glavani)(Witt) Potocka, wife of Stanisław Szczęsny Potocki, to whose daughter, Olga, Charlotte Leon had been governess

Johann Baptist Lampi (1751–1830). Zofia Wittowa Potocka (1760–1822) as a Vestal Virgin. c. 1785. Museo Castello del Buonconsiglio, Trento, Italy.

IMAGE 326

Countess Olga (Potocka) Naryshkina, to whom Charlotte Leon was governess, when the former was a child, was the daughter of Count Stanisław Szczęśny Potocki and Countess Zofia (Glavani)(Witt) Potocka.

Portrait of Olga Naryshkina. 1830s–1840s. Oil on canvas. 70.5 x 58.5 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (Zh-6223).

IMAGE 327

Countess Zofia (Potocka) Kiseleva, to whom Charlotte Leon had been governess, when the former was a child, was the daughter of Count Stanisław Szczęsny Potocki and Countess Zofia (Glavani)(Witt) Potocka.

George Hayter (1792–1871). Portrait of Sofia S. Kiselevova. 1831. Oil on canvas. 78 x 67 cm; oval painted into a rectangle. Inscription: “George Hayter pinxit Paris 1831.” State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-4929).

IMAGE 328

Alexander Hamilton Douglas told Charlotte Leon, when she was governess to Countess Zofia Potocka's daughters, that she should feel free to contact him if she ever needed financial help.

Henry Raeburn (1756–1823). Alexander Hamilton, 10th Duke of Hamilton and 7th Duke of Brandon (1767–1852). Between 1812 and 1823. Oil on canvas. 245.1 x 179.1 cm (96.4 x 70.5 in.). Sold at auction by Christie's, London, 14 September 2011.

DR. EDWARD MAYNARD

IMAGE 329

Dr. Edward Maynard, dentist and firearms inventor, repaired the teeth of several Whistler family members while visiting St. Petersburg in the winter of 1845–1846.

Dr. Edward Maynard. After 1870. Photograph. Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, DC (ID 99472659).

IMAGE 331

Drozhki drawn by Dr Edward Maynard in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard

Edward Maynard, letter no. 1, St. Petersburg, Russia, Monday night, September 22, 1845 (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 332

Eastern saddle and accoutrements seen in the Armory at Tsarskoe Selo, to which Colonel Todd, the American envoy, took Dr. Edward Maynard in September 1845, drawn by the latter in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard

Edward Maynard, letter no. 1, St. Petersburg, Russia, Friday night, September 26, 1845 (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 333

Masked figure seen at the New Year's Eve ball in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility, to which Colonel Todd, the American envoy, took Dr. Edward Maynard, drawn by the latter in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard

Edward Maynard, letter no. 7, St. Petersburg, Tuesday morning [2 January 1846] (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 334

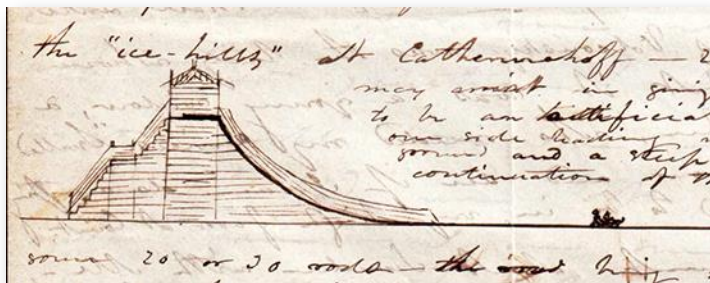

Portraits of Emperor Nicholas I and his brother Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, drawn by Dr. Edward Maynard in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard, in January 1846

Edward Maynard, letter no. 8, St.Petersburg, Saturday evening January 12, 1846 (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 335

Ice-hills at Catherinehoff visited by Dr. Edward Maynard, and drawn by him in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard, in January 1846

Edward Maynard, letter no. 8, St. Petersburg, Monday P.M. [14 January 1846] (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 336

Reindeer sleigh ridden in by Dr. Edward Maynard, and drawn in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard

Edward Maynard, letter no. 8, St. Petersburg, Wednesday 23rd January 1846 (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 337

Ring awarded to Dr. Edward Maynard by Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna in March 1846 for his dental services, drawn in a letter to his wife, Ellen Maynard

Edward Maynard, letter no. 11, St. Petersburg, Sunday morning, March 10, 1846, (original letter in the possession of his descendant, Cynthia McGrath)

IMAGE 338

Schematic for Maynard's priming lock mechanism, patented in 1845

“E. Maynard, Priming-Cock, No. 4,208, Patented Sept. 22, 1845.” United States Patent Office: Edward Maynard of Washington, District of Columbia, Percussion-Primer and Gun-lock Therefore. Google Patents, accessed 4 October 2021, <https://patents.google.com/patent/US4208A/en>

IMAGE 339

George Washington Parmly, Maynard's dentist colleague and friend, who traveled to St. Petersburg with him

George Washington Parmly. c. 1865. From a photograph taken in Paris, France. Lawrence Parmly Brown, The Greatest Dental Family (1923), p. 25; reprinted from The Dental Cosmos, March, April, and May 1923.

IMAGE 340

Lucy (Finley) Atkinson, cousin of the misses Benson

Thomas Atkinson (1799–1861). Tea Party in a Kirghis Tent. Sketch. (Atkinson, Recollections, facing p. 204)

IMAGE 341

Thomas Atkinson, husband of Lucy (Finley) Atkinson

“The only known photograph of Thomas Witlam Atkinson” (Nick Fielding, Siberian Steppes website, accessed 22 September 2021, <https://siberiansteppes.com/2018/11/16/a-new-portrait-of-thomas-witlam-atkinson/>)

IMAGE 342

Count Mikhail Nikolaevich Muraviev, to whose daughter Lucy Finley was governess Smirnov. Count Mikhail Nikolaevich Muraviov. 1865. Lithograph. St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 343

Dr. Nikolai Fyodorovich Arendt, who negotiated with Maynard to remain in St. Petersburg as Imperial dentist

*Nikolai Fyodorovich Arendt. 1830s. (Stark, Zhizn' s počtom Natal'ia Pushkina, vol. 2, p. 63)*

DAILY LIFE IN ST. PETERSBURG

IMAGE 344

Anna Whistler took James and Willie in 1844 to a toboggan hill (ice hill), where they saw Colonel Todd and the Risleys enjoying themselves.

Toboggan Hills on Admiralty Square During Shrovetide in 1835. Mid-nineteenth century. Lithograph tinted with watercolor. 38.5 x 45.5 cm.

IMAGE 345

Every year at Easter, James and Willie attended the fair on Admiralty Square.

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). Fair Booths on Admiralty Square. 1849. Watercolor on paper. 31.1 x 42.7 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 346

Swings, such as those seen by the Whistlers in Admiralty Square at the Shrovetide fair

Butter Week in St. Petersburg (detail). 1869. (Die Gartenlaube [The Gazebo] [1869]: p. 85)

IMAGE 347

James and Willie were taken to the frozen Neva to ride on sleds drawn by reindeer, an enterprise of Lapplanders.

Nikolai Vanifantiev. Races in St. Petersburg. Amusements on the Neva. 1846. Lithograph. 22.2 x 34 cm. Gr-25221. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 348

Anna Whistler records many instances of James and Willie skating at the English Club skating ground on the Neva.

Akim Egorovich Karneev (1833–1896). Ice Skating on the Neva. First half of the 19th century. Engraving tinted with watercolor. 29.7 x 30 cm. Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 349

Each year, after the ceremony of the Blessing of the Neva had taken place, navigation reopened.

Vasilii Fyodorovich Timm (1820–1895). The Opening of Navigation on the Neva River. 1858. Lithograph from Russkii khudozhestvennyi listok [Russian Art Newsletter]. (Lotman and Pogossian, Velikosvetskoe obedy, p. 314)

IMAGE 350

People watching fireworks on the banks of a river, most likely the Neva

The source of this image is uncertain. Specialists from the engravings department of the State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg, note the similarities between this and an engraving by Khelmitiskii from an original drawing by G. Brolling of a festive scene on Elagin Island, published in Neva in 1892, and suggest that this may be by the same artist and from the same publication. “Both [Khelmitiskii and Brolling] are little-known staff artists of the magazine” (Andrew Gangan, State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg, 27 December 2021).

IMAGE 351

James and Willie sometimes went unaccompanied on the omnibus to Alexandrofsky

Omnibus. Panorama of the Nevskii Prospekt. 1835. Lithograph from a drawing by V. Sadovnikov.

IMAGE 352

When Major Whistler used the family carriage, the remaining family members hired a drozhki.

Aleksandr Orlovskii (1777–1832). A City Drozhki. 1820. Lithograph. 44.6 x 55.7 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 353

See detail of a sentry box with a sentry on duty on the right. In the 1840s, he no longer carried a halberd.

Aleksandr Orlovskii (1777–1832). A Sledge Harnessed to a Pair of Horses. 1820. Lithograph. 44.5 x 56.3 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 354

The passenger in a kibitka reclined rather than sitting up, as Joseph Harrison Jr. discovered when he had to use one.

Aleksandr Orlovskii (1777–1832). Traveler in a Kibitka Harnesses to a Troika of Horses. 1819. Lithograph. 39.5×57.3 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 355

This pastime was known to Anna Whistler as “gee-joggle.” The image also contains the detail of the gable end of a peasant house, which she noted particularly.

Aleksandr Orlovskii (1777–1832). Jumping on a Board. 1827. Lithograph. 30 x 38 cm. National Museum of Poland, Warsaw.

IMAGE 356

Game of knucklebones (babki), which Anna Whistler saw peasant boys playing

Game of Knucklebones. Lithograph after an original by Aleksandr Orlovskii (1777–1832). 36 x 48 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg (Gr–19389). (Petrova, Play and Passion, p. 107)

IMAGE 357

The English name for the game called “svaika” is “nail into the ring.” It is depicted in a sculpture outside the Alexander Palace, which Anna Whistler visited.

Svaika. A Favorite Game of the Moujiks. 1833. Hand-colored engraving. Reproduced from Robert Pinkerton, Russia; or, Miscellaneous Observations on the Past and Present State of That Country and Its Inhabitants (London: Seeley and Sons, 1833), facing p. 295.

IMAGE 358

A restaurant catering to the general public

Victor Adam (1801–1866). Café Restaurant in St. Petersburg, c. 1830. Lithograph from a drawing by Heinrich Mitreiter. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 359

The samovar was a vital part of all Russians' and foreigners' everyday life in St. Petersburg.

Brass samovar, created by "F.P." 1840s. 36 x 32 x 30 cm. Engraved on the base: "Ф. П. ГРМ" ["F. P. In GRM"]. (I.L. Zakharova, Russkie samovary – Russian Samovars [Leningrad: Khudozhnik RSFSR, 1971], plate 69, p. 171)

IMAGE 360

Like most St. Petersburg inhabitants, Anna Whistler did not buy fruit in winter, as it was excessively priced

Petersburg, Fruit Shop. 1858. Xylograph taken from Zhivopisnaia Russkaia biblioteka [Picturesque Russian Library]. (Louman and Pogonian, Velikosvetskie obedы, p. 221)

IMAGE 361

A Russian public bath house. Anna Whistler used the private bath house on old Mr. Drury's estate on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844.

Geoffroy. The Russian Baths. 1845. Engraving after P.Iw. [Ivanov?]. (Anthony G. Cross, "The Russian Banya in the Descriptions of Foreign Travellers and in the Depictions of Foreign and Russian Artists," Oxford Slavonic Papers, n.s., 24 [1991], p. 57)

IMAGE 362

The St. Petersburg dvornik (outdoor–indoor man), a feature of every house Ignatii Stepanovich Shchedrovskii (1815–1870). Petersburg dvornik. 1839. Lithograph. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 363

Anna Whistler engaged a wet nurse when John Bouttatz Whistler was born in 1845.

Aleksei Venetsianov (1780–1847). Wet Nurse with a Child. Early 1830s. Oil on canvas. 66.7 x 53 cm (26.2 x 20.8 in). State Tret'iakov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 364

Front cover of the custom cloth box containing the 24 hand-colored lithograph cards included in the 1834 collection Sobranie risunkov izobrazhainschikh raznozhchikov v S. Peterburge – Cris de St. Pétersbourg, Custom cloth box. 12.5x9.5 cm (5x3 $\frac{3}{4}$ " original green glazed board slipcase with printed paper label on one side and an engraved illustration on the reverse. From the set Sobranie risunkov izobrazhainschikh raznozhchikov v S. Peterburge – Cris de St. Pétersbourg. Collection de petits dessins à l'usage de la jeunesse, dessinés & coloriés dans l'établissement de Charles Beggrov [The Cries of St. Petersburg: A Collection of Small Drawings for the Use of Children, Designed and Colored in the Workshop of Charles Beggrov [Karl Beggrov (1799–1875)]. Sold at auction (with contents) by PBA Galleries, 6 November 2014.

IMAGE 365

“Kazan shoes” are boots of soft leather without demarcation of a sole and heel.

*Kazan shoes. Seller of Kazan boots and slippers. 1834. Hand-colored lithograph card. 5 x 3¾ in. (12.5 x 9.5 cm). From the set Sobranie risunkov izobrazhainshchikh raznoschikov v S. Peterburge – Cris de St. Pétersbourg.*

IMAGE 366

From her European travels in 1846, Sarah (Poulterer) Harrison brought Anna Whistler an elaborate pelerine cape to thank her for taking care of baby Alicia McNeill Harrison.

*Miss Etta Estabrook. Daguerreotype. c. 1845. (Severa, Dressed for the Photographer, p. 55)*

IMAGE 367

Anna Whistler had a brooch made for Mary Brennan from the hair of John Bouttatz Whistler as a memorial after he died in October 1846.

The Victorian Art of Hair Jewelry with Art Historian and Master Jeweler Karen Bachman. Observatory, Brooklyn NY. Course advertisement, 13 January 2013, accessed 5 October 2021, <http://www.observatoryroom.org/2014/05/17/the-victorian-art-of-hair-jewelry-workshop-with-art-historian-and-master-jeweler-karen-bachmann-2/>

IMAGE 368

Major Whistler bought a screw-cushion for Anna Whistler on one of his trips within Russia.

Pincushion and Workholder. c. 1800. Cut steel. Manufactured in Birmingham, England. Victoria and Albert Museum, London (metalwork collection 540-1903).

IMAGE 369

The Life Guards Cavalry Regiment praying in the manège in St. Petersburg in the presence of Emperor Nicholas I

Celebrating the 50th Anniversary of the Appointment of Emperor Nicholas I as Chief of the Cavalry Regiment at the Mikhailovskiy Manege. 1849. Oil on canvas. 56 x 88 cm. State Museum of the History of St. Petersburg (I-A-235-g); previously in the collection of the Life Guards Cavalry Regiment; a gift to the regiment in 1849 according to the will of the Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich.

IMAGE 370

Members of the Cavalier (Imperial Household) Guard, of which Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna was head. In English, the Cavalier Guard is called the Horse Guard.

The Cavalier (Imperial Household) Guard in the Reign of Nicholas I (Panchulidzev, Istoriia Kavaler gardov, vol. 4, facing page 140)

IMAGE 371

Pages of Nicholas I, who is purported to have offered to educate James and Willie in his Corps of Pages after Major Whistler's death

Carl Piratskii (c. 1814–1871). The Court Grenadiers and Pages in the Military Gallery of the Winter Palace (detail). 1848. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 372

Ladies-in-waiting to Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna

Adolphe Ladurner (1798–1856). Part of the White (Armorial) Hall in the Winter Palace (detail). 1838. Oil on canvas. 69 x 96 cm (full painting). State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-2436).

IMAGE 373

Once a year, Nicholas I gave a masked ball at which the ladies could approach and speak with frankness to him.

Adolphe Ladurner (1798–1856). The Masked Ball of Nicholas I. 1845. Oil on canvas. State Central Literary Museum, Moscow.

IMAGE 374

Mrs. Trouvellier described to Deborah Whistler that at midnight at a ball where all classes of society were admitted, one's clothing could become quite dishevelled and torn.

“A Ball in the Assembly Hall of the Nobility” (Fradkina, Zal Dvorianskogo sobraniia)

IMAGES 375 THROUGH 382

The Russian Orthodox Church calendar “begins with the Birth of the Holy Virgin on September 8th old or Julian calendar, September 21st new or Gregorian calendar. This holy day corresponds closely to the date of the Jewish New Year which to the Hebrews signified a new beginning of their life. Similarly the early Church, which generally closely followed the Old Testament celebrations of the Hebrews, proclaimed the new Christian era with the birth of the Holy Virgin, Who was to be the Mother of Our Lord Jesus Christ, Who in turn by His birth, was to bring a new era into the world – the era of Christianity” (N.E. Mokhoff, ed. Holy Days of the Church: A Short Synopsis of Pascha and the Twelve Major Feasts and Fasts of the Orthodox Church [New York: Russian Orthodox Youth Committee, 2001], p. 1). The images of the icons shown here are presented according to the Russian Orthodox calendar year, starting with the birth of Mary and ending with her death.

The icons discussed represent those of the twelve major feast days of the Russian Orthodox Church that Anna Whistler had occasion to be present during the celebration of, evoking from her comments of approval, disapproval, interpretation, misunderstanding, and sometimes sheer ignorance.

Images are reprinted with permission from Mokhoff, Holy Days of the Church. In the twenty-first century, when Mokhoff’s book was published, the difference between Old and New Style became thirteen days.

IMAGE 375

Icon of the immoveable feast day of the Birth of the Most Holy Mother of God, Mary, daughter of the elderly couple Joachim and Anna. Her birth signifies that “the great task of saving mankind from enslavement to sin as promised to the first man” (Mokhoff, p. 3) has begun. While living on the Peterhof Road in the summer of 1844, Anna Whistler, hearing of this feast day, the first in the Church calendar year, celebrated on 8/20 September, confused it with the Epiphany, celebrated on 2/14 February, and then dismissed it as probably having to do with the Virgin Mary.

Nativity of the Holy Virgin (p. 2)

IMAGE 376

Icon of the moveable feast day in March of the Annunciation of the Most Holy Mother of God commemorates the announcement by the Angel Gabriel to the Blessed Virgin Mary of the conception of Jesus in her womb.

Annunciation (p. 6)

IMAGE 377

Icon of the immovable feast day the Nativity of Christ, celebrated on 25 December / 6 January and called Christmas. Anna Whistler recorded in December 1843 and December 1845 – January 1846 the Whistler family's secular preparations for and celebration of Christmas.

The Nativity of Christ (p. 8)

IMAGE 378

Icon of the moveable feast day the Entry of Jesus into Jerusalem, called by Western Christians “Palm Sunday” and by Russian Orthodox Christians “Pussy Willow Sunday” as well, occurring on the Sunday before Easter. Anna Whistler described her, James, and Willie’s excursion with Major Bouttatz in the week before Palm Sunday of 1844 to buy trinkets associated with this feast day.

Entrance of the Lord into Jerusalem (p. 16)

IMAGE 379

Icon of the moveable feast day the Resurrection of Our Lord (Easter Sunday), when Jesus, who had announced before his crucifixion that he would be resurrected three days later, emerged alive from his tomb. Anna Whistler, who attended the Easter service at the Roman Catholic Church of St. Catherine, Maiden and Martyr in 1844 with William Hooper Ropes, described the music, the service, and the activity there in extensive detail.

Easter (Pascha) – Resurrection of Our Lord (p. 20)

IMAGE 380

Icon of the moveable feast of the Pentacost (Descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles), also called “Trinity Sunday” by the Western and the Russian Orthodox Church, and popularly “Whitsunday,” occurring on the fiftieth day after Easter and the tenth day after the Ascension of Jesus. An important feast day in the Russian Orthodox Church, Pentacost marks the beginning of the spread of Christianity (Mokhoff, p. 25). Anna Whistler mentions having attended the English Church that Sunday and points out that the poorer classes do not understand the meaning of this great feast day and regard it as the first day of summer.

Pentacost – Descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles (p. 24)

IMAGE 381

Icon of the Transfiguration of Our Lord, an immovable feast day in Russia, celebrated on 6/18 August, represents the moment on Mount Tabor when Jesus' raiment and visage are transfigured and his future suffering and death are presaged (Mokhoff, p. 15). When the Whistlers were living on the Peterhof Road in 1844, Anna Whistler did not know the name of the religious holiday, but knew that it had its counterpart in the folk holiday called "the Blessing of the Apples."

Transfiguration of Our Lord (p. 14)

IMAGE 382

Icon of the Dormition of the Most Holy Mother of God, also called “The Assumption,” an immovable feast day falling on 15/27 August, celebrates the death and apotheosis of the Virgin Mary, when she is taken into heaven by her son, Jesus (Mokhoff, pp. 27–29). When the Whistlers were living on the Peterhof Road in 1844, Anna Whistler responded to this event with skeptical sarcasm.

Dormition of the Ever-Holy Mother of God (p. 28)

THE ST. PETERSBURG ENVIRONS

TSARSKOE SELO

In May 1844, Maxwell took Anna Whistler, Debo, James, and Willie to Tsarskoe Selo to visit Colonel Todd. In 1846, Anna Whistler, James, and Willie went there to see the monument to the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna and also visited the Arsenal.

IMAGE 383

The Whistlers rode on the St. Petersburg–Tsarskoe Selo–Pavlovsk Railway when they visited Colonel Todd in May 1844.

Karl Petrovich Beggrov (1799–1875). Tsarskoe Selo Railway Train. 1840s. Watercolor on paper. 9.5 x 14 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERG-20092).

IMAGE 384

The Pleasure Garden at Pavlovsk, the terminus of the St. Petersburg–Tsarskoe Selo–Pavlovsk Railway, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited while being entertained by Colonel Todd in May 1844

C. Schultz. Pleasure Garden in Pavlovsk. c. 1845. Lithograph from an original by Johann Jacob Meyer (1787–1858). (Meyer, Vues pittoresque des palais)

IMAGE 385

The west façade of the Great Tsarskoe Selo (Catherine) Palace

Vasilii Sadovnikov (1800–1879). The West Façade of the Great Palace. 1860. Watercolor on paper. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 386

The Lyon Drawing Room in the Great Tsarskoe Selo (Catherine) Palace, with its lapis lazuli ornamentation and yellow silk wall hanging Luigi Premazzi (1814–1891). The Lyon Drawing Room in the Great Palace at Tsarskoe Selo. 1878. Watercolor on paper. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 387

Catherine the Great's "snuffbox" room in the Great Tsarskoe Selo (Catherine) Palace

Vladimir Ivanovich (Woldemar) Hau (1816–1895). Blue Cabinet called The Snuffbox. Watercolor. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums. (I.W. Bardowskaja and G.D. Chodassewitch, Deutsche Prinzessinnen auf Russischem Thron: Schätze aus Zarskoje Selo, der Sommerresidenz bei St. Petersburg [German Princesses on the Russian Throne: Treasures from Tsarskoye Selo, the Summer Residence near St. Petersburg] (Berlin: Kulturstiftung Schloß Britz, 1992), p. 6)

IMAGE 388

The Alexander Palace, where the family of Nicholas I lived and his daughter Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna died in August 1844

C. Schultz. The Palace of Alexandre at Tzarskoé-sélo. c. 1820. Lithograph in black with second fawn tint stone on ivory wove paper; after J. Meyer. Image: 24.6 × 35.4 cm; sheet: 40.1 × 57 cm. Art Institute of Chicago (1960.694); gift of Ralph Horween.

IMAGES 389, 390

The Great Chinese Bridge with its lifelike figures that appealed greatly to James and Willie Giovanni Bianci. (1811–1893). Great Chinese Bridge in Tsarskoe Selo. 1870s. Albumen print. 19.5 x 26.5; 30 x 40 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERFT-2509).

Figure of a Chinese man: Detail from the Chinese Bridge. Photograph. Early 1900s. (Pamiatniki arkhitektury prigorodov Leningrada, p. 115)

IMAGE 391

Anna Whistler and members of her family visited the Arsenal in Tsarskoe Selo in the summer of 1846.

The Arsenal in Tsarskoe Selo. 1860. (Gille, Tsarskosel'skii muzei, frontispiece)

IMAGE 392

The coat-of-arms gallery on the upper floor of the Arsenal

The Upper Floor Gallery in the Arsenal at Tsarskoe Selo. 1830. Archive of A. Menelas, Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 393

Tipoo Sahib's saddle in the Arsenal at Tsarskoe Selo

Saddle Belonging to Tipoo Sahib in the Arsenal at Tsarskoe Selo. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ORDF-OP-1-20). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 394

Lock and key in the Arsenal at Tsarskoe Selo

Williams, Holy City, after p. 503.

PETERHOF

In June–July 1846, Major and Anna Whistler, James, and Willie traveled by coach from St. Petersburg to Peterhof to attend the outdoor festivities at the Great Peterhof Palace celebrating the marriage of Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna to His Royal Highness Crown Prince Karl Friedrich Alexander of Württemberg.

IMAGE 395

A verstmarker on the Peterhof Road, showing a verst number clearly

D. Listopadov. Verstmarker on the Peterhof Road. 1990s. Photograph. Used with permission.

IMAGE 396

“All Who Mourn” was a mental asylum located at the seventh verst on the Peterhof Road, between Krasnyi Kabachok and Ligovo.

*General View of “All That Mourn” Hospital on the Peterhof Road in 1834. Engraving from a drawing by Aleksei Gornostaev (1808–1862). (Iurii M. Denisov, “Usad’ba XVIII veka na Petergofskoi doroge,” Arkhitekturnoe nasledstvo, 4 [1953], p. 148)*

IMAGE 397

The Trinity-Sergius Monastery on the Peterhof Road, where the Whistlers attended a service in the summer of 1844

*View of the Trinity-Sergius Monastery on the Peterhof Road. 1840s. Lithograph. (Gorbatenko, Petergofskaiia doroga, p. 194)*

IMAGES 398, 399

The Strel'na Palace, belonging to His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich, son of Nicholas I

C. Schultz. The Strel'na Palace. c. 1845. Lithograph from an original by Johann Jacob Meyer (1787–1858). (Meyer, Vues pittoresques des palais)

Alexey Gornostayev (1808–1862). Palace in Strel'na. 1847. Watercolor, gouache. 25.7 x 38 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR–5529). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 400

The Great Peterhof Palace is depicted by Aivazovskii as it was in 1844. The Samson fountain is in the left foreground. Figures fencing with water are in the middle ground. A view of the Great Cascade is below the palace.

Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii (1817–1900). Great Peterhof Palace. 1844. Oil on canvas. 44.2 x 62.3 cm. Depository of the Peterhof Museum Preserve.

IMAGE 401

Ivory panel with relief depicting the coronation of Catherine I by Peter the Great in Moscow in 1724, which Anna Whistler admired in an unspecified building at Peterhof

The Coronation of Catherine I. First half of 18th century. Rectangular ivory panel with relief. 16.3 x 12.3 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERTH-2144). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 402

Terrace of the Monplazir Palace, in which Anna Whistler saw the personal nightclothes of Peter the Great

The Terrace of the Monplazir Palace. Watercolor on paper. 17.7 x 26 cm. Fasanerie Archive, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mitgift einer Zarentochter, pp. 92–93)

IMAGE 403

Peterhof Hermitage (Little Monplazir), where the Whistlers saw paintings of birds made by Peter the Great

The Hermitage at Peterhof. Watercolor on paper. 17.2 x 24 cm. Schloss Fasenerie Archive, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mitgift einer Zarentochter, pp. 92–93)

OTHER EXCURSIONS

IMAGE 404

Plans for a trip to Lake Ladoga from St. Petersburg were discussed at some length by Anna Whistler's friends, but it is not clear whether the trip ever took place.

Petr E. Zabolotskii (1803–1866). View of Old Ladoga. 1833. Oil on canvas. 25.9 x 44.8 in. (66 x 114 cm). State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGES 405A AND 405B

The palace of Peter the Great at Ekateringof, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited with a large party of friends, including the Gellibrands and Ropeses, in August 1844 from their dacha on the Peterhof Road

The Palace of Peter I in Ekateringof. Mid-19th century. Engraving. (Batorevich, Ekateringof, p. 128)

Domenico Trezzini [architect: c. 1670–1734]; photograph by the “Education Society.” Old Ekateringof. c. 1911. Photograph. (G. Balitskii and N. Rusov, eds., Istoricheskaia panorama Sanktpeterburga i ego okrestnosti [Historical Panorama of St. Petersburg and Its Environs] [Moscow: Tipografiia Russkogo Tovarishchestva, 1911], plate 20)

IMAGE 406

In around 1825, Karl Gampel'n drew this panorama of the May Day celebrations at Ekateringof, depicting the promenade on foot or in carriages, when merchant-class attendees actually sought out potential wives.

Carl Hampeln (c. 1794 – after 1880). Panorama of the Yekaterinof Outdoor Festival on 1 May 1825. c. 1825. Colored aquatint. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 407

From their dacha on the Peterhof Road, Anna Whistler and her children took a ride with Joseph Samuel Ropes in the summer of 1844 on the Krasnoe Selo Road, which leads to Krasnyi Kabachok, a tavern famed in Russian history and literature. They did not, however, go to the tavern.

The Road to Krasnyi Kabachok. 1813. After a drawing by Alexander Zauerweid (1783–1844). Russian National Library, Moscow.

IMAGE 408

Luisa Kessenikh, a retired German soldier, owned the Krasnyi Kabachok (Red, or Beautiful, Tavern) at Krasnoe Selo.

Portrait of Luisa Kessenikh. 19th century. Drawing by an unknown artist. (Batorevich, Ekateringof, p. 163)

IMAGE 409

Elagin Island, location of the Alexander Palace, an Imperial summer residence, is referred to by Anna Whistler as the “Alargon.”

Nikanor Grigorievich Chernetsov (1805–1879). View of the Yelagin and Alexander Palace. 1839. Watercolor on card. Signed in Cyrillic and dated 1839. Private collection; sold at auction by Sotheby's, 2 June 2015.

IMAGE 410

St. Nicholas Church in Kolpino, from which the miracle-working icon of St. Nicholas was brought annually on St Nicholas Day, to the small chapel some three miles away, where the holy image was said to have first appeared. St. Nicholas Church is on the left; the building on the right is the belltower of Holy Trinity Cathedral.

Church of St. Nicholas in Kolpino. (A. Vasiliev, "Puteshestvie po Rossii" ["A Journey Through Russia"], Illustratsiia 34 [1845]: p. 133)

THE IMPERIAL FAMILY

IMAGE 411

Peter I (the Great), founder of St. Petersburg, aspects of whose life Anna Whistler mentioned extensively Jean-Marc Nattier (1685–1766). Portrait of Emperor Peter the Great (1672-1725). 1717. 142.5 x 110 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1856).

IMAGE 412

Catherine I. Anna Whistler, in discussing Imperial residences in Tsarskoe Selo and Peterhof, frequently confused changes made by Catherine I, wife of Peter I (the Great), and by Catherine II (the Great).

Jean-Marc Nattier (1685–1766). Portrait of Empress Catherine I (1684–1727). 1717. 142.5 x 110 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1857).

IMAGE 413

Anna Whistler mentioned that the daughters of Peter the Great made elaborate changes to the simple residences their father had built in the environs of St. Petersburg. It was Empress Elizaveta who is known to have done so.

Ivan Vishnyakov (1699–1761). Portrait of Empress Elizaveta Petrovna. 1743. Oil on canvas. 254.5 x 179.8 cm (100.1 x 70.7 in). State Tret'iaikov Gallery, Moscow.

IMAGE 414

Catherine II (the Great) is mentioned by Anna Whistler in connection with her changes to some of the Imperial residences in the environs of St. Petersburg.

*Portrait of Catherine II. Late 1700s. Oil on canvas; after Dmitri Grigorievich Levitskii (1735–1822). Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums. (Bardowskaja and Chodassewitch, Deutsche Prinzessinnen, p. 5)*

IMAGES 415, 416

Anna Whistler mentioned the deceased Empress Maria Fyodorovna, mother of Nicholas I, when writing of the death of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna in 1844.

Élisabeth Vigée Le Brun (1755–1842). Portrait of Maria Feodorovna (1759-1828), Empress of Russia. 1790s. Oil on canvas.

Alexander Roslin (1718–1793). Portrait of Grand Duchess Maria Feodorovna (Sophie Dorothea of Württemberg). 1777. Oil on canvas. 265 x 178 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-1357).

IMAGE 417

Paul I, husband of Empress Maria Fyodorovna, and father of Nicholas I

Alexander Roslin (1718–1793). Portrait of Grand Prince Paul Petrovich, future Emperor Paul I. 1777. Oil on canvas. 265 x 168 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-1356).

IMAGE 418

Emperor Alexander I, whose apartments in the Great Tsarskoe Selo (Catherine) Palace Anna Whistler, her children, and Maxwell visited in May 1844

George Dawe (1781–1829). Alexander I, Emperor of Russia (1777–1825). c. 1818–1825. Oil on canvas. 94.5 x 61 in. (240.2 x 155 cm). Royal Collection, England.

IMAGE 419

Anna Whistler mentioned the death (1826) of Empress Elizaveta Alekseevna, wife of Alexander I, in citing Imperial deaths.

George Dawe (1781–1829). Portrait of Empress Elizaveta Alekseevna. 1828. Oil on canvas. 86.5 x 60.4 cm. State Museum Preserve of Peterhof.

IMAGE 420

The Tsarskoe Selo Carousel, painted by Horace Vernet in 1843: (left to right) Aleksandr Nikolaevich, Crown Prince; Maksimilian Leuchtenberg, husband of Maria Nikolaevna, eldest daughter of Nicholas I and Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna; Emperor Nikolai I; Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna; Olga Nikolaevna, their second daughter; Aleksandra Nikolaevna, their third daughter; Konstantin Nikolaevich, their second son. In the foreground on foot: Nikolai Nikolaevich, their third son, and Mikhail Nikolaevich, their fourth son. Only Maria Nikolaevna, their eldest daughter, is not in the portrait.

Horace Vernet (1789–1863). The Tsarskoe Selo Carousel. 1843. Oil on canvas. 248 x 340 cm. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 421

Nicholas I, Emperor of Russia, about the time the Whistlers lived there, who gratefully appreciated the talent and moral rectitude of Major Whistler

Yegor Botman (1821–1891). Portrait of Emperor Nicholas I (1796–1855). 1850s. Oil on canvas. 84.7 x 67 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-619).

IMAGE 422

A portrait of Emperor Nicholas I owned by the Maingay family

Emperor Nicholas I. Miniature. Courtesy of Dr. Hugh Maingay.

IMAGE 423

Nicholas I is wearing the parade uniform of the Cavalier Guard (Imperial Household) Regiment, the head of which was his wife, Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna. In English, the Cavalier Guard is called the Horse Guard.

A.V. Schmidt. Nicholas I in the Parade Uniform of the Cavalier (Imperial Household) Guard Regiment. 1830s. Institute of Russian Literature of the Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House), St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 424

Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna, wife of Nicholas I.

Christina Robertson (1796–1854). Portrait of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna. c. 1845. Oil on canvas. 84 x 65 cm. Pushkin State Museum of Fine Arts, Moscow.

IMAGE 425

Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich (future Alexander II), about 30 years old (c. 1848)

Winberg. Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich. Miniature.

IMAGE 426

Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna, wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaevich, the future Alexander II

Christina Robertson (1796–1854). Portrait of Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna. 1849. Oil on canvas. 249 x 157 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-5254).

IMAGE 427

Daguerrotype of Her Imperial Majesty, Maria Aleksandrovna, wife of Emperor Alexander II

Charles Bergamasco (1830–1896). Grand Duchess Maria Aleksandrovna. 1860–1870. Daguerrotype. (Das Russland der Zaren: Photographien von 1839 bis zur Oktoberrevolution [The Russia of the Tsars: Photographs from 1839 to the October Revolution] [Berlin: Nishen, 1989], p. 106)

IMAGE 428

Grand Dukes Aleksandr Aleksandrovich, Vladimir Aleksandrovich, and Nikolai Aleksandrovich, sons of Grand Duke Aleksandr Nikolaeovich and grandsons of Nicholas I. Nikolai Aleksandrovich was Crown Prince but predeceased his father, thus making Aleksandr Aleksandrovich Crown Prince, the future Aleksander III. Anna Whistler saw Grand Duke Nikolai Aleksandrovich at a review in May 1847, when he was about four years old.

Christina Robertson (1796–1854). Grand Dukes Aleksandr Aleksandrovich, Vladimir Aleksandrovich, and Nikolai Aleksandrovich as Children. 1849. Watercolor, gouache on Bristol board. 27.2 x 21 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (OR-18965). Photograph © The State Hermitage Museum.

IMAGE 429

Grand Duke Nikolai Aleksandrovich wearing a scarlet shirt. Emma Maingay informed Anna Whistler that only the Imperial children wore such scarlet shirts.

Vladimir Ivanovich (Woldemar) Hau (1816–1895). Portrait of Tsarevich Nicholas Alexandrovich of Russia. c. 1847. Watercolor heightened with white over pencil on paper. 27 by 21.5cm (10¾ by 8½ in.). Institute of Russian Literature of the Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House), St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 430

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna, eldest daughter of Nicholas I

Christina Robertson (1796–1854). Portrait of Grand Princess Maria Nikolayevna (1819–1876). 1841. Oil on canvas. 249 x 151 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-4784).

IMAGE 431

His Imperial Highness Maximilian, Duke of Leuchtenberg, husband of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Maria Nikolaevna, eldest daughter of Nicholas I

Petr Fedorovich Sokolov (1787–1848). Maximilian, Duke of Leuchtenberg. c. 1847. Watercolor over pencil and pen and black ink, heightened with gum arabic. 25 x 21 cm (9 4/5 x 8 1/4 in.). Auctioned at Bonham's, London, 8 June 2009.

IMAGE 432

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna, second daughter of Nicholas I, whose outdoor wedding festivities the Whistlers attended in 1846 at Peterhof Nicaise de Keyser (1813–1887). Portrait of Grand Princess Olga Nikolayevna (1822-1892), Daughter of Emperor Nicholas I of Russia. 1848. Oil on canvas. 82.5 x 71 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-1271).

IMAGE 433

Crown Prince Karl of Württemberg, husband of Grand Duchess Olga Nikolaevna, second daughter of Nicholas I Franz Xaver Winterhalter (1805–1873). Portrait of Prince Karl von Württemberg in Uniform. 1856. Oil on canvas. 92 x 69.5 cm. (36.2 x 27.4 in.). Private collection.

IMAGE 434

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, the youngest daughter of Nicholas I, who died in August 1844

Christina Robertson (1796–1854). Portrait of Grand Princess Aleksandra Nikolayevna. 1840. Oil on canvas. 249 x 151 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (GE-1351).

IMAGE 435

Prince Friedrich of Hesse-Kassel, husband of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna

Karl Steiben (1788–1856). Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Hesse-Kassel. 1843. Oil on canvas. Palace Museum, Pavlovsk, Russia.

IMAGE 436

His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich, second son of Nicholas I

Franz Krüger (1797–1857). Portrait of Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolayevich of Russia (1827–1892). Mid-19th century. Oil on canvas. 54.5 x 43.5 cm (21.4 x 17.1 in.). State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERZh-640).

IMAGE 437

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna, wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich

Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna. (Kalendar' na 1850 god. S portretom Eë Imperatorskogo Vysochestva Gosdaryni Velikoi Kniagini Aleksandry Iosifovny [Calendar for 1850, with a Portrait of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna] [St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1849], p. 1)

IMAGE 438

Anna Whistler attended the betrothal ceremony of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich and Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna in 1847.

Grand Duke Konstantin Nikolaevich and Grand Duchess Aleksandra Iosifovna. 1857–1861.
Photograph. Russian State Film and Photo Archive, Krasnogorsk.

IMAGE 439

His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Nicholas I

Ivan Nikolaevich Kramskoi (1837–1887). Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich. 1845. Oil on canvas. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 440

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna, the wife of His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Nicholas I

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Portrait of Grand Duchess Yelena Pavlovna with Her Daughter. 1830. Oil on canvas. 265 x 185 cm. State Russian Museum, St. Petersburg.

IMAGE 441

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna was the daughter of Grand Duke Mikhail Pavlovich, brother of Nicholas I, and Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna. She was married in January 1844, about the same time as her cousin, Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, and died in 1845 in childbirth.

Vladimir Ivanovich (Woldemar) Hau (1816–1895). Portrait of Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna. 1844. Watercolor on paper. 28 x 22 cm. Signed and dated “W. Hau 1844.” Private collection; sold at auction by Ruzhnikov, UK.

IMAGE 442

His Serene Highness Duke Adolphe Wilhelm of Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxemburg, who married Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Elizaveta Mikhailovna, niece of Nicholas I, in January 1844

Josef Kriehuber (1800–1876). Portrait of Adolphe, Grand Duke of Luxembourg. 1835. Lithograph. 34.9 x 47 cm. Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Vienna (oai:baa.onb.at:5296126).

IMAGE 443

Prince Grigorii Grigorievich Orlov, lover of Catherine the Great and grandfather of Count Aleksei Alekseevich Bobrinskii, in whose mansion the Whistlers lived as a family from September 1843 to May 1844

Fyodor Rokotov (1735–1808). Portrait of Grigory Orlov (1734-1783). c. 1763. Oil on canvas. 38.1 x 29.8 in. (96.9 x 75.8 cm). State Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow.

GRAND DUCHESS ALEKSANDRA NIKOLAEVNA

IMAGE 444

Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna at the time of her betrothal to Prince Friedrich of Hesse-Kassel in 1843

Charles Pohl. Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. 1843. Lithograph by M. Golde, Imperial Lithograph in St. Petersburg from a watercolor by Woldemar Hau (1816–1895). 33 x 28.8 cm. Museum Schloss Fasenerie, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mitgift einer Zarentochter, pp. 104–105)

IMAGE 445

Prince Friedrich of Hesse-Kassel at the time of his betrothal to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna in 1843

Charles Pohl. Prince Friedrich Wilhelm of Hesse-Kassel. 1843. Lithograph by M. Golde, Imperial Lithograph in St. Petersburg from an oil painting by Woldemar Hau (1816–1895). 33 x 28.8 cm. Museum Schloss Fasanerie, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mütigt einer Zarentochter, pp. 104–105)

IMAGE 446

First page of the Ceremonial received by John S. Maxwell, then secretary of the American Legation in St. Petersburg

First page of the Ceremonial approved by His Majesty the Emperor for the marriage of Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna and His Serene Highness Prince Friedrich of Hesse (N-YHS: Maxwell Papers)

IMAGE 447

The (New) Alexander Palace in Tsarskoe Selo, where the Imperial family lived, and where Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna died

Unknown artist. Palace in Tsarskoe Selo. 1855. Watercolor on paper. 18.4 x 32.3 cm. Schloss Fasanerie Archive, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mitgift einer Zarentochter, pp. 98–99)

IMAGE 448

Plan of the first floor of the (New) Alexander Palace in Tsarskoe Selo, showing (*) the location of the oratory created in memory of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, between the bedroom of her mother, Her Imperial Majesty, Aleksandra Fyodorovna, and the Blue Salon

Plan of the Alexander Palace, First Floor. Drawing based on original plan by Giacomo Quarenghi (1744–1817). (adapted from E.F. Gollerbakh, Detskoe'skie dvortsy-muzei i parki Putevoditel' [St. Petersburg: Gosudarstvennoe izdatel'stvo, 1922], p. 59)

IMAGE 449

Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna's room in the New (Alexander) Palace in Tsarskoe Selo

Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. Ma Chambre à Zarskoe Selo 16 Oct [My Room at Tsarskoe Selo 16 Oct], 1843. Pencil on paper. 22.4 x 28.4 cm. Schloss Fasanerie Archive, Eichenzell, Germany. (Dobler et al., Die mitgift einer Zarentochter, pp. 100–101)

IMAGE 450

The study of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna in the (New) Alexander Palace, in which her daughter Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna died in 1844

Vladimir Ivanovich (Woldemar) Hau (1816–1895). After 1840. Study of Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna. Watercolor. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums. (Bardowskaja and Chodassewitch, Deutsche Prinzessinnen, p. 22)

IMAGE 451

Portrait of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna painted in 1845

Vladimir Ivanovich (Woldemar) Hau (1816–1895). Portrait of Grand Duchess Alexandra Nikolaevna. 1845. Watercolor. 24.4 x 20.7 cm. State Hermitage Museum, St. Petersburg (ERR-9416).

IMAGE 452

In 1846, Anna Whistler visited the oratory dedicated to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna (1825–1844), created in the corner of the study of her mother, Empress Aleksandra Fyodorovna, in the (New) Alexander Palace. The candlestick and the portrait of Aleksandra Nikolaevna that it stood in front of are shown here.

Interior of the Oratory in the Alexander Palace, 1930s. Photograph. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 453

In the oratory dedicated to Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna hung a portrait of the deceased grand duchess ascending into heaven, painted in 1845 by Karl Briullov.

Karl Briullov (1799–1852). Holy Tsarina Alexandra, Ascended to Heaven. 1845. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 454

Anna Whistler visited the monument to the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna and her deceased child, Prince Wilhelm, in Tsarskoe Selo in 1846.

Paolo Catozzi (pavilion) and Giovanni Vitali (statue). Monument in memory of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. 1845. Marble. Archive of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums; courtesy of the Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 455

The statue of the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna and her deceased child

Giovanni Vitali. Statue of the Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. 1845. Marble. Depository of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums; photograph courtesy of the Archive of the Tsarskoe Selo Palace–Museums.

IMAGE 456

The statue of the deceased Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna and her deceased child is said to resemble the angel holding a baby on the tomb of Princess Charlotte and her deceased child in St. George's Chapel in Windsor, England.

Sir Benjamin Stone (1838–1914). Princess Charlotte's Monument in St George's Chapel at Windsor Castle. 1899. Platinum print (detail). Royal Collection, Windsor Castle, England (RCIN 2507452).

IMAGE 457

In 1846, Anna Whistler visited the little wooden house at Tsarskoe Selo erected in memory of the late Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna.

D. Efimov. The Little House in Tsarskoe Selo in Memory of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna. 1845. Wood construction. (Vil'chkovskii, Tsarskoe Selo, facing p. 190)

IMAGES 458, 459

Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, who had tuberculosis, was given the “cowshed treatment” at the farm in Tsarskoe Selo, but could not endure it.

The Royal Farm at Tsarskoe Selo. Photograph. 1910. (Benois, Tsarskoe Selo, p. 221)

The Farm Wing with Tower. Photograph. Beginning of the 1900s. (Pamiatniki arkhitektury prigorodov Leningrada, p. 127)

IMAGE 460

Alexandra Hospital for Women, established in memory of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna in 1844 by her husband Prince Friedrich of Hesse-Kassel

View from Nadezhdinskaia Street of the Alexandrinsky Hospital for Women. Photograph. Sobory, accessed 16 November 2021, <https://sobory.ru/photo/224873>

A VISIT TO ENGLAND IN 1847

IMAGE 461

Northwest view of York Minster, in which Anna Whistler attended a service

York Minster from the N.W. (Stranger's Guide 1850)

IMAGE 462

A view of the ruins of St. Mary's Abbey in York, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited in the summer of 1847

Ruins of St. Mary's Abbey (Stranger's Guide 1850)

IMAGE 463

Scarborough viewed from the Sands, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited in June–July

John Bell. View from the Sands, Scarborough. Engraved by Theakston, 31 St. Nicholas Street, Scarborough. From a sheet of writing paper used by James Whistler in 1847 to write to his father. (James Whistler to Major George Washington Whistler, Preston, entry for July 3 in a letter of Monday, June 21, [18]47, GUL: Whistler Collection, W654)

IMAGE 464

Cooper Hill, Walton-le-dale, Lancashire, home of Charles Swainson, where James celebrated his thirteenth birthday in July 1847

*Cooper Hill, Walton-le-dale, Lancashire. Seat of Charles Swainson Esq<sup>r</sup>. 1855. Lithograph. (Hardwick, History of Preston, facing p. 568)*

IMAGE 465

Anna Whistler, James, and Willie walked through the grounds of Hornby Castle en route to Preston in the summer of 1847.

Hornby Castle (James Hogg, ed. Fortunes Made in Business: A Series of Original Sketches Biographical and Anecdotal from the Recent History of Industry and Commerce by Various Writers, 3 vols. [London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1884–1887], vol. 2, p. 58)

IMAGE 466

Anna Whistler, James, and Willie saw Hornby Church while en route to Preston in the summer of 1847.

Hornby Church (Hogg, Fortunes, vol. 2, p. 98)

IMAGE 467

Chaddock Hall, home of Robert Smith, cotton mill owner, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited in 1847 and Deborah had visited in 1846, when in England for her health's sake

Chaddock Hall, 1860. 1912. Sketch from a lithograph. Courtesy of J.H.R. Cunliffe.

IMAGE 468

Anna Whistler revisited Worsley in July 1847, a year after St. Mark's Church and the new mansion of Lord Francis Egerton, 1st Earl of Ellesmere, were completed and he was raised to the Peerage.

Edwin Longsden Long (1829–1891). Francis Egerton, 1st Earl of Ellesmere. c. 1850. Oil on canvas. 50 x 40<sup>1</sup>/<sub>8</sub> in. (127 x 102 cm). National Portrait Gallery, London (NPG 5524).

IMAGE 469

Agnes (Walton) Ryley was a friend of Eliza Winstanley's in Preston

Portrait of Agnes (Walton) Ryley c. 1870. Courtesy of David Hunt, Preston, Lancashire.

IMAGE 470

One of the mills owned by “Cotton Lords” of Preston, some of whom, Anna Whistler mentions, came to consult John Winstanley

Messrs Swainson Birley & Co Mill Preston. 1856. Lithograph. (Hardwick, History of Preston, facing p. 425)

IMAGE 471

The Philosophical Institution and residence of W. Ainsworth, a friend of the Winstanleys, in Preston

Philosophical Institution and Residence of W. Ainsworth, Esq. Preston. 1854. Lithograph. (Hardwick, History of Preston, facing p. 451)

IMAGE 472

Deborah Delano Whistler and Francis Seymour Haden were married in the Parish Church in Preston on 16 October 1847.

William Physick. Preston Church, about 1845. (Hunt, History of Preston, p. 31).

IMAGE 473

Members of Dr. William Winstanley's household came to the home of his brother John Winstanley to congratulate Deborah (Whistler) Haden and Francis Seymour Haden on their wedding day, 16 October 1847.

William Winstanley. (Brockbank, Sketches of the Lives of the Medical Staff of the Manchester Infirmary, facing p. 241)

IMAGE 474

Anna Whistler mentioned the Strand in October 1847, when she and her family were about to depart London for St. Petersburg after Deborah Delano Whistler's marriage to Francis Seymour Haden.

Thomas Shutter Boys (1803–1874). Entry to the Strand from Charing Cross. 1842. Lithograph. (Thomas Shutter Boys, Original Views of London as it is, 1842: A Re-issue of the Complete Set of These Scarce and Valuable Delineations of London, with Descriptive Notes to Each Plate, and a Short Introduction by E. Beresford Chancellor [London: Architectural Press, 1926], p. 85, plate 19)

IMAGE 475

Anna Whistler mentioned her visit in October 1847 to Westminster Abbey, when James could not draw because a service was about to start.

Thomas Shutter Boys (1803–1874). Westminster Abbey. 1842. Lithograph. (Boys, Original Views of London, p. 43, plate 8)

IMAGE 476

Anna Whistler mentioned walking through St. James's Park and seeing Buckingham Palace before embarking for St. Petersburg in October 1847.

Thomas Shottesboys. Buckingham Palace from St. James's Park. 1842. Hand-colored lithograph. Private collection. (Boys, Original Views of London, p 51, plate 10)

IMAGE 477

Anna Whistler records in 1847 having attended a service at Holy Trinity Church on Sloane Street, the parish church of Francis Seymour and Deborah (Whistler) Haden

Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, Chelsea, London. c. 1890. Contemporary picture postcard.

A TRIP TO EUROPE AND ENGLAND IN 1848

IMAGE 478

Bertel Thorvaldsen, whose sculptures in Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady) in Copenhagen Anna Whistler, James, and Willie viewed in July 1848

Horace Vernet. Bertel Thorvaldsen (1768–1844) with the Bust of Horace Vernet. 1838. Oil on canvas. 38 x 29½ in. (96.5 x 74.9 cm). Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (62.254).

IMAGE 479

Thorvaldsen's Museum in Copenhagen, where Anna Whistler and Willie visited his mausoleum in September 1848.

Image courtesy of Thorvaldsen's Museum, Copenhagen, Denmark.

IMAGE 480

Front view of Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen

Vor Frue Kirke (Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen, Denmark. Photograph courtesy of Vor Frue Kirke Archives, Copenhagen, Denmark.

IMAGE 481

Bertel Thorvaldsen's sculpture Christ, in Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady), made a deep impression on Anna Whistler, who viewed it in July 1848.

Bertel Thorvaldsen. Christ. c. 1830. Marble. Vor Frue Kirke (Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen, Denmark. Photograph courtesy of Vor Frue Kirke Archives.

IMAGE 482

Anna Whistler viewed the Angel font resting on a carpet when she visited Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady) in July 1848.

Bertel Thorvaldsen. Angel Font resting on carpet. Vor Frue Kirke (Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen, Denmark. Photograph courtesy of Vor Frue Kirke Archives.

IMAGE 483

Anna Whistler viewed the sculptures of the Twelve Apostles when she visited Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady) in July 1848.

Bertel Thorvaldsen. St. Paul. c.1830. Vor Frue Kirke (Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen, Denmark. Photograph courtesy of Vor Frue Kirke Archives.

IMAGE 484

Anna Whistler viewed the terra cotta pediment of Vor Frue Kirke (The Church of Our Lady), depicting St. John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness, when she visited the church in July 1848.

Bertel Thorvaldsen. St. John Preaching in the Wilderness. Terra cotta. On the pediment of Vor Frue Kirke (Church of Our Lady), Copenhagen, Denmark. Photograph courtesy of Vor Frue Kirke Archives.

IMAGE 485

Oluf Lundt Bang was the Danish obstetrician attending Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna in 1844, whom Anna Whistler met on the Camilla in July 1848.

Oluf Lundt Bang. Lithograph. 23.1 x 30.3 cm. Royal Danish Library, Copenhagen (KBP7).

IMAGE 486

Anna Whistler revisited in 1848 Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw, whom she had met in 1830 through the Stevenson family.

Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw, c. 1814. Image courtesy of John Hersey, descendant of the Shaw family.

IMAGE 487

Anna Whistler first met Georgina Shaw in 1830, seven years after the death of the latter's husband, John Shaw.

John Shaw, physician, husband of Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw, c. 1814. Image courtesy of John Hersey, descendent of the Shaw family.

IMAGE 488

When Anna Whistler visited Georgina (Wardrop) Shaw in 1848, she was not allowed to see her frail mother, Catherine (Fraser) Wardrop, whom Anna Whistler called Mrs. Wardrobe.

William Dickes. Grandmamma [Catherine (Fraser) Wardrop]. c. 1840s. Image courtesy of John Hersey, descendent of the Shaw family.

IMAGE 489

Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited Pastor Richard Henry Smith and his family at Brading Church.

H.W. Bartlett and T. Barker. Brading, Looking Toward St. Helen's. 1834. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1834, facing p. 28)

IMAGE 490

Shanklin Chine on the Isle of Wight, with its steps to the sea.

H. Bartlett and H. Winkles. Shanklin Chine. 1834. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1834, facing p. 67)

IMAGE 491

The parsonage at Shanklin, famed for its myrtles

Frederick Hudson (d. 1889). The Parsonage, Shanklin, I.W. Photograph. c. 1870. Courtesy of the J. Paul Getty Museum, Los Angeles, CA, USA (84.XD.1157.1157).

IMAGE 492

Little Jane's Grave, which Anna Whistler, James, and Willie visited

Grave of Little Jane. Sketch. c. 1850 (Richmond, Annals of the Poor [Philadelphia, PA: Presbyterian Board of Publication, n.d.], p. 193)

IMAGE 493

Anna Whistler, James, and Willie walked from Shanklin through Appuldurcumb Park, Lord Yarborough's estate, on their way to Cook's Castle..

T. Barber. Appuldurcumb Park Lord Yarborough's. 1834. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1834, facing p. 56)

IMAGE 494

Blackgang Chine, where James attempted to draw the waterfall and cavern up the side of the precipice

H.W. Bartlett and J. Tingle. Black-Gang Chine. 1850. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1850, facing p. 83)

IMAGE 495

St. Lawrence Church in 1834 before an extension in 1842 made it no longer the smallest church on the Isle of Wight.

H. Winkles and J. James. St. Lawrence Church. 1834. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1834, facing p. 79)

IMAGE 496

St. Lawrence Church, with its extension, which Anna Whistler saw in 1848.

H. Winkles and J. James. St. Lawrence Church. 1850. Steel engraving. (Barber's Picturesque Guide 1850, facing p. 79)

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS USED

AAA: JMcNW	James McNeill Whistler Papers (Glasgow), Archives of American Art (AAA), Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC
Amburger Datenbank	Amburger Datenbank, Osteuropa Institut München/Historische Abteilung (Munich, Germany)
AMW 1850 Diary	Anna McNeill Whistler 1850 Diary, box 33, Pennell–Whistler Collection, 1597–1937, Manuscript Division, Library of Congress, Washington, DC
APS: Scaliger	B Sca 42, Scaliger Papers, American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia
Arkhiv GE	Arkhiv gosudarstvennogo Ėrmitazha [Archive of the State Hermitage], St. Petersburg
AVPRI	Arkhiv Vneshnei politiki Rossiiskoi Imperii [Archive of Foreign Policy of the Russian Empire], Moscow
AVPRI: Bodisco	AVPRI: Fond DLS i KhD, f. spiski, op. 464, d. 402, Formulirnyi spisok o sluzhbe Chrezvychainogo Poslannika i Polnomochnogo Ministra pri Soedinennykh Amerikanskikh Shtatakh Tainogo Sovetnika Bodisko. Sostavlen 5 <sup>go</sup> Oktiabria 1853 goda [Service Record of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America Privy Councilor Bodisko. Compiled on 5 October 1853].
BRBC STP 1845	RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 13. British Residents and British Congregation St. Petersburg 1845

BUHG: Colin Ingersoll Journal	Colin Ingersoll Journal, Ralph McAllister Ingersoll Collection, Howard Gotlieb Archival Research Center, Boston University
CHS: Whistler	James Whistler Wood [son of Major G.W. Whistler's youngest sister, Caroline (Whistler) Wood], comp., Whistler Family Genealogy ([Chicago]: published by the author, 1903), Chicago Historical Society
Eastwick Letters	The Eastwick family correspondence, some 116 letters, is in the possession of Estelle and David Knapp of New Albany, Ohio.
GLRO	Greater London Records Office and History Library (now the London Metropolitan Archives)
GRM	Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei (GRM) [State Russian Museum], St. Petersburg
GRM OR	Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei Otdel rukopisei [State Russian Museum Manuscript Division], St. Petersburg
GRM OR: Koritskii, Zapisi	Arkhiv Gos. Russkogo muzeia, Fond 22, d. 37 Fond Zheleznova Mikhaila Ivanovicha Kratie zapisi Koritskogo A.O. (uchenik K.P. Briullova) o zhizni i rabotakh K.P. Briullova 1843-1847 [Archive of the State Russian Museum: Collection of M.I. Zheleznov. Brief notes by A.O. Koritskii (pupil of K.P. Briullov) about the life and works of K.P. Briullov 1843–1847], f. 22v, St. Petersburg
GRO	General Register Office for England and Wales
GUL: Laver Papers	James Laver Papers, Special Collections, Glasgow University Library Manuscript Department
GUL: Whistler Collection	Whistler Collection, Special Collections, Glasgow University Library Manuscript Department

HSP	Historical Society of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia
HSP: Harrison Letterbook No. 1	Joseph Harrison, Jr., Letterbooks (No. 1: 15 April 1844 – 27 March 1850; No. 2: 27 March 1851 – 12 February 1852; No. 3: 16 December 1852 – 13 October 1854), Historical Society of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia
HUA	Harvard University Archives, Cambridge, MA
HUBL: Ropes Papers	Ropes Family Papers, Baker Business School Library Special Collections, Harvard University, Cambridge, MA
IGI	The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, International Genealogical Index. This citation refers to all of the documents and information accessible through the extensive IGI database, including ancestry.com.
IRLI	Institut russkoi literatury Akademii nauk (Pushkinskii dom) [Institute of Russian Literature of the Academy of Sciences (Pushkin House)]
JISCE	Journal of the Incorporated Synod of the Church of England in the Diocese of Toronto
KAS	Kilkenny Archaeological Society, Kilkenny, Ireland
LC: P-W	Pennell–Whistler Collection, 1597–1937, Manuscript Division, Library of Congress, Washington, DC
LIIZhT	Leningradskii institut inzhenerov zheleznodorozhnogo transporta [Leningrad Institute of Railway Transport Engineers], Rukopisnyi otdel [Manuscript Division], St. Petersburg
LRA	Leeds Russian Archive Special Collections, Brotherton Library, University of Leeds

LRA: Gellibrand Papers	Gellibrand Family Papers, LRA, MS 1110, Leeds Russian Archive Special Collections, Brotherton Library, University of Leeds
LRA: Lady Gellibrand	An unpublished history of the Gellibrand family by her grandmother, Lady Elizabeth Gellibrand, a copy of which is in the possession of Jane D'Arcy
LRO	Lancashire Record Office, Preston, Lancashire
Maingay Family Papers	This collection includes information and photographs supplied to me by Rosemary K.F. Clarke of Weybourne, Norfolk; her sister, Annabel Maingay of Stiffkey, Norfolk; her aunt and uncle, Dr. Hugh and Mrs. Hope Maingay of Norwich, Norfolk; and her cousin, James Maingay of Schoten, Belgium.
MdHS	Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, MD
MdHS: Winans Papers	Winans Papers, MS 916, H. Furlong Baldwin Library, Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, MD
Mel'nikov, Svedeniia	RGIA: Fond 446, op. 12, d. 4. P.P. Mel'nikov, Svedeniia o russkikh zheleznykh dorogakh [ Information about Russian Railways ], sect. 1, bk. 1
MHS	Massachusetts Historical Society, Boston
MHS: Ropes Papers	Ropes Family Papers, 1734–1952, Massachusetts Historical Society, Boston
MLKML	Martin Luther King Memorial Library, Washington, DC
N-YHS	New-York Historical Society
N-YHS: Bliss Papers	Papers, 1846–1897, MSS Collection (BV Bliss, George); New-York Historical Society Library
N-YHS: Maxwell Papers	John Stevenson Maxwell Papers, New-York Historical Society Library

NAUK	National Archives [UK], Kew, Richmond, Surrey, England
NAUS	U.S. National Archives, Washington, DC
NAUS: Passports, M1371, roll 2	M1371: Registers and Indexes for Passport Applications, American Embassy London Passport Book 1836–1845, roll 2, U.S. National Archives, Washington, DC
NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.2	RG84: Records of Foreign Service Posts, Diplomatic Posts, American Embassy, Great Britain, C18.2: London Passport Book 1836–1845, U.S. National Archives, Washington, DC
NAUS: Passports, RG84, C18.3	RG84: Records of Foreign Service Posts – Diplomatic Posts – Great Britain, vol. 1588, C18.3: Passport Book commencing 9 August 1845, U.S. National Archives, Washington, DC
Nicholson Papers	Papers of the Nicholson Family (c 17/2/23), Manchester Central Library, Manchester, UK
NLS	National Library of Scotland, Edinburgh
NSDAR	National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, Washington, DC
NYPL	New York Public Library
NYPL: AWPD	Anna Whistler's Petersburg Diaries, James McNeill Whistler Papers, MssCol 3311 Manuscripts and Archives Division, New York Public Library
NYPL: Swift Papers	Joseph G. Swift Correspondence, 1809-1862, MssCol. 2935. Manuscripts and Archives Division, New York Public Library
Olographe Testament	The English translation of the will of Baron Alexander Bodisco, originally in French, provided by Robert W. Lyle, curator, Peabody Room, Georgetown Regional Branch of District of Columbia Public Library

OPRS	Old Parochial Registers of Scotland These include Old Parish Registers of Baptisms , Old Parish Registers of Deaths , and Old Parish Registers of Marriage Banns .
PAHRC	Philadelphia Archdiocesan Historical Research Center, Wynnewood, PA
Parish of St. Jacob	Church Records for the Parish of St. Jacob, City Archives of Stockholm
PEM	Peabody Essex Museum, Salem, MA
PEM: Fettyplace Journal	H.K. Fettyplace, Journal of a Voyage from Mobile to Havana (via New Orleans) Hence to St. Petersburg and from Hense [sic] to Boston on Board the Ship "Peterhof" Captain L. Endicott, A. 1848 , Peabody and Essex Museum Library, Salem, MA
PREC STP	Parish Registers of the English Church, St. Petersburg, held at the Guildhall Library, London  These are copies of the originals contained in RGIA: Fond 1689, op. 1, ed. khr. 1 Register British Factory Chapel St. Petersburg [1763–1812]; Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 2 [1812–1830]; Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 3 [1831 – Jan. through 1846 – Dec.]; Fond 1689, op. 1, d. 4 [1847–1867].
PRO	Public Record Office, Chancery Lane, London, UK  The national archives of the UK were housed at the Public Record Office, Chancery Lane, London, from 1838 until 2003, when they merged with the Historical Manuscripts Commission to form The National Archives (NAUK), now based in Kew, Richmond.
RGIA	Rossiiskii gosudarstvennyi istoricheskii arkhiv [Russian State Historical Archive], St. Petersburg

RGIA: A.O. Koritskii	RGIA: Fond 472, op. 32 (323/1125), d. 1408 Formuliarnyi spisok Pomoshchnika Nachal'nika 2 Otdeleniia Gubernskogo Sekretaria Aleksandra Osipovicha Koritskogo [Service Record of Provincial Secretary Aleksandr Osipovich Koritskii, Assistant to the Director of the Second Department [of the Imperial Hermitage].
RGIA: Golland. reform. tserkov'	RGIA: Fond 40, op. 1. Gollandskaia reformatorskaia tserkov', 1717–1921 gg., d. 2 Tserkovnaia kniga zapisei rozhdenii, venchanii i smertei, 1808–1883 [Dutch Reformed Church, 1717–1921. Church register of births, marriages and deaths, 1808 – 1883]
RGIA: Kamer- fur'erskii zhurnal	RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 153. Kamer- fur'erskii zhurnal [ Chamberlain's Journal ], 1844
RGIA: Kamer- fur'erskii zhurnal, O konchine ... Aleksandry Nikolaevny	RGIA: Fond 516, op. 28/1618, d. 153. Kamer- fur'erskii zhurnal [ Chamberlain's Journal ], 1844. Zhurnal. O konchine i pogrebenii v Bozhe pochivainsbchei Velikoi Kniagini Aleksandry Nikolaevny. S 29<sup>го</sup> Iiulia po 5<sup>е</sup> chis: Avgusta 1844<sup>го</sup> goda [Concerning the decease and burial of Grand Duchess Aleksandra Nikolaevna, reposing in God. From the 29th of July through the 5th of August [OS] 1844]
RNB OR	Rukopisnyi otdel Rossiiskoi natsional'noi biblioteki [Manuscript Division of the Russian National Library], St. Petersburg
SHS	Stonington Historical Society, Stonington, CT
Shtukenberg, Memuary	A.I. Shtukenberg, Memuary Antona Shtukenberga [ Memoirs of Anton Shtukenberg ], 3 vols. (St. Petersburg, 1836–61), Rukopisnyi otdel (RO) [Manuscript Division], Leningradskii institut inzhenеров zheleznodorozhnogo transporta (LIIZhT) [Leningrad Institute of Railway Transport Engineers], St. Petersburg
SoG	Society of Genealogists, London

SRO	Scottish Record Office, Edinburgh
SRO: Hamilton	Duke of Hamilton Papers, Scottish Record Office, Edinburgh
St. Catherine's Swedish Church Registers	Register of St. Catherine's Swedish Church in St. Petersburg, Department of Private Archives, National Archives, Stockholm, Sweden
TsGALI	Tsentral'nyi gosudarstvennyi arkhiv literatury i iskusstva [Central State Archive of Literature and Art], Moscow
TsGIA SPb	Tsentral'nyi gosudarstvennyi istoricheskii arkhiv Sankt Peterburga [Central State Historical Archive of St. Petersburg]
USMA	United States Military Academy, West Point, NY
USMAL: A.J. Swift Papers	Alexander J. Swift (1810–1847) Papers, United States Military Academy Library, West Point, NY
USMAL: J.G. Swift Papers	Letters of General Joseph G. Swift; Swift, Joseph Gardner, 1783–1865, Papers 1800–1865; Manuscripts, 19 th Century 10; United States Military Academy Library, West Point, NY
USMAL: Thayer Papers	Sylvanus Thayer Papers, United States Military Academy Library, West Point, NY
USMAL: W.H. Swift Papers	William Henry Swift, USMA 1819,CU231: Correspondence 1820–1857, Letters written to his brother, General Joseph G. Swift. Washington, 26 March 1846, United States Military Academy Library, West Point, NY

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Acres, W. Marsten. The Bank of England from Within 1694–1900. 2 vols. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1931.
- Agapkina, T. A. Èntsiklopedicheskiĭ slovar' A–Ia Slavianskaia mifologĭia. Moscow: Ellis Lak, 1955.
- Ainsworth, William Macquhae. A Memorial of W. M. Ainsworth: Being a Selection of his Sermons, Prayers, and Letters of Travel. Edited by James Harwood and J. E. Carpenter. London and Edinburgh, 1891.
- Allom, Thomas, George Pickering, et al. Westmorland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland, Illustrated from Original Drawings by Thomas Allom, George Pickering &c. Edited by Thomas Rose. 3 vols. London: H. Fisher, R. Fisher, and P. Jackson, 1832–1835.
- Altick, Richard D. Victorian People and Ideas. New York: W. W. Norton, 1973.
- Alumni Cantabrigienses*. Compiled by J. A. Venn. Pt. 2, From 1752–1900. 6 vols. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1951.
- Alumni Dublinenses: A Register of the Students, Graduates, Professors and Provosts of Trinity College, in the University of Dublin (1593–1860)*. Edited by George Dames Burtchaell and Thomas Ulick Sadleir. New ed. Dublin: A. Thom, 1935.
- Alumni Oxoniensis: The Members of the University of Oxford*. Compiled by Joseph Foster. Vol. 2, 1715–1886. Oxford, UK: Parker, 1891.
- Amburger, Erik. Die Pastoren der evangelischen Kirchen Russlands vom Ende des 16. Jahrhunderts bis 1937. Ein biographisches Lexikon. Lüneburg, Germany: Institut Nordostdeutsches Kulturwerk–Martin-Luther-Verlag, 1998.
- Amherst College Biographical Record of the Graduates and Non-Graduates: Centennial Edition, 1821–1921*. Amherst, MA: Trustees of Amherst College, 1939.
- Amory, Sukie Taylor. “Eros toi Sofia. Sofiyivka: A Garden of Allusion in Ukraine.” Hortus 87 (Autumn 2008): 54–81; 88 (Winter 2008): 72–97; 89 (Spring 2009): 77–104; 90 (Summer 2009): 79–102.
- Anderson, Ronald, and Anne Koval. James McNeill Whistler: Beyond the Myth. London: John Murray, 1994.

- Anderson, William. The Scottish Nation; or, The Surnames, Families, Literature, Honours, and Biographical History of the People of Scotland. 3 vols. Edinburgh: A. Fullarton, 1863.
- Andover Theological Seminary. Necrology, 1902–1903. Boston: Everett, 1903.
- Andreeva, Galina B. “Koritskii (Karitskii) Aleksandr Osipovich.” In Zhivopis’ pervoi poloviny XIX veka. Vol. 3 of Gosudarstvennaia Treťiakovskaia Galereia: Katalog sobraniia. Seriia Zhivopis’ XVIII–XX vekov. Moscow: Krasnaia ploshchad’, 1998. 198.
- Andreeva, Galina B., and Margaret F. Macdonald, eds. Uistler i Rossiia. Moscow: SkanruS, 2006. Published for Ministerstvo kul’tury i massovykh kommunikatsii Rossiiskoi Federatsii, Federal’noe agentstvo po kul’ture i kinematografii, Gosudarstvennaia Treťiakovskaia galereia, i Britanskii Sovet.
- Andreeva, Galina B., and Margaret F. Macdonald, eds. Whistler and Russia. Moscow: SkanruS, 2006. Published for Ministerstvo kul’tury i massovykh kommunikatsii Rossiiskoi Federatsii, Federal’noe agentstvo po kul’ture i kinematografii, Gosudarstvennaia Treťiakovskaia galereia, i Britanskii Sovet.
- Anichkov, N., comp. Istoricheskaia zapiska piatidesiatiletiiu tret’ei sanktpeterburgskoi gimnazii. St. Petersburg: V. Arngol’d, 1873.
- Annenkova, Èmma A., and Iurii P. Golikov. Printsy Ol’denburgskie v Peterburge. St. Petersburg: Rostok, 2004.
- Ansted, A. A Dictionary of Sea Terms for the Use of Yachtsmen, Amateur Boatmen, and Beginners. London: Upcott Gill, 1898.
- Antonov, B. I. Imperatorskaia gvardiia v Sanktpeterburge. St. Petersburg: GLAGOL, 2001.
- Antonov, Viktor V., and Aleksandr V. Kobak. Sviatyni Sankt-Peterburga. Vol. 2 of Istoriko-tserkovnaia ènsiklopediia. 3 vols. St. Petersburg: Chernyshev, 1996.
- Appleton’s Cyclopaedia of American Biography*. Edited by James Grant Wilson and John Fiske. 6 vols. New York: D. Appleton, 1887–1900.
- Arkipov, N. I., and A. G. Raskin. Petrodvorets. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1961.
- Armentrout, Don S., and Robert Boak Slocum, eds. An Episcopalian Dictionary of the Church: A User-Friendly Reference for Episcopalians. New York: Church Publishing, 2000.
- Ashton, J. Scott. The History of St. Chad’s Church Poulton-le-Fylde. Fleetwood, UK: s.n., 1949.

- Aslanbegov, Avramii. Admiral Aleksei Samuilovich Greig. Biograficheskii ocherk. St. Petersburg: Tipografiia Morskogo Ministerstva, 1873.
- Atkinson, Mrs. [Lucy Sherrard Finley Atkinson]. Recollections of Tartar Steppes and Their Inhabitants. London: John Murray, 1863.
- Asarkina, Èsfir. "Maloizvestnye proizvedeniia K. Briullova." Iskusstvo 3 (1950): 64–71.
- Asarkina, Èsfir. Karl Pavlovich Briullor: zhizn' i tvorchestvo. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1963.
- Austin, Arthur. Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life: A Selection from the Papers of the Late Arthur Austin. Edinburgh: William Blackwood; London: T. Caddell, 1822.
- Bachmann, Karen. "Hairy Secrets: Human Relic as Memory Object in Victorian Mourning Jewelry." Master's thesis, Purchase College, State University of New York, 2013.
- Bagshaw, Samuel. History, Gazetteer and Directory of Kent. 2 vols. Sheffield, UK: G. Ridge, 1847.
- Baillie, Laureen, ed. British Biographical Archive. New York: K. G. Saur, c. 1986. Microfiche.
- Baines, Edward. History, Directory, and Gazetteer of the County Palatine of Lancaster. 2 vols. Liverpool: William Wales, 1824.
- Baird, Henry M. The Life of the Rev. Robert Baird, D.D. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph, 1866.
- Baird, John D., and Charles Ryskamp, eds. The Poems of William Comper. Vol. 2, 1782–1785. Oxford, UK: Clarendon Press, 1995.
- Baird, Robert. Visit to Northern Europe: or Sketches Descriptive, Historical, Political and Moral, of Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland, and the Free Cities of Hamburg and Lubeck. 2 vols. New York: John S. Taylor, 1841.
- Baker, Thomas. Memorials of a Dissenting Chapel, Its Foundations and Worthies. London: Simkin, Marshall, 1884.
- Baker, Wesley L. Dickerson and Dickinson Descendants of Philemon Dickerson of Southold, Long Island, N.Y.: Also Long Island Descendants of Captain John Dickinson of Oyster Bay. Chicago: Adams, 1978.
- Balitskii, G., and N. Rusov, eds. Istoricheskaia panorama Sanktpeterburga i ego okrestnostei. Moscow: Tipografiia Russkogo Tovarishchestva, 1911.
- Bang, Oluf Lundt. Lins Minder. Edited by Vilhelm Maar. Copenhagen: Nyt Nordisk Forlag Arnold Busck, 1929.

- Banta, Melissa. "Portrait of an Artist as a Boy: James McNeill Whistler, 1834–1903." In A Curious and Ingenious Art: Reflections on Daguerreotypes at Harvard. Iowa City: University of Iowa Press for the Harvard University Library, 2000. 117–124.
- Barashkova, Valentina. "Ja khudozhnik i 'rodilsia' v Peterburge." Iunyi khudozhnik 8 (1983): 32–37.
- Barber, Gertrude A. Oak Hill Cemetery at Nyack, Rockland County, New York. Typescript. 1931. Held by the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society.
- Barber, Gertrude A., comp. Deaths Taken from the New York Evening Post. Vol. 20, From February 20, 1844 to April 15, 1845. Typescript. 1939. Held by the New-York Historical Society.
- Barber, Gertrude A., comp. Deaths Taken from the New York Evening Post. Vol. 23, From October 31, 1846 to August 3, 1847. Typescript. 1940. Held by the New-York Historical Society.
- Barber, Gertrude A., comp. Index to the New York Evening Post. Vol. 19. Typescript. 1939.
- Barber, Gertrude A., comp. Marriages Taken from the New York Evening Post. Vol. 13, From September 21, 1849 to July 7, 1852. Typescript. 1936.
- Barber, John W., and Henry Howe. Historical Collections of the State of New York. New York: S. Tuttle, 1844.
- Barber's Picturesque Guide to the Isle of Wight*. New ed. London: Henry G. Bohn, 1850. First published in 1834 as Barber's Picturesque Illustrations of the Isle of Wight by Simpkin and Marshall (London).
- Bardowskaja, L. W., and G. D. Chodassewitsch. Deutsche Prinzessinnen auf Russischem Thron: Schätze aus Zarskoje Selo, der Sommerresidenz bei St. Petersburg. Berlin: Kulturstiftung Schloß Britz, 1992.
- Barnard, John, ed. John Keats: Selected Poems. Harmondsworth, UK: Penguin, 2007.
- Barnes, Ian. Restless Empire: A Historical Atlas of Russia. Cambridge, MA: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 2015.
- Barnes, John Sanford. Egotistigraphy of a Rolling Stone, That Gathered Moss, Herein Scraped off for the Information and Amusement of His Family. New York: printed by the author, 1910. Original held by the New-York Historical Society.
- Barrett, Walter. The Old Merchants of New York City. 2nd series. New York: Greenwood, 1968. First published in 1863 by Carleton (New York).

- Barron, Harry. Genealogy of the Family of Barron Alias Fitzgerald, Barons of Burnchurch in the Co. of Kilkenny. Printed by the author, [c. 1993].
- Barsamov, N. S. Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii 1817–1900. Leningrad: Khudozhnik RSFSR, 1983. First published in 1962 by Iskusstvo (Moscow).
- Bassett, George Henry. Kilkenny City and County Guide and Directory. Facsimile edition. Kilkenny, Ireland: Grangesilvia, 2001.
- Batchelder, Calvin R. A History of the Eastern Diocese. 3 vols. Claremont, NH: Claremont Manufacturing, 1876.
- Batorevich, N. I. Ekateringof Istorii dvortsovo-parkovogo ansambliia. St. Petersburg: Iskusstvo, 2006.
- Bazankur, O. “Zabytye khudozhnitsy.” Stolitsa i usad’ba 70 (15 November 1916): 15–17.
- Beach, Edward L. The United States Navy: A 200-Year History. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1986.
- Beard, Augustus F. The Story of John Frederic Oberlin. Boston: Pilgrim Press, 1909.
- Belcher's Farmer's Almanack for the Year of Our Lord 1843*. Halifax, NS: C. H. Belcher, 1843. Published annually.
- Bell, William. Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland. Edinburgh: John Anderson; London: Saunders and Benning, 1838.
- Bellasis, Edward. Westmorland Church Notes: Being the Heraldry, Epitaphs, and other Inscriptions, in the Thirty-two Ancient Parish Churches and Churchyards of that County. 2 vols. Kendal, UK: T. Wilson, 1889.
- Bellier de La Chavignerie, E., and L. Auvray. Dictionnaire générale des artistes de l'école française depuis l'origine des arts du dessin, jusqu'à l'année 1869 exclusivement. 9 vols. Paris: Jules Renouard, 1882–1886.
- Bender, D. A. A Dictionary of Food and Nutrition. 3rd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2009.
- Bendin, Alexandr. Mikhail Muraviev-Vilenskii Usmiritel' i reformator Severo-Zapadnogo kraia Rossiiskoi Imperii. Moscow: CIS-EMO, 2017.
- Bénézit, Emmanuel. Dictionnaire critique et documentaire des peintres, sculpteurs, dessinateurs et graveurs de tous les temps et de tous les pays. 14 vols. Paris: Librairie Gründ, 1976.
- Bennett, Margaret L., comp. Day Unto Day. Boston: American Unitarian Association, 1873. First published in 1871; 1873 edition held in the Whistler Collection, Department of Special Collections, Glasgow University Library.

- Benois, Aleksandr. Tsarskoe Selo v tsarstvovanie Imperatritsy Elisavety Petrovny. St. Petersburg: R. Golike i A. Vil'borg, 1910.
- Bernandt, G. B., and I. M. Iampol'skii. Kto pisal o muzyke. 4 vols. Moscow: Vsesoiuznoe izdatel'stvo Sovetskii kompozitor, 1974.
- Bernard, M. Sto russkikh narodnykh pesen' aranžirovannykh dlia odnogo fortepiano. St. Petersburg: printed by the author, n.d.
- Bevan, Amanda, and Andrea Duncan. Tracing your Ancestors in the Public Record Office. 4th ed. London: Her Majesty's Stationary Office, 1990.
- Biber, G. E. The English Church on the Continent; or, An Account of the Foreign Settlements of the English Church: Including a Notice of the Times of Service, and Other Information Useful to Travellers and Foreign Residents. London: Francis and John Rivington, 1845.
- Binns, Jack. The History of Scarborough: From Earliest Times to the Year 2000. Pickering, Yorkshire: Blackthorn, 2001.
- Biografisches Lexikon der hervorragenden Ärzte aller Zeiten und Völker*. Berlin, Germany: Urban and Schwarzenberg, 1934.
- Biographical Cyclopaedia of Representative Men of Maryland and The District of Columbia*. Baltimore, MD: National Biographical Publishing, 1879.
- Bliss, Aaron Tyler, comp. Genealogy of the Bliss Family in America. 3 vols. Midland, MI: printed by the author, 1982.
- Bloomfield, Baroness Georgiana. Reminiscences of Court and Diplomatic Life. 4th ed. 2 vols. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, 1883.
- Bloor, A. J. "The Beginnings of James McNeill Whistler." The Critic 48 (1906): 123–135.
- Boase, Frederic. Modern English Biography. 4 vols. London: Cass, 1892.
- Bogdanov, G. I. "Problemy sokhraneniia mostov Sankt-Peterburga." Peterburgskie chteniia 96 (1996).
- Bogoliubov, A. N., V. E. Pavlov, and N. F. Filatov. Augustin Betankur (1758–1824) Uchenyi, inzhener, arkhitekt, gradostroitel'. Nizhniĭ Novgorod: Nizhegorodskii gos. un-t, 2002.
- Böhm, Benedikt. Wolkowo luterischer Friedhof in St. Petersburg: Handbuch und Friedhofsführer Deutsch und Russisch. St. Petersburg: Russko-Baltiiskii informatsionnyi tsentr BLITS, 1998.
- Bonar, Andrew A. Memoir and Remains of the Rev. Robert Murray McCheyne, Minister of St. Peter's Church, Dundee. Centenary ed. Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier, 1913. First published in 1844.

- Bonar, Andrew A., and Robert Murray McCheyne. Narrative of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland in 1839. Edinburgh: William Whyte, 1842.
- Bonnet, L. The Family of Bethany; or Meditations on the Eleventh Chapter of the Gospel According to St. John. Translated from the French [by William Hare], with an introduction by Rev. Hugh White. 10th ed. London: James Nisbet, 1844.
- Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and Other Rites and Ceremonies of The United Church of England and Ireland: Together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, Pointed As They Are To Be Sung or Said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons*. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1839.
- Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and Other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, According to the Use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America: Together with The Psalter, or Psalms of David*. Philadelphia: Protestant Episcopal Female Prayer-Book Society of Pennsylvania, 1839.
- Bordman, Gerald, and Thomas S. Hischak. Oxford Companion to American Theatre. 3rd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004.
- Boumphrey, R. S., and C. Roy Hudleston. An Armorial for Westmorland and Lonsdale. Gateshead, UK: Northumberland Press for Lake District Museum Trust and Cumberland and Westmorland Antiquarian and Archaeological Society, 1975.
- Bourke, Richard Southwell. St. Petersburg and Moscow: A Visit to the Court of the Czar. 2 vols. London: Henry Colburn, 1846.
- Bowles, John R. "From the Banks of the Neva to the Shores of Lake Baikal: Some Enterprising Scots in Russia." In The Caledonian Phalanx: Scots in Russia. Introduction by E. F. D. Roberts. Edinburgh: National Library of Scotland, 1987. 65–80.
- Bowl, John, ed. The Art of Russia 1800–1850. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Art Gallery, 1978.
- Boys, Thomas Shotter. Original Views of London as it is, 1842: A Re-issue of the Complete Set of These Scarce and Valuable Delineations of London, with Descriptive Notes to Each Plate, and a Short Introduction by E. Beresford Chancellor. London: Architectural Press, 1926.
- Bozherianov, I. N. "Ekateringof." Russkaia starina 41 (March 1884).
- Bozherianov, I. N. Nevskii Prospekt, 1703–1903. Kult'urno-istoricheskiĭ ocherk zhizni S.-Peterburga za dva veka-XVIII i XIX. Jubilee ed. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: A. I. Vil'borg, 1901–1903.

- Bozherianov, I. N., and V. Nikol'skii. Peterburgskaia starina. 24 ocherka i russkaza. St. Petersburg: N. I. Ignatov, [c. 1903].
- Brannon, G. Graphic Sketches of Well-Known Subjects in the Isle of Wight. Wootton, UK: printed by the author, c. 1839.
- Brannon, G. The Pleasure Visitor's Companion in Making the Tour of the Isle of Wight. 25th ed. Wootton, UK: printed by the author, 1857.
- British and American Congregational Church St. Petersburg, Jubilee Commemorative Volume, 1840–1890*. St. Petersburg: S. Golenischtscheff and F. Krankenhagen, 1891.
- Brockbank, Edward Mansfield. Sketches of the Lives and Work of the Honorary Medical Staff of the Manchester Infirmary From its Foundation in 1752 to 1830, When It Became the Royal Infirmary. Manchester, UK: Manchester University Press, 1904.
- Brockett, F. L., comp. The Lodge of Washington: A History of the Alexandria Washington Lodge, No. 22. A. F. and A. M. of Alexandria, Va. 1783–1876. Alexandria, VA: George D. French, 1876.
- Broitman, L. I., and E. I. Krasnova. Peterburg ves' na ladoni Bol'shaia Morskaia. St. Petersburg: Papyrus, 1996.
- Bronshtein, S. S. Arkhitektura goroda Pushkina. Moscow: Gosudarstvennoe arkhitekturnoe izdatel'stvo Akademii arkhitektury SSSR, 1940.
- Brown, Alma Howell “The Consular Service of the Republic of Texas,” Southwestern Historical Quarterly 33, no. 3 (1930): 184–230.
- Brown, Lawrence Parmly. The Greatest Dental Family. [Philadelphia]: printed by the author, 1923. Reprinted from The Dental Cosmos, March, April, and May 1923.
- Brown's Guide to the Isle of Man*, 13th ed. London: Geo. Philip and Son; Liverpool: W. H. Smith and Son, 1897.
- Browne, George. The History of the British and Foreign Bible Society, From Its Institution in 1804, to the Close of Its Jubilee in 1854. 2 vols. London: [British and Foreign Bible Society], 1859.
- Browne, Sir Thomas. Christian Morals. In The Works of Sir Thomas Browne, including his Unpublished Correspondence, and a Memoir. Edited by Simon Wilkin. 4 vols. London: H.G. Bohn, 1846. Vol. 4, 53–114.
- Brownrigg, Robert. Who's Who in the New Testament. Vol. 2 of Who's Who in the Bible. 2 vols. New York: Bonanza Books, 1980.
- Brumfield, William Craft. A History of Russian Architecture. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1993.

- Bryon, Wilhelmus B. "Some Myths in the History of Washington." Records of the Columbia Historical Society 31–32 (1930).
- Buckler, Julie A. Mapping St. Petersburg: Imperial Text and Cityshape. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 2005.
- Buckler, Julie A. The Literary Lorgnette Attending Opera in Imperial Russia. Palo Alto, CA: Stanford University Press, 2000.
- Buckman, David Lear. Old Steamboat Days on the Hudson River: Tales and Reminiscences of the Stirring Times that Followed the Introduction of Steam Navigation. Astoria, NY: J. C. and A. L. Fawcett, 1990. First published in 1907 by Grafton (New York).
- Bukharkin, P. E., ed. Deviatnadsatyi vek. Vol. 2 of Tri veka Sankt-Peterburga Ėnsiklopediia. 3 vols. St. Petersburg: Filologicheskii fakul'tet Sankt-Peterburgskogo gosudarstvennogo universiteta, 2006.
- Bukharkin, P. E., ed. Os'mnadsatoe stoletie. Vol. 1 of Tri veka Sankt-Peterburga Ėnsiklopediia. 3 vols. St. Petersburg: Filologicheskii fakul'tet Sankt-Peterburgskogo gosudarstvennogo universiteta, 2006.
- Bulgakov, F. I. I. K. Aivazovskii i ego proizvedeniia (60 let kbudozhestvennoi slavy). St. Petersburg: A. S. Suvorin, 1901.
- Bulletin of Yale University Obituary Record of Graduates Deceased During the Year Ending July 1, 1936*, series 33, no. 3 (15 October 1936).
- Bur'ianov, Viktor. Progulka s det'mi po S. Peterburgu i ego okrestnostiam Chast' vtoraiia. 3 vols. St. Petersburg: Guttenberg Press, 1838.
- Burke, Sir John Bernard. A Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage of the British Empire. London: Burke's Peerage, 1885.
- Burke, Sir John Bernard. A Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage of the British Empire. 31st ed. London: Burke's Peerage, 1869.
- Burke, Sir John Bernard. A Genealogical History of the Dormant, Abeyant, Forfeited, and Extinct Peerages. London: Harrison, 1883.
- Burke, Sir John Bernard. Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry. 15th ed. London: Shaw, 1937 [1936].
- Burke, Sir John Bernard. Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry. 17th ed. London: Burke's Peerage, 1952.
- Burrell, Arthur, ed. English Lyrical Verse. New York: E. P. Dutton; London: J. M. Dent and Sons, 1927.

- Buturlin, M. D. "Zapiski grafa M. D. Buturlina." Russkii arkhiv 5–8 (1897): 433–471.
- Byard, Paul Spencer. "Appreciating Trinity's Church: An Anniversary View of a Landmark," Trinity News 43, no. 1 (1996): 12–15.
- Byleeva, L. V., and V. M. Grigoriev. Igry narodov SSSR. Moscow: Fizkul'tura i sport, 1985.
- Cabot, Harriet Ropes. "The Early Years of William Ropes and Company in St. Petersburg." The American Neptune 23, no. 2 (1963): 131–139.
- Caldwell, Samuel Lunt. The Service of Song for Baptist Churches. New York: Sheldon, 1876.
- Calhoun, Simeon H. "Calhoun's Trip to Greece." ABS Historical Essay #15, Part III. American Bible Society Archives, n.d.
- Cameron, Nigel M. de S., ed. Dictionary of Scottish Church History and Theology. Downers Grove, Illinois: Intervarsity Press, 1993.
- Campbell, Stephen J. The Great Irish Famine: Words and Images from the Famine Museum, Strokestown Park, County Roscommon. Strokestown Park, Ireland: Famine Museum, 1994.
- Carpenter, M. F. "Growth and Spread." The Palimpsest (October 1953): 451–457.
- Carus-Wilson, H., ed. Genealogical Memoirs of the Carus-Wilson Family. Hove, UK: Emery and Son, 1899.
- Catalogue of American Portraits in the New-York Historical Society*, 2 vols. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1974.
- Catalogue of the Officers and Graduates of Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut, 1701–1924*. New Haven, CT: The University, 1924.
- Chaff, Gumbo, comp. The Ethiopian Glee Book: A Collection of Popular Negro Melodies. Boston: Elias Howe, 1848.
- Chapin, Charles Well. Sketches of the Old Inhabitants and Other Citizens of the Old Springfield of the Present Century, and Its Historic Mansions of "Ye Olden Time". Springfield, MA: Springfield Printing and Binding, 1893.
- Charsley, Simon R. Wedding Cakes and Cultural History. London: Routledge, 1992.
- Chernenko, V. A. "100 let na blago Rossii: dinastiia Berdov v Sankt-Peterburge." In Rossiiia — Velikobritaniia Piat' vekov kul'turnykh sviazi Materialy VI Mezhdunarodnogo petrovskogo kongressa Sankt-Peterburg 6-8 iunია 2014 goda. Edited by A.V. Kobak and O.L. Kuvaldina. St. Petersburg: Evropeiskii dom, 2015.

- Child, Mrs. [Lydia Maria]. The Mother's Book. Boston, MA: Carter, Hendee and Babcock; Baltimore, MD: Carter, 1831.
- Chistiakov, P. P. Pis'ma, zapisnye knizhki, vospominaniia 1832–1900. Edited by E. Beliutin and N. Moleva. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1953.
- Chistova, I. S., et al., Byt Pushkinskogo Peterburga Opyt entsiklopedicheskogo slovaria. St. Petersburg: Ivan Limbakh, 2003.
- Chitnis, Anand. The Scottish Enlightenment and Early Victorian English Society. London: Croom Helm, 1986.
- Christian Cabinet Illustrated Almanack*. London: Office of the Christian Cabinet, 1860.
- The Christian Remembrancer; or, The Churchman's Biblical, Ecclesiastical, and Literary Miscellany*. 22 vols. London: F. C. and J. Rivington, 1819–1840.
- Clark, Allen C. "Captain James Barry." Records of the Columbia Historical Society 42–43 (1940–1941): 1–16.
- Clarke, William. Boys Own Book: A Complete Encyclopedia of All Athletic, Scientific, Recreative, Outdoor and Indoor Exercises and Diversions. 5th rev. ed. New York: Leavitt and Allen Brothers, [1870].
- Clay-Clopton, Virginia, and Ada Sterling. A Belle of the Fifties: Memoirs of Mrs. Clay, of Alabama, Covering Social and Political Life in Washington and the South, 1853–66. New York: Doubleday, Page, 1905.
- Cleveland, N., and A. S. Packard. History of Bowdoin College with Biographical Sketches of Its Graduates from 1806 to 1879, Inclusive. Boston: James Ripley Osgood, 1882.
- Clute, J. J. Annals of Staten Island From its Discovery to the Present Time. New York: Charles Vogt, 1877.
- Comay, Joan. Who's Who in the Old Testament Together with the Apocrypha. Vol. 1 of Who's Who in the Bible. 2 vols. New York: Bonanza Books, 1980.
- The Commissioned Sea Officers of the Royal Navy 1660–1815*. [Greenwich, UK: Royal Naval College – National Maritime Museum, 1954].
- The Congregational Calendar and Family Almanac for 1840*. London: Jackson and Walford, [1840]. Published annually.
- Connolly, Jane. Old Days and Ways. London: Edward Arnold, 1912.
- Conrad, Glenn R., ed. New Iberia: Essays on the Town and Its People. Lafayette, LA: Center for Louisiana Studies, University of South-Western Louisiana, 1979.

- Cook, Lewis D. "The Gunning Bedford Family New Castle, Philadelphia, Baltimore." The Pennsylvania Genealogical Magazine 30, no. 1 (1977).
- Coupe, Frank. Walton-le-Dale: A History of the Village. Preston, UK: Guardian, 1954.
- Craven, E. R. Historical Sermon Delivered on the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Organization of the Third Presbyterian Church. Newark, NJ: Daily Advertiser Office, 1874.
- Crawford, Adair. Observations on the Asiatic Cholera, during a Residence in St. Petersburg in 1848, and on Its Prevention and Cure; with an Account of the Sanitary Regulations Proposed to Be Adopted against the Spreading of the Disease in This Country, Metropolitan Sanitary Commission. London: W. Clowes and Son for Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1848.
- Crawford, D. G., comp. Roll of the Indian Medical Service, 1615–1930. London: W. Thacker, 1930.
- Crisp, Frederick Arthur. Visitation of England and Wales. Vol. 19. Printed by the author, 1917.
- Crockford, John, ed. Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1860. London: Crockford's Clerical Journal and Directory Offices, 1860. Published annually.
- Croft, Lisa. Activists: Lessons from my Grandparents. Self-published, Lulu, 2015.
- Crook, L. Complete History and Illustrated Guide of Lancaster Castle. Lancaster, UK: Shires, 1936.
- Cross, Anthony G. "By the Neva, By the Aire." University of Leeds Review 25 (1982): 1–26.
- Cross, Anthony G. "Chaplains to the British Factory in St. Petersburg, 1723-1813." European Studies Review 2, no. 2 (1972): 125–142.
- Cross, Anthony G. "Samuel Greig, Catherine the Great's Scottish Admiral." The Mariner's Mirror 60, no. 3 (1974): 251–265.
- Cross, Anthony G. "The Russian Banya in the Descriptions of Foreign Travellers and in the Depictions of Foreign and Russian Artists." Oxford Slavonic Papers, n.s., 24 (1991): 13–58.
- Cross, Anthony G. "The Testament of a Forgotten 'Wife.'" In Anglo-Russian Aspects of Cultural Relations between Great Britain and Russia in the Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Centuries: Selected Essays. Edited by Anthony Cross. Oxford, UK, and Providence, RI: Berg, 1993.
- Cuff, Robert H. Dictionary of Newfoundland and Labrador Biography. St. John's, NL: printed by the author, 1990.

- Culbertson, Judy, and Tom Randall. Permanent New Yorkers: A Biographical Guide to the Cemeteries of New York. Chelsea, VT: Chelsea Green Publishing, 1987.
- Cullum, George W. Biographical Register of the Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, from its Establishment, March 16, 1802, to the Army Re-Organization of 1866–67. 2 vols. New York: D. Van Nostrand, 1868.
- “Cunard Steamers One Hundred Years Ago.” Sea Breezes 3 (January–June 1947).
- Cunningham, Peter. Hand-Book of London, Past and Present. Edited by Michael Robbins (East Ardsley, UK: EP Publishing, 1978). Reprinted from the 2nd edition, published in 1850 by John Murray (London).
- Cunnington, C. Willett, Phillis Cunnington, and Charles Beard. A Dictionary of English Costume. London: Adam and Charles Black, [1960].
- Curtiss, John Shelton. The Russian Army Under Nicholas I, 1825–1855. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1965.
- Cutt, M. Nancy. Mrs. Sherwood and her Books for Children. London: Oxford University Press, 1974.
- Darton, F. J. Harvey, ed. The Life and Times of Mrs. Sherwood (1775–1851) from the Diaries of Captain and Mrs. Sherwood. London: Wells Gardner, Darton, 1910.
- Das Russland der Zaren: Photographien von 1839 bis zur Oktoberrevolution*. Berlin: Nishen, 1989.
- Dauenhauer, Nora, Richard Dauenhauer, and Lidia T. Black. Anóosbi Lingít Aaní Ká Russians in Tlingít America The Battles of Sitka, 1802 and 1804. Classics of Tlingít Oral Literature 4. Seattle: University of Washington Press; Juneau, AK: Sealaska Heritage Institute, 2008.
- Davis, Deering, Stephen P. Dorsey, and Ralph Cole Hall. Georgetown Houses of the Federal Period, Washington, D.C. 1780-1830. New York: Architectural Book Publishing, 1944.
- de Custine, Marquis. Empire of the Czar A Journey through Eternal Russia. With a foreword by Daniel J. Boorstin and introduction by George F. Kennan. New York: Anchor – Doubleday, 1990.
- de Démidoff, Prince Anatole, ed. Album du Voyage Pittoresque et Archéologique en Russie: Par le Havre, Hambourg, Lubeck, Saint-Pétersbourg, Moscou, Nijni-Novgorod, Yaroslav et Kasan. Illustrated by André Durand. Paris: Ernest Bourdin, [1839].

- de Koehne, BON B. "Nécrologie." Revue Belge de Numismatique et de Sigillographie [3, 4th series (1865): 271–275.
- de Stoeckl, Baroness. My Dear Marquis. London, John Murray, 1952.
- de Stoeckl, Baroness. Not All Vanity. Edited by George Kinnaird. London: John Murray, [1951].
- de Testa, Marie, and Antoine Gautier. "Le diplomate russe Eduard de Stoeckl (ca 1804–1892) et la cession de l'Alaska aux États-Unis." In Drogomans et diplomates européens auprès de la Porte ottoman. Istanbul: ISIS, 2003. 463–469.
- Debrett, John. Debrett's Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, and Companionage. London, 1819.
- Del'vig, A. I. Moi vospominaniia. 4 vols. Moscow: Moskovskii Publichnyi i Rumiantsovskii muzei, 1912–1913.
- Delano, Joel Andrew, comp. The Genealogy History and Alliances of the American House of Delano 1621 to 1899. New York, 1899.
- Delessert, Eugène. Voyages dans les deux océans, Atlantique et Pacifique, 1844 à 1847. Paris: A. Franck, 1848.
- Denison, Frederic. Westerly (Rhode Island) and Its Witnesses, for Two Hundred and Fifty Years 1626–1876. Providence, RI: J. A. & R. A. Reid, 1878.
- Denisov, Iurii M. "Usad'ba XVIII veka na Petergofskoi doroge." Arkhitekturnoe nasledstvo, 4 (1953): 148–154.
- Denker, Eric. In Pursuit of the Butterfly Portraits of James McNeill Whistler. Washington, DC: National Portrait Gallery; Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1995.
- Diamond, David G., ed. Bullfinch Pocket Dictionary of Art Terms. 3rd rev. ed. Boston: Little, Brown, 1992.
- Dictionary of National Biography*. Ed. Leslie Stephens. 63 vols. London: Smith, Elder, 1885–1900.
https://en.wikisource.org/wiki/Dictionary\_of\_National\_Biography,\_1885-1900
- Dixon, Simon. "Allegiance and Betrayal: British Residents in Russia During the Crimean War." Slavonic and East European Review 94, no. 3 (2017): 431–467.
- Dlugolenskii, Iakov. Voенно-гразhdanskaia i politseiskaia vlast' Sankt-peterburga 1703–1917. St. Petersburg: Neva, 2001.
- "Dnevnik Aleksandra Vasilievicha Nikitenko, 1833–1834 gg." Russkaia starina (August 1889).

- Dobler, Andreas, et al. Die mitgift einer Zarentochter: Meisterwerke russischer Kunst des Historismus aus dem Besitz der Hessischen Hausstiftung Museum Schloss Fasanerie. Eurasburg, Germany: Minerva, 1997.
- Dobson, David. Directory of Scots in the Carolinas, 1680–1830. 2 vols. Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1986.
- Dobson, David. Directory of Scottish Settlers in North America, 1625–1825. 7 vols. Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1984–1993.
- Dobson, David. Scottish-American Heirs, 1683–1883. Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1990.
- Docton, K. H. Tombstones and Memorials in the Churchyard of St. Mary's Priory Church. Lancaster, UK: printed by the author, 1973.
- Dodd, Edward. The Rape of Tabiti. Vol. 4 of The Ring of Fire. 5 vols. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1983.
- Doğan, Setenay Nil. "From National Humiliation to Difference: The Image of the Circassian Beauty in the Discourses of Circassian Diaspora Nationalists." New Perspectives on Turkey 42 (2010): 77–101.
- Dolgorukov, Paul [as Prince Paul Dolgorouky]. A Handbook of the Principal Families in Russia. Translated from the French by F. Z. London: James Ridgway, 1858.
- Dolgorukov, Paul. Rossiiskaia rodoslovnaia kniga. 4 vols. St. Petersburg: Tip. III Otdeleniia Sob. E.I.V. Kantseliarii, 1854–1857.
- Dombrovskii, F. V. Polnyi putevoditel' po Peterburgu i vsem ego okrestnostiam. St. Petersburg, 1896.
- Domestic Portraiture; or, The Successful Application of Religious Principle in the Education of a Family, exemplified in the Memoirs of three of the deceased children of the Rev. Legh Richmond*. Introduction by E. Bickersteth. New York: Robert Carter, 1834.
- Donaldson, Thomas. The George Catlin Indian Gallery in the U.S. National Museum (Smithsonian Institution), with Memoir and Statistics, from the Smithsonian Report for 1885. Washington, DC: Government Printing Office, 1887.
- Dorman, James H. "Aspects of Acadiana Plantation Life in the Mid-Nineteenth Century: A Microcosmic View." Louisiana History 16, no. 4 (1975): 361–370.
- "Dr. Edward Maynard," The Dental Cosmos: A Monthly Record of Dental Science 33 (1891): 493.

- Druzhinina, E. V. "Sarychev Gavriil Andreevich Exhibit 99." In Nezabyvaemaia Rossiia. Edited by L. I. Iovleva and G. B. Andreeva. Moscow: Trilistnik, 1997.
- Dryden, John. All for Love; or, The World Well Lost. Menston, UK: Scholar Press, 1969. First published in 1678.
- Dubiago, T. B. Russkie reguliarnye sady i parki. Leningrad: Gosudarstvennoe izdatel'stvo literatury po stroitel'stvu, arkhitekture i stroitel'nym materialam, 1963.
- Dubos, René, and Jean Dubos. The White Plague: Tuberculosis, Man, and Society. New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1987.
- Ducamp, Emmanuel, ed. The Summer Palaces of the Romanovs: Treasures from Tsarskoye Selo. Translated by Barbara Mellor and illustrated by Marc Walter. London: Thames and Hudson, 2012.
- Dunlop, Carolyn C. The Russian Court Chapel Choir 1796–1917. Amsterdam: Harwood Academic Publishers, 2000.
- Durasov, V., comp. Rodoslovnaia kniga Vserossiiskogo dvorianstva. St. Petersburg: R. Golike i A. Vil'borg, 1906.
- Durov, V. A. Russkie i sovetskie boevye nagrody. Moscow: Istoricheskii muzei, Vneshtorgizdat, 1990.
- Dussieux, L. Les artistes françaises à l'étranger. 3rd ed. Paris: Lecoffre Fils, 1876.
- Duyckinck, Evert A. A Memorial of Francis L. Hawks, D.D., LL. D. Read before the New-York Historical Society May 7th, 1867. New York, 1871.
- Duzhnikov, Iurii. A. Po Izhorskoï vozvysbennosti. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1972.
- "Dvoret's 'Monplezir'." Khudozhestvennye sokrovishcha Rossii 7–8 (1902).
- E. S. W., ed. "Materials for a History of the Ropes Family." Historical Collections of the Essex Institute 8, no. 1 (1868).
- Eastlake, Lady Elizabeth Rigby. Journals and Correspondence of Lady Eastlake; Edited by her Nephew, Charles Eastlake Smith; with Facsim. of Her Drawings and a Portrait. Edited by Charles Eastlake Smith. 2 vols. London: John Murray, 1895.
- Eastwick, Mrs. Andrew M. "Bartram Hall." Written for the City History Society of Philadelphia and read at the meeting of Wednesday, 14 December 1910. Publications of the City History Society of Philadelphia. Philadelphia: Published by the Society, 1930.
- Ecker, Grace Dunlop. A Portrait of Old Georgetown. Richmond, VA: Dietz Press, 1951.

- Egorova, E. I. "500 let roda Stroganovykh, metsenatov iskusstv." In Stroganovy i Permskii kraï; Materialy nauchnoi konferentsii, 4-6 fevralia 1992 g. Perm, Russia: s.n., 1992. 33–34.
- Eickel, Nancy, ed. Moscow: Treasures and Traditions. Washington, DC: Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service; Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1990.
- Ellery, Harrison, ed. The Memoirs of Gen. Joseph Gardner Swift, LL.D., U.S.A., First Graduate of the United States Military Academy, West Point, Chief Engineer U.S.A. from 1812 to 1818. 1800-1865. To which is added a Genealogy of the Family of Thomas Swift of Dorchester, Mass., 1634. Worcester, MA: F. S. Blanchard, 1890.
- Elsas, Madeleine, ed. Iron in the Making: Donlais Iron Company Letters, 1782–1860. Cardiff, Wales: Glamorgan County Council and Guest Keen Iron and Steel Company, 1960.
- Èntsiiklopedicheskii slovar' Brokgaus-Èfron*. 86 vols. Leipzig: F.A. Brockhaus; St. Petersburg: Ilya Èfron, 1890–1907.
- Ewers, John C., ed., Indian Art in Pipestone George Catlin's Portfolio in the British Museum. Washington, DC: British Museum Publications and Smithsonian Press, 1979.
- Fairbanks, Lorenzo Sales. Genealogy of the Fairbanks Family 1633-1897. Boston: Printed for the author by American Printing and Engraving, 1897.
- Farr, Grahame. Wreck and Rescue on the Coast of Devon: The Story of the South Devon Lifeboats. Truro, UK: D. Bradford Barton, 1968.
- Farrer, William, and J. Brownbill, eds. The Victoria History of the County of Lancaster. 7 vols. London: University of London Institute of Historical Research, 1966. First published in 1912 by Dawsons of Pall Mall (London).
- Fasmer, Maks. Ètimologicheskii slovar' russkogo iazyka. Edited by B. A. Larin. Translated from German with additions by O. N. Trubachev. 2nd ed. 4 vols. Moscow: Progress, 1986.
- Fedorchenko, V. Dvoriànskie rody, proslavinshie otechestvo. Èntsiiklopediia dvoriànskikh rodov. Krasnoiarsk: BONUS; Moscow: OLMA, 2004.
- Fedosiuk, Iurii. A. Chto neponiatno u klassikov ili Èntsiiklopediia russkogo bytia XIX veka. 2nd ed. Moskva: Flinta–Knowledge, 1999.
- Ferguson, T. Reed. The John Couper Family at Cannon's Point. Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1995.
- Fielding, Nick. South to the Great Steppe: The Travels of Thomas and Lucy Atkinson in Eastern Kazakhstan, 1847–1852. London: FIRST, 2015.

- Filby, William P. Philadelphia Naturalization Records: An Index to Records of Aliens' Declarations of Intention and/or Oaths of Allegiance, 1789–1880. Detroit, MI: Gale Research, 1982.
- Filin, M. D., ed. Russkii mir v litsakh Imperator Nikolai Pervyi. Nikolaevskaia epokha. Slovo russkogo tsaria. Apologiia rytsaria. Nezabvennyi. Moscow: Russkii mir, 2002.
- Finch, J. H. A Goodly Heritage: Being a Description of Ribchester Parish Church. Rev. ed.: Ribchester, UK: John Barton 1984.
- “Fine Arts: Royal Academy.” The Atheneum (May 10, 1845).
- [Fish, F.G.] St. Ann's Church (Brooklyn, New York) from the Year 1784 to the Year 1845, with A Memorial of the Sunday Schools, to which is added, An Appendix, containing a brief notice of the other Episcopal churches in Brooklyn by a Sunday School Teacher. Brooklyn, NY: printed by the author, 1845.
- Fishwick, Henry. The History of the Parish of Poulton-le-Fylde in the County of Lancaster. Manchester, UK: Chetham Society, 1885.
- Fishwick, Henry. The History of the Parish of Preston in Amounderness in the County of Lancaster. Rochdale, UK: James Clegg, The Aldine Press; London: Elliott Stock, 1900.
- Fitter, Michael C. The Wrays of Wensleydale. s.l.: printed by the author, 1984.
- Flagg, Norman Gershom, and Lucius C. S. Flagg. Family Records of the Descendants of Gershom Flagg (Born 1730) of Lancaster, Massachusetts, with Other Genealogical Records of the Flagg Family Descended from Thomas Flegg of Watertown, Mass. And Including the Flegg Lineage in England. Quincy, IL: printed by the authors, 1907.
- Flintoff, Thomas R. Preston Church and Chapels. [Preston, UK]: Carnegie Press, 1985.
- Folsom, Joseph F., Benedict Fitzpatrick, and Edwin P Conklin, eds. The Municipalities of Essex County New Jersey, 1666–1924. 4 vols. New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1925.
- Foote, Abraham W. Foote Family: Comprising the Genealogy and History of Nathaniel Foote of Wethersfield, Conn. And His Descendants. 2 vols. Baltimore: Gateway Press, 1984.
- Foreman, Carolyn Thomas. “Colonel William Whistler.” The Chronicles of Oklahoma 18, no. 4 (1940): 314–327.
- Foskett, Daphne. A Dictionary of British Miniature Painters. 2 vols. New York: Preager, 1972.

- Foster, Joanna. "Recollections: Pride of Westport and True Hospitality." Carousel (November 1989).
- Foster, Joseph. Oxford Men, 1880–1892, with a Record of Their Schools, Honours, and Degrees. Oxford: J. Parker, 1893.
- Foster, Joseph. The Peerage, Baronetage and Knightage of the British Empire. Westminster, UK: Nichols and Son, 1879–82.
- Fouts, Raymond Parker. Abstracts from Newspapers of Wilmington, North Carolina 1807–1810, with Extant Issues of 1812–1816. 5 vols. Cocoa, FL: Gen Rec Books, 1984.
- Fowler, Henry. The American Pulpit: Sketches Biographical and Descriptive of Living American Preachers, and of the Religious Movements and Distinctive Ideas Which They Represent. New York: J. M. Fairchild, 1856.
- Fradkina, Èleonora. Zal Dvorianskogo sobraniia Zametki o kontsertnoi zbirni Sankt-Peterburga. St. Peterburg: Kompozitor, 1994.
- "The Late Francis L. Hawks." Putnam's Magazine (January 1868): 100–105.
- Francis, John. Chronicles of Characters of the Stock Exchange. London: Willoughby, 1849.
- Franklin, Benjamin. The Papers of Benjamin Franklin. 43 vols. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1954–2019.
- Frederiks, M. P. "Iz vospominanii Baronessy M. P. Frederiks." Istoricheskii vestnik (1898): 52–87.
- Fremont, Jessie Benton. Souvenirs of My Time. Boston: D. Lothrop, 1887.
- Fretwell, Jacqueline K. "Kingsley Beatty Gibbs and His Journal of 1840–1843." El Escrivano: The St. Augustine Journal of History 21 (1984): 55–88.
- Frish, V. A., and I. P. Vysotskii. S.-Peterburgskaia stolichnaia politsiia i gradolnachal'stvo. Kratkii istoricheskii ocherk. St. Petersburg: R. Golike i A. Vil'borg, 1903.
- Fullerton, A. L., and Flora Yarmukhamedova. The Family Greig in Russia. Bernardston, MA: Bernardston Books, 2001.
- Geikie, Archibald. Life of Sir Roderick I. Murchison. 2 vols. London: John Murray, 1875.
- Geirot, A. Opisanie Petergofa. St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1868.
- Gendrikov, V. B. Velikokniazheskaia uspal'nitsa v Petropavlovskoi kreposti. s.l.: Arsis Publishers, 1993. Brochure.

- General Catalogue of Bowdoin College and the Medical School of Maine A Biographical Record of Alumni and Officers 1794–1950. Sesquicentennial ed.* Brunswick, ME: Bowdoin College, 1950.
- Gérin, Winifred. Charlotte Bronte: The Evolution of Genius. Oxford, UK: Clarendon, 1968.
- Gidney, W. T. The History of the London Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews. London: London Society for Promoting Christianity Amongst the Jews, 1908.
- Gille, Florian, comp. Musée du Tsarskoé-Sélo ou collection d'armes de Sa Majesté L'Empereur de toutes les Russies. Ouvrage composé de 180 planches lithografiées par Asselineau d'après les dessins originaux de A. Rockstuhl, avec une Introduction historique par Flor. Gille. St. Petersburg, 1853. Reprinted in an expanded edition in 1869 as Tsarskosel'skii arsenal [...] by E. Kaemmerer (see).
- Gille, Florian, comp. Notice sur le Musée de Tsarskoé-Sélo renfermant la collection d'armes de Sa Majesté L'Empereur. St. Petersburg, 1860.
- Gille, Florian, comp. Tsarskosel'skii muzei s sobraniiem oruzh'ia, prinadlezhashego Gosudarii Imperatoru. St. Petersburg: A. Bauman, 1860.
- Gillett, Charles Ripley, comp. Alumni Catalogue of the Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York 1836–1926. New York: Association of the Alumni, 1926.
- Godley, A. D., ed. The Poetical Works of Thomas Moore. Oxford: Oxford University Press; London: Humphrey Milford, 1915.
- Gol'dovskii, G. N. Ivan Konstantinovich Aivazovskii: zhivopis', risunki, akvareli iz muzeev Sankt-Peterburga. St. Petersburg: Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei, 2000.
- Gol'dovskii, G. N., and V. V. Znamenov. Dvoretz Monplezir v nizhnem parke Petrodvortsia. 2nd ed. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1981.
- Gollerbakh, Èrikh Fyodorovich. "Pevets zhemchuzhno-golubykh dalei." Vestnik znaniia 21–22 (1928): 1039–1041.
- Gollerbakh, Èrikh Fyodorovich. Detskosel'skie dvortsy-muzei i parki Putevoditel'. St. Peterburg: Gosudarstvennoe izdatel'stvo, 1922.
- Gorbatenko, Sergei Borisovich. "Novye stranitsy rannei istorii Petergofa." In Nevskii Arkhiv Istoriko-kraevedcheskii sbornik. Moscow: Atheneum Feniks, 1993.
- Gorbatenko, Sergei Borisovich. Petergofskaia doroga Istoriko-arkhitekturnyi putevoditel'. St. Petersburg: Evropeiskii dom, 2002.

- Gordin, A. M., and M. A. Gordin. Byloi Peterburg Panorama stolichnoi zhizni. St. Petersburg: Pushkinskii fond, 1995.
- Gordon, William A. "Old Homes on Georgetown Heights." Records of the Columbia Historical Society 18 (1915).
- Gore's Directory of Liverpool and Its Environs*. Liverpool: Mawdsley, 1859. Published annually.
- Gorina, T.N., ed. Khudozhniki narodov SSSR: Biobibliograficheskii slovar'. 6 vols. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1972.
- Gosudarstvennaia Tre'tiakovskaia Galereia: Katalog sobranii. Seriia Zhivopis' XVIII–XX vekov*. 3 vols. Vol. 3, Zhivopis' pervoi poloviny XIX veka. Moscow: Krasnaia ploshchad', 1998.
- Gosudarstvennaia Tre'tiakovskaia galereia. Katalog zhivopisi XVIII-nachala XX veka (do 1917) goda*. Moscow: Izobrazitel'noe iskusstvo, 1984.
- Gouzévitch, Dmitrii, and Irina Gouzévitch. "Des ingénieurs français au service de la couronne russe au début du XIXe siècle: sources en Russie et au Ukraine." In La France et les français en Russie: nouvelle sources, nouvelles approches (1815–1917). Edited by Annie Charon, Bruno Delmas, and Armelle Le Goff. Paris: École National des Chartes et Archives Nationales, 2011. doi :10.4000/books.enc.1265
- Gozenpud, A. A. Dom Èngel'gardta. St. Petersburg: Sovetskii kompozitor, 1992.
- Granville, Augustus Bozzi. St. Petersburg: A Journal of Travels to and from that Capital; Through Flanders, the Rhenish Provinces, Prussia, Russia, Poland, Silesia, Saxony, the Federated States of Germany, and France. 2 vols. London: Henry Colburn, 1828; vol. 2, 2nd ed., London: Henry Colburn, 1829. Reprinted in 1971 by Arno Press (New York) and New York Times as St. Petersburg: Travels To and From that Capital.
- Granville, Augustus Bozzi. The Spas of England, and Principal Sea-Bathing Places. 3 vols. London: Henry Colburn, 1841.
- Grech, Aleksei, comp. Ves' Peterburg v karmane: Spravochnaia kniga dlia stolichnykh zhitelei i pryezshchikh, s planami Sanktpeterburga i chetyrekh teatrov. 2nd ed. St. Petersburg: N. Grech, 1851. First published in 1846, also by N. Grech (St. Petersburg).
- Grech, N. I. Zapiski o moei zhizni. St. Petersburg: A. S. Suvorin, 1866. Reprint, Moscow: Kniga, 1990.
- Grierson, Roderick, ed., Gates of Mystery: The Art of Holy Russia. Milan, Italy: Intercultura, 1993.
- Grimshawe, Thomas S. Memoir of the Rev. Legh Richmond, A.M. 4th ed. London: R. B. Seeley and W. Burnside, 1828.

- Grindon, L. H. Manchester Banks and Bankers: Historical, Biographical, and Anecdotal. Manchester, UK: Palmer and Howe; London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1877.
- Grossman, L. P. "U istokov 'Bakchisaraiskogo fontana.'" In Pushkin Issledovaniia i materialy. Vol. 3. Edited by N. V. Izmailov. Moscow–Leningrad: Izd-stvo AN SSSR, 1960. 49–100.
- Gunnis, Rupert. Dictionary of British Sculptors, 1660–1851. Rev. ed. London: Abbey Library, 1968.
- Gurevich, I. M., V. V. Znamenov, and E. G. Miasoedova. Bol'shoi Petergofskii dvorets. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1979.
- Gusarov, V. N., N. V. Vernova, and V. V. Znamenov. Petergof v akvareliakh Aleksandra Benua. St. Petersburg: Iskusstvo Rossii, 1996.
- Hadfield, Charles. The Canals of Yorkshire and North East England. 2 vols. Newton Abbot, UK: David and Charles, 1973.
- Hall, James. Dictionary of Subjects and Symbols in Art. London: John Murray, 1974.
- Hall, Robert. The History of Galashiels. Galashiels, Scotland: Alexander Walker and Son, 1898.
- Hall, Vernon Jr., "The Scaliger Family Papers." Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 92, no. 2 (1948).
- Hamilton, George Heard. The Art and Architecture of Russia. Baltimore, MD: Penguin, [1954].
- Handbook for Northern Europe; Including Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland and Russia*. Vol. 2, Finland and Russia. Rev. ed. 2 vols. London: John Murray, 1849.
- Handbook for Travellers in Russia, Poland and Finland*. New Rev. ed. London: John Murray, 1865.
- Harden, E. J. "Major George Washington Whistler, Railroad Engineer, in Russia: 1842-49." In Ex Oriente Lux Mélanges offertes en hommage au professeur Jean Blankoff à l'occasion de ses soixante ans. Vol. 1. Brussels: Centre d'Etude des Pays de l'Est, 1991. 147–160.
- Hardwick, Charles. History of the Borough of Preston and Its Environs, in the County of Lancaster. Preston: Worthington; London: Simpkin, Marshall, 1857.
- Hargrove, William. History and Description of the Ancient City of York. 2 vols. York, UK: W. Alexander, 1818.
- Harrison, Joseph Jr. The Iron Worker and King Solomon. 2nd ed. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1869.

- Haslewood, Francis. The Genealogy of the Family of Haslewood, Staffordshire and Warwickshire Branches, [...]. London: printed for the author by Mitchell and Hughes, 1881.
- Hatch, Rodney S. III. Dr. Edward Maynard "Letters from the Land of the Tsar 1845–1846": America's Pioneering Dental Surgeon Turned Civil War Gun Inventor. North Salem, NY: Iron Horse, 2010.
- Haywood, Richard Mowbray. "The Winter Palace in St. Petersburg: Destruction by Fire and Reconstruction, December 1837 – March 1839." Jahrbücher für Geschichte Ost-europas 27 (1979): 161–180.
- Haywood, Richard Mowbray. Russia Enters the Railway Age, 1842–1855. East European Monographs No. 493. New York: Columbia University Press, 1998.
- Haywood, Richard Mowbray. The Beginnings of Railway Development in Russia in the Reign of Nicholas I, 1835–1842. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1969.
- Healy, Hope F. An Historical Narrative of a Swainson Family From the West Yorkshire and Lancashire Counties of England 1513 to the 1880's. Decorah, IA: Anundsen, 1993.
- Heitman, Frances B. Historical Register and Dictionary of the U.S. Army. 2 vols. Washington, DC: Government Printing Office, 1903.
- Heller-Andresen, A. Handbuch für Kupferstichsammler. 2 vols. Leipzig, Germany: T. O. Weigel, 1870–1873.
- Helsted, Dyveke, Eva Hanschen, and Bjarne Jørnaes. Thorvaldsen. Translated by Ann and Janus Paludan. Copenhagen: Thorvaldsen Museum, 1990.
- Henderson, Mary C. The City and the Theatre. Clifton, NJ: James T. White, 1973.
- Hering, Rainer. 150 Jahre Streit's 12. Mai 1837 – 12. Mai 1987. Hamburg, Germany: printed by the author, 1987.
- Herlihy, Patricia. "The Honored Few?: American Consuls in the Russian Empire, 1800–1870." Paper delivered at the AAASS Convention, Washington, DC, November 1990.
- Herringshaw, Thomas William. Herringshaw's National Library of American Biography. 5 vols. Chicago, IL: American Publishers' Association, 1914.
- Herzberg, Max J., ed. The Readers' Encyclopedia of American Literature. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell, 1962.
- Hewitson, Anthony. History (from A.D. 705 to 1883) of Preston, in the County of Lancaster. Preston, UK: Chronicle Office, 1883.

- Heyman, Therese Thau, and George Gurney, eds. George Catlin and His Indian Gallery: Catalogue of an Exhibition Shown at the Remwick Gallery Smithsonian Art Museum, 2002. Washington, DC: Smithsonian American Art Museum; New York: W. W. Norton, 2002.
- Heywood, Robert. A Journey into Russia in 1858. Manchester, UK: Sherratt and Hughes, 1918.
- Hinchman, T. H. Banks and Banking in Michigan. New York: Arno, 1980.
- Historical Register of Harvard University 1636–1936*. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University, 1937.
- The History of Jack and His Eleven Brothers: Displaying the Various Adventures They Encountered in Their Travels [...]*. London: T. Hughes, 1823. First published in 1815 by J. Kendrew (London).
- A History of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty's Signet: With a List of the Members of the Society from 1594 to 1890 and an Abstract of the Minutes*. Edinburgh: T. and A. Constable, 1890.
- "History of Trinity Parish: Three Centuries of Service," Trinity News 43, no. 1 (1996): 8–11.
- Hobbs, John L. "The Boott and Haden Families and the Founding of Lowell." Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society Journal 66 (1946): 59–74.
- Hodge, A. C., and J. F. Ridge, Ribchester: A Short History and Guide. 2nd ed. Preston, UK: Carnegie Press, 1986.
- Hogg, James, ed. Fortunes Made in Business: A Series of Original Sketches Biographical and Anecdotal from the Recent History of Industry and Commerce by Various Writers. 3 vols. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1884–1887.
- Hooper, Robert. Lexicon Medicum; or, Medical Dictionary. 2 vols. New York, 1829.
- Horton, Loren N. The Beautiful Heritage: A History of the Diocese of Iowa, 1853–2003. Des Moines: Diocese of Iowa, 2003.
- The House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States; Photographed from Life during the Triennial Convention by J. Gurney & Son*. New York: T. Porter Shaw, 1863.
- Howard, Cecil H. C. "Thomas and Esther (Marlowe) Carter and Their Descendants." Essex Institute Historical Collections 66 [1930].
- Howard, Jeremy. William Allan: Artist Adventurer. With contributions from John Morrison, Sara Stevenson, and Andrzej Szczerski. Edinburgh: City of Edinburgh Museums and Galleries, 2001.

- Howard, Thomas D., Sophia W. Howard, and Sally B. Hayward. Charles Howard Family Domestic History. Edited by Elizabeth A. Andrews. Cambridge, MA: s.n., 1956.
- Howarth, David. Tabiti: A Paradise Lost. London: Harvill, 1983.
- Hubbard, W. E. Some Account of the Hubbard Family from Family Records, Recollections and Traditions. Sevenoaks, UK: Printed by Joseph Salmon for private circulation, 1917.
- Hunt and Co.'s Directory for Hampshire [...] including the Isle of Wight*. Weymouth: Benson and Barling, 1852.
- Hunt-Hurst, Patricia, ed., Clothing and Fashion: American Fashion from Head to Toe. Vol. 2, The Federal Era through the 19th Century. Santa Barbara, CA: ABC-CLIO, 2016.
- Hunt, David. A History of Preston. 2nd ed. Lancaster, UK: Carnegie, 2009.
- Hurd, D. Hamilton. History of New London County, Conn., with Biographical Sketches. Philadelphia: J. W. Lewis, 1882.
- Hurt, Perry “Color App,” Smithsonian Magazine 44, no. 2 (May 2013): 20.
- Hymns for the Use of the Methodist Episcopal Church*. Rev. ed. New York: Carlton and Porter, [1849].
- Hymns Suited to the Feasts and Fasts of the Church and Other Occasions of Worship*. Philadelphia: Protestant Episcopal Female Prayer-Book Society of Pennsylvania, 1839.
- P'Anson, Bryan. The History of the P'Anson Family. London: Henry Good and Son for The Genealogical Society, 1915.
- Iakovkin, I. Opisanie Sela Tsarskogo. St. Petersburg: V tipografii departamenta Narodnogo Prosveshcheniia, 1830.
- Iakovlev, V. I. Aleksandrovskii dvorets-muzei v Detskom sele. Ubranstvo (vmesto kataloga). A publication of the combined palaces – museums of Tsarskoe Selo and Pavlovsk, 1928.
- Iazykov, D. D. “Russkie pisateli, umershie v 1887 godu.” In Obzor zhizni i trudov pokojnykh russkikh pisatelei. No. 7. Moscow: A. I. Snegireva, 1893.
- Ikonnikov, Nicolas. La Noblesse de Russie. Vol. 2: Stcherbinine –Sviatopolk-Mirsky. Paris: printed by the author, 1961.
- Index of Marriages and Deaths in New York Weekly Museum, 1788–1817*. 3 vols. Worcester, MA: American Antiquarian Society, 1952. Manuscript.

- Inglis, Robin. Historical Dictionary of the Discovery and Exploration of the Northwest Coast of America. Lanham, MD: Scarecrow Press, 2008.
- Inventory of the Church Archives of New York City, Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Long Island*. Vol. 2, Brooklyn and Queens. New York: The New York City Historical Records Survey, 1940.
- Irwin, David, and Francina Irwin. Scottish Painters at Home and Abroad, 1700–1900. London: Faber and Faber, 1975.
- The Isle of Wight Visitors' Book; Containing an Account of Its Watering Places, with a Minute Description of the Principal Tours in the Island*. 6th ed. Portsea, UK: Samuel Horsey, 1843.
- Iundolov, A. E., comp. Ukazatel' k Sborniku materialov dlia istorii Imperatorskoi S.-Peterburgskoi Akademii khudozhestv za sto let ee sushchestvovaniia, izdannomu pod redaktsiei Pochetnogo Vol'nogo Obshebnika Akademii P. N. Petrova s ego primechaniiami. St. Petersburg: M. M. Stasiulevich, 1887.
- Ivanov, Anatolii. Doma i liudi: Iz istorii peterburgskikh osobniakov. Moscow–St. Petersburg: Tsentrpoligraph, MiM-Del'ta, 2005.
- Ivanov, Dmitrii. "Gambsova mebel'." Sredi kollektionerov 5–6 (May–June 1922).
- Iversen, Julius. Das Lehrpersonal der St. Petri-Schule von Ihrem ersten Beginn bis zur Gegenwart (1710–1887) mit Biographischen Notizen. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: Golicke, 1887.
- Izmailov, M. Monplezir, Marly i Èrmitazh: dvorets i pavil'ony Petra I. 3rd ed. Moscow, Leningrad: Gosudarstvennoe izdatel'stvo izobrazitel'nykh iskusstv, 1933.
- J. D. S. "James A. Whistler, the Artist." Pall Mall Gazette (June 1874).
- Jackson, Mrs. Neville. Ancestors in Silhouette, Cut by Auguste Edouart. London: John Lane, 1931.
- James, John G. "Russian Iron Bridges to 1850." Transactions of the Newcomen Society for the Study of the History of Engineering and Technology 54, no. 1 (1982): 79–104.
- Jerrmann, Edward. Pictures from St. Petersburg. Translated by Frederick Hardman. 2 vols. New York: G.P. Putnam, 1852.
- Johnson, Allan, ed., Dictionary of American Biography. 20 vols. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1964.
- Johnstone, Mrs. "October Fashions." The Woman's World. Edited by Oscar Wilde. 3 vols. London: Cassell, 1888–1890.

- Jones, Mrs. Thaddeus M. Oak Hill Cemetery Records. Vinnetta Wells Ranke and Caroline Nugent Miller, comps. Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. [District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution] 17 (1936). Typescript.
- Journal of the Proceedings of the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Virginia [...] Nineteenth [...] of May, 1831*. Richmond, VA, 1831.
- Journal of the Twenty-Second Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Iowa, Held in [...] May, 1875 and also of the Special Convention Held [...] December, 1874*. Davenport, IO: Globe Steam Printing, 1875.
- Kaemmerer, E., comp. Tsarskosel'skii arsenal ili Sobranie oruzh'ia prinadlezhashchego Ego Velichestvu Gosudarinu Imperatoru Aleksandru Nikolaevichu. Po risunkam Gg. Professora A.N. Rokhshtul'ia i N.A. Bogdanova s poiasnitel'nym tekstom sostavlenным Deist. St. Sov. E. Kemmererom zavedyvaiushchim Sobstvennymi Ego Velichestva Bibliotekami i Arsenalami. Edition of Messrs. A. A. Il'in and N. K. Flige, printed with His Majesty's permission. St. Petersburg: Obshchestvennaia Pol'za, 1869.
- Kalendar' na 1850 god. S portretom Eë Imperatorskogo Vysochestva Gosdaryni Velikoi Kniagini Aleksandry Iosifovny*. St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1849.
- Kann, Pavel Iakovlevich. Ploschchad' truda. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1981.
- Kapustina, T. A. "Emperor Nicholas I, 1825–1855." In The Emperors and Empresses of Russia: Discovering the Romanovs. Edited by Donald J. Raleigh and compiled by A. A. Iskenderov. New York: M. E. Sharpe Armonk, 1996.
- Karabanov, P. F., comp. "Stats-damy i freiliny russkogo dvora v xviii i xix stoletiiakh: Biograficheskie spiski." Russkaia starina 1 (1871).
- Karev, V. M., ed. Nemtsy Rossii Èntsiklopediia. 3 vols. Moscow: ÈRN, 1999–2006.
- Karnovich, E. P. Zamechatel'nye i zagadochnye lichnosti XVIII i XIX stoletii s 13-in graviurami. 2nd ed. St. Petersburg: A. S. Suvorin, 1893.
- Karttunen, Marie-Louise. "Making a Communal World: English Merchants in Imperial St. Petersburg." PhD diss., University of Helsinki, 2004.
- Kellam, Ida Brooks, and Elizabeth Francenia McKoy. St. James Church Wilmington, North Carolina Historical Records 1737–1852. 3 vols. Wilmington, NC: I. B. Kellam, 1965.

- Kelly, Douglas F. Carolina Scots: An Historical and Genealogical Study of Over 100 Years of Emigration. With Caroline Switzer Kelly. Dillon, SC: 1739 Publications, 1998.
- Kelly, James. A Complete Collection of Scottish Proverbs Explained and Made Intelligible to the English Reader. London: Rodwell and Martin, 1818.
- Kelly, Sophia, ed. The Life of Mrs. Sherwood, Chiefly Autobiographical, with Extracts from Mr. Sherwoods Journal during his Imprisonment in France and Residence in India. London: Darton, 1857.
- Kene, B. "Nekrolog." Zapiski Odesskogo Obschestva istorii i drevnostei 6 (1867): 487–490. Obituary of Count Aleksandr Sergeevich Stroganov (1818–1864).
- Kennedy, Roisin A. The Subject Paintings of Sir William Allan (1782–1850). 2 vols. MLitt thesis, University of Edinburgh, 1993.
- Kessenikh, Vladimir. "Khoziaika 'Krasnogo kabachka'." S.-Peterburgskaia panorama 8 (1992): 34–35.
- Kilmer, Kenton, and Donald Sweig. The Fairfax Family in Fairfax County: A Brief History. Edited by Nan Netherton. Fairfax, VA: Fairfax County Office of Comprehensive Planning–Fairfax County Historical Commission, 1975.
- King, Alan. Huyton and Roby: A History of Two Townships. Liverpool, UK: Department of Leisure Services, Metropolitan Borough of Knowsley, Libraries Division, 1984.
- Kingslake, Alexander William. "A Summer in Russia." New Monthly Magazine and Humorist (July 1846).
- Kirk, John Foster. A Supplement to Allibone's Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors. 2 vols. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1891.
- Kirsanova, R. M. Kostium v russkoi khudozhestvennoi kul'ture 18 – pervoi poloviny 20 vv. (Opyt èntsiklopedii). Edited by T. G. Morozova and V. D. Siniukov. Moscow: Nauchnoe izdatel'stvo Bol'shaia rossiiskaia èntsiklopediia, 1995.
- Kiuchariants, D. A. Antonio Rinal'di. St. Petersburg: Stroiiizdat SPb, 1994.
- Knapp, David, and Igor Kuvaldin, Eastwick Letters: An Unabridged Account of the Andrew McCalla Eastwick Family in St. Petersburg, Russia, 1844–1850. Forthcoming.
- Kobak, A. V. Istoricheskie kladbishcha Peterburga Spravochnik-putevoditel'. St. Petersburg: Chernyshev, 1993.

- Kohl, J. G. Russia, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Kharkoff, Riga, Odessa, the German Provinces on the Baltic, The Steppes, The Crimea, and The Interior of the Empire. New York: Arno Press & The New York Times, 1970. First published in 1844 by Chapman and Hall (London).
- Kol'manov, N. M. "Dom i familiia grafov Stroganovykh." Russkaia starina 53 (March 1887): 575–602; 54 (April 1887): 71–97.
- Kondakov, N., comp. Imperatorskii Ėrmitazh Ukazatel' otdeleniia srednikh vekov i ėpokhi Vozrozhdeniia. St. Petersburg, 1891.
- Kondakov, S. N., comp. Iubileinyi spravocnik Imperatorskoi Akademii khudozhestv 1764–1914. 2 vols. St. Petersburg, 1914–1915.
- Konechnyi, Al'bin M. "Peterburgskie dachi." Antropologicheskii forum 3 (2005).
- Konechnyi, Al'bin M., comp. Progulki po Nevskomu prospektu v pervoi polovine XIX veka. Vol. 4 of Forgotten Petersburg. St. Petersburg: Hyperion, 2002.
- Koontz, Hope. "The Swainson and Birley Cotton Manufacturers of Preston from 1790." The Manchester Genealogist 28, no. 1 (1992): 13–18.
- Korf, M. A. Dnevnik God 1843-i. In Vremena i nravy: memuary, pis'ma, dnevniki. Edited by I. V. Ruzhitskaia. Moscow: Akademiia, 2004.
- Kornilova, A. V. Karl Briulllov v Peterburge. [Leningrad]: Lenizdat, 1976.
- Koval', L. Pavlovsk. Dvorets. Park. Putevoditel'. St. Petersburg: Art-Palas, 1998.
- Krasnova, E. I. Istochniki dlai izucheniiia domovladieniia Sankt-Peterburga. No publication information available.
- Kurbatov, Vladimir Iakovlevich. Petergof. Leningrad: Izdanie Leningradskogo Gubernskogo Soveta Professional'nykh Soiuzov, 1925.
- Kurbatov, Vladimir Iakovlevich. Progulki po okrestnostiam Leningrada: Strel'na i Oranienbaum. [Leningrad]: Izdanie Leningradskogo Gubernskogo Soveta Professional'nykh Soiuzov, 1925.
- Kuskov, N. I., and A. N. Lapotnikov, comps. Kratkii istoricheskii ocherk 50-letnego sushchestvovaniia Aleksandrinskoi zhenskoi bol'nitsy, uchrezhdennoi v pamiat' v Bozhe Pochivaiushchei Velikoi Kniagini Aleksandry Nikolaevny. Edited by E. V. Pavlov. St. Petersburg. V. Kirshbaum, 1899.
- Kuz'min, Yurii. A. Rossiiskaia imperatorskaia familiia 1797–1917. Biobibliograficheskii spravocnik. St. Petersburg: Dmitrii Bulanin, 2005.

- Kuznetsov, S. O. "‘Ia poterial veru v zemnoe shchastie.’ Zhizn’ grafa S.A. Stroganova v Rossii (1852–1907)." In Kraevedcheskie chteniia Porkhov-Kholomki Materialy nauchnoi konferentsii 21–22 sentiabria 2001 g. Pskov, Russia: Pskovskii oblastnoi Institut povysheniia kvalifikatsii rabotnikov obrazovaniia, 2001. 46–72.
- Kuznetsov, S. O. Dvortsy Stroganovykh [Palaces of the Stroganovs]. St. Petersburg: Almaz, 1998.
- Kvadri, V. V., and D. A. Shenk. Stoletie Voennogo Ministerstva 1802–1902. Imperatorskaia glavnaia kvartira. Istoriia gosudarevoi svity. Vol. 2, Pt. 3, of Tsarstovanie imperatora Nikolaia I. St. Petersburg, 1908.
- L’vov, F. F. "Obshchestvo pooshchreniia khudozhnikov v 1850–1862 gg." Russkaia starina (August 1881).
- "The Late Mr. John Melville, of Odessa," Bible Society Monthly Reporter (October 1886): 174–176.
- Laver, Roberto C. The Falklands/Malvinas Case: Breaking the Deadlock in the Anglo-Argentine Sovereignty Dispute. Vol. 40 of Developments in International Law. The Hague: Nijhoof, 2001.
- Lawson, D. F. History of the Town of Manchester Essex County, Massachusetts, 1645–1895. Manchester, MA: Published by the Town, [1895].
- Leaming, James R. Memoir of George P. Cammann, M.D., Read Before the New York Academy of Medicine, October 21st, 1863. Boston: E. P. Dutton, 1864.
- Lee, Leonard, and Sarah Fiske Lee, comps. John Lee of Farmington, Hartford Co., Conn., and His Descendants. 2nd ed. Meriden, CT: Republican Record Book Print for the Lee Association, 1897.
- [Lefevre, Sir George William]. The Life of A Travelling Physician, From His First Introduction into Practice Including Twenty Years’ Wandering through the Greater Part of Europe. 3 vols. London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans, 1843.
- Lemus, Vera, and Liudmila Lapina. The Catherine Palace Museum in Pushkin: Picture Hall. Leningrad: Avrora, 1990.
- Lemus, Vera, L. V. Èmina, E. S. Gladkova, and G. P. Balog. Muzei i parki Pushkina. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1980.
- Leng, Charles W., and William T. Davis. Staten Island and Its People: A History, 1609–1929. 5 vols. New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1930–1933.
- Leontieva, G. K. Karl Pavlovich Briullov. Leningrad: Khudozhnik RSFSR, 1986.

- Leskov, Nikolai. The Enchanted Wanderer and Other Stories. Edited and translated by Richard Pervear and Larissa Volokhonsky. London: Vintage Books, 2013.
- Levina, N. R., and Iu. I. Kirpideli, Po ètim ulitsam, po ètim beregam ... Peterburgskie progulki. St. Petersburg: Papyrus, 1997.
- Levinson-Lessing, V. F. Istoriia Kartinnoi galerei Èrmitazha 1764–1917. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1985.
- Lewis, Samuel. A Topographical Dictionary of Ireland, Comprising the Several Counties, Cities, Boroughs, Corporate, Market and Post Towns, Parishes, and Villages, with Historical and Statistical Descriptions. 2 vols. Baltimore, MD: Genealogical Publishing, 1984. First published in 1837.
- Lewis, Samuel. A Topographical Dictionary of Scotland, Comprising the Several Counties, Islands, Cities, Burgh and Market Towns, Parishes, and Principal Villages, with Historical and Statistical Descriptions. 2 vols. London: Lewis, 1846.
- Liaskovskaia, O. Karl Briullov. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1940.
- Likhachev, Dmitrii S. Poeziia sadov: k semantike sadovo-parkovykh stilei. Leningrad: Nauka, Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1982.
- Lincoln, W. Bruce. Nicholas I: Emperor and Autocrat of All the Russias. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, [1978].
- Lindsay, Maurice. The Burns Encyclopedia. London: Robert Hale, 1995.
- Lippincott, Bertram III. "The Hutton Family of 'Shamrock Cliff.'" In Newport History: Bulletin of the Newport History Society 64, pt. 4, no. 221 (1991): 163–174.
- Lisovskii, V. G. Akademiia Khudozhestv Istoriko-iskusstvovedcheskii ocherk. 2nd ed. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1982.
- The Literary Who's Who for the Year 1920*. London: George Routledge and Sons; New York: E. P. Dutton, 1920.
- Livingston, Joanna. "Merchants 1815–1884." In Gellibrands. Self-published, Belvedere, 2005.
- Livingston, John. Portraits of Eminent Americans Now Living, with Biographical and Historical Memoirs of Their Lives and Actions, 2 vols. New York: Cornish, Lampert; London: Sampson, Low and Son, 1853.
- Livingstone, Elizabeth A., ed. The Concise Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church. 3rd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2013.
- Lloyd, Phoebe. "Anna Whistler the Venerable." Art in America 72, no. 11 (1984).

- Lobanov-Rostovskii, A. V. Russkaia rodoslovnaia kniga. 2nd ed. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: A. S. Suvorin, 1895.
- Lochnan, Katherine A. The Etchings of James Whistler. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press in association with the Art Gallery of Ontario, 1984.
- Lockhart, John Gibson. Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Bart. 10 vols. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin; Cambridge, MA: Riverside, 1901.
- Łojek, Jerzy. Dzieje pięknej Bitynki Opowieść o życiu Zofii Wittowej Potockiej (1760–1822). Warsaw: Wydawnictwo Alfa, 1995.
- London and Provincial Medical Directory, 1851*. London: John Churchill, 1851.
- “London: A Description and Guide to the British Metropolis.” Chambers’s Information for the People 1, no. 14 (1842).
- Long, Basil S. British Miniatures. London: Geoffrey Bles, 1929.
- Longworth’s American Almanac, New York Register, and City Directory for the Sixty-Sixth Year of American Independence*. New York: Thomas Longworth, 1841.
- Lopez, Claude-Anne. Mon Cher Papa Franklin and the Ladies of Paris. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1966.
- Lotman, Iurii. M., and E. A. Pogosian. Velikosvetskĭe obedы Panorama stolichnoi zhizni. St. Petersburg: Pushkinskii fond, 1996.
- Lotman, Yurii. M., N. A. Makarenko, and E. V. Pavlova, Litsa Pushkinskoi epochi v risunkakh i akvareliakh Kamernyi portret pervoi poloviny deviatnadsatogo veka. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 2000.
- Loundes, W. T. The Bibliographer’s Manual of English Literature. London: Henry G. Bohn, 1865.
- Lovell, Steven. Summerfolk: A History of the Dacha, 1710–2000. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 2003.
- Ludwigs, Folke. “Shvedskii prikhod Sv. Ekateriny i ego arkhiv.” In Shvedy na beregakh Nevy. Sbornik statei. Edited by A. Kobak, S. Emmrich, M. Mil’chik, and B. Jangfeldt. Stockholm: Svenska Institutet, 1988. Original Swedish: Svenskarna vid Nevans Stränder: Essäer.
- Lukomskii, G. K. Staryi Peterburg Progulki po starinnyĭm kvartalam. Petrograd: Svobodnoe iskusstvo, 1917.
- Lunn, John. Short History of the Township of Tyldesley. Tyldesley, UK: Urban District Council of Tyldesley, 1953.

- MacBean, William M. Biographical Register of Saint Andrew's Society of the State of New York. 2 vols. Vol. 1, 1756–1806; Vol. 2, 1807–1856. New York: Printed for the Society, 1922–1925.
- MacDonald, Margaret F. James McNeill Whistler Drawings, Pastels and Watercolours A Catalogue Raisonné. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press for the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Art, 1995.
- MacDonald, Margaret F., ed. Whistler's Mother's Cook Book. London: Paul Elek, 1979.
- Mackall, Sally Somervell. Early Days of Washington. Washington, DC: Neale, 1899.
- Mahnke-Devlin, Julia. Britische Migration nach Russland im 19. Jahrhundert: Integration – Kultur – Alltagsleben. Wiesbaden, Germany: Harrassowitz, 2005.
- Maingay, Russell. William Maingay 1791–1862: A St. Petersburg Merchant and his Family. Self-published, 2012.
- Makarenko, Nikolai, ed. Khudozhestvennye sokrovishcha Imperatorskogo Ėrmitazha Kratkii putevoditel'. Petrograd: Obshchina Sv. Evgenii, 1916.
- Malinovskii, K. V. "Opisaniia imperatorskikh zhivopisnykh kollektsii v Peterburge i zagorodnykh dvortsakh, sostavlennye Iakobom Shtelinyam." Muzei 1 (1980): 173–193.
- Mandt, Martin. Ein deutscher Arzt am Hofe Kaiser Nikolaus I. von Russland. Lebenserinnerungen von Professor Martin Mandt. Edited by Veronika Lühe with an introduction by Theodor Schiemann. Munich: Duncker and Humblot, 1917.
- Mannex. History, Topography, and Directory of the Borough of Preston, with the Town and Parish of Chorley. Beverley, UK: W. B. Johnson, 1851.
- Mannex. History, Topography, and Directory of Westmorland; and of the Hundreds of Lonsdale and Amounderness in Lancashire; Together with a Descriptive and Geological View of the Whole of the Lake District; Illustrated by a Map of Each County. Beverley, UK: W. B. Johnson, 1851.
- Marin, V. P. "Iz dnevnika babushki. 1842–1846 g.g." Nasha starina 6, no. 42 (1915): 526–540.
- Markham, Clements. Markham Memorials, 2 vols. London: Spottiswoode, 1913.
- Marks, Paul G. "James McNeill Whistler's Family Secret: An Arrangement in White and Black." Southern Quarterly 26, no. 3 (1988): 67–75.

- Marshall, Thomas. Lives of the Most Celebrated Actors and Actresses. London: E. Appleby [c. 1848].
- Martin, Deborah B. "The Story of an Old Letter." Green Bay Historical Bulletin 3, no. 1 (1927): 1–8.
- Mashkovtsev, N. G., comp. K. P. Briullo v pis'makh, dokumentakh i vospominaniiaakh sovremennikov. 2nd ed. Moscow: Izdatel'stvo Akademii khudozhestv SSSR, 1961.
- Mason, Griselda Fox. Sleigh Ride to Russia. York, UK: William Sessions, 1985.
- Maxwell, John Stevenson. The Czar, His Court and People: Including a Tour in Norway and Sweden. 3rd ed. New York: Baker and Scribner, 1850.
- May, Herbert G., and Bruce M. Metzger, eds. New Oxford Annotated Bible with the Apocrypha. New York: Oxford University Press, 1977.
- May, Joseph. John Codman Ropes, LL.D.: A Memoir, by His Friend and Classmate Joseph May. Reprinted from the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society (June 1900): 3–28.
- May, Philip S. "Zephaniah Kingsley, Nonconformist (1765–1843)." Florida Historical Quarterly 23, no. 3 (January 1945): 145–159.
- Mays, James O'Donald. Mr. Hawthorne Goes to England. Ringwood, UK: New Forest Leaves, 1983.
- McCampbell, Margaret, and Lance Gifford. "Grand Estate on Baltimore's West Side: Alexandroffsky." Maryland (Winter 1979): 26–31.
- McDiarmid, Kate R. Whistler's Mother: Her Life, Letters and Journal. North Wilkesboro, NC: s.n., 1936.
- McGrew, Margaret P. Encyclopedia of Medical History. New York: McGraw–Hill, 1984.
- McKenzie, George N., ed. Colonial Families of the United States of America. 7 vols. Baltimore, MD: Baltimore Genealogical Publishing, 1966.
- McMullen, Roy. Victorian Outsider: A Biography of J. A. M. Whistler. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1973.
- McNeile, Hugh. Lectures on the Sympathies, Sufferings, and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. 3rd ed. London: John Hatchard and Son; Liverpool: Arthur Newling and H. Perris, 1845.
- McNeill, William. "The McNeill Family of Bladen County." In Bladen County Heritage, North Carolina. Waynesville, NC: Bladen County Heritage Book Committee and County Heritage, 1999.
- "McNeills and the Whistlers," Bulletin of the Passaic County Historical Society 5, no. 7 (1962).

- “McRee Swift, F. Am. Soc. C. E.” Proceedings of the American Society of Civil Engineers 22 (1896): 565–566.
- The Medical Register: Printed and Published under the Direction of the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom* (London: General Medical Council).
- Melikov, M. “Zametki i vospominaniia khudozhnika-zhivopistsa.” Russkaia starina 86 (April–June 1896): 643–674.
- “Memoir of the Late Sir Robert Ker Porter.” In St. Petersburg English Review of Literature, The Arts, and Sciences. Vol. 4, First Year. Edited by S. Warand and Thomas B. Shaw. St. Petersburg: Hauer, 1842, 554–562.
- Men of the Times: A Dictionary of Contemporaries Containing Biographical Notices of Eminent Characters of Both Sexes*, 12th ed. London: George Routledge and Sons, 1887.
- Meyer, J. Vues pittoresque des palais et jardins impériaux aux environs de St. Petersburg: Dessinées d’après nature par J. Meyer et lithographiées par Schultz. St. Petersburg: Velten, [1845–1855]. Dedicated “A son Altesse Impériale Madame la Césarevna Grande Duchesse Marie Alexandrovna.”
- Mikhailov, V. S. Pravoslannaia kukebniia. Moscow: Kubka, 1996.
- Mikhailovich, Nikolai, Grand Duke of Russia, and Vladimir Saitov. Peterburgskii Nekropol’. 4 vols. St. Petersburg: Tip. M. M. Stasiulevicha, 1912–1913.
- Miller, Iurii. A. “Sedlo i sablia Tippu-Saiba.” Soobshcheniia Gosudarstvennogo Ėrmitazha 10 (1956): 45–47.
- Miller, Kerby A. Emigrants and Exiles: Ireland and the Irish Exodus to North America. New York: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- Milliken, H. T. Changing Scene: Two Hundred Years of Church and Parish Life in Worsley. 3rd rev. ed. Worsley, UK: printed by the author, 1985.
- Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America*. New series. Vol. 13, A.D. 1890. Philadelphia: McCalla, 1890.
- Minutes of the Sixty-Sixth Annual Session of the Synod of New Jersey Held at Asbury Park, N.J., October 1889*. Trenton, NJ, 1889.
- Mitchell, John Fowler, and Sheila Mitchell. Monumental Inscriptions (Pre-1855) in West Lothian. [Edinburgh]: Scottish Genealogical Society, 1961.
- Mitchell, Mary. Chronicles of Georgetown Life, 1865–1900. Cabin John, MD: Seven Locks Press, 1986.

- Mogg, Edward. Mogg's New Picture of London; or, Strangers' Guide to the British Metropolis. 7th ed. London: printed by the author, 1844.
- Mokhoff, N. E., ed. Holy Days of the Church: A Short Synopsis of Pascha and the Twelve Major Feasts and Fasts of the Orthodox Church. New York: Russian Orthodox Youth Committee, 2001.
- Mokritskii, A. N. "Vospominaniia o Briullove." Otechestvennye zapiski 12, no. 12 (1855).
- Moleva, N. M. Vydaiushchiesia russkie khudozhniki-pedagogi. Moscow: s.n., [1962].
- Moleva, N. M., and E. Beliutin. Russkaia khudozhestvennaia shkola pervoi poloviny XIX veka. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1963.
- Monson, Lord, and George Leveson-Gower, eds. Memoirs of George Elers, Captain in the 12th Regiment of Foot (1777–1842). London: William Heinemann, 1903.
- Montgomery, James. The Poetical Works of James Montgomery. In The Poetical Works of Rogers, Campbell, J. Montgomery, Lamb, and Kirke White: Complete in One Volume. Paris: A. and W. Galignani, 1829.
- Montgomery, Thomas Lynch. Encyclopedia of Pennsylvania Biography. 16 vols. New York: Lewis Historical Publishing, 1923.
- Moore, Thomas. Irish Melodies and Sacred Songs. New York: C. S. Francis, 1854.
- Morison, Samuel Eliot, and Henry Steele Commager. The Growth of the American Republic. 5th ed. 2 vols. New York: Oxford University Press, 1962.
- Morosan, Vladimir. Choral Performance in Pre-Revolutionary Russia. Madison, CT: Musica Russica, 1994.
- Morris, Charles, ed. Makers of Philadelphia: An Historical Work Giving Portraits and Sketches of the Most Eminent Citizens of Philadelphia from the Time of William Penn to the Present Day. Philadelphia: L. R. Hamersly, 1894.
- Morton, Edward. Travels in Russia, and a Residence at St. Petersburg and Odessa, in the Years 1827–1829; Intended to Give Some Account of Russia as It Is, and Not as It Is Represented to Be. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green, 1830.

- Moskovskoe o-vo sel'skogo khoziaistva, Komitet sakharovarov.
Èkstraordinarnoe sobranie Komiteta g.g. sakharovarov v pamiat' grafa Alekseia Alekseevicha Bobrinskogo: Protokol zasedaniia, vospominaniia S.A. Maslova, N.P. Shiskova i rechi M.D. Tolstogo, I.I. Polimistova, N.D. Bernadaki, S.A. Pakhomova. Moscow: V universitetskoi tipografii [Katkov], 1869. Title on cover: Vospominaniia o grafe Aleksee Alekseeviche Bobrinskom.
- Mukhin, V. Tserkovnaia kul'tura Sankt-Peterburga. St. Petersburg: Ivan Fedorov, 1994.
- Mumford, Elizabeth. Whistler's Mother: The Life of Anna McNeill Whistler. Boston: Little, Brown, 1939.
- Munro, David, and Bruce Gittings. Scotland: An Encyclopedia of Places and Landscapes. Glasgow: Collins, 2006.
- Munro, Edward. The Dark River: An Allegory. 3rd American edition, "with Engravings from Original Designs by Chapman." New York: General Protestant Episcopal S. S. Union, 1848.
- Munro, George E. "Compiling and Maintaining St. Petersburg's 'Book of City Inhabitants': The 'Real' City Inhabitants." In St. Petersburg, 1703–1825. Edited by Anthony G. Cross. Basingstoke, UK; New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2003. 80–98.
- Myers, Minor, Jr. History of Calvary Church, Stonington. Stonington, CT: Calvary Churchwomen, 1973.
- N. B. "Pavlovskii vokzal." Stolitsa i usad'ba 40–41 (September 1, 1915). National Cyclopaedia of American Biography. 64 vols. New York: James T. White, 1891–1984.
- Nauhaus, Gerd, ed. Robert Schumann Tagebücher. Vol. 2, 1836–1854. Leipzig: Deutsche Verlag für Musik, 1987.
- Nauhaus, Gerd, ed. The Marriage Diaries of Robert and Clara Schumann from Their Wedding Day through the Russian Trip. Translated by Peter Oswald. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1993.
- Necrological Report Presented to the Alumni Association of Princeton Theological Seminary, at its Annual Meeting, April 29, 1879, by a Committee of the Association.* Philadelphia: Grant, Faires and Rodgers, 1879.
- Neill, Edward D. "Descendants of Hon. William Fairfax of Belvoir, Virginia, United States of America." In The Fairfaxes of England and America in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Albany, NY: Joel Munsell, 1868.
- Nekrasova, E. "Uistler v Peterburge." Khudozhnik 1 (1970): 43–45.

- Nekrasova, E., trans. Iziaschnoe iskusstvo sozdat' sebe vragov. By Dzheims MakNeil' Vistler [James McNeill Whistler]. Moskva: Iskusstvo, 1970. Translation of The Gentle Art of Making Enemies.
- Nekrylova, A. F. Russkie narodnye gorodskie prazdniki, uveseleniia i zrelisheba. Konets XVIII nachalo XX veka. 2nd ed. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1988.
- Nevin, Alfred, ed. Encyclopaedia of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Publishing, 1884.
- Newey, Vincent. Comper's Poetry: A Critical Study and Reassessment. Liverpool, UK: Liverpool University Press, [1982].
- Newspaper Press Directory, 1851*. London: Mitchell, 1851. Published annually.
- Nikulina, N. I. Prigorody Leningrada Arkhitekturnyi putevoditel'. Leningrad: Stroizdat, Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1982.
- Nistrem, K., comp. Adres-Kalendar' Sanktpeterburgskikh zhitelei. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: V tipografii III Otd. Sobstv. E. I. V. Kantseliarii, 1844.
- Noall, Cyril, and Grahame Farr. Wreck and Rescue Round the Cornish Coast. Vol. 1: The Story of the North Coast Lifeboats. Truro, UK: D. Bradford Barton, 1964.
- Nutty, Caroline S. H. "Joseph Harrison, Jr. (1810–74), Philadelphia Art Collector." PhD Diss., University of Delaware, 1993.
- O'Byrne, William R. A Naval Biographical Dictionary. London: John Murray, 1849.
- O'Neill, Paul. A Seaport Legacy: The Story of St. John's Newfoundland. Don Mills, ON: Musson, 1976.
- Oakley, Henrietta Meier, and J. C. Schwab. Muhlenberg Album. New Haven, CT: Tuttle Press, 1910.
- "Obituary of Thomas Macdougall Smith." Proceedings of the Institution of Civil Engineers 84 (1886).
- Obituary Record of Graduates of Yale University Deceased from June, 1910, to July, 1915*. New Haven, CT: Yale University, 1915.
- Obituary Record of the Graduates of Bowdoin College and the Medical School of Maine for the Year Ending 1 June 1894*. Brunswick, ME: Bowdoin College, [1894].
- Odom, Anne. Russian Imperial Porcelain at Hillwood. Washington, DC: Hillwood Museum and Gardens, 1999.
- Oeste, George Irvin. John Randolph Clay: America's First Career Diplomat. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1966.
- Ogloblin, N. N. "Iz zapisnoi knizhki." Nasba starina 5, no. 11 (1914).

- Olenina, A. A. Dnevnik. Vospominaniia. St. Petersburg: The Humanitarian Agency Academic Project, 1999.
- Onuchin, A. N., comp. Rod Stroganovykh. Prakticheskoe posobie dlia istorikov, kraevedov i genealogov. Perm', Russia: Permskaia oblastnaia organizatsiia ob-va Znanie, 1990.
- Opie, Iona, and Peter Opie. The Singing Game. Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- Ot konki do tramvaia Iz istorii peterburgskogo transporta*. St. Petersburg: Liki Rossii; Moscow: Dzhuliia, 1994.
- P. B. "Graf Petr Andreevich Kleinmikhel' (3-go fevral'ia 1869 goda)." Krasnyi arkhiv 32, no. 3 (1894): 590–591.
- Paine, H. D., ed. Paine Family Records: A Journal of Genealogical and Biographical Information Respecting the American Families of Payne, Paine, Payn, etc. 2 vols. New York: Joel Munsell, 1880–1883.
- The Palatine Note-book*. 5 vols. Manchester, UK: J. E. Cornish, 1881–1885.
- Palmer, C. J., and Stephen Tucker, eds. Palgrave Family Memorials. Norwich: Privately printed, 1878.
- Palmer, Henry Robinson. Stonington By the Sea. Stonington, CT: Palmer Press, 1913.
- Palmer, Samuel. St. Pancras; Being Antiquarian, Topographical, and Biographical Memoranda, Relating to the Extensive Metropolitan Parish of St. Pancras, Middlesex: with Some Account of the Parish from Its Foundation. London: Samuel Palmer; and Field and Tuer, 1870.
- Pamiatniki arkhitektury Leningrada*. Leningrad: Gosudarstvennoe izdatel'stvo literatury po stroitel'stvu, arkhitekture i stroitel'nyim materialam, 1958.
- Pamiatniki arkhitektury Leningrada*. Leningrad: Stroizdat, Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1975.
- Pamiatniki arkhitektury prigorodov Leningrada*. Leningrad: Stroizdat, Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1983.
- Panchulidzev, S., comp. Istoriia Kavaleriarskogo Polka 1724–1799–1899. Po sluchaiu stoletnego iubileia Kavaleriarskogo Ee Velichestva Gosudaryni Imperatritsy Marii Fyodorovny polka. 4 vols. St. Petersburg: Ekspeditsiia zagotovleniia gosudarstvennykh bumag, 1912.
- Peabody, William Bourne Oliver. The Springfield Collection of Hymns for Sacred Worship. Springfield, MA: Samuel Bowles; Boston: Leonard C. Bowles, 1835.

- Pennell, Elizabeth R. and Joseph Pennell. The Art of Whistler. New York: Modern Library, 1928.
- Pennell, Elizabeth R. Whistler the Friend. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1930.
- Pennell, Elizabeth R., and Joseph Pennell. The Whistler Journal. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott, 1921.
- Pennell, Joseph, and Elizabeth R. Pennell. The Life of James McNeill Whistler. 2 vols. London: Heinemann, 1908.
- Perepiska Imperatora Aleksandra II s Velikim Kniazem Konstantinom Nikolaevichem. Dnevnik Velikogo Kniazia Konstantina Nikolaevicha*. Moscow: Terra, 1994.
- Perley Poore, Benjamin. Perley's Reminiscences of Sixty Years in the National Metropolis. 2 vols. Philadelphia: Hubbard, 1886.
- Petrov, A. N. Pushkin: dvortsy i parki. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1964.
- Petrov, P. N. Istoriia rodov russkogo dvorianstva. 2 bks. St. Petersburg: Knigoizdatel'stvo German Goppe, 1886; reprint, Moscow: Sovremennik, 1991.
- Petrov, P. N., ed. Sbornik materialov dlia istorii imperatorskoi S.-Peterburgskoi Akademii khudozhestv za sto let ee sushchestvovaniia. Vol. 1, 1864; Vol. 2, 1865; Vol. 3, 1866. St. Petersburg: Komissioner Imperatorskoi Akademii Khudozhestv Gogenfel'den i Ko, 1864–1866.
- Petrova, Yevgenia, ed. Play and Passion in Russian Fine Art. St. Petersburg: Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei, 1999.
- Petrovskaia, I. F. Kontsertnaia zhizn' Peterburga Muzyka v obschestvennom i domashnem bytu 1801–1859 gody. Materialy dlia entsiklopedii "Muzykal'nyi Peterburg". St. Petersburg: [Petrovskii fond], 2000.
- Petrovskaia, I. F. Muzykal'noe obrazovanie i muzykal'nye obschestvennye organizatsii v Peterburge 1801–1917 Entsiklopediia. St. Petersburg: Petrovskii fond, 1999.
- Petrovskii, N. A. Slovar' russkikh lichnykh imen. Moscow: Sovetskaia entsiklopediia, 1966.
- Phelps Stokes, I. N. The Iconography of Manhattan Island, 1498–1909. 6 vols. New York: Robert H. Dodd, 1926.
- Picton, J. A. Memorials of Liverpool: Historical and Topographical, Including A History of the Dock Estate, 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green, 1873.
- Pigot and Co.'s National London and Provincial Commerical Directory for 1832-3-4*. London: J. Pigot, 1832. Published annually.

- Pigot and Co.'s National Commercial Directory for 1828–29; [for] Chester, Cumberland, Derbyshire, Durham, Lancaster, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Rutlandshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Westmoreland, Worcestershire, and Yorkshire* (London and Manchester, UK: Pigot, [1829]. Published annually.
- Pigot and Co.'s Royal, National and Commercial Directory and Topography of the Counties of Kent, Surrey and Sussex*. London: Pigot, 1840. Published annually.
- Piletskaia, T. L. “Luiza Kessenikh-zhenshchina-ulan.” Novyi chasovoi 3, no. 2 (1995): 210–217.
- Pine, L. G. The New Extinct Peerage, 1884–1971. Baltimore, MD: Genealogical Publishers, 1973.
- Pinkerton, Robert. Russia; or, Miscellaneous Observations on the Past and Present State of That Country and Its Inhabitants. London: Seeley and Sons, 1833.
- Piotrovsky, Boris. The Hermitage: Its History and Collections. New York: Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, [1982].
- Pitcher, Harvey [Kharvii Picher]. Muir i Meriliẓ Sshotlandtsy v Rossii. Moscow: Moskovskii rabochii, 1993.
- Pitcher, Harvey. Muir and Mirrieles: The Scottish Partnership That Became a Household Name in Russia. Cromer, UK: Swallow House Books, 1994.
- Pitcher, Harvey. When Miss Emmie Was in Russia. London: John Murray, 1977.
- “Poездka po novoi zheleznoi doroge. Pis'mo k redaktoru.” Illiustratsiia (June 1847): 345.
- Polovtsov, A. A., ed. Russkii biograficheskii slovar'. 25 vols. St. Petersburg: Imperatorskoe Russkoe Istoricheskoe Obshchestvo, 1896–1918; New York: Kraus Reprint, 1962.
- Polunina, Nadezhda, and Aleksandr Frolov. “Russkie kollektsionery. Opyt biograficheskogo slovaria.” Pamiatniki Otechestva 29 (1994).
- Pope, Charles Henry, and Thomas Hooper, comps. Hooper Genealogy. Boston, MA: Charles H. Pope, 1908.
- Post Office London Directory for 1844*. London: Frederic Kelly, 1844. Published annually.
- Poulson, Joan. Yorkshire Cookery. London: B.T. Batsford, 1979.

- Power, Mrs. Carroll. "Christ Episcopal Church, Georgetown, D.C." Mrs. Elmer Curry, comp. Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. [District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution] 27 (1936). Typescript.
- Power, Mrs. Carroll. "St. John's Episcopal Church, Georgetown, D.C." Mrs. Elmer Curry, comp. Report to the Genealogical Records Committee, D.C.D.A.R. [District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution] 27 (1936). Typescript.
- Priimak, N. L., ed. Dnevnik kbudozbnika A. N. Mokeritskogo. Moscow: Izobrazitel'noe iskusstvo, 1975.
- "The Progress of Science." Popular Science Monthly 82, no. 42 (1913).
- Przhevalsky, Nikolai M. From Kulja across the Tian-Shan to Lobnor. Translated by E. Delmar Morgan and Sir Thomas Douglas Forsyth. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1879.
- Przhevalsky, Nikolai M. Mongolia, The Tangut Country, and the Solitudes of Northern Tibet, Being a Narrative of Three Years' Travel in Eastern High Asia. Edited by Henry Yule and translated by E. Delmar Morgan. 2 vols. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington, 1876.
- Punin, A. L. Arkhitektura Peterburga serediny XIX veka. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1990.
- Pushkarev, Ivan. Istoricheskii ukazatel' dostopamiatnosti Sankt-Peterburga. St. Petersburg: Konrad Vingeber, 1846.
- Pushkarev, Ivan. Nikolaevskii Peterburg. St. Petersburg: Liga Plius, 2000.
- Pushkarev, Ivan. Opisanie Sanktpeterburga i uezdnykh gorodov S. Peterburgskoi gubernii. 3 vols. St. Petersburg: Konrad Vingeber, 1839–1842.
- Pushkarev, Ivan. Putevoditel' po Sanktpeterburgu i okrestnostiam ego. St. Petersburg: Departament vneshnei torgovli, 1843.
- Pyliaev, M. I. Zabytoe proshloe okrestnosti Peterburga. St. Petersburg: A.S. Suvorin, 1889; Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1996.
- Quinquennial Catalog of Harvard University, 1636–1936*. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1937.
<https://legacy-www.math.harvard.edu/history/officers/index.html>
- Rainold, K. E. ed. Erinnerungen an merkwürdige Gegenstände und Begebenheiten. Vienna, 1825.

- Rakova, M. M. "K.P. Briullov – portretist." In Očerki po istorii russkogo portreta pervoi poloviny XIX veka. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1966.
- Rakova, M. M. Russkaia istoricheskaia zhivopis' seređiny deviatnadsatogo veka. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1979.
- Rakova, M. M. Russkoe iskusstvo pervoi poloviny XIX veka. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1975.
- Raskin, A. G. Petrodvorets Dvortsy-muzei, parki, fontany. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1988.
- Raymond, Edward A., and Eugene Prince. "Whistler Had a Father, Too." My Country 8, no. 2 [May–June 1974]: 3–14.
- Record of Service of Michigan Volunteers in the Civil War, 1861–1865*. Kalamazoo, MI: Ihling Bros. and Everard, n.d. Published by authority of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Michigan Legislature under the direction of Brig. Gen. Geo. H. Brown, Adjutant General.
- Renne, Elizaveta. "British Artists in Russia in the First Half of the Nineteenth Century." In British Art Treasures from Russian Imperial Collections in the Hermitage. Edited by B. Allen and L. Dukelskaya. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1996.
- Renne, Elizaveta. "Christina Robertson in Russia." In Christina Robertson: A Scottish Portraitist at the Russian Court. Edited by Amanda Farr and translated by Catherine Phillips. St. Petersburg and Edinburgh: [Edinburgh City Art Centre], 1996. 14–37.
- Renne, Elizaveta. "Ser Robert Ker Porter Khudozhnik v Rossii." Nashe Nasledie 63–64 (2002): 151–163.
- Reyffman, Irina. How Russia Learned to Write Literature and the Imperial Table of Ranks. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 2016.
- Richards, Sarah. Eighteenth-Century Ceramics Products for a Civilised Society. Manchester, UK: Manchester University Press, 1999.
- Richmond, Legh. Annals of the Poor. Containing The Dairyman's Daughter (with considerable additions), The Negro Servant, and The Young Cottager. 2nd ed. New Haven, NY: Whiting and Tiffany, 1815.
- Richmond, Legh. Annals of the Poor. New ed. New York: Robert Carter and Brothers, 1850.
<https://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=uc2.ark:/13960/t36118p1z&view=1up&seq=7>
- Richmond, Legh. Annals of the Poor. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication, n.d.

- Ricord, F. W., ed. History of Union County New Jersey. Newark, NJ: East Jersey History Company, 1897.
- Rieber, Alfred J. "The Rise of Engineers in Russia." Cahiers du monde russe et soviétique 31, no. 4 (1990).
- [Rigby, Elizabeth.] Letters from the Shores of the Baltic. 2 vols. London: John Murray, 1842. First published in 1841 as A Residence on the Shores of the Baltic: Described in a Series of Letters, also by John Murray (London).
- Rines, George Edwin, ed., The Encyclopedia Americana, 30 vols. New York: Encyclopedia Americana, 1918–1920.
<https://catalog.hathitrust.org/Record/001461815>
- Robbins, James W. "The Founding of the Diocese of Iowa of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America." Master's thesis, Drake University, Des Moines, IO, 1950.
- Roberts, Edward Howell, comp. Biographical Catalogue of the Princeton Theological Seminary, 1815–1932. Princeton, NJ: Trustees of the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church, 1933.
- Robertson, J. Ross. Landmarks of Toronto. 4th series. Toronto: printed by the author, 1904.
- Rohdewald, Eduard. Der Rodewalde Geschlecht familiengeschichtliche Blätter. Leipzig, Germany: G. Reichardt, 1929.
- Roizman, L. Organ v istorii russkoi muzykal'noi kul'tury. Moscow: Muzyka, 1979.
- Rollé, A. J. "Sud'ba krasavitsy (Sofia Gliavone-Vitte-Pototskaia)." Kievskaia starina: ezhemesiachnyi istoricheskii zhurnal 17 (1887): 99–138.
- Rolleston, J. D. "The Folklore of Pulmonary Tuberculosis." Tubercule 22 (1941).
- Romanes, Charles S. The Calls of Norfolk and Suffolk: Their Paston Connections and Descendants. London: T. and A. Constable, 1920.
- Rossiiskaia muzeinaia ènsiklopedia*. 2 vols. Moscow: Progress–Ripol klassik, 2001.
- Rovinskii, D. A., comp., Podrobnii slovar' russkikh gravyorov XVIII – XIX vv. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia Nauk, 1895.
- Rowe, George. Rowe's Illustrated Cheltenham Guide. Cheltenham, UK: printed by the author, c. 1845.
- Rowntree, Arthur, ed. The History of Scarborough. London: J. M. Dent and Sons, 1931.

- Royer, Alfred. The English Prisoners in Russia: A Personal Narrative of the First Lieutenant of H.M.S. Tiger; Together with an Account of His Journey in Russia, and His Interview with the Emperor Nicholas and the Principal Persons in the Empire. 3rd ed. London: Chapman and Hall, 1854.
- Rožanov, A. Polina Viardo-Garsia. 3rd ed. Leningrad. Muzyka, 1982.
- Rozhnova, Polina. Radonitsa Russkii narodny kalendar'. Moscow: Druzhba narodov, 1997.
- Rummel', V. V. and V. V. Golubtsov. Rodoslovnyi sbornik russkikh dvorianskikh familii. St. Petersburg: A. S. Suvorin, 1887.
- Russell, Henry. Songs, Dramatic, and Descriptive Scenes, Cantatas, Characteristic Ballads, and Negro Melodies. London: G. H. Davidson, 1846.
- "Russkaia troika v Anglii." Stolitsa i usad'ba 6 (15 March 1914): 18–20.
- Russkie portrety XVIII i XIX stoletii*. 5 vols. St. Petersburg: Izdanie velikogo kniazia Nikolaia Mikhailovicha, 1905–1909.
- Ruvigny and Raineval, Marquis of. The Plantagenet Roll of the Blood Royal: The Clarence Volume (London: T. C. and E. C. Jack, 1905).
- Rying, Bent. Denmark: History. Vol. 2 of Danish in the South and North. 2 vols. Copenhagen: Royal Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 1988.
- Ryle, John Charles. Practical Religion: Being Plain Papers on the Daily Duties, Experience, Dangers, and Privileges of Professing Christians. 3rd ed. London: William Hunt, 1883.
- Sadoven', V. V. Russkie kbudozhniki batalisty XVIII-XIX vekov. Moscow: Iskustvo, 1955.
- "Saluting Our Ancestors," Fashion Digest 15, no. 4 (Fall and Winter 1962–1963): 64–66.
- Sandland, John Dorlin. The Wanderer and Other Poems, Chiefly Written during a Residence in South America. London: Whittaker; Liverpool: Charles Davies, 1845.
- Saul, Norman E. "American Merchants in Russia, 1815–1845." Paper delivered at the AAASS Convention, Washington, DC, November 1990.
- Saul, Norman E. Distant Friends: The United States and Russia, 1763–1867. Lawrence: University Press of Kansas, 1991.
- Sautov, Ivan Petrovich. Imperial Palaces in the Vicinity of St. Petersburg. Tsarskoe Selo: Watercolours, Paintings and Engravings from the 18th and 19th Centuries. Commentaries by Larissa Valentinovna Bardovskaia. Paris: Alain de Gourcuff Éditeur, 1992.

- Sawyer, Roy C., comp. Abstracts of Wills for New York County. 20 vols. Vol. 12, New York, 1844–1847. 1939.
- Schafer, Daniel L. Anna Madgigine Jai Kingsley: African Princess, Florida Slave, Plantation Owner. Gainesville, FL: University Press of Florida, 2003.
- Schafer, Daniel L. Zephaniah Kingsley Jr. and the Atlantic World: Slave Trader, Plantation Owner, Emancipator. Gainesville, FL: University of Florida Press, 2013.
- Schaff, Philip. Medieval Christianity: From Gregory I to Gregory VII, AD 590–1073. Vol. 4 of History of the Christian Church. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1885.
- Schneiderman, Richard S. A Catalogue Raisonné of the Prints of Sir Francis Seymour Haden. London: Robin Garton, 1983.
- Schneiderman, Richard S. A. "Sir Francis Seymour Haden: A Reassessment of His Etchings and Water Colors." Master's thesis, University of Cincinnati, 1973.
- Schools Information: Victorian Playthings*. London: London Toy and Model Museum, n.d. Brochure.
- Schrader, T. A. "Der Beitrag Deutscher Ärzte zur Entwicklung der Krankenhäuser in St. Petersburg in 19. Jahrhundert." In Medizin und Pharmazie im 18. und 19. Jahrhundert. Edited by Ingrid Käster and Regine Pfrepper. Aachen, Germany: Shaker, 2000.
- Schutt, Kate M. The First Century of St. Stephen's Parish 1830–1930. Pittsfield, MA: s.n., 1930.
- Scott, Hew. Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticae: The Succession of Ministers in the Church of Scotland from the Reformation. 8 vols. Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd, 1915–1950.
- Scott, Keith. Scott, 1118–1923: Being a Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Border Family of "Scott". London: Burke, 1924.
- Sears, Robert. An Illustrated Description of the Russian Empire. Rev. ed. New York: Hurst, 1881.
- Selifontov, N. N. "Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin Glavnoupravliaiushchii putiami soobshcheniia i publicnymi zdaniiami s 15-go oktiabria 1855 po 11-oe oktiabria 1862 g." Russkaia starina 22 (May 1878): 1–38.
- Sementsov, S. V. "Administrativno-territorial'noe delenie Sankt-Peterburga v XVIII – nachale XIX v." Peterburgskie chteniia 96 (1996).

- Semmes, John E. John H. B. Latrobe and His Times, 1803–1891. Baltimore, MD: Norman Remington, [1917].
- Seriakov, L. A. “Moia trudovaia zhizn’, rasskaz gravera, akademika L.A. Seriakova. 1824–1875.” Russkaia starina 14 (September 1875): 161–184, 339–365.
- Severa, Joan L. Dressed for the Photographer: Ordinary Americans and Fashion, 1840–1900. Kent, OH: Kent State University Press, 1995.
- Seyger, K. I., comp. Katalog redkogo, starinnogo i vostochnogo oruzh’iia, kbraniashchegosia v sobstvennom Ego Imperatorskogo Velichestva Arsenale v Tsarskom-Sele. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: Eduard Prats, 1840. Published in French in 1853 as Musée du Tsarskoé-Sélo [...] by Florian Gille (see).
- Sharubin, N. G. Ocherki Petergofa i ego okrestnostei. St. Petersburg: s.n., 1868.
- Shcherbakova, Taisija A. Mikhail i Matvei Viel’gorskii: ispolniteli, prosvetiteli, metsenaty. Moscow: Muzyka, 1990.
- Shchukin, P. I. Vospominaniia Iz istorii metsenatstva Rossii. Edited by S. O. Shmidt. Compiled by N. V. Gorbushina. Moscow: Gosudarstvennyi istoricheskiĭ muzeĭ, 1997.
- Sheldon, Julie, ed. The Letters of Elizabeth Rigby. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 2009.
- Sheumaker, Helen. Love Entwined: The Curious History of Hairwork in America. Pittsburgh: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2007.
- Shterengarts, R. Ia. Istoriia Rossii XIX veka v zerkale graficheskogo iskusstva. Moscow: Progress-Traditsiia, [2002].
- Shtiglits, Margarita S. Promyshlennaia arkhitektura Peterburga. St. Petersburg: Neva, 1995.
- Shtraukh, S. Ia, ed. Polveka russkoi zhizni Vospominaniia A.I. Del’viga 1820–1870. Foreword by D. O. Zaslavskii. 2 vols. Moscow and Leningrad: Akademiia, 1930.
- Shtukenberg, A. I. “Iz istorii zheleznodorozhnogo dela v Rossii. Nikolaevskaia doroga mezhdū Peterburgom i Moskvou v 1842–1852 gg.” Russkaia starina 46 (1885): 309–322.
- Shtukenberg, A. I. “Osip Ivanovich Koritskii. Biografiia.” Zhurnal Glavnogo upravleniia putei soobshcheniia i publichnykh zdaniĭ 33, no. 1 (1861): 37–94.
- Shul’ts, S. Kbramy Sankt-Peterburga Istoriia i sovremennost’. Edited by M. V. Shkarovskii. St. Petersburg: Glagol, 1994.

- Shvarts, V. S. Arkhitekturnyi ansambl' Marsova Polia. Leningrad: Iskustvo, 1989.
- Shvidkovskii, Dmitrii. St. Petersburg: Architecture of the Tsars. Photographs by Alexander Orloff. Translated from the French by John Goodman. New York: Abbeville Press, 1996.
- Shvidkovskii, Dmitrii. The Empress and the Architect: British Architecture and Gardens at the Court of Catherine the Great. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1996.
- Sivers, A. A. Genealogicheskie razvedki. St. Petersburg: Glavnoe upravlenie udelov, 1913.
- Skinner, Michael. What We Did for the Russians and What They Did for (Some of) Us. [UK]: JDS, 2008.
- Slade, James. Twenty-One Prayers Composed from the Psalms, for the Sick and Afflicted, to Which are Added Various Other Forms of Prayer for the Same Purpose; with a Few Hints and Directions for the Visitation of the Sick, Chiefly Intended for the Use of the Younger Clergy. 4th ed. London: J. G. and F. Rivington, 1839.
- Slater's General and Classified Directory for Manchester and Salford 1845*. Manchester, UK: I. Slater, 1845. Published annually.
- Slater's Royal National Commercial Directory and Topography of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire*. Manchester, UK: Isaac Slater, 1849.
- Smagina, G. I., ed. Nemtsy v Rossii Peterburgskie nemtsy Sbornik statei. St. Petersburg: Dmitrii Bulanin, 1999.
- Smirnov, G. V. Gosudarstvennyi Russkii muzei Zhivopis': XVIII – nachalo XX veka: katalog. Leningrad: Avrorra, 1980.
- Smirnov, V. V. Peterburgskie shkoly i shkol'nye zdaniia Istorii shkol'nogo stroitel'stva v Sankt-Peterburge–Petrograde–Leningrade 1703–2003 gg. St. Petersburg: Russko-Baltiiskii informatsionnyi tsentr, BLITS, 2003.
- Smirnova-Rosset, A. O. Dnevnik, Vospominaniia. Edited by S. V. Zhitomirskaia. Moscow: Nauka, 1989.
- Smith, Andrew F., ed. Oxford Encyclopedia of Food and Drink in America. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004.
- Smith, J. E. A. The History of Pittsfield (Berkshire County) Massachusetts, from the Year 1800 to the Year 1876. Springfield, MA: C. W. Bryan, 1876.
- Smith, Matthew Hale. Twenty Years Among the Bulls and Bears of Wall Street. Hartford, CT: J. B. Burr, 1870.
- Smith, Naomi Royce. The State of Mind of Mrs. Sherwood. London: Macmillan, 1946.

- Smith, Noël E. Almost an Island: The Story of Wallasey. Printed by the author, 1990.
- Smith, Thomas Charles, and Jonathan Shortt, The History of the Parish of Ribchester, in the County of Lancaster. London: Bemrose; Preston: C. W. Whitehead, 1890.
- Smollett, Tobias, trans. The History of Charles the Twelfth, King of Sweden; and Peter the Great, Emperor of Russia. London: Walker and Edwards, 1817. Translation of Histoire de Charles XII (1731) by Voltaire.
- Sobko, N. P. "Zhizn' i proizvedeniia gravera L.A. Seriakova. 1824–1881." Russkaia starina 30 (1881): 423–443.
- Sobranie risunkov izobrazhailushchikh raznoschikov v S. Peterburge—Cris de St. Pétersbourg. Collection de petits dessins à l'usage de la jeunesse*. St. Peterburg: Charles Beggrow, 1834.
- Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. Market Towns of Hampshire in the Early 19th Century. Ashford, Kent, UK: Old Town Books and Maps, 2008. First published in 1853 by Little, Brown (Boston).
- Sokolov, P. P. Vospominaniia. Edited by E. Gollerbakh. Leningrad: Komitet popularizatsii khudozhestvennykh izdaniï, 1930.
- Sokolovskii, V. Vremena goda Prazdniki, zbitiia, primety, obychai molitvoslov. Rostov-na-Donu: Kniga, 1995.
- Solntsev, F. G. "Moia zhizn' i khudozhestvenno-arkheologicheskie trudy, rasskaz akademika F.G. Solntseva." Russkaia starina 15 [March 1876]: 617–664.
- Solodiankina, O. Iu. Inostrannye gubernantki v Rossii (vtoraia polovina XVIII – pervaiia polovina XIX vekov). Moscow: Academia, 2007.
- Solovieva, T. A. Angliiskaia naberezhnaia. St. Petersburg: Belvedere, 2004.
- Solovieva, T. A. K prichalam Angliiskoi naberezhnoi. Putevoditel'. In Po 'glavnoi ulitse' Sankt-Peterburga. 6 vols. St. Petersburg: Icarus, 1998.
- Son innosti Zapiski docheri Imperatora Nikolaia I Velikoi Kniazheny Ol'gi Nikolaevny, Korolery Vürtembergskoi*. Paris: s.n., 1963.
- Sotrudniki Imperatorskogo Èrmitazha. 1852–1917: Biobibliograficheskii spravocnik*. St. Petersburg: Izd-stvo Gosudarstvennogo Èrmitazha, 2004.
- Spencer, Robin. "Whistler's Early Relations with Britain and the Significance of Industry and Commerce for his Art: Part I." The Burlington Magazine 136, no. 1093 (1994): 212–224.
- Spicer, Dorothy. The Book of Festivals. New York: Women's Press, 1937.

- Sprague, William B. Annals of the American Pulpit. Vol. 8, Annals of the American Unitarian Pulpit; or, Commemorative Notices of Distinguished Clergymen of the Unitarian Denomination in the United States, from Its Commencement to the Close of the Year Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-Five. With an Historical Introduction. New York: Robert Carter and Brothers, 1865.
- Squire, P. S. The Third Department: The Establishment and Practices of the Political Police in the Russia of Nicholas I. New Haven, CT: Cambridge University Press, 1968.
- St. George's Church Sarnia, Ontario 125th Anniversary 1848–1973* (Sarnia, ON: s.n., 1973), no pagination.
- “St. George’s Church, Sarnia.” In In Commemoration of One Hundred Years of the Ministrations of the Anglican Church in the City and Township of Sarnia, 1840–1940. [Sarnia, ON]: Canadian Printers, [1940], no pagination.
- Stachniak, Eva. Garden of Venus. Toronto: Harper Collins, 2005.
- Stählin, J. Zapiski Iakoba Shtelina ob izyashchnykh iskusstvakh v Rossii. Edited and translated by K. M. Malinovskii. 2 vols. Moscow: Iskusstvo, 1990.
- Stark, Vadim P. Zhizn' s poetom Natal'ia Nikolaevna Pushkina. 2 vols. St. Petersburg: Vita Nova, 2006.
- Stark, Vadim P., ed. Dvorianskaia sem'ia Iz istorii dvorianskikh familii Rossii. St. Petersburg: Iskusstvo-SPb, 2000.
- Stellhorn, Paul A., and Michael J. Birkner. The Governors of New Jersey 1664–1974: Biographical Essays. Trenton, NJ: New Jersey Historical Commission, 1982.
- Stenton, Michael, and Stephen Lees, comps. Who's Who of British Members of Parliament. Vol. 2, 1886–1918. Hassocks, UK: Harvest Press; Atlantic Highlands, NJ: Humanities Press, 1978.
- Stephenson, William, ed. Stephenson's Directory of Kingston-Upon-Hull and Its Environs. Hull: W. Stephenson, 1848. Published annually.
- Sternin, G. Iu. U istokov novoi knizhnoi grafiki. In Nashi, spisannye s natyry russkimi. By A. P. Bashutskii. 1841. Facsimile of the first edition. Moscow: Kniga, 1986.
- Stevenson, Angus, ed. Oxford English Dictionary. 3rd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2010.
- Stillinger, Jack, ed. John Keats: Complete Poems. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1982.

- Stites, Richard. Serfdom, Society, and the Arts in Imperial Russia: The Pleasure and the Power. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2005.
- Stockbridge, John C., and James Eddy Mauran. Memorials of the Mauran Family. Providence, RI: Snow and Farnham, 1893.
- Stoletie S. Peterburgskogo Angliiskogo Sobraniia 1770–1870*. St. Peterburg: Pechatnia V. I. Golovina, 1870.
- Stolpianskii, P. N. Petergofskaiia pershppektiva Istoricheskii ocherk. St. Petersburg: Sankt-Piter-Burkh, 1923.
- Stonehouse, James. The Liverpool Guide: Its Highways, Byeways, and Thorougfares, by Land and Water. Liverpool: William Lea, 1879.
- Stowell, Daniel W., ed. Balancing Evils Judiciously: The Proslavery Writings of Zephaniah Kingsley. Gainesville, FL: University of Florida Press, 2000.
- The Stranger's Guide Through the City of York, Describing the Magnificent Cathedral, the Parish Churches, St. Mary's Abbey, the Yorkshire Museum, and Every Object of Interest in the City, Together with an Historical Account from the Earliest Times*. York, UK: Bellerby's New Circulating Library, 1825. Reprinted 1846 and 1850 by Blyth and Moore (York, UK).
- Stuart, Mary. Aristocrat–Librarian in Service to the Tsar: Aleksei Nikolaevich Olenin and the Imperial Public Library. East European Monographs, no. 211. Boulder, CO: East European Monographs; New York: Columbia University Press, 1986.
- Studenkin, G. I. "Romanovy Tsarstvuiushchii dom Rossiiskoi Imperiï s 1613 g." Supplement, Russkaia starina (1878).
- Suslov, V. A. "Nikolai I i Novyi Èrmitazh." In Nikolai I i Novyi Èrmitazh, Katalog vystavski "150 let Novomu Èrmitazhu". St. Petersburg: Izd-stvo Gosudarstvennogo Èrmitazha, 2002.
- Sutherland, Daniel E., and Georgia Toutziari. Whistler's Mother: Portrait of an Extraordinary Life. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2018.
- Tabolina, G., and M. Èdomskii. Konnogvardeiskii manezh. St. Petersburg: Almaz, 1997.
- Tait, Peta. "Ferocious Lion Acts." In Fighting Nature: Travelling Menageries, Animal Acts and War Shows. Sydney, Australia: Sydney University Press, 2016.
- Tarasiuk, L. Starinnoe ognestrel'noe oruzhie v sobranii Èrmitazha. Evropa i severnaia Amerika. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1971.

- Taylor, R. J. Jr., ed. Register of Deaths in Savannah, Georgia. 7 vols. Savannah, GA: Georgia Historical Society Genealogical Committee, 1989.
- Taylor, Richard Vickerman. Biographia Leodiensis: or, Biographical Sketches of the Worthies of Leeds and Neighbourhood, from the Norman Conquest to the Present Time. London: Simpkin, Marshall; Leeds: John Hamer, 1865.
- Teall, Gardner. "Whistler's Father." New England Magazine (October 1903): 235–239.
- Teviashev, E. N., comp. Opisanie neskol'kikh graviur i litografi: sostavil po svoemu sobraniu E.N. Teviashev. St. Petersburg: V. Kirshbaum, 1903.
- Thieme, Ulrich, and F. Becker. Allgemeines Lexikon der Bildenden Künstler von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart. 37 vols. Leipzig, Germany: Seeman, 1907–1950.
- Thomas, Lawrence Buckley. Pedigrees of Thomas, Chew, and Lawrence: A West River Register and Genealogical Notes. New York: Thomas Whittaker, 1883.
- Thompson, Benjamin F. History of Long Island from Its Discovery and Settlement to the Present Time. 3rd ed. 2 vols. Edited by Charles J. Werner. New York: Robert H. Dodd, 1918.
- Thompson, Edward P. Life in Russia; or, The Discipline of Despotism. London: Smith, Elder, 1848.
- Thorp, Nigel. "Studies in Black and White: Whistler's Photographs in Glasgow University Library." In James McNeill Whistler: A Reexamination. Edited by Ruth E. Fine. Hanover, NH: University Press of New England, 1984.
- Thorpe, Burton M. Biographies of Pioneer American Dentists and Their Successors. Vol. 3 of History of Dental Surgery. 3 vols. Fort Wayne, IN: National Art Publishing, 1910.
- Thwaite, Hartley, ed. The Parish Register of Wensley. Vol. 2, 1701–1837. Privately printed for the Yorkshire Archaeological Society, Parish Register Section, 1967.
- Thwaite, Hartley, ed. York: Parish Registers of Aysgarth, 1709–1840. With Miss Pole-Stuart. Privately printed for the Yorkshire Archaeological Society, 1944.
- Timofeev, L. V. V krugu družei i muz: Dom A. N. Olenina. Leningrad: Lenizdat, 1983.
- Tolstoy, Leo. Childhood, Boyhood, Youth. Edited and translated by Judson Rosengrant. London: Penguin Classics, 2012.

- Tomlins, Sir Thomas Edlyne. The Law-Dictionary, Explaining the Rise, Progress, and Present State of the British Law, 2 vols. Edinburgh: John Anderson; London: Saunders and Benning, 1835.
- Tourists' Handy Guide to Scotland*. Edinburgh: William Patterson; London: Simpkin Marshall, 1872.
- Toutziari, Georgia. "Anna Matilda Whistler's Correspondence – An Annotated Edition." 5 vols. PhD diss., University of Glasgow, 2002.
- Tower, F. B. A History of the Construction of the Croton Aqueduct. New York: Wiley and Putnam, 1843.
- Tower, T. Memoir of the Late Charles Baird, Esq., of St. Petersburg, and of His Son, the Late Francis Baird, Esq., of St. Petersburg, and 4, Queen's Gate, London. London: Harrison and Sons, 1867.
- Traas, Adrian George. From the Golden Gate to Mexico City: The U.S. Army Topographical Engineers in the Mexican War, 1846–1848. Washington, DC: Office of History, Corps of Engineers and Center of Military History, U.S. Army, 1993.
- Traphagen, Ethel. "Agnes Maxwell – The General's Lady." Fashion Digest (Fall and Winter 1956–57).
- Trubinov, Iurii V. Velikokniazheskaia usypal'nitsa. St. Petersburg: Chernoe i beloe RN, 1997.
- Tsylov, N. Gorodskoi ukazatel' ili Adresnaia kniga vrachei, khudozhnikov, remeslennikov, torgovykh mest, remeslennykh zavedenii i t.p. na 1849 god. St. Petersburg, 1849.
- Tsylov, N., comp. Atlas trinadtsati chastei S. Peterburga s podrobnym izobrazheniem naberezhnykh, ulits, pereulkov, kazennykh i obyvatelskikh domov. St. Petersburg, 1844.
- Turnerelli, Edward Tracy. Memories of a Life of Toil: The Autobiography of Tracy Turnerelli "The Old Conservative." A Record of Work Artistic, Literary, and Political, from 1835 to 1884. London: Field and Tuer; Leadenhall Press; E. D. Simpkin, Marshall; Hamilton, Adams, 1884.
- Twelfth Annual Reunion of the Association of the Graduates of the United States Military Academy, June 9, 1881*. East Saginaw, MI: E. W. Lyon, 1881.
- Tytler, Margaret Fraser. Tales of Many Lands. London: Harvey and Darton, 1839.
- Ukazatel' khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii, vystavlennykh v zalakh Imperatorskoi Akademii khudozhestv*. St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia nauk, 1846.

- Ukazatel' khudozhestvennykh proizvedenii, vystavlennykh v zalakh Imperatorskoi Akademii khudozhestv.* St. Petersburg: Imperatorskaia Akademiia nauk, 1849.
- Urry, James. "John Melville and the Mennonites: A British Evangelist in South Russia, 1837 – c. 1875." Mennonite Quarterly Review 54 (1980).
- Uspenskii, Aleksandr. "Imperatorskii Bol'shoi Tsarskosel'skii Dvorets." Khudozhestvennye sokrovishcha Rossii 12 (1904).
- Uspenskii, Aleksandr. Imperatorskie dvortsy. 2 vols. Moscow: Pechatnia A. I. Snegirevoi, 1913.
- V. G. Belinskii 1811–1911 s risunkami i portretami russkikh pisatelei. St. Petersburg, 1911.
- van Vechten, James Brown, and Marquis E. Shattuck, comps. The Van Vechten Genealogy. Detroit: printed by the authors, 1954.
- van Vechten, Peter Jr., The Genealogical Records of the Van Vechten's from 1638 to 1896. Milwaukee, WI: Radtke Bros. and Kortsch, 1896.
- [Vane-Tempest-Stewart, Lady Edith], Marchioness of Londonderry, and H. M. Hyde. The Russian Journals of Martha and Catherine Wilmot, 1803–1808. London: Macmillan, 1934.
- Vasiliev, A. "Puteshestvie po Rossii." Illustratsiia 34 (1845).
- Vasiliev, V. N. Pamiatniki russkoi kul'tury pervoi chetverti XVIII veka v sobranii Gosudarstvennogo ordena Lenina Èrmitazha Katalog. Leningrad: Sovetskii khudozhnik, 1966.
- Vavilov, S. I., ed. Bol'shaia Sovetskaia Ènsiklopediia. 65 vols. Moscow: Sovetskaia ènsiklopediia, 1926–1947.
- Vernova, N. V. Peterhof Bol'shoi Kaskad. St. Petersburg: Gosudarstvennyi muzei-zapovednik Peterhof–EGO, 1996.
- Veviorovskii, I. V., et al., eds. Leningradskii ordena Lenina Institut inzhenerov zbeleznodorozhnogo transporta imeni Akademika V.N. Obraztsova 1809–1959. Moscow: Vsesoiuznoe izdatel'stvo – poligraficheskoe ob"edinenie Ministerstva putei soobshcheniia, 1960.
- Vil'chkovskii, S. N. Tsarskoe Selo. Facsimile of the 1911 edition. St. Petersburg: Titul, 1992.
- Vilinbakhov, G., V. M. Faibisovich, and S. Letin. Khrabrye dela vashi nikogda ne zabudet potomstvo. St. Petersburg: Slaviia, 2000.
- "Visit of the Russian Prince Nicholas to Edinburgh." The Scots Magazine 79 (1817).

- Vital Records of Lowell Massachusetts to the End of the year 1849*. Vol. 4: Deaths. Salem, MA: Essex Institute, 1930.
- Vitale, Serene. Pushkin's Button. Translated by Ann Goldstein and Jon Rothschild. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1999.
- von Grimm, A. Th. Alexandra Feodorowna: Empress of Russia. Translated by Lady Wallace. 2 vols. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas, 1870.
- von Waldeck, F. Meyer. "Geistiges Leben der Sanct-Petersburger Deutschen." Translated by E. F. Harden. In Unsere Zeit. Leipzig: F. A. Brockhaus, 1881.
- Voronikhina, A. N. Vidy zhalov Ėrmitazha i Zimnego Dvortsia v akvareliakh i risunkakh khudozhnikov srediiny XIX veka Iz sobraniia Gosudarstvennogo Ėrmitazha. Moskva: Iskustvo, 1983.
- Voronin, M. I., and M. M. Voronina. Pavel Petrovich Mel'nikov 1804–1880. Leningrad: Nauka–Leningradskoe otdelenie, 1977.
- Vose, George L. A Sketch of the Life and Works of George Washington Whistler, Civil Engineer. Boston: Lee and Shepard; New York: Charles L. Dillingham, 1887.
- Vyskochkov, L. V. "Imperator 'na pochtovykh': Nikolai I na ulitsakh Sankt-Peterburga i dorogakh Rossii." In Peterburgskie chteniia 97 Maternityal'nye Ėnsiklopedicheskoi biblioteki "Sankt-Peterburg–2003". St. Petersburg: Russko–Baltiiskii informatsionnyi Tsentr BLITs, 1997. 626–629.
- "Vzgliad na myzu Ligovo." In Trudy Imperatorskogo vol'nogo ėkonomicheskogo obshchestva za 1845 god. Pt. 2. St. Petersburg: Karl Krai, 1845.
- Waddington, T. A. J. Waddington's Guide to Lancaster Castle. York, UK: printed by the author, c. 1902.
- Walford, Edward. Old and New London. Vol. 3, Westminster and the Western Suburbs. London: Cassell Petter and Galpin, 1873.
- Walford, Edward. The County Families of the United Kingdom; or, Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland. London: R. Hardwicke, 1868.
- Walker, Thomas Alfred. Admissions to Peterhouse or St. Peter's College in the University of Cambridge: A Biographical Register. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1912.
- Warner, Charles Dudley. "The Acadian Land." Harper's New Monthly Magazine 74 (February 1887): 334–354. A version edited by James H. Dorman appeared in Attakapas Gazette 7, no. 4 (December 1972): 157–169.

- Warner, Charlotte Edwards. A Chronicle of Ancient Chestnut Street. Springfield, MA: C. W. Bryan, 1897.
- Watt, Margaret Gibbs. The Gibbs Family of Long Ago and Near at Hand, 1337–1967. Jacksonville, FL: printed by the author, 1967.
- Webber, Mabel L., comp. “Marriage and Death Notices from the City Gazette.” South Carolina Historical and Genealogical Magazine 21 (1920).
- Welch, Joseph, comp. The List of the Queen’s Scholars of St. Peter’s College, Westminster, Admitted on that Foundation Since 1663; and of Such as Have Been Thence Elected to Christ Church, Oxford, and Trinity College, Cambridge, from the Foundation by Queen Elizabeth, 1561, to the Present Time. New ed. With numerous additions by An Old King’s Scholar. London: G. W. Ginger, 1852.
- Wemyss-Kessler, Sir John. The House of Wemyss: A Thousand Year History. Bowie, MD: Heritage Books, 1996.
- Werner, Marcia. Pre-Raphaelite Painting and Nineteenth-Century Realism. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 2005.
- Wheelan, William. The History and Topography of the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland, Comprising Their Ancient and Modern History, a General View of Their Physical Character, Trade, Commerce, Manufactures, Agricultural Condition, Statistics. Pontefract, UK: W. Wheelan; London: Whittaker; Manchester: Galt, 1860.
- Wheeler, Charles G., and William A. Wheeler, eds. Who Wrote It? An Index to the Authorship of the More-Noted Works in Ancient and Modern Literature. Boston: Lee and Shepard, 1881.
- Whishaw, James. A History of the Whishaw Family. Edited by M. S. Leigh. London: Methuen, 1935.
- White, F. and Company. General Directory of Kingston-Upon-Hull, and the City of York. Sheffield, UK: F. White, 1846. Published annually.
- White, William. History, Gazetteer and Directory of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight. Sheffield, UK: Robert Leader for the author, 1859.
- Willey, Anna Chesebrough. Genealogy of the Descendants of William Chesebrough of Boston. New York: T. A. Wright, 1903.
- Williams, Edwin. The Addresses and Messages of the Presidents of the United States, Inaugural, Annual and Special, from 1789 to 1846, Compiled from Official Sources. 2 vols. New York: Edward Walker, 1846.
- Williams, George. The Holy City; or, Historical and Topographical Notices of Jerusalem; with some account of its antiquities and of its present condition ... with Illustrations from Sketches by the Rev. W.F. Witts. London: John W. Parker; Cambridge: T. Stevenson, 1845.

- Williams, John, ed. Memoirs of the Life and Writing of the Rev. Robert Hawker, D.D., late Vicar of Charles, Plymouth. London: Printed for Ebenezer Palmer, 1831.
- Williamson, A. Views and Reminiscences of Old Greenock. Greenock, Scotland: J. McKeivie and Sons, 1891.
- Williamson, David Geoffrey, comp. The Counts Bobrinski: A Genealogy. Foreward by Count Bobrinski. Edgeware, UK: James V. Poate, 1962.
- Wilson, Jane Bromley. The Very Quiet Baltimoreans: A Guide to the Historic Cemeteries and Burial Sites of Baltimore. Shippensburg, PA: White Mane, 1991.
- Wilson, John. A Memoir of Mrs. Margaret Wilson, of the Scottish Mission, Bombay; including Extracts from Her Letters and Journals. Edinburgh: John Johnstone, 1838.
- Wilson, Mehitable Calef Copenhagen. John Gibson of Cambridge, Massachusetts and his Descendants, 1634–1899. Washington, DC: McGill and Wallace, 1900.
- Wilson, William Rae. Travels in Russia. 2 vols. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green, 1828.
- Winstanley, C. W., comp. Pedigrees from Winstanley: Wills and Administrations with Additional Details from Various Parish Registers and Family Records. Printed by the author, May 1952.
- Winter, Marian Hannah. The Theatre of Marvels. New York: Benjamin Blom, 1963.
- Wirtschafter, Elise Kimerling. From Serf to Russian Soldier. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1990.
- Wood, Eric. Our Woods. Typescript. Printed by the author, n.d.
- Wood, Frances Hariott. Somerset Memories and Traditions. London: Robert Scott, 1924.
- Wood, James Whistler, comp. Whistler Family Genealogy. Printed by the author, 1903. Manuscript held by the Chicago Historical Society.
- Worthen, William E. "Life and Works of James B. Francis." Essay 10: Read on 20 February 1893. Contributions of the Old Residents' Historical Association, Lowell, Mass. 5, no. 2 (March 1894): 227–242.
- Wortman, Richard. Scenarios of Power: Myth and Ceremony in Russian Monarchy. 2 vols. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1995–2000.

- Wosh, Peter J. "Bibles, Benevolence and Emerging Bureaucracy: The Persistence of the American Bible Society, 1816-1890." PhD diss., New York University, 1988.
- Wosh, Peter J. Spreading the Word: The Bible Business in Nineteenth-Century America. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1994.
- Zacek, Judith Cohen. "The Russian Bible Society and the Russian Orthodox Church." Church History 35, no. 4 (1966): 411-437.
- Zakharova, I. L. Russkie samovary – Russian Samovars. Leningrad: Khudozhnik RSFSR, 1971.
- Zheleznov, Mikhail I. "Neskol'ko slov o puteshestvii K. P. Briullova na Maderu." Moda 9 (1851).
- Zheleznov, Mikhail I., ed. Neizdannye pis'ma K. P. Briullova i dokumenty dlia ego biografii. Geneva: s.n., 1867.
- Zhemchuzhnikov, L. M. Moi vospominaniia iz proshlogo. Edited by A. E. Vereshchagina and M. N. Shumova. Leningrad: Iskusstvo, 1970.
- Zhitkov, S. "Konstantin Vladimirovich Chevkin Biograficheskii ocherk, 1803 – 1875." Russkai starina 19 (May 1877): 1-22.
- Zhitkov, S. M. Biografii inzhenerov putei soobshcheniia. St. Petersburg: Iu. N. Èrlikh, 1889.
- Zotov, V. R. "Peterburg v sorokovykh godakh." Istoricheskii vestnik 39 (February 1890).
- Zvorikin, A., ed. Biograficheskii slovar' deiatelei estestvoznaniia i tekhniki. 2 vols. Moscow: BSE Moscova, 1958.